A number of people have handed over questions to Me regarding the nature of the mind. So, though I have often explained this in my discourses, i shall speak about it again. You are all now in Prashaanthi Nilayam, gathered in this hall; but, if your mind is wandering in Madras or Calcutta, you will not be seeing the man sitting in the line before yours, or hear Me speak, though I am speaking so loud! Though your eyes and ears are present here, effective and sound, if your mind is not controlling them and directing them, the senses are powerless, they cannot transmit any information to the Anthah-karana! The operations of hearing, smelling, seeing, tasting and getting the feel of touch, cannot be done effectively and meaningfully if the mind is engaged otherwise!

The body is as a torch; the eyes are its bulbs. Intellect is the switch. But, the essential cell is the mind. You may have fresh bulbs, the switch may be on, the torch may be brand new---but, if the cell is not in position, the torch will not emit light.

But, beyond the mind, and beyond reason and consciousness and the I-sense, is the Aathma, the reality, the Cosmic I or God.

Rational knowledge is illusory knowledge

Rational knowledge or knowledge accumulated by the exercise of the senses and stored and sifted by reason, is but illusory knowledge. It is worldly material knowledge, subject to correction or modification. The knowledge about the five elements (earth, water, fire, wind and space) derived through the five senses which are so flamed that each can sense the special attribute of each element (earth---smell; water---taste; fire---form; wind---touch and space---sound) is illusory. How can you be content, living in this illusory world, gathering and relying on this illusory knowledge? Realise the person beyond all illusion, who is the Creator of this illusion, who is revealed in and through this illusion. Worldly knowledge is of the temporary, the particular, the finite, the individual; how can it reveal the Eternal, the Universal, the Infinite, the Absolute? The Vedha has the answer.

It asks us to analyse our dream-experience. Dreams are unreal, they are illusory. But yet, for as long as we are dreaming, the experience is real and valid often in the dreams as a result of the illusory experience itself, awareness of such extreme is created through fear or horror or pain or excitement, that the person dreaming wakes and the dream is destroyed. What has caused the awakening? The dream itself helped in the destruction of the dream. So too in this "wakeful dream"---in the illusory world where every wakeful experience is deemed true and valid--some experience or the roar of the Vedhas in the Mahaavaakyas (Divine axioms, which ring through the sacred texts) wakes man into the higher awareness.

The Universe is only relatively real

Some questions handed over to Me relate to Creation and how it came into being. Well, if you can understand how your dream comes into being, you can know how this creation came into being. Sleep causes dreams; the maaya (the deluding power) of the Divine has caused this Creation! This Universe is as unreal as the dream. It is only relatively real; it is not absolutely real.

The Vedhic sages, out of the illumination of their purified intellects, declared in Bliss, for all mankind to know: Thath Thwam Asi (Thou art That); Prajnaanam Brahma (Wisdom is That).

Ayam Aathma Brahmam (This I is That). Aham Brahmaasmi (I am That); I am everything, I am the Supreme; I am the One, without a second. When these depth-stirring declarations reverberate in the heart, men awaken to the vision of Truth. The realisation that you are the Aathman and that there is nothing except the Aathman anywhere at any time---this is Self-realisation; it is the Aathma-Saakshaathkaara, the realisation of the Aathma by the aathma of yourself by yourself as the Self.

This is also called bhoomaa, the vast limitless, the changeless, the unaffected-by-time-and-space; the bhoomi (this earth) is limited; it has a past and a future different from the present. So, it can never reveal the Truth. Bhoomaa alone can reveal it. So, live in the bhoomaa, breathe the bhoomaa, think, plan and act in the limitless, the changeless that is in you!

You desire God not for God's sake

You are the very centre of your desires and activity. You crave happiness for your own sake.

Your Truth is in your own self. Even when you try to make others happy, it is your own happiness that you are after! You love a terylene shirt, not for the sake of the shirt but for your own sake. You desire a sweet dish not for the dish's sake, certainly. The mother fondles the child for her own satisfaction. You desire God, not for God's sake, but for your own sake. And what is this "You" which desires, which serves, which tries, which yearns and which is satisfied or pleased or happy. It is the 'I' which makes you and every other conscious being declare 'I' 'I' 'I'.

Now, you ignore this 'I' and you affirm that you are the body with its equipment, its implements, its instruments.

This ignorance, this misconception, has originated from the very principle which endows you with wisdom and light! The Sun produces light, as well as the cloud that hides it from view! The eye that sees produces the cataract which clouds and often closes that Vision. From the same Aathmic principle which illumines and vitalises, is born the maaya (illusion) that hides and confuses! The fire from the embers creates ashes which cover up the embers!

But we can blow off the ashes and reveal the cinders; the cataract can be removed; clouds are wafted away by winds. So too, saadhana can remove the veil of illusion which hides the inner 'I' from consciousness, the Aathma from our awareness.

As regards saadhana, I have here a number of questions. They ask: We are serving others relieving their pain or misery. We are feeding the hungry, poor; we are engaged in many good acts; are these not saadhana? But, this is not service to others, it is service to yourself. A person may invite all of you Office-bearers for a dinner! And he may declare afterwards, "I gave a dinner to all the delegates." He too sat and ate with all the delegates and so, he served himself too, when he served the others, did not he? He derived joy as a result of the dinner he arranged and so, it was a piece of service rendered to himself ultimately.

Good thoughts will get desires in good forms

When you feel that it is not the 'other' whom you are serving---but, yourself then, your service will be better and more effective. Establish this attitude more and more firmly in your mind.

If you do good, you get good from those around you and from the universal entity, God. If you do bad, you get bad. Divinity but resounds, reflects, reacts! God has no favourites, no prejudices.

The thought creates a desire, the desire creates a form through which it is expressed. Have good thoughts, you get desires in good forms.

Ahalya was lying as a stone, for many years, as a result of the curse of her husband. Inside the stone, there persisted human thought, which was again turned into human form with the touch of Raama's feet. If Ahalya had become a stone, with no trace of 'Thought,' she would not have emerged as a woman from it. So, unless all trace of 'Thought' is destroyed, the form will sprout and grow and decline; that is to say, birth and death are inevitable.

The Raamaayana gives another example of the power of 'Thought.' Raavana was a great person who had mastered the Scriptural Texts and who was earnest in Spiritual Observances. Every morning, he used to go the round of many temples of Shiva. He had mastered the four Vedhas and the six Shaasthras and so he was praised and depicted as having ten heads! His Queen, Mandodhari lamented over her husband's defeat and death, at the hands of a mere man leading a host of monkeys! She had learnt from the Shaasthras that death caused by drowning or by the fall from a tree or through monkeys converts the dead into ghosts that wander in the realms of darkness. So, she wondered why such a fate overtook the great scholar, the pious devotee, that Raavana was. Then she remembered that the spark of lust that he harboured in his heart had burnt all that scholarship and all that piety into ash! He was not able to control his senses or sublimate the sensory urges. A bullock that does not yield to the yoke, a horse that resists the reins, a car without brakes and a person who knows no self-control, are all equally heading towards disaster!

Have your Vision steady and your Will strong Follow regular saadhana in order to control the senses and the emotions. Do not pay heed to others who may ridicule you, for your changed way of life. They may point you to others and laugh, "Look at this man! He has become a great Sai Bhaktha!" "Look at him with his japa and bhajan!" But have your Vision steady and your Will strong. Do not deviate; march straight on.

There are some questions among those handed over to me, on the Name to be used in japa, whether Raamnaam or the five-lettered Namasshivaaya or the eight-lettered Om Namō Naaraayana or whether I would suggest some other Name. The Scriptures have given a good answer for this: God is one without a second. You can adore Him according to your own fancy and pleasure. He does not change. He is not changed, when the Names you adore Him by are changed or the Forms you picture Him by, are changed. We have many kinds of sweets---many Names and Forms. But sugar is the One substance that makes each one sweet. You may prefer one sweet hing more than another; you are welcome to prefer it, but, do not condemn or prevent others preferences.

God will assume the Form for which you thirst

You may adore Krishna, for that name and form gives you the greatest joy, the maximum thrill; but, do not find fault with a brother who worships the same God through another Name-Form:

Raama, Shiva or Vishnu, or any such other. He has as much fight as you, to worship God in the form he likes. The effectiveness lies not in the Manthra or in the Name and Form it is centred upon. It lies in the heart, in the yearning, in the thirst. God will assume the form and 'answer to the Name for which you thirst! That is the measure of His Grace.

When the child in the cradle starts weeping and wailing, the mother who is on the terrace of the house will run down the steps to fondle it and feed it. She will not stop to discover whether the wail was in the correct key or on the proper note! So also, the Supreme Mother of the Universe will come down from Her Sovereign Throne to fondle, caress and console Her child, provided the yearning comes spontaneously from a full heart, a pure heart. She will not investigate the correctness or otherwise of the pronunciation of the manthra or the perfection of the picture formed in the mind of the Divine Ideal yearned for. It is the feeling in the heart that is the crucial test--not the length of time devoted or the amount of money spent.

Be sincere in saadhana; do not attempt to imitate others; let it arise out of your own genuine yearning. You should not also be urged by competitiveness or the desire to show off. "That bhajan mandali is conducting Nagarasankeerthan twice a week; let us also do twice a week; or, let us do thrice a week." This kind of rivalry or exhibitionism has to be given up. There are others who desire to bring down units that are doing good work, for, they cannot tolerate or suffer the fame those units earn! So, out of sheer malice, they try to harm or injure the units so that their good work may suffer.

But there is another way of bringing those units down and making your unit more liked. The teacher draws a line on the backboard and asks any one of his pupils to come up to the board and, without touching the line drawn, make it shorter! The pupils are puzzled but the teacher shows them the way; draw a longer line a little distance above it; the line is now the shorter of the two! Let your unit do more acts of service more efficiently to more people. That is the proper way to carry on the activities---not calumny or criticism, but work.

Prema-yoga alone can lead you to God

What I am about to say in answer to another question handed over to Me might pain some of you---but, I feel the truth must be told. There are some who are attracted by various systems and methods like Hathayoga, Kriyaayoga, or Raajayoga, which claim to help people to realise the self. But, I must tell you that no one of these can make you realise God. I am saying this most emphatically. The Premayoga---Discipline of Love---alone can lead you to God. Those yogas may calm the mind's agitations temporarily and may improve health and prolong life for a few more years---but that is all that they can do. What is the good you hope to achieve with that body in those extra years? If Love is absent, they weigh you down like big burdens; if Love is cultivated, then, the body can be used for serving others, without regard for the interests of the body.

Dharma guards those who guard dharma
The body should be guarded and sustained for the service one can do with it to others, or for realising the Aathma, while in it. There are some who observe strict discipline in spiritual practices, who follow a rigorous time-table of japam, dhyaanam, etc. Of course, this is good practice, but do not stick to this time-table or that programme, even when you have a call to go to the help of some person, whose need for service is great and urgent. If you give up your dhyaana and serve him, you will benefit more, from the service than what you may gain from the dhyaana.

If you feel that the person next to you suffering pain, needing relief, is a nuisance and move on to some place where your dhyaana will not be disturbed, you surely are not going to get the merit of that dhyaana. It is certainly a wrong you have committed and you do not deserve Grace.

When God Himself comes down and has come down to serve man, He will indeed be pleased if you too serve man.

Engage in those activities which will please God, which you feel and know will please God, rather than in activities which will please you. God is pleased with Truth, with dharma. Dharma (righteousness) guards those who guard dharma. Know your dharma and observe it.

Do not put forward false claims and boast that you are bhaktas (devotees). There is a proverb in

Thelugu about such devotee being good strict conformists so long as they listen to sermons and admonitions---but, as soon as they leave off listening, the old evil tendencies and habits seize their minds and mould their behaviour. When you move away from this atmosphere of love, tolerance, humility and reverence, there is the risk of losing these qualities. So, hold fast to them, be firm. The desire to please others, to win their esteem, or to create in their minds a false picture of yourselves should not arise and grow in your minds. No text-book or class can teach meditation

When you attempt to deceive another, remember there will emerge some one who can deceive even you. There was a thief once who was skilled in all the stratagems and tricks of that profession. There was not a single one that he had not mastered. One day, after collecting a large number of costly articles and bundling them up, he was moving along a lonely road with the booty on his shoulder. He saw a child standing on the bank of a wayside tank, weeping aloud, in great distress. The thief went near and asked, "Why are you weeping? What has happened to you?" The child said, (and here, you have to remember that it does not matter how old or how young a person is, it is the intelligence that matters) "I came here for a bath, my golden necklace fell into the waters, right there, where I tried to have a dip. The place is too deep for me."

The thief thought that he could get away with this necklace too, for it was a little child that stood between him and the jewel. So, placing his bundle on the bank, he went down into the waters to retrieve the necklace. Meanwhile, the child lifted the thief's bundle and running a short distance, disappeared into the jungle. The thief came up disappointed, for the necklace was but a fiction, only to find that he had been robbed! Whoever deceives another will have some one cleverer, to outwit him.

There is a suggestion mentioned in a chit handed over to Me by a delegate: regular classes for training members in dhyaana should be held in Prashaanthi Nilayam, for, through these trainees, dhyaana can be spread all over the country. I laughed when I read this suggestion. Can any one train another in meditation? Or claim to train? It may be possible to teach a person the posture, the pose, the position of the legs, feet or hands, neck, head, or back, the style of breathing or its speed. But, meditation is a function of the inner man; it involves deep subjective quiet, the emptying of the mind and filling oneself with the Light that emerges from the Divine Spark within. This is a discipline which no text-book can teach and no class can communicate.

Dhyaana classes! Those who handle them do not know what dhyaana is; those who attend them do not care to know! Purify your emotions; clarify your impulses; cultivate love. Then only can you become master of yourself. That mastery is the purpose, the process of meditation or dhyaana.

Mind is pervasive, wanders far and wide
The mother can sit near her child and utter words to encourage the child to speak; but, the child has to use its own tongue and put in its own efforts. So too, a person can teach you how to sit and keep the torso erect, the legs folded, the hands straight, the fingers crossed, the breathing steady and slow--but, who can teach you how to control the wayward mind? The mind is very subtle and expansive. It is very light and pervasive, floating hither and thither, on any gust of desire. It behaves like a ball of cotton, with no weight of seed to hold it down. It is much lighter than fluff; it wanders far and wide. So, if you must control it you must attach something heavy to it. The body which houses the mind is heavy, no doubt, but, the mind is fickle and free. It flees afar as it fancies. All faiths are mutually indebted to each other. The mind must be allotted some heavy piece of work to hold it down. This work is called dhyaana. Keep the mind above the upper lip, between the two nostrils, right: in front of the bridge of the nose. Inhale through the left nostril, closing the right with the right thumb. As the breath goes in, it utters So (meaning, He); then exhale through the right nostril, closing the left nostril. As the breath goes out, it utters ham (meaning, I). Inhale and exhale slowly and deliberately, conscious of the identity of He (the Lord) and I (yourself) which it asserts, until the breathing and the awareness grow into an unnoticed process. Keep the mind as a watchman, to note the incoming and outgoing breaths, to listen with the inner ear to the Soham that the breath whispers, and to witness the assertion of your being the Divine, which is the core of the Universe. This is the dhyaanam that will give victory. When this Soham dhyaana has stabilised itself, you may start stabilising in your mind the ruupa (form) of your Ishtadhevatha (the Lord of your choice). Picture the Form from head to foot, taking at least 15 to 20 minutes for it, dwelling on each part of the body and imprinting it clearly on the heart and then, proceed from foot to head in similar way. This will help to fix the form in the altar of the heart. Then, you will see in everyone that Form only; in all beings, you will find Him only. You will realise the One manifold as many. Shivoham, Soham, I am Shiva, I am He, Only He is. Here is another question from a Muslim who is the Vice-President of the Sathya Sai Seva

Samithi, in his town. He asks whether he can partake in the Nagarasankeerthan, dhyaana, puuja, etc., that the Samithi is having on its programme. If he desires, he can; if he feels that it goes against his inner conviction, he need not. One should not give up his conviction in the face of ridicule or persecution. He can carry on dhyaana (worship) according to his conviction in the privacy of his own home; there is no compulsion that he should thrust them on the attention of others, outside. All faiths are inter-related and mutually indebted to each other for the principles they teach, and the disciplines they recommend.' The Vedhic religion was the first in time; Buddhism which appeared about 2500 years ago, was its son; Christianity, which was influenced much by the Orient was its grandson. And Islam, which has the Prophets of Christianity at its base was like the great-grandson. All have Love as the Fundamental Discipline of the Mind, in order to chasten it and merge man with the Divine. Prashaanthi Nilayam, All-India Conference, 22-11-1970 Bhakthi is the foundation for all religions. Of course, japa or homa or offering of flowers, or going on pilgrimages to holy places cannot be taken as bhakthi! They are good acts that help promote bhakthi. True bhakthi opens the door of inaana. Sathya Sai Baaba 35. Truth of Truth
THE thought manifests as word, the word manifests as deed; the deed develops into habit; the habit hardens into character. So, watch the thought and its ways. Let it spring from love, love that is born out of respect for all beings, for, all beings are Divine. You are all embodiments of the Divine. Never forget that reality. Since two days, you have been listening to spiritual discourses and moving in holy thoughts. This All-India Conference for which you have come is just an excuse, for bringing you all here and charging you with Grace, for carrying on your duties with greater zest and understanding. Through the Units of the Organisation of which you are the Office-bearers, you are worshipping God. For, service to man is service to God. When God comes embodied as man to serve man, how delighted He must be to find man himself taking up the role and serving brother-man to get rid of disease, distress or doubt! You have no reason to feel proud when you are able to help another, for, your skill or wealth or strength or courage or official position which gave you the chance to serve was the gift of God--- whether you recognise it or not. You are only offering this God's gift to another God's gift, namely, the poor, the illiterate, the weak, the diseased, the grieving, the broken-hearted, who seek your help.

Mind has to be drilled into recognition of the Unity A person stands knee-deep in the Ganga or Godhaavari river and uttering Vedhic hymns in praise of the river, he lifts up in his palm the sacred water of the river and pours it back as his offering to the deity that the river represents. Its water into itself---God's gift for God's. gift---that is all that one is capable of; that is all that one needs to do. He has endowed you with this wonderful body, this sweet tongue, this amazing instrument called mind. He has granted you intelligence, the powers of analysis and synthesis, the capacity to receive and give up, to remember and to forget. Acknowledge these gratefully and use them to the best advantage. Use them to see Him everywhere in all beings, to seek Him through all the ups and downs, the joys and griefs, the doubts and decisions of life.
These dual impacts are the result of the waverings of mind. The mind revels in the diversity of name and form; it has to be drilled into the recognition and the enjoyment of unity. It suffers from a false sense of values and tries to discard what is good for it. The child has to be educated into an appreciation of hard chewable food, it will not welcome it in the beginning itself. So, too, the mind has to be trained to picture the vast, the limitless, the overwhelming majesty that underlies time, space and causation. First, it must develop a taste for the Personal God and later for the Impersonal, without Name and Form, the Impersonal which is all Names and Forms attributed by the mind. Bhajan, dhyaan, Naamasmaran, Nagarasankeerthan---these are all steps in that education. The Bliss that is won by mergence in the Divine, is the consummation of that education.
A person who is ill has to swallow the mixture himself and that too as long as he is ill, however bitter the medicine may be. A person, who is ill with ignorance and therefore is suffering from egoism and discontent, has to take the medicine of japa-dhyaana; the disease of over-attachment to worldly objects can be cured only by the drug of attachment to God, cultivated through japa and dhyaana.
You crave liberation but fix shackles on

There are some who count the number of years during which they have taken the drugs and who feel they have not improved at all and get desperate about the course of treatment itself. They find fault consequently with the Guru, the method, his advice or even with God and turn atheists or worse. But, how can water be stored in a leaky pot? You may fill your heart with faith and devotion earned through japa and dhyaana but it has sprung leaks, the leaks of cynicism, of fear, of fanaticism, and of delusion. There is no justification for denying God when you are not able to visualise or realise Him; it is but a sign of wanton foolishness. How can you condemn water as saltish when you have put into it salt, in place of sugar? You find no sweetness in it, because you have added salt. You crave sweetness but add salt. You crave liberation but fix shackles on. You crave Peace and add unto yourselves the disturbance of duality. You complain that your neighbour began his spiritual discipline only two years ago, while you have been keeping the schedule since 20 years. But, he has secured happiness while you are miserable. You feel you have been coming to Me since years but I take near Me those who have come just a short while ago. Your reactions lead you to ascribe injustice and partiality but the answer lies in the past about which you are not aware. The Immanent God can be experienced as Real Twenty hammer strokes have been given to a slab but it did not break. Another fellow comes along and at his second stroke, the slab is broken. The man who dealt the 20 is disappointed and the man who broke it in 2 is elated but, the slab broke as a result of the cumulative impact of the 22. Your neighbour has to his credit 20 years of saadhana, stored up in the causal body into which he came from his previous birth to his present one. Your nature and your predilections are shaped by the way in which you loved and wrought, fed and fought, in the long series of lives you had already.
The green fruit is sour or even bitter, but as it ripens, the sourness or the bitterness is transmuted onto sweetness. The attachment to the senses and to the sensory world must be transmuted into attachment to the Aathma, to the Lord, so that it may confer on you the Sweetness of Bliss. Once you are in that Bliss, you will see, taste, hear, experience only Bliss. Ishaavaasyamidham---All this is God.
But the question is asked: Then, why is He not seen? Well, He is, as butter is in Milk, in every drop, through and through. If butter has to be seen, then certain processes have to be gone into---boiling, curdling, churning, etc. So too, by certain spiritual disciplines, like repeating the Name on the tongue, He who dwells in the heart can be visualised; the Immanent God can be experienced as Real. Man has an inborn thirst of God, an in-built yearning for the Aanandha (bliss) of the highest order which will never fail or falter. It is only by drinking God that thirst can be quenched; not by substitutes or palliatives. The Chaathaka bird of legends is not distracted by the darkening sky, the reverberating thunder, the blinding lightning and the mad destructive rain. It flies up with open beak to receive into itself the first few virgin drops between earth and sky; that is its thirst, its yearning, its destiny. When questions arise answers will be vouchsafed. When the raindrops are soiled by the ground, they become undrinkable; that is the conviction of the Chaathaka. So too, the pure yearning for love, for service, for expansion, for expression, for fulfilment, is soiled by contact with selfish ends, with greed and envy, malice and hatred, lust and pride. It is soiled by one's egoistic reaction to blame or praise, loss or gain. It is best that this yearning is treasured and cultivated alone and in silence, until it is strong enough to meet failure or success, with composure. Naamasmarana (remembrance of God) within the silence and solitude of your own heart, is very beneficial for this purpose. When questions arise, the answers too will be vouchsafed unto you; when doubts emerge, as they must in order to strengthen and deepen faith, the decisive lines of argument will also be provided. Naamasmarana can be elaborated also into Nagarasankeerthan (public community singing of spirituals). This has both individual and social consequences. When you inhale foul air, your health suffers. The air is polluted by unwholesome vibrations when people shout hateful, lustful slogans or even talk, without love and reverence. In order to purify the atmosphere, vibrations that are holy, healthy, happy have to be circulated, even before the citizens come out into the open with the break of day. When a group of good men and women move from one end of a street to the other singing aloud the Names of God, each Name redolent with fragrance and resonant with Love, it clears the air and renders it pure for all to breathe. It also calls people living in the houses on both sides to begin their daily round of duties, with the Sweet Name of God in their ears and the charming Form of God in their hearts. Vibrations of hatred and greed can pollute the air. When an Atomic Bomb is exploded thousands of miles away by America or Russia in some faroff country, the fall-out travelling all over the world contaminates the atmosphere, poisons vegetation and distorts life, say the doctors who have to deal with them. The vibrations of hatred and greed, of pride and envy that result from the shouts and discontent of animosity also pollute the air equally seriously. Man exhibits great mental and physical courage, on the battle-fields and during adventures on land, sea and air. He has evinced in history, vast reinforcements of courage inside him, to meet all varieties of obstacles. But the courage to give up entanglement with the material world is a great achievement. Vaalmeeki was a highway robber who waylaid and killed hundreds without hesitation; he was the slave of passion and emotion but, when the seven Sages whom he waylaid one night, counselled patience, forbearance and self-inquiry, he turned heroically into the path of Raam (giving up the path of kaama (lust)), and achieved immortality, immortal fame as the narrator of Raama's story. From the Raajasik (passionate) stage, he transformed himself into Saathwik (balanced). The spiritual adventure, the spiritual leap from darkness into light needs extraordinary courage, and Divine Grace is the reward for courage. Contemplate the OM, symbol of the Inner Flame. For this adventure, all are candidates, women as well as men. Sex is but a vesture worn by the Soul for the role of life on earth. It does not affect the life of the Spirit, which is Eternal, and on the supra-sensory plane. Man and woman have each to purify the inner consciousness so that the Divine may reveal itself in all its Glory therein. There are some crude thinkers who declare that women are not entitled to pronounce the sacred syllable OM, but that is a pernicious narrow doctrine. With one voice, these people revere the Mother, acclaiming the dictum 'Maathru Dhevo Bhava, (May your Mother be your God) and with the other, they disgrace the Mother by denying her the fight to save herself? This is hypocrisy. The A U M of the OM, represents the Om Thath Sath principle---the "Thath is the Truth," "I am the Truth," "the Truth is One" principle.

The Om is the ever-present Voice within, the echo of the Divine call, from the cavity of the heart. Listen to it, be thrilled by it; that is the inner adoration, of which the external puuja (ritual worship) is the outer symbol. With the ego rampant and rambling, how can the mind be balanced and faith be steady? Contemplate the OM, the Symbol of the Inner Flame, which shines through the waking hours, the dream twilight and the sleep night. That way can earn Grace abundantly.

Every place of authority or influence has certain responsibilities attached to it. The Tahsildar is the highest authority that most villagers know; he has the responsibility of fostering the villagers under his care and winning their love and co-operation. The offices that you hold as Presidents and Secretaries of the Sathya Sai Organisational Units lay on you responsibilities with which, perhaps, no other Organisation burdens! its members. These have been drawn up by the Sub-Committees and revised by Me and will be read now. The duties and obligations of the State Presidents and the District Presidents and of the Members and Office-bearers of each Unit, will also be read.

The Units should not compete in a spirit of envy

The responsibility of running Baal Vihaars (children's classes) is now assigned to the Mahila Vibhaag (women's section) and a new rule is laid down that, in no Unit, except Mahila Vibhaag, should there be women members. The Seva Samithi (service organisation) will guide and help the Mahila Vibhaag, which will work as its subordinate Unit. A Seva Dhal (volunteers corps) will be trained and organised and fully utilised for seva activities. One member of the Samithi will be the Convenor of the Seva Dhal. Every member should be active and enthusiastic, all the time, in seva.

The conviction that I am everywhere, watching everything and aware of everything must keep you on the straight path of saadhana, through seva and study. I want that every Samithi (and every Unit complementary to it) must be bubbling with joy at the work already achieved and with enthusiasm for the work ahead. Love, respect, tolerance, mutual co-operation, forbearance--

-these must flow from the hearts of each to all. There should be no eagerness to capture Office from the other's grasp or to hold it back when another is ready for it. The Units too should cooperate with each other and not compete in a spirit of envy or faction. You are all limbs of one body, namely, the Sai body. The Samithis should be guided and if necessary corrected by the District President; the District Presidents should be guided and, if necessary, corrected by the State President and the State Presidents should have constant contact, advice and guidance from the Centre.

Develop a sense of belonging to the Unit

This Conference has laid down that women must not be members of any Unit, except Mahila

Vibhaag. For any public function or celebration they may arrange, they should seek the help and guidance of the Seva Samithi. Every Samithi must start a Mahila Vibhaag without delay and Mahila Vibhaags must consider Bal Vihaars as their most important and most useful activity.

The Seva Dhal, the Bhajan Mandali, the Study Circle, the Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha must all be guided and activated by some member of the Samithi selected for the purpose and nominated for the work. They are all limbs of the Samithi of the place with its 11, 15 or 25 members.

The routine expenses of the Samithi or the Seva Dhal, etc., must be shared by the members only.

There should not be any attempt to collect from non-members. For special occasions, voluntary gifts of material or services from devotees may be received. But, there is no need for a Treasurer; the Joint Secretary can manage whatever accounting there is. Every member of the Samithi must be given some particular work so that he may develop a sense of belonging and he may contribute his skill, intelligence, faith and devotion to the promotion of the objects of the Association.

The members of the Samithi must all partake in the Nagarasankerthan. If they have not that steadfast faith, why have their names on the list? They should be active in saadhana and attend saadhana camps, arranged by the Samithi.

Units should have no contacts with cheats Embodiments of Divine Aathma! This Bhaarith land is the centre of spiritual progress for ages past and the region where Divine incarnations re-establish Dharma for the good of humanity. In order to make known My majesty and My glory as the Divine that has Incarnated, miraculous happenings of an amazing nature do take place in certain areas.

Taking advantage of the attraction that those happenings draw upon them, many misuse them for personal propaganda and aggrandizement. They trade for money the Vibhuuthi (sacred ash) that the pictures in their altars shower! They go about pretending that they are "superior devotees" of a higher order and conferring boons and blessings on the innocent folk whom they fleece. Others put forth false claims that vibhuuthi is emanating from the pictures of Baaba in their homes, that Amrith (nectar) is dripping from them or that material objects are falling from them, like written answers to questions. Samithis and other Units should have no contact with such cheats and crooks. Any one who is attached to such or who encourages such can be immediately removed.

There are others who claim that I am speaking through them, and answering questions put to them. These people must be either insane or hysteria-affected or they are possessed by some ghost or by the greed to earn money thereby. I can only tell you that it is not I that speaks through them. I do not need media; nor do I need substitutes or subsidiaries or representatives.

There are some crooks who are publicising that I have allotted them some regions for ministration by them on My behalf, because, they say, My devotees have increased so much that I am unable to attend to all of them, single-handed! On the face of it, this is an absurd lie.

Moreover, consider another aspect. Evil forces try to draw away aspirants. Even those who cry in pure agonising yearning, Sai Sai Sai, and lead pure unselfish virtuous lives, even these find it hard to realise Me; how then can these low scheming vulgar men who know no saadhana, sincerity, truth and humility, how can these people claim that they have been blessed by me? They may wear the same style of dress, imitate gestures and style of speech but these will only bring their falsehood into greater prominence. That I am supposed to "possess" such people or speak through them or shower My Grace on them is an assumption of which one ought to be ashamed! How then can anyone believe it, I wonder.

Evil forces which design to damage or diminish the faith and devotion of the simple and the sincere do emerge into action and try to attract attention by devious means. They try to draw away aspirants from the spiritual path into worldly paths of avarice and malice. There is a big chasm of difference between the Sai Shakti (Sai Power) and these inferior shakthis. Since the opportunity has now offered itself, this has to be said.

There can be no limit for Sai Shakti, no hindrance, no opposition or obstacle. You may believe it or you may not, but Sai Shakti can transform earth into sky, the sky into earth. Only, there is no call for that transformation. This Divine Behaviour is far distinct from the mean exhibitionistic tricks of the inferior shakthis. This is spontaneous manifestation; those are calculated to collect customers and exploit the ignorant. The inferior shakthis may imitate the dress or the gestures, for imitation cannot be prevented. But you have to ask yourselves the question: "Can all green feathered birds be parrots? Or, can all worms on petals turn into butterflies? Or, can a donkey wearing a tiger-skin become a tiger or can an overgrown boar be honoured as an elephant?" Beware of being cheated by dress or speech or by tricks. Nor need you feel angry or upset by these.

Falsehood can never become Truth. For Truth is ever Truth. Falsehood can never become Truth, whatever its tactics. This is the very embodiment of Truth. It has no unreality or falsehood in its composition.

But, those afflicted with jaundice can see all things only as yellow. Those who have no appetite or digestion find even delicious food, bitter. Such men may proclaim this in their own manner, as different from what it is; but I am not in the least perturbed nor will I change.

Others who are taken to be elders have posed certain problems, to confuse the mind. Krishna, they say, showed many wonders, with amazing disregard of the Laws of Nature and therefore, according to them, Krishna had to meet his death from the arrow of a hunter. Jesus, they say, suffered crucifixion for, he too manifested many miracles. Their argument is that since I am defying the laws of nature, I too will suffer likewise. They plan to create panic and spread false alarm. But, these are the prattlings of weakness, helplessness and envy. These can never be Truth. They only plan to decry and diminish the glory they cannot understand or tolerate.

Whoever may join in this campaign, whatever tactics they employ, even if all the 'fourteenworlds' unite as one, they cannot succeed; they cannot affect Me in the least. And, even if ten more worlds, say 24 in all, lend them their support, their falsehood will not be accepted or established as Truth.

Do not allow your faith and devotion to decline Truth can never be tarnished or turned into falsehood. You may be subjected to all kinds of pressure and publicity; but, do not lose courage, do not allow your devotion, faith and steadfastness to decline. Resolve to achieve success in the saadhana you have taken upon yourselves. Then, this Sathya will reveal itself, without fail, as your own sathya (reality).
 I do not depend on outer manifestation and actions; I am related to you through the inner principle of Love. If you are to be drawn by outer attractions, advertisement is imperative. For example, if such a Conference or such a Celebration is held in any other place, invitations have to be printed and sent out, personal requests have to be made so that this person or that can attend. Considerations have to be held forth to many so that the invitations may be accepted and the function made a success. But here in the Prashaanthi Nilayam, no invitation has ever been printed and distributed on any occasion, asking people to come. No one has been specially requested to take part. It is Love, the invitations of the Heart to the heart, that has brought you in tens of thousands to this place. The validity and value of Love are proved by you; Love is the most potent of My powers.
 When you light a lamp in your home, you have to go round the homes of others and invite them to come and admire it. But when the Sun rises in all its splendour, there is no need to draw the attention of the world to the event. This is the splendour of the Sun. It will itself command attention. No one need be invited to notice it.
 Of course, it is only natural that doubt may arise in you on some occasions based on My form or My words or My action but, when you are eager to know My reality, you must observe in action My teaching and follow Me. Then, certainly, My Divine Reality will be revealed to you. Having looked at this form through your eyes only, you start guessing and concluding, as your wavering fancy dictates, and lay waste your intellectual and mental efforts; you even allow your devotion and faith to flow into wrong channels. I am advising you against this, with the force of a command.
 No generation is more fortunate than the present one Swaami Kaarunyaanandha declared yesterday that he believed for a long time that those who lived in previous Ages were far more fortunate than those of this Age, since they could secure the dharshan (direct sight) of the Incarnation of the Lord. But he said, it has now become clear to him that there is no generation more fortunate than his; that declaration is true. It is thrice true.

 For during no previous Age did man have this unique chance. No organisation of this nature was established, no Conference of this character was held in the Presence and no opportunity was given then to derive Aanandha through such close association, through conversation and singing together. Undoubtedly, you are all singularly fortunate.
 Therefore, do not let the opportunity slip through your hands. Hold fast to it and make the best of it. With steady faith and enthusiastic devotional activity, tread the path indicated and reach the Goal of Realising the Reality.
 I bless you that you may attain the Bliss of that Realisation.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, All-India Conference of Workers of Shri Sathya Sai Seva Organisations, 22-11-1970
 36. Feast of Grace
 THE Vedhas, which are the most ancient scriptures of man, have laid down that man has to utilise the special gifts that God has endowed him with, (namely, an intelligence that can look into the future and decide on a long-term basis what is profitable in the ultimate analysis, and a capacity to discard and keep away from satisfactions of a temporary nature so that one can pursue undisturbed the lasting satisfaction of eternal Bliss). That is the reason why this Yajna Sapthaaha (Week-long sacrificial ritual) is called Vedhapurusha Sapthaaha Yajna; the Vedhapurusha is to be propitiated by the adoration of the Vedhic Gods, especially the Sun and Fire, through ceremonial Namaskaar (for the Sun) and oblations of ritually sanctified ghee (for the God of Fire). Rudhra is adored by the worship of the thousand Lingas every day and the Mother aspect of God (which is most revered during the Navaraathri is adored by means of the puuja which you see performed with scrupulous correctness. The Vedhas are recited with authentic syllabic exactitude, just as it was recited centuries and millennia ago on the banks of the river Saraswathi or Yamuna, by the simple sages of Aaryaavartha. By this means, the reciters, the worshippers, the performers and the participants, listeners and those who are vibrating to the holiness of the place, wherever they may be, are filled with bliss and peace.

Yajna maintains order of the Universe Yajna means sacrifice; the manthras emphasise this, the ritual symbolises this; the namaskaar (prostration) is but the physical act which highlights this; indeed, all life is a sacrifice of a portion of one's span of life every day to the Sun, of a portion of one's time and strength and attention to some one or thing every moment. There can be no progress without yajna (sacrifice). Yajna maintains the order of the Universe. Sacrifice pleases the gods; the gods send rain; the rain feeds the crops; the crops yield harvest, the harvest strengthens the limbs and widens the outlook; it broadens the heart, clarifies the vision, until man reaches the goal, where there is no more struggle or death. The highest and the most fruitful sacrifice is that of the ego. Crucify it and be free. Dedicate it to God and be rich beyond all dreams. Prepare yourself for this supreme status, by engaging in holy karma, that is to say, karma cleansed in the crucible of dharma, and attain Brahman (the One Indivisible Absolute), which appears as all this multifarious Universe. The Mahaabhaaratha is also eligible to the reverence due to the Vedhas; it is revered as the Fifth Vedha by those that know. There, we find the eldest of the Paandava (pure) brothers called Dharmaraaja (dharma-born). But, all his success was due to the fact that he had, on his right hand, Bheema (the embodiment of strength) and on his left hand, Arjuna (unsullied virtue). The strength that comes from the mastery of the senses and the fortitude and equanimity won through the conquest over impulses, emotions and passions are both valuable reinforcement for dharma to scale the bastions of Brahman. Five steps in the path of dedicated living The Vedhas have prescribed five steps, to enable the individual to cultivate the spirit of Yajna' Dheva yajna (adoring God in the domestic altar); Pithra yajna (keeping in mind the debt one owes to the parents who endowed this body and fed the lamp of life); Manushya yajna (feeding guests and those who come seeking shelter and food); Brahma yajna (the study of the sacred scriptures and the initiation into the spiritual path) and Bhuutha yajna (the feeding and fostering of pet animals, of cattle, of horse and sheep and dog which are the helpmates and comrades of man). The Vedhas insist on every householder to attend to these five rites, every day and thus, he is encouraged along the path of dedicated living to reach the goal of total surrender to God. The cow grants man milk, butter, curds, ghee---all valuable nutrients; they consume only grass and drink that which is undrinkable by man; and they bestow on man, in return for the care and kindness he evinces, life-giving and strength-sustaining food! Gratefulness demands that man should not neglect or injure them. So too, man should not allow plants and trees that he has grown to suffer from hunger and thirst and go dry and wither. You must have seen people placing sugar or flour at the mouths of ant-hills. It is a flash on the universal compassion which must mark out the heart of man. It is as much Bhuutha yajna as the care of cows, though it does not reward the giver. The One Willed to become many Ignore the temporary and trivial Name and Form of the embodiment of the Divine spirit; then, all distinctions of worm and wolf, of atom and avathaar, disappear and the knowledge that basic Truth is One is realised. Creation or manifestation or the outburst of blossoming expansion started, as the Upanishadhs say, when the One willed, Ekoham bahusyam---"I am One; let Me become Many." So, it is the One that is all this. It is the integer (I) that fills the zeros after it with value and validity! The realisation of the function of the I and the ignoring of all the zeros that come after it, is the end and aim of human endeavour. When the mind is unruffled and the intelligence is sharpened, this realisation will take place, without further effort. Through the saadhana of seva (discipline of selfless service), it is possible to cognise the One of which the many are appearances. He who serves a master with his eye on the pay packet cannot be called a sevak. He is the servant of the pay packet. That type of service will only bind him to the profit or loss that it entails, and bring about disappointment or elation. Service has to be rendered either from a supreme sense of duty or as a humble dedicatory offering to the Highest, or in a spirit of total surrender to the Will of God leaving all thought of the consequence to His Grace. Done with these pure motives, the act of service will develop detachments, but, will not encourage sloppishness. Shiva is praised as Thryambakam, that is, three-eyed; the eyes are held to be eyes that see into the past and the future, as well as the present; but, they represent also the three urges namely, desire, activity and knowledge---thirsts that move men and decide his fate. These three urges make all beings kin in the Divine bond; those who serve beings with love and reverence can contact this core of being and save themselves. They will see in all, the unmistakable reflections and images of the God whom they have enshrined in their hearts. Man has forgotten the task for which he is born When you desire to transform a silver idol of Ganesh into an idol Krishna, you cannot succeed by simply covering the Ganesh with a cloth and uncovering it, after a few seconds! You have to break it into pieces and melt the bits and pour the silver into the Krishna mould! So too, when you yearn to transform the human into the Divine, you must pull down the pieces through detachment, melt them in the fire of inaana, and pour the mind stuff into the mould bhakthi.

 Then, the entire consciousness takes on the Divine Name, Form and Substance. Then, whatever is spoken or done or thought assumes the splendour and purity of the Divine.
 I have often told you that My Life is My Message. Avathaars proclaim so and demonstrate their Divinity that way. They are children among children, men among men, women among women, so that they may respond to their joy and sorrow and console them and infuse confidence and courage into their drooping hearts. The Avathaars appear among humans since birds, beasts, trees and the like have not slid into the un-natural and the strange. It is only man, who pursuing the will-o'-the-wisp of worldly happiness and sensual pleasure, has forgotten the task for which he has come to earth. Since God assumes human form in order to restore Dharma and lead man back into the path of virtue and wisdom, nothing can please God more than rigorous adherence to Dharma. One can stick to the path of Dharma if one is conscious of the Divine in every thing that he sees or hears, touches or tastes. That will fill every moment of his life with the thrill of self-realisation.
 God listens to the agony of the heart Have faith in God; He sees everything; He is everywhere; He is all-powerful. When queen Dhrou-padhi was dragged into the open court by the wicked cousins of her consorts, and they threatened to insult and dishonour her, she did not call on her human lords---Dharmaraaja the great master and practitioner of Dharma, Bheema the redoubtable warrior, Arjuna the unexcelled bowman, Sahadheva the knower of everyone's future, Nakula the embodiment of bravery---she sought succour and prayed to Krishna, the Lord and protector of righteousness, God who listens to the agony of the heart.

 He is in every heart. He is all this. You know He has said in the Geetha, Manmanaa bhaava, madbhaktho Mad yaaji maam namaskuru Mamevaishyasi yukthaivam Aathmaanaam mathparaayanah.
 "Have your mind fixed on Me; be devoted to Me; worship Me; prostrate before Me; Have Me alone as the Goal; when you are fixed in faith in Me, you can attain Me." Here, I and Me refer to the I and Me that is in every being, namely, the Aathma which is the real I of the atom and the avathaar. Even the person who is contemplating suicide declares, "I must die so that I can be happy, rid of all these worries!" The I which will be relieved when the body falls off is the Aathma.
 The individual I believes it is limited; but, that is an illusion. It is the same Universal Spirit, imagining itself to be limited. This awareness can come to man either through a flash of intellectual analysis or a flash of Universal Love. The awareness is an act of identification which involves and insists on Love.
 Love is God; Love is the means and end. That is why there are no atheists, for, there is no being without love of some kind or other. And, love of any kind, of any measure, is but a spark of Divinity. Love knows no fear, it promotes truth, it finds peace, it builds faith, it promotes concord.
 November; 1970
 In spiritual matters, faith is the basic requisite for progress. That faith has to be guarded carefully.
 Yield to the Lord, who is more kin to you than your own parents, yield to no other.
 Do not allow your faith to falter with every passing gust of wind. Believe that all the three worlds cannot unseat Truth, all the fourteen lokas cannot seat falsehood on the throne.
 Your duty is to carry on saadhana undisturbed by what others may say, holding fast to the certitude of your own experience.
Sathya Sai Baba
 37. Amazing appendix EACH one has come embodied into this world of joy and grief, of growth and decay, of hope and despair, in order to discover the way home, to get back to the source from which he has strayed into this wilderness. This has to be done within the allotted time of sojourn, from each day the Sun steals a fraction away. But, man is attracted by the phantom lights and noises of the wilderness, by the seeming sweetness of its impact, and he ignores the call of destiny. The senses lead him on and on, deeper and deeper into the maze, until he dies with a moan and a whimper, instead of with a smile and a gesture of gratitude. The years between birth and death are spent in wasteful acquisition and worthless achievements---for, all the time, his heart is sore with unsatisfied desires and unhealthy emotions, that affect the tranquillity that is his real reality. This is the delusion that has been haunting man, the maayaa (illusory power) that has been shadowing the Divinity that is his essence.

 It is only by the cultivation of detachment, by denying the senses the thrills they thirst for, it is only by diving deeper into the depths of one's being, by believing that you have some depths that will reward exploration, that one can capture the exhilaration of that tranquillity. This is the highest morality, for when this is done, man is saturated with love and has no trace any more of malice or hate or greed or lust. The vision is purified by the ideal of the unity of all in One and the proliferation of One as all. The tendencies towards hate, malice and greed which cause individual and social conflicts and complexes can be overcome by yoga (divine communion) and thyaga (renunciation), the practice of emotional imperturbability and the reduction of wants and mental cravings. This is the message of Bhaarith, through the centuries, declared and demonstrated through clear, convincing precept and countless unimpeachable examples.
 God knows best what each one deserves The feeling that activity is "mine" and that it is for the sake of some benefit, that must accrue to "me"--it is this that causes ill-feeling, sorrow, and illnesses. The ego exults or bewails; it laughs and weeps; it competes and mopes; it swings like a pendulum between joy and grief. It gives man no moment of rest, of equanimity. It is agitated when the fruit of the activity is less than expected, or even when it is more, or different, or distorted. That is why the Shruthis (divine scriptures) prescribe that everyone should dedicate all his activity to God who knows best what benefit everyone deserves and who doles out the fruit in the manner

He Wills.

But, there are many who doubt or question the very existence of God to whom all the intelligence, the vitality, the virtue, the urges which lie beneath activity are to be offered in worshipful activity. For such, the Divine occasionally, out of innate Grace, reveals Itself, through the marvellous manifestation of glory, beyond the limits of the human. The doubters receive without asking; the door is opened without even a knock; the answer is proclaimed for all to hear.
 Illness assumed to relieve a devotee Take the illness which came into this body, for example. It is the nature of the human body to generate disease through faulty food or foolish habits. This explains the illness of ordinary men, not the illness that you witnessed during the last two days. That was an illness assumed, willed, in order to relieve a person, who could not have survived it or even borne it without perturbation.
 This is one of the functions of the Divine, for which it has incarnated-- the pouring of Grace on the devotee. The appendix was inflamed and it became an abscess, which the doctors said could be cured only by an operation immediately done. The devotee could not have borne that agonising pain; I have come with this body in order to save these other bodies from pain and suffering. This body will ever be free from illness and pain; disease can never affect it. That is the real truth.
 One day, Krishna developed a type of agonising stomach-ache! The sage, Naaradha, happened to put in his appearance and witness the suffering. He was upset, and he prayed that he may be commissioned to bring to Him the drug that will cure the pain. "There is just one drug that can assuage it, but can you bring it for me?" asked Krishna. Naaradha said, "Tell me; it will be done!" "Bring for me the dust of the feet of any real devotee; that will stop the pain," replied the Lord.
Naaradha moved out very fast to procure it, but at the door, he remembered that he himself was the most earnest and sincere devotee. So, he turned back and suggested to the Lord that the dust of his own feet may be used. But, the Lord said, "No; no. Egoism has tainted it and so it has contaminated the drug." So, Naaradha had perforce to go abroad and seek it from others who he knew as great devotees. But, no one of them gave him the dust! Some were afraid, some were ashamed, some withdrew fearing sacrilege, some asserted they were not devotees, being only mere aspirants of Grace.

 Surrender your judgement to the Lord Then, Naaradha went into Brindhaavan where the simple Gopees were. He told them of his plight and Krishna's pain. At this, each one of them collected the dust of the feet and within seconds, Naaradha's hands were full of packets. "Rush with these; may the pain cease!"---that was their response. The petty little ideas of superiority or inferiority, of pride or humility, of shame or fear did not enter their minds. "The Lord is in pain; it must be cured," that was all they knew and cared to know. They did not stop to inquire whether the Lord could really be suffering, whether the dust of their feet had any curative property, whether the mission on which Naaradha had come had any deeper meaning for them or the world! They heard, they gave, they prayed, they were happy. They felt the pain that Krishna had; they responded to the command.
 They were all equally affected, and their reactions were all equally prompt and sincere.
 You must surrender your judgement to the Lord; then, the Lord will assume full responsibility and be the guardian, guide and motive power. It is such a devotee, a person who has surrendered everything, even his judgement, to Me that I had to save, by taking over this illness and going through it. The signs of that illness have disappeared today and they shall not recur again.
 There is also another reason that lies behind that episode. The Divine is recognised by gifted people as the vast, the magnificent, the beautiful, the mighty, the majestic, the awesome. But, for the generality of mankind, the consciousness that each one is a miracle sustained by God, that each breath is a witness of God's Providence, that each event is proof of His Presence, comes but rarely in life. When this Body, that is apparently human, behaves as if it is filled with suprahuman potentialities, then, amazement draws the attention of all towards the Divine that is the inherent nature. Off and on, it becomes necessary to give this lesson to mankind, so that faith in God and power to recognise Divinity are added to human faculties.
 Then only can the mind of man be turned from the world to the Master of the Worlds.
 On Tuesday, the thousands of Goans who had assembled in the City to listen to Me were disappointed; I had to inform them that the rescue of devotees is paramount among tasks and so, I know they had to go away disappointed. But, I shall very soon meet them again and give the Aanandha for which they thirst.

Cabo Raj Nivas, Goa, 12-12-1970 God cares more for the motive behind the deed, the ideal that prompts the effort, the bhaava, not the baahya.
Sathya Sai Baaba
 38. Rushing to the rescue THE Sathyam-Shivam-Sundharam (Truth-Love-Beauty) manifestation of God responds to prayers addressed to any of Its manifold Names. It is endowed with infinite patience and compassion, though It has now assumed human form and can be expected to have human traits and even human failings, for, It has to deal with human frailties and rescue man from himself.
 Man has to be shown the means by which he can enlarge the circle of Love, and spread the Light of his reason wide. Unless man is able to see all humanity as One, he cannot be declared a devotee of God; for humanity is the progeny of God. The Divine is the string on which all this floral variety is strung into a garland. Yoga is the method by which the inner kinship is realised, and one's affinity with the Universe is experienced. Udh-yoga, the word which is now used for any type of employment, is best used for the highest job on which man can be employed---the discovery of this innate kinship.
 Of course, at first sight, the Divinity inherent in all beings and things will not be clear to the vision. How can any one read the sign G as jee, without being told by some one who knows and accepts that statement in good faith? Then, he reaches the stage when he can read G O D as jee o dee. But, what persuades him to read it as God, and not as jee o dee?
 Again, it is the Guru, whom you trust and who knows these things well. And, how do we know that the sound God represents for all the inscrutable all-pervasive Intelligence that pervades the atom and the star? Again, it is the Guru who had taught us so to accept it.
 The I is a reflection of God in the body-mirror But it is not enough to know just this from the Guru. One must pursue the search and reach the ultimate Truth, the Truth that can explain the atom as well as the most distant star, now and for ever. Only the Kshethrajna knows the Kshethra---only God knows the Universe. To know the Universe, one must become God. In fact, there is no becoming God; one is God, masquerading as Sohan Lal, Sundher Lal or Indhu Lal! The I which you feel you are, the I that you were, when you were a baby, a boy, a young man, a middle aged man, an old man and a decrepit senile individual---that I is but a reflection of God in this Body-Mirror! You are but a wave on the breast of the Ocean, namely, God. Know this, experience this---that is the consummation, the goal! Know that all are waves, and then, realise that the wave is but the Ocean, with name and form that appear, last for a short time, and then disappear.

In order to attain this Vision (Vijnaana), man has to transcend three sheaths (koshas) out of the five in which he is encased---the Annamaya kosha or gross, with its equipment of the senses; the Praanamaya kosha or subtle, with its instrumentality of vital airs and the nervous system; the Manomaya kosha, the Causal, with its pattern of desires, motives, resolutions, wishes, both positive and negative, which form the complex called Mind. Deeper than these there is the Vijnaanamaya kosha, the sheath of Intuition, which is laid over the Aanandhamaya kosha, the sheath of Bliss. But, man is now caught up in the tangles of the first three, and he does not venture any deeper, so that he is denied a glimpse into the truth whose door lies at the Vijnaana stage only, and passes beyond the Aanandhamaya kosha itself. There are no short-cuts to Self-realisation. Embodiments of the Divine Aathma! It is only through the cultivation of Love that the heart can be enlarged to receive these eternal absolute experiences; it is only through the practice of Truth that the great TRUTH can be experienced. Here are many teachers who have emerged recently, extolling each one, his own special brand of spiritual exercises by which he claims to give you supreme bliss. They give these brands attractive names, names redolent of the past, like Kriya Yoga, Hatha Yoga, Karma Yoga, Anthar Yoga, etc. But, there are no short-cuts to selfrealisation.

The goal can be reached only through the purification of character and the cultivation of unselfish Love. Any yoga that does not result in the control of emotions, of the egoistic tendencies, of the greed for prestige and reputation, is bhoga (the path of enjoyment) not yoga (restraint). The body is but an assembly of instruments for Self-realisation; that is the culmination of all the lives which earned for you this equipment. The culmination of the tree is the fruit and the sweetness thereof!

Embodiments of the principle of Universal Love! I was to have come and given you dhharshan and this Aanandha of sambhaashan (delight of divine discourse) some days back; you had come that day and gone back disappointed. I know that some stories that heightened your anxiety were circulated, as the reason for my absence that day. And, even those who came to know the real reason attributed it to what they called miracle or mesmerism or some such cause, which they held to be reprehensible! It is easy to dismiss the Divine by some cheap phrase; but, that does not mean that you have negated It or understood It.

I had to take on Myself the illness that would have been fatal to a very good person who had surrendered to God, and the call was so urgent and sincere that I could not possibly postpone My response, until all My engagements were fulfilled! You believe in such things when they are related to Raama or Krishna or others; for, you feel that belief does not impose any obligations on you. But, in the case of the Incarnation before you, you apprehend that when the Divine is recognised, certain consequences follow, and you try to avoid them. But, I carry on My task of Bhaktharakshana (rescuing the devotees, good and sincere seekers) regardless of what the world may think of it.

Panjim, Goa, 18-12-1970

Cleanse your mind of the temptations and tenets of ignorance; make it free from dust, so that God may be reflected therein.

Sathya Sai Baba
39. Bring me the pain

THE fulfilment of human life consists in the service that man renders, without any thought of return, in an attitude of selflessness. Service rendered in this spirit sheds light in the dark interior of man, it widens the heart, it purifies the impulses and confers lasting Aanandha. This country has been emphasising the fundamental unity of mankind; this truth can be fixed in the experience, by means of dedicated service. India is a garden of flagrant colours; it has a variety of faiths and creeds, all emphasising this Unity and this path of service, in order to realise it. All creeds here declare that every one is brother or sister to every one else---that is the message of every saint and sage in this land.

With the passage of time, and the inroads of alien cultures and ungodly attitudes, this message has been neglected and we are in the pathetic plight of factions and fights between those who once were brothers! Passion and blind emotion have filled the heart of the nation, which was responding bravely to the call of brotherhood and service. Passion and emotion are as calamitous as earthquakes; their consequences can be felt far and wide. We have to cool down the passions and develop a sense of balance and equipoise in the human mind, through the cultivation of Prema (Love).

Sathsangs can arouse the latent Love in man This is the land where Thukaaraam, on his way from Kaashi to Raameshwaram, with sacred Ganga water in a pot on his shoulder---water that he had vowed to pour ceremonially on the Linga at Raameshwaram---saw a donkey dying of thirst! And, the sense of unity with all living beings overpowered him so much that without a second thought, he poured the holy Ganga he had carried so far for the sacred purpose, down the parched throat of the 'brother' and was happy to see in him the Linga he longed to adore! So, universal Love is latent in the traditions of the people; what is wanted is only awakening them from slumber.
Sathsangs (good holy company) can arouse the latent Love; this work has to be done among the youth, at the present time. For the burden is on the shoulders of youth.
 The world (and not God who is expressed through it and beyond it) is the centre of attention at the present time. The reaction to the world depends on the feelings which prompt the dealings with it; the feelings depend upon the experience gained already; the experience is coloured by the desire which urged the contact and drew the reaction. Desire is based on ignorance of the real nature of the world) The world is maaya, a mixture of fact and fiction, but it is valued as Truth!
 It is a fiction built on the basis of fact. The fact is Divinity; the fiction is variety. This deluding agent is God, for, the fact is hidden and the fiction is imposed by the leela (play) of God. And,
 God is but the appearance in Form of the Formless, Intangible, Immanent, Absolute, the Niraakaara Paramaathma, the akaasha (space) within the hridhaya (heart) of man and all living beings as well as of all the other Bhuuthaas or Principles, unbound, without' beginning or end.
 The attribute by which Aakaasha can be cognised is Shabdha (sound) or the Word! In the beginning was the Word! The word became the object, it got embodied, concretised. That is why we call "object" as padhaartha. Padha means word, artha means meaning or purpose. The "object" is the purpose of which the word was uttered, the meaning which makes the word valid) We have the word 'tree' and the meaning is the tree that stands opposite! We have the word 'man' and the meaning is you. The word and its meaning are inseparable, indistinguishable. The word did not arise without the object, nor the object without the word.

 God is and can be, only One, not more The word God too is the indication that there is the Padhaartta, that there is God. If there was no God, the word God would not have originated and gained currency.
 You may see God or you may not, but the word is proof that there is God.
 God is Omnipresent; He is in the past, the present, the future. I am placing this garland on my finger. See, the part of the garland to the left of the finger is the future, the part to the right is the past and where it contacts the finger, that point is the present. Now, I roll the garland on the finger and pull it to the right. The future comes up and becomes the present and moves down into the past, but, the present is always present. God is always present, watching the future rolling on into the past!
 And, God is and can be, only One, not more! "There is only One God and He is Omnipresent!
 There is only One Religion, the religion of Love. There is only One Language, the language of the Heart." This God has to be visualised by means of constant spiritual discipline. Do not involve yourselves in doubts and hesitations. If only you observe the disciplines and purify the Consciousness, you can see the God installed in your heart. There is sugar in the cup, but the water is insipid, for you have not stirred it well. There is God-in the world, and by stirring the Divine well into every drop or atom thereof, you can make the world a sweet thing to live by.
 Intelligence is the spoon; Saadhana is the process of stirring.
 Saturate every moment of life with God; it becomes sweet thereby.
 God is the 'I' in all beings As a matter of fact, you are even now dedicating everything to God; only, you do not do it consciously, with the joy that is your due! You say, "I do it for my pleasure. I go there to be happy. I am reading it for my satisfaction, for my progress." Who is this I that is doing, going, acting, reading, enjoying, being pleased? It is the I that sees, that hears, that thinks with the eye, the ear, the brain, etc. It is the I that Rathan Lal says, he is! Sohan Lal, Pran Lal and Indhu Lal all say I, I, I. This I is in every one. It is the individualised Aathma in each, it is the Universal that is reflected in the particular. So when you say, "I do it for my pleasure," you do it really for the pleasure of the I within you, namely, God. That is why the Geetha says, Maam anusmaran, maam ekam sharanam vraja: "Surrender yourself to Me!" Who is this 'me?' God. Why is He called 'I'? Because He is the I in all beings.

In the Annamaya kosha (material sheath), that is to say, when man is established in the physical, and in the Praanamaya kosha, when he is in the nervous and vital spheres of activity, he feels that life is fulfilled by means of food, recreation and a contented, comfortable existence. When he rises up into the Manomaya kosha (mental sheath), his imagination opens further vistas, and he gets glimpses of the glory and majesty of the Divine, which makes him adore and revere. The next kosha, the Vijnaanamaya kosha (intellectual sheath), then steps in and makes him inquire into the validity of the experiences and leads him on to the fifth kosha, the Aanandhamaya, the stage of Bliss, with the confirmation of the hypothesis of the Divine, that the intellect framed.
This liberates man from fear and doubt. Wisdom alone can grant full freedom. Just as the end of culture is progress, the end of knowledge is love, so, the end of wisdom is freedom.
Bhakti Yoga alone can save and sustain Do not fritter the days in attaining affluence in material possessions, which are often impediments in the journey of life. Money comes and goes; morality comes---but, grows! Money is not true wealth; it loses value, it bloats the ego and hardens the heart. If it does not circulate, it destroys health, as blood does.
Embodiments of the Divine! Do not take it amiss, for, I am telling this only' out of the fullness of my love. There are many nowadays who go about with various shortcuts to liberation, paths which they have marked out and are determined to preach, attracting disciples and forming groups; they concoct these out of Hatha yoga, Kriyaa yoga, Raaja yoga, and some thin Vedhaantha and then, start out as guides and leaders. But, the fruits they confer are only flippant and flimsy; they are not lasting or truly liberating. Bhakti yoga alone, as laid down and practised through the centuries, can save and sustain. God can be realised only through love.

Without love in the heart, God will not reside in the desert. Other paths develop conceit, separate man from man, man from beast. They contract, they do not reach out, they shrink your sphere of awareness of the Divine! Love is expansion and expansion is Divine Life. Sow Love; it blossoms as compassion and tolerance; it yields the fruit of Peace (Shaanthi).
Respect everyone since the same Aathma is in all God is reflected in the medium of Nature, in everything His image is to be cognised. If the medium is Saathwik (pure), then, God is as divine in the image as in His own Divine state; if it is reflected in the Raajasik (the active passionate) medium, the image becomes the individual Jeemi; when the Thaamasik (the dull) medium reflects it, then, the image is 'matter.' The 'Moon' is One; and it is so distant and unaffected; but, its reflections in various pots of water differ in brightness and steadiness, according to the clarity and calmness of the water.
The Saathwik is the pot of gold, the Raajasik is the pot of copper, and the Thaamasik is the iron pot! Their value may differ, but, the moon is reflected equally well in the water that each may have in them. Again, the golden pot is the Mahaathma, the copper one is the believer, the iron one is the atheist; but, in all three, the Aathma is the inner motivator, the indweller. So, respect everyone, since the same Aathma is in all.
The teacher must practise what he teaches, avoid what he wants his pupils to avoid; then only can his teachings affect the lives of those who are committed to them.
Now, the Guru is riddled with desires and he coolly advises his disciple to discard desire! He smokes cigarettes but warns him against the habit! Such Gurus care more for publicity than genuine practice. The Sathya Sai Organisation has no desire to exhibit any superiority; it tries to hold forth the ideal, to be witness to the truth of certain fundamental spiritual truths and the validity Of certain spiritual disciplines.
Authenticity of Sai Avathaar Embodiments of the Divine! This is the best time to tell you something about the authenticity of this Advent. I am saying this, not for establishing a claim for superiority or importance for this Body; I only wish to communicate the Truth. There are many who cannot bear or tolerate the splendour that I am manifesting, the Divinity that is expressed in every act, the wonders and amazing happenings that are the result of Grace; these people label these as acts of mesmerism or miracles or feats of magic! They hope to bring these down in the estimation of people. Let me tell you this: Mine is no mesmerism, miracle or magic. Mine is genuine Divine Power.

There are others who cavil at these, and whisper that miracles are not conducive to spiritual development, that they will be handicaps in the process of realisation of God, and they persuade you to stray away from the true path. These people are too weak to conceive the Divine; they have no strength or stamina to understand its magnificence and majesty. They have small minds and limited intellects.

Kamsa, the wicked uncle of Krishna, knew that he was to meet his death at the hands of Krishna; so, he was so terror-stricken that he saw Krishna wherever his eyes were turned! He saw him beside him, before him, behind him, above him, all around him! So, he shook his fist against the appearance and saying, "Krishna, fie upon your magic! I spurn your tactics to terrify me!" He boasted that his physical prowess could overpower the effects of the direct magic. But, when the little seven-year old boy, Krishna jumped up in the arena and gripped him by the neck, and sat on his chest, when he fell, to pound him to death, Krishna shouted into his ear, "Uncle! This is Magic! Magic! Magic!" you cannot declare that you have understood a phenomenon when what you do is simply to slight it by the use of a certain word!

You have no reason to suffer in the play of Love God can do anything; He has all power in the palm of His Hand! My powers do not abide in Me a while and then, fade away! Indhra jaalam idham---All this is apparent manipulation by Divine Will. My Body, like all other bodies, is a temporary habitation; but My power is eternal, allpervasive, everlasting! This body has been assumed, to serve a purpose: the establishment of Dharma and the teaching of Dharma. When that purpose is over, this Body will disappear, like the bubble on the waters.

The other day a very serious illness came upon this body, in Goa. When they came to know about this, many devoted to Me were plunged in anxiety! Illness can never affect this Body; it cannot approach it. If it comes sometime, that is but a passing phase' it belongs to some one and it comes to Me and goes, just as it came! When it comes, this body 'appears' to be ill! But, I have no contact with it, no affliction! Many people, when such a thing happens, take courage even to suggest to Me(!) ways of dealing with the situation!

They tell Me, "Why Swaami! Why do you allow the illness of another to come upon you? If he suffers from it, only one person suffers! But, when you allow it to come over you lakhs of people suffer? Leave it to him, Swaami!" they say. When this body is 'suffering,' it is the nature, the duty of devotees to suffer in unison; but, I must also follow My duty! To take upon Myself the sufferings of those who have surrendered to Me is My duty! I do My duty, and you; may do yours. But, when you look at the Truth squarely in the face, you will know that I have no 'suffering' and you too have no reason to suffer! The entire thing is the play of Love! It has been taken over by Me on account of Love and so, I have no pain or suffering) You suffer on account of Love. It is Love, Love, fight through; there is no reason for sorrow or pain or suffering!

Never deviate from your faith in God Cultivate Love; become intoxicated with it. We have here tens of thousands gathered, calling themselves devotees, but, when you try to find out how genuine they are, you have to admit that ninety-nine per cent of them are only part-time devotees, not full-time devotees! Had you known the Truth about Me, you would not have suffered at all, at the news of illness from Raaj Bhavan.

Goal There were some who had their faith severely shaken when the news came in! Devotees must shine ever steady, in the joy of faith.

A mother and son developed disagreement so fast and so seriously about the property rights of each that they were completely estranged, and they stood in court, facing each other, in opposite boxes, before the judge. The judge asked the lady, "Do you know this young man standing there?" and the lady replied, "Yes; he is my son!" However violently she might hate him, she has to admit that he is her son! The young man is asked, likewise, "Do you know this lady?" and he replied, "Yes; she is my mother!" You too must never deviate from that faith whatever might happen, to pull you and God apart!

Pray for the welfare of all mankind Faith so stable as this is fast becoming a rarity. When your wishes fail, you deny God; when wishes fructify, you adore Him with greater pomp, and have a few more pictures in your shrine, and you spend more money on flowers and incense! God has no preferences and prejudices; His is but reaction, reflection and re-sound! He comes, to confer Aanandha, to foster Aanandha, to teach ways of acquiring and activating Aanandha. He takes upon Himself the pain and sorrow of the world, in order to prepare the hearts of men for Love!

 This Day marks the beginning of the Christian Era, the year of Christ.
 Christ sacrificed his life for the sake of those who put their faith in him. He propagated the truth that service is God, that sacrifice is God. Even if you falter in the adoration of God, do not falter in the service of the living God, who has assumed human shape and is moving all around you in such large numbers and wearing such manifold costumes of apparel and speech!
 Only those who can pour out compassion to fellow-men can claim a place in the Grace of God.
 This is also the highest spiritual discipline; it impresses on you the unity of the human community and the glory of God's immanence. May this discipline which the Seva Dhal has taken up with genuine delight spread all over this country, and may the land be happy and prosperous. May the world have peace and happiness, and loving trust. That is My blessing. I want you to pray for the welfare and prosperity of all mankind.
Dharmakshethra, 25-12-1970
 Does Sai speak these words?
 Does Sai speak these words into avid ears and arid hearts? No!... It is our Mother who speaks, caressing, cajoling, crooning lullabies to relieve the pain and to bless with bliss, Mokshayishyaami, maa suchah! Don't weep, she cradles us! She leads us softly along the road, over pebbles, thorns. When the path is bitter, uphill, hard, she sings us through Yogakshemam vahaamyaham --- our Mother speaks.
 Does Sai speak these words into tingling ears and twinkling hearts?
 No! It is our Father that speaks, refining, revealing, reminding our Name to us, long forgotten, long begotten! Abhayam Sarva bhoothebhyah! Don't fear, He armours us. Upward, onward, goodward, Godward--- guides us, guards us. When the path is tortuous, twisted, He pulls us through. Na Sukhaath--- labhyathe sukham---our Father speaks.
 Does Sai speak these words into mazy ears and crazy hearts! No!...It is our Master that speaks, advising, admonishing, h eating us crucibly, treating us crucially, leading to God within.
Eesaavaasyam idham sarvam! There's no two; He opens the lid of Divine Box, with treasure encased in koshas five, Sathyam, Inaanam, Anantham Brahma---the Master speaks.

Does Sai speak these words into searching ears and seeking hearts?
 No! It is God that speaks, stilling the mind of waywardness, Brahmavith Brahmaiva bhavathi!
 Become and be, He aWakens. "Dear wave! emerging; merge; dear ray! run back," He calls. Dear spark! re-enter fire; You are I, I am you. Soham loses as so and ham; Om alone is He and We,
Ekam-eva-asksharam Brahma---Isness---Om.
 This is how our Sai speaks,
N. Kasturi
 1. Nut and bolt TODAY is an auspicious day, for the New Year is welcomed with great expectations and the old year is given a grand farewell, on this holy day. Every year, man has been bidding farewell to the old year and giving welcome to the new year; this has been going on since the history of man began. But, what is the net result? Only despair and distress, anxiety and insane fear! This is an occasion to inquire and discover why it has been so.
 Everyone seeks and strives to be at peace with himself and with society (the community in which he has to live) and find his fulfilment. He has tried to get this peace, by accumulating wealth, which gives him power over others and the ability to command the conveniences and comforts which will confer peace. He has sought to hoist himself to positions of authority and influence so that he can shape events suited to his aims and fancies. But, he has realised that both these paths are beset with fear, and the peace that he secures thereby is liable to quick and sometimes violent extinction.
 How then can man achieve peace? Only through Love! Shaanthi (peace) is the fruit of the tree of life; without it, the tree is a barren stump. It has no value or validity.
 The fruit is encased in a bitter skin, you must have noticed, so that the sweet juice may be preserved and guarded against marauders; you have to remove the skin, before tasting the sweetness within, and strengthening yourself. The thick rind is symbolic of the six evil passions that encase the loving heart of man: lust, anger, greed, attachment, pride and hate. Those who can remove the rind and contact the sweetness within, through hard consistent discipline attain the peace we all desire; that peace is everlasting, unchanging, overwhelming.
 Reason for insecurity stalking the land Of what avail is a car, a bank deposit, a bungalow in a posh extension in this City? If you have all these but no love in your heart, the heart becomes a dark deserted temple, where the bats of lust and anger breed in everlasting night. Such hearts are foul, diseased with terror and error.

We have this vast gathering of the workers of the Kamaani Organisations, in the various fields of Kamaani enterprises. The Industrial, the Agricultural, the Mercantile, the Political and the Administrative---these are like the five vital airs that sustain activity in man. These five must not be at loggerheads; they must work in unison, prompted by love and mutual respect. Then only can the community have peace, security and happiness. If they do not understand each other and co-operate, or if any one of them strays away into a cross-road, disaster is inevitable.

This co-operation is unfortunately not visible at the present time. Factional interests, on the other hand, are predominant and the competitive struggle is on, in all fields---in labour, politics, administration, commerce and agriculture! That is the reason why anxiety and insecurity stalk the land, both in rural and urban areas, and people have to go about their business, with death or disaster threatening them round every corner! An ominous uncertainty shadows them, at every turn. And, human thought turns to violence and revolution, as the obvious cure.

Duty is God; Work is Worship

But, that can never cure; it can only worsen the illness. Excitement blinds the reasoning faculty.

Passion, violence, and cruelty create more problems, without solving any. These are now flooding the land as a deluge; persons who have no training and no sincere yearning to bear responsibility and discharge the obligations of office are raised to positions of authority. Ability as well as willingness to discharge duties and to bear burdens---these alone entitle men to hold authority over others. Duty is God; Work is Worship. The power that office confers has to be handled with that attitude of gratefulness and reverence.

If this is remembered and practised by every worker, however placed, wherever placed, work will give happiness, contentment and peace, both to the person concerned and to the society of which he is a limb. The Kamanis erect transmission towers all over the country. It is only when each nut and bolt is fixed fast and firm, faithfully, that the towers can stand up to the rigorous test of wind and weather, isn't it? Who can say, how can we judge, whose share in the erection is more important and whose is less? The work of each is essential and valuable, so far as his share of the responsibility extends. Having the skill and the willingness to carry out that share of the responsibility is his title to that position, in the common enterprise. You cannot declare one item of work as high and another item as low. That will only engender malice and hate. And it is not correct, either.

Each one must use his skill and intelligence

A man sees while going along a road, a ripe fruit, on a tree by the side. The mind craves for the fruit, but that by itself cannot fulfil that craving. The feet take him near the tree. But, that does not bring about the consummation. The trunk stoops, the hand picks up a stone, the shoulders throw the stone at the fruit, and the fruit falls on the ground. But that does not end the story. The fruit has to be picked up by the fingers, transferred into the mouth, the teeth have to bite into it, and masticate it well and the tongue has to take charge in order to make it reach the stomach. The eating part of the task is thus over.

But, that does not end the story of the craving for the fruit. Since so many instruments cooperated in the fulfilment, gratitude has to be rendered to each of them. So, the stomach sends strength and satisfaction to every limb that shared in the adventure of securing the fruit and eating it---the eye, the feet, the hands, the fingers, the shoulder, the tongue, the teeth, the gullet.

No one of them is neglected or discriminated against.

Each limb must act effectively at the exact juncture to meet the duty entrusted to it and accepted by it, so that the body may live in health and in tip-top efficiency, alert with all its skills and potentialities. This is true also of the enterprises which man undertakes with others of his kind.

Each one must resolve to use his skill and intelligence for the discharge of his obligations.

The more love is shared, the deeper it becomes

Man has not come into this world to strut about for a while on the stage, consuming food and gaily gallivanting. Man comes into the world so that he may bask in the Presence of God, through the exercise of love and the cultivation of love. The earth is a great enterprise, a busy factory, where the product is love. By means of Saadhana (spiritual practice), it is possible to produce love and export it to millions and millions of people, in need of it. The more it is shared the deeper it becomes, the sweeter its taste, and the vaster the joy. By means of love, one can approach God and stay in his presence, for God is love, and when one lives in love, he is living in Go. If you deny Go angrily, you are drying up the strings of love in your heart. If you declaim that God is nowhere, you are installing night in your heart and making it ready for dark schemes and misdeeds.

Once upon a time, a monk wearing the ochre robe chanced to enter a village full of atheists; he fell in with a gang of defiant youth who challenged him to show them that the God whom he was adoring actually existed. He said, he can; but before doing so, he asked for a cup of milk.

When the milk was placed before him, he did not drink it; but, sat, looking at it, long and silently, with increasing curiosity. The youth became impatient; their clamour became insistent.

The monk told them, "Wait a minute, I am told that there is butter in milk; but, I must say, this cup does not have it, for, I do not see any of it, however hard I look into it!" The fellows laughed at his innocence and said, "Silly man! Don't rush into such absurd conclusions.

Milk has butter in every drop; that is what makes it so nourishing. If you must see it as a separate concrete entity, you have to boil the milk, cool it, add sour curd, wait for some hours for it to curdle, then, churn it, and roll the butter that floats into a ball." "Ah," said the monk, "that makes my task of showing you God much easier! God is in every thing, being, atom of the Universe; it is because of this that they exist, and we can recognise them and enjoy them. To see Him as a concrete entity, you have to follow a prescribed procedure, earnestly, strictly and sincerely.

Then, at the end of it all, you can experience His Grace and His Glory." The Divine is everywhere, near and far

The nature we have around us and with us is the vesture of God. We have evidence of His Beauty, Goodness, Wisdom and Power, all around us, wherever we turn our eyes. But, the art of recognising Him is strange to us and so, we deny Him, and live on in darkness. We have all around us in the atmosphere the music emanating from all the broadcasting stations of the world, but they do not assail your ear at any time. You are not aware of any station. But, if you have a receiver, and if you tune it to the correct wave-length, you can hear the matter broadcast from any particular station; if you fail to tune it correctly, you will get, instead of news, only nuisance!

So too, the Divine is everywhere above, around, below, beside; near as well as far. For cognising it, you require not a yantra (machine) but a manthra (mystical formula, potent with psychological undertone). Dhyaana (meditation) is the fixing of the exact location of the station in the band; love is the correct tuning in; realising the reality and the bliss it confers is the happy clear listening!

Work in the spirit of love; it leads you on to Worship, that is to say, work without any regard to the proportion of benefit you derive from it; work, since it is your duty; work, since you love to work, work since that is the way you can offer God the gratitude for the skills God has endowed upon you. This kind of work leads to wisdom. Wisdom means the recognition of the immanence of the Divine in every being.

Habits of discipline alone can ensure happiness

The relationship between the worker and the employer should be that between the heart and the body. Both are bound intimately with each other; they depend on each other for their very existence. The employer must take upon himself the role of the father and the employees must accept the role of the children, attached by love and gratitude to the father. Love and affection have to govern the relations between the two, not hatred or envy. If the anger and irreverence of a few are allowed to blind the rest, all will suffer.

In the Community Hall inaugurated by Me just now, I want weekly or monthly bhajan (group singing of spirituals) sessions and sathsang (spiritually oriented) gatherings. Arrange some good Aadhyaathmic (spiritual) talk or discussions, on these occasions. I desire also that you should run a Baala Vihaar for your children, where they will learn stories from the scriptures, the epics and the lives of saints belonging to all religions. Children must also be taught habits of cleanliness and mutual help and co-operation. They can also be taught to sing bhajan songs and enact little plays on themes selected from classics. They will also learn habits of discipline, for, these alone can ensure happiness, individual and social.

Embodiments of the Divine Spirit! I am happy to meet all of you. May the New Year grant you mental peace and may your life's ideal of self-realisation be fulfilled. May all comforts and full contentment be added unto you. That is my blessing.

Kurla, Bombay, 1-1-1971

The place has a subtle and powerful influence on the man.

Maarkandeya held tight the Shiva-linga and so, Yama's noose bound both himself and Shiva; that was the reason the boy was saved.

The story teaches you to be ever in contact with God, for you do not know when the noose will be thrown.

Attach yourself to the Highest, call it by any name, conceive it in any form. But, remember, without Dharma you cannot attain it.

Sri Sathya Sai

2. Prahlada for the present age

IF I ask you, who you are, you may reply, "We are teachers," or some of you may even say, "We are students." But, both statements are not true! You are saadhakas (spiritual aspirants); that is the real fact. I am glad your saadhana is moving at a satisfactory pace. You have brought Me among you, as a result of your sincerity and enthusiasm. I am always specially interested in the service done to children and I must say, you have taught them good lessons, in a spirit of love.

Some of you, I find, are a bit over-enthusiastic! You have taught the children stories that are too long, and made them cram the whole stuff. Do not tax their memory overmuch. Short stories, 20 to 25 lines long will be the best. Don't make them learn by rote, for, what they learn under pressure, because I am coming and a programme of story telling has to be arranged, will soon be forgotten. It will not transform the mind by soaking into it. The incidents and the morals they illustrate have to be imprinted on the heart; They must learn not 'by heart,' but for and through the heart.

I find you are instructing them in bhajan, story telling and writing stories and essays. The stories they recite or write are culled from the epics and Upanishaths (scriptures of Supreme Reality).

Good. But, instruct them in meditation too, for a short while, each day. Let that habit be inculcated even at this age. Five minutes of prayers and another five minutes of dhyaan (meditation) will be a good exercise, whose taste itself will persuade the children to make it a habit. The tender mind has to be fed, with tenderness.

Story of Shabari's entry to the hermitage Shabari had a very tender compassionate heart. How she came to Sage Maathanga and stayed at his hermitage is a very interesting story. Her marriage was arranged by her parents, and as was the custom among the Aadhivaasis (tribal folk), a goat was to be offered to the tribal Goddess, on the night previous to the ceremony, in order to win the Grace for the couple. When Shabari came to know about this slaughter, she wept, and fell at the feet of her parents, praying them to save the goat. She asked, "How can our married life be happy, when the dying bleat of this goat is the prologue?" But, the father pushed her aside and proceeded with the cruel rite. That night, Shabari stole out of that den of torture, and hid herself in the depths of the jungle that was not far off.

When day dawned, her parents as well as the groom's party were plunged in grief and anxiety; they combed the area, even where she was lying low amidst the thick bushes, and they went back, saying among themselves, "She could not have gone to the hermitage, for no woman would be given asylum there." She heard these words and so, she concluded that the hermitage was the safest place for her. She felt that some monk will take pity on her, and not send her back.

Mathanga espied her and gave her permission to be in his habitation. He told her that God in the form of Sri Raama was coming to the hermitage some day, since he has been exiled into the forest for 14 years and He is eager to save the monks and seekers doing thapas (penance) in the forest from the ravages of the demonic enemies of peace! Raama, he said, was proceeding from one region to another, with His consort, Seetha and His brother, Lakshmana.

Shabari's heart became Raama's heart

From that day Shabari had no other thought than of Raama, no other desire than the desire to have the dharshan of Raama, the chance to touch His feet and the opportunity to speak with Him. Her heart was saturated with the Raamarasa (the sweet juice of the Raama principle). She had no other japam or dhyaana (repetition of God's name or meditation) or spiritual exercise.

She spent her time preparing for the visit of Raama to the hermitage; just as she cleaned the paths, she cleaned her heart, too. Pebbles and thorns disappeared from both, through her efforts.

She walked through the undergrowth and removed overhanging creepers and briars, for she imagined Raama would not have combed His hair and it might get caught. She broke the lumps of earth, for she feared the tender soles of Seetha will be hurt when she walks over them. She gathered fruits and tubers from the jungle trees and plants and kept them by every day, for no one knew when Raama will arrive! And, she took no risks. She tasted every fruit, whether it was bitter, sour or sweet, so that Raama could eat the best. She smoothed the surface of all stones that lay by the side of the tracks in the jungle for, she expected Raama, Lakshmana or Seetha to sit upon any one of them when they got tired of walking. She hoped that one of them would rest awhile on one of the rocks she had polished with great care. Thus her heart became Raama hrudhaya (Raama's heart)!

The children of the Sathya Sai Baala Vihaar must know the Sathya Sai that is residing in their hearts. Teachers also must take it as a puuja (ritual worship) of Sai Raama. How to reveal the Sai Raam residing in their hearts to the children?---that is the problem that must be directing your work. Sai Raam has to move about in the jungles of your heart; so, render the tracks wide, smooth, free from thorn and pebble.

Shabari's high level of saadhana

Shabari was so immersed in Raama that the ascetics lost all awareness of her sex; they allowed her to remain in the hermitage, after Mathanga related to them her high level of saadhana

(spiritual practice). Mathanga also left his body and gave up his hermitage to Shabari, saying, you alone deserve to be here when Raama arrives.

The saadhana that Shabari did to earn the bliss of serving Raama, you do, when you serve Sai

Raama in these children. By this service, you realise the Self.

People say that they are doing paropakara (good to others) and lokopakara (good to the world). Really speaking, this is an empty boast. Let us take it that you invite ten people for dinner; when the ten sit at table, you too sit as the eleventh, don't you? So, you too consume a share of the dinner. How then can you call it a dinner for others, an act of hospitality for others?

When you do good to the world, you share in that good, and so you cannot say that you are serving others. It is self first and help next. When you carry out the duty you have undertaken to do, God will shower Grace!

You are both-teachers and students, remember; for, you teach these children and you learn from Me. You must not have the consciousness that; they are children belonging to others. Treat them as your own.

Make children take up some positive task

When you relate stories to the children, select such stories as have some reference to the background of the children's home life. Tell them stories which will implant in the mind genuine disgust for evil sights, evil entertainments, evil deeds and evil habits.

Tell them how they must forget the wrong done to them by others and the good that they do to others. Make them take up some positive task and the negative attitudes will fall off. Good habits will drive out bad ones.

A wicked man once went to a Guru (preceptor) for initiation into spiritual life. The Guru asked him to give up at least one of his bad habits; he gave up uttering falsehood. That night, when he went to the Royal palace to commit theft, he found on the terrace another person, who said, he too was a thief. He too announced that he was a thief and both broke into the treasury and divided among themselves the diamonds found there. The other person was none other than the king; he pretended to be a thief and he knew where the keys of the treasury were! While the diamonds were shared, the honest thief felt pity for the King of the realm who was losing his entire stock; he asked his companion to leave one diamond behind, in the safe. And, it was done.

Next morning, when it was discovered that the treasury was looted, the Minister was sent by the King (who had acted as thief the previous night) to assess the loss. The Minister found the diamond, that had missed the eyes of the thieves. He quietly transferred it to his own pocket and reported at court that all the diamonds were gone!

One step in the right direction leads to another

The King had got from the honest thief his address, the previous night, while they parted company, with their separate bags. So he sent for him and when stood in court before the King, he confessed that all but one of the diamonds were stolen by him and his unknown associate. The diamond was discovered in the pocket of the Minister and the King dismissed him for the lie.

The honest thief was appointed Minister, instead, and he gave up his other evil habits too and pleased his Guru, by his fame as a virtuous administrator.

One evil habit, if acquired, will lead to a whole gang of them taking possession of the mind.

There is a story for this too. You can tell the children this. A King once announced that he will honour with a big girl; any Brahmana who will agree to do any one of three evil things: (1) He must aver that the Vedhas are false, or (2) He must drink liquor, or (3) He must elope with another's wife. For a long time, no one within the seven seas came forward to do any one of these atrocious things. At last a poor Brahmana on the verge of starvation came into court and offered to drink liquor, an evil which he considered the least reprehensible of the three. But, as soon as he got drunk, he began to swear and in the excitement of intoxication, he shouted in the streets that the Vedhas are a tissue of lies; he entered the house of his neighbour and assaulted the lady of the house, like the worst criminal of the land. One thing led to another, just as in the other story, one step in the right direction led to another. Make yourselves holy by consecrated service I know that you are telling the children fine moral stories that will impress on them, silently and spontaneously, the value of restraint and of love in dealing with nature and life. I know that your other responsibilities do not give you the chance to serve them as much as you desire. Train as many as you can, within the limits that now exist; the Samithi (Sai Organisation) cannot ask more from you. This is no imposition from above; it is an inspiration from within. You are engaged in so many activities that do not lead to any good; you have to move in groups that you may not like; these are inevitable under present conditions. So, make yourselves holy by this consecrated service. This will bring you the saving Grace. By shaping these children in Divine Form you are helping their parents too to set their minds right; you are brightening and cleansing the homes of the pupils. When that little boy recited the story of the Geetha, so feelingly, everyone was moved; when towards the end, he turned to Me and said, "Now, we have this Sai Krishna..." he was so overcome with Aanandha (bliss) that he sobbed and shed tears of joy. Perhaps he had a vision of Krishna! So intense was his faith and his sincerity. His heart was echoing every sentiment that his tongue was expressing. Children such as he are needed for our country at this juncture. You have read of Prahlaadha, Dhruva and other children filled with devotion to God; they lived in ages that have gone by. You have seen now that such children are here, in this age too; I am sure they will reform and transmute many Hiranyakashipus (unbelieving fathers) by their unflinching devotion and transparent dedication. Do what God likes, not what you like Arjuna announced at the commencement of the battle of Kurukshethra, 'I will not fight against these people.' Then, Krishna asked him, 'Won't you do what I like?' and he had to reply, 'Yes. Of course.' Then, the Lord told him, "Look here: I have come as man in order to reestablish Dharma (righteousness); yours is the Kshathriya Dharma; it casts on you the duty to fight against unrighteousness. You will be doing what I like if, according to the demands of Kshathriya Dharma, you fight, as first planned." Do what He likes, not what you like---that is the way to win the Grace of God. He likes you to revere all beings, not to injure or insult any being; he likes you when you do not bear in your heart the tiniest grudge against any being. The Baalavihaars run in schools, in the hours now given to them out of the school time table, are not as successful as those run by you in your home centres, I know; the School Vihaars try to make the children successfully ride two horses at the same time---the regular curriculum and the Sathya Sai Ideals. You are doing your best, I know, and that is enough. Develop cordiality among yourselves, exchange experiences and share your ideas for improvements. This is an excellent opportunity for you to feel the bonds of the Sai family, where each teacher is a sister of the other. Dharmakshethra, 3-1-1971 3. Link by link I AM glad that the Office-bearers of the various units of the Organisation in Bombay have gathered here and are asking Me to tell them some words about saadhana (spiritual discipline). A life of saadhana involves the dedication of all acts to God, the offering of whatever one does or thinks or speaks at the Feet of God. You can do this only when you are aware always of the Presence of God, in and around you. Your awareness must not deviate for a moment from God. The mind must revolve round one centre, God. Your concentration must be strong and steady. You are now able to attain concentration when you walk, talk, write or cycle along. But, you say you are helpless when it is a question of concentrating on God. Why have you to struggle to acquire it? The reason is: you have no yearning, no fond attachment, no Love towards God. But, carry on with the endeavour. By means of continuous culture, it is possible to acquire it. The Geetha says, Shreyohi inaanam abhyaasaath. Abhyaasa (practice) is the crux of the problem. Through that, victory can be won. Concentration can be mastered in dhyaana (meditation) and this will lead to disinterestedness in the results of one's actions, for the actions are not one's own, but God's. The results too are not one's; they are God's. When you become detached from the fruits of your actions, though intent on action (offering to the Lord your skill and energy), then, you attain peace of mind, Prashanthi. If, however, you cultivate attachment to things of the world, and houses, bank balance and insignia of power, then, dhyaana fails.

Follow the dictates of Divine Father in action Sincere effort and actual activity entitle you to the Grace of God.
When Jesus Christ entered the precincts of the Temple of Jerusalem, and found people sacrificing doves and other living beings to God, he released the birds and condemned the acts of blood. The priests and scholars resented his act and argued that the God in whom they had faith accepted the sacrifice and was propitiated thereby. They asked him for evidence of authority to interfere with the dictates of religion. Christ went on to tell them a parable. Once there was a farmer who had two sons. He asked his first son to go out to the field so that he may watch the crops ready for harvest. The son refused to obey him. Thereupon he asked the second son, and he readily agreed. But, what really happened was, the second son later calculated the bother and the sleeplessness which the watching will bring to him; he did not go. The first son later repented for this refusal to do as bidden; he went and watched the crop.
Now, Christ asked, who among these two pleases the father more--- the son who declared his assent by word of mouth and disobeyed in action or he who disobeyed by word of mouth but obeyed in action? You obey in words but disobey in action. My action reveals that I do acts which God has commanded. You are your own witness, whether you follow the dictates of the Divine Father. I have greater authority than you, for your action shows that you disobey whereas my action proves that I follow His commands.
Saadhana is a uniquely precious activity You are Office-bearers and so, you have the responsibility to carry out in 'actual practice, in your own lives, the rules and restrictions and recommendations laid down by Me. I warn you against falling prey to exhibitionism and display; there are many who desire that' others must admire and applaud, and so, they do janam or sit in dhyaana, where many will be-seeing them. Theirs is not the attitude of indifference, which says, "I don't care what they say, or who sees me or who does not." Their innermost craving is for people to notice them and publicise their spiritual attainments. They are eager for audiences and spectators! But, saadhana is a uniquely precious activity, which will be vulgarised by public gaze. Fish is sold in open shops, or in open daylight, by the side of public, thoroughfares. Diamonds are however sold in shops that admit only genuine purchasers and they are kept in strong underground vaults. Saadhana is moro valuable than diamonds. It will wither in the open.

This is the reason for saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) retiring into lonely mountain caves, or into solitary temples in inaccessible regions of the Himalayas, or in the depths of jungles. But, you need not imitate them; you can create enough privacy in your own home, screening off a portion of some room. There you can sink into yourself and discover the Inner Reality as the Reality of the Universe Itself?. You need not be told that perfect amity between husband and wife is essential for domestic peace. When they are at loggerheads, it is not a home, but hell.
In the body of man, the Aathma (inner real Self) is the husband and the inclinations are the wives. Every act and word and thought must subserve the needs of the emancipation of the individual, by the recognition of the sovereignty of Aathma. The Primal, Formless, Absolute wedded Desire and Mind was born. The mind wedded two wives, inner contemplation and outer activity. The first gave birth to five sons, sathya, dharma, shaanthi, prema and ahimsa (truth, virtue, peace, love and non-violence), the five Paandava brothers. Mind was infatuated more with the second wife, and so, she gave birth to a 100, each one with a name indicative of badness and wickedness, the Kauravas. God was on the side of the Paandavs, and they won.
Cleanse your heart of the canker of ego In the Geetha, you don't find the slightest fear in the make-up of the character of Arjuna, Krishna appreciated him and served him as the charioteer, because he was so solicitous of Dharma.
Arjuna's most serious argument against the battle of Kurukshethra was that the slaughter of millions of warriors will lead to the widowing of women and depreciation of public morals as a result of their enforced celibacy. God has established, as the Vedhas say, Brahmanas (representing the Divine face) to learn and teach the path to emancipation.

Kshathriyas (warriors) are

His shoulders for they establish and maintain peace so necessary for the good life. The Vaishyas (traders) are, it is said, the stomach of God; for, they provide the sustenance and the strength.

The Suudhras (service people) are the feet, for they move about and carry the Divine Message from door to door, through precept and example. All the four castes are dedicated for the upkeep of Dharma. So, when Arjuna pleaded the cause of Dharma, the Lord was pleased, and He decided to remove the delusion of the dispirited hero.

Share wholeheartedly in all festivals

By dhyaana you develop inaana (spiritual wisdom) and by japam (recitation of God's Name) you develop bhakthi (devotion) and by both, you cleanse your heart of the canker of ego. You can link yourselves with God, by a chain of love, through the recitation of the name, in silence and with full awareness of the meaning and its nuances. Each Sai Raam, Hare Krishna, Hare Raam, or Vitthal is a link; the more the links the longer the chain, the firmer the bond. But, each link has to be well forged out of well tempered steel. One false link, that is to say, the Name once uttered in sloth or slight, indifference or anger, resentment or rancour, will constitute a weak link and the bond will not bind!

Be careful that you do not cavil at another's faith. There is a road from each heart to the Source of all joy, namely, God. Each one will come in his own good time, at his own pace, through his own inner urge, along the path God will reveal to him as his own. You can have in your home, a shrine, where you can worship the Name and Form you desire to invest yourselves in! But, so far as your activities as a member of this Organisation are concerned, you must wholeheartedly share in all-festivals and functions that promote faith, devotion and dedication.

Have love towards all Do not allow the weeds of pride and envy to hamper the harvest of peace.

Do not monopolise the time in bhajan, by singing one song for six or ten minutes, repeating the same line often. Repeat each line twice and no more. Have only two speeds: one slow and the other fast. In this way, you can have in the hour of bhajan, more songs on more Forms, more tunes and more variety, giving more people the chance. Let Me tell you that, even if Naaradha or Thumburu, the Divine Musical pair, sing if they croon the same monotonous tune, listeners will have to take refuge in Saridon tablets! Or, it may be Subbulakshmi or any other artist of this region, but headache is bound to result.

When a naamaavali extols Shiva, the next one will have to be on Krishna, the next on Raama and so on. A person whose favourite form is Raama or Shiva will feel neglected if out of inadvertance, you stick to only one form. Let the atmosphere of bhajan be free from competitive conceit and fanaticism, That is My advice.

Dharmakshethra, 5-1-1971

The spirit of sacrifice is the basic equipment of the sevak. Without the inspiration of the sense of sacrifice, your seva will be hypocrisy, a hollow ritual. Inscribe it deep and clear on your heart.

Sri Sathya Sai

4. Saline turned sweet

WHAT a tragedy! Truth is treated as a foe; falsehood is the friend of man. Liquor is sold in a tavern, to which people trek miles; but milk is taken to their doorsteps, by vendors who cry hoarse, to draw the attention of the residents, but yet, they turn away with their ware unsold.

What a reversal of values has man accomplished!

On this sacred day called Vaikuntha Ekaadhashi, one is reminded of this, because, festivals like this have been ordained in order to take stock of one's spiritual progress and to make man resolve to march forward, until the goal is reached.

This is a thrice-blessed day, as the Thriveni is the confluence of three holy streams: Thursday, which is especially significant for Sai devotees, being Guru Vaar (the day of the Guru); the Akhanda bhajan (non-stop singing).which you concluded after twelve hours a few minutes ago; and the festival of Vaikuntha, for which you have gathered here.

Vaikuntha means, without any trace of grief or pain; the place where perfect peace reigns, and there is no flutter of fear. Ekaadhashi means the eleventh day of the lunar fortnight. The phases of the moon are numbered, and the day after the tenth, Dhashami, is referred to as the Ekaadhashi!

But the real meaning of Ekaadhashi, the eleventh, is this. When the ten senses---the five senses of action and the five through which knowledge of the objective world is gained---are all coordinated and turned in the direction of God, the eleventh, then it becomes genuine Ekaadhashi!

Man has to pay attention to 26 categories

This is also the meaning of the Namaskaar, where you fold both palms together and hold them on your chest, near the heart region. The ten senses surrender to the person adored, with real sincerity in the heart! The caricatures of this reverential rites are today current in almost all circles. People are reluctant to follow tradition and so, they hold the palms as if they are trying to shield the rays of the Sun from their eyes (!) or vigorously shaking them defiantly at the face of the person who is sought to be honoured(!).

This is a day on which one has to transcend the lower impulses originating from the thaamasik (inertia) and the raajasik (passionate activity) natures and, help the upsurge of Saathwik (pure) tendencies. Men engage in good Works, good thoughts, good speech--but, they do not pause to inquire the purpose, the goal. Man has to pay attention to 26 categories. The 5 senses of action (Karma-indhriyas); the 5 senses of knowledge (Inaana-indhriyas); the 5 vital airs (Praana); the 5 attributes of the elemental principle, smell (of prithvi or earth); taste (of water); light (of fire); touch (of air); sound (of sky); and the remaining four manas (mind), buddhi (intellect), chittha (differentiating memories) and ahamkaara (the selfish ego). The jeevi (individual soul) the wave is the 25th; it has the 26th, the Param-aathma (the Supreme Self or Reality) on one side and the 24 principles on the other. It has to illumine all the 24, and draw them all to the Reality, namely, the 26th category, the Paramaathma. When they are illumined, they disappear, for they cannot survive light; they are but creatures that are the progeny of maaya (delusion and illusion).

Know thyself, you know the world
When the 24 categories are analysed and known, nothing is gained.
For, they belong to the realm of the relatively real, not the absolutely real. They are jagath (world), the moving, changing, the transitory, the untrue! The Vedhas, Shaasthras and Puraanas have not mentioned anything about the origins and dissolutions of these, with any degree of certainty, because they are concerned more with the rescue operations of the I that is entangled in them and with validation that they are of no importance. Know thyself; you know the world, which is but a projection of thy mind; that is the lesson conveyed.

Measure the microcosm, you have measured the macrocosm. Know all about clay; you have known all about pots, pans, plates and cups. Know about the base, you have known about the superstructure. Know about water, you know about rain, cloud, steam, stream, river---all its modifications and manifestations. The same quantity of silver might be shaped into a plate today, a set of spoons tomorrow, a number of cups the day after. The forms get new names; the uses of each are different. When put to use or when silver remains as a silver 'lump' only, in the hands of every one that holds, it or handles it, in the beginning or in the end, it and they are always silver.

The core, the truth is ever One. In the murky, dusk of ignorance, it appears diverse, that is all for, then, you are led to distinguish and differentiate on the bases of name and form.

There are two sets of rules which regulate human conduct: the one a-moral and the other moral.

The a-moral is illustrated by the rule that you have to be at the airport at a particular hour, in order to board a plane. The moral rule is illustrated when the father's property is divided between the sons,, half for one and half for the other, equal share for both.

From the point of view of dharma (righteousness), equality is seen as the basic principle. From the Aathmic standpoint, all beings are equal.

The primary seed of knowledge
When one proceeds to attain the Aathmic vision, one has to negate everything as Not this, until at the end of the journey, the Aathma alone is cognised. It admits of no definition, no description, no designation, It is the end of enquiry, the summum bonum of all endeavour, the silence that swallows all speech. The primary seed of knowledge is "I am not the body." It contains three entities: I Body and Not. I is the aathma, the Only truth. The idea I applies only to the eternal I, over which, the transient Is are superimposed by ignorance, born out of false identification.

Then, we have the entity called, dheha (body). Dheha means that which will undergo destruction (dah: to burn). It means the five feet bundle of bone and muscle, nerve and brain, the senses, the vital airs, the mind that imagines (constructs images), the intellect that argues pros and cons, the chittha that revolves around the past impressions and choices and the ahamkaara (ego) that urges outwards, the internal and external equipments of man, Dheha means not only these, It is composed of the five we elemental categories also: earth, water, fire, air and sky. It disintegrates finally into these five for, it is built up of those five. It is kith and kin, with these five; so, by dheha is meant all the regions of the five elements, desha (country), in fact!

 Realisation cannot be won by book knowledge The multifarious efflorescence of maayaa, the primal desire which proliferated into the Universe-- all that is the permutation and combination of the five elements, to cognise which man has equipped himself with the nose (smell, earth attribute), tongue (taste, water attribute), eye (perceptible form, attribute of fire), skin (touch, attribute of air) and ear (sound, attribute of sky).
 So, the statement says, I am not the body, that is, it declares that Nature, the Universe, all created thin and beings, are not I, or Aathma (the true Self), but, only appearances of I.
 Man can realise the goal either by picturing something that is different and distant, and praying to it, adoring it, worshipping it---such ways are useful only up to a limit, to purge the mind of low desires, sensual urges etc.,---or by delving into oneself, to reach the truth.
 The realisation of the one cannot be won by means of advice, listening to talks and discourses, study of books or austerities. It worried even Naaradha, who approached the sage, Sanathkumaara, for the vision of the Infinite. With this decomposing body and the deteriorating intellect, man cannot experience and contain the boundless surge of bliss that accompanies the realisation that he is the absolute. The wisdom that comes of actual experience is as the rain drop., when compared with sea water which is saline and undrinkable book-knowledge or derived knowledge. Through the inter-action of the rays of the Sun, the salinity was removed and the water that floated into the sky became sweet and sustaining.
Saadhana that turns the physical into the meta-physical is the solar action that confers potability.
Samaadhi is a much misunderstood word Deep sleep is often compared to samaadhi, for, the senses, the mind, the reason, are all absent therein; only the ego is immersed in itself. It is in bliss, but, it is not aware of that bliss, for, waking alone gives that knowledge. So, what can grant Realisation is the awareness of the waking stage and the bliss of the sleeping stage. Concentrate on the point, where one is having these two: that is the moment of victory.
Samaadhi is a much misunderstood word. It is freely misapplied. All kinds of emotional upsurges, attacks of hysteria, nervous breakdowns, neurotic fits are now extolled and exalted as "Samaadhi"! Mark the word! It says sama dhee, that is to say, balanced, unruffled intellect; that is, a discriminating reaction of equanimity, in the face of heat and cold, grief and joy, pain and pleasure, rejection or rejoicing. One who has attained that stage, or realised that he is the One without a second, will be indifferent to fear or favour, to hate or love, to exalt or execrate. Where there is One, how can even thought arise. That is the Samaa-dhee---the being, the awareness and the bliss.

Dharmakshethra, 7-1-19 71
 5. Thirst and quest NA shreyo niyamam vinaa---"No progress without constraint!" Control heightens power; regulation puts it into the best use. As volunteers trained and eager to serve, where the chance opens up, you are like the young men who were growing up in the Rishikuls (hermitages of old), under the loving care of sages. (Now, these Rishikuls have lost the 'r' and are merely shikuls (transformed phonetically, into schools). Discipline comes to the rescue, during crisis, when the world flows towards you, as a dark flood of hate or derision, or when those in whom you put your trust shun contact and shy away. Without discipline, the mind of man is turned into a wild elephant in rut. You have to catch it young and train it so that its strength and skill can be useful to man and harmless to life around.
 At this period of life, when you are in the flush of youth with your physical, intellectual and mental equipment in perfect trim, you must resolve to keep it running on right; lines, and not injuring itself, or the operators. Discipline must be welcomed; it should not be enforced by an outside agency, like the samithi (organisation) or your parents or friends. It must be spontaneously sought after, and sincerely practised.
 Prepare yourselves for serving others This birth has been undertaken by you, for this very mission: the mission of crucifying the ego on the cross of compassion. An opportunity to be of some service to fellowmen comes to you as a gift from God. Serve with that sense of gratitude, for it is God who accepts it from you. Prepare yourselves for serving others, not only by learning the skills of first aid, the rules of the road, the technique of blood donation, the art of handling mikes and loudspeakers, wiring and fitting electric lines, etc., but, at the time when you are not actively engaged in some such activity, be busy with japam, dhyaanam or naama smaranam, fill yourselves with God, lest you go dry and cruel.

Keep the mind busy with these, for once it strays into the by Lanes of the world, it will get infected with evil. Guard the tiny flame of sympathy with suffering, from the gusts of cynicism and miserly greed. Service to others is the duty you owe to society, which has given you the culture you fed on the breath you live on the warmth you crave for, and the security you seek.

Man is born helpless, and is laid on the lap of society. Society gives him a name and a form, a personality, an individuality, an armour of beliefs, a playground of doubts and diversions. Man is the only animal that knows it has to die, and that yearns to survive death or by pass the fangs of death.. Man alone has the strange thirst after the nectar, that confers immortality. That is his special task, his special quest, the quest for the Truth that emancipates.

Understand the deep significance of service; it will lead to your becoming ideal leaders, who are in great need today, all over the world. You fulfil yourselves, by sharing; you empty yourselves by grabbing. Do not behave in such a way that people are wary of you be open, without harmful eyes, lascivious ears, false tongue, foul minds and pernicious hands.

Your eyes give you away easily; look upon all without the guilt of lust or scandal; speak to all, of all with love blooming out of adoration; let your hands give never take what is not yours.

Treat the distressed, the diseased, the old, the helpless, the child with great respect, and intelligent consideration.

"Do what will win the approval of Baba"

Lead simple lives; do not develop an attraction for high life, gaudy outlandish dress and manners; invite the reverential attention of those who need service.

They will be kept away if you walk about swell, talk raucously, and begin pushing people around, with swagger and swearing. Test every gesture, every mannerism, every whim of yours, on this touchstone Will this win the approval of Baba?

Here is a young man, whom I will call a good boy! Do you know why?
Yesterday, when I moved among the thousands gathered in the pandhal, he was standing---a volunteer---on the outer fringe. I shook my little finger at him. This morning, when I went round the same place, he was at the same post of duty but, with his side burns removed! He knew what Baba disapproved, and he corrected himself immediately. I appreciate that. Side burns is a side issue; there are more serious misdemeanours, which you know I do not encourage. Be free from every one of them.

When you recognise Me as the dweller in your heart, these will fall off, and you will walk on the path of self-knowledge, self-confidence, self-satisfaction and selfrealisation.

Dharmakshethra, 7-1-1971

The Truth that is in all beings is also in you. Search for that;
discover that unity; that source of courage, of love, of wisdom.

You do not realise that it is He who digests the food that you consume, for, as He says, in the Geetha, I am the Vaishwaanara--- fire that is in the bodies of all beings and digests the four types of food they eat." That fire digests food, but, it is careful not to destroy the stomach itself!

He is the basis of all activity, though Himself unconcerned.

Sri Sathya Sai

6. Green across the door SAGES who have designed the Hindhu Calendar have arranged the holy festivals for fostering mental stamina and emotional purity. The Makara Sankraanthi (the Summer Equinox), when the Sun enters Capricorn, is laid down as the day when man dedicates his activities for the higher purpose of attaining Divinity, by following the Uttharaayana (the Northward Path), the Nobler

Path which the Sun Himself is seen to take from this day. The month of Dhanus is over, and that of Makara begins today. Dhanus means not only the bow but also the sugar cane, which is the bow of the God of love.

The harvest has come in now and every family has cooked this day the gift of God that has been stored in the granary. The children have chewed the sweet cane and are running about in glee.

The cattle which toiled in the fields as companion, helpmate and slave of man are ruminating in the shade, enjoying their holiday from the yoke. The earth too is wearing a sari of yellow flowers, bedecked with spots of red, wherever ripe chilies cluster under green leaves. Nature is happy that man and all living beings can now turn Godward in thankfulness, and intensive contemplation of His handiwork. For six months now, it is dheva-yaana--the season of pilgrimage. It is Utthama-yaana (the superior path).

The message of the holy day of Sankraanthi

The Geetha proclaims that he who dies in this half of the year dies in peace and plenty and so, rises to purer levels of spiritual attainments. Bheeshma, who was stricken by mortal arrows on the field of Kurukshethra, waited for this day which ushers in the holier half of the year, so that he may give his breath up, and merge in the Supersoul!

This is a day of dedication! Not a day of diversion and dissipation. It is wrong to waste it in gambling, and feasting and catering to the lower instincts, it is not a holiday; it is in the strictest sense of the word, a holy day! Become whole, by wholesome deeds and thoughts; that is the message of the holy day. Mere spinning like a top, until you can spin no longer, and then falling helpless and inert, is dreary devastating existence. The top has no faith in itself; it has to be handled and twirled by another. Be self-confident, that is to say, have confidence in your self; for, that self is Divine; it has in it all the strength, all the sweetness of the Aathman (True Self), which is but a wave of the ocean of Param-aathman (Supreme Reality).

In order to ensure happiness and peace, administrators contrive five-year plans, and build bridges, dams, factories and schools. But, without the cleansing of the spirit, the strengthening of detachment, the promotion of compassion and kinship, economic progress promotes only hatred, faction and envy. Self-confidence, self-control and self-knowledge---these alone can lead man to peace and joy. Na shreyo niyamam vinaa---"No prosperity without control!" No progress without discipline, that is what the sages teach. On these holy days, he has to look back and forward, and orientate his route along the correct markings. Mind is a bundle of desires and doubts Belief in the Creator, the Designer, the Supporter and the Disintegrator is a necessary equipment for the pilgrim on earth. Fear of sin, love of God---these two endow man with peace and joy, save him from sorrow and grant him aanandha (bliss). During deep sleep, one is not aware of time, space or causation. Only the I persists; the I that is sath-chith-aanandha. But, during deep sleep the I is not aware of its aanandha, not aware of itself. It is only after one awakens that one declares, I had a very pleasant sleep! During the dream stage, the mind is active, though the intelligence, the senses, are all dormant. The dream builds a bungalow in a few seconds, and you occupy it and live happily in it, until, in the dream, an earthquake brings it down on your heads, and you flee for sheer life! The entire story of construction, occupation and destruction was the reflection of mental aberration, its sankalpa (resolve). It is the seat of the ego and the ego plays all sorts of pranks with the mental stuff, during sleep, when the senses and reason are temporarily out of action. The mind is a bundle of resolutions and hesitations, of desires and doubts.

When the basis of the ego is removed by spiritual effort heroically, directed towards this end, then all the drama of name and form drifts away into nothingness. The Sun draws the water up as steam, and endows it with the name and form of 'cloud,' 'rain' and then as 'stream,' 'river,' 'flood' until it merges in the sea back again, losing all the manifoldness of name form caused by time, space and causation. Each one of you is the basis of truth, which a cloud of unreality fogs. This is to be discovered, each for himself, by himself.

Maaya is like your shadow in the well

The seed struck in the soil sprouts and grows. It puts forth branches and leaves, and adorns itself with blossoms which attract bees; it develops fruits which are really offerings of sweetness and strength, to those who serve the tree, carrying the seeds ensconced within them, to far distances and scatter them again on the soil, so that they may get stuck and sprout, in another cycle of life and death! The seed is not inert; it is conscious, alive, active. The whole Universe is suffused with Divinity, Divinity that is Existence-Consciousness-Bliss (sath-chith-aanandha)! Existence as "seed-plant-tree," Consciousness which strives for expression and manifestation and unfoldment; and, Bliss, in that fulfilment. You are also sath-chith-aanandha. Do not condemn your majesty bewailing, "I am unfortunate, I am despicable, I am downhearted." No. You are elated, you are enthroned, you are exalted. You are all this; but you are not aware of this, on account of maayaa (illusion). Maayaa is like your shadow in the well; if you do not peep into the well, it is not there! It is there, only whenever you peep into it!

The primal ignorance and the primal wisdom, are inherent, one in the other; the light of day darkens the stars, so that we cannot see them, though they are up above our heads! The darkness of night reveals the specks of light, which are the stars! Vibration, motion, light, darkness---all are inferring.

God knows what is good for individual souls

To adore Name and Form is against the basic teaching of Vedhaantha; for, one has to educate oneself into ignoring the evanescent, the temporary, the superficial. Unless one has discovered his identity with all, the identity of all with him, one cannot have the waveless calm, the steady flame. Thyaagainaike amrithathwam aanashuh; give up, give up the fancy for the fantastic objective world, give up, until you reach the stage, when there is no "giver-gift-giving," when there is no "beginning-continuing-ending." Naaradha learnt from the sage Sanathkumaara that he can acquire Shaanthi only when he knows that he is Shaanthi and nothing else! A-shaanathi (restlessness) is something that has possessed him, like a phobia which has no footing. Shake it off; exorcise it. He is free. It is the role that is tragic; not the actor. He has only to remind himself that it is a play and that he is playing the role of a tragic hero! This Naaradha learnt and his equanimity was never again disturbed.

This day, every home is swept clean, the floors are polished, the walls whitewashed and painted, and before every house, women draw auspicious designs in flour. They place in the middle of that design a lump of cow dung, and stick on that lump a big yellow flower of golden hue, of the sweet cucumber. Why the cow dung lump? It symbolises the cow, the Go which Gopaala feeds and fends. Go (cow) also means, beings, souls, individuals. So that, Gopaala is He who tends the souls, keeps them away from harm, encourages them to graze in peace, and drives them back into the sheds when evening falls on earth. Individual beings too are under the loving care of God, who knows what is good for them and saves from ruin. Thus, each trivial detail of the festival rites has a meaning, which can vibrate the participant, in its proper time.

Sathsang will keep you young and fresh, full and free. Again, this day, you are requested to eat sweet rice cooked in milk. That is the food called Saathwik (pure), which promotes elevated thoughts, mildness and humility. But, food does not end with what you take in through the mouth. What you take in through the eye, the ear, the nose, the skin, through your greed your hunger for excitement, your thirst for variegated experience of the objective world---all is food. And, every particle of it has to be Saathwik, so that your progress towards self-realisation may be quick and fruitful. You are really fortunate that you are able to drink through the ear the discourses on the glory of the Divine; Vedhaantha is the best and highest food which man can consume; it keeps your propensities pure, your body in perfect trim, your passions well controlled, your emotions clear and lucid, your thoughts simple and sincere. Sathsang (noble company), is more nutritious than fruits and nuts, milk or honey. It will keep you young and fresh, full and free, beyond the disintegrating influence of time and space.

These holy days are reminders of the discipline, which you have strayed away from. It is a grim world, from out of which you have to squeeze yourself out, into freedom and fulfilment. A train whistling past in full speed over the rails drawn by a giant locomotive cannot be stopped by a million hands; but by merely pressing a button, the driver can bring it to a halt! Installing that button, that mechanism in your mind that rolls along behind the senses is the purpose of saadhana; installing and operating it.

The knowledge that you are the architect of your fortune and that you can, by steady effort, rebuild it or foster it, that you are ever laying on or pulling down the structure of your career, will be a great inspiration, provided you welcome it. Nothing ever happens without proper reason. It was the first night of Raama, Lakshmana and Seetha in the thick jungle into which they were exiled. Guha (the chieftain of the fisherman), who had rowed them across the Ganges was engaged in subdued conversation with Lakshmana, while Raama and Seetha were sleeping, on the river bed! Guha, was sunk in sorrow, that the inheritor of the empire should be cast on the sands under the sky; he cursed the Queen Kaikeyi (step mother of Raama) and her wicked accomplices for contriving this heart breaking tragedy. But Lakshmana prayed that he halt his tirade. I too emitted fiery fury at the perpetrators of this tragedy. For, I did not then know the inner purpose of this chapter of Raama's history. He has come in this human form to destroy the evil brood of demons, and so, He has himself contrived this exile, to be free from imperial responsibilities until that aim is accomplished. What do we know, dear Guha, of the mysteries of God or even of man, who is but God in human attire? Or of any living being or non-living matter, for they are all the inscrutable Divine, appearing to our limited senses in the way they do, What their real nature is, how can we ever know, with these inefficient instruments of knowledge?

Nothing ever happens without proper reason, however accidental or mysterious, it might appear.

The roots go deep and are out of sight. I was telling Hislop, in Bombay at Dharmakshethra, the same thing. The bridge towards Lanka was being built over the straits, so that Raama and His army could, march across to the realm of the demon King Raavana, where. Seetha was interned.

The valiant monkeys were plucking mountains and leaping vast distances in space with those peaks hoisted on their shoulders, so that they could be thrown into the sea to create a passage for Raama! The monkeys had formed a queue all the way from the Himaalayas down to the southernmost point, where the bridge was fast coming up. When the causeway was completed, word went fast along the queue that no more hills are needed and each monkey placed on the ground, wherever it stood, the hill it had on its shoulder at the time. Inanimate things too have emotions. One hill, however, did not sit quietly. It started bewailing its fate! "Why was I removed from where I was and why am I now refused? Alas! I was elated that I was destined to serve a Divine purpose; I was overjoyed that the armies of Raama and Raama Himself will walk over me. Now, I am neither there, nor where I was!" It shed profuse tears. News reached Raama, and His compassion was great. He sent word that in His next; Avathaar, when He will come again upon His mission in human form, He will certainly bless the sorrowing hill. This was the Govardhana Peak which Raama (as the boy Krishna) lifted on His finger and held aloft for full seven days, in order to save the cowherds of Gokul from the deluge of rain that Indhra dared inflict on them!

I related this story to Hislop, when he asked Me whether inanimate things too had emotions and feelings of disappointment and despair. The occasion at Dharmakshethra was : I asked that about a hunted saris be brought, so that I could select some, for distribution to the women workers at Ananthapur who are helping build the Sathya Sai College there! I selected 96 and asked them to return 4 to the shop. I kept the 4 aside and the 96 were placed in my room. Later, when I passed the table on which the four discarded saris were kept (Hislop was standing by the side of that table), it was noticed that the card board box which contained the four was dripping tears! The saris were weeping (!) that they could not get appreciation from Me and were declared unfit.

Yes! They had shed tears. You may ask whether this is ever possible. I answer, there is nothing in this world which has no heart, which is incapable of feeling joy or grief! Only, you must have the eye to see, the ear to listen, the heart to respond! Accept bravely whatever happens, fame or shame. This morning, when the Sun rose in the East, the Moon was just setting in the West, so that both the orbs could be seen at the time. The moon represents the mind and the sun, the intellect. Both must be balanced in a disciplined way; it should not be one or the other, emotion or intelligence, but, emotion held back by intelligence. Then, you will not be carried off your feet by gusts of fear or fury, fancy or frivolity. You will accept bravely whatever happens---fame or shame!

Welcome every happening with a Yes. I always say Yes, Yes, Yes (S S S), whether it is praise or blame, ill or well.

You are in the see-saw, in two moods, anger, exultation, pride, self-condemnation, alternating joy and grief. Bheeshma, whom one should remember on this Uttharaayana day, felt the bed of arrows on which he lay to be as cosy as a bed of roses! He had accepted it of his own choice and so, he felt no pain. I accepted the inflamed appendix of a devotee, as a consequence of the Love I bore him; and, so, though every one, including the doctors said, I must have excruciating pain, I did 'not feel it! Bheeshma said, Yes, to all that happened. It was the Will of the Go within, the God without, the God without whom nothing can ever happen. Adore God offering Him your deeds, words, thoughts. The Sun takes the Northern Path from today; the higher path. So, the children too have to follow the footsteps of the Parent. In the North, the Himaalayas welcome you into 'Un-affectedness' (achala), Purity (Hima, Snow) and Immaculate-ness (pure white, untarnished clarity), and coolness (perfect joy). Whenever the mind yearns for and pursues these four gains, it is on the Northern path leading to the Himaalayas, the Abode of the Gods; it is following the Sun, the Splendour of the intelligence.

Resolve to take the first step towards the Indwelling Cod, now, this day. That is the reason why people have hung mango leaves across their doors today, to welcome Cod into the home! But, your home is your heart, not the brick and mortar pile, where your body dwells. Hang the streamer of green across the door-sill of your heart. Enthroned the Divine there, and adore Him with all sincerity, offering Him your deeds, your words, your thoughts.

You celebrate the Sankraanthi with a feast, where you prepare a dish, out of green gram, rice and jaggery. The gram-is Lord Vishnu, the rice is His consort (Sri or plenty and prosperity), and, the jaggery is the principle of Divine love. So, it is not that dish that marks the festival, it is the contemplation of the Divine that has to be established in the wayward mind.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 14-1-1971

Be like the lotus, unattached to the slush where it is born and the water in which it is bred; the merits and demerits earned in past births is the slush, where the jeevi (individual soul) is born.

Maaya or the enticing illusion called world is the water which sustains; but do not allow that enticement to affect you. Be above and beyond the earthly attachments like the lotus.

Know that though you may be in it, you should not allow the world to get into you and affect your sense of values.

Sri Sathya Sai

7. Love and serve

THERE are many organisations in this country, established with the express purpose of promoting the welfare of the country, in the political, economic, educational, moral, and material fields. Many have social and religious affiliations, but, unless there is a spring of spiritual enthusiasm beneath the activity, a fervour fed by faith in God, they will be groping in the dark, holding in their hands lamps without flame. Light and Love, so essential for being really helpful to man, have to come from the recognition of spiritual kinship.

I find that the Rotary Club has as its aim the service of others, mainly, the amelioration of poverty, the alleviation of disease and the promotion of education. I have visited a large number of Rotary Clubs and Lions Clubs in India and across the sea, in East Africa. I have noted that they have as members, enterprising individuals, experts, rich men, highly educated persons of various professions, like law, medicine, engineering, architecture, trade, etc.

I find that you pay great attention to the cementing of friendship among yourselves, rather than expanding love outwards, to those who are hungry for it. You arrange dinner parties and picnics, where members are treated to costly feasts, more as a part of social convention, than to appease hunger. This is sheer exhibitionism and display. Instead, I would ask you to feed some hungry people, with the delicious dishes, people who have never had in their lives the joy of having eaten a full meal, not to speak of a rich meal.

Love grows with every gift of Love

The point of view is most often warped; the direction in which thought flows is, how much can I get out; of all this, what benefit can I derive from membership, how beneficial it will be for my status, profession, contacts. This has to be changed full circle. The problem should be framed as:

"How much can I give my fellowmen through this membership? What can I contribute to the fulfilment of its ideals?"

All are eager to take, none is earnest about giving. The reason is absence of Love, love that transcends caste, creed, colour, and the fences erected: by man between man. Fill the heart with Love, and distribute that Love to all. Love grows with every gilt; of Love; the heart that pours out love is ever full. God is there as Love and you are only drawing on Him, when you are sharing love with others.

Expansion is love, is life. Contraction is death, is hate. Pray for the good of all, crave for the prosperity of all, not of one person or party, or nation. The craving for power if it afflicts any one person degenerates into a mania, and it brings in its wake, great confusion and calamity. Be servants, not masters. How can one be happy, putting another into the humiliation of attending to one's personal comforts--this is what I cannot understand. Try as much as possible to avoid this painful contingency.

How long can a nation subsist on alms?

The people of this country are suffering from poverty, disease, and want of proper education.

Clubs such as this can render intelligent help, supplying food and medicine. I find that you are also providing wells in villages where there is at present no adequate supply of drinking water.

Instead of duplicating services already being carried on by Governmental agencies, I shall be happy if you select areas where such agencies do not operate; as also, select activities that are specially yours, where your contribution will be thankfully appreciated.

Bhaarith is now standing before the doorsteps of other nations with the begging bowl, for even the most essential day-to-day need of food! This is because, farmers concentrate on cash crops, rather than food crops. How long can a nation subsist; on alms? This nation has another series of food crops too, which have been neglected, in the rush for growing cash crops. They are the Upanishaths, the Geetha, the Bhaagavatha. They have been neglected; man is not cultivating them and reaping the harvest of peace and joy that can fill his inner granary.

Vedha and Shaasthra are the two eyes of Bhaaritha Maatha (Mother India). Through neglect, her eyes are now as bad as gone. She is now struggling to see through American eyes or Russian eyes or Chinese eyes! See through the Self, the eyes that the Self activates; for, the Self knows best your utmost need.

In Clubs and similar Associations, the President or Chairman is the heart and the members constitute the body. The heart must pump enthusiasm and the body must transform it into useful activity. There must be wholehearted co-operation and faith. Doctor members must visit the slum areas once a week; they must be at the consulting centre, at the same time, every week. Be punctual and regular, sweet and courteous. If you talk with a smile, the tablet will act more efficiently.

Learn the ways of acquiring peace of mind Lawyers can help the poor, by drafting documents according to rules; now, most of litigation is due to faulty drafting. They can also point out to the villagers and the poor how the various Governmental agencies are prepared to help them; they can instruct them about the methods of securing that help. Ignorance of the assistance offered is leading many grants to lapse, and many a good intention to evaporate into nothing.

This length of cloth has such strength, because a large number of thin threads have joined systematically, with disciplined determination, into one new entity, called cloth. A single thread cannot stand the pull of an ant; but, many stranded together can hold back an elephant in rut!

Indiscipline, factionalism and recrimination are the bane of all associations in this country. Every one is plotting for the promotion of his own interests, whether he deserves or not.

Instead of inviting important persons to spin platitudes and their own pet prejudices, I suggest that you can well listen to spiritual discourses from learned and experienced people. They can give you the secret of equipoise, the ways of acquiring balance and peace of mind and the means of enjoying unadulterated bliss. I also desire that you should encourage the use by members of saathwik (pure) food and the avoidance of intoxicating drinks. It is demeaning the high role of man; it is pitiable to see a man under the influence of drink. Do not put tender minds on the path which leads to moral and physical tragedy. Drink milk or yogurt; eat fruits and nuts. They generate constructive, virtuous spiritual thoughts.

I suggest that you start Baala Vihaars (cultural centres for toddlers), and the very young. Provide them inspiration to understand and live by the culture of this ancient land. Schools are not at present eager or willing to do this. So children grow up, dehydrated, and torn from the roots.

They sing of Jack and Jill, not of Raama and Seetha. They know the robin and the raven, not the crow and the peacock. Children are moving about, like cars with no brakes. Boys and girls are growing up, resentful of constraint and treating eidars with contempt. Demonstrate to the young the joy one can derive through service, let them learn the technique of timely service and be eager and ready to speed with service, wherever it is needed---in times of flood, fire, famine, and festivals where the sick and the old require special care. Money spent for training youth for this kind of loving service is well spent.

Do not feel that I am a stranger, doling out advice. All are mine, those who serve and those who render service. I belong to all. Like flowers of many species and colours and fragrances, you have come together to make up a garland, for the adoration of God. Fulfil that great mission.

That is my blessing to you today.

Ananthapur, 18-1-1971

8. Forms of food

THE mind of man is not an organ that can be identified physiologically; it cannot be touched or operated on by doctors or surgeons. It is an intangible bundle of resolutions and hesitations; of wishes and wants; to pros and cons. It has as warp and woof of the wishes that man entertains with reference to outward objects and sensations. It easily rushes out after external pleasures and assumes the shapes of the things it seeks. It can also be turned back into searching for inner contentment and inner joy. That is why the mind is said to be the instrument for both bondage and liberation. Allow the senses to lead it outward; it binds. Allow the intelligence to prevail upon it to look inward for bliss; it liberates.

The mind is the puppet of the food that is consumed by man. It is prompted one way or the other by the subtle pull of the food it is fed on. The quality of the food determines the direction of the desire that diverts the mental flow. That is why in the Geetha as well as in all scriptural texts, saathwik (pure) food is recommended for the upward seeking individual. Mind means desire, sankalpa (resolve), something sought for. When the Formless desired Form, the Universe arose; so, mind is the creative principle, the maaya (illusion), that desired the very first desire, to be many. When it is now fed on rajas---passion and emotion, activity and adventure---it gallops into the world with the plunge of desire! It brings man deeper into the morass. When it is fed on thaamasik (impure) food, which dulls, inebriates, blunts reason, and induces sloth, the mind is callous, inert and useless for uplifting man. The three types of 'food' eaten by man Saathwik food, according to some, consists in milk and fruits. But, it is much more; it may not even be these. For, the calories that one takes in through the mouth are but a small part of the intake of man. The intake by the senses are part of the food that builds the individual. The sounds heard, the sights seen, the tactile impressions sought or suffered, the air breathed, the environment that presses for attention, appreciation and adoption---all these are 'food.' They have considerable impact on the character and career of the individual. The quality of the food is determined by the vibrations that it is charged with, through the thought processes of the persons who handle it, prepare it and serve it. The 17th chapter of the Geetha clearly defines the nature and tastes of the three types of 'food' eaten by man: the food that promotes love, virtue, strength, happiness, and cordiality is Saathwik; that which inflames, arouses, intoxicates and heightens hunger and thirst is Raajasik; the food that depresses, disrupts, and causes disease is Thamaasik. The company in which food is consumed, the place, the vessels in which it is cooked, the emotions that agitate the mind of the person who cooks it and serves it---all these have subtle influences on the nature and emotions of the persons who takes the final product in! It is because the sages of India realised this that they laid down many do's and don'ts for the process of eating, as-for the different stages of spiritual progress. Our thoughts trail off in directions determined by the sounds that fall upon the ear. When the sounds convey rebuke or praise, flattery or challenge, the thoughts too react correspondingly. When the sounds instil ideas of truth, beauty or goodness, the mind too seeks the silence of truth, the sweetness of beauty and harmony, the strength of goodness.

Nagarasankeerthan is the greatest disinfectant I have directed that you should start this day with Nagarasankeerthan (street singing of spiritual hymns), for, it is the greatest disinfectant of the atmosphere of the individual, as well as the community. The puuja (ritualistic worship) in the domestic shrine, the recitation of hymns, the bhajan (group singing of devotional songs) that you do, all send forth vibrations that purify and cleanse the atmosphere, and so, disinfect the 'food' that you consume. Pareekshith listened to stories of Divine Glory and so, he was hastened on the path of liberation, during the seven fateful days. So too the sight of temples, churches, mosques and houses surcharged with Divinity, of idols and sculptures depicting the mystery and majesty of God in His various Forms, of scenes that instil in your mind the littleness of man before the vastness of God's handiwork---these have a salutary effect on the formation of character, and the direction of habits and attitudes. The senses have to be controlled, primarily because they pursue deleterious influences that harass man and lead him into ruin. Inner peace is lost when the senses feed man on inflaming wants and infructuous desires. For the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant)---and, who can escape being a saadhaka?---the intake must always be pure and blameless, saathwik. The sounds, the sights, the impressions, the ideas, the lessons, the contacts, the impacts---all must promote reverence, humility, balance, equanimity and simplicity. If the impressions are raajasik, the mind will get agitated, vengeful, fanatic and fearsome. If they are thamaasik, the mind will not even be aroused into the awareness of its own innate handicaps. It is only the saathwik 'food' that will keep the mind on an even keel, fully concentrated on the Aathma on which one must contemplate in order to attain peace. Hyderabad, 28-1-19 71 When you are eager to place offerings before the Lord, let your offering be love, instead of transitory materials. Love is the very light of love; it is the only comprehensive Code of Conduct. Sri Sathya Sai 9. Step by step I AM glad your resolution to walk the 400 miles from your village, on the other side of the Western Ghats, to this place, in time for Shivaraathri, has been fulfilled, a day earlier than expected. This was due to the bond of faith and prema (love) that made all the 25 of you into a well-knit group of pilgrim. It is also due to the rigorous discipline you imposed on yourselves, about food and sleep and rest. It was good that you decided to cook your own food all along; for the spiritual yearning and strength will be endangered by consuming all kinds of raajasik food (food which inflames emotions), or food prepared by raajasik (passionate) persons, or eaten in raajasik company (which arouses attachments)! You offered the food you prepared, to God before you ate and so, what you ate during the journey was consecrated I was with you throughout, from the very first step to the last. Some of you argued at Holenarasipur that the push cart in which you were bringing the provisions, vessels and personal luggage broke down only by coincidence, right in front of a workshop! But, that gave you a day of rest, which you badly needed. Fourteen days have been spent by you on the road, one was spent in rest while the cart was undergoing repairs. To cover 400 miles in 13 days, is indeed good going!

The Name of God is a great tonic Your schedule of activity every day must have charged you with stamina. Perhaps you thought that you were only adhering to the Prashaanthi Nilayam time-table, when you had bhajan twice a day Omkaaram recitation at 4-30 A.M., and Nagarasankeerthan, as you walked through the streets (singing the glories of the Lord) of the village where you spent the night! But, the Name of God is a great tonic. Vitamin G gives strength to the legs to cover thirty miles a day! And, imagine how the villages through which you passed were not only thrilled, but also instructed by your bhajans and discourses to the groups that gathered round your camp! I was with you when some one turned you on to a new but longer route. I knew that some villages, lying away from the highway, could get to know of Me through the bhajans and talks.
Your manner of journey is nothing new. This was the style which your great grandfathers adopted, albeit helplessly, when they went to Kaashi, Badhri, Thirupathi or Pandharpur. They moved along, as a Sathsang (good company), as a family, a brotherhood, showering along the pilgrim route inspiration, instruction, compassion, and charity. They went through the different linguistic regions of the land and they were welcomed and feted wherever they went. There were no provincial and linguistic barriers then. From Raameshwaram to Kedhaarnaath, it was a land of One God with different Names. They ascended the peaks on which the temples were situated, shouting for their own encouragement, Hari bol, or Govindha.

Over the seven hills of Thirupathi, it was Govindha, Govindha for every step, but, now, motorable roads have been laid to reach most of the shrines, and people ride up to the very doorstep, with scarcely any Govindha emerging from their lips; while getting down from the cars right in front of the shrine, they throw away the stump of the cigarette that they were smoking till then! I am glad, you came walking, with the name of God on your lips, even in these days, when you could have come in cars or omnibuses, right up to the Prashaanthi Nilayam.
Activity is the very sine qua non of life Shankaraachaarya, in the fifth century A.D., went on foot from Kaanthi to Kaashi, Badhri, Kaashmir, Kedhaarnaath, Kailaash or Puri, Shringeri and Kaaladi! And, he lived only until the age of thirty-two! Imagine the tremendous amount of work that he did, writing, expounding, propagating, establishing, organising, inspiring, teaching--all in about fourteen or fifteen years of active life! When you trudge towards a holy shrine, when your legs ache, you pray to the God who is leading you forward; your thoughts do not deviate from that high endeavour! You came, I know, reciting or reminding yourself of the Name, Sai Raam. I know that you spent 75 per cent of the time in Divine thoughts; 25 per cent you spent---didn't you?---on your personal worries--- your homes, people there and their problems,, discussion on the distance yet to cover and. the distance already covered! Also, some suggestions about smother and quicker movement!
Be active, welcome activity, that is the message that God gives man, at birth. The breath teaches you Soham all the time, 'so' when it goes in and 'ham,' when it is exhaled. Activity is the very sine qua non of life. You will have to select that activity which is conducive to your spiritual progress, judging the stage in which you are at present. There is no high and low, in the activity.
The eye sees stars that are billions of miles away, but, they do not see the ears, which are a few finger-breadths afar! The eye must see, the ear must hear, the hand must hold. That is their Dharma (duty). Each must manage its own, his own Dharma.
Use your limbs as God willed them to be used A plantain tree has a number of uses; the leaf is used to eat one's meal from; the flower is used to prepare a few dishes; the outer covers of the trunk can be used for binding and packing things as a good string-yielding substance; but, the main use of the tree is in the bunch of bananas! You take all the trouble of planting and growing the tree for the sake of the bananas, not the leaves, the strings, the inner soft core, or the flower. So too, the main use of this human body is the realisation of the reality! The rest is all incidental.

Prahlaadha prayed, "Lord! I desire to adore you and offer flowers with both my hands!" You may say, O, the hands have so much else to do! But, though they may be used for a variety of operations, the chief purpose for which man has been endowed with them is to pray, to do puuja (ritualistic worship), to hold the Feet of the Lord. The ears are designed to hear the glory of God, the eyes to stand witness to its manifestations! The tongue may be used to talk scandal, or to flatter those in authority, but that is really misuse! Use it as God willed it to be used, for singing hymns of Divine Glory.
 Like Seetha under the Ashoka tree, surrounded by ghastly demonesses who terrified her and held out threats of torture, but all the while immersed in the bliss derived from contemplation of Rama, the tongue moves about, with sharp teeth around, waiting for a chance to hurt and wound! The tongue has to speak out testimony for the majesty and mystery that is God; all other tasks are subordinate. The legs must take you to the temple of God; of what benefit is it if they take you to houses of vulgar entertainment or places where money is earned and lost, as in the race course?
 Obstacles alone can toughen your character You have put your legs to their legitimate use! Do you feel any pain now? Any tension in the muscles? No; you are filled with Aanandha (bliss). All that bother was to get this Aanandha. Is it for My sake that you underwent this Paadhayaathra (pilgrimage on foot)? No. It is for your own sake, for this chance of sitting around Me and listening to My words!
 Outside this room now, there are thousands waiting for a few words from Me; but, you have earned the chance, by the proper use of your limbs!
 You told Me yesterday, "Swaami! We have been coming to you since ten years; you have spoken to us often; but, why is it we have not progressed a bit in our saadhana (spiritual practice) to earn peace and joy? Well. It is not enough if nice dishes are cooked and arranged in the kitchen.

 They have to be served on your plates, you have to eat them and more than all, digest them. So too, it is not enough if I speak and you hear! You have to recollect what I have said and treasure them in the cavity of your heart and ruminate over them and put them into daily practice! Some of you feel neglected by Me, when some disappointment or trouble comes upon you. You must welcome such obstacles, for, they alone can toughen your character and make your faith firmer.
 When you hang a picture on the nail driven into the wall, you shake the nail and find out whether it is firm enough, to bear the weight of the picture, don't you? So too, in order to prevent the picture of God from falling and getting broken into bits, the nail (Name of God) driven into the wall of the heart has to be shaken by means of a disaster or two!
 Suppose I ask one of you now to jump from the first floor, you should not hesitate and weigh the pros and cons, and slide away, for fear of injuring your feet! It is a method of shaking the nail to ascertain whether it is firm and steady. You must take it as a Leela (Divine sport) of Mine and jump; if you do so, no injury will happen! Or else, I would not ask you to do it!
 Married life will not bar your way to Realisation-When you travel towards God, whoever objects has to be bypassed; Prahlaadha went against his father, Vibheeshana went against his brother, Jamadhagni had to harm his own mother, Meera could not obey her husband; because, they stuck to the path of God and broke through all those who opposed them. Young men like you have the problem, I know, of being forced to marry against your will by parents who seek to hasten you into marital security. You have to win them over and get their approval as Shankara did when he wanted to enter the monastic order!
 But, let Me tell you that married life and being a grihastha (householder) will not bar your way to Realisation. Look upon the wife and the children as a sacred trust, and serve them in that spirit. Prepare yourselves for a celibate and spiritual discipline from the age of fifty; the five senses have to be mastered, by the time five decades of your life are over. The conclusion of six decades means that you have conquered the six foes of man: lust, anger, greed, attachment, pride and hate. When you are seventy, you must have become ready to merge with the seven sages, the seven seas and the seven colours of the solar ray; that is to say, you must be far, far above mundane desires and ideals, and as near the point of mergence as possible, through saadhana.

God is the Power behind the wheel of life

Eighty must see you in line with the deities that preside over the eight cardinal points, more or less Divine, in attributes and characteristics. Ninety takes you, or rather should take you to the realm of the Nine Planets, into the realm of the Super. When man reaches the hundred mark, living out the ten decades, he must have mastered the ten senses, the five senses of action and the five senses of knowledge and become Wisdom incarnate, with no trace of action or the consequence thereof or the desire for it. He and the Absolute are One and Indivisible!

But, all this is about the paahayaathra of the pilgrimage of life. Let Me tell you now about your 400 mile yaathra (journey)! Arjuna had the privilege of having Krishna as his charioteer during the battle of Kurukshethra. But, he did not realise that Krishna was his charioteer every moment of his life! You also must have thought that I was with you all through the 400 mile route! As if I have not been with you, before and since! Krishna commissioned the great bowman Arjuna to escort the women of the Yaadhava clan to a safe place of refuge, when He decided to end His earthly career; on the way, some wild tribals attacked the convoy, and Arjuna rose to destroy them, with the Gaandiva (his famous bow and the divine arrow) he had won by severe austerity.

But, the charioteer had gone; the strength had ebbed away! He had forgotten even the formulae for invoking the deities who directed the arrows! He could not even string the Gaandiva bow, he had wielded in a hundred encounters with the mightiest heroes of the age! Then, he realised that Krishna was the power behind the wheel of His life, that without Him, he was a spent force. The tribals overpowered the group and kidnapped the women whose wailings pierced the heart of Arjuna!

So, be convinced that whatever achievement you make, is caused by the Grace of the Lord. Pray to the Lord for strength, wisdom, humility, detachment, light and love. With each step in the pilgrimage of life approach Divinity steadily and surely.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 21-2-1971

The plan and purpose of the ancient religions of India are to plant the seeds of Love in the human heart so that they may sprout into saplings of endurance, and blossom into tolerance, yielding ultimately the fruits of peace.

Sri Sathya Sai

10. Sappers and miners

The very first gathering in the Prashaanthi Nilayam heralding every Festival, is a meeting of members of the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal, from all parts of the country. When thousands come to this place, which to most of them is new and strange, full of unfamiliar experiences, it becomes the duty of young persons like you to serve them, in a spirit of dedication, so that they may feel they are lovingly looked after and treated as if they are brothers and sisters, come to their family home.

It is a sign of spiritual weakness to differentiate among them and select the poor or rich, the educated or the illiterate, the native or the foreigner. They are all aspirants and seekers, and so, they have to be welcomed and helped to participate and share in the joy which they have planned to experience here. Each of them is a repository of Aanandha (Bliss), and that is the reason why they have the urge to taste it in a larger measure. Each one has Sai installed in his heart and so, is a brother, a kinsman. So do not pollute your acts of service with the poison of pride. Be humble that you have the sacred chance to use these days of your life in this noble task.

There are nine stages of devotion, through which the seeker has to ascend, before he culminates in total surrender and mergence with his Divine ideal. Of these, the seventh stage is 'Service of the Feet of the Lord!' And you have the good fortune of being considered fit for that stage, now itself. The Lord's Feet are million; the feet that are rushing into this campus are those of the Lord. Serve them, so that you can move on into the two further stages and realise your goal.

Be looking all around for any chance of service

You are getting the great chance of partaking in a huge sathsang (holy company), from today!

Thousands are coming to this place, prompted by keen desire to see, hear and contact Divinity, and for those who have kindred desires, the chance to move about in this Sea of Spirit is indeed a sign of Grace. This is the benefit of fairs and festivals held in holy places; the wave of exhilaration, enthusiasm and exultation lifts men aloft into the rarefied air of Holy Beatitude.

Two attainments mark out the Sevak, especially the Sathya Sai Sevak---absence of conceit and presence of love. Service to those needing help makes you the comrade of all, irrespective of other considerations. Be looking all around you, all the time, even beyond the horizon of your allotted tasks, for any extra chance to serve. An old man may be stranded in the hot sun, a paralytic may be casting his eyes for a chair, a child may be wailing for its parent, a mother may be clamouring for water to slake her thirst, another may be heart-broken for she has not got a vantage point from where she could see what is happening on the dais---watch for these, and run towards them, with a smile and a word of cheer!

It may be that some one has swooned or fainted. Get the doctor or take the patient to the dispensary, with loving care, and with gentle alacrity, instilling courage and confidence. Let them go back to their places and say that not even their nearest kinsmen could have dealt with that situation as lovingly and as intelligently as you did. Have compassion, love, readiness to sacrifice personal comforts, and patience---then, you can be a successful Seva dhal member.

Examples are the best instructors

This means that you must be engaged in constant Naamasmarana (remembering God's Name) yourself, so that you remain a true servant of God while claiming to serve man, or rather, so that you may see in Man the God that is his real nature. If you have not acquired that vision, you will not find unity among these diverse representations of the Divine. You will get confused by the multiplicity.

Hold on to the Command; that is the genuine path of the bhaktha (devotee). Never doubt or hesitate. Even if you are posted to the canteen or the hospital, do not get downhearted, that you cannot get dharshan, all time. I have no such handicaps; you can have My dharshan, wherever you are. When you are engaged in dhyaan (meditation), if you hear some groan by your side, rise and investigate; do not curse and neglect. You get much more spiritual benefit by this means, than by sticking on selfishly to your patch of carpet or deerskin!

Have a tender and a sweet voice. Do not shout yourselves, while reprimanding others for speaking aloud. Be examples for others, not simply castigators!

Examples are the best instructors. Be deaf to the harsh words that others may in their ignorance use against you. They too will soften, if you explain to them the why and wherefore of the restrictions and regulations that are prescribed here, by Me. When you speak soft and sweet to a person who is angry with you, you will feel a surge of joy within you. And the repentance you evoke in him is the reward you get.

Be saturated with equal love to all

One more point. You should wear simple dress, and not swagger about in new fangled outlandish bush-shirts and drain-pipe pants. How can a simple villager ask for help from some one who does not appear to belong to his world? Your face, appearance, stance and apparel must infuse confidence exuding sympathy and humility, so that the distressed and disconsolate, the old and the decrepit might come to you gladly for assistance to solve their problems. This applies also to lady members of the Seva Dhal (Volunteer Service). They too can keep people away, by means of frightful hair-do's and repelling apparel.

Above all, remember that you are members of the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal, 'sappers and miners' of the Sathya Sai Era. You have to be saturated with equal and universal love to all. You must be steady in adversity and in fortune. You must be skilled in the knowledge necessary for serving others, in an emergency. My name is Baba, B.A., B.A. I am a 'double graduate,' as you can see!

What do those letters mean? B means Sath (Being); A means Chith (Awareness); the second B means Aanandha (Bliss); and the second A means Aathman. The entire word means that I am Sath-Chith-Aanandha Aathman! And, you too are Sath, Chith and Aanandha Aathman. Only, you are not aware of it, you have not discovered it and revealed it. Service in the spirit I have indicated is one of the ways through which you can make that discovery.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 21-2-1971

A volcano throws up its lava on the screen of the picture house; a dam bursts and the flood waters it had impounded roar along towards the sea, submerging vast states; but the screen is not burnt, nor does it get wet in the least.

The screen is the truth; the film is an illusion, however realistic it was, however genuine the feelings it aroused.

Know this and so direct your life that this knowledge is the background of all your action. Thus, you will have great peace and great joy.

Sri Sathya Sai

11. This and that

THE Vedhas prescribe forms of worship through rites and formulae for different Names and Forms of the single Godhead, so that people of different stages of growth and different standard of intellectual attainment can draw inspiration therefrom. The Unity of all the names and forms was, however, emphasised throughout. Each name and form when it was adored was described as All-powerful, All-knowing. All-pervasive, etc. so that worshippers may be led through every door to the self-same entity that subsumes all. But, the shortsightedness of man won over this largehearted view; the Names and Forms were taken as essentially distinct and each became the centre of a sect, creed, with all its divisive consequences. Thus, we have a multitude of warring factions, each swearing by its own favourite Form and Name, to the exclusion of all the rest--- like Gaanaapathyas, Souras, Shaivas, Vaishnavas, Veerashaivas and Veeravaishnavas. The real harvest of Aanandha for which the spiritual operations of rites and manthras (sacred formulae) were gone through has been neglected, while the weeds of calumny, cynicism and conflict have grown wild over the fields.

Prescription of the Geetha to lasting happiness

The evil influence of kaama (lust) is at the bottom of this tragedy.

The Geetha laid down that even the Vedhas have to be transcended, whenever they seek to foster desires and cater to transient urges. It speaks in the same shloka that man must seek to become Aathmavaan (the possessor of soul) and the Aathmic (spiritual) strength. Note the word! Aathmavaan! The Geetha asks you to be, not Balavaan (possessor of physical prowess), not Dhanavaan (possessor of a comfortable bank balance) but, Aathmavaan (having the prowess arising out of the awareness that you are the Aathman, which can remain unaffected by fame or shame, grief or joy and all the buffetings of the dualities of the world).

Another word in the same shloka is Nir-yogak-shema. Dwell for a while upon its meaning, too. It points the way to lasting happiness---never being concerned with the earning of happiness and the maintenance of happiness, but, just being oneself! Being established in the Aathman, never worried about how to be happy (for the Aathman is ever Blissful), this is the prescription of the Geetha. Nir-dhwandho (without paying attention to the dual throng of grief-joy, pain-pleasure, etc.), nithya-sathwastho (ever fixed in the quality of equity), nir-yogakshema (unaffected by considerations of security and welfare), Aathmavaan (established in Aathmic consciousness) that is how the Geetha lays down the path of liberation.

In chapter 5, shloka 28, the Geetha says that the Muni (ascetic) who is eager to attain liberation must be the master of his senses, mind and intellect and he has also to give up raaga (likes and dislikes and preferences), bhaya (fear, at something unpleasant or undesirable happening) and krodha (resentment, anger, at those who cause disappointment or grief or loss). Vigatha (free from) raaga, bhaya, krodha, is the expression used. The shloka goes on to say that such a person is already liberated; he has nothing else to do!

Regulation of the senses purify the intellect

The prescription to scrutinise always the purity of the means, and not worry about the acquisition of the fruit of the activity; and the description of yoga as the stoppage of all modifications of consciousness---both emphasise the same advice of the Lord. The regulation and restriction of the senses purify the intellect, which then can boldly and quickly investigate into the real nature of the subject-object relationship, the I-other relationship, and discovering that all is I (the One), attains peace, prashaanthi (unruffled peace).

A single seed of kaama (desire) if it gets stuck in the soil of the heart, is very difficult to dislodge. The thinnest shower of rain, a slight change in circumstance which promises to be favourable, will suddenly make it sprout and spread its tentacles.

Kaama can be suppressed and mastered only by Raama (attachment to God) and prema (love for all beings, prompting sacrifice of joys and comfort for others). Without a hold on Raama and prema, kaama will upset your faith in standards of morality and righteousness. It will place before you all sorts of specious arguments to overcome the pangs of conscience and enslave reason and sense of duty.

I am arranging every year during Dhashara a yajna (sacrifice), so that you may learn thereby the importance of Vedhic studies as well as the need to renounce what we falsely evaluate as precious, and be for some days in the atmosphere of the ancient discipline, so that your emotions may be calmed and impulses domesticated. I am untouched by elation or sadness, or any of the consequences of activity. The ball of butter, floating on buttermilk, though it is in it, is not of it.

My nature is unaffected by My movements and activities. I talk and walk among you, I arrange and direct, I advise and admonish, but I am away from any attachment. The Divine is so distinct and distinguished from the mortal and the bound. Train your minds to follow not the devious, but, the Divine path, of which I am revealing to you the trail.

The evil mind infects those who contact it A clean uncontaminated mind is like a fully blossomed fragrant rose!
It refreshes and pleases, whether it is on the wall or on the table, in the left hand or the right. It can rise and reach the Footstool of God in Heaven. But the evil mind stinks, and is avoided by kith and kin; it infects those who contact it. Waves move out from the mind in ever-widening circles and affect all those who draw near. Let your mind have no waves; let it be silent, level, calm, so that the Hamsa (the bird of purity with perfectly white plumes, the bird that can distinguish between right and wrong, accepting right and rejecting wrong, the bird that is the symbol of Soham. Sa (He) aham (I), Soham: the principle of the One, embracing He and I, I and the others, I and He becoming We, or even I) can sport thereon! Every gesture, word and activity of mine, however casual it may appear, is motivated to move you towards .the fulfilment of your lives, and endow you with the Aanandha (bliss) that your Aathman (Self Reality) is.
Dive into the depth of silence to hear the Cosmic Om You read the Raamaayana or listen to expositions of the text by learned Pandiths; but, you spend no time trying to circulate through your activities the lessons the Raamaayana teaches.
'Baagavuthaam' is how the illiterate pronounce the word, Bhaagavatham! Baagavuthaam means,
"Let us become good." Yes! that must be the spirit in which you must take up the Bhaagavatham for study. Enter into the spirit of the narration and imbibe the courage that restores the equilibrium of the mind. Then you can easily pace the path of Maadhava (God) instead of the path of maanava (human). Maadhava means, the Master over maayaa (delusion due to ignorance)---Maa (maayaa, delusion); dhava, master. Follow God and nothing can delude you, putting on the apparel of the real.
Sound is of three kinds: Saamaanya, Varna and Mooka; Saamaanya (the common): the sound produced by things falling, or breaking apart or fusing, all the sounds of the objective world, of rain and thunder, of rivers gurgling, of valcanoos and earthquakes and the like, even the dropping of dew on a tender petal of rose, the sailing of a feather from a bird's wing through the air! The second kind is the sound of Varna (the spoken word): this carries a specific meaning and is armed with intention, to inform, or instruct or inspire. This is the flow of the heart-beat of one into the heart of another. The third kind is mooka (the sound of silence): when one dives into the depth of that silence, one hears oneself, the primeval Cosmic Om, the Pranava that emanates from the praana (the vital vibration) that fills the Universe. To hear that sound, one has to approach, as near as possible, the core of one's being. That is why the Upanishath calls itself so; it urges you to go near, delve deep, dive to the very floor of the lake. Upa means Near; Nishath means Sitting.

Go and sit near, so that you can hear the whisper of the Super Soul to the soul. Om summarises the Vedhas and their teachings. Om thath sath, says the Geetha. Thath (that) which Sath (is) is Om, the One. All this is Brahman, the One without a second. Thath is used to indicate that the objective world is taken by senses to be separate and afar; it means 'that', and 'that' is always far, and separate. Sath means 'is,' 'the is,' 'this!' When you recognise the Thath as 'is' or Sath, it becomes 'this, it is no longer object, it is subject, and the merging of object with subject manifests as the Om.
God is one for all, like Sun and Moon Seeing difference is the bane of the undeveloped intellect. The One Sun is seen, adored, and acknowledged all over the world; you do not boast of an American Sun, an Ananthapur Sun or the Sun of Puttaparthi. He is for all. So too children all over the world play in the moonlight and welcome the Moon, the Moon which follows each of them wherever they roam! Since the Sun and Moon are so far away in outer space, they receive the homage of all. God is so high, so far away that He is One for all. When you argue and quarrel over your God and mine and say He is many, you are only bringing Him down and insulting His Majesty.
When you pay undue attention to differences, spasms of hatred, anger, malice and envy overwhelm you. Anger rushes blood to the brain; the temperature rises; the composition of the blood changes; toxins enter into it in such quantities that it injures the nerves, and make you old before your time. There was a mother who was feeding at her breast her tender baby. Suddenly she plunged into a violent quarrel with her neighbours, and forgot to keep her baby down, in the heat of vulgar oratory. The poor child drank the toxin-mixed milk of the mother and when the flames of anger subsided, the mother found that she had a corpse on her breast! Desire to which you are too fondly attached breeds anger and its nefarious brood.

Discard it and you can have perpetual youth! The Aanandha that the Aathman can manifest will keep age and aging away!

Raama learnt from Vasishta (it is part of the game of the Avathaar to bestow on the preceptor Vasishta the merit of having taught the way of liberation) the method of conquering desire and he demonstrated by his equanimity that he could go into long exile, with as much exaltation as he could go towards the throne for his Coronation. 'Raama' means the Joy that comes of Love. He loved bird and beast, demon and sage, to prove to the world that God saves those who love His children.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 22-2-1971

12. Love, the sine qua non

The rays of the morning Sun induce buds to blossom into fragrance and beauty; they prompt the Divine in you, today, to blossom into fragrance, purity and holy endeavour. Earth and sky take on a golden hue, reminding us of the Hiranya Garbha (Golden Womb) from which all creation emanated in the timeless past. This is a sacred day, according to the traditions of this land; it has been revered and celebrated since numberless centuries. But, at the present time, people are content to listen to the praise of the Day and repeating what they have heard, to others, in parrot chatter. What really matters, however, is the experience of the bliss that it is designed to confer.

The intuitively ready have surely visualised that the vow of fasting and vigil prescribed for this festival will guarantee certain results. But, the genuine practitioners are few, and even they do not communicate their ecstasy to others; so, faith in the cultural calendar has declined, and the validity of vows is being questioned.

People who go about this land will notice the large concourses that attend temples, that partake in bhajans and Naamasankeerthan where the glory of God is sung with demonstrative enthusiasm that; mill around venerable personalities who preach and teach the ways of God, and they infer that this is a sacred land full of pious individuals, who tread the pilgrim path to Divinity. But, these are hollow rituals, empty exercises, exhibitionistic picnics or hikes; the pilgrims are more interested in shopping, both in the temple and the bazaars, than in stopping the ungodly habits to which they are attached! They are unaware of the basic truth of God, nor are they anxious to earn that awareness, by the hard path of discipline.

Unwavering Love alone can win God's Grace

Without an intellectual grasp of the fundamentals of the Divine Principle, all vows, fasts and vigils are imitative, routine, mechanical activities that involve waste of time and energy. It is best that you impress upon yourself the need for this basic step on this Mahaashivaraathri, for, this raathri (night) is the night that has to usher in the dawn of realisation.

On this Mahaashivaraathri, you have to impress on your consciousness that Nature is alive, since God is life; that Nature appears ever-lasting, since God is eternal; Nature is but a reflection of God. He lends the colour of order, purpose, and activity to inert Nature. Without the motivator, Nature is helpless and powerless. Appearance is but a reflection of reality; Ishwara is but a reflection of Brahman, the intelligence behind the Awareness of all. Shivaraathri inspires us to learn this basic Truth and shape our lives in the light of that illumination.

The Grace of God cannot be won through the gymnastics of reason, the contortions of Yoga or the denials of asceticism. Love alone can win it, Love that needs no requital, Love that knows no bargaining, Love that is paid gladly, as tribute to the All-loving, Love that is unwavering. Love alone can overcome obstacles, however many and mighty. There is no strength more effective than purity, no bliss more satisfying than love, no joy more restoring 'than bhakti (devotion), no triumph more praiseworthy than surrender.

Right living is the prescription of Vedhaantha

The achievement of aanandha through prema (of the highest bliss through the highest love)--- this is the teaching of Vedhaantha; Vedhaantha for which all seekers compliment the sages of this land. Vedhaantha is an often misunderstood school of philosophy. It does not mean the study of profound tomes, or the calculated breathing, through trained nostrils of measured quantities of air, or even eating as a dog does and sleeping as a jackal does, (wandering without any assured abode or source of sustenance) as the saying goes! Right living, balanced living, true living is the prescription of Vedhaantha. The fair face of Vedhaantha has been disfigured by fanatics and false interpreters. They sought manifold meanings behind the axioms of Vedhaantha and landed themselves amidst a medley of wrong meanings! They created confusion where clarity existed and so people lost faith in spiritual discipline itself. Vedhaantha is Love, the philosophical basis for that love.

Love should not be rationed, on the basis of caste, creed or economic status or intellectual attainment of the recipient. It should flow full and free, regardless of consequence, for, it is one's nature to love, to seek out the dry dreary wastes which love can water and make fertile.

Wherever there is a vacuum, in any heart, Love flows into it and is glad that it can fill the emptiness. It is never held back; it is offered in abundance, without guile or deceit; it does not wear the cloak of falsehood, flattery or fear.

The tendrils of love aspire to cling only to the garments of God; it senses that God resides, in His Infinite Splendour, in every heart; so, it probes silently into the innermost recesses of all personalities around it to discover the seat of God, so that it may bloom therein. That is real bhakti (devotion). When the tendril clings to worldly objects, it is bhukthi (gourmandism), not bhakti (godwardness). It is the direction that is crucial. Love ennoble the least and the lowest

When love is directed towards things that cater to the senses or bodily happiness, it will dry up when they fail or disappoint. When profit is loved, loss will undermine it. Discontent will sap its springs, when you love with the motive of worldly contentment. Even when ten million disappointments combine to distress you, never give up love; fix it on the source of love, the spring of love, the Supreme Goal of love, namely, God. Whatever the handicap, howsoever you are tempted to loosen the grip, hold on to God; there is always a calm, after the storm. A bout of hot weather invariably brings welcome showers. Love saturates all activities with joy and peace.

Love ennoble the least and the lowest. Love your self for the God that it embodies; love others, for the God that is enshrined in them, that speaks and acts through them.

This is the bedrock on which you can build the mansion of happiness, this recognition of the Divine, that motivates you from within. Thousands are here before Me now; you claim to be devotees, with hems full of love and devotion; you roll rosaries over your fingers, and roll the Name over your tongues; you indulge in breathing exercises or contortional feats, but, unless you revere all and worship all in the abandon of selfless love, you only insult the unique tradition of this land. Passion, agitation, anxiety---these degrade human nature. They are born out of hatred, greed, malice or envy, which love alone can counteract. You become what you yourself feel

When you have here the very embodiment of love as your dearest treasure, why welcome into your hearts the waves of hatred, faction, fear and doubt? Why turn them into volcanoes of cruelty and wickedness, when they can smile as green valleys of fragrant flowers? When you Have fear in you, the reaction of fear greets you. When you have hatred in you, it resounds from all whom you come across. All around you echo the sentiments that you carry in your own heart! Yadh Bhaavam thadh bhavathi---"You become what you yourself feel."

Making or marring is the activity of your own mind. When you pronounce another person as vicious or bad, you are making a pronouncement on your own wickedness or vice. Your own impurity casts upon him that suspicion. No one can judge another, for, when another is judged, you are yourself condemned!

You may ask Me, how is it possible for a man to be wicked or vicious, when his body is the temple of God. His words may be harsh, his actions may be reprehensible, his behaviour may be revolting, but, he is nevertheless Divine! For, look upon him not as a body with a name and form, or a mind with emotions and feelings, or reason with resolutions and conclusions, but, as the Aathman, the "Universal I" reflected as the "particular I", that I is as pure, peaceful, illumined and expansive as the I of which it is but a wave! Cultivate this attitude of observing everyone. Then, you can rid your mind of prejudices. The I in him and the I in you are identical, for, both derive existence, knowledge and bliss from the same "absolute I", the Paramaathman.

Wisdom is compassion at its highest

If your devotion does not stand by you when you seek to revere the reflections of God in the body-mirrors that move around you, when you peer into and prostrate before these images of God that parade before you, wherever you cast your eyes, how can you claim to be devoted to God, the Original of which these are but faint and faltering echoes? This is the saadhana (spiritual discipline) I prescribe for you.

Without steady faith in this saadhana and sincere practice of this saadhana, if you simply group together, preparing and sharing Prasaadhams (eatables placed as offerings to God) on every conceivable occasion, or even singing and extolling God, I must say that your efforts are all in vain! Expand your hearts; enlarge your vision; enlarge the circle of kinship; take more and more of your fellow beings into the tabernacle of your hearts. And, adore them in loving worship.

Wisdom is only compassion at its highest; for, through sympathy you enter the heart of another and understand him through and through, you go behind the veil of pretence and punditry, convention and custom; you go behind good manners and fashion that people put on to hide their agony and ignorance from the rest of the world. Finding the unity in this diversity of roles is true wisdom.

Have no other thought than God

You consider Shivaraathri to be a great event, a sacred festival, because of the emergence of the Linga from this body. The Linga emerged this day from the embodied Shiva, and the Shaasthra (ancient scriptures) say, Brahma and Vishnu who sought to measure its Glory could not succeed in their venture! Some superficial scholars say that Shiva was born this day, as if the Sath-Chith-Aanandha swaruupa has either beginning or end! Some say that He started thapas (penance) today, and some others that today marks the conclusion of His thapas! Even this is due to attempt to drag Divinity down to human level, so that man can peer into the face of God and move as His servant or slave! The affinity should elevate both, not degrade the outer and the inner Divine. No low desire or vulgar ambition should be ascribed to Godhead by the meanness of man.

God is all-powerful; God is everywhere; God is all-knowing. To adore such a Formidable Limitless Principle, man spends a few minutes out of the 24 hours, and uses a minute before an idol or image or picture! It is indeed ridiculous, it is practically futile. Adore Him so long as you have breath, so long as you are conscious. Have no other thought than God, no other aim than knowing His command, no other activity than translating that command into action. That is what is meant by surrender. Render your self unto Him.

When you intend going on a journey, you hand over the keys of your car to the chauffeur and sit in comfort and security in the back-seat, forgetting the possible troubles on the way. You have surrendered your life into the hands of that man, his intelligence, alertness and skill. Some men do not fully surrender; they are too egoistic for that! They interrupt him every minute with tips, hints, and suggestions about driving; with questions and doubts regarding the condition of the car or the road! And, so, they confuse him and confound his confidence so much that they inflict accidents upon themselves! Be steady, have Faith, and reach the goal safe. Life is the car, your heart is the key. God is the saarathi (chauffeur). Surrender to Him and be rid of further bother.

Travel safe and arrive happy.

You are atheist, if you have no Love in you

There are many who declare that they have surrendered to Me. They use the word, arpana. They have dedicated their thanu, mana, dhana (body, mind, wealth), their all, they proclaim! But, they still continue with their 'I did it,' 'I feel so,' 'I think so,' 'I like it,' 'I do not like it,' etc. The I raises its hood so that it may receive homage or praise! Now, it is a big lie to say that you have surrendered! It is sheer falsehood. The word arpana is a word that is just thrown about, without any value or purpose, to deceive people who do not dive into its authenticity. How can you surrender something over which you have no control?

You are the slave of your mind, of your passions, of your prejudices; but, yet, you dare claim that you have surrendered your mind, your thoughts, your plans to God! While you are struggling to escape from the coils of the mind and the stranglehold of the passions, how can you dedicate them to Me? No. You need not boast of such bravery, such sacrifice, such devotion. I do not need or ask for such declaration. It is not enough if you believe that God is everywhere and at all times, and that you are yourself no different from Him. When you are God yourself, to whom are you to surrender what? Think over this deeply and attain to that realisation.

Thousands of you have gathered here from all the corners of this world. You have put up with many discomforts, hardships, and inconveniences, in your struggle to earn Grace. It has been for each of you a lesson in love, tolerance, fortitude and patience. Your innate quality of love has enabled you to share in joy and peace. Love makes you all theists. You have to be labelled an atheist, if you have no love in you, however demonstrative your religiosity may be! If you believe that you can win the Grace of God by means of vows, fasts, feasts and recitation of hymns of praise, offering of flowers, etc., you are woefully mistaken. Love alone is the sine qua non.

The Geetha says, you must be adhveshthaa sarva bhoothaanaam-- "without hatred to all beings"; but, that is not enough. A wall has no hatred towards any being. But, is that the ideal?

No. You must positively love all beings, actively love, actively engage yourself in acts of love.

That alone wins the Grace you crave for.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-2-1971

13. Shivaraathri : its significance

THE scriptures composed by the sages of Bhaarith are testaments of genuine experience; they are to be interpreted and observed in practice, after reverential study by persons who have clarified their intellects by rigorous disciplines. They can confer eternal Aanandha (bliss) when they are thus utilised; but, scholastic or philological or grammatical inquirers which seek to comment and confuse can only lead to the neglect and loss of the precious content. They are ready to teach the Truth and lead the student towards the goal of Aanandha; they are eager to grant immortality and save man from the dreary round of birth and death.

Really speaking, children of Bhaarith are fortunate to have this invaluable heritage. The Vedhas and Shaasthras speak of this fortune; the sages extol this land on this score; the Upanishaths acclaim the people who have such gurus and guides; the achievements of generations of aspirants and seekers stand witness to this treasure and its worth. But, some blind cynics discard the treasure, and condemn it as something that draws men away into futility! One can only pity them from their lack of vision. Bhaarith is the name of a way of life, not an extent of land between the seas and the Himaalayas. It is another name for tolerance and mutual love, which have made it a garden of multicoloured religions and philosophies, creeds and faiths.

Dharma means a lot of things, do's and don'ts

It is the land where the identity between man and God has been declared by persons who have attained that realisation. The individual is encased, while God is unbound; the individual believes himself bound, as having name and form, as the body and its appurtenances. The fire that is latent in the fuel can manifest only when it is lit by external fire. So too, the divinity of the intellect, the mind and the inner instruments of cognition can manifest only when the Aathma is prompting and urging them. Otherwise, if they are prompted and urged by the senses, they will lead only to perdition and delusion.

Every directive given in the scriptures on discipline is intended to help the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) to realise this identity and to derive the Aanandha which recognition of this Unity confers. For example, take the exhortation in the Geetha shloka, which says, Sarva dharmaan parithyajya maam ekam sharanam vraja. What is the dharma that has to be given up? Are all duties and responsibilities to be discarded? Or, does Dharma here refer only to some of these?

Dharma is an omnibus expression, which means a lot of things, attitudes, behaviour patterns and mores. It includes often mere rules, which are known as vidhi (fate) and nishedha (do's and don'ts). If you are anxious to catch a bus, board a plane or entrain for some place, you have to be at the stop or port or station before a particular time. That is a vidhi. When two brothers divide among themselves the possessions left by their father, they share half and half; this is Dharma, that is to say, right and proper, moral, approveable. Now, Dharma of this nature is laid down and observed, so that we get peace and content, so that sukha (happiness) may be promoted. It belongs to the relative world, the absolute has no concern with these relative advantages or benefits. It is in the realm of ajnaana that sukha is desired and dhukkha (sorrow) is avoided.

Know that you are the ever full, ever blissful

Kaama (desire) is the urge for karma (action). It is regulated and modified by dharma (righteousness) so that happiness may be gained and sadness avoided. And, kaama is the product or expression of ajnaana. So, when the Geetha directs that all dharma be given up what is meant is that ajnaana (ignorance which induces kaama, the progenitor of karma which has to subserve Dharma) is to be conquered, and overcome. Acquire jnaana (spiritual wisdom); know the truth of thyself. Then, you will be free from lust and hate, because you will know that you are the ever full, the ever blissful.

Imagine a person searching for things in a room. His eye falls on all the articles he wants to secure, but, he does not notice the person who searches! The seeker does not see himself! When you give. up the search for objects, for things other than yourself, you see yourself and know yourself. When the dhraishtha (seer) is seen, the dhrishya (seen) is negated; when the dhrishya is seen, the dhraishtha is ignored!

Tideman said just now that in the very first meeting he had with Me, I told him that I am God. In fact, every one is God, limiting himself into this particular name and form in which he is encased! If you believe yourself to be the label that is now affixed on you, and call your self by the name that others have given you, you can never know your reality and have unshakeable joy.

This is the lesson that Vedhaantha teaches. Each one is "Sathyam inaanam anantham Brahma (Truth, Total Knowledge and Infinity is Brahman)." But, sunk in the morass of ajnaana which multiplies endlessly the desires that haunt the mind, man forgets the core of his being. Every one must get convinced that he is the Aathman, not the body which is its material residence. To instruct you about this is the special purpose of the festival of Mahaashivaraathri.

Linga is the symbol of the beginningless and endless People ask, "Why does Swaami produce the Lingam (Formless Form of God) from within himself on this day?" But, let Me tell you, it is impossible for you to understand the attributes of the Divine and to measure its potentialities, or, to gauge the significance of the manifestation of Divinity. It is agamya (unreachable) and agochara (un-understandable, mysterious). Therefore, in order to bear witness to the fact that the Divinity is amidst you, it becomes necessary to express this attribute. Or else, the atmosphere of hatred, greed, cruelty, violence and irreverence will overwhelm the good, the humble and the pious.

The Linga is just a symbol, a sign, an illustration, of the beginningless, the endless, the limitless-

--for it has no limbs, no face, no feet, no front or back, no beginning or end. Its shape is like the picture one imagines the Niraakaara (Formless) to be. As a matter of fact, linga means--- leeyathe (that in which all forms and names merge) and gamyathe (that towards which all names and forms are proceeding, to attain fulfilment). It is the fittest symbol of the All-pervasive, the

All-knowing, the All-powerful. Everything is subsumed in it; everything starts from it; from the Lingam arises Jangam (Universe), from the Jangam arises sangam (association, attachment, activity) and as a result of the sangam, one realises the lingam (attributeless Aathma). Thus, the circle is completed--from the beginningless to the Beginningless.

This is the lesson that Lingobdhavam (emergence of the Linga) teaches. The lingashareera (the physical body) that is inhabited by the Aathma is but a vesture worn for this particular sojourn! Many a vesture has this soul worn, though its reality is eternal!

The lesson that Raamaayana teaches

People have not imprinted on their hearts the lessons that the ancient Hindhu scriptures and epics seek to teach. I have been, for example, asked often, why some persons who have associated themselves with Prashaanthi Nilayam for years leave off and do not appear again! The reply is evident for those who have studied the Raamaayana well. After ten or twelve years of 'devotion' suddenly these people take a turn for the worse and stray away; as the Shaasthras say, "When the accumulated merit gets spent, they slip into the depth of mortality."

Seetha is the daughter of earth, of Prakrithi (Nature), seeking the eternal comradeship of Purusha. She weds the Purusha, the Lord come as Raama. When Raama agrees to go into exile and proceeds to the forest for a stay of fourteen long years, Seetha too gives up all the luxuries she was accustomed to; she braves the perils of jungle life, for the sake of being in the presence of Raama. She renounced desire from her heart for the sole goal of Raama.

Thirteen years she spent with the Lord, in perfect bliss, as a consequence of the sacrifice she dared to make. Then, quite suddenly, desire sprouted in her mind, and carried her away, far away from the Lord! She saw a golden deer, and she coveted it! She who had renounced huge treasures of gold and diamond was attracted by a fantasy and this led to the agonising separation.

So too, for those long attached to Me, there arises some desire---for lands, jobs, family life, fame, position, possessions---and they move away! But Seetha repented for her mistake, and her mind suffered extreme anguish at the separation. She called on her Lord to redeem her, calling out in contrition, Raama, Raama, Raama, Raama, with every breath. And, finally, Raama Himself moved towards her and restored Himself to the devotee! So too, if you are agonisingly repentant and aware of the loss and anxious to rejoin, craving for the presence, this Sairaam too will move towards you and grant you Grace.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-2-1971

14. Life-long bhajan

THROUGHOUT last night, you have sung bhajans and kept vigil, as part of the Shivaraathri celebrations. This aarathi (waving lights before an image) marks the end of that bhajan sessions; but, only of the outer, congregational, vocal part, not of the inner solitary silent bhajan that must be the very breath of your existence. The Vedhaantha persuades you to investigate the function of the senses and of the mind which is activated by its capacity to reflect the Aathman within. All the inner instruments of knowledge and the inner witness in man are promoters of the highest wisdom, though they are misused, in ignorance, to confound and ruin man's progress. Those who are aware of their being only the indestructible Aathman, encased in temporary sheaths, in a ramshackle dwelling house bearing a name and presenting a form, they are unaffected by anything that happens to the sheath or house. Prahlaadha was one such. However inhuman the torture they inflicted on him, he was calm and unruffled; for, he was established in the Naaraayana, that was his genuine Truth. It took Arjuna a long time to realise this. In fact, it was only after the Ascension of Lord Krishna that it was brought home to him, in a dramatic form. Krishna, while rolling up the curtain of the Avathaar Drama, had asked him to take the women, children and some old men of the Yaadhava clan orphaned by his departure, to the safety of Hashtinaapura, away from Dhwaarakaa which had been swallowed by the sea. The mind hides the Prompter and the Power within Arjuna led the disconsolate community through lands infested by wild tribes, confident that the bow Which had won him the Kurukshethra battle against the array of gigantic heroes will ensure safely and success. But, when some barbarian hordes fell upon the Yaadhava remnants, Arjuna sought to string his bow and fix an arrow upon it---in vain! He could not recall the formula which could send the arrow on its mortal mission. He had to witness the debacle, the kidnapping of the women whom he had vowed to guard! When Krishna had finished His Mission, he too had ended his mission; there was no more breath in him too. Krishna was his life, his might, his archery, his mastery, his heroism, his all. That truth was made patent to Arjuna by the shame of defeat, not by the paean of victory! The mind plays many tricks with you, the chief of which is to foster the ego and hide the prompter and the power within. You must have heard of an accountant in the Court of the King of Death, Chithraguptha, by name. He maintains a Register of the good and the bad, done by each living being, and on death, he brings the books to the Court and strikes the balance between debit and credit. Yama, the King then metes out the punishment that can expiate and educate.

This Chithraguptha has his office in the mind of man, all the time, awake, alert. The word means 'the secret picture; what he does is to 'picture' all the secret promptings that blossom into activity; he notes the warning signals as well as the occasions when those signals were ignored or wantonly disregarded. You must see that the warning of the Divine against the merely human, or even the bestial inclinations are heeded.

Bhajan encourages man to dive into himself

Bhajan is one of the processes by which you can train the mind to expand into eternal values.

Teach the mind to revel in the glory and majesty of God; wean it away from petty horizons of pleasure. That is all that bhajan or puuja or vratha can do. Bhajan induces in you a desire for experiencing the truth, to glimpse the beauty that is God, to taste the bliss that is the Self. It encourages man to dive into himself and be genuinely his real Self. Once that search is desired, the path is easy. One has only to be reminded that-he is divine, for, the malady is, its being thrust out of recognition.

Chaithanya once had very high fever, the temperature rising to 105 to 106 He refused to administer upon himself any drug other than what the Shaasthras has prescribed; he asked for the dust of the feet of a Brahmana, water consecrated by washing his feet! They could only get hold of a Brahmana who was not following correctly the disciplines laid down for that high caste, which entrusted with heavy responsibilities like leading the community along the spiritual path to self-realisation. But, Chaithanya asked that they need not be very strict in scrutinising his credentials, for, a Brahmana is holy, however fallen he may 'be. He belongs to a line which has soaked itself through many lives in Vedhic lore and saadhana.

However rickety a cow has become, milk can be got only from her; she has to be fed, fostered, fondled and revered. Thus, Chaithanya reminded the Brahmana of his great; role in society and encouraged them to live up to the high expectations that history has fastened about them. Man too has come for a great destiny, on a sacred mission, endowed with special skills and tendencies to help him on; but, he fritters these precious gifts and crawls on earth from birth to death, worse than any animal. Exercises like bhajan elevate the mind and exhort the individual to seek and find the source of eternal joy that lies within him.

Grace is not something that is given or taken

When I directed that groups of people belonging to our Samithi should go along the streets in the early hours of the morning singing the glory of God as summarised in the Names with which they are identified, some ask me, "Is this also included in bhakthi? Should we sing aloud in company while on the streets?" The question arises from false conceit. Bhajan which is part of Nagarasankeerthan gladdens the singer and showers joy to those who listen; it cleanses and purifies the atmosphere by its vital vibrations. It inspires and instructs; it calls and comforts.

Hold fast to the God you believe in, despite trials and tests, the ups and downs of life. This day is the New Moon Day, when the moon starts growing into fullness, but, as soon as he has come full circle, he starts waning, until he almost disappears and the earth is plunged-in darkness; yet, all is not lost; the thin curve grows steadily into the full moon again. Fortune too is like the moon.

Nothing can be fixed or fragile for ever, in this fickle world, born out of the fancy of the Lord.

The Lord is eternal, absolute, unchanging. My Name is Truth, I am the Truth, and since I am in every one of you, you too are everlasting Truth. Do not doubt this and descend into distress.

Strive to be endowed with the unwavering eye, the unhesitating mind.

Call out the Lord who is within your heart

Now, you will all be given Prasaadham (eatables offered to God) and so, sit silently in rows. Of course, I mean by Prasaadham the cooked offerings that are given this day at the conclusion of the bhajan. Prasaadham, also means Grace, which flows from God when He is propitiated. My Grace is ever with you; it is not something that is given or taken; it is given always and accepted by the Consciousness that is aware of its significance. Win the Grace of your own sub-conscious, so that it may accept the Grace of God which is ever available.

God does not deny any one; it is only you, who deny God. When the gift is proffered, you have to do only one little act, so that you may earn it---you have to extend your hand to receive it.

That is the Grace or the subconscious; Win it, by teaching it the value of the Grace of God. My Grace is showered wherever you are through My infinite Love, without even calculating or measuring the readiness of your subconscious to receive it and benefit by it. The Grace itself will confer on you the faith and the strength, the wisdom and the joy. I am in your heart all the time, whether you know it or not. Dhroupadhi called out for the Lord of Dhwaaraka, Shri Krishna, when she was cruelly insulted by the wicked cousins of her husbands, and so, the Lord responded after a little delay. He had to go to Dhwaaraka and come from there to Hashtinaapura where she was! He told her that she could have got Him in the fraction of a second, had she called out, 'O dweller in my heart,' for He dwells there too, as everywhere else!

The Mahaa Shivarathri festival is over; but, the message of the day is yet to fructify in your behaviour, conduct, thinking and activity. Do not rest content with a night-long bhajan. Make it a life-long bhajan, of adoration, of pilgrimage to the Lord within.

Mahaa Shivarathri, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 24-2-1971

The poor are rich in devotion to God; Kunthi prayed that her difficulties may continue, for they keep the Lord ever in her mind.

Riches are a great handicap in the path of spiritual progress. So, though you may be rich, do not cultivate attachment to the bank account or to the mansions, cars and comforts you command. Have them as if they are given to you on trust by the Lord.

Sri Sathya Sai

15. He and He alone

THE Vedhaanthic teaching that jeeva and Brahman are one, is the true wisdom. Without proceeding towards it, man is cutting himself off from the unfailing spring of Aanandha (bliss), light and peace. Without it, he sees the many, he is afraid of the many, he is confused with the many; he loves and hates, he craves and is spurned; he posits one theory and condemns another.

In fact, he is caught in the coils of moha (delusion). When moha is conquered, man is aware of the truth and he is free.

Kurukshethra is the field of food, for kuru means food. Food indicates all that is taken in, through the gullet or the nostrils or the senses. This aahaara or anna (food) is what determines the nature of the impulses, emotions and passions. These have to be directed along proper channels, and sublimated to serve the goal of liberation from fear and grief.

The kshethra (field or body) must thus be transmuted into the Dharma-kshethra, the purified area of virtue and vairagya (detachment from worldly desires). Then, the charioteer will take charge, and man gets liberated, the body becomes Brahma-kshethra (field of Universal Soul).

That is the life-story of a self-realised person.

Saadhana is essential to overcome faulty vision

The self-realised person is merged in Aathmic Bliss; he is not bothered by external happenings; he has the world of inner peace all to himself. If you follow such a person and pray for guidance, he will not be interested in you. Then, we have the Mahaapurusha (the high-souled or noble person). He has not reached the goal yet; he is well on the way; he knows the road only as far as he has trekked; so, he is unable to give full guidance to the aspirant.

The Avathara-purusha, however, has come solely to save mankind, and so, He is aware of the pilgrim, the path and the goal. He is the Master of creation and He is fully conscious of his power. He knows the past, the present and future of all. He leads and liberates.

The mind is the source of delusion; it deludes and binds. If the mind is subjected to the intellect then it disintegrates and disappears, leaving the field dear for the illumination that reveals, that "we and they are but He or It." As long as the world is seen as manifold, saadhana, to overcome the faulty vision is essential.

In the deep sleep stage, the senses do not work; one is immersed in the I consciousness only; that is to say, one is in Samaadhi, (the state of bliss). Only, one is not aware of it, at the time. There is just a trace of ignorance. During the waking stage, there is knowledge, but no Aanandha (bliss).

In deep sleep, there is Aanandha, but, no knowledge. That is why it is said, liberation is attained the moment one is able to fix himself at the point where there is the experience of both jaagrath and sushupthi (waking and deep sleep).

"When you love Me, you love all"

Love is the word which indicates the striving to realise the falsehood of the many and the reality of the One. Love identifies; hate separates. Love transposes the Self on to another and the two think, speak and act as one. When love takes in more and more within its fold, more and more entities are rendered as One. When you love Me, you love all; for, you begin to feel and know and experience that I am in all. By means of dhyana (meditation), you can realise that I am the resident in all hearts, the urge, the motive, the guide, the goal. Yearn for that vision, that awareness and make it your priceless possession. Then, you have what you often ask Me for--- saakshaathkaara (Direct Vision of Reality). Your love has to be as pure and as free from the taint of ego as mine so that it can merge in Me.

Of course, it is hard saadhana. The mind is too much with you, now. One has to negate and deny, deprive oneself of many expectancies, dive deep into oneself, swim upstream against the current of generations of attachment to worldly things, including the body which one bears. The gopees (Cowherd girls) were so filled with the highest type of love that they saw and experienced the Krishna Principle in every speck of dust and blade of green that they saw. Love of Krishna makes the whole world Krishna. The denial of everything else is the method of visualising Krishna in all. There is only One, the integer I. When it is repeated once again, we have two. The manifold creation is only He, and He and He, repeated so often. Dust and blade, drop and spot---each is He, He and He alone. And, you are no exception, you are also He. The realisation of this truth, this identity, this mergence, this is Saakshaathkaara.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 24-2-1971

The Shaasthras say:

have faith in the doctor, so that you may get cured of illness; have faith in the manthra (holy formula) with which the preceptor initiates you, for then alone can your saadhana be fruitful; have faith in the sacredness of the temple, for then alone is your pilgrimage profitable; have faith in the astrologer's predictions, for, without it, why bother yourselves with him and his abracadabra?

Have faith in the Guru, for then alone will your steps be steady and firm, on the path to self-realisation.

Faith in the Guru should bring faith in the Aathma (true Self), or else, the Guru is a handicap.

Sri Sathya Sai

16. Mind irs, not mandhirs

EACH one of you is designated a District President; you have to guide and help the Bhajana

Mandalis (Spiritual Singing Groups), Mahila Vibhaags, Baala Vihaars (Women and Children Sections), Study Circles, Seva Samithis, Seva Dhaals (Service Groups and Centres), that are established with your approval and watch whether they are working smoothly, with the ideals laid down in Swaami's Messages always in view, and within the limitations, rules and regulations laid down by the conferences under Swaami's guidance and with Swaami's blessings.

Of course, you have to watch over yourselves and see whether you yourself are having those ideals in view and whether you yourself are following the rules and regulations and disciplinary limitations laid down from year to year, in the conferences.

There are many who come forward when there is a call for social service; but, most of them crave for publicity, seeking cameramen whenever they help others and very disappointed when they are not mentioned in newspapers! Such men push themselves forward, and climb into positions of authority, just to parade their importance before the public. They forget that service is worship, that each act of service is a flower placed at the feet of the Lord, and that, if the act is tainted with ego, it is as if the flower is infested with slimy insect pests! Who will contaminate the feet with such foul offering? Have no egotism while you serve the people of your district. Be guides in their spiritual struggle. Nourish faith in God in the area; upon that faith, you can build any type of spiritual organisation. Trees that grow by the side of canals will flourish, thick with foliage and fruits. So too, Bhajana Mandalis and other units of this Organisation will flourish, when faith in the Divine feeds the roots.

Do not indulge in exhibitionistic display Emphasise simplicity and sincerity, more than pomp and show. Make the mind, the shrine. Have mind'irs, not mandhirs! Discourage the building of mandhirs and halls; try to utilise the temples and halls that already exist. Let the temples that are fast being depleted of pilgrims become once again centres of spiritual vibration. Decorations and detonations tend to draw the mind away from the essential; people indulge in these things more to show themselves off and impress their importance on the public. During the festivals and celebrations, or even in daily life, people should not indulge in exhibitionistic display. If money comes into the picture, it becomes ugly and low.

You must insist on the observance of the rules of the Organisation, for, they are laid down out of love, not to tyrannise. They are bunds erected on the river banks in order to direct the flood waters safe to the sea. Guide the devotees, taking it as a divine duty.

Stir well the sugar of God in the tasteless water of worldly affairs, and it becomes drinkable.

Have faith that it is adoration of Swaami that you are doing, through the work allotted to you; then, it becomes saadhana (spiritual practice) through which you can win Grace.

There is a Thelugu proverb which characterises elders thus:

'Peddhalu kaadhu; gaddhalu'---

"They have no culture; they are vultures." They soar highly, only to espy carrion. If only elders are genuinely anxious to serve people, (instead of merely talking about service) the world would have entered the Golden Age long ago.

The daily activity of dedicated service

One practical way in which the spirit of service can be inculcated is this! Tell this to the Mandalis in your districts. Every day, when the lady of the house measures the rice for preparing lunch or dinner, let her place a handful in a separate pot, kept for the purpose, with the words,

'For God;' at the end of the week, let her cook that rice separately and give it to as many poor people as the quantity justifies. That will be a daily act of dedicatory service.

Pay special attention to Baalavihaar children and the classes being held for them. It is very valuable work, since it supplements the school and gives them what they don't get from the curriculum. It is the Baalavihaar that shapes them into the children of Bhaaratha Maatha. The heritage of India has to be handed over to the children by the mothers of the land. Discipline and the exercise of authority must be there, but, modified by love. Without a certain amount of restraint and some use of authority (to press good things on unwilling minds), no progress can be made. The child has to be persuaded much against its will to eat rice and curry, when it has to be familiarised with them. The sick man has to be reprimanded, if he refuses the drug that can cure him. Why, you, too, have to impose on your own selves a rather rigorous routine of discipline, so far as saadhana is concerned.

You must have noticed that, in Prashanthi Nilayam, you find during festivals and special occasions, the same faces appearing again and again. First they came with a bag of prayers for worldly advancement. When they listened to My discourses and conversation year after year, they have come out of the coils of material desires and have now only one desire: to win mental peace, through a course of strict saadhana! So, they come again and again, to draw inspiration and win instruction for spiritual success.

Let Me tell you what the first steps in saadhana are: Practise silence.

Then, you can more easily recognise the galloping of the mind behind worldly happiness.
 Restrain its movements; turn it inside, into the calm lake of bliss that lies deep in the heart! Get over fear, by establishing your mind in the One, for, fear can arise only when there is another. An inquirer from the United States asked Me recently, 'How can faith become firm?' I answered, 'When the Truth is known, faith is rendered firm.' When the truth is known that it is a rope, faith in its harmlessness is made firm, and fear that it is a snake disappears.
 Let people know the Truth'; they will then grow in faith and the faith will endow them with great energy and enthusiasm. The rest will follow, and Dharma (righteousness) can flourish in this land' as well as in the world.
Brindhaavan, 8-3-1971
 17. Liberation from bondage MANY a saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) has gone through long and arduous disciplines in order to win his dearest ambition of entering the kingdom where there is no bondage; he has recited the Name or meditated on the Form or denied the senses. There are others who have ventured with Reason as their sole guide, into the realms of the inner consciousness and discovered that liberation consists in realising the reality that is behind all the transient and manifold phenomena.
 But, the experiences of these heroic men and women are discarded as the vapourings of crazy individuals, by those who live on the flimsy surface of the first of the five sheaths of human personality, the Annamaya kosha (physical sheath). They identify the body as themselves and do not delve behind the falsehood into the realm of Truth.
 Such cynics who condemn the Vedhaanthic approach to the problems of living are not rare even in the land that gave birth to Vedhaantha! The reason behind their attitude is---they do not grasp the fact that Vedhaantha reveals only the genuine history of each one of them. It but seeks to hold before every one the true picture of himself, devoid of deficiencies or exaggerations.
Moksha (liberation) is no special and exclusive heaven into which one has to earn admission; it is not a special status or acquisition or possession. It is just the removal of the false notion that we are bound and limited by the body, the senses, the intellect, the mind, the ego and other fancies.
 What exactly is the bond which one has to free himself from? The bonds have been forged by fear and anxiety, produced by desire which holds one in its grip.

 Fundamentally, fear arises because you feel there is before you, another, a second! If there is no second, whom can one fear? The first person is the seer, the I; the second is "all other beings and things," which are seen, observed, Nature.
 Renunciation confers immortality The objective world is the illusion caused by ignorance, which makes one ignore the One that is only apparent as Many. Ignorance causes the identification with the Mine. So, when some one attached to us dies, we feel broken-hearted, whereas, when some one who is not in the circle of kith or kin dies, we are not affected at all. It is the sense of I and Mine that causes grief and fear.
 That is why the Upanishaths proclaim that renunciation alone confers immortality, freedom, fulfilment.
 The highest wisdom is the awareness of the unity, the One, which is all this. In fact, there is no two, there is only One Brahman. You realise this when you are in deep sleep, when all thought, feeling, emotion, passion, attachment, knowledge cease---only the I remaining, and the happiness of being only the I. But, the Aanandha is not known at the time of sleep! It is only after waking that you declare I enjoyed fine sleep. If only you were aware of the Aanandha, sleep will be samaadhi, for, it is Aanandha unalloyed. So also, in the waking stage, you have knowledge, but, no Aanandha.
 If you can experience the knowledge of the waking stage and the Aanandha of the sleeping stage, both at the same time and to the full, that is Moksha. That is true liberation. Then you have consciousness, knowledge and bliss, unalloyed; you are Sath-Chith-Aanandha itself, pure and simple.
 The fruit of the tree of love is inaana You must watch for the moment when the wakeful stage passes into the sleeping stage and concentrate on that moment purifying it of all the agitations and thought which mar the wisdom and the Aanandha. Of course it is difficult in the beginning! When you are at the wheel of your car, driving along, far into the night, there comes a fateful moment when you slip into sleep, from the awareness of awakening! There is nothing that you cannot gain by practice. You have learnt the highly complicated and strange skills of walking erect, of writing scripts and reading them and interpreting them, all by practice, haven't you? This is the way of acquiring and experiencing, the inaana (spiritual wisdom) which alone can grant liberation from fear and grief.

From the seed of love, springs the sprout of devotion to the Lord. The devotee sees everything as the manifestation of the Glory of God, every act as His handiwork, every word as His voice; he offers every thought, word and deed inspired and prompted by Him to Him. Thus for Him, the world is but He, He is the world. There is no second. So, the fruit of the tree of love is inaana.

The sweetness in that fruit is Aanandha and the fruit contains once again the seed of love from which the sapling put forth its leaves. In the vishwa-viraat-swaruupa (Cosmic Form of God) which Krishna allowed Arjuna to witness, Arjuna found himself, as well as his brothers and cousins.

24-3-1971

What exactly is your duty? Let Me summarise it for you.

First, tend your parents with love and reverence and gratitude.

Second, Sathyam vadha, Dharmam chara. Speak the truth and act virtuously.

Third, whenever you have a few moments to spare, repeat the Name of the Lord, with the Form in your mind.

Fourth, never indulge in talking ill of others or try to discover faults in others.

And, finally, do not cause pain to others, in any form.

Sri Sathya Sai

18. The new year dress

New Year must usher in a new step in spiritual discipline. The old must be rung out; the new must be rung in! How do we celebrate the New Year Day? We sweep, we clean, we remove the cobwebs, we whitewash the walls, we hang up festoons and greens, floral garlands and croton leaves; we wear new dresses, we feast on new types of dishes. For one day, we feel fresh and renovated. At this time of the year, Nature too puts on a new garb of green; every tree is gay with flowers. The green carpet on the earth is speckled with multicoloured floral dots! In this festival of renewal, man alone continues with his old prejudices and tendencies, outworn habits and moth-eaten principles. Should not he too brush the cobwebs from his mind? Should he not get rid of opinions and motives which tarnish and demean?

The word Yugaadhi means the Day of the Inauguration of the Yuga (Age). The spiritual discipline for each Age has been prescribed by the scriptures; for the Kritha (First Age), it is dhyana (meditation); for the Thretha, the second, it is dharma (righteousness); for the Dwaapara, the third, it is archana (ritual worship) and for the present age, the Kali, it is Naamasmarana, the remembrance of the Name of God. So, on the Yugaadhi Day, you must resolve to accept it and practise it to the utmost. This involves giving up all habits that interfere with the constant remembrance of God.

Without grief, there is no relish in joy

As a matter of fact, life is a series of acceptances and rejections, of attachments and detachments, of joys and griefs, benefits and losses. This year itself has got a rather forbidding, foreboding Name: Virodhikrithi, meaning, the year of making enemies! Do not have any apprehensions; the only foes you will be meeting will be the evil habits and meaningless pursuits th at you are giving up!

Take-everything that happens to you as the Gift of Grace. Of course, on your path, you must act with all the skill and devotion you are capable of. Do this with as much sincerity as you worship

God. Then, leave the result to the All-powerful, All-knowing, All-merciful God. Let whatever ensues ensue! Why do you hold yourself responsible? He prompted it, He got it done, through you; He will give whatever result He feels He must!

Without grief, there is no relish in joy! The orange has a bitter rind, the bitterness guards the sweet juice from marauders; you cannot have a sweet sugary rind, for the sweet fruit, for, then, it will be consumed entirely by all and sundry, then and there! The urge of the fruit is to travel far, so that the seeds may grow into trees in open spaces in the distance and not under the shade of the parent tree. The tree desires its progeny to spread far and wide.

So, if the rind is bitter, the eater will take it with him and travel some distance, while removing it and start scattering the seeds only many paces away! You cannot keep gold safe in a gold box!

You must have a steel almirah, for it! The gift of joy comes packed in the rind of grief. Do not pray God to give you only joy; that will be foolish. Pray for the fortitude to realise that grief and joy are but the obverse and reverse of the same coin.

Effort needed to win the Grace of God

Today in every home, the priest reads the New Year's calendar, called the Panchaangam (almanac), of the five limbs. Which are these five limbs. Not as is usually understood, the position of the Sun, Moon, stars, etc. But, the five senses of man--- which yield him the knowledge he gathers through sound, touch, sight, taste and smell! They have to be pure, so that the knowledge can be truly genuine. The hour and the moment have to be auspicious, so that auspiciousness may result. Hence, the careful study of the calendar is prescribed. The planets cannot prevail over the Grace of God, which is the most potent influence to guard and guide man.

Thyaagaraaja sang that Raama's

Grace can counteract the evil effect of the worst conjunction of stars! People resort to vows and rites, hoping to ward off the evil that stars may bring about! But, no effort is made to win the Grace of God. The pomp and the paraphernalia of puuja are merely superficial; they do notconfer lasting benefits; at best, they prevent you from using that much of time and money in harmful ways! It is the 'why' of these rites that matters, not so much the 'how.' The why has to be the realisation of the reality of the individual, which is also the reality of the Universal!

Be devoted to the Universal; be eager to become That. When you pray to God for a job, or a son, or a prize, you are devoted, not to God, but to the job, to the son and to the prize. Pray to God for God; love, because it is your nature to love, because you know nothing else, because you cannot act otherwise than love. Expand your Self, take in all! Grow in Love. That is the new dress you have to wear and shine in, this day.

Yugaadhi, 27-3-1971

Grief is caused, as joy is caused, by the attachment of the senses to objects; once you know that you are not the senses or the mind, but He who operates the senses and wields the mind, you cross the bounds of pleasure and pain.

Separate yourself from the grief; you are the President of your Realm. The senses and the mind, with all the attendant impulses, desires, attitudes, etc., are your servants, instruments that have to carry out your orders.

Sri Sathya Sai

19. The Raamaayana family

THE Raamayaana is the very life-blood of the Bhaaratheeyas. Down to a few years ago, it was difficult to find throughout the length and breadth of India a village without a temple for the worship of Raama, a home where a picture of Raama was not adored, or a tongue whereon the name Raama did not dance. The entire country was saturated with the fragrance of Raama. Such a fortunate land has degenerated in recent times into a region fouled from top to bottom with the contagion of kaama (lust). Seek to be filled with Raama; you will be saved. Seek, on the other hand, to be fouled by kaama; you will be damned.

In the Thretha Age of human history, the Formless, Attributeless Principle of Existence-

Knowledge-Bliss was so overcome with compassion that It assumed the human form, as the very embodiment of Dharma (Raamo vigrahavaan Dharmah), manifested various examples for man of correct righteous conduct, re-established the supremacy of Dharma and its inherent might, and merged again in the Absolute, from which It had appeared.

The Vedhas describe the Divine entity as Maadhava: Maa meaning maaya and dhaya meaning Lord. That is to say, He is the Master of all that is born and therefore dies, changes and therefore, false! Life and death are a part of maaya (delusion), of which He is sovereign. So, all who are bound by this dual chain have to be loyal to God, and pay homage to Him and obey His order.

That is the path to happiness. But, the agent of maaya that is in the human, namely, the mind, does not usually help him in this endeavour. It runs after the shadow, the reflection, the unsubstantial glitter, and discards the gold. It runs through the senses into the outer world and neglects the call of reason for discriminating analysis and renunciation. Man is thus everywhere living a life of shame, far below the level that he can well attain and enjoy.

Tread the path of truth laid down by Raama

To meet a person living on the tenth floor, you have to go up nine floors. To experience the joy of being with Maadhava (God), you have to rise to that purity, that love, that truth, that peace.

Become full of compassion; love all; serve all; do your duty sincerely and with joy; be good, do good, and thus deserve God. Raama will be pleased when you tread the path of truth, for, that is the path laid down by Him. A cursory reading of the Raamaayana will give you only the husk; the kernel can reveal itself only when you reflect over each word and incident. Indian culture has always encouraged this reflection on the meanings of symbols, parables, and names. It is stated, "Dhasharatha had four sons: Raama, Lakshmana, Bharatha and Sathrugna." Well. Who is the Dhasharatha? Which kingdom was he ruling over? If in some City called Ayodhya, there was once a ruler named Dhasharatha and he had a son called Raama, how are we related to that episode? Why should we celebrate that event, at this distance of time and space?

No one can escape living with the three gunas

Go a little deep into the story and you will realise that Dhasharatha is not the ruler of a far off land, that his capital city is not on the map of Northern India, and that the four brothers are not people who lived and passed away! Ayodhya means a city that is unconquerable, into which the enemy cannot penetrate, an impregnable fortress. It represents the Aathma, the heart where the Lord resides, which is proof against temptations, the subtle foes of passion and emotion, impulse and instinct. And Dhasharatha? The person who has as his ratha (chariot) the ten entities namely, the body with the five senses of action and the five senses of knowledge! He married three brides, this individual, who is the symbol of all individuals.

Now, though each married man may have a wife with a physical existence of her own, he has also wedded to him, inseparable from him, till death 'do separate,' three attributes: Sathwa, Rajas and Thamas, the three natures---balanced, passionate and dull. The three queens represent these Gunas---Koushalya, the Saathwik (balanced) Guna, Sumithra, the Rajas (the passionate, active) and Kaikeyi, the Thaamasik (ignorant, indiscriminating) No one can escape living with these three gunas, and experiencing the varied reactions which that contact involves. In due course, the yearning arose in the mind that it must have a Master whom it can obey and revere. The agony became so acute that the transcendent divine actualised itself in Grace that took the form of paayasam (rice pudding), brought by a messenger of God from the sacrificial fire. That gift of Grace was shared by the three gunas (qualities) and four sons were born, representing dharma, artha, kaama and moksha (virtue, wealth, desire fulfilment and liberation), the four prime ends of man. Raama the eldest is dharma and the other three stand for the rest.

You will have to sacrifice a great deal, if dharma must be born in your heart. That is why Dhasharatha had to do the Puthrakaameshtiyaaga (a great sacrifice for obtaining sons). The Divine is the very embodiment of dharma and it is only by means of dharma that He can be worshipped. And Dharma is a garland of the flowers of holy deeds, holy words, holy thoughts.

Earn the reputation; of being good, serviceable and efficient in doing good. Children who do not render their parents happy, by such good conduct are remembered by their mothers only through the pain they gave them at birth.

Make every act reflect the Divine splendour

At the present time, every one is moaning that they have lost peace, security and happiness.

There is a loud clamour from all the quarters. But, no one seeks to discover why this tragedy has taken place. The reason is this: what has to be done is not being done; what has to be observed is not being observed. There is no co-ordination between what is said and what is done. Hypocrisy is rampant in the homes, the villages, in the offices, the council-halls of the nation. It is raised to high positions even in the spiritual field. Those who turn beads with God's name on their lips are engaged in ungodly pursuits. With the Bhagavath Geetha in their hands, they talk scandal and hatch evil plots. With rosaries on their fingers, they fume at servants, losing temper on the slightest pretext. This is no vow, no discipline of the spirit!

The Bhaktha who poses to be sincere has to exercise constant vigilance and practise the discipline of being ever in the Divine Presence. God who is now dormant in your consciousness has to be recognised and made resurgent so that every act of yours will reflect the Divine

Splendour. Vyaktha means patent; the individual man is called vyakthi in Samskrithi; for, he has to make patent the latent Divine.

Consider the ideal examples Raamaayana provides

When you have achieved the consciousness that God is in you, with you, for you, that awareness must re-shape every thought, word, and deed, and make you wish good, speak good, and do good. Men who have ostensibly dedicated themselves to the religious discipline are only playactors strutting on the stage of the world. Others wear their devotion very thin; the smallest trouble or disappointment turns them against faith in God. But, real devotion has to withstand whatever misfortune may bring.

Just consider the series of ideal examples that the Raamaayana provides: the family of Raama is itself an invaluable gallery of Supreme Dharma. When a son is as loyal as Raama, accepting even exile as his father's will and gladly walking into the forest as gladly as he moved towards the throne for his coronation, he will be the ideal son indeed.

Consider how that great lady,

Seetha, revered her husband as her Lord and God, and herself persuaded him to take her with Him into exile in the forest, braving all the deprivations in her desire to be by his side. If all wives were so steadfast and loyal and loving as Seetha, India will certainly be full of happy homes resounding with hearty joy of contentment. Every door will be green with festoons.

As for brothers, who can equal Lakshmana or Bharatha? His mother had secured the throne of the vast empire for him, but Bharatha spurned it, since it belonged, as of right, to the eldest of the brothers. Everyone is struggling to secure positions of authority, by hook or crook. But, here is a man who gave up what was very correctly won for him by his own mother from his own father, gave it up so that the person to whom it morally belonged, might return from exile to receive it and enjoy the status and power! And, Lakshmana, how he forsook food and sleep, in order to stand guard over his brother and sister-in-law, in the thickest jungle; how he surrendered his will fully and gladly at the feet of his brother!

Grand examples of renunciation

The women? When Lakshmana went to his mother, Sumithra, to take her blessings before accompanying Raama into exile, she did not argue, "Why should you go? Your father has not asked you to leave. Stay on and be happy in the palace and make me and your newly wedded bride happy." She said, "Son! Do not imagine that you are leaving for the forest and that we are remaining in the city of Ayodhya. Without Raama, this city is the jungle; with Him the jungle is Ayodhya." What did Urmila, the young wife, tell her Lord Lakshmana? She did not plead for permission to accompany her husband as Seetha did and for very good reason. She said, If I come, you will not be able to pay undivided attention to the service of Raama and Seetha. I shall remain here awaiting your arrival after 14 years!" What a grand example of renunciation, this! If, in each family, we have such sons, mothers, brothers and wives, the land will have no anxiety or sorrow. It will be resplendent with joy and peace.

Brindhaavan, 4-4-1971

The worst action is to do the opposite of what you preach: to deny by the hand what you dole out of your mouth.

If you cannot act up to your declarations, keep quiet; do not go about advising and advertise that you are hypocrite?.

Do not preach dharma (virtue) while decrying it in deed. Dharma is steady, unchanging, it can never decline.

What happens is: those who have to practise dharma decline in faith and steadfastness.

Sri Sathya Sai

20. Beside, behind, before

THE saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) must have as his objective the state of mental preparation, for the realisation of Godhead at any moment. That is to say, his heart must be cleansed of despair, free from hesitation and doubt, and open to the waves of bliss that surge in from all sides, in God's Universe. Love brings the waves in, ever expansive as they are! Follow the directives, with faith and sincerity. That will help you to realise the purpose of life. Since every act has its appropriate reaction, beware of evil intentions, wicked words, acts that harm others and therefore harm you, and so live that you revere all as moving temples of the Divine.

Narasamma, who passed away recently is a good example for you. She was a pure devotee. She came to Parthi, 30 years ago; and once having come, she never turned back to Madras, with any longing for her home, her belongings or her kith and kin! She was friendly with all and put up gladly with all sorts of people. I used to reprimand her often, "Narasamma, Why do you welcome all these people into your room and allow them to disturb the saadhana and silence you need?" But, her heart was large and it was difficult to restrain her. She spent all these years, happily here; and, now she has settled here, as her eternal home.

I wrote a letter to her from Goa, I did not write to any one else from there. I wrote only to her. I wrote, "Narasamma, I am with you, beside, before, behind; and I am guarding you as the lids guard the eye. Do not be worried in the least, that I am not there. Since your body is getting weaker and weaker, be ready for any eventuality. Avoid thoughts of the body, be ever full of thoughts of God. Carry on in that manner." When the body gets over-ripe, it rots; when it rots, it is thrown away. Her body became ripe, over-ripe and it even suffered due to over-ripeness. So, it had to be disposed away. But, her seva and saadhana---these do survive.

Tread the path of goodness & achieve good results

Perhaps you wondered why I did not come to give her dharshan (audience), even though she was praying for it so long! Her fortune was not this kind of dharshan, standing before you, as I do now. But, I certainly stuck to my promise to her, that I shall give dharshan to her, during her last moments. I came, I stood before her, I gave her the blessing prasaadha (consecrated gift), I asked her to put into her mouth the vibhuuthi (sacred ash) I created and gave her; and, some persons round her bed at the time came to know about it. For they asked Narasamma, "What is it you are putting into your mouth?" and Narasamma told them, "Swaami came just now and gave me Vibhuuthi prasaadham." Until the last breath she was fully conscious.

Narasamma died at seven minutes past eleven in the morning here at Prashaanthi Nilayam, and there at Whitefield, I mentioned to Peddhabottu (who has come there and is staying there), at seven minutes past eleven, "Your Narasamma has gone!" Her nature, her heart that corresponded with her nature, her achievement which was characteristic of her heart and its purity---all bore fruit. It is difficult to understand the beauty of such a life and to find analogies by which one can explain it. The path depends on the principle, they say. Follow good principles, you are led along to the good fruits. So, tread the path of goodness and achieve good results. That is my advice.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 18-4-1971

Falsehood looks easy and profitable; but, it binds you and pushes you into perdition. Purify your feelings and impulses; do not worry that others are not doing similarly.

Each man carries his destiny in his own hands. You will not be bound, because others are not freed. You should strive for your salvation, at your own pace, from where you started when you were born into this chance.

Sri Sathya Sai

21. Good and bad

THE body is the temple where God dwells within, and is installed in the heart. But, it is not enough if you go on repeating this very pleasing axiom and pretend that you have joined the ranks of the good. To make that statement is a great responsibility. For, you must behave every moment, as if you are aware of the God within. The priest in the temple first cleans the altar, then he scrubs and polishes the vessels used for worship, and then, he pours water sanctified h!

Manthras in order to cleanse the idol, and finally, he offers adoration through flowers and fragrance, reciting the meaningful Names of God.

You have also to cleanse the senses, the instruments of action and knowledge and remove all the blemishes of bad habits, bad tendencies, feelings and thoughts.

Render yourselves pure, steady and unselfish. Then only can you deserve the chance of worshipping the God within. Until then, the temple will be a ruins, infested with bats that revel in the darkness. Vyakthi is used to refer to the individual man, not without a certain degree of appropriateness.

The Samskrith word means,

"he who has made manifest the Divinity in him"---that is the answer.

That which was unmanifested due to the heavy overlay of saadhana, and the a-vyaktha has become vyaktha. He who has achieved this is the vyakthi, not each and every single human. Keep the mirror of the heart untainted by kaama (desire), and its chief attendant krodha (anger); then, the God within clearly shines therein.

Throw your inclination on the side of the good

As soon as you rise from bed in the morning, examine for a few moments your thoughts, plans, habits and attitudes to others, which are about to pounce on you and decide the shape of things to come, throughout the day. Identify in the motley crowd the vicious, the wicked, the evil, the harmful, the one that are born in anger, that breed on greed and assert that you are not willing to be led by them. Throw your inclination on the side of the good, the constructive, to renounce, and rise up a purer, stronger and happier man than when you went to bed. That is the real saadhana, not simply spending a few minutes, watching your breath, or wandering homeless and living on alms.

There is a belief that is strongly held and justified by many that good deeds and bad will cancel out and it is only the balance that one has to suffer the consequences off That is to say, the consequences of sin can be diminished by the consequences of acts of merit, done by the same person; ten sins and eleven meritorious acts mean that the balance is favourable to the doer! But, this system of accounting does not hold good in the spiritual field.

The consequences are there, but, they do not cancel out. It is like this: a man scatters seeds of thorn plants as well as of fruit trees. Both grow together, and both have to be endured. They sprout distinctly and as ruled by their own innate dharma. You may have in an orchard of 1000 fruit trees one thorn bush, but, that will not turn into a fruit tree, by association with the rest. What has to be done is to pull out and destroy the bush. Identify it as thorny and harmful; and, then, by discrimination, pull it out by the roots. By the roots---for, when the rains come, the tree will sprout again, if the slightest trace of life is in it.

Be vigilant about your steps

Only very few are now able to spot out the thorny bushes and uproot them; so, they have to suffer the thorns, even while they are enjoying the fruits. Reap the mixed harvest, you must, if you do not take note in time. As I said at the beginning of this discourse, the tragedy is: Man seeks to avoid the progeny of sin, with pleasure; he seeks to earn the fruits of meritorious deeds, but, is not inclined to follow the meritorious path! Be vigilant about your steps. Do they lead you along the road that will take you to the goal you have in view? Or do they turn away from it? How can you reach the east, when your steps lead west? Many persons ask me, "Swaami! when can I realise the Truth? Please grant me, self-realisation." My reply is, you will be liberated the moment the 'I' goes; do not ask for 'my' liberation. 'My' liberation. The I should go. The I and mine should go. That is itself liberation. This I has been created, protected and grown by your own ignorance. A baby has no I or mine. It easily gives up anything from its grasp; the I hardens with the increase of intelligence, and it does not part with a doll or toy. Do not allow the role of the separate I to damage the springs of love and sacrifice, in your heart. In order to escape the nefarious influence of this ego, cleanse the heart with constant contemplation of God, His Glory, His Leelas, His Beauty, His amazing attributes. Contemplate the vast, so that your heart too might overstep its limits and become vast. Bhoomaa (the Vast), that alone confers Joy. Another directive I give is: Be more concerned with your own progress, your own correction than with the good and evil of others. There is time enough to worry about the good of others, after you have become good, yourself. But, try as far as you can, to give Aanandha (happiness) to others; desist from causing pain to others. The way to realise the unity of all You must feel the pain of others as your own; you must be happy when others are happy. That is the way to realise the unity of all. Above all, be vigilant; for, the fruits of Saadhana may be destroyed by negligence. When the rains come, the earth is again green, for the seeds of grass are underground, though you thought the land was dry and fallow. Sathsang, Sathkarma (good company, good deeds)---these have to be kept up, all through life. Deepaavali (Festival of Lights) celebrates the destruction by Krishna of Narakaasura, King of Prakijyothishapura. Narakaasura means the demon who has with every act of his, taking a step towards hell. It symbolises ignorant and evilminded men. And, which is their pura (habitation)? It is called, Prak-iyothisha! Prak means the First, the Initial. Iyothi means Light; and sha means forgetting, ignoring. The city which has forgotten or is ignoring the Primal Light, the body where man lives which has neglected the Aathma which is the Primordial Source of Light, Inaana (Intelligence), that is the Prak-iyothi-sha-Pura, over which the Naraka (Hell)-ward marching Demon ruled. And, Krishna saved him, by destroying his demonic tendencies and showing him the Light. 18-4-1971 You are proud that you have written the name of Sai ten million times; you talk about it whenever you get the chance, so that others may admire your faith and fortitude. But, it is not the millions that count; it is the purity of mind that results from genuine concentration on the name. Your Saadhana must avoid becoming like drawing water from a well in a cane basket! You get no water however often you may dip and pull the basket up. Each vice is a hole in the bucket. Keep the heart pure, keep it whole. Sri Sathya Sai 22. Be and Be Blessed ACTIVITY is the keynote of the Universe; by activity, all beings are born, by activity, they maintain themselves, and through that activity they: perish. Constant breathing, inhaling and exhaling, keeps the body temperature even and comfortable. The One that is beyond all activity assumed the forms of the five basic elemental materials---sky, earth, air, fire and water---in order to act and activate. To be active, yet, to be always aware that it is all mere acting, is the secret of happiness. That is the Dharma (virtue) which must regulate and sanctify the karma. The achievements of technology which have taken man to the moon are also events in the Cosmic Drama, where the principle performers are only working out His Plan; identification with the adventure and its success or failure will make the performers proud or depressed---states which would not help inner peace and joy. The secret of good karma is, do karma as an act of Worship, a dedicatory rite offered to the source of all energy and intelligence. And, never take the consequence to heart. By this means, one can approximate to the Divine Principle, which is beyond activity. That Divine Principle is the very core of man. Becoming aware of this

Truth is the goal of life; it is source of strength which is unfailing and irresistible. Close your eyes, you feel there is no one else here, though there are thousands. If you suffer from cataract or worse still, if you are blind, you cannot know the truth. So, too, the Divine is here, before you, behind you, inside you, outside you; the intelligence through which you can recognise It is also with you; but, you are either blind, or diseased with defective vision or worse still, wilfully inclined to close your eyes!

Search for the unreal is the root of all fear You have a bird in your very hand; but, you are wasting your time and energy conspiring to catch the bird hiding in the bush; the notes that make you believe there is a bird in the bush are, you do not know, only the echoes of the notes from the throat of the bird in your own hand! The Guru reveals the Truth and makes you free from the travail and the trial, the search for the bird in the bush. In a flash, you know, and the Knowledge is Bliss. Why crave for the non-existent?

Why ignore the 'existent'? That is to say, the Sath? It is the search for the unreal that is the root of all the fear, the sorrow, the sickness of humanity. Learn, while you can, the key which will open the door of escape.

Have all around you the curtain of 'Naamajapam' (the vibrant, vigilant repetition of the Name of God, and recapitulation of His Glory); then, unhealthy yearnings for self-aggrandizement will not pester and poison you. Naamajapam will not allow you to ignore the essential hollowness of worldly affairs and the essential absurdity of getting too involved in it; you behave as if you ate the designer of your destiny; you are only a wave, formed on the breast of the ocean by storm and surge.

When his dearly loved son, a stripling of sixteen summers, Abhimanyu, was surrounded and cut to pieces by the Kaurava cousins who trapped him in a labyrinth, Arjuna gave vent to his anguish before his eldest brother, Dharmaraaja, the consistent follower of righteousness. He placed on him the entire blame for the death of his son; indeed, he said that they could have avoided exile, poverty, infamy, dishonour, disgrace and all the elaborate preparations for the war of vengeance had he been cleverer and more adaptable. Dharmaraaja sat quiet and silent during the shower of invection. He knew that Arjuna himself, in his cooler moments, will recall the Geetha teaching, that every single happening is His handiwork, that no one is killed or no one kills, if only you know the Truth, that everyone is a puppet in His hands.

Seva fulfils the aims of all paths to God The quickest and easiest way by which one can realise the basic absurdity of attachment is the path of Seva. Pour out Love, whether it is returned or not, whether it results in success or not. Let Love be ever translated into Seva, into beneficial acts, sweet words of consolation, comfort and courage, and thoughts of sympathy and compassion. I do not declare that other paths like Bhakti or Inaana are of no use.

Worship of God in temples and shrines has its place in sanctifying time and sublimating the instincts and impulses. Inquiry into reality has its use in clearing the fog of doubt. But, activity in the shape of Seva (selfless service) charged with Love fulfils the aims of all paths to Godhead.

Sarvathaah paani paadham, sarvathokshi shiro mukham, says the Geetha. "All hands are His, all feet, all eyes and all faces and mouths are His" He works through all hands, He walks through all feet, He sees through each eye. He eats and speaks through every mouth. Everything is He.

Every step is His, every look, every speech, every act is His. That is the lesson that Seva instils.

Pray in agony, "Lord! Have you no ears?" and His Ear will be listening.
 Pray, "Lord! Let me fall at Thy Lotus Feet!" and the Feet will present themselves before you.
 They are at; all places, at all times. Your call compels the manifestation, that is all.

Attach more value to the kernel, not the husk When you get a parcel by post, what do you do? You remove the packing and take out the article sent, don't you? Take away the packing and secure the thing of value.
 You say, "For me peace is required." Remove the packing on both sides of the thing you really want---'For me' on one side (indicative of egoism) and is required on the other (indicative of desire, want, sense of incompleteness). Don't have egoism and desire; you have Peace! It is the packaging that hinders the securing of the Reality. You attach more value to the husk, not the kernel.

A certain village had a few philanthropic people who provided it with a drinking water well, an overhead tank and a distributory system of pipes and taps. They were so pleased with it and so proud of their possession that they decided to invite the Governor of the State to inaugurate the system, by opening one of the taps, on an auspicious day and moment, selected by astrologers.

The Governor graciously agreed. The philanthropists were elated; they fitted a length of gold pipe, and had a golden tap made for the occasion. Festoons and flags were hung on the pavilion put up around the tap. Bands of musicians with their complicated and costly instruments were hired from the metropolis. Pandiths (scholars) were gathered from various Paathasaalas (traditional schools) to recite Vedhic Hymns as the water would start to flow.

Connect the act of service with love in the heart

There was no dearth of V.I.Ps, that morning; hundreds of cars streamed into the tiny hamlet. The great moment came; the Governor solemnly approached the golden tap. He gave it the right kind of twist; but, no water flowed! The Vedhic recitation rose to the skies; There was no trickle, not even a drop or the sign of one! Everyone wondered why. The well was full, the pump worked well; the tank was not leaky. The golden pipe was there, with the golden tap. What was really the fault, they asked each other. At last someone discovered that the golden pipe had not been connected with the regular supply system; it had not been screwed in.

Have you connected your act of service with the reservoir of Love in the heart? Are you doing it with God-consciousness? Or is it merely a superficial ceremonial routine act, done for publicity or personal pride? Really, the power that man holds in himself is unsurpassed; no other created being has it. For he is the living image of God, the precious casket enshrining the Divine Itself. If you are weak, grief-stricken and ignorant, the fault is yours; do not blame others: you have not tapped the spring of God within you. This is the sin;-the turning of the blind eye to this patent fact. Diagnose the faults in the eye, and have the blind spots or the cataract cured. You can do it, by prayer or by resorting to a Guru.

There are three stages in this process of awareness: Ijinaasa, Mumukshu and Aaroodha--- Inquiry, Yearning and Attainment. (1) The period of study, (2) the period of being employed in a job, when what is studied as applied in practice, and (3) the period of life when one lives without care on a well-deserved pension---these can be compared to the three stages mentioned above.

Worldly loss or profit are playthings of a day

You may have a picture or two of the Form of Go you like; "O Lord," you may cry before the picture and prostrate before it, in humility and contrition. It helps to ensure peace of mind. But, do not pray for paltry gains, or petty-vengeances against others! Such prayers will take you away from Grace; you faith will suffer set-backs. Wordly loss and profit are playthings of a day; they are like baubles with which you sport in dreams; when you awake, they are gone! When you are awake into knowledge and awareness of the God in you, they melt away from your consciousness. Why bother with gaining them or losing them?

All are of one essence; let this truth be established in your heart. Then there can be no faction, no fear, no fanatic attachment to someone. For want of this vision, we have at present cliques in every family at cross purposes over every matter! The Raamaayana and the Mahaabhaaratha hold forth examples of avoiding such situations and establishing Dharma in the home, the village and the nation. Wives like Seetha, husbands like Raama, brothers like Lakshmana and Bharatha, Arjuna and Bheema are delineated therein.

Do not try to avoid contact with others or with external nature.

Develop a wider, a universal, outlook. Look upon external nature as the vestment of God; it is the expression of the Will of God, it is the manifestation of His glory, His power, His might, His majesty. See these in every blade of grass, in every floral petal, every slice of fruit. Learn lessons from the river, the mountains, the star and the sky.

The message of the seers of India

Through this worshipful attitude to man and beast, plant and stone, you must remove the veils of Thamas (ignorance), Rajas (passion) and even Sathwa (goodness) and achieve equanimity---the stage where judgement itself is given up. Then, you become aware of your own Self, behind and beyond the three veils. Yanna bhaarithi, thanna bhaarithi, says the scripture. "Where there is no Vidhya, there is no Bhaarithi." Intelligence is the sign of the true son of India; he yearns to discriminate between the Real and the Unreal through purified and clarified intelligence.

Discriminate and decide; dive and declare the depth; eat and judge the taste. That has been the message of the seers of India. Mere axioms without the chance to prove their value to oneself were not thrown at the pupils by the ancient preceptors. The pupil was told then that Divinity was dancing in every cell of his; that he can therefore be fearless.

Meet hatred with your innate Prema (Love); meet grief with innate Joy; meet anger with the shield of Shaanthi (Inner Peace).

You are bound to win. Loka is Lokesha: "the Universe is the Universal Principle" manifested in multifarious particulars. Man is Maadhava (God) in miniature. The human body has been acquired as a gift in return for the meritorious lives spent by you in the past. The nature of man is genuinely Divine, in the past, present and future, for ever. There was never a time when it was not.

To plead that one has no time for spiritual Saadhana of this type is sheer sloth, sheer cowardice; for, it is an endeavour that can co-exist with other activities and even fertilise those activities into fruition. There is nothing to be gained, except awareness of what already is. Simply BE; that is the state of Bliss, of Peace and Truth and Love.

11-5-1971

Do not grieve, nor be the cause of grief. The very embodiment of Aanandha (God) is in you, as in others, as in all else. In spite of a multiplicity of containers, the contained is the same. That is the principle of Sath, Chith and Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss). The minutest atom, the mightiest star--both are basically one. All are, in truth, Brahman, Divine.

Sri Sathya Sai

23. The two poles

THIS was to be a gathering exclusively for Office Bearers of the Units of the Sathya Sai Seva

Organisation in Maharaashtra; but, what have we to confer only among ourselves? The Organisation is designed to promote the welfare and progress of all and so, I am glad devotees and volunteers are also participating.

You must be clear about the objectives of the Organisation of which your unit is a limb; for, without having the goal clear in the mind, how can the journey end in success? Whatever you do--

--reading, writing, meditating, doing Bhajan (group singing), going on pilgrimage---can be valid and worthwhile, only if you have the objective clearly in view. You must know why certain things have to be done, and why certain other things have to be avoided.

Imagine you are on a journey to, say Prashaanthi Nilayam. En route, you have to change trains at Guntakal, from the broad gauge line to the metre gauge line, isn't it? You wish to take a little rest and you go to a Travellers Bungalow. The man in charge asks you. Whence do you come?

Where do you wish to go?" Now, if you have forgotten the answers to these universal queries, how awkward will it be! You can neither go forward, nor, return!

You are now an individual, contained in this body or that; you are moving every moment towards your home, the place where you came from, the Aathma, the Param-aathma (The Supersoul of which your own soul is but a spark). The Upanishaths ask the questions, Whence, Whither, Who, Why; and, when you pine for the answers, they teach you the solutions and advise you to practise the disciplines for experiencing the answers and their truth yourselves.

God acknowledges His devotee as His friend. Know whence and whither, both. The letter must have the address of the person from whom it has come, so that it could be returned to the sender, in case of need; it must, of course, have the address of the person to whom it is to be delivered for, else, why write at all? Now, since the letter, that is, 'your life,' is not aware of whence and whither, it rots in the post box only, or perhaps, it might reach the Dead Letter Office! Why waste lives like that? Learn from the Guru, and move forward, from the box to bliss. Everyone has the basic urge to imbibe the immortality from which he has fallen off! Some, like flies flit from fair to foul, are swooped for their pains!

They are avoided as disease carriers; they do not give ease to those that contact them; they only tease and torment. Others are like bees, seeking only honey from fragrant flowers, and fructifying, them in return for the sweetness they derive. Every being has a latent, basic urge to know the Supreme Self, the Paramaathma.

Some persons boast that they are devotees of God, that God has blessed them in such and such ways that God's Grace has helped them thus and thus; do not give ear to these ego centred pretenders. You become a devotee when God has acknowledged your devotion. The ego is the greatest obstacle in the way of such acceptance. God has said, You madh bhakthah sa me priyah:

"He who is my devotee is my friend!" Why has God mentioned both 'devotee' and 'friend'? The devotee reveres God, he fears God, and so, cannot be quite close to Him. A friend is most close to Him. But, if one is only a friend and not a devotee, there is the danger that he might take liberties with Him, which might not be pardoned. Freedom must not turn into licence!

Everyone has to guard land, faith and wife

Bheeshma was a mighty warrior; he was famous for the grandeur and glory that he won, through both detachment and Divine Grace. In the vicinity of his kingdom, Bheeshma once had to encounter a person called Gadhaa-dhara. This man had undergone severe austerity and received from God as a reward for pleasing Him, an invincible discus Chakra (wheel) so people hailed him as Chakradhara (the wielder of the Divine Wheel-weapon)! The fellow had become so insolent and wicked that he wrote a most insulting missive to Bheeshma, on the death of Shanthanu, Bheeshma's Father. Chakradhara wrote, "Either send the widowed queen to my palace zenana or, meet me in battle!" Who could tolerate such insults and keep quiet? It is said that everyone has to guard Dharani (land), Dharma (faith) and Dharmapathni (wife). Bheeshma said to himself, "What is my life worth, if I cannot avenge this insult, if I cannot save my mother's honour?" But, the Brahmanas of the court advised him that he should engage himself in combat with Chakradhara only after ten days; for, during the ten-day-period after the death of his father, he had ceremonial pollution and during that period, he should not handle the divine missiles he had with him. He could not utter then, the holy manthras which can activate them. "Finish the religious rites to appease the departed soul of your father and then, destroy the foe in battle," they advised. Bheeshma realised the propriety of their counsel and sent a message to Chakradhara, inviting him for the fray ten days later! Skill reinforced by Divine Grace can work wonders But, Chakradhara could not delay that long; he was itching for victory; he directed his newly won weapon at Bheeshma! But, a wonderful thing happened! That Chakra which had come from the hand of God would not harm a son who was doing his scriptural duty, performing the Vedhic rites for the manes! It rotated in the sky for ten days, waiting for the funeral-pollution period to end! When one is devoted to his duty, one is surrounded by such powerful protecting influences that no injurious force dare approach. That is the way Grace operates. Personal skill when reinforced by Divine Grace, can work wonders, as happened when the horde of monkeys successfully built a bridge across the sea to Lanka. One has to go through the act of expiation A study of the lives of the great men of past ages in Bhaarath will reveal that they were candid enough and brave enough to confess their sins before everyone. They were also willing and ready to accept punishment for the sin committed. They sought to know what the Praayachittha (expiation of sin) was---the means of purifying and cleansing the erring mind. They went through the process with a sense of contrition and contentment. The Horse that was let loose and allowed to wander through whatever realm it willed, a preliminary to the Ashwamedha yaaga " (Horse-sacrifice) resolved upon by the Paandava brothers, was being guarded by Arjuna, who followed it at a certain distance. When the horse passed through Manipur (ruled by Babhruvaahana, his own son born, of Chithraangada), the King held it captive in his stables! Arjuna marched towards the City; when Babhruvaahana heard of his arrival and knew that he was his father, he went forward with all his courtiers, kinsmen and priests to give him the welcome due to the father. But, Arjuna invited him for combat; he said, "Having stopped the horse, you must fight and not cringe before its guardian. Earn it on the field of battle; do not be a blot on the fair name of Kshathriya!" His mother too urged him not to shirk his duty, whoever be the guardian of the horse or whatever his kinship with him. When the call of war is heard, no Kshathriya should creep back, she asserted. So Babhruvaahana went back and fought so valiantly with his own father that Arjuna was overwhelmed by the rain of sharp arrows. He fell dead on the ground, between the two armies! Babhruvaahana was plunged in agony. At that moment, a divine nymph, Uluupi by name, came upon the scene, and consoled the son "Do not grieve! This is but the play of Fate. It is written that Arjuna should suffer death at the hands of his son, as an act of expiation for his mis-deeds. Now, touch him and he will rise up alive!" This was done and Arjuna regained consciousness. The two entered the City happily and were welcomed by Chithraangadha. Arjuna himself had asked for this calamity, in order to cleanse his mind. During the battle of Kurukshethra, he had killed his own guru and grandfather, Bheeshma, and repented pathetically for that: sin. He had invoked, a punishment on himself for the wrong-- "To redeem me from this sin, may I die at the hands of my own son!" Constant cleansing of the heart is essential, so that the spiritual journey might be smooth and without accidents. Serve your family as a duty You are all nuts, bolts and screws. If even the tiniest screw thinks, "I am just a small screw; what does it matter if I am not cent per cent efficient?" a fatal accident can easily happen! Do not neglect your duty wherever it lies. Have self-control, so that: the senses may not run amuck.

Serve your family as a duty, not with more attachment than is due. Frogs croak all round the tank, sitting in hundreds along the shore, when the tank is full; when it goes dry, not a single one is seen! Kinsmen crowd in when you are in affluence; when your riches are drained by misfortune, you are left severely alone!

There is the story of a rich man, who was being led away on death to the world beyond. He pleaded with his angelic escort that he may be allowed to halt a while, and turn back once. They allowed him to do so; he turned and had a good look, then, he said, "Well, now I am ready; lead me on!" The messengers were surprised at his strange willingness to accompany them; they asked him what had happened to make him so resigned and determined. He said, "I amassed vast wealth through sin and crime; I fed and fostered a large brood of friends and kinsmen. I looked back to see whether at least one among them is now following me, eager to help in my sorrowful plight! Not a single one is worried about me. I shall now walk forward to wherever you take me."

God is the truest friend. A sage has described the spiritual family, which will never hurt you with such ingratitude. Truth is the father; Love is the mother. Knowledge is the son; Peace is the daughter. Devotees are brothers; Yogees are the friends. Cultivate this type of family; you can be happy in their midst. Bliss obliterates all worries and anxieties Sathya Sai Seva Samithis have been formed, to enable you to achieve peace and joy. They are not to be used for advertisement of myself or yourself. Some people ask. "Why rules and regulations in a spiritual organisation?" How can progress be achieved without disciplining the mind? Regulation, strict regulation, is essential up to a certain stage of individual development.

The aeroplane runs on wheels for some length on the ground, before it takes off into the air. You may ask, "Why wheels for air-plane?" So too, when you reach a certain height in spiritual saadhana, rules and regulations can be folded up, as the pilot folds up the wheels when up in the air. While serving others through the Samithi, do not forget to do some Saadhana for your own advancement. Paraseva (service of others) is the negative pole; Aathma-seva (service to oneself) is the positive pole; and when they meet, the Flash of Aanandha (Bliss) emanates. Bliss obliterates all worries, all fears, and all anxiety. March on to that consummation, through Saadhana and Seva. That is my Blessing to each of you.

Bombay, 13-5-1971

God does not reside in the head; He is Hridhayavaasi, the dweller in the heart. Keep the heart cool, pure and soft---as the moonlight is on the Guru Poornima Day. For this, your mind has to be cleansed by the mind only.

Just as you shape an iron sickle or axe with an iron hammer, the mind is the shaper and shaped, both.

The power behind the mind which helps it to shape it well, is Faith in God. That is why it is declared that one must have faith in God, holy places, the scriptures, the manthra, the soothsayer, the drug and the teacher.

Cultivate that Faith and everything else will be added unto you.

Sri Sathya Sai

24. You are all I

YOU must live in conformity with the basic ideals of our Organisation.

The Seva to which this Organisation invites you is the very first step in the growth of the Spirit. Seva is the manifestation of your willingness to work, irrespective of reward; for, work is dedicated as worship. That attitude robs egoism of its sting and instils in the mind the Divinity inherent in all creation. Faith in God is the very taproot of all spiritual activity, either through this Organisation or otherwise.

There shall be a system and an order in the Organisation---every unit has to follow the All India pattern. No State can arrange things in its own way. Mysore, Kerala, Gujarat, all States have to keep before them the same pattern, and not venture on separate individual types of units. Every unit must respect and follow the rules and regulations laid down at the All India Conference, from year to year.

This Conference is just a chance for you to move a day or two in good company, and charge your batteries, for further stages of the journey to God. When one is added to one, it becomes two;

when one is placed by the side of another one, it reads as eleven! That is the measure of Sathsang, the companion-ship of the wise and the good. All these petty ones must end up in that

ONE. That is the ultimate goal, the journey's end. The Vedhas direct man through karma (activity) into upaasana (worship) and finally into inaana (the wisdom that breaks the shackles).

When you surrender, give yourself fully The leaders in each unit, that is to say, the President, Vice-President, the Secretaries and others, must themselves walk aright and be right. They must all join the Nagarasankeerthan, the choral singing along the roads of the village or the town in the early dawn. If the rich and the influential sit at home and ask the rest to go and take part in the sankeerthan, we do not need them as Presidents or Office-bearers. No unit must depend on such people, however rich they happen to be. Money comes and goes; but mortality, once come, grows! Try to break the coconut, with the fibre on! It is an impossible task. You have to take out the shelled nut from inside the packing fibre; then, if you hit at the shell, the kernel becomes available for use.
Remove the fibrous cover, sensual desires, so that you can get at the kernel of spiritual joy.
Many of you declare even before Me that you have surrendered everything to My Will; this is mere verbiage. Your mind is not your own! You are its plaything, tossed about, as it fancies and frolics! How then can you claim to have given it over to Me? You have to give yourself, fully over, when you surrender. Nothing should be held back. And, what is it that you can call your own, which you can give Me? Your offering of homage is but pouring back into the Kaaveri river the waters of the Kaaveri! There is nothing creditable in that.
The weighing machine on which you stand and exult that you have put on ten pounds since the last weighing in, laughs at your exultation! It chuckles within itself, 'Yes! When death overtakes you, you will be ten pounds heavier for the undertakers!' You have come into the World, which is a Dharmakshethra, abode of righteousness; so be righteous.
Practise what you direct others to do Your destiny is not achieving the peak pleasure, but climbing the peak of Bliss. Dhaya (compassion) and dharma (morality) will take you higher and higher, until the summit. So, practise these qualities even in your smallest acts, to the best of your capacity. You cannot always oblige; but can you not talk, obligingly? You can; but, you don't! The tongue has the extra power to harm and hurt; so, you must exercise extra control over it. Do not pain anyone through your words; spread Love; be full of Love, If you cannot love man, how can you hope to love God?
Develop indifference towards accumulation of wealth or power.

Dhritharaashtra held on to his kingdom and his hundred sons; finally, he had to lose his throne and live on in misery as the lone survivor of the dynastic holocaust! Once there was a big quarrel between Lakshmi, the Consort of God Naaraayana, and the Goddess of Wealth and Inaana (knowledge)-which was the Intellect of Naaraayana; they began to argue that each was superior to the other. Wealth was more useful, said Lakshmi; without knowledge, wealth is a danger, said the Intellect. But Naaraayana intervened and said both are either good or bad, according to the use man puts them to!
Use the office you hold in the Units to the best advantage, namely, to overcome your ego, to inspire others in the Godward path and to relieve distress. Don't go through the routine of bhajan, dhyaana and Nagarasankeerthan, because you have to; or, because someone else will usurp your Office, if you do not stick on. Share it with others, act from the depths of your hearts.
Do not indulge in mere talking. Practise what you direct others to do, asserting that it is beneficial.
When motives are purer knowledge will be pure Merge in God, submerge your mind in Divine activity; 'leeyathe gamyathe ithi lingah': that in which all merge, that to which all proceed is Linga. God is called 'chittha chora' (the thief who steals hearts); when you know that he does so because he likes hearts, it is your duty to keep the hearts dean, so that He will be more pleased at His booty. That 'thief' is your only well wisher.
The rest are interested in what you leave behind when you die; they search for your 'will' and 'insurance papers!'.
Youth, wealth, reputation, status, authority---all are subject to quick ups and downs. There was one young man who wasted much of his father's income and lived through College a number of years, as an M.S.M. student! That is to say, failing in the March Examinations, appearing again for the September Examinations, again appearing in March---M.S.M. for short! At last, out of sheer disgust at his consistent feeble-mindedness, the University gave him a degree and got rid of him! When proposals for his marriage were mooted, he insisted that the bride must be a degree holder, a graduate! And a graduate she was! He reclined on an easy chair and sang, "My life is entirely happy now." He asked his wife "Get me a cup of hot coffee!"; but, she replied, "I am as much a graduate as you are; why should I alone prepare the cup of coffee? Come into the kitchen and make your coffee for yourself." Then, he sang another tune, "My life is entire darkness, Oh."

When everything goes well, it is heaven when things go awry, it is hell! The same event is heaven today, hell tomorrow. Until your hunger is appeased, food is desirable; when it is appeased, food is a nuisance! When motives are pure, knowledge will be pure; when knowledge is pure, liberation is ensured. Expansion is Love, contraction is Death. For example, consider the feeding of the poor, which many units are now doing. You arrange the feeding, once a year, on the Annual Day of your Unit; but, is that enough? Does it solve the problem? Do they eat but one meal a year? They have to eat, as you do, many times a day. So, let Me ask you: Instead of feeding hundreds one day in the year, let the housewife keep aside every day, when she takes out rice for cooking the food for the family, a handful, saying, "This is for the offering that Swaami accepts," and at the end of the week, feed at home three or four hungry people with that 'offered' rice. This is the real Anna-Samidh arpana--"offering food as fuel in the holy fire of hunger." Old clothes can be collected and given to the poor, when new clothes are not available or not within your means. Children outgrow their clothes soon, keep them by and give them to the children in the poorer areas. Expansion is Love; contraction is Death!

The Sathya Sai Organisation and its units must not collect money or material from those outside the membership. Fund collection is as much opposed to this movement as fire is to water. If you yield on this point, spiritual advance will perish. Let only members contribute; do not ask all and sundry, or anyone who is not a member of the Samithi (unit). In Mysore State there are some who distribute amrith, vibhuuthi (holy ash) and other articles announcing that they are showering from my pictures at their places; they do this free for some weeks, and later, they start begging for money, like any common mendicant! This is sin, to ask so and also to give so. Devotees should keep far away from such places and persons. Avoid pomp, exhibition and boasting. Visualise God in your hearts; why, go to such place or outside yourselves to see Him? In some other places, they announce that I make Myself present and communicate through writings on rangoli powder etc.! I do not do such things, if I come at all to any place. I come directly, so that you see Me. I do not speak or answer through another person or another medium! Carry on Naamasmaran, japa, bhajan (remembrance, repetition and singing of God's name) in your own home; there is no special call for you to come to this place or that. Wherever you are, whatever name you like, whatever Forum pleases you, I bless you, if your heart is pure. Avoid pomp, exhibition, boasting; be simple, sincere and sweet. Cleanse your home of falsehood, hypocrisy and cruelty and then proceed to start Baalavikaas (Children's Club). Or else, the children will catch "infection!" Do not import into the Sathya Sai Organisation political faction-mongering, group-formation, scandal-spreading, and vote catching, in order to win positions of authority or oust others from them. Do not create splits and parties among the devotees in order to establish yourselves over others! Even when you are slandered, you should not lose balance. Put up with slander and scandalising talks. Anger is the chief enemy of Saadhana, as Vishwaamithra discovered. One attack of anger exhausts three months of health and efficiency. Before encountering Jaraasandha in open battle, Krishna enraged him nine times; time after time, getting nearly caught and escaping from his hold; these bouts of rage so weakened him that, when the final bout took place, he could be easily overpowered! Be vigilant everywhere, at all times. Contentment is heaven; grief is hell; anger is the foe; calmness is the armour; compassion is the comrade. You repeat Shaanthi three times, don't you? It is to encourage peace in the human, godly and natural milieu in which you have to live; also to develop peace, in the body, mind and intellect!

There is no visible Master for those who are part of Organisations run in the name of Raama or Krishna; but, in this Organisation the Master is here, available for help, advice and direction. You cannot behave in accordance with your whims and wishes here. You have to be vigilant everywhere and at all times. Discard the ego and serve. Don't go about with extended hand, and humiliate yourselves. Ask Me, when you need any help. Extend your hand only for Grace from God. Ask Grace as of right, not in a grovelling style. Ask, as the child asks the father; feel that God is nearest and dearest. You are the reflections, the images; I am the bimba (object), the Object so reflected. Can there be any question of difference between the object and its images? You are all I. I am all you. I know I am the Aathma; you believe you are the body! You are sugar dolls; I am the sugar. Reverse any Name; the reverence reaches Me, for, I answer to all Names. Denigrate any individual; it affects Me; for all individuals are expressions of My Will.

Dharwar, 14-5-1971

Detachment, Faith and Love---these are the pillars on which Shaanthi rests. Of these, faith is crucial. For without it, Saadhana is an empty rite. Detachment alone can make saadhana effective, and Love leads quickly to God.

Faith feeds the agony of separation from God; detachment canalises it along the path of God; Love lights the way.

God will grant you what you need and deserve; there is no need to ask, no reason to grumble. Be content. Nothing can happen against His Will.

Sri Sathya Sai

25. Who am I?

BEING a human is itself a great piece of good fortune; and, getting born in India, with its precious heritage of spiritual discipline is a blessing for which you must feel grateful indeed!
Four items of enquiry have been emphasised for ages by the sages of India, who built up the heritage of which you are proud today. They are: Dheham, Naaham, Koham and Soham. First, the Body where you dwell, in which you are encased. It is called, meaningfully, dheham, that is to say, that which is combustible, liable to be burnt. How can anyone feel attachment to such a transient tinsel? It is subject to growth and decay; it is the harbour of worms and viruses, of foulness and illness. It is subject to impulses and the impact of passion and emotion. It is the seat of disease and unrest; of fancy and fantasy and fear. It calls on you enticingly to invest yourselves wholly in its care and cure. It entangles you so much in its coils that you forget you are its master, as you are the master of the car in which you ride to office or the home to which you return from office.
When you delve deep into the transience of the dheham you get well rooted in the next idea: Naaham, I am not the Body, which I had mistakenly taken to be me!
Naaham means, Not-I. The dheham is naaham, the Body is Not-I. I am the owner, the temporary user, occupier of this instrument or bundle of instruments; that is all.

Man is a spark of the Divine

People keep on asking others, "Who are you? What is your Name?
Where are you from? Whither are you bound?"---but, they seldom ask these questions of themselves or try to discover answers to these mysteries! When you get that thirst, you are in the Koham stage. Koham means, "Who am I?" "I am a highly evolved ape," say some. "I am a conglomerate of chemicals," say others. "I am a contraption with a limited life, I begin at birth and end at death," say some. "I am. an eternal entity, and this is but one sojourn of mine here on earth," say others. 'I' is a false limitation imposed by ignorance; "I am a wave of the ocean and so I am the Ocean itself," declare others! These last announce that the I is Soham, 'I am He.' He, meaning the eternal,

Universal Absolute, the Brahman, the Boundless, Beginningless, Endless entity. When that axiom is meditated upon and made one's own deepest experience, man has the highest Bliss, the Bliss of merging into the Aathman from which he felt long he had been displaced.

Man is a spark of the Divine; he must manifest in every activity of him, the Divine. Activity is his lot; he cannot exist without the physical activity of breathing, or the mental activity of thought. With every breath, he must inhale the experience of Soham; with every thought, he must express and experience his Divine affiliation. God is Love; Love is the Divinest quality that man can cultivate and confer on himself. Be born in Love, die in Love; live in Love. That is to say, emerge from God and merge in God; be the wave on the Ocean of Love. You should not die; you should merge and fulfil yourself. That is the destiny, that is the destination.

You are not limited by any name; a baby has no name stuck on to it when it is born. The name is a label fixed later, for the sake of social convenience. But, you start identifying yourself with the label! You answer giving your name, when you are asked, Who? The name separates; it distinguishes; it announces the divisive characteristics of language, religion, caste, race, etc. Go beyond the name to the individual, beyond the individual to the God who is installed in the heart.

Then, kinship is cognised and Love streams forth! Spend the years of life, the wherewithal you earn or possess, in the service of others who are in distress. Love grows on such service. Service is the sincerest form of adoration of God.

Get beyond the horizon of body, mind & intellect When man moves away from his moorings, hate spreads far and wide. In the past ages (the Kritha, Thretha and Dwaapara Ages), the fumes of hatred poisoned human relations off and on;
 but, at no time were they so insidious and so infiltrating as now. Now, the evil has contaminated relations in the family, the village, the community, the school, the State, the nation and the international organisations. In no field of human activity is it absent! When the members of the same family are engaged in faction, how can the nation be free from it and how can national affairs be conducted in the spirit of tolerance and mutual cooperation? It is wrong to spend the days in the prison of dualities, the see-saw of grief and joy, pain and pleasure, success and defeat. Get beyond the horizon of body, mind and intellect, and be One with the Vastness. Brahman means the Vast, the expanse without horizons. God is the inner Truth of all, content of every body. Peace is what everyone seeks; but, it can never be secured from the outside world. Alexander had no peace; Mohammed of Ghazni had no peace. The millionaires are harassed by fear and anxiety. Accumulation of riches or power cannot endow peace. Peace can come only from the fountain of peace, within. An old woman dropped her needle, while mending a tear in her saree. She had poor eyesight; so, she could not locate the needle in the pail where she sat. So, she went under the street light on the road and looked searchingly on the patch of light; some boys returning from school saw her plight and offered to help. They asked her what she had dropped and what she was searching for. She replied, "I dropped my needle in the pail of my hut; but, it is dark there! I am half blind. There is some little light here; I can see better. Therefore, I am searching for it here!" The boys laughed and told her, "Grannie! How can you get your needle back from here? Search for it where you have lost it!" You have lost peace, vision and wisdom in the region of the self; how can you get them back, if you seek for them, in the world, which can be contacted only by the senses? Search where you have lost them; in your heart! There you will recover them; for, they are only attributes of the Divine, which is installed there. God is the inner Truth of all; He is latent, in this vast assembly. He is patent in this Universe, which is His vesture. You talk fluently about this; but, your actions are not moulded by that inspiration. The food on the plate must reach the stomach; its calories must reach every limb and organ in the body. So too, the sense of the Divine must be infused into every word, deed and thought. You may have a chalice of ambrosia by your side; you may know its composition, fragrance, colour, density, etc.; but, unless you place a spoonful or a drop on your tongue, you have not fulfilled the purpose of winning it. Go is the content of every body that you see around you; but you do not make any effort to know Him! Each country is but a room in the mansion of God. Serve others with reverence---that is the easiest and best method to cognise the Divine content in each. Since all are His forms, His sparks, His children, feel that kinship with every community; pray for the welfare and prosperity of all mankind, whatever the political boundaries which might shut them from one another. Until recently, there was no Pakistan. It is a creature of political strategy, of human weakness, or foible. Do not think of them as anything but artificial arrangements; let not your love be curtailed. Pray that tolerance and understanding shall prevail and that love and cooperation hold sway, more and more among mankind, whatever appellation may be---Russian, Chinese, Pakistani, Indian or American. Each country is but a room in the mansion of God. Small minds select narrow roads; expand your mental vision and take to the broad road of helpfulness, compassion and service. Pain and grief toughen your moral fibre. Saadhakas (aspirants) of Self-realisation are like mansions; they have to lay brick, and raise the wall higher and higher. That is the upward vision. Others are akin to well-diggers; they get lower and lower; that is the downward vision. Be like the spire, piercing the sky. Shower Aanandha on others; lead them along the godly way; be an example in sincerity and earnestness. Partake in Bhajan and Naamasankeerthan (singing of God's Names); share in the singing loudly and with enthusiasm. Some ask Me, "Why should we sing aloud? Isn't it enough if we feel it in the silence of the mind?" I know all this is mere dry Vedhaantha! They are prepared to advise others in the Samithi, but, are unwilling to practise the advice themselves! Two friends were remarkable for their sloth; one of them had to catch a train at 3 A.M. So, he asked his friend to wake him up at 2.30 A.M. itself, for he had no faith in himself. The friend was even more of a sloth! He wanted that he should be awakened by his friend at 2.15 A.M. so that he could wake the same fellow at 2.30! How can anything be accomplished by such men?

Develop a calm unruffled serenity of mind. Welcome pain and grief, for they toughen the moral fibre, they reveal hidden sources of courage and hardihood. They appear to affect your career; but, the real 'you' is unaffected. The real 'you' is the 'I' that wakes, dreams and sleeps. While asleep, you are unaware whether you are a man, a bird, a beast or a tree!

Curious assortment of family members of Shiva Here, at Dhaarwar and Hubli, we have a large number of Shivabhakthas, devoted to the Shiva aspect of Divinity. Shiva is the supreme exemplar of serenity! Shiva, according to the Puraanas has a curious assortment of family members. Yet, each one is so calm and without agitation, that the Divine Family exists in peace and concord. Shiva has snakes on His arms, round His neck, on His head, around His waist! One of his sons, Kumaara rides on a peacock, which attacks snakes; another rides on a mouse, which the snakes feed on! One son has the head of the elephant, which whets the appetite of the Lion, which is the vehicle used by Dhurga, the Consort of Shiva, who is so inseparable that she is the left half of the body of Shiva Himself. Nor is the Lion friendly by nature to the Bull, which the Lord Shiva Himself has as His vehicle! Shiva has Fire on the Central Point of His Brow, and Water, the river (Ganga) on His head, incompatibles both!

Imagine how loving, how co-operative the various components have to be, to render life in Kailaash smooth and happy!

It all depends on the mind and its proper discipline. The weapon of Love will disarm every opponent. Love begets Love; it will be reflected back, it will have only Love as reaction, Shout 'Love'; the echo from the other person's heart will also be 'Love'.

Walk on the path of righteousness, dharma. That is what all appreciate. Dharma means morality, the control of passions and emotions and directing them along beneficial channels. If you have no greed or hatred, you will get good sleep, also. There is no need to swallow sleeping tablets!

Now, life has become artificial, there is no art or heart in life! It has become mere 'fishlal' type of life---for, consider how fish stinks, though all its life is spent in water! Better to be mad for God, than be mad for money Wake up every day, to the singing of the Glory of God for if God does not exist, what is it that exists? Live every day, in that joy, with that inspiration as your companion. Some Samithis have reported that they are beginning Nagara-sankeerthan one day in the week, or two days in the month! This is no sincere Saadhana. What do you lose, how much of ancestral property you have to sell(!), if you have Nagarasankeerthan every morning? Have it every day, immerse yourself in that discipline and imbibe the bliss. Do not fear people who call you mad! When you know and when your heart tells you that it is a joyful experience, carry on, in spite of calumny and criticism. It is far better to be mad for god than be mad for money, or wife and children. If only more people suffer from this madness, the world will be a much happier place!

Thyaagenaike Amrruthathwam Aanashuh: "It is by renunciation alone that immortality can be experienced!" Renounce the petty pleasures and tread the path towards the Supreme Aanandha which is God. You say, "enjoy"; but, it is when you "end joy", that you can really enjoy. These petty joys must end; the pursuit of tawdry tinsel should stop; then, the mind will fix itself on the highest joy. I find here a vast ocean of piety and spiritual aspiration. When there are such large numbers of seekers in Dhaarwar, why is the city overclouded with anxiety and dread? Carry to every door the name of God and let the clouds be illumined by Love and Reverence.

Let every street in the towns, every village in the State, ring with the adoration of the Almighty, every sunrise sing of Raama, Ishwara, Shankara or Krishna---any Name is effective, provided it is suffused with the Divine Essence Love. Branches, twigs, leaves, flowers and fruits may appear to be different in colour, feel, taste, smell, etc., but, all are products of the earth, drawing sustenance from the soil and the Sun. Live together in love; live in peace; live in service. I bless that you succeed in this noble endeavour.

Dhaarwar, 15-5-1971

You come to Prashaanthi Nilayam, as cars come to a workshop. You must go out with a new paint, with all the damaged and loose bolts and nuts replaced, with the engine cleaned and reconditioned, every part spick and span, beautiful, trouble free, in perfect trim, ready to speed on the journey that lies ahead. Every bad habit has to be replaced by a good one, no trace of vice must be allowed to persist, the heart must be drained of all egoism. This is the fruit of this pilgrimage that you must acquire. Let this be your resolution.

Sri Sathya Sai

26. Raajas as Raajarishis

YOU call your association, the Royalaseema Rajula Sangham. What is a Sangham? Sangham must not instill an idea of separateness from others; on the other hand, it must emphasise the necessity of inter-dependence, inter-dependence of something like the limbs of an organism, each doing its share in the common task. The Vedhas declare that the four castes have four complementary functions, like the head, the hands, the thighs and the feet; the safety and security, the strength and efficiency of one depends on those of the other three! Each caste is in charge of some beneficial task and ideal. It is dedicated to some useful way of life, which is essential for society as a whole; each has rights as well as obligations. The rights are based on and are proportionate to the discharge of the obligations. If the ideal is neglected, the caste lowers itself- if it is discharged, it raises itself to the level of the higher ideal. Every caste has the obligation to promote the spiritual progress of its components, through the fullest use of all facilities available. In past ages, the Raajas were not merely rulers, but, they raised themselves to the stage of Raajarishis (royal sages), by incessant yearning, systematic austerity and steady faith. They were Kshathriyas (fighters for righteousness), devoted to the protection of the country and its culture, the prevention of any possible invasion by which the culture will be dangered. They had such sensitive hearts they sought relief in renunciation, as Gauthama Buddha did; or, in enquiry as Janaka did; or, in the sweet simple ways of bhakthi, as Ambarisha did. Today, neither the love of culture nor the love of God has maintained its ancient level of strength; the inroads of alien ways and culture have damaged the ideals of every caste. Pray to God to help you realise Him. People argue that religions and the system of communities and castes have to go; but, so long as man has variegated aptitudes and skills, and capacity to learn and grow, they are inevitable. You cannot abolish faith in God, or in the mystery and might of the Unseen. You cannot also abolish distinctions and differences, castes and communities. What can be destroyed, what needs to be destroyed, is the hatred between these natural groups. You can have an association of the Raaja (warrior) caste or community, but, don't run it in a spirit of hostility.

Use the association to pool resources for advancement of the boys and girls of the community.

That is a good reason for the formation of your Sangham.

The Divine has in its vision all mankind; it cannot be bound by the limits of one caste or one creed. This Avathaar (Divine Incarnation) might have taken birth in a particular community, but it has come for the weak, the diseased, the distressed, the downtrodden, the devoted, the divinely oriented, among all mankind. You describe yourself wrongly as A-naatha (without-a-guardian)!

For, to guard you and foster you, there is God, He is ever ready to respond to prayer, to virtue, to goodness. God is the only A-naatha, for He has no naatha (guardian). He is the guardian of the Universe! No one can control Him or command Him or claim to guide Him]

Every being who is handicapped by hunger has the right to ask God for food! He has inflicted hunger; so, it is His duty, His pleasure to provide the food, which can assuage it! So, you have also the right to pray that He helps you realise Him. That is the vidhya (education), which you must encourage among yourselves. The schools today aim at making children fit for factory, farm or office; they get the skill for clinging to jobs. But, they are not taught to till their hearts, to face the fact of misery and grief, to take up the office of the servant of God or of a pilgrim on the Godward path. In the hostels for students that you are proposing to establish, encourage activities through which love, compassion and the spirit of service are cultivated. That alone can justify the labour and sacrifice of the workers on behalf of this association.

Ananthapur, 21-6-1971

Have this so inscribed on your heart--the axiom that "serving others is meritorious, that harming others or remaining unaffected and idle while others suffer, is sin."

Sri Sathya Sai

27. The seeds of a University

BHAARATH is the land that won renown in continents across the seas for her heroic achievements in the material as well as spiritual fields, that swept away the mighty cohorts of her imperial conquerors, that is the nursery of famous scholars and investigators into the mysterious realms of the mind, that is upholding high traditions of music, dance, painting, sculpture and architecture that have their roots in the ancient days of adventure and achievement; this is the heritage that the sons and daughters of this country have to feed and foster. This is no weakling's task. It requires a generation of mothers, like Kaushalya who brought up Raama, Seetha who fostered the charming twins, Lava and Kusha, Thaaraabai who filled the heart of Shivaji with the earnestness and enthusiasm of epic heroes, and a Putthalibai who shaped a Gandhiji out of her hesitant and honest son. These mothers took the children on their laps and through song and lullabies, through gesture and good stories, while feeding and rocking them to sleep, they poured into the precious vessels of their hearts the nectar of the Vedhas, the Upanishaths and the various Yogas of Bhaarith. They charged them with power and charted the road to eternal joy and peace. Maa (mother) was the first word the children uttered and the last that man gasps. She teaches the first steps for the child's unsure feet, and she sets it on the long journey towards Liberation. The process of education has become a trade This Day we are inaugurating the new buildings for the College dedicated to this purpose of having such maas (mothers) for the revival of the Dharma, which Bharath and the world so urgently need today. Today, all departments of life are reverberating with the raucous noise of anxiety and fear, uncertainty and insecurity. The main purpose of life is the acquisition of Aanandha, and the sharing of that Aanandha with others. This has gone under; and a vast new number of desires, quite unrelated to the chief aim of the Vyakthi (individual) who has to make his Divinity patent, is emerging, like lava from the subterranean fire! The Guru warns and waylays; but, his words are not heeded. Man loathes the law and loves the lie; he gives ear to evil and invites iniquities on himself! Education does not seem to improve his plight in any manner, or to any extent. The schools and colleges, once revered by the entire population as Temples of Saraswathi, the Goddess of Learning, as a means of attaining the supreme state of self-realisation, have degenerated into temples for the Goddess of Wealth! For securing admission into the schools and colleges, money is demanded; contributions are sought. For the payment of a sum, the required attendance at classes will be certified as having been secured. A "pass" in the examination can also often be manipulated with the help of the purse. As a result of this decline in morality, discipline is reduced to shambles, character is devalued and the process of education has become a trade. As Shrimathi Saraswathi Girl said, degrees and diplomas have become worth while because they entitle you for jobs. They are begging bowls, with which you can clamour outside the doors of offices and factories. Make the home that children love to cherish Shrimathi Giri said that the misery of some unemployed women is more pitiable than that of their brothers. This situation has arisen because the real significance of education has been missed by the educated, educators and educatees! Education must strengthen the springs of Aanandha, Prema and Shaanthi (Bliss, Love and Peace) that are inherent in the heart; these should not be dried in the dusty years of study. Man is in essence a fountain of eternal joy, peace, love and devotion. Cultivate these, by precept, example and exercise, during the formative years Then, the educated will have security and sweetness as long as they live. Of course livelihood has to be earned; but, when, as happens now, both husband and wife attend office away from home, children grow on the laps of aayahs (nurse maids) and the shoulders of servants, learning their language and manners. The father and mother become casual strangers. When the food they eat is not prepared by loving hands and served with affectionate smiles, the savour disappears and the vibrations are often vile. The mother, as a teacher, attends school leaving off her natural role as a teacher of her own children! This is indeed a tragedy! The house where such parents live can never become the home that children love to cherish in memory. The securing of jobs cannot be allowed to overshadow the real purpose of education. Women have to cultivate the qualities of sacrifice and detachment, of virtue and wide vision, so that they can lovingly transform their mates and children into seekers and saadhaks, on the way to success. At present, Colleges are infected by anxiety and perplexity, discontent and illdiscipline, irreverence and futility; they have lost the status of temples of learning, where youth is shaped into self-reliant, contented and enterprising heroes; when I identified these defects, deficiencies and dangers, which are rampant in the country, I resolved upon this College in Raayalaseema, at Ananthapur. Gurukula atmosphere should be fostered

I am never satisfied with the declaration of intentions. I must taste the Aanandha (bliss) of putting them into action! I express my Love through every act, every intention of mine. More than floods of eloquence in praise of that intention and millions of words written in elaboration of the theme, I insist, by my own example, on immediate and complete fulfilment. This will be a Gurukul---a place where teachers and taught will grow together in love and wisdom, as close to the ideas of the hermitages of the past as possible under present conditions. Today is Guru-vaar. Thursday; it is also Guru-pournima, the Day set apart for adoration of the Guru (the Preceptor). It was mentioned just now that this must prove to be the nucleus of a Women's University---but, I am not enamoured of that prospect; I will be happy only when the Gurukula atmosphere is fostered and maintained, uncontaminated. Women must emerge from this College armed with deep-rooted virtue and firm faith in the ideals of woman-hood, laid down in our sacred texts. Then only can they, as mothers, mould their children as bright, beautiful, virtuous, strong citizens of the world. This is the only way out of the horror in which the world is simmering. India should regain the status as preceptor of mankind. Now, the education that is being given in schools for girls and in women's colleges helps only to make them 'desirable wives', not 'desirable mothers.' The role of the mother which is the natural, native and inescapable role is neglected; the subsidiary short-lived scintillation is given prominence. I am glad that the Hostel Building was inaugurated today by Shrimathi Saraswathi Giri, who provides the ideal I desire to hold forth before the girl-students who will be residing and studying in the Hostel, now and later in the coming years. The words she spoke about the dangers of imitating alien cultures, and the validity of the ancient mores of this land have to be remembered by them, as an inspiration. If those words are treasured and acted upon, India can regain the status she long held as the preceptor of mankind. India shone for centuries as the Karmabhoomi (land of sanctified activity) where each activity of man was ennobled by high purpose and the sense of dedication. She was therefore acclaimed as Yoga-bhoomi, the land where the people yearned for communion with God; she was revered as the Thyaaga-bhoomi, where the ideal of the mendicant monk, the naked fakir, the simple monarch counselled by the sage, was placed before the people through precept and example. At the present time, it is being forged into a Bhoga-bhoomi, the land of skyscrapers, airconditioning and tinned foods, an imitative, insurgent, indisciplined mass of humanity, pulled from its roots and transplanted in other soils. This is an insult to our past, a defiance of history. It is a sacrilege on the sanctity of time, the holiness of the human body and on the consecration which each activity can well become. Peace is the most priceless possession of man. The seed has been planted today; it has to sprout and spread as a tree, heavy with fruits. It has to confer security and sustenance to all. Shrimathi Saraswathi Giri said that, while she is happy that this great institution has come up in the town which is the place of her birth, she can get undiminished happiness only when all those who are poor are enabled to get food, clothing and housing. Of course, these are basic requirements for man; but let me ask, do people who have these---even a surfeit of them---enjoy mental peace? Are they free from anxiety, fear, malice and hate? Peace is the most priceless possession of man. It is the sign of a virtuous character, a willingness for service, a readiness to renounce, a calm spirit of resignation, an awareness of the evanescence of material wealth, of the cool agitationless lake of joy in the heart. You are all broiling in the Sun and I do not desire to cause further suffering; we shall gather again in the evening when I can speak to you at greater length on Guru Pournami and its meaning. Ananthapur, 8-7-1971. There are people who go about declaring that there is no God, because they are not able to see Him. They say that they have searched in space, on the way to the moon, and even on the moon but there was no sign of the Almighty. Can you, do you assert, that there are no roots for trees, that nothing feeds them or upholds them, from below? God feeds, sustains, holds firm--unseen. He can be seen by those who make the effort, along the lines laid down for the purpose, by those who have succeeded in experiencing Him. God is, as butter in milk, visible when concretised by saadhana (spiritual striving). God is the great Unseen, the vast Unknowable. Though you do not see the roots or know how far or how wide or deep they are clutching the earth, you pour water round that trunk, so that it may reach them, is it not? You expect that when the roots contact the water, the tree will yield fruit. Recognise, similarly, that there is God, as the very basis of Creation; pray to Him, and He will shower fruit.

Sri Sathya Sai

28. Radiate rays of Love

DIVYAATHMASWARUUPULAARA! (embodiments of Divine Self!)

This morning, you all shared in the exultation of the inauguration of the College Buildings, with endless Aanandha, boundless enthusiasm and hearts overflowing with gratitude and hope. Generally speaking, such functions everywhere are filled with three undesirable things: praise of oneself, condemnation of others and purposeless dry talk. But, what has to be said and sought in order to achieve better living and firmer joy is to be found in the sphere of the spirit. That alone can silently and steadily reform, from within, the evils that encompass the individual and society.

When we speak of society or community, we calculate numbers only; we picture groups of people, brought together by some thin filaments of affinity.

But, pay attention to the word used in Samskrith for society. We call it Samaaja; the syllable sama means same, equal, undifferentiated---that is the key to its meaning. People imbued with a sense of sameness, a sense of oneness, a feeling that each is but an image, a reflection of the same Divine Principle, they alone are entitled to be called a Samaaja, not others. It is the realisation of the One, which thought It blossoms into the many, does not lose its Uniqueness, because the many are but appearances, unreal impositions of name and form on the Real---this is the Adhwaitha experience. Samaaja prompts in the mind these subtle influences that lead to the adhwaitha goal. I-ness comes of the delusion of separateness; I-ness melts away, when the light of Reality dawns.

Enter boldly into the realm of fearless enquiry

In the word Guru, Gu indicates the darkness of the I-ness, (the separateness, the illusion of Many on the basis of the One, of the snake over the rope or garland on the ground in the dusk).

Ru, the second syllable means the removal of the illusion, the illumination that reveals the Brahman (rope) which put on the snake-cloak and caused fear and anxiety. When the real Guru reveals, the many merge in the one; when there is but One, how can fear enter? What is there to desire and acquire? On this Guru-pournami, reflect on these truths and decide to enter boldly into the realm of fearless inquiry.

What can the possession of canvas and paint do, if an artist with vision is not moved to paint?

What can the chisel and a lump of marble do with no image formed in the heart of a devoted sculptor? That vision and that image are the sparks of the Divine. You are all 'the Divine' packed in human skin and bone, the Aathma encased in the evanescent flesh.

Know this and you become fearless, happy without limit. Get rid of the ego- enclosure in which you now feel you are shut in; then, you are liberated from the non-existent prison(!) which now enfolds you as hard as existent one! This is the higher wisdom, the knowledge of the spirit; the lower one is that which adheres to the mind, which cleanses the mind and calms its agitations, which is earned by japa.

dhyana, naamasankeethan (repetition of holy Names or sacred formula, meditation and singing of God's Names) and such other meritorious activities.

I must tell you, however, that Seva (voluntary service) is a process through which the lower wisdom, and after that, even higher wisdom can be gained.

Investigate and discover your limitless core Seva can instil more intensely than any other activity, the sense of the basic ONE. In fact, 'the service rendered by the Seva dhal (voluntary service group) members not only from Andhra but from all over the country is something that I do not want to describe before you for, I will not be content with a mere description. There can be no higher thapas (austerity) than this, nothing more rewarding. Seva opens the eyes of man to the comprehensive unity of creation. When you open the lids, you see the world, the stars, the galaxies that are far out in the depths of space.

When you close them, the scene disappears; there is only gloom, emptiness. The eye reveals Him as the Universe, as Vastness, as Magnificence, as Order, as Beauty, as Power, as Vishwa-Viraatswaruupa

(Cosmic Divine Form)! It is as one picture that it appears; it is as one picture that it disappears! Dhrishti is srishtih. As you envision, so it becomes the nethra (eye) is the Shaasthra

(the Scripture that illumines). When you are aware only of your joys and sorrows, you are blind to the joys and sorrows of others; your eyes are closed! You are apart; the others are afar. There is no ONE. Disparate entities drift in the fog, frightened by every stump and shadow.

Samaajaseva means serving the sama (the ONE that makes the many same).

Education is essential, if man must be inspired by this high ideal of Seva as Saadhana (spiritual striving). Not the acquisition of information or skills, but the sublimation of impulses, emotions, and passions, the mastery of the wayward mind, the grounding of the individual in the eternal aathma (divine reality). You must be encouraged to investigate into your own reality and discover your limitless core. Do not entangle yourselves in the relatively real; anchor your life on the Absolute. That is the education needed. It will make you one with the Lord of the Universe.

You draw all the Love, Power and Wisdom therefrom. Unless you attain motherhood, you cannot plumb the depths of maternal affection; unless you become Divine, you cannot know the supreme ecstasy of God.

Be conscious that the body is your temporary abode

There is a standard with which everything has to be judged, some fixed, established, quantum which it must seek to achieve, if it must justify itself. Pramaana, it is called; pra means already laid down; maana means measure. What is the measure of man, already laid down? How has he to live, so that he does not demean his status? He has to be conscious all the time that his body and its equipment is his temporary abode; he is the eternal Divine, the aathma, apparently encaged in the physical cage, as the moon is apparently sunk in the pot of water!

Glimpses of this Truth will be vouchsafed to the pupils of this college--glimpses which will urge them on to further saadhana which will reveal its fullness. This College will contribute to the happiness and welfare of the nation, because mothers akin to the mothers famous in the epics and puraanas will transform the hearts of their children into heavens of peace and joy. The ideals we have set before ourselves will be translated into action, sincerely and swiftly.

The Vedhas declare that the mother and the father have to be revered as Divine; they must consider the children too as Divine, and foster the blooming of that Divine Principle. Whether one is doing it sincerely or not can be left to each one's conscience. You are the best judge of your sincerity. The mother's is the first face that the child sees; ma is the first syllable that its lips utter; it is also the last. The agony of the mother at the loss of a child is something that is inconsolable.

Be concerned with acquisition of equanimity

When Abhimanyu, the sixteen-year old son of Arjuna and Subhadhra was entrapped in a maze and slaughtered by the vengeful warriors of the Kaurava camp, Arjuna broke into tears and bewailed the loss. "Why should I battle for an empire, when the son who is to inherit the glory is gone?" he asked himself. He cursed, the war which killed the very beneficiaries of victory.

Subhadhra, the mother, called to mind that in the Thretha Yuga, when Raama ruled, no single mother was afflicted with this agony over a son who died when his parents were alive! She lamented the calamity of the Yuga and said, the shadow of the Kali Yuga had already darkened the Dwaapara Yuga, which was drawing to a close! But, it is wrong to ascribe to what is called the Time-spirit, the Yuga-dharma, the evils emanating from human weakness and wickedness.

The duty that each one owes to himself is to clear the heart of fear and grief, to fill it with Love and Dedication. You have no concern with the chronological divisions of Yugas; you have to be concerned with the psychological levels that you attain. You are most concerned with the acquisition of equanimity and Prashaanthi, that is all that matters. So, look upon all and everything as images of the One, namely, God. Every one, everything is His image. In Thamas, it is reflected as matter. In Rajas, it is reflected as Life. In Sathwa it is reflected as Divine. Feel thus; think thus; act thus. Then there is no greed, no lust, no hate, no malice. Do off this cloak of human-ness and shine in the splendour of the Divine which is your reality. See every one as Divine, not as the human roles they are playing.

Make service as worship of the Divine around you

In the eleventh year of their exile, when the four younger brothers had gone to collect alms, Dhroupadhi was sitting at the feet of the eldest, Dharmaraaja and with tears flowing in cascades down her cheeks, she massaged his tired limbs. When asked the reason why, she replied, "You are now lamenting that the brothers who have gone for alms have not returned, for, you are hungry! I remembered the days when we as monarchs of this kingdom, fed sumptuously every day thousands of Brahmins, sages, monks, scholars, students and mendicants! And, now we pine for a mouthful for ourselves!" Just then Bheema entered and was moved into violent anger at her anguish, for which he blamed Dharmaraaja, whose adherence to Right had reduced them to this plight. But Dharmaraaja said, "Brother! Since we stuck to Dharma, we have the Lord as our guardian and guide. The Kauravas follow Adharma (injustice), and their doom is written in blood; the Devil may hold hopes before their eyes, but, none can save them from perdition."

Without the strength that righteous behaviour gives, physical might or even the might of weaponry is nought. Bheema had physical might; he could pulverise mountains. Arjuna had the most dreadful bow of the age and an array of Divine arrows. But, both had to be directed and controlled by the dictates of Dharma, so that the Lord might bless them with victory. The easiest and the most fruitful expression of Dharma today consists in Seva, service as worship of the Divine around you. Dedicate all your skill, talents, wealth and scholarship to the living embodiments of Divinity that are around you. That is the Dharmashakthi (Power of righteousness) which can draw Grace upon you.

Aims of the women's college

I have come upon a mission, and the first and foremost task in the fulfilment of that mission is the revival of the Vedha and Vedhic rituals, along with an appreciation of their inner significance. The next step is the lighting of such Lamps, to spread illumination into all the nooks where darkness has taken refuge.

This College is not founded, as some of you are guessing, to promote financial considerations; nor is it intended as an instrument for publicity. It will be an example, an inspiration, a beacon, a pioneer, a lesson for educationists, for all those who have the future of humanity in their hems.

The usual answer to the question, 'Why College' education?' is, "To help secure jobs." The answer to the question, "Why this college?" is, "To sweeten the hearts of the future mothers of this land with humility, faith, discrimination and fear of evil. To light the path they tread towards truth and virtue."

An educated woman must herself run the home

The learning of Sanskrit is crucial for this generation. That is the key to the treasure of Bharatheeya Culture which is the heritage of the children of this land. The world is in great hunger for this nectar of immortality, and you must not neglect this rich patrimony. Again, I will insist that the educated woman must herself run the home, and shoulder all the burden of nursing and nourishing the members of the family. The Aanandha that can be derived by unselfish scattering of Love is a rare elevating experience. It is a very valuable Saadhana. A third need is that the ideal of Seva must be inculcated in the hearts of the students and they must acquire not only the enthusiasm to serve but they must earn proficiency in the ways of helpfulness.

During the last seven or ten days, the volunteers from Hyderabad (they had come on some earlier occasions too) and those from West and East Godhaavari Districts, from Krishna and Guntur Districts, from Orissa, Gujarat, Punjab and Bengal, as well as from Mysore, Kerala, Assam and other parts of India, as well as from across the seas, from East Africa and America, gave of themselves fully and sincerely, and exhausted themselves in hard continuous work both night and day, so that this vast area which was rubble all over, and very uneven at that, became, at dawn today, the smooth, level, soft maidhaan (meeting grounds), where hundreds of thousands could sit in comfort. The Love that they translated into service is indeed beyond the power of words to describe. This noon, since it was already late and you were all boiling in the Sun, I could not dwell on this Love and give expression to My joy. But, now I can mention it with joy.

Every being is surcharged with God's Bliss

The Universe is seen; it can be learnt about; it can be experienced and enjoyed. But, God is unseen. He has to be inferred through His handiwork. So, too, society to which social service is rendered, cannot be seen as such. We can contact only individuals.

But, through the individual you infer the immanence of the Divine. All are actors on the world stage, in His Play. Every atom is surcharged with His Power, His Might, His Glory. Every being is surcharged with His Bliss, His Beauty, His Goodness. Do not claim that you are using some skill or force which is specially yours; it has come out of His Grace, His Compassion.

People retire into solitude and attempt to contact God; but, solitude is best used for discovering and curing defects of character and conduct. To contact God, one has to open his eyes and serve brother man. He is the God Incarnate one can worship and adore to his heart's content. The greatest joy springs from the utmost sacrifice. That is the utmost bhoga (enjoyment), though it is called thyaaga (sacrifice). It is the utmost fulfilment.

Giving is gaining. It leads to the utmost yoga (identification with the Divine). This manner of gaining bhoga, is the best; all the rest becomes not gaining, but grieving (roga). And, Seva is to be offered, not here only, or on special occasions like this; but, where ever you are, whenever you realise the need, to the extent of your capacity and ability. Feel that God has given the chance, the inclination, the ability---that is the crux of the Saadhana.

Have no ego, discard desire, you are liberated This day is Guru Pournami, when many offer special puuja to the Guru (worship of the preceptor) who has initiated them into spiritual life, with the grant of some manthra (sacred syllable) or some vow. To adore the preceptor who has shown the path of liberation, you need not wait for the arrival of this particular day. You need not watch the calendar at all; be ever grateful. The guru has directed the vision inside, the goal is in you, the path leads you to yourself, the I that shines unknown in you, as well as in all. Knowing it is liberation from the bondage of the body and the chain of birth and death which the body drags along with it.
People come to Me and pray, "Swaami! Naaku rooksham kaavaali" (For me - moksha (liberation) is wanted). Consider for a moment that statement of thirst. A parcel you get through post is covered top and bottom, with the gift inside the two; you remove the packaging material from top and bottom to get at the thing you really value most;
moksha (the gift you value) is packed between two ideas---'for me,' and 'is wanted'---the idea of EGO and the idea of DESIRE.
So, all I have to tell you is, "Remove the packing, and take the gift, MOKSHA. Have no ego, discard desire, you are liberated!" The Guru asks you to repeat a manthra; but the manthra cannot grant you the final beatitude, It will discipline the mind, control its vagaries, and strengthen faith. But, unless you see God in all, unless your mind is made a mirror reflecting the image of God that every one and every thing is, you are not entitled to the release you claim.
Wrestle with your Own errors in solitude When the pot has a leak, tiny as a needle prick, the water drains out whole. When the heart is full of faith and strength, of light and love, a prick-leak caused by anger, or malice, envy, or pride is so damaging that the precious wealth is spent away quick and fast!
Resolve this day in the Presence that you have so ardently wished for, not to be swayed by these low desires and insidious foes; never be moved by fame or blame, by praise or persecution.
When the crows see the kokil (nightingale), they pursue it and try to wound it with their envious beaks. Good men are the targets for the malignity of the small. Have your own errors and evils hidden so that you can tackle with them in solitude; do not inflict them on others. Wrestle with them, and overwhelm them in the silence of Saadhana. Deal with others only beneficially and in joyful co-operation. Look at Lord Shiva. The poison which will ruin the world ruthlessly, He has hidden in His throat! The Moon that can shower cool calm comfort, He wears on His Head, for all the worlds to benefit from! That is a lesson for you. Why render others miserable, because you are too weak to suppress the bandits your heart has welcomed?

We have in this country, as well as in others, many institutions and organisations devoted to spiritual uplift of man; but, they are all caught up in the politics of competition for prestige and power, and in the game of personal aggrandizement. Wherever you turn, you meet Sanyaasins, Yogis, Gurus and Babas---varieties of the same theme, clamouring for clientele, wheedling for funds, parading for protocol! No one seems to have delved into the relativity of things. No one seems to have dived for the pearls at the bottom and secured them.
All are on the surface of things, afraid to lose their identities, once they have the light revealed. We require spiritual guides who are free from conceit and pride, hate and greed; guides who have travelled the whole length of the journey.
In religious field, hypocrisy is high treason I know there are many of you who argue and discuss how and in what manner these structures came to be built so grandly. If you have known Me through and through, there will be no such argument at all. You will know that this is but an insignificant product of My power. I have done this, only as an example, for, unless those who lead are themselves active and earnest, to bend and bear the burden, those who are encouraged to follow will lose heart and miss the way.
Religious leaders have a greater responsibility in this respect; for, it is a field where hypocrisy is high treason. People fly high, only to cast their eyes on a wider circle, searching for sustenance, as vultures do! The eye belies what the wings proclaim.
Others, I know, have questioned, why I had requested the President of India, Shrimathi Saraswati Giri, the Governor of Mysore, the Chief Minister of Andhra Pradesh, the Education Minister of Andhra Pradesh, and the Vice-Chancellor of the Venkateshwara University to share the Aanandha (joy) of this occasion. They hold positions which are sources of influence over many and it is necessary to draw their attention to this resurgence of spiritual education. They themselves have to be put into touch with the activities that are crucial to the revival of the culture of this land. That is the reason why I am inviting these dignitaries to attend and share in the joy of the proceedings. My aim is to plant transformation in the hearts of all, whether they hold high positions or not. All are dear to Me and all are important in My eyes. By having recourse to all means, the mission of establishing Prashaanthi has to be achieved. That is My task.

The happy confluence of three Gurus Having an open heart, do not relish the narrow path of restricted love; love all, do not develop prejudices against men in power or position. They too are our kith and kin; we all sail together.

Be convinced of one truth about Me: Swaami will never lay his hand on a task without proper reason, and without some profound effect that will flow therefrom.

Today, we have the happy confluence of three gu's: it is Guru-vaar (the day of the week is known as the Day of the Preceptor or Guru). The second refers to Aadhi-Guru (Primary Preceptor)---the Full Moon of this month, which occurs today is revered as specially sacred to the memory of Vedhavyaasa, the collator of the Vedhas, the author of Brahmasuuthras (aphorisms on Supreme Reality), the great poet who composed the epic known as the Fifth Vedha, the Mahaabhaaratha, and the author of the renowned scripture of Bhakthi (devotion), called the Srimad Bhaagavatha. The third Gu refers to this Guru-kula-aashram, this college with the new (but ancient) outlook, of reviving the master-disciple, sanctified by centuries of spiritual effort and experience. These three gu's are reminders of the three-pronged bilva (wood-apple tree) leaf, which is placed in reverence while adoring Shiva, symbolising the three Gunas (qualities), the three prongs of time (past, present, future) held as a spear by Shiva, and the three attributes which man has to overcome, the Thamas, Rajas and Sathwa (inertia, passion and equanimity).

Learn to speak what you feel, act what you speak

The greatest contribution of Vyaasa in the realm of Bhakthi, which adores Go with an identifying label of a name, as man can appreciate and apprehend only Name and Form. Fire has no form; it takes on the form of the article it burns or fills, a ball of iron, a crooked rope, etc. Water has no form; it takes the form of the vessel which contains it. Air has no form; it fills a ball and assumes that form. So too, the aathmic (divine) principle.

The body is the ball filled with the air of Divinity; it is kicked in play, by six players on one side (the six foes: Lust, Anger, Greed, Attachment, Pride, and Hate) and six on the other (the six friends, Truth, Right, Peace, Love, Compassion and Fortitude). The goal-posts are on each side, and the ball is hit so that it passes through them, the Dharma vidhya (Moral attainment) and Brahma vidhya (Spiritual attainment). Those who hit it so, can claim victory. Or else, their kick results in an 'out'! Learn to speak what you feel, act what you speak; do not allow them to be at cross purposes.

Man with feelings of a demon, fuming with hate, engaged in fighting, holds Peace Conferences!

And, prides himself on his plans for peace! Transform the heart into a tabernacle of Peace; then, conferences to deceive oneself and others become unnecessary. What can mere talk achieve?

Right will be restored and evil put down

Have constructive thoughts, consoling words, compassionate acts. Be on the look out for eyes filled with tears, hearts heaving in sigh. I am sure My words will give you the strength of elephants when you need it to carry through tasks of service. I know they have; each one of you is the witness of the truth of this fact; I am the witness of all that you did and achieved. I don't need any one to report; to Me; you don't need any one to measure the Aanandha you had. When the Non-gazetted officers of the Andhra Pradesh struck work for more than a month and a half, the hospitals did not have attenders and helpers in the wards; the Seva dhal members of Vijayawaada, Hyderabad, Vishaakhapatnam and other places were moved by the distress of the in-patients left: helpless in the hospital beds; they served them with great love and even adoration.

No service was too low or mean; every emergency was immediately noticed and attended to.

They need not be sorry that during those days, they had no time to sit for dhyaana or do japa or even to go out on Nagarasankeerthan (meditation or recitation or group singing of God's names)! Why? You can have the Name on the lips, when you sweep the streets, or lift a corpse on to the morgue, or when you walk towards or away from the area of distress. People may dub you mad! But, be elated that you are not affected by the insanity they suffer from.

Not only Bhaarith, but the whole world is today in the throes of anxiety and fear. But, I assure you that very soon the dark clouds shall be scattered and you will witness a happy era all over the world. Right will be restored and evil put down. Your duty is to yearn for the attainment of the consciousness of the One, behind all this apparent multiplicity. Be centres of love, compassion, service, mutual tolerance, and be happy, very very happy. That is the blessing I shower on you, this Guru Poornima (the full-moon day dedicated to the Preceptor).

Ananthapur 8- 7-1971

Shiva is described as having three eyes, eyes that see the Past, the Present and the Future.

The elephant skin which forms His cloak is a symbol of the bestial primitive traits which His Grace destroys. In fact, He tears them to pieces, skin them, and they become totally ineffective.

His Four Faces symbolise Shantham (Equanimity), Roudhram (Terror), Mangalam (Grace) and Uthsaaaham (elevating energy).

While adoring the Lingam on this Lingodhbhava Day, Mahaa Shiva- raathri, you must contemplate on these truths of Shiva that the Linga represents.

Sri Sathya Sai

29. Constant Divine Communion

THERE is no illness worse than desire; no foe fiercer than attachment; no fire so ravenous as anger; no ally so reliable as wisdom. In the ancient aashrams (monasteries) of India, the Master took the pupil by the hand and, by precept and example, he removed the wild weeds and planted the seeds of virtue and equanimity, which grew into love and wisdom.
There man became aware of his fundamental Divinity and drew unfailing Aanandha (bliss) from that awareness. But now, taking delight in dubious designs and tortuous trials, man is fast shaping himself into a demon!

The mind is the conspirator, who has brought about this calamity. If man yields to the mind and its vagaries, and the mind is enslaved to the senses and their fancies man cannot escape, calamity.

The mind prompts man to seek sukha (happiness), and avoid dhukha (misery); it creates the distinction and deludes the activity; it pushes forward and pulls back, tossing man back and forth, throughout his life. The idea of happiness, which is often only another form of comfort, arises in the mind and gets concretised as objects shaped by the hands and brains of man, like the aeroplane, the radio, and even the bomb that devastates and delights the mind saturated with hate.

Ideas, desires, cravings, yearnings---these get concretised and so, the world is only the product of the mind. In fact, the Universe is itself the manifestation of the Divine Mind, which willed, Ekoham bahusyaam: "I am one, let me become many!" The Universe arose in the Mind of God, it sprouted and spread there, and since then, the mind has become potent and permeating. For each of you, it is the mind that colours the world. If it is pure, the jagath (world) is congenial; if it is unclean, the world is replete with jeopardy. The sages of Bhaarith laid down a series of exercises and disciplines, in order to de-contaminate the mind, so that it may turn away from the senses towards the buddhi (intellect). These are included in the comprehensive path, dhyaana (meditation).
Meditation should be a continuous process, not a fad Dhyaana is, according to many exponents, the performance for a few minutes when man tries to assume a certain posture, and controlling the ingress and egress of breath, endeavours to fix attention on an image or ideal, to the exclusion of everything else.
During meditation, people feel elated, have exaltation of a kind, experience joy and peace; but when the period is over they lapse into the normal routine of scandal, envy, faction and fear. So, dhyaana has become a fad, a routine, a pastime or habit, a drug or tonic, instead of the very sustenance of the spirit.
It should not be taken up and left off, at stated hours of the day; it must be continuous process, filling the personality with sweetness Divine. The mind must be rid of bitterness, and be charged with the nectar of Universal love. That love must reveal to you that the jeeva (individual) is only Dheva (God), clothed in that garment. You too are not this temporary vesture that you have worn, but, the ancient bodiless Divine! The limits of time and space which make you declare that you were born in one particular year and that your native place is some dot on the map of the world are also artificial and temporary and incidental; they are not fundamental.
The wants that the mind spins out endlessly can never be over; they are like the digits, which can be added ad infinitum, and with each addition, the total load increases! When you are in the coils of kaama (desire), you cannot come to Raama (God). The study of sacred books, the counsel of sages, the company of the wise---these are barren when you do not transmute then into awareness and Aanandha! Pour the mind into the mould of God, His Glory, His Majesty, His Beauty. The mind-stuff is rendered an instrument of liberation, from being a shackle that binds. Desires are often momentary urges When you come to Me weighted with wants, prayers for boons and materialistic wishes, you stand the risk of losing faith and losing your moorings; for, that faith is frail. Develop the love that asks for no return; build faith on that basis. Thereby, you can rescue yourselves' from the duality of exaltation and despair. The path of love knows no ups and downs; it is smooth and level, straight and safe; it leads you to the throne of the King of Kings, installed in your heart! Nothing can delay your journey, or devise obstacles to stop you. Desires? What is their nature? When a cat kills your pet parrot, you are enraged; when it kills a mouse, you are pleased. Though the behaviour of the cat is same, you desired one and disliked the other, as a result of your attachment! Desires are decided by personal prejudices and fancies. They also pall when fulfilled and are often momentary urges, clamouring for immediate satisfaction. After a full meal, food becomes uninteresting, if not positively repellent! Once satiated, the thing desired becomes disgusting! Gateway to God's glory lies open everywhere There are two attitudes of mind: the separative attitude and the unity attitude! In the grip of the separate "community" idea, you cling to some as friends and keep away from others. This attitude cannot win the Grace of the One. He who sees unity wins the Grace of the One. And, one spark of that Grace destroys in the conflagration it causes the fame and blame, the joy and grief, that the world heaps on the head. Do not worry about temporary trifles, and tribulations. Do not exaggerate the inconveniences they cause. Bear them with courage, and a smile. Aim at the highest goal; hunt the royal tiger, not the foul fox! Even if you fail to bag the tiger, there is a grandeur in being foiled. In the case of the fox, what glory is there when you finally bring its corpse home? Why become too considerate about the body, too concerned about the state of health, too worried about material possessions? Be concerned to acquire as support the embodiment of truth! Be anxious to win the status of immortality! Struggle for Eternal Verity, though the victory may be distant and difficult. To realise that Verity, you have the opportunity and the invitation, everywhere. The gateway to that Glory lies open everywhere. Open your eyes, and witness His Compassion, His Majesty, His Beauty, spread before you; sitting in meditation for three hours, you are not able to concentrate on these attributes of God for even three seconds! You get pain in the back, your legs ache, you have to change posture a dozen times an hour! But, before you, above your head in the sky, under your feet the handiwork of the Almighty calls on you to adore His artistry. Invest yourself fully in meditation Why spend all that time trying to achieve control of the mind? Practise another saadhana---the saadhana of seeing the Divine all around you! Believe that the Aathma in you is the same Aathma that activates everyone else, and makes him live and love, wail and hail. Dhyaana is not a limited liability concern! There are no bounds for your share in it. It is a full time endeavour; invest yourself fully in it. Then you get a plentiful harvest of returns. You become aware that you are a Hari-mandhir (a temple of God), that your limbs are the holy vessels that are consecrated for service therein, that' your deeds are the fruits, your thoughts the flowers, your words the music, with which the worship is consummated every moment. Offer yourself as the heart of faith. Then, whomsoever you contact, will shine before you as God Himself. The words---social, cultural, spiritual, moral---all indicate only facets of this vision. Social service or consciousness is but the expression of this ever-present Divine in all members of the human community. What is culture, except the culture of the mind to reap this harvest? The spirit, when it blossoms, finds kindred spirits everywhere. And, as for morality, its highest expression is truth, and the truth is unity! All activity originates from a common source, God When you speak with the tongue or see with the eye, or plan with the brain, who is it that speaks, sees, judges and decides? It is the One intelligence, the One that, like a current, works in and through all men and materials, God. When you are immersed in bhajan, note how the One is activating you! Your tongue pronounces the words in the tune designed for them; your palms beat the time, slow or fast; your head sways in unison with the sentiments that the words express; your mind is gushing Aanandha, at the magnificence of the pictures that the song evokes! So too, a dancer is articulating harmony and melody through every gesture and movement of muscle and limb. But, all the activity originates from a common source, God, who is resident as President in the heart. When He is ignored, neglected, or denied, there is no joy for you or through you for others. You are either Thaamasik---dull, inert---or Raajasik (passionate, fanatic)---but, not Saathwik (pure) balanced, serene! God is all. He is all forms, His is all names. There is no place where He is not; no moment when He is not! (Even the devil has the syllable dev to indicate his affinity). Thunder is God's message; the rain is his grace. Let no second pass without awareness of God; let no event lapse without reminding you that He is the artificer! You have an image or picture, in the room you have set apart for worshipping God. You light a lamp before it! You say, "I have lit the lamp;" but, is it you really? Who endowed the oil, the wick and the lamp, the property of producing a flame together? Who moved you to revere the picture in this form? Who was it that placed the lamp, lit it and bowed before the picture? It is all God, God, God. There is none else nothing else, for the man who knows and feels. Live in the consciousness of Raama & His message of Truth This morning, someone asked Me, when I called him in and gave him the chance to speak to Me, "Baba! The world is fast forgetting the potency of the Name of God. People do not have it on their tongues; they do not sustain themselves by its sweetness and sanctity. Bless me and bless a plan that I have, to make them ever conscious of the precious treasure that they are missing. I propose to print posters, blazing in colour, with the Name 'Raama' and paste them on all available walls, pillars and vantage points, so that the eye may warn and waken the mind of man." I told him that his posters will be smothered by the loud lascivious announcements and ads of film makers and exhibitors, and they will soon give place to the scrawls and scribbles of hate. Nor is your plan worthwhile, I told him. Paste the poster on your heart, I advised him. "Reform yourselves, live in the consciousness of Raama and the message of dharma which He lived out in His earthly career. That is enough publicity, enough prompting. That is the best that you can do to promote loyalty to the name," I said. For, people will know how it has changed you into a more joyous, peaceful individual and wonder how it was possible. Realising the how, they will start revering the name, like you. Do not get tied up with symbols in stone or metal; raise yourselves to the higher stages of realisation. Do not get entangled in rituals and ceremonials. Fill your heart with God, not with 'you' Ego plays all kinds of tricks, in order to get unholy pleasure. During the construction of the bridge to Lanka to take the army across, Hanumaan heaved a boulder on the raging waves of the sea, as part of the bridge! It floated! Raama heaved another; it sank! Hanumaan's ego was tickled, naturally. He laughed in derision; at that very moment, his boulder sank! And, the boulder that Raama had thrown, rose from the bottom of the sea and floated! Hanumaan's ego was pricked into nothingness. That was the purpose for which Raama had willed that his boulder should sink! Yearn to fill your heart with Him, not with 'you.' Your yearning must be warm, so warm that it can be called thapas (heat). Become hot earnest! Now it is only lukewarm longing, a surface activity. Examine yourselves how far you have filled your heart with Him. Measure the heights you have reached with the yardstick of virtue, serenity, fortitude and equanimity. You now become easy victims of lust, anger, malice, envy and the rest of that evil brood, for, the atmosphere of the heart is polluted by ego fumes. The knowledge derived through the mind utilising the senses is always "incomplete, incoherent;" but, the knowledge that is earned through the buddhi (intellect) illumined by the Aathma (divine Self), is full free-ing, and revealing the Truth. The first is termed Mano jnaana and the second, Aathma jnaana. Mano jnaana informs that you are distinct from others, that God is at Kailaash, Thirupathi or Kaashi or Prashaanthi Nilayam, that the God at Kailaash or Kaashi or Prashaanthi Nilayam is different one from the other! But, names, forms and temples are only for the kindergarten stage. You print the picture of a head or a net or a wave, and have underneath the words, thala (head, in Thelugu) or vala (net, in Thelugu) or ala (wave, in Thelugu), so that the child may learn the letters quicker, while pronouncing the name of the picture which the word represents. Once the letters are learnt, the picture can be dispensed with. The kshara (temporary picture) can be given up when the Akshara (permanent letter) is learnt. The picture is only a crutch. The transient is only an illustration of the truth that it reflects.

Accommodate all forms of God in your heart

The kshara can be rubbed off the blackboard, when the Akshara is fixed in the mind. The brick and mortar structure where God is taken to be can be, rubbed off the mind board, once the presence of God is experienced. When you change your puuja (worship) room in your house, it does not mean that God too shifted from one room to another, that he is no longer where He was and that He has been brought over to a new place! He is not a piece of furniture that you can transfer hither and thither! He is here, there, everywhere, inside and out, above, below, around.

Accommodate all forms of God in your heart; do not exclude some and welcome others: Bear with those who adore Him in another form through another name and acclaim Him in another language.

There was once a heavy downpour of rain in a small village. A lonely monk was caught unawares and he ran helter-skelter seeking some shelter from the hard-hitting drops and the chilly wind. He found a short length of dry floor, on the raised verandah of a house, the inmates of which were fast asleep behind closed doors. Being a yogi with no weight on his mind, he fell asleep soon, and was lost within himself. Very soon, another forlorn man, who also had no shelter, espied the verandah and came on to it. The yogi woke up and finding another claimant for the space sat up and said, there is sitting room for two; come, we shall sit the night through!"

Within a few minutes, another desperate man arrived and he had to be accommodated. The two who were sitting agreed that there was standing room for three! They decided to stand until dawn; that is the spirit of tolerance that has to be cultivate, by the children of God, towards brothers in distress. God is love; so, you must become love, in order to merge in Him. He is beauty; so, be beauty, with no ugliness in you. Then, you can be one with Him, He is compassion, be compassionate. Water mixes easily with water, not with oil. Oil mixes with oil only.

Devotees should cultivate the spirit of tolerance

God is sweetness; His words are sweet, His sight is sweet; He sounds sweet; He is sweeter than sweetness itself. But, when your tongue is afflicted with illness, He will be bitter. Cure the illness, by cultivating love to all. There is no need to take refuge in a forest or in solitude. You cannot give up activity. You have to move along the line to which you are attuned; you cannot lead a life of renunciation, on the spur of the moment; it requires long years of preparation.

Once Arjuna was seen by a monk, walking listlessly in the forest looking for something. The monk asked why and Arjuna replied, "I am searching for roots and tubers that are edible, for, my brother is certain to be invited to a game of dice as soon as this exile is over and since he is certain to wager us once again and lose, we are destined for another long spell in the forest; so, it is better to accustom oneself to sparse and saintly saathwik (wholesome) food now itself." Then the monk said, "No, you are a kshathriya, born and bred for war on wickedness and evil; how can you throw off all that tendency for dedication. Besides, why sanyaas (mendicancy) to discover that your real core is Maadhava (God)? It is God that agitates you, admonishes you, administers you! A minute's introspection must convince you of this truth." Know that you are but an instrument; what can you prepare for? It is all His Will, His plan.

Know that you are but an instrument of God's Will Sathatham yoginah---always a yogi! Be calm, unruffled serene; unaffected by good fortune or bad, for you are a puppet making motions and contortions according to the pulls He gives to the strings! Be pleasant in speech and manner; do not inflict injury or insult on others nor be affected any adverse act or remark by others. Be happy that everyone and everything is so ordained by God. It is His play, His sport!

Also be eager to confer consolation and courage; be anxious to be of help. Watch for the chance, snatch each opportunity to expand yourself by sympathy, to enlarge the horizon of love, by understanding and prayer. Don't keep another at arm's length, saying, "My God is different from yours" or "My Clod is opposed to yours." It can never be so.

Paramaathma, the name for God does not mean, a stranger God, but, the Supreme God! Who can vouchsafe for the correctness of the picture which you now worship as the picture of Raama or Krishna? The poet described and the painter delineated; but, both relied on their imagination, rather than actual authentic vision.

Who can set limits to the freedom of God?

A shepherd boy heard a Brahmana discourse on God and describe Him as a dark blue being of human form, riding a white eagle. He prayed for many days continuously giving up food and drink, that God must come down where he was tending the fold and partake of his gruel. At last on the tenth day, when he threatened to put himself to death (for he had become desperate) God came in the form of an old man. And, demanded the gruel. The old man declared that he was God, but, the shepherd would not accept the credential! He did not see the dark blue complexion or the white eagle! He refused to share the gruel with Him, unless the Brahmana certified that the visitor was genuinely God. The Brahmana was brought post haste, but, what could he say? He had only expounded from books, written by equally blind persons and from pictures drawn by equally audacious painters! Who can set limits to the freedom of God, to assume any Form He likes or, any Form that the devotee likes? For the shepherd, God was valid, vital and very near; for the Brahmana who expounded the texts, He was a mystery; a distant possibility, an image lined by fancy.

Be convinced that God can and will appear in any form and so all forms are His. Don't refuse to recognise Divinity in the form you dislike or did not expect! He can appear as a fox, as a dog, as a beggar, any form. When you call on God, whatever form appears, treat it as God. Thotapuri taught Raamakrishna that Mother Kaali was Vishwaswarupini, the all-comprehensive form of the formless energy that pervades the Universe, and not the eight-armed occupant of the shrine at Dhakshineswar, the form that was appearing between his brows, whenever he tried to delve into himself and discover the unity behind all the multiple manifestations! She was One without a second. With no name or form or body or sex or age, beyond time, space, causation. She was all forms and so, of no form; she was all attributes and so, beyond the attributeful. She was saguna as well as nirguna, the nirguna being the base on which the saguna was conceived.

Emerge from meditation more charged with love

We divide the one into two, and play the game of duality; positing one half as giver and the other as receiver, one as the seer and the other as the seen, one as subject and the other as object. We say Sarvam Brahma Mayam---"All is Brahma!" As if there is an All, which is to be identified with another thing called Brahma. Sarvam and Brahma are One, not two! That is why we say, Adhwaita (Not-two), in spite of the appearance as two. In deep sleep, you are one with yourself, though at the time you have no Chith and no Aanandha. The realisation that you are not two but One will endow you with the awareness and the bliss.

To earn that consciousness of not-two, love alone is the path. Prema, means seva, which means saadhana, which means expansion, self-enlargement, reaching out to the very horizon of being and becoming!---until all is I.

Prema (love) must grow with every moment of saadhana. It must sweeten every word, deed and thought of yours. Emerge from dhyaana as a person more charged with love! Emerge from bhajan with a greater measure of love! Return from Nagarasankeerthan with a firmer conviction that everything is surcharged with the same Divinity that is behind all your activity. I find now that these have become mere routine procedures, a matter of schedules, time-tables and attendance registers and reports! The thrill, the exhilaration, the enthusiasm are absent; the singing starts like a wail, without strength and joy.

Bhajan must spread goodwill and love

The "O Bhagavaan song" is a very weak, meek song to begin bhajan with. You do not put any spirit into it and so it falls flat on the ear. Do not have it from this day; begin with a vigorous song on Ganesha, instead. Also, have the song for aarathi (waving the lights), both morning and evening and during all occasions of aarathi, Jai Jagadeesha Hare--- and give up the Paavana Purusha, which is a much mutilated Kannada song, which has lost its meaning and appeal as a result of a number of emendations and interpolations from other linguistic regions! When you sing without the thrill of ecstasy I do not derive any joy, nor does the I (that resides in everyone of you) get it.

Bhajan must spread good-will, love, ecstasy; it must cleanse the polluted atmosphere; it must invite all to share in the joy and peace. The Nagarasankeerthan must be inspiring, radiating devotion and love. The Aanandha, I derive from bhajan, I do not get from anything else. That is the reason why I am emphasising these points. Be sincere, feel in your hearts what you are singing by your voice. The motion will express itself through the raaga and thaala it chooses.

You need not worry about the raaga being appropriate or the thaala being accurate. When Raama is prompting you to sing, the raaga and the thaala can never be wrong. Raama is the pen,

Raama is the thought, Raama is the word, Raama is the style, Raama is the composition. How then can error creep in?

Shravan is the first stage of spiritual progress

Fill every moment with energy, enthusiasm and effort. The epics teach you how to succeed in this. The Mahaabhaaratha describes how, when every other of the hundred Kauravas died, the eldest Dhuryodhana was challenged by Bheema to meet him in a duel; when at last, he fell on the ground, Bheema struck his head with his foot in order to add insult to injury. Dhuryodhana's pride was hurt; a Kshathriya such as he could not pass that insult by. He retorted, even when he was dying, "Do not exult that you have done some big heroic act by trampling on my head! In a few seconds, dogs and vultures will be doing that act. It does not require a hero to plant his foot on a dying man! You dared not do this when I was capable of hitting back, you coward!" That kind of awareness of one's potentialities and quick response to all happenings must be present in you, too. Heroism gushed out his lips even when he was passing away!

Today is the first day of Shraavan month. Shraavan is the month when the Vedhic studies are considered most fruitful, for, Vedhas are Shruthi (the heard), coming to man through Shravan (hearing from the Guru). Shravan is the very first stage of spiritual progress. So, it is a good day for inaugurating spiritual study and practice. Shravan leads ultimately to Aath-manivedhana, surrender of the individual to the Universal. I bless you that you may achieve that goal.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-7-1971

30. Live in Love

WITHIN thirty days of the inauguration of the Women's College building in this town, I am glad

I am laying the foundation today for this Kalyaana Mantap (Festival Hall). Joy and grief come upon mankind, often without advance notice! Ananthapur has had the college as well as this festival hall, as surprises. That is indeed worthy good fortune. The mind decides and shapes things according to the decision. It manipulates external objects until the desired achievement is concretised. When the decisions are good, good is the resultant; when they are bad, bad happens.

When love is the lever that operates the mind, only good can result. That is why I always emphasise the role of love.

Live in love; love is life. Without loving or being loved, no being can exist on the earth. Love sustains, love strengthens, love is the urge behind all adventure, all sacrifice, all success.

I have come to restore love among mankind, to cleanse of narrowness, and restrictive attitudes.

That is the main task, in the revival of Dharma (morality). It is not enough, to talk about the prime importance of love in the task of human rehabilitation. One must set the example, in actual practice. This Hall is a symbol of that love resulting in joy for this town. When words, deeds and thoughts emanate from hems filled with love---pure, untarnished, such as, love for God and for man as the image of God---all who contact you, will feel elated. If you love your aathma and not your body, you will realise that the same Aathma is the core of every being and you will start; loving every being as much as you do yourselves. This is real self-realisation. This is the truth; that is to say, a fact that can never be denied or deviated from, during the passage of time.

Someone mentioned now that the results of the final examinations held by the University are commendable, since more than seventy per cent of the students who appeared from the college at Ananthapur have passed with credit! Good, but, what I will be glad over, is quite another thing! I look forward to cent per cent success in the examination which assesses character, virtue, sweetness of speech and behaviour, reverence towards elders and the culture of this land. I wish that the pupils of this college live so fully in love that the homes where they were born and bred, and the homes which they enter on marriage, and the homes they themselves establish--all will be happy, on account of them. No one of them should feel dishonoured, through their behaviour.

All must shine as splendid examples of joy and contentment, devotion and dedication.

Ananthapur, 1-8-1971

31. Raso vai sah

IT is a great pity that, in this land, which discovered the Divinity of Man and the means by which he can regain that Divinity, which is having a continuous stream of saints and sages who remind man of his grand role as a pilgrim towards God, men have allowed the teaching to decline and the practice to fade! Hearts saturated with this honeyed wisdom have become chalices of poison!

Hate has hardened them, greed has sharpened them, pride has polluted them. Once again, man has to be made aware of the spring of joy within him, so that he may be happy and unagitated by anxiety. Human ideals have degenerated so much that man has become incapable of appreciating the beauty, wisdom and power of Avathaars (divine advents)! They do not yearn for the intuitive experience of the glory and majesty of which they are themselves parts. They do not lose themselves in the stream of joy that flows from the contemplation of the limitless, beginningless power that is God. This day which you are celebrating as the Birthday of Krishna can best be used for re-dedicating your lives to the attainment of that joy.
Universe, God's creation, cannot but be sweet Krishna has three separate meanings---the word, that is: (1) Karsh is one root from which the name is derived. It means, "that which attracts"; Krishna attracts hearts to Himself, by His sportive pastimes, miraculous victories over the forces of evil, his charming conversation, His wisdom, His personal beauty. (2) The word is also related to the root, Krish, to cultivate, as a field, for growing crops. The word means, he who removes the weeds from the heart of man, and sows seeds of faith, courage and joy. (3) It is related to the root, Krish, meaning something above and beyond the three attributes and the three eras, and na, means, Sath-chith-aanandha. The leelas (divine plays) and mahimas (miracle powers) of Krishna through which He attracts the Love of Mankind, cultivates the harvest of joy in the hearts of His devotees and makes them aware of His being Existence-Knowledge-Bliss are described in the Bhaagavatha.
Dr. Baalasubrahmanyam said now that if you follow my directions, it is as good as putting the Geetha into practice. Arun Kumar Dutt said, that you are all lucky since you have seen many manifestations of My power. But, they are manifested because they have to be, not for exhibiting attainments, nor for drawing clientele. They manifest when needed by the exercise of Will, as naturally, as spontaneously as any other physical act. I am the truth of truth, I guide towards truth, I manifest truth and when men realise truth, they realise Me.

Raso vai sah---"He is sweetness". So, the jagath (the Universe), which is His creation cannot but be sweet for those who recognise it as His handiwork. The jagath has to be used to instruct you on the glory and the power of God, so that you may seek Him and reach Him. There are four stages in the journey towards this goal; each one is called a loka, a region which you reach. The first is A-vidhya loka (the region of ignorance and delusion) from which you start, prompted by the chain of grief and pain it inflicts on you. The second is the Vidhyaloka, where you penetrate into the Vijnanamayakosha (the intellectual plane) and are able to distinguish between the true and false, the kernel and the husk. The third is the Aanandhaloka, where you are immersed in bliss, at the glimpse of the eternal source of power and peace. And, lastly, you have the Go-loka, where the Go-paala reigns, and all the go's (jeevas, sparks from the Divine), waves of the Premasaagara (the ocean of love) are one in ecstasy and enlightenment!
Soak your emotions in compassion to attain God Unless you have love, you cannot claim kinship with the votaries of God; mere ritualistic exactitude or pompous adoration, or loud acciamation will not entitle you to enter the portals of Go-loka! They are as tin and trash before the treasure-chest of love.
Love is the bridge which helps passage from birth to death to deathlessness, from death to birthlessness. When you rise from the jeeva-sense to the Dheva-sense (human-ness to God-ness), then, there is no more birth or death. Liberation happens when you love every being so intensely that you are aware of only ONE. Soak your heart in love, soak your acts in righteousness, soak your emotions in compassion; then you attain God soonest.
Krishna was the servant of even cows and calves!
Now, most people are nearest the temple; but, farthest from God. For, there is no genuniness in the manipulations of the limbs or emotions or impulses or activities during worship. You say, Krishnaarpan (dedication to Krishna); but, really, the dedication which the mind performs is to thrishna (desire)! Or it may be dedication to wife or children! It is seldom done to Krishna! God is everywhere at all times; he accomplishes everything. He accomplishes the minor feat of assuming the human form and growing up among men as one of themselves right in their midst, in order to win them over to the path of truth. He gives man the chance to savour His sweetness and glimpse His glory. He acts despite the absence of any compulsion, so that man may be led to do likewise.

The Sage Vyaasa happened to pass by when Krishna was washing the horses of Arjuna's chariot in the water of the Yamuna; he shed a tear, contemplating the duty that the Lord had imposed on Himself in order to guide man aright. Krishna played the role of servant to Arjuna, so that: man may know how to serve and thereby rise to sovereignty! Krishna was the servant of even cows and calves! When just a boy, His mother proposed to have shoes for His tiny feet, lest the hard thorny ground of the pasture might injure His lotus feet. Krishna would have none of it; He replied, "I go daily behind the cows and calves to the distant pasture, in order to tend them; I am their servant. How can the servant; go shod before his masters, when they are not shod, himself wearing shoes?"

Krishna's breath was Love, His behaviour compassion

The cattle were so loyal and loving towards Krishna, because of this intimate bond. When Krishna was invited by Kamsa to Mathura and Akruura, the messenger from Mathura took him in his chariot to that City, the cows and the frisking calves too shed tears at the separation! The beasts had such sincere Krishna-thrishna! Only man has strayed away into the wilderness of ego-infested evils! Every other animal is still treading its allotted path! God takes human form, in order to fill man with gratitude and joy; man sees the power, the wisdom and the beauty of God--

-the Sathyam, Shivam and Sundharam---and the vision gives him a tormenting thirst for truth, goodness and beauty.

Krishna dealt with the world as with a sitar, pulling its heart-strings to arouse the melody of comradeship, heroism, love, affection, compassion and conviction.

But of these, the two emotions of love and compassion were characteristically His and his own. His breath was love!

His behaviour, compassion! Adore Him, placing a garland of tears around His neck; washing His feet with tears, springing from joy at the contemplation of His love!

That very worship will endow you with the Wisdom that sages seek, the Bliss that the books extol!

Grow in love, meditating on the embodiment of love, called Krishna.

When the heart has not melted and softened to the cry of distress, the spasm of pain, the groan of the hungry, when the fountain of love therein is blocked with the tinsels of pride, Krishna will not play the flute in your ear. You may be a master in the service of Krishna; but, without the key of love you cannot gain entrance to the Go-loka where He resides! You may be in Prashaanthi Nilayam since years, claiming to be with Swaami and near Him; but, without cultivating love expressed in service you cannot know Me.

World is the splendour of God, His reflection

There was a pupil once, who prided himself on his ancestors and his master; they were great Pandiths (scholars), renowned over the entire realm. His preceptor asked him one day, whether he could answer any question he might ask. The pupil was stung to the quick! He said, "Why this hesitation? Ask, and it will be answered! I come from a Somayaaji family; my father is a celebrated savant. I have been learning at your feet for years! Don't I know the answers to all questions." "What is the meaning of the word, Lavana?" the Guru asked. The pupil laughed and said, "O, you surprise me, with this absurdly simple question! Don't I know? Lavana means--- cowdung." Well; lavana is a word that is in daily currency in every household and everyone knows, it means 'common salt'! Even this, the conceited disciple had not learnt. This is very much like what some long-standing 'devotees' know about Me!

Unless you brighten your vision with Love, you cannot see the Truth. Love helps you to see God in everyone, everyone as Divine. The Jagath is not false, it is not a trap; it is the splendour of God, His reflection. He reflected and the Jagath happened! it is His own substance, manifesting as multiplicity, as latent or potent energy or matter. When activity is in accordance with awareness and awareness is befogged or belittled, dried up or deluded, then, Dharma is descendent, and the Avathaar (divine incarnation) appears among men!

People tell Me that mankind is on the brink of destruction, that the forces of hypocrisy and hate are prevailing fast in all the continents, and that anxiety and fear are stalking the streets of every city and village of the world; there is no need to tell Me this, for, I have come precisely for this very reason. When the world is on the verge of chaos, the Avathaar comes to still the storm raging in the hearts of men. Prashaanthi (the higher peace, the calming of perturbations) will be stabilised soon; the demonic deviations from the straight Divine Path will be corrected. Dharma will be revived and re-vitalised, in every human community. Infect yourselves with madness for Krishna. You celebrate the Birthday of Krishna, of Raama and of Sai; but, they have no birth, they do not age; they appear and disappear, like the Sun rising and setting, because you roll and rotate; they are steady and ever-present! They appear so, so that you might realise the Unlimited and forget in that ecstasy the limited to which you are shackled! Do not derive contentment simply adoring pictures and images,, and reading or reciting hymns or songs of praise. Move on to the higher stage of Seva activity, and then, to the highest stage of Aanandha, which is Go-loka!

Know your Reality and the reality of all beings as revealed to you; that very instant you become Raadha and since Raadha is Krishna and Krishna is Raadha, you enter and merge in the Krishnathathwa (the Krishna Principle), the Divine Truth. Whoever adores Krishna unintermittently, without any other thought or feeling to perturb him, is Raadha. See with the eyes of Love; hear with the ears of Love; work with the hands of Love; think thoughts of Love; feel Love in every nerve. The God of Love, Krishna, will come to you on the wave of Love and fill your hearts with Himself!

Do not cage Him in a picture-frame; do not confine Him in an idol. He is all forms. His is all names. He is the Reality of all beings. Infect yourselves with madness for Him, instead of for the World. Some one has written a song about Me, saying that I cure madness and confer madness, that I wipe tears and cause tears to flow! Yes; madness for visualising God is any way preferable to the madness after riches and reputation. Power of love can bind the world. Shed tears of Aanandha (divine happiness), not tears of grief. Yearn for the Love that will bring you the Love of God, Prema. I have no power mightier than that. I might change earth into sky or sky into earth, but, that power is nothing before the power of Love that can bind the world and rule the world. Love; do not hate or harm. Even mosquitoes can pride themselves on the capacity to injure and harm, and cause disease! Bugs can do likewise; so, if you feel proud of the skill to harm, you are only demeaning yourselves. Love and serve; that is the Saadhana (spiritual striving) that will reward you best.

Celebrating festivals like this has been prescribed by the sages, since they encourage you to ponder over the fundamentals of spiritual progress. A young tree grows better and faster, when the soil around the roots is raked up now and then, so that air and solar rays can penetrate the source of its strength and vitalise it. I bless that you will have the constant contemplation of the Lord and that your minds Will taste the sweetness of the Divine without intermission.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 13-8-1971

You sit in meditation for ten minutes, after the evening Bhajan (devotional chanting) sessions; so far, so good.

But, let Me ask, when you rise after the ten minutes and move about, do you see every one in a clearer light, as endowed with Divinity? If not Dhyaana is a waste of time.

Do you love more, do you talk less, do you serve others more earnestly? These are the signs of success in Dhyaana.

Your progress must be authenticated by your character and behaviour. Dhyaana must transmute your attitude towards beings and things; else it is a hoax.

Sri Sathya Sai

32. Stoop to Serve

VINAAYAKA Chathurthi is the name of the festival celebrated today, all over the country, from the Himaalayas to the Cape, and also wherever people of this country owning allegiance to its culture live. Vinaayaka or Ganesha or Ganapathi or Vighneshwara--all indicate the elephant-

God, who is popular among young and old, and who is worshipped as the very first deity, before regularly beginning any ceremony or samskaar, any yaaga or yajna, any vow or fast or pilgrimage. He is the Lord of the Ganas or Divine Forces, inside and outside the human body;

He is the Lord, who masters and overwhelms vighna (obstacle), however imminent or eminent.

This is the natural effect of the fact that Ganapathi is the God of Intelligence, Vidhya or Buddhi (learning or intellect).

Ganapathi is a God revered in Tanthric (ritualistic) lore, and also, by various Vedhic manthras.

The elephant is proverbially the most intelligent among the mammals and it is vegetarian, indicating its saathwik (balanced or pure) nature. Ganapathi has the head of the elephant, for, it indicates the Intelligence through which obstacles in the path of achievement, secular as well as spiritual, can be overcome.

There is a popular verse, used on most occasions when Ganapathi is invoked. It mentions various attributes of this God : Suklambaradharam (wearing white vesture) is the first, this is the symbol of purity, for, ambara means also the sky, the aakaasha of the heart. Ganapathi is pure, having universal love and compassion. Vishnum is the second attribute, ascribed to Him. Vishnu means that He is present everywhere, at all times. Shashivarnam is the third adjective, used. Of the complexion of ash or Vibhuuthi; that is to say, glowing with spiritual splendour, with the majesty of spiritual attainments, achievements and potentialities. These are also called Vibhuuthis, for, in the Geetha, we find Krishna saying, wherever you see Power, Glory, Majesty (vibhuuthi), know that it is Mine!

Ganesha is OM personified Ganesha is bathed in His Divine Glory; that is the significance of the attribute, shashivarnam.

Chathur-bhuja (Four-handed) is the next denotation. This means that apart from two visible hands, He has two invisible hands, that are available for the two divine uses of (1) Blessing the devotee, and (2) Guarding him from danger. The last: of the descriptive word is:

Prasannavadhanam (of graceful countenance). The countenance depicts the inner calm, happiness and balance, inner grace and mercy, the consciousness of strength and sovereignty.

Without intelligent discrimination, no skill or strength can be profitably used. One must know how fire, for example, or the electric current, has to be used and how far one can deal with it as an instrument for our needs. The senses of man are also like fire; they have to be kept under constant vigil and control.

No worship ca succeed unless the heart is pure and the senses are mastered. Ganesha is the God who helps overcome obstacles; but, He will create obstacles when good endeavour is obstructed by bad influences; He will clear the path for the sincere Saadhaka (spiritual aspirant). He is Prasannavadhanam (of beneficial looks) when you pray to Him for good ends; but, He will not be that, when you seek His help for nefarious stratagems! He is Pranava-swaruupa, the Om personified; so, He is auspiciousness itself.

When God is adored and man is injured, there can be no auspiciousness in such deeds. Man is God encased in human form; he is the Divine in that form and with that name. If the anu (paro is neglected, how can the ghana (whole)' be gained? If the paisa is discarded, how can the rupee be gained? It all begins with a single paisa; another added to it makes two, and ninety-eight again make the lump, a rupee! Man is the one; start, revering him; then, you can gain the Grace of the invisible God; neglect the visible paisa, you lose the invisible rupee! The basic defect of man is greed, uncontrolled desire Man loses his status of human-ness, through acts that shame even the beasts. He does not strive towards revealing and manifesting his latent divinity! There is not as big a failing as this sliding back into the animal from which he rose! If he keeps on with his human attributes and capacities, that will deserve congratulation enough. A formidable list can be made of the inadequacies and defects of man, but, the basic defect is 'greed', 'uncontrolled desire'--- always clamouring for more, as a result of the ceaseless prompting of the senses!

Raavana destroyed himself afflicted by greed. The very Gods were his chamberlains; such was the dread his austerity' invoked, such was the reward for his Saadhana! But, he was not content.

The flames of lust rose as fast: as they were fed. Dhritharaashthra, the father of the Kauravas, was enamoured of the greedy plans of his sons, and so he lost all of them, without a survivor, in the field of battle, though their number was a hundred!

Let your heart pant for God While moving through the dense jungle called 'life on earth', in the thick darkness of Ajnaana (Ignorance) of the place you have come from and the place to which you should go, and even of your own real identity, six dacoits---lust, anger, greed, attachment, egoism, hate---pounce on you, and you can overwhelm them and save yourself, only by means of the light shed by Inaana (spiritual wisdom) and weilding the weapon of Bhakthi or Dedicated Living.

The Light of Wisdom can shine bright and far, only when Love, pure Love, Love that does not demand any requital, is firm in the heart. He who loves, for the sake of some requital, or for being loved in return, is a coolie, with his eye glued to the wages.

You are really loving only yourself; for, there is only You in everyone. Soham, He is I. Whoever you injure, it is you that suffers; whoever you cheat, it is you who are cheated. If you do not do your duty, to the best of your ability and intelligence, and to the full satisfaction of your own conscience, you are cheating yourself. I have known that lecturers in the Colleges have to take lecture only for eight classes of one hour each, per week! And, they do not put the rest of the hours to any beneficial use, either!

Service, the utilisation of time and skill to the uplift of society--that is the highest form of adoration which God will reward with Grace. You get the actual experience of Sath-Chith-Aanandha through service, for, through service, you conquer egoism and convince yourselves of the unity that underlies creation. Everyone, be he an office bearer or not, must gird up his loins and stoop for work. The body must be sanctified through Karma (good action) and the mind through Dhyaana (meditation); in all parts of the country, these units must uphold the ideals and practise them, so that they become inspiring examples for the people.

Bhajan must be a felt experience. Do not sing with one eye on the song that makes the effect on the listeners, and the other, on the effect it makes on God. Let your heart pant for God; then, the raaga (musical tune) and thaala (musical beat) will automatically be pleasant and correct.

Sincerity will blot out all errors in raaga and thaala! Do not allow even one vice like the vice of conceit to enter and ensconce itself in your heart. All the water in a well becomes undrinkable even if one frog is dead and its corpse floats on it. A hundred live frogs will not render it unpotable; but, a single dead one will! Life has to be lived, through the channel marked out by embankments that slow the. raging flood and direct it into useful fields. Na shreyo niyamam vina-- "No progress without rules and restrictions." Blessed are they who obey the commandments for, they will be rewarded.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 24-8-1971

33. Society, the Reality

WHEREVER men gather with a purpose into a society, there you perceive the Divine---the Sath, Chith and Aanandha (Being, Awareness and Bliss)! A personality has arisen; a clearer flash of reason is evident; a deeper joy fills the hearts. Immerse yourselves in them.

This is real spiritual endeavour; not pining in solitude or revelling in the breaking of bonds with others of your kind, priding on your independence! Be with others; in others; for others. Be with all, for all, in all.

But, nevertheless, be unattached, be the unfailing source of Love. Therein lies success in spiritual endeavour, the triumph of spiritual discipline. Thus is the Sai in you manifested; thus is the world fostered; Sai within; thus is the heart purified enough to install. There are questions raised: Of what relation is society and social ties with spirit and its glory? Of what relation is the spirit and its glory with society and its tangles and trickeries? Such questions arise from erring minds.

Spiritual endeavour must aim at individual illumination, social betterment and the divinisation of the human community. This is extremely urgent and essential. While in society, the divinity inherent in man can blossom more quickly, more widely, more fragrantly. You recognise the world, but, not God who is immanent in it! So too, you see the individual but, not the corpus that is immanent in society.

All beings form the Universal Body of One God

Of course, Society is not another concrete composite collective body! It is the expansion and expression of the Divine in each of its components, denotable and enjoyable as One. Society is the awareness of this cognisable Divinity. So, the one should not flee from the many; the individual is not harmed by society. The one should rather see the many in a new light--the light which reveals that society is but God, who activates and prompts the composite whole. The one is rendered fuller by association with the many: he gains by losing himself in the many! All men are kith and kin, one family, one aspiration, one attempt at one acquisition. They are all equally Divine, all form the Universal Body of the One God. All are heirs to the Aanandha that this awareness can give. Of course, Society does not happen when people gather by chance, or get together with no common goal of good. The many-faceted skills and intelligences that are contributed by the many must flow pure and clear, untarnished by egoistic desires along the channel of the spirit; then, they will feed the roots of truth and goodness; they will ensure peace, for, all ideas, of high and low will disappear. This is the criterion for a stable strong sweet society; not, mere numbers. Be conscious of the God in each and in all; then, inner equality will impress each so indelibly that the awareness will stay undisturbed.

Shaanthi (Peace) will reign in each and all.

Understand the Aathma or God which is your core; that will establish Shaanthi in you and you can share that Shaanthi with others What can you give others, if your hearts are empty?

Feel that you are a true limb of society

Do you intend to be in society? Do you crave to serve it and be served by it? Then, seek the God in all; see the same in all. Yearn to worship that Clod by self-less service. That alone makes you a true limb of society. If you feel separate, distinct, outside and beyond society, you will run after name and fame, you will be enslaved by hate and partiality, and ruined in the end. So, east out those evil attitudes; feel that you are giving society what is its due, offering God His own gift of skill and intelligence. Vow to serve, to dedicate. Cultivate Love; society is the reflection of the God you adore, the God whose nature is Aanandha. Transform yourself into Love, and become Aanandha. Adore society as the Divine Body; that is the Truth, the eternal Vision. A message by Sri Sathya Sai Baba, October, 1971

Life is a market. In life, giving and taking, bargaining and speculating, is a part of the game.

Sri Sathya Sai

34. Where and why

The glory of Bhaarith which has illumined for centuries the hearts of humanity is awaiting the surge of the Sai Movement, through proper presentation and practical application by you, to have an even more brilliant future in the coming years. As the spark that causes the fire, as the driver in the engine drawing a long line of coaches along, as the designer and operator of a system of automatic lights, this Sai is here creating and fostering the world, and all its various communities, living and non-living.

You have gathered here as office-bearers of the units of the Sathya Sai Organisation, activating the villages and towns of this land. I am happy to be with you. You all know that this gathering has a special significance: last week, you and all those connected with the Organisation were afraid that this Conference might not meet at all, for, this country was invaded by enemies and we were in the midst of a conflict. But, today, fear and anxiety have gone and there is this atmosphere of Aanandha around you.

This Conference was decided upon by Sai, it is a Sai-nirnaya. Nothing can interrupt the realisation of that resolution. Last November, on the 23rd, the day when this Body took birth, I announced, as you know, that Bhaarith will not suffer from any calamity or distress. Therefore, when the conflict with Pakistan came about, you began doubting whether that announcement was contradicted by events. There were some who drew conclusions and started arguing according to their own notions. But, you should not count what happened until a few days ago as "war." It was only the last chapter of a conflict in existence since years, and which grew in dimensions during the last eight months. It has little to do with India; it was a struggle of one part of Pakistan with another.

People of Bhaarith will never inflict injury on others

This civil war in Pakistan forced millions of terror-stricken people to seek refuge in India; they prayed in their agony that we should help them. And, true to our traditions and our Dharma (moral code), we sacrificed a great deal and gave them food and shelter, and sent them back to their homes, after ensuring that they could be safe there and live in peace. The people of Bhaarith have never entertained any desire to expand their territory, or to inflict injury on other nationalities. They will never develop such desire hereafter also.

This is the land of the Hindhus. Him means himsa (violence, injury). Dhu means dhuur (far away from). Hindhu means, therefore, free from any desire to be violent, to cause injury or harm. This country is incapable of aggressive intentions on others. The people of Bangladesh who underwent countless tortures and travails were welcomed, treated with sympathy and care, and taken back to their homes and settled on the land which they had run away from. That is the sacred service that India did; it was no offensive against Pakistan. And, it all stopped well before this Conference.

There are still a few who are bothered with anxiety since Bhutto has become the leader of that country, and his intentions are not friendly. You need not entertain any fears on that score. It is inevitable that Pakistan might harbour some resentment at their defeat; but, that resentment cannot grow into anger sufficient to induce them to fall upon India again.

Purity of thought, word and deed is needed

Embodiments of the Divine! The welfare of the world depends on the welfare of Society; the welfare of Society depends on the welfare of the individuals who comprise it. The individual by his thoughts, words and deeds develops or undermines the welfare of Society, and thus affects the World. When the world has space and prosperity, the individual can have freedom from fear, and positive joy. Without that Aanandha, one cannot grasp the Brahman-Principle (unitive absolute), which is unsullied, immeasurable Aanandha itself.

Thri-karana-shuddhi is prescribed by the sages as essential for tasting the Aanandha of the Universal Absolute. That expression means, the purity of thought, word and deed. This purity is needed even for efficient working of the Organisation, in which you are working. In fact, it is important at all levels of human efforts. But, at the present time, there is no evidence of this purity anywhere. They play false to their professions, talking peace and fanning the flames of war.

Our Organisation must strive to correct this hypocrisy, and teach by precept and example, the straight path of sincerity and harmony. This Conference calls on scientists who are blind (though possessing eyesight) to open their eyes of wisdom, and see things whole, see things deeper than ever before. Man has become so insane that he limps though his legs are good, he is mad though his mind is sound, deaf though his ears are efficient enough; it has become urgent to warn him of this absurdity, and infuse some sanity into his behaviour. This Conference calls on him 'to awake into the higher reality.

Service of man is service offered to God

The many in the One---that is the real nature of Society. All for One, One for All, This has become a slogan rather than a fact. If it is realised in fact, you will find that it is the design of Nature that it should be so, and that it is a sign of advanced culture too. This Conference calls upon all to share their resources, power, skill and achievements with the rest. For, maanava seva

(the service of man) is really Maadhava seva (service offered to God). There are various societies rendering social service nowadays, but, the service does not warm the heart; it is done as a cold routine affair, or as a showy performance, with a great deal of expensive hullabaloo!

These societies have reduced the land to its present deplorable condition.

The inclinations of the mind, the implications of speech, and the indications of deeds have to be co-ordinated and harmonised. That is the test of the success of our Organisation; that is the surest means of achieving it. Identify the Group with which you work as your own self. Do not allow this to be a copybook maxim, but try to put it into daily practice. Through the group you can earn Samastha-samarasa-sanubhuuthi, that is to say, "awareness of, and empathy with the feelings of one and all." That is the spring of unalloyed Bliss.

We have at present persons who pride themselves on their encyclopaedic scholarship and technical skill; they claim to know the innermost secrets of Nature; they fly into outer Space and even land on the Moon. But, ask them, whether they have Aanandha and can stay in Aanandha, they will reply that they have yet to experience it. If they know everything worth knowing, why have they missed this? It is clear they are suffering under some delusion.

All are activated by one Divine Force

You, or at least the Andhras among you, would have heard or read about the pupils of Paramaanandaguru. Ten of them crossed a river, wading to the other bank. In order to find out whether all had arrived safe, one fellow counted the rest and declared there were only nine. Each of the ten counted the rest and everyone agreed there were only nine survivors. One of them had definitely been drowned. So, the ten started wailing aloud in their bereavement, and a passerby was drawn to the group in sympathy. He saw there were ten, all right. The mistake was---the man who counted left: himself out; he ignored himself, in counting the rest.

This is the mistake everyone of these encyclopaedic intellects commit; they count everyone except themselves; they know everything except the workings of their own minds, and the methods by which they can attain inner calm. So, you must know who you are, and then, if necessary, try to know about other persons and objects. Now it is all topsyturvy. Just as all these, all the Organisational units, are being activated by One Divine Force, all are activated by One Principle. Resolve to identify it and experience it; then, the purpose of the Organisation is served,

Use the unique characteristics of man---discrimination, wisdom, detachment---Viveka, Vijnana and Vairaagya---and drive at that Realisation.

To put it even more plainly, you will derive Aanandha only if you succeed in doing three exercises.

(1) Forget the thing that has to be forgotten: Forget the objective world, ignore it, it is Asath, only relatively real, not absolutely Real. Forget the A-sath. Remember the first statement in the Prayer. Asatho maa sadh gamaya--Lead me from the unreal to the Real.

(2) Give up that which has to be given up. The Jeavabhaava which is Darkness has to be given up, in order to attain Light which is the Dhevabhaava. You are not the body; you are not just an individual, not just a chance spark or a stray drop. You are a part of the Divine, a fraction of the Fire, a wave of the Ocean. This is the second statement in the Vedhic prayer---Thamaso maa ivothir gamaya---Lead me from darkness into Light.

(3) You must reach the place which you have to reach, that is, Brahmathathwa. Brahma means, expanse, limitless presence; you have to pass beyond the limit to the limitless. Limit is death; beyond it, unaffected by it, is Immortality. So the prayer cited above adds as the third statement.

Mruthyor maa amrutham gamaya---Lead me from death to Immortality.

Dharma is acting according to Truth

Do not accept the half-truth that you are a part of the objective world; hold fast to the Truth that you are Divine in essence. Your form makes you declare you are human; but, really, you are Divine. Sathyam vadha---Utter Truth, is the Vedhic injunction. And this is the Truth. And, the injunction continues, Dharmam chara. Dharma is acting according to the Truth you have known.

You have heard Pandiths expounding most elaborately the axiom, "Brahma Sathyam jagath mithya"---"Brahman alone is real, the World that is the result of a creative act, that is undergoing transformations and that will meet with disintegration, is just an appearance on the basis of that

Reality."

You might hear such discourses from Pandiths and scholars from this platform too. But, observe how tenaciously these very persons are attached to this illusory world! They voice the Truth, but, deny It by their deeds. Jagath sathyam, they announce by their deeds, Brahma mithya, they appear to aver, when we watch their way of life! This is really a matter for merciless ridicule!

Our Organisation must apply the touchstone of practice to any precept that the members might voice forth or profess. That is My desire.

The Organisation has been established, not for publicizing any person or creed, or to provide births for some ambitious individuals, from which they can exercise authority over others. It is as a means of Saadhana that the Organisation is to be understood. Take it in that attitude. Do not consider the rules as restrictions imposed by Me or as shackles on your freedom of action. They are devised to help you and others in the Saadhana you have entered upon.

Two guide-lines, peculiar to this Organisation you should not neglect: (1) Act and then advise; practise first, precept second. Unless you yourself avoid the evil habits, and the undesirable practices, don't talk against them. (2) The rules, regulations, that we have laid down for the Organisation and its Units, have to be observed, scrupulously, down to the smallest dot and dash.

If you miss a rule, the unit becomes weaker

Now, however, most of the Units do not strictly follow these rules, they appear in the lists as Samithis and Units, but, in actual working, they do not deserve the place. Consider work through the Organisation as your very process of living. That work is the food on which you live. If you miss a meal, you become weak; if you miss a rule, the Unit becomes weaker. Not merely the office-bearers, but, any one of the members, if he fails to observe any one of the rules and regulations, he is weakening the Organisation and bringing it into disrepute. Members together form the Units. Its strength, its utility, its expansion, its efficacy, depend on disciplined obedience to rules. Faith in the discipline, marked out by the rules, is as the heart to the various limbs of the Organisation. Lack of discipline is the root cause of the disorder and discord that are undermining almost all the various types of association of men, from the simplest to the most complex.

Besides these, there are certain matters I have to tell specially to the Executives and the Officebearers, matters they have to implant in their hearts: Followers of all faiths can join our Organisations; there should be no opposition to their entry; on the other hand, they must be welcomed with sincerity and looked upon as brothers and sisters. No ill-feeling should be allowed upon as brothers and sisters. No ill-feeling should be allowed to sprout in your minds against, say Pakistanis or Muslims, or Americans, as a consequence of the passing phases of history. Motivated by anger against some one, to injure and insult the innocent, is bestial behaviour. No one connected with our Organisation should participate in or encourage such reprehensible behaviour.

You must respect every individual who resides in Bhaarith as a Bhaarithheeya and love every such person. This is an Organisation dedicated to the promotion of Universal Love. Start pouring out Love to all the members of your Unit, and gradually, expand that Love to include all mankind and even the lower creatures. It is an insane idea to perform worship of God, as if He is distinct and different from creation. Do not believe that God will be pleased if He is so marked out, separated and set apart.

Carry on the activities without any trace of negligence Love the God that is in all men, worship Him, offer Him what you can, dedicate to Him the Aanandha that you have. Do your daily duty with the Aanandha you fill your worship with. Be glad you have a duty to fulfil, a role to play in the dharma He is directing! Others have other roles. Others have their exits and entrances, their words to utter at the appropriate times, their gestures, their actions to go through. They are as earnest in their roles as you are in yours. Don't try to impose your roles on them!

Office bearers should resolve to carry on the activities of their Units on the lines laid down, without trace of negligence. From now, the usual practice of meeting once a year in Conference, passing a few resolutions with great furore, and casting them aside that very day, will not be of any avail. Only those units of the Organisation are authentic, wherein the office-bearers practise and experience spiritual Aanandha, through adherence to the lines laid down here. The rest are mere nominal; they burden the lists with their names, and should be immediately removed.

Enough for us, if there remain one or two where practice and preaching are correct and sincere.

Quality is accepted; quantity is of no consequence.

A place in the Samithi is for constant saadhana

The District Presidents and the State Presidents have read reports of the activities of the Organisation in their areas; they also send them to Me, off and on.

They contain routine activities of a demonstrative nature, but, few items that elevate and enthuse.

They mention 'poor feeding'

(a word they are not ashamed to use), visits to hospitals, bhajans 'in jails, nagara sankeerthan, etc. For whose sake were these done? Not for the sake of the poor, or the patients or the prisoners, but remember, for your own sake! You take food for your own sake, you take medicine to cure your own illness, don't you?

You serve, for the sake of deriving Aanandha, for the sake of realising your kinship with others, for approaching nearer and nearer to God who is in all, for your own mental and spiritual health and efficiency. Be convinced of that. You join the Samithi, you share in its activities, for your own sake; not for the sake of Sathya Sai or the Samithi started in that name. If you feel that you can earn fame or name, or social status, or some other type of gain by entering this Organisation, there is no place for you in it. This is a place for Saadhana, constant, vigilant Saadhana (spiritual striving).

Those who have some thing specially important, some new and fruitful programme that they have adopted and found beneficent, they may now come forward to report on them. Why use the little time that we can spare to listen to routine reports and common items, which are observed everywhere? We must pay attention now more to the investigation into the causes for our not being able to achieve the success desired; you are welcome to elucidate the problem with your own suggestions, for, this is a gathering called together to develop Aanandha and accord. Where' have you failed and why?---think of these two problems.

Then this Conference shall pay special attention to two fields of activity: Health and Education. I desire that more attention must be paid by you in the coming year to these two fields of service.

A sound body is the essential requisite for a sound mind and a sound mind ensures a sound body.

Health and education are intertwined fields. Engage your thoughts in these directions and make this gathering fruitful.

Madras, 22-12-1971

You can bolt your doors and windows against thieves, but, who can bolt the door against Death? The thieves---lust, anger, greed attachment, pride and hate---are honoured as welcome guests and the real well wishers like tranquillity and humility are shown the door.

Sri Sathya Sai

35. The Royal Road

THE resolutions made at this Conference, the rules and regulations flamed here for the Units of the Organisation, must be taken by you as the Royal Road to the Divine Presence. They render the journey smooth and quick. As children of Bhaarith, you have to foster the ideals of its ancient culture guarding it by the discipline these rules prescribe. So far, as a result of mental and intellectual weakness, you are finding it impossible to adhere to those ideals and to observe the vow and restrictions that they impose. Though we have been laying down many rules, and restrictions and guidelines during the last five years for the proper working of the Units, and emphasising their importance, they have been more misused than made-use-of for the betterment of the Organisation.

 As a result of misuse, you find yourselves helpless in cleansing the blemishes in your own minds and eradicating the evils rampant in society. The brightness of the sky is hidden by a thick fog; so too, the fog of evil and vice darkens the heart and breeds atheism and other diseases. This has made you forget the very purpose of your existence, as well as of the Organisation, which has been established to help you. Take note of this while yet you may. Some men enter into even Aadhyathmic (spiritual) Organisations and secure places of importance there, with various ambitions and plans. They believe, often sincerely, that their own plans are the best and their methods are the best, spiritually. Many might do this on account of sheer ignorance of the purpose and plan of the Sathya Sai Organisation, which they enter. But, ignorance is no excuse! Aathma has no birth or death, nor it grows or weakens. The nature of electricity is still a mystery; but man has devised a thousand ways of benefitting by it. Electricity is found everywhere, in nature; but, it: can be collected, stored and utilised only through certain contrivances designed by man. The spiritual Aathma Shakthi (inner divine power) that is also everywhere is stored in a body and passed through the thin wires or nerves, it illumines and directs activity. These activities have to be oriented towards Aanandha, and not attachments to temporary pleasures. The Life Principle that flows as intelligence through every cell and nerve is also a reflection of the Aathma. That which is born has also to die; coming implies going. That which has no birth has no death either. The Aathma has no birth, no death, nor can you say, it spreads or grows, or weakens. It has no history, it is, that is all that can be said about it. It is ever Intelligence, ever Bliss. There is the urge to desire a thing; that is named Ichchaa Shakthi---but, it too is a derivative of the Aathma Shakthi, the Divine that is your core. Realise it as such and do not demean it by desiring deleterious objects. Desire, so sublimated, is the basis of Prema (Love). It is the fruit of the tree of God-ward directed Ichchaa shakthi. The fruit has the bitter rind (Maaya) and the hard seeds (the cognition of distinctions); these have to be discarded, and the sweetness tasted. That sweet juice is the Aanandha the Aathma confers. Of course there are a few fortunate individuals who imbibe the juice itself, without the labour of peeling off the rind and picking out the seeds. Prahlaadha was of this kind---unaffected by Maaya or by the folly of 'awareness of distinctions'. From his very birth, he knew only the sweetness of the Name of the Lord, of the juice of the fruit from the Tree of Love. Each one of you has to pass through three stages. No boy can join college, the moment he steps into school. Several stages have to be reached and got over---the Primary, the Middle, the Secondary, the Higher Secondary, and the Intermediate; so too, we have in the spiritual path, the stages of Work, Worship, Wisdom and finally, Sacrifice. Sacrifice is when the ripe fruit falls from the tree, sacrificing its affection and attachment, weaning itself away from its support and sustenance. Work is for the physical level; worship for the mental and wisdom for spiritual. You have to pass through the three stages, each one of you. When I say you, there are three you's! The one you think you are---namely, the body, the physical person; the one others think you are, the mental you, your passions, emotions, impulses, attitudes, beliefs, feelings; and the one you really are, namely, the Aathma, the Spirit, the real Reality of your Personality. Now, you must examine whether the Unit for which you are responsible is in the primary stage or any higher stage. Judging from the fact that this is the fifth year, we can assert that the Organisation is now in the Middle School stage---a stage during which discipline has to be vigilantly observed, so that the High School and College stages might prove beneficial. The larger the number of storeys you wish to erect, the deeper the foundation has to be laid. You are planning to construct the supremely majestic tower of Aathma-Realisation, and therefore, great attention has to be paid to the provision of a solid foundation of faith and discipline, of dedication and surrender. Examine your own activities in these Units and judge for yourselves, whether such a foundation is being laid therein. Follow the path laid down by saints. Man has increased his capacity of construction and destruction a million-fold, by means of yanthras (machines) he has put together. An atom bomb causes destruction which several armies cannot accomplish. So too in the spiritual field, the latent forces in man can achieve the stupendous task of piercing the mystery of the Universe, through the manthras he had discovered. Manthra means 'potent formula'. Man makes yanthras; manthra makes man! The maker of yanthras is called a scientist; the knower of manthra is called a saint. When you follow the path laid down by the saints you can be sure of success, for, they have laid it with the purest of intentions, and with the noblest of ideals.

The Lord is neither in Heaven, nor in Kailaash or Vaikuntha or Swarg. To believe that He is manifest only in one place or location and to journey thither is a superstition much to be deplored. He is everywhere, in every one, at all times. He is the witness of all, in all. He is the energy that fills space and time, and He is the energy that manifests as causation. The Organisation must implant this 'Truth in the minds of the members and spread this Truth, without fear and fumble. It must reveal man to himself, as a visible, moving embodiment of Divinity, in whom God shines, through whom God beckons.

God is to be worshipped in and through man. This is the message that you have to put into daily practice. This is the main plank of the programme you have to carry out. You should not import the tactics and tricks of political power-hunting into the Units. Nor should there be any trace of dislike or distrust, on the score of nationality, language, caste, economic status, scholarship, age or sex. Revere the Aathma and derive aathma-aanandha (spiritual bliss) through Love.

God is the origin of all languages

Why attach false values to these exterior symbols? Why develop prejudice for the reason that a man was born on the other side of a political boundary, or calls on God in another language?

God is the origin of all languages. Boundaries shift and are subject to revision, resettlement, and change. Twenty years ago, when some one from Bombay asked a farmer of Puttaparthi, where he belonged to, he got the reply, 'I am from Madras State.' But, Madras State has since broken into Aandhra State, and Tamil Nadu, so that the Aandhras and the Thamils have started developing antagonistic loyalties and a new narrow ideal.

These are man-made differences, and should not interfere with Godward activities. God has made the Universe as one single home for one single family. Each State is but an apartment in that mansion. Members of the Organisation must extend Love and Respect to persons belonging to any State, any religion, any caste or community, and speaking any language.

To give you a small example: It happened just a week ago. A few years ago, in 1965, both

Bangala Desh and Pakistan (they were both one State then) invaded India; recently, Bangla Desh sought refuge with India, since Pakistan decided to hold it down by terrorising the people! The people of Bhaarith did not in the least remember the enmity of the people of Bangla Desh in the past against them in their hour of mortal distress. They welcomed them with brotherly Love, and helped them with food, shelter and clothing, and saved millions of them from extinction.

Love ignores logics, Seva respects no syllogism

One can understand the spirit of renunciation and the depth of tolerance that is inherent in Indian noble response. Whoever is afflicted with calamity, at whatever time under whatever conditions, your heart must react without delay in sympathy shown in some practical manner. No one should be condemned as trash; even a little stick can serve as a tooth-pick!

God has not made any man, wholly bad or wholly good; your likes and dislikes are inducing you to label them as such.

Office-bearers of the Organisation, strive to establish yourselves more firmly in your own Truth, and strive to demonstrate in your behaviour that you are aware of the Truth that all men are sparks of the same Divine-Spirit. I consider Seva (service) as the most important activity of the Samithi, for it is the highest Saadhana. Do not entangle yourselves in pros and cons, in arguments for and against, whether this way or that, they are the consequence of wrong or perverted scholarship. Love ignores logics; Seva respects no syllogism. Try to observe the rules that have been framed through Love, to canalise the Love that you are required to cultivate. I have said this so often that all of you know my mind already--- " Start the Day with Love. Spend the Day with Love. Fill the Day with Love. End the Day with Love.

That is the Way of God."

The Samithi is the heart and units are the limbs

First, it has been decided that the Sathya Sai Seva Samithi will hereafter be the key unit, of the Organisation. Units like Sathya Sai Sathsang, the Sathya Sai Baala Vikaas, the Sathya Sai Study Circle, the Sathya Sai Bhajana Mandali, and the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal will be subordinate to the Samithi, and supervised by it. The Samithi is the heart, and the units are the limbs. The limbs cannot act independently, as if they are a law unto themselves.

During the Third All India Conference, the Mahila Vibhaag (the Unit in charge of women's activities) was separated from the men's sections; but, they were not affiliated and placed under the guidance of the Samithi concerned. Of course, the Vibhaag can have its own Chairman and Secretary, but both have to follow the advice and suggestions of the Chairman of the Seva Samithi, and the rules laid down for the Samithi.

Each town shall have a single Samithi (organisation and unit); it shall not have more than one. It may have within its jurisdiction a hundred Bhajan Mandalis or a hundred groups engaged in various other activities. But, there shall be only one Samithi. Limits and activities of the Samithi Baala Vikaas (child progress section) and Seva Dhal---these are only limbs of the Samithi. But, Baala Vikaas, we have decided, will be the special activity of the Mahila Vibhaag alone. For, women can in a unique way, deal with children lovingly, affectionately, intelligently, and enthusiastically. The Baala Vikaas shall take in children in the age group of 5 to 12. From the age of 12 up to 18, children shall be in the Junior Seva Dhal. From 18 till 30, they will serve in the Seva Dhal, and after 30 they are entitled to become members of the Seva Samithis, especially those who evince dedication and a high sense of service.

When the Baala Vikaas movement spreads, and children are ready to join High Schools, High Schools can be opened to receive them and continue their education on lines in tune with the ideals of the Organisation, and with the establishment of Sathya Sai colleges, the process will be completed entirely under Sathya Sai auspices. Thus, the resurgent culture of Bhaarith will be built on strong foundations. Men teachers can run Baala Vikaas classes; but, they can have only boys as pupils.

Another course of action that was decided upon today is this: You all know that books are being written by all kinds of people in all manners of style and content, urged by all types of fancy, mostly with an eye on personal profit. But, hereafter, this shall stop: no book shall be published on Sai Literature as suits the fancy of the writer or the publisher. There is a Registered Body named the Shri Sathya Sai Education Foundation. The manuscript has to be submitted to the Foundation, and published through the Foundation in the manner approved by them. For, books transform or deform the faculties of man. Many write books with no relevance or experience, relying solely on their imagination and so, people are left in the wilderness, unable to separate fact from fiction, truth from falsehood.

Flow of information must be unbroken and steady

Again in almost all the languages of India and in English, we have a number of periodicals, under different names---Shaanthi, Prashaanthi, Sudha, Sanaathana Saarathi, etc.---causing confusion and complications. So, we shall have only a single monthly magazine in each language called everywhere, Sanaathana Saarathi. From now on, it will not be possible for these periodicals to be published according to the will and pleasure of people. If they are left as they are, there is likelihood of lowering of standards and even financial loss for the parties, and consequent distress. So, it has been decided to place the Sanaathana Saarathi of each linguistic area, on sound footing, both financially and in the range and authority of content.

Another important matter: The Organisation is not yet organised effectively! Reports of activities from the Units do not reach the Samithi, the Samithis are not reporting to the District Presidents and they in turn fail to inform the State Presidents, who are unable to present a full picture of the activities of the State to Me. The flow of information from below and of instruction and inspiration from above must be unbroken and steady.

Adherence to these rules will strengthen the Organisation, which has as its aim the fostering of Bhaarithheeya culture as the example for the whole of humanity. This Organisation believes that the Aathma in each is the Aathma in all and that the God that each worships is the God that all worship. You cannot insist that in the Bhajans only songs on Sathya Sai should be sung!

Fanaticism of that kind I very much dislike and condemn. For, all names and all forms denote Me only! You betray your ignorance of My truth when you stick to any one of My names and avoid the rest. When you have identified the Aathma principle and experienced its Glory, you pass beyond the realm of rules; but, until then, limits and lines of conduct have to be honoured.

Use of the symbols of the Organisation

The State Presidents have to pay immediate attention to this further point. In some States, peoples have started publicising the manifestations of My Power, and converting themselves into propagandists with a view to making a profit out of the transaction.

There are some Units doing this type of business, still existing inside the Organisation. You must decide to dissociate these Units from the Organisation. Using our Name, many collect donations and contributions; so, those who are not aware of the norms of this Organisation are being misled and deceived. Efforts must be made to remove from the Organisation any one, however rich, however renowned as a scholar, however influential and important in society, if he transgresses the rules of Organisation.

This must be done as soon as the transgression is known. In Kerala and in Mysore States, this has to be done without delay and without compunction.

The symbol of the Organisation is "the Harmony of Religions, the Unity of all Faiths, the Acceptance of all Approaches." I find that this symbol is now being indiscriminately used in badges, letter heads, wedding cards, etc. and it is also being adapted and changed according to individual fancy by the users. This is creating confusion; for, there is no one identifiable symbol for the units of the Organisation or for the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal, etc. You must resolve to adopt the same design for letter heads used in official correspondence, the same symbol for badges all over the country. If you travel along the royal road of faith and discipline, you can reach the Royal Palace which you long to enter.

Understand the basic similarities of various religions

Four stages are mentioned in the spiritual progress: Saalokya (being in the Palace), Saameepya (being in the immediate Presence), Saaruupya (being privileged to be clothed with a share of regal authority) and Saavyujya (becoming King oneself). In the Bible, Christ is said to have announced first, that he was Messenger from God, later, that he was the Son of God, and finally, that "I and My Father are One." Then, there is the further declaration of Identity with the Holy Ghost, too. In the Quran too, similar ideas are propounded. The Sathya Sai Organisation has to seek out chances of studying and substantiating these basic similarities and promote love and mutual co-operation.

These rules we are laying down might appear to some of you as knife-thrusts or hammer-strokes; but, they are meant to heal, and to weld. Bow to them and observe them in action sincerely--- your path will be soft and smooth, like a path strewn with floral petals. I bless you that you adhere to them and receive the benefits of discipline and devotion.

Madras, 23-12-1971

See all as but expressions of the same God, as appearances on the same screen, as bulbs lit by the same current, though of manifold colours and wattage.

Feel that you and they are able to talk and walk, think and act because of the God within.

Differences that strike you while you cast your eyes are illusory; you have not yet developed the vision that makes you apprehend the unity which is the truth of all the seeming diversity, that is all!

The fault is in you, not the world. The world is One; but, each takes it to mean what pleases him most!

Sri Sathya Sai

36. Heroic adventure

GOD gave this body so that you may use it to sanctify Time, through beneficial acts. Of course, man is ever anxious that he should get contentment and joy, as soon as possible with as little exertion as possible. But, he places more confidence on material comforts and material possessions, hoping that they can yield joy and content. There is no effort by him to ensure being born in good circumstances and surroundings. Goodness is natural to man; it is his nature, when it is untarnished. But, man relishes the tarnish, not the pure core. Falsehood with all its enticements is liked more than truth which wears simple clothes only.

Consider this: Milk and curds are sold in the streets by vendors who shout about the excellence of their ware, but, no one runs to open the door, call them in and purchase the health-giving nectar! Toddy and arrack (home brewed liquors) are sold far from the village bounds; but, yet, people tramp the distance to where they are available, pay the price with no bargaining and consume the poisonous stuff, which robs them of all dignity!

This is the tragedy! Good counsel though given with love is seldom listened to. Bad talk attracts people so much that they walk miles to listen to scandal and abuse!

Man yields to senses instead of challenging them

The essential nature of man is Divinity; his strength is that of the unconquerable spirit. But, this hero has reduced himself to a zero, and is grovelling in fear and falsehood! To achieve his nefarious plans, man is demonstrating courage and confidence. Once his mind is set on vengeance or crime, man becomes a fierce animal, ready to inflict wanton cruelties. Or the heroism is channelled into mountain climbing, deep sea diving or walking on space, or other adventurous acts.

But, the most heroic adventure of all, the conquest of the senses and of their pulls is yet beyond him. When the senses challenge him he yields, instead of challenging them in return and overpowering them. Consider only the masters of their own impulses and passions as Heroes!

And, no other.

Look at Vaalmeeki. He was a brave dacoit; he was an intrepid highway robber, dreaded by all who journeyed on that road. One day, the Seven Sages happened to pass along that fateful road; they revealed to him how wicked his actions were, and painted before his mind's eye the horrors he was becoming heir to, as a result. They told him that those who now enjoyed the fruits of his robbery will not be sharers of those horrors, for, he alone was the culprit and he alone will have to suffer the punishment.

That was enough to open his eyes; he left: off his evil pursuit and forsook family, profession and wealth. He retired into the jungle and plunged into the severest austerities. He became a New Hero, the hero of a new type of adventure. He became a great sage, honoured by posterity as the First Poet, the author of the Raamaayana.

He gave up toddy and arrack, that is to say, the senses and their intoxicating poisons; he developed a taste for milk and curds, the Saathwik (pure) virtues, mastery over himself, the victory that confers the highest and the purest Joy.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, November 1971

Make your heart soft; then, success is quick in saadhana. Talk soft, talk sweet, talk only of God---that is the process of softening the subsoil.

Develop compassion, sympathy; engage in service, understand the agony of poverty, disease, distress and despair; share both tears and cheers with others.

That is the way to soften the heart, and help saadhana to succeed.

Sri Sathya Sai

37. Bhajan as saadhana

THE Scriptures lay down Bhajan (group devotional singing), Naamasmaran (Remembering God's Name) and Sankeerthan (devotional music) as the Saadhanas (spiritual practices) of this Age. Bhajan is the process of singing your prayers to God, praising His glory and compassion, and pleading that He may fill you with His Grace. Dr. Hislop has as a result of many years of research, declared that prayer has a highly curative effect on the body and mind of man. That is the result of constant Bhajan and recital of the Name. Every Unit of the Organisation is enjoined to arrange for Nagarasankeerthan (moving choirs) to go around the streets, in the early hours of the day, Bhajan every evening and morning, for this very reason.

But, Bhajan should not be gone through, as a painful necessity; it has to be a thrilling experience, which must leave the participants full of pure energy and elevated enthusiasm. But, this does not happen now. Either it is too mechanical or it is a medium for some people to exhibit their talents.

The Bhajans are sung to parade one's compositions and these are sung during the group sittings, as if they are rehearsed there. The others are not able to follow; so they allow their minds to wander. Sing familiar Bhajans, so that all can share in the Aanandha. Also, pay attention to the tune, the meaning, the variety, the voice, the raaga, the thaal (the tune and the beat) and other fine points of the Bhajans. If your voice is not pleasant or sweet, keep quiet; that is the best service you can do.

Do not cause discontent, discord and disharmony, insisting on singing, because you are an office-bearer, or something! The Bhajans must be sweet to the ear, arousing pictures of the glory and grandeur of Godhead, in the mind of the singers and listeners; they must refer to various

Names and Forms of God, so that the Bhajan Sessions might fill every one with ecstasy. Bhajan is a Saadhana for all who share in it; that is why it is prescribed, for every Unit.

Advice should come out of personal experience

Youth is often found fault with by elders today, that they have lost reverence, humility, and piety that they ridicule temples, religious services and all signs of adoration or devotion directed towards God. They do not learn the art of meditation or sense-control, but cater to the most trivial whims, without regard to their harmful effects. All this is due to the hypocrisy of the elders. Those who teach them or preach to them about the rules of morality and religion, are patently breaking those very rules. They lead such atrociously wrong lives; but, they admonish, advise, and harangue, without the slightest twinge of conscience. This is easily discovered by the sharp-eyed young men and women. How then can they revere the parent or teacher, the elder or leader, the writer or the speaker, who sets about the task of 'educating' the rising generation? Let advice come out of personal experience; otherwise, keep mum! The very fact that you are happy and contented, while having faith in God, will induce others to develop faith; that is the best method of preaching.

15-1-1972

You desire to drink a sweet drink, but instead of sugar, you drop salt into the cup, imagining salt to be sugar. That is the state of man, today. He craves for peace, but, does not know how to attain it.

The means he adopts do not lead him to the anticipated end. So, all the thirst and craving are just a pose; it is a fashionable slogan, and nothing more.

Man must be sincere; his word must be in conformity with his feeling; his action must be in conformity with his word. Resolve on this practice, at least from today. Do not be false to yourself

Sri Sathya Sai

38. Give and gain

For a world pursuing ever-receding happiness and peace and, as a consequence, blinded by the fog of disappointment and disease, the Divine is the Pillar of Light, that indicates the path to progress. Man has inherited this Realm of Work, this world which is but a vast factory, where he himself is fashioned from manhood to Godhood, if only he applies his energy and skill, diligently to the transformation. Man must work, every moment of his life; he cannot avoid this burden. His very existence depends upon action, exertion, work. And, work results in either good or bad, big or small, powerful or paltry. So, man has to be active on the right lines, in order to avoid evil and pain. That is the duty he owes to himself.

There may be differences among men, in physical strength, financial status, intellectual acumenbut, all are equal in the eye of God; all have the right and the potentiality to achieve the goal of beggar to the merging in Him. Note that everyone, from the beggar to the billionaire, is prompted by the urge to achieve Aanandha, supreme bliss, based on inner peace, unaffected by ups and downs. Every activity however elementary or earth-shaking, is subservient to this ideal.

This Bliss Divine is not manufactured by any company, nor available in any shop. It is not something that can be earned from outside, and added to the sum of one's possessions. It has to sprout and grow from within, and fostered and treasured within.

The individual cannot thrive in isolation

Take the case of the contentment and pleasure that food imparts. A hungry man may hold bundles of currency notes in his grasp, or even plenty of eatables; but, unless he consumes the eatables or converts the currency into consumable food and eats them, and they become parts of him, no sense of satisfaction, can arise. Similarly, bliss too is an inner experience, an elevating exhilarating inner calm. It cannot be gained by the accumulation of impediments like cars and houses, land and gold, stocks and shares. How can a cash-box appease hunger or a pass book give peace? Aanandha is the goal that all seek, either individually or through social activity.

Man is a social being, for, he can use society to urge him on towards the goal; society hands over to him the know-how; it gives him the training. It is not a haphazard group which gives him facilities for sensual pleasure; it should not be conceived in that light. Its purpose is much nobler.

It is not an instrument for promoting his pursuit of power, authority or personal advance.

Pleasure, pride, dominance, food---these ideals man shares with the bird and the beast. But; he is endowed with intelligence, discrimination, a sense of right, the skill to store knowledge in language and transmit it to subsequent generations. He knows that the security and stability of society is his own security and stability. The individual cannot thrive in isolation. This is the basis of the Vedhic prayer, Lokaa samasthaas sukhino bhavanthu--"May all worlds be happy."

Man has to contribute his best, for the happiness of others, so that he may be happy.

Renunciation makes life worthwhile

And, what is the best he can contribute? Each has his particular duty, task, role as an individual and as a member of the society to which he belongs. Do that duty, carry on that task, play that role, as best as you can; that is how one can fulfil himself. The body tangles with health only when every limb, muscle, nerve, and artery and cell does its duty efficiently and well. So too, a factory or a society or a workshop can be happy, healthy, only when each worker or individual does his duty or functions well.

But, it has become difficult nowadays to discover any one who is aware of his duty as a unit of the organisation or society to which he belongs or to the country or nation or to the world. Unless one develops virtue, uses skill, intelligence and discrimination in the most beneficial manner, directs his physical might with restraint, his life is wasted in bitterness and grief of others.

The Vedhas declare: Na karmanaa, na prajayaa dhanena, thyaagenaike amruthathwam aanashuh---"Not by acts, nor by riches, nor by progeny, but, only by renunciation alone can immortality be gained." Renunciation, detachment; sacrifice, giving up---this alone can ensure the highest Realisation, Eternal Bliss. Renunciation is the Law of Life.

That is why life is worthwhile and a source of happiness.
You have to exhale what you inhale, eliminate what you have consumed, the blood that comes in at one point has to be immediately passed on to the adjacent point; it cannot be retained when it is received, for that would result in a boil, or some other serious illness. It is the same, in the social, economic, political and spiritual fields. This lesson that everything will be added into the person who gives up everything was taught in India since ages.
Hence, India shone as the Thyaaga bhuumi, the Yoga bhuumi and the Karma bhuumi---the land of renunciation, the land of self-control and the land of uplifting activity. When the thyaaga (renunciation) way of life was neglected, it has slid into the roga (illness) way of life, a life full of weeping and wailing, of clamour for food at other people's doors.
Udhyaoga without yoga will be a handicap How can thyaaga develop without Yoga, the control of the agitations of desire, in the mind? You may have airconditioning, but without the conditioning of the mind, how can there be peace?
You may control prices, production of steel or cloth, the distribution of food-grains, and a number of other things and processes; but unless you have mind control, the rest are barren exercises. Mind control is more heroic and beneficial than any other system of control. A running train cannot be stopped, even if thousands hang on to it and pull it back but a tiny button in the engine, when it is pressed by the driver can bring it to a halt. So too, the mind, if controlled can bring to a halt, all the various functions which are sought to be controlled. Now, enormous time and money are wasted to achieve unessential targets, but, the most important target, namely, mind control is being neglected. Yoga is the name for that system of control. Now, Yoga is neglected; Udh-yoga (job) is being sought after. Udhyaoga without yoga will be a handicap, a hindrance.
This is the reason why an insidious disease is now spreading fast--- strikes! Strikes everywhere for everything by everybody---from the cooks in the kitchen to the custodians of law and order!
The interests of the owner and the workers, the employer and the employees are intertwined; one cannot thrive without the other; they have to be of each other.

Problems and tangles are bound to arise; both parties have the right and duty to solve them by mutual consultations and adjustments.
Faith has to be cultivated, first and foremost The owner is the heart of the organisation; those who work in it, in the various fields of activity necessary to carry out its objectives are the limbs. The heart has to keep the limbs active; the limbs have to sustain the heart. Only these two are kin; only they are involved in the endeavour; the co-ordination is between these two, no third part; can set the problems aright. It is best to solve problems mutually, in love and with understanding. The welfare of both should not be hampered by ignorance or emotion.
The secrets of individual and social peace have been discovered in this land of Bhaarith long ago. They have been put in practice for ages. It is a pity that in this very land, we have quarrels, fights, factions between individuals, villages, cities, communities and states. This is assuming the proportions of an earthquake, for, it is now a universal feature, affecting even the foundations of the human community.
Faith has to be cultivated, first and foremost. It has to be nurtured in love; love is fostered by shaanthi (equanimity). Shaanthi can be got only when there is full reliance on God, complete surrender to the Divine Will.
If virtue is lost, it is lost for ever The Peace of the World depends on peace and amity between nations; the peace of nations depends upon the peace between the concomitant units, the villages, the families and finally, the individuals of each family. So, every individual has a responsibility to love others, have faith in them, and revere them as sparks of the Divine. Every man has to cultivate the virtues of tolerance, forbearance and brotherliness.
If one loses wealth, he may regain it, by some ruse or other. If he loses health, some doctor might prescribe a tonic to win it; back. If one loses status and authority, he may by sheer pluck gain them back. If virtue is lost, it is lost for ever; nothing can restore the pristine purity. So one has to be ever vigilant and never slacken.
The greatest of the virtues is Love. Love is the basis of character. You may have all other desirable things in plenty; but, if you have no character, that is to say, virtue, which is all strung on Love you can have no genuine peace. Money comes and goes! But, morality? It comes and grows! Morality has to be grown in the heart by feeding it with Love, then only we can have justice, security, law and order. If love declines among the people, nations will weaken and mankind will perish. Duty is God, Work is Worship. Love is the spring wheel of a factory. One has to work along with hundreds of others, with different temperaments, so one has to learn forbearance and equanimity. One has to create an atmosphere of tranquility around oneself. No one should be looked upon with envy, malice or hatred. Tranquility can be promoted, if each one does his duty, faithfully and efficiently; that is the highest Saadhana also. Duty is God; Work is Worship. When you do your duty to the best of your ability and skill, and to the best advantage of the organisation of which you are a limb, you have worshipped God and He will certainly be pleased. Your life is amidst yanthras (machines); when you convert your work into worship, the atmosphere will be one of manthras (formulae of praise of God), and not of yanthras! It is indeed a matter for surprise that the Kamaanis have ventured to start this enterprise, at a time when complicated problems are filling the industrial as well as other worlds. It is a bold adventurous step. The Kamaanis rely, more than anything else, on Divine Grace. That is the reason why I am here, inaugurating this factory, and giving you this message. This is real worship---the provision of livelihood for thousands of people through this enterprise. They are prepared to start even more factories, since they have firm faith in Divine Grace, which is sure to bless all such attempts. When man is not gainfully employed in congenial jobs, his mind wanders into devious ways and unsocial activities. When enough work is given to the mind and body, health and happiness and social security are sure to be found. One feels that life is not in vain. The Kamaanis are very good employers. All the Kamaani Brothers are living together in the same household in mutual love and hearty co-operation. It is a very happy home. I can assert that it is an ideal home, because I have observed them constantly for long. The family consists of a fairly large number of members; everyone is interested in spiritual practices and is engaged in some Saadhana or other, in the search for Aanandha. This factory run by them will reflect the same love and mutual co-operation among the workers and the Kamaanis, for this is an extension of the same unit. By maintaining this atmosphere, they can give joy to you, and you can give joy to them. I desire that you have, in this factory, some kind of Sathsang (devotional gathering), every week, when you can focus thoughts on the glory of God. You can meet every Sunday, at about 4.30 in the evening and engage yourselves in Bhajan (group devotional singing), or listen to some musical discourse, or some lecture on spiritual subjects or saintly personages. This will also keep you away from vulgar films, card games and other debilitating pursuits. Methods of recreation that weaken physical or mental strength have to be avoided. Re-create them, by making the mind dwell on the Divine. Peace and prosperity cannot drop down from the sky; they have to be striven for and acquired by sincere effort, dedicated to God, with intense and pure devotion; they have to be won by the cultivation of love, humility and reverence. Let the ideal Brotherhood of Man and Fatherhood of God guide you and lead you from success to success. Bangalore, 3-2-1972 39. Thou and That EVERYONE engaged in teaching or learning or administering this institution where these three processes are carried on must try to know for what purpose they should be done and how best they can be done. After years of steady and impartial research, the sages of India have said that education has as its goal the realization of the Aathma (divine Self) and the manifestation of its inherent attributes of Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being, awareness and bliss). Apart from instincts, impulses, emotions and passions which man shares with the beasts, he has some unique attributes like the urge to renounce and to serve, to attach himself to Truth, and to cultivate the qualities of tolerance, and forbearance. The Sathya Sai Colleges are endeavouring to encourage the manifestation of those and related traits of the higher character, and thereby to re-establish the spiritual renown of India. The very endeavour gives these young men a sense of joy and happy enthusiasm. You heard Satish of the Second year B.Com. class speak from his heart on the equanimity, peace and calm that the practice of the Saadhana of the constant Presence of God has given him. The Aanandha the boys have will certainly inspire their parents, their kith and kin and others. The youth of India will turn towards the path leading to Aanandha with as much alacrity (or even more) as they are now evincing in moving along the path leading to anxiety, fear and destruction. Therefore, there is no room for despondency. When these students become teachers, the number who can voyage happily on an even keel through the turbulent sea of life will increase. Injustice, untruth, unrighteousness will all be recognised as disgraceful, demeaning Social evils, instead of being tolerated as necessary evils. Truth, Justice, Love and Peace shall soon return to earth.

The first step in the life-long pilgrimage The reorganisation of education is one of the many means towards this end. The Foundation Stone for the College Buildings that was laid now by the Governor of Mysore State is a step in this process, during which Colleges engaged in preparing the new generation, on proper lines will come up in every State of India. This Day is celebrated as Yugaadhi (Thelugu New Year day); the beginning of a New era. Every Era or span of time is called Yuga. The first Yuga according to the Puraanas was Kritha, when Truth reigned supreme. Next the Thretha Age or Yuga appeared---when the ideals of Righteous Living were upheld. In the Dwaapara Yuga that followed, the cleansing and sharpening of the intellect (Inaanadheva thu Kaivalyam) in order to realize the Reality was propagated as the means to save mankind. In this Kali Yuga, the paths of devotion, of righteous deeds and of the acquisition of wisdom are all declared equally effective, so that people of different dispositions and temperaments can have the fortunate chance of the Truth being revealed to them. Education must open these paths before the children. When the child is first initiated into the alphabet, this ceremony is called Akshara-abhyaasa--Practice of the indestructible! Kshara is the material, objective, created, seen, experienced. A-kshara is the non-material, subjective, creator, witness, experiencer. The letter A is the first step in this life-long pilgrimage to the source of life, Light and Love, the Divine, the Truth. It is a pilgrimage that ends when the emerged is merged in that from which it has emerged, when Thou realize that it is That, when Thwam knows that it is Thath. The stow of billions of births and deaths is summarised in the three words Thath Thwam Asi.

The true Guru is Thath (That) and he reveals to Thwam (Thou), the fact of Asi (art). The true pupil is he Thwam thirsty for Tath and anxious to acquire the Asi wisdom.

Brindhaavan, 16-3-1972

Love is no merchandise; do not bargain about its cost. Let it flow clear from the heart, as a stream of Truth, a river of wisdom. Let it not emanate from the head, nor from the tongue. Let it emerge, full and free, from the heart. This is the highest duty, the noblest Godliness.

Sri Sathya Sai

40. The toughest armour

INDIA has, at present, a great responsibility. She has to preserve in its pristine purity the culture she has inherited from the hoary past. This is a duty she owes to the world. That culture enshrines the highest human values and the most valid of keys to the understanding of human destiny. She must also spread these teachings among all mankind, in order that the cause of Truth and Universal Harmony and Peace be promoted. And, the teachings have to be lived and practised and experienced by every Indian, so that they may be listened to with faith by those for whom they are intended. Mere propaganda, without the proof of practical application discernible in the propagandist will bear no fruit. So everyone must study the elements of this Culture and live the ideals laid down therein; that is the best means of spreading it. In other countries, there is a composite culture, a certain uniformity of faith, and only a few religions of a kindred nature claiming the obeisance of the people. But, in India, we see the co-existence and even the co-operation of many faiths, many traditions and many culture-traits. India is a beautiful garden, where multicoloured beds of flowers add charm and fragrance to life. Every citizen of India has the privilege and pleasure of guarding and tending this lovely garden of Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Love. Indians have to cherish the memory of their martyrs How did this country become the source of this great message of Truth? A long line of heroes and martyrs struggled to set the example and elevate the ideal; they suffered untold misery and had often to sacrifice their all, including their lives, in their struggle. But, they won in the end and it is that heritage and memory that you have to cherish and foster. King Harischandhra willingly faced a series of tribulations and tortures in his single-pointed pursuit of Truth. The Paandavas exiled themselves into the forest for thirteen years and bore extreme penury and dishonour, in their determination to uphold Truth. Sri Raama was the very embodiment of Truth and Morality. From time immemorial, this country has made truth and righteous conduct the foundations of its culture. Every act and movement--material, moral, administrative and adhyathmic (spiritual)---has been tested and evaluated on the touchstone of Truth and Morality.

Here, no person can be honoured as great unless he is also good.

Truth and Dharma (Right Conduct) are the most effective armour for us. Other countries rely on atom bombs and hydrogen bombs; for us, these two shields are enough. Some of you know, I believe, the story of Paandavas. Dharmaraaja (born of Dharma) was the eldest brother. He had on either side of him, the brothers Bheema and Arjuna. On either side of Bheema and Arjuna, stood the two other brothers, Nakula and Sahadheva. Arjuna was the embodiment of the clear sharp intellect and Bheema was the symbol of physical might and heroism. The lesson conveyed by this picture of the brothers is: when Dharma or Righteousness is supported on either side by Intellectual Might and Physical Valour, success is assured. Only, the two, namely, intellect and courage must obey the dictates of Dharma and not decry it; or disregard its directives.

When there is Peace there will be Divinity

India stands forth among the nations of the world as Dharmaraaja, with her loyalty and steady faith in peace and mutual cooperation for noble ends. America is the Arjuna, ready with her weapons of incalculable destructive power. Russia is the Bheema, with her formidable might.

India's strength lies in her adherence to Dharma. All other countries whose strength lies only in their fire-power can earn victory only when they surrender ultimately to the force of Righteousness. If we safeguard Dharma, Dharma in its turn will safeguard us. Dharma is the life-hood of Prema. Where there is Love, there will be Peace. Where there is Peace, there will be Divinity. And, where there is Divinity, there will be Bliss.

These are eternal truths; but, Indians themselves are losing faith in them and they have started ridiculing them and refusing to practise them. Such persons are insulting their own mother; mother, and mother-country have to be revered equally, according to the scriptures. You honour the mother by obeying her and fulfilling her wishes, you honour mother-country by paying heed to the age-long traditions and hoary ideals that have stood the test of time.

No one honours a renegade. He condemns himself by denying his country. Do not therefore get involved' with borrowed ideologies, imported fashions or attitudes or apparels, and exciting notions of social behaviour. Youth, today, are ruined by this fascination for the false. Borrowed ideas cannot fit into the pattern of our culture. Sanaathana Dharma is the culture that has grown on this soil and best suited for maintaining peace and joy, in human communities. You cannot shine in borrowed feathers, for long. They can give I only temporary delight. So, do not distort or disfigure your culture by imitation or neglect.

Man's innate nature is to revel in the Divine Resolve, before it is too late, to weed out the wrong and strange notions and fashions. Entertain the belief that God exists in every living being. All people are your people and all your people are God's people. When someone hurts you, or abuses you, mitigate the anger by the knowledge that 'you and he' are both one, in God. When your teeth bite your tongue, you do not punish your teeth; both tongue and teeth are yours, and both are equally loved by you.

In the environment of Prema, there will always be peace and harmony. Regard God as Love, Living Love. In many instances, this Love is hidden by the fog of anger, greed or lust. Discard these temporary formations and associations and control the evil influence of these passions.

Then only can you feel and express genuine Love. Love must be regulated and directed by intelligence and discrimination. Or else, it may cause even injury and defeat.

When a person saw a fish struggling on a river bank because the waters receded leaving it high and dry, he sympathised with its plight and brought it home wrapped in his handkerchief. He found it struggling even when he put it to bed; so, he gave it a few teaspoonfuls of hot coffee.

The poor fish could not survive such ignorant kindness! It died. If only he had put it back into river, it could have lived happily; even if you put it in the bowl studded with gems, it would be miserable. So too, it is man's innate nature to revel in the Divine; so, if you keep man in the world and pour material gains and comforts on him, he will still pine for God whom he knows to be the fountain-head of happiness.

 Attachments make you lose your freedom Suppose all of you who are in this hall now do not know or remember where you have come from and where you have to go after this function. There will be utter confusion and panic; if you do not know who you are, where you came from and which is your destination, there will be fear, anxiety, anger and greed among you.
 Who is the real resident of this body? You are the positive aspect that is activating the negative aspect, the body. The life-breath repeats Soham every time you breathe. It means, I am He, I am God. What a profound authentic declaration, the breath is making, every moment of your life, while waking, dreaming or in deep sleep, whether you listen to it or not! If this simple lesson, this truth of our truth, which is being dinned all the 24 hours of the day does not alert you or inform you of your real task, how can you understand your Reality by the mere study of books?
 Three aspects to the Aathma concept Recognise the string that passes through every flower to make this one garland. When you see the flowers, the string is not seen; it is however the thing that holds them together. You can make from the silver cup you have, a plate or a casket or an idol. Names and Forms change but, silver they all are and will continue to be. Call out for Raama, or Krishna; they both come before you and announce "I am Raama, I am Krishna." But, who is this 'I' that is common to both Raama and Krishna? That common factor is the Aathma (spirit or divinity), as the Indian sages have declared. There are three aspects to this Aathma concept. What you think you are, is the Dheha Aathma, the Body Personality; what others think you are, is the individualised self, the Ieevaathma; and what you really are, is the Universal Soul, without limitations of Name and Form, the Param-aathma.
 Attachments make you lose your freedom. You can move freely, when you are not encumbered with burdens. Less luggage, more comfort, is a slogan for the journey of life. Reduce desires, loosen attachments; you win your freedom. The end of wisdom is freedom; the end of education is character; the end of culture is perfection; the end of knowledge is Love. Self-confidence is the basis of faith in God also. People who do not know who they are and who have no confidence in their own strength and power assert that there is no God. But, how can they declare that the God in whom you believe and who exists for you does not exist? They are free to assert that God does not exist for them; but, that assertion cannot make God Himself non-existent!

 There is a story about a Hindhi Pandith in Banaras. He used to pray for five minutes every morning and for five minutes every evening, thus spending ten minutes a day in meditation on God.
 His colleagues laughed at him for wasting ten precious minutes on this silly wasteful habit. He replied, "Sirs! If really there is no God, I concede that ten minutes of my time are being wasted each day; but, if God exists, imagine, you are wasting 24 hours each day, without recognising Him and praying to Him! I feel that I am using these ten minutes in something in which I have full faith. I am deriving great joy therefrom." 'Do not try to find fault with others; search, rather, for your own. I direct you to implant three ideals in your hearts: (1) Do not forget God; (2) Do not put faith in the world you see around you; it is changing every second and does not last; (3) Do not be afraid. You are the imperishable Aathma that knows no fear. I want you also to banish two ideas from your hearts: (1) Forget the harm that anyone has done to you, and (2) Forget the good that you have done to others. Above all, develop Prema. Love all religions and all nations. Recognise and accept all religions as paths leading men to the same destination. All of them teach love and compassion, humility and forbearance. I bless all of you and ask you to promote love, sympathy and compassion towards all beings; God is present in everyone of them; and it is your duty to revere God in each of them.
Kamaani Auditorium, New Delhi, 29-3-1972 41. "My People"
BHAKTHI (Devotion) has been defined as, "Saa Paraa Anurakthih Esware"---"It is supreme single-pointed intense attachment to the Lord." Such attachment can be evinced even by animals, as the legends, about Shiva at Kaalahasthi and of the elephant that worshipped Him there, describe. Young lads are capable of it, as the story of Dhuruva demonstrates. Women have proved that they are capable of cultivating that attachment, as Dhroupadhi did.
 The Moon has no inherent light of its own; the stars are sources of enormous quantities of light.
 But, starlight is so hazy and indistinct that it is as bad as non-existent, whereas, the Moon with borrowed light is able to help man much more and to brighten his nights with a delighting quantum of light. The secret is the nearness of the Moon to the source of light, the Sun, and to those who need it, namely, mankind on earth. The stars are too far off from either, to be of any service. And, of what use is all that brilliance if what they can offer is just a twinkle? The sky is studded with a billion stars but the illumination they shed is infinitesimal!

God is more than a billion Suns but, if you are far away from Him, you cannot have either the warmth or the light. Of course, with God it is not special distance that counts; one has to endear himself to God. That is the process of Bhakthi.

Recognise the authority of God over all But as a result of worldly needs and sensual greeds, man endeavours to curry the favour of all sorts and types of men, demeaning himself with low tricks and vulgar praise! Lokavaancha (worldly desires) takes you away from Lokesha (the Lord of all the Worlds). Learn a lesson from the stream. It rushes to the hollows, never to the heights. Bend before the lowly, the humble, the godly, the good; don't bend before the proud, the promoters of hate and greed. Those who have

God in their hearts will always be self-effacing, not self-aggrandizing.
 If a man's head is heavy with ego, he will suffer from aches; he cannot sustain himself on Aanandha (bliss). Never yearn for authority over others; recognise the authority of God over all. Be immersed in Aanandha, and in Love.

Man weakens himself, believing three impostors: Naama, Roopa and Guna. When he says that his name is such and such and when he answers 'Here I am' when that name is called, he is impostor number one. When he describes himself as iii or well, weak or strong, poor or rich, he is impostor number two! When he is depressed because he suffers loss or pain, and excited because he secured profit, he is imposter number three! He has no name; he has all the names that God has! He has no phases; his body has them; but he is not the body. His car may be out of order; his house may be crumbling; but he is unaffected. Loss or gain, pain and pleasure, the entire dual throng is delusion caused by the play of fancy of fact.

Three knowledges to disperse the delusions

These delusions have to be dispersed by the acquisition of three knowledges and the consequent mental attitudes: Aadhibhuuatham, concerning all perishable things including the body and its appurtenances, that is to say, the Jeewa; Aadhidhaiva, concerning the Divine forces that prompt action the directions of space, ruling the ear; the Air, ruling the sense of touch; the Sun, presiding over the eye; the deity of the waters, Varuna, ruling over the tongue; the Ashwin Twins, ruling over the nose; Fire, presiding over speech; Indhra, over the hands; Upendhra over the feet;

Mithra, over the alimentary system; Prajaapathi, over the generative; Chandhra or the Moon, presiding over the mind; in short, the Ishwara or Saguna (formful) aspect of God with various contributory attributes promoting man's progress here and hereafter; and lastly, the Aadhiaathma, concerning the Aathma (spirit) that is the individualised being, the Universal eternal Aathma itself.

The Aadhi-bhuuatham or Jeewa-consciousness binds one with the shackles of I and Mine. The Ishwara-consciousness or the awareness of the attributes of God which energise and activate one's functions limits the Supreme into a particularised entity.

When the Aadhi-aathama is achieved, delusion or Moha disappears and you attain Moha-Kshaya (lost-delusion)---Liberation.

Arjuna acknowledges with gratitude towards the end of the Geetha dialogue, Nashtho Mohah

(my delusion is lost), Smrhthir labdhah (I have regained the memory). He had forgotten that he was the Aathma; he remembered it and was liberated from the prison he had built around himself.

Man loses joy and peace by his own craving

There was a rich man, a confirmed miser, who sought to hide his hoard in a place where no one could lay his hands on it. He decided to keep it inside a snake-hole.

Poor fellow, he did not realise that if his gold was safe from others, it was inaccessible for him too! Man loses joy, his peace, his freedom by his own cleverness and craving. He devises stratagems in order to escape being entrapped by others but he is trapped, nevertheless, by his own tactics to catch blind-folded in a dark room the black cat which is not there! That is life, for most men. They won't believe wise men when they warn or convey correct information.

Do not look upon the objective world as something to be exploited; it is something to be adopted and appreciated. Then, you can derive the maximum Aanandha out of the contact! At Delhi lakhs of people were pouring in at all hours of the day and night, and clamouring for Dharshan (audience). Unless one group got Dharshan and moved on, there was no room for the next group pressing behind them to move forward. So, I got upon the terrace and gave them Aanandha.

Truck-loads of people from Jullundher, Meerut, Paatiala and even places however farther off were arriving on all the days I stayed. They were all drawn by the Aanandha that Dharshan confers.

Ganga of spirituality can never be polluted When every moment of stay in Delhi was thus packed with the sharing of Aanandha, Gulzarilal Nandha, President of the All- India Saadhu Samaaj, wanted to take Me to Kurukshethra. I told him, "How could I leave the thick flood of people pouring out their hearts in anguish, "Sai Baba!

Dharshan Der!" (Sai Baba! Give us Dharshan!) and come with you to Kurukshethra? They will feel I have deserted them." But, he insisted so sincerely and argued so selflessly that I yielded to go, during the hot hours of the day, when I had some respite at Delhi from the pressure of the prayerful crowds.

There I found a large assembly of over three lakhs of people. Among them were many Sanyaasins; the ochre robe was predominant all around. I had a surge of Aanandha, standing before that happy gathering, on ground that was familiar to Me, as a field for corrective teaching!

I said that Sanyaasins (those who have renounced worldly desires) have a unique role in Society.

The colour of their robes must indicate the colourlessness within. I warned them against the corrupting influence of politics and of institutionalism. They should not sacrifice their freedom, their simplicity and their role as vigilant witnesses to the wiles of pomp and pageantry.

I described the political pressures that are undermining the spiritual culture of India in the name of secularism. I assured them that the Ganga of Spirituality emerging from the Himaalayan ranges of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema can never be polluted by political tactics. For millennia, the lives of generations of Indians have been saturated in God; they have toiled for God; they have been fostered by God; God is the root; the bed-rock, the very breath of the millions of India. No one can dry it up, or blast it or deny it.

Be aware at all times of the God within

The truth about the individual, the Universe and God discovered by dedicated delving and announced through universal compassion can never be tarnished or argued away. Ambassador Keating of America told Me: "I cannot grasp the full import of Indian Culture through the study of books, nor can I vouchsafe the authenticity of the scriptures of this land. But, when I see in the Capital City of India in the Seventies of the twentieth century a phenomenon like this---five lakhs of ardent men and women milling around to get a heartening glimpse of this five-foot personality, I feel I can hear the heartbeats of this ancient people."

When a person is sleeping on a cot in a room at night, and thick darkness prevails, you try to wake him up in order to talk with him. You grope around and when you touch a chair or shelf or book, you say to yourself, "Not this! Not this." At last, when you touch one toot, you are thrilled; you know, "This is He." "Once you have contacted God, get confirmed in Faith and by adhering to His Commands, attach yourselves to Him closer and closer," I told the gathering at Kurukshethra.

I advised the Sanyaasins to give up anger, greed and envy; to eschew factionalism and pomp; to be aware at all times of the God within and the God without and so behave that all may be inspired to follow the spiritual path. I explained to them that without purity of consciousness, wisdom cannot dawn in the heart.

We went to Meerut one evening, a place historically important during the days of British rule and even a big cantonment of the army. It was here that the British suffered their first reverse in days of the Mutiny. They now want a Sathya Sai College there! The gathering there was so huge and so thickly packed at the Assembly Place that cars could not proceed, nor could we, by foot.

When we thought of returning, there was such weeping and wailing that I appeared on the dias, while they were wondering where I was and whether I had left; I gave them joy, singing a few Naamaavalis.

In the Divine Path, there is no chance of failure

I am telling you this, because it is a forecast of what you can expect in the coming days. I have been declaring since six or seven years that the day when millions will gather to benefit from the

Avathaar (divine incarnation) is fast coming; I am advising you to garner and treasure all the Grace and all the Bliss you can, while you may, so that you can sustain yourselves ruminating on the sweetness of the memories and the experience.

If you live on the level of the body and the individual, you will be entangled in food, fun and frolic, in ease, envy and pride. Forget it, ignore it, overcome it---you will have peace, joy and calm. In the Divine Path, there is no chance of failure; it is the Path of Love.

We are having a Summer Camp for College Students at Brindhaavan in May---the entire month.

The Chairman of the University Grants Commission, who has written a voluminous report on College Education, told at Delhi that his long cherished dream is now coming true, that what the Government cannot do, Bhagavaan is making a reality. We have a number of scholars and Pandiths coming to speak on various subjects to the students. Of course, all subjects are spiritual, there is nothing beyond the realm of the spirit. Even matter is spirit, basically.

I desire that you should share your Aanandha with others and you should hold forth, in your daily life, conversation and activity, ideals which they can emulate and follow. There will be no shortage or hesitation in My giving Aanandha to you; any shortage or hesitation will only be in your accepting what is offered. Be vigilant that you do not miss the least part of the Bliss.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 8-4-1972

Desire discolours the intelligence; it perverts judgement; it sharpens the appetites of the senses. It lends a false lure to the objective world. When desire disappears or is concentrated on God, Intelligence is self-luminous, it shines in its pristine splendour, and that splendour reveals the God within and without. That is the real Aathma Saakshaathkaara (Realisation of the Self).

Sri Sathya Sai

42. Tonic for youth

MANIFESTATIONS of the Divine Aathma (Spirit). You are here before Me, resplendent with the inspiration you have imbibed from this atmosphere of peace and self-control, the vision you have gained about your own reality, the sense of mission you have cultivated, the resolutions you have invested yourselves into, and the invigorating contact you had during these thirty days with teachers who are sincere guides of youth. You have been taught the elements of yoga (spiritual communion) and dhyana (meditation), the essential unity of all the different paths of Selfrealisation, the correctives necessary for a life of peace and joy in this technological world.

Tomorrow, when you leave for your homes, I am sure your hearts will-be hankering for God, though your bodies journey towards your native villages. I am glad at this; for the treasure of devotion is more precious than gold, silver and property. These cannot grant mental peace or lasting joy. Virtue is the real treasure chest; sterling character is the universally accepted

'sterling'. The realisation that you are a wave of the Ocean of Bliss is the richest possession.

You are witnessing the plight of the princes of India; it demonstrates that power, authority, status, sovereignty are all but flashes in the pan. Rains fill the tanks to the brim, and for a brief span of time, hordes of frogs croak around the shores acclaiming the glory and the wealth. Let the tank go dry one day, as it must; no single frog will stay to croak allegiance or praise. Fame and affluence are as unsteady as the homage of the frog. Glory is won, when you discover your Self and revel in its Divinity.

Education must result in discovery of the Self

Consider how well educated, how powerful, how strong physically, how heroic, were the epic personages, Raavana, Hiranyakashipu, Hiranyaaksha, Dhuryodhana. Each of them had all these in ample measure; but the absence of virtue, of the yearning to be righteous, of adherence to Dharma (moral code)---that flaw led to irreparable ruin.

Prior to the confrontation on the field of battle, Dhuryodhana as well as his rival the Paandava

Prince Arjuna hastened to Lord Krishna seeking aid. Krishna allowed them to choose for themselves. He placed before them two items of aid: the Army that would be an addition to one's militant potential, and Himself, the Divine Guide and Guardian, who would not be useful for the actual fighting in the battle. Dhuryodhana chose the army; he preferred quantity, manpower.

Arjuna chose quality, God-power. Krishna was for him as valuable an acquisition as the conquest of the entire world.

The individual must instal himself in a chariot with the wheels of Thyaaga (Detachment) and Sathya (Truth); the Lord will then accept the position of Charioteer; He will hold the reins (mind) and direct the horses (the senses) straight and safe over the road (the path of salvation through Self-realisation).

Only practice and experience can give intelligence

Aathmavidhya (science of the Self) by which one can become aware of the Infinite Eternal Absolute Self has to be pursued by everyone. Education must result in this discovery, or else it does not deserve the name. The process by which one gets skill to eke out his livelihood, or to exploit nature and his brethren cannot be education, in the real sense. Books only fill the brain with second-hand stuff; practice, experience, feeling, doing with one's own hand--these give insight and intelligence. Swotting is just waste of time and money. Book-learning helps you to gain marks at school and college. I prefer students, who do not acquire adverse 'remarks' in their records, even if their marks are a little less. Study must endow one with humility; but, today students are afflicted with aggressive audacity. We have in the field of education factions and fights that bedevil relations between students, teachers and administrators. Politicians are at the bottom of it all. Neither the students nor the teachers are to blame. Students have tender, eager, self-denying idealistic, compassionate hearts; that is the reason why I have given each of them immaculate white to wear this day, appropriately, at White-field. Kshethra means Field; your personality and person are the kshethra, but you must, by earning and maintaining purity, cognise the Kshethrajna, the Master of the Field. How stupid, how wasteful it is to fritter away the glorious destiny, echoing the angry outbursts of vainglorious climbers who misuse your energies for the destruction of the properties of innocent citizens and for terrorising the neighbourhood. When the reservoir is full, the water taps will flow; when the heart is the reservoir of love, sympathy and faith, acts, words and thoughts will help peace and joy. Politicians however do not recognise these needs; they fill the young hearts with hate, envy and greed, and spur them on to violence and vituperation. They draw them away from the classroom, the library and the laboratory and make them tramp the streets. They prod them to injure innocents, damage property and behave wildly, with fury. Indian culture never encourages the use of force. Indian Culture, as you learnt at this Summer Camp from distinguished exponents never encourages the use of force for effecting changes in law or social conditions or people's attitudes. Gandhi directed the movement for Indian Independence along spiritual lines which drew courage and confidence, and communicated both to the people, from Naamasmaran, the recitation and reflection on the Names of God. He cleansed the heart of the nation, of hatred and envy, of fear and doubt. He stuck to the ideal and the path; you too should do the same. A student has study, as his ideal and his path. That study cannot be postponed or done slipshod. So, whatever the obstacle or temptation, it must be overcome. Students deserve an atmosphere of peace; teachers too must teach in an atmosphere of peace and joy. Dhronaachaarya taught archery to Arjuna, as well as to his own son, Aswatthaama; but Arjuna received the lessons with avid enthusiasm, and so, he became the greatest archer of that era. Aswatthaama could not rise to that height. Attach yourselves to the teacher by means of earnestness and humility; then, you get the best out of him. If knowledge is handed over in anger and discontent and if it is received in anger and discontent, how can the gift bear fruit? How can the receiver be strengthened by it? Treasure what your teachers taught with reverence. I bless you that you may progress in life with the help of the ideal and inspiration you have garnered during these days at 'Brindhaavan---the discipline, the social conscience, the wisdom of the ages, the lessons of the past and of the future. Draw upon them whenever you are afflicted by doubt or despair. Put them into daily practice; meditate on them; reflect on their importance and significance. I shall reveal a truth: you got this chance as the reward for the merit you have accumulated in your past lives. I need not describe to you the affection that your teachers developed for you; you have yourselves witnessed how they were in tears while taking leave of you at the end of their series of lectures. What they taught you with such love you too should treasure with great reverence. Your Sadhguru (spiritual preceptor) is your Swaami, I will be with you evermore; so go back happily with courage born of self-confidence; share your aanandha and your new outlook with your parents, your friends and companions, kith and kin, teachers and the people with whom you come in contact. I exhort you to strive sincerely to serve others and serve your own best interests. I bless you that you may have success in your endeavours. Valedictory Discourse, Summer Course for College Students, Brindhaavan, 31-5-1972. When man is able to master the senses, and direct them along more beneficent channels---the eye seeing God's footprints in stars and rose-petals, the ear hearing God's voice in the throats of birds and peals of thunder,

the tongue tasting God's sweetness in all that appeals to it, the nose discovering fragrance in everything that recalls the glory of God, the sense of touch content to clasp the hand of the forlorn and the distressed as the beloved children of God--- then, he can visualise the God installed in the cavity of the heart; that is the lesson the five-hooded Sesha (divine serpent) imparts!

Sri Sathya Sai

43. Teach by example

EVERY limb of the body has a distinct name, form and function. Every nerve, muscle, and joint has its own share in the upkeep and growth of the body. The word 'body' denotes all these together. So too is the word 'Village' and, the name, 'Puttaparthi.' It denotes all the individuals, families and communities living and functioning together, here. If a single nerve or muscle or joint is diseased, the entire body suffers, loses efficiency. So too, even if one individual or family in the village has no ease, is distressed or disabled, anxious or afraid, iii or bed-ridden, indigent or ignorant, the entire village is infected by the misery. When the toe is hit, the eye sheds tears; when the lowest and the poorest are hungry and oppressed, the highest and the richest are also affected. During the ages when each one was recognised as complementary parts of the same

'body-politic,' there was peace in the land, laughter in the field and festoons across the door.

But, now, each limb endeavours to injure the other; there is no co-operation or co-ordination.

And the body is lying prone, in pain. Living, happy living, is possible only in and through society; society cannot thrive on egoism, greed and envy, which turn one man's teeth and claws against another.

Villages which are the cells of the body-politic are afflicted with this terrible malady today. So, this school is being established in order to guide children on right lines and to inspire the elders to be examples of tolerance, service and mutual love. Joy and peace have to be restored in this village through truth, goodness, justice and love. Each one can best perform the duty that has fallen to his lot only when he develops in himself an attitude of dedication to these ideals.

Keep alive the roots of one's native culture

Every village has to be equipped with four Aalayas (Houses). First, the Bhojan-aalaya (the Eating-house or Hotel), which must provide for a moderate price, clean sustaining food. Of course, man does not feed on such food only. He feeds on pure water and air and the food that he gorges through the eye, the tongue and the sense of touch has also to be free from pollution and poison Next, the Aarogya-aalaya (the Medicine-House, the Hospital). This has become essential, since man has neither healthy eating habits nor the inclination to adopt them. Third, the Vidhyaalaya (the Learning-House, the School) which is a lamp lit to keep darkness away. The School must instruct the young and inspire the old, keep alive the roots of one's native culture.

Last, the Deva-aalya (the House of God, the Temple, the Heart of the Community), pumping the life-blood of Faith, Reverence and Steadfastness throughout the body-politic.

The School is influenced by the Village, as much as the Village is influenced by the School.

Children learn at School for a few hours, during a few months of the year, a few disciplines and skills, and some chunks of information. They are already shaped, well nigh irreparably by their parents, kith and kin and elders. Children adore their elders and imbibe by imitation their prejudices and predilections. They watch the behaviour of the elders and value it more, though they may not follow their advice and admonitions. They can see through the veil of humbug and the pall of hypocrisy.

Puttaparthi is a name adored throughout the world; it has become a holy word which gives comfort, consolation and courage to people of all lands. But, this village itself is far behind others in education. I am aware of this; I need not be told or informed about anything. I know that communication with nearby places where we have High Schools are frequently cut off by floods; boys and girls of this village have to trek miles to attend them. So, this High School has been resolved upon.

Don't be misled into doubts and distress

My activities are not for publicity or propaganda or even to confer joy on others! They are for conferring joy primarily on Me! I have no need to please others and to earn approval or appreciation. For, I and you are not distinct entities; you are I and I am you. I am the current that flows into every bulb and illumines it. Those who see Me as separate are seeing falsehood. I am in your hearts; you are in mine. Don't be misled into doubt and distress. Dogs may bark and jackals howl; but Truth moves majestically forward.

Everyone in the village is a flower with its unique hue and fragrance. They are collected and strung as a garland for the Lord. The string that runs through all, that holds them together, that enables them to enhance the charm of the Lord (if ever that is possible!) is the Brahma-suuthra--the unifying thread called Brahma (the Universal Absolute). This Truth has to be revealed to everyone; it has to be implanted in the heart, so that each one can have the faith that can face both failure and fortune. That is the inner purpose of the School. This is the gift the School ensures. But, the giver will be happy only when the gift is utilised to the best advantage and not frittered away or east aside. The giver can be induced to give again and give more, only when the gift is accepted with intelligence and gratitude. There is an intention to raise the School into a College to serve the needs of this area, a College which can be affiliated with others of a similar type coming up in all the States of India in the Sathya Sai Scheme of Higher Education. Wisdom alone can bring peace. There is a plan also of establishing in this village some opportunities for gainful employment so that no person suffers from the pangs of hunger. The intention is there; its execution depends on your enthusiasm and faith. The drug is effective and within reach; but unless it is consumed and the directions strictly adhered to, it cannot cure! Do not waste time in idle fantasies but demonstrate your sincerity and faith in practice---sending your children to school, facilitating their studies, and, providing them the environment necessary for progress. The vaults of the Reserve Bank have lots of money but of what use are they to you? Talking about them will not remove your poverty. Work alone can bring income; wisdom alone can bring peck. Gratitude to parents is a basic virtue; reverence to the parents is reverence to the past, to the traditions of the past, to the great treasure of wisdom that the past has garnered and preserved. I am spreading this message by Myself setting the example. The Kalyaanamandap that is fast coming up in the village will commemorate the 'father.' He was eager to serve the best interest of this village, as you all know. The Mandap will be a community Centre for religious ceremonies and the spread of spiritual ideals. This School will commemorate the 'mother'.

My life is My Message, as I often declare. I have been re-emphasising the Upanishathic exhortation, "Speak Truth; act righteously; revere the mother as Divine, revere the father as Divine, revere the preceptor as Divine." I emphasise not only through words, but more by deeds.

You must dedicate your skill, your earnings, your intelligence to the service of your parents and fulfil your duties as their progeny. If you fail in this, you do not deserve this glory of being an Indian, and a human.

Puttaparthi, 20- 7-1972

All good things have to be done the hard way. Ease and elevation cannot go together.

Sri Sathya Sai

44. Lessons from the Sea

THIS is the World Teacher's Day, named after the First Preceptor, the Codifier of Vedhic Texts, the Poet who compiled the great epic Mahaabhaaratha, famous as the Fifth Vedha, and of the other great text book of devotion, the Bhaagavatha--the Sage Vyaasa, the Aadi Guru (First or Primary Preceptor). In fact, the world itself is a great teacher, a constant guide and inspiration.

That is the reason why man is surrounded and sustained by the World. Every bird, every animal, every tree, mountain and star, each tiny worm, has a lesson for man, if he has but the will and the thirst to learn. These make the world a veritable University for man; it is a Gurukul (sacred commune of preceptor with disciples) where he is a pupil from birth to death.

Man soaks himself with lessons from the environment, whether he is aware of it or not. That is why those interested in his future urge him to seek Sathsang (good companionship), to avoid slander, faction, pride and violence. The first Guru is the mother; her example, her advice, her admonition affects man deepest and longest. The second is the father, who is admired by the child for his strength and knowledge and feared for the punishments he inflicts. Next is the teacher, who leads him and guides him into the maze of material knowledge.

But, the Guru (spiritual preceptor) alone can open the inner eye and cleanse the inner instruments of intuition. He induces you to question yourself, "Dheham?" (Am I this body or is this body only a vehicle which I am using) and discover the answer, "Naaham" (Not I; I am not this Body.

No, I am the Seer, the Witness, the Spectator). Then the investigation starts to delve into the reality of the I, "Koham" (Who then am I?) and the answer reveals itself in the purified consciousness, "Soham" (I am He); I am a spark of that Glory; I am Divine.

Turn your mind towards Intelligence and Aanandha

The gross body has its characteristics---height, weight, girth, proportion, name, caste, sect, nationality; it is a pot, a container, it is devised, designed; it disintegrates; it is destroyed. 'It cannot be 'you'. The subtle body is like the water in the pot; that too is poured by some one. It does not originate therein; it is no essential part of it; it is not its dharma. So it too is not 'you'.

The causal body is affected by attachment and detachment, the world and its objects, through reaction and reflection. So, it too cannot be 'you'. 'You' are beyond all three. You are not limited by these three containers---one within the other, one finer than the other.

There are five sheaths within which the I shines. Of these, the Anna-maya kosha (the material sheath), is the gross body. The subtle body consists of the next three sheaths, praana-maya (the vital sheath), Mano-maya (the mental sheath) and Vijnaana-maya (the intellectual sheath). The causal body is the Aanandha-maya Kosha (bliss conscious sheath). Even this is a limitation, a phase, a characteristic. The I has no such bounds or bondage. The guru who can make you cognise this I is your own mind. Turn it towards Intelligence and Aanandha, you are in the right path; turn it towards the vital, the material, you slide down the path of perdition.

If you see only the One, your vision is clearest

The Guru Poornima, the Full Moon day: dedicated to the Teacher, is to be spent in contemplation of the path that leads to liberation and in offering gratitude to the path-finders.

There are now three types of Gurus available for man---those who rob the pupils of their possessions and fatten themselves; those who rob the pupils of their individuality and intelligence and elevate themselves into despotic potentates; and those who rob the pupils of their anxieties and agonies and, fulfil themselves as benefactors.

Many Gurus insist that their followers should treat them with showy forms of worship this day and offer special donations at their feet. Claiming and accepting such superficial forms of adoration is contemptible. The pupil has to be "Sathatham Yoginah" (In constant divine communion), ever alert to be attached to higher ideals. The Master has to be a supreme unflinching example, in this Yoga.

The Guru is Poornima--full, undisturbed by any doubt, deficiency or sense of want. Like the Full Moon, he confers joy, cool comfort, and a sense of relief. Sit calm a few moments; you can yourself judge your attainments in this line. If you are dually minded, you are half blind still. If you see only the One, your vision is clearest; seeing double is a sign of optical disease. See only the One, the eternal, the true, the Divine. Rise up to the Divine; don't bring down Godhead to your human and even animal levels. Do not worship God as the picture before you, but, worship the picture before you as God, because God is in everything and can be grasped through every single symbol. There is nothing wherein He is not; there is no might or right, apart from Him.

The eye sees; but, what is it that sees the eye that grasps the impressions gained by the eye? It is the mind. The objective world is the dhrushya (the seen); the eye is the dhrashtha (the seer); but, the eye itself is dhrushya to the mind which is the dhrashtha. Now, the mind is also dhrushya, so long as the Intellect is dhrashtha. Finally the Intellect is also dhrushya, for, the Aathma is the ultimate dhrashtha which observes as a Witness this mano-rama (play of the mind-principle).

Learn lessons from the bee, the tree and the dog

The mind is ever unsteady; it is "steady in its unsteadiness" as Arjuna complained to Krishna. It is fraught with disaster; it is deeprooted and difficult to suppress, says Arjuna. Krishna agrees but assures Arjuna that it can be tamed and rendered innocuous by acquiring wisdom and by cultivating renunciation.

This morning someone from Delhi placed before Me this same problem. I told him that there is one simple solution but he responded with a sigh. He said, "I have approached many sages and everyone of them has a 'simple solution.' It may be simple, for me they are impossibly difficult".

I told him, "You are already engaged in performing even more difficult exercises than the one I propose to recommend. So, it will not be hard at all. Do not lose heart. You have inherent in you, vast potentiality, you can draw upon that reserve strength and succeed." Then, I gave him the example of a bumble bee. It is a small thing, judging from size but it bores through the toughest timber! There is a legend that it bored through the steely muscle of Karna's thigh!

This same bumble bee settles at sunset on a lotus flower and drinks the intoxicating nectar. It falls into a stupor, overwhelmed by the elixir. While it is still on the task, the Sun sets and the petals close in, to make the bloom a bud, again! The bee is imprisoned in the softness; it has no strength to bore through the tender velvety veil! I told him, "Let your mind imbibe the nectar of the Name, let it taste the elixir of the Lotus Feet of the Lord, it will be incapacitated, rendered ineffective, incapable of harm." The sea teaches you many lessons You may have vast scholarship, fame and fortune. But, the bee can give you a lesson on how to be free from torment. The tree can teach you forbearance and tolerance. It offers shade to all, irrespective of age, sex or religion, nationality or economic status. It helps with fruit and shade even the foe who lays his axe on its trunk! The dog can teach you lessons in faith, selfless service and the process of dedication. Man disgraces himself by his ingratitude, even to God who has provided him with all his wealth. Today is Full Moon and the sea rolls and surges in great joy. It knows only the fullness of happy contentment. The Sun may lift clouds of vapour from its stock of water; the Sea does not whimper. The rain may fill its coffers with the rich riverine tribute; it does not exult. It teaches you equanimity---no depression, no exaltation. Watch the waves rolling one behind the other towards the shore! You will notice the waves bringing with them bits of flotsam and jetsam, bottles and twigs, logs and pieces of wreckage to be deposited on land. There is a constant struggle evident to maintain a clean face---a laudable Saadhana, which man can well adopt. Again, consider the quietness of the depths, the Prashaanthi (serenity) that reigns in the inner regions of its consciousness. On the surface, the sea appears restless, and full of fury. But, down below, it is established in peace. Man too has to be like the Sea, accepting it as his Guru. Accept the World as your Guru on this World Teacher's Day, the Guru

Poornima.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 26- 7-1972

God is the embodiment of sweetness. Attain Him by offering Him, who resides in all, the sweetness that He has dowered on you. Crush the cane in the mill of seva, boil it in the cauldron of penitence; decolorise it of all sensual itch; offer the crystallised sugar of compassionate love to Him.

Sri Sathya Sai

45. The simplest remedy

MAN has become the bond-slave of lower instincts and desires. He is unable to distinguish between the low urges of lust and the elevating urge of Love. Prema (Love) is the first step on the road that leads to Divine Grace. But man wallows in lust for physical comfort and pleasure; he is haunted by that nefarious companion of lust, called anger. When lust is frustrated, anger overtakes him and he becomes bestial and even demonic, when lust envelops the heart of man, truth, justice, compassion and peace flee from it. The world degenerates into a snake pit, and God comes to rescue mankind from its doom.

The Avathaar (Divine Incarnation) comes to reveal man to himself, to restore to him his birthright of Aathmic Bliss. He does not come to found a new creed, to breed a new faction, to instil a new God. If such a thing happens, it is the consequence of the evil in man. The Avathaar comes as man in order to demonstrate that Man is Divine, in order to be within reach of Man.

The human mind cannot grasp the absolute, attributeless principle; it is abstract and beyond the reach of speech, mind and intellect.

Fire is inherent in the match-stick but it is only when it is struck as a flame that we can benefit by

it. The Nirguna (attributeless) has to manifest as Saguna (with qualities); the Niraakaara (Formless) has to appear with Form. Then only can Man listen, learn, understand, follow and be saved, through the Bliss of that experience. The Avathaar lights the flame of Realisation in each; and the age-old ignorance is destroyed in an instant.

Significance of the name Krishna, the Avathaar bore

When the righteous Paandavas were harassed by wicked Kauravas, the beauteous Krishna appeared and saved them. The Lord can never design violence and blood-shed. Love is His instrument; non-violence is His message. He achieves the correction of the evil-minded through education and example. But, it may be asked, "Why did Kurukshethra happen?" It was a surgical operation and therefore, cannot be described as an act of violence.

The surgeon saves life through the beneficial use of his knife.

Consider the name Krishna which the Avathaar bore; what a significant name! 'Krishna' is derived from the root Krish which means (1) to attract, (2) to plough and cultivate, and (3) the Divine principle beyond time, space and causation. Krishna, like all Avathaars; attracts not only seekers, saints and sages but the simple, the innocent and the good.

He draws also the curious, the critics, the skeptics and those who suffer from atheism. He draws them towards Himself by the irresistible charm of His person, by His invincible look, His voice, His flute, His counsel and His undaunted heroism. He is ever in a state of Bliss, spreading harmony, melody and beauty and around Him. He sings everywhere---in the peaceful pasture and lands of Brindhaavan and in the bloodsoaked battlefield of Kurukshethra. He holds the flute in His hand in one place and He wields the whip in the other. But what emerges is meaningful moving music, either Venugaana, or Bhagavadhgeetha! Gaanam and Geetha both mean song!
Why does He attract all to His Presence? To plough the heart, prepare it for receiving the shower of Grace, to grow the seeds of Love, weed it of all evil thoughts which smother the crops of joy and to enable it to gather the harvest of Wisdom. That wisdom finds its fulfilment in Krishna Himself, for Krishna also means the Pure Essence, the Supreme Principle, the Sath-Chith- Aanandha.
Make the gopees of Brindhaavan your guides The gopees (milkmaids) of Brindhaavan were inextricably involved in the Avathaar. They had Him indelibly imprinted on their hearts. He alone was real; the rest were also He. When Raadha, the most ardent aspirant among them was in agony at what she wailed about as Separation from Krishna (!), the Gopees, who gathered around her to turn her mind away from the infatuation, could not use any other words of consolation and comfort than Govindha! Dhaamodhara!
Maadhava!---words that sent pangs of loss through Raadha's heart!
When the Gopees brought milk, curds and butter for sale, and peddled them along the streets, they used to shout the names of the ware they had for sale. But the words that emerged were the words that had displaced all else---Govinda! Damodhara! Maadhava!---the loving Names of the Krishna they adored! When Akrura, the messenger from the wicked uncle of Krishna, took the Lord away from Brindhaavan with him, the Gopees, hurried across the road to stop him but even in their desperate protest, they could not utter any words except, Govindha, Dhaamodhara, Maadhava!
God is the sugar that can make the tasteless drink of life into a sweet potion. Stir the sugar well so that each molecule of the water is saturated with its taste. The gopees are your guides in this saadhana. They had, as you also have, the Avathaar in their midst and so, their salvation was assured when they achieved purity and acquired faith.

Avathaars manifested in the Kritha Yuga for preservation of Vedhic tradition, in the Thretha Yuga for the protection of Dharma and in the Dwaapara Yuga for the promulgation of the right of property. In the Kritha Yuga, the Avathaar saved the Vedhas from neglect, in the Thretha Yuga, He saved women from dishonour, and in the Dwaapara Yuga, He saved property from injustice.
This Avathaar in Kali Age has a three-fold task Now, in this fourth Age, the Kali Yuga, all these three are in dire peril. The Vedhas are ridiculed, woman is tempted into unwomanly lives, and property itself is condemned as theft! So, the Avathaar has a three-fold task. Man has no purity in the heart, no sanctity in his emotions, no love in his deeds, no God in his prayers.
Though the evil is thickest in this Kali Age, the remedy is the simplest. In the Kritha Yuga, the Saadhana (spiritual discipline) of escaping from ruin was hard. Years of austerity and abstinence were often profitless. The six-year old Dhruva had to perform penance for years in the recesses of wild forests before God conferred Grace. And the young boy Prahladha underwent unmentionable tortures unaware of the pain but aware only of the God in him. What is needed today to save oneself from anxiety and fear, here and hereafter, is dedication, diverting the mind towards God. If that is done, the pains of the physical body and pangs of the senses will not affect the mind.
Dhyaana (meditation) is that inward journey, away from the objective world and the senses that run after it. The Upanishaths declare, Naayam Aathma bala heenenena labhyah---"the Aathma cannot be attained by one devoid of strength." Bala (strength) means physical, vital, moral, intellectual and spiritual toughness. For all these are essential to establish mastery over the senses. You may do dhyaana but your senses are so ""awake and active that a tiny mosquito arouses your passion and you swing your arm to slaughter it! Repentance purifes, contrition cleanses Long ago there was a very pious family on the banks of the Krishna river. It had vast landed estates. The parents had an only son who was well versed in scriptures and who was obedient and well behaved. But when the father died and the properties fell into his hand the son became a profligate and a libertine, with a gang of evil men always around him.

 He developed intimacy with a public woman and was so infatuated with her wiles that he swam across a flooded river, holding on to the corpse of his own wife who had earlier committed suicide in despair. He mistook the corpse for a log of wood floating down the stream.
 Suddenly he became aware of his plight; he blamed his eyes for leading him astray into sin; he blinded himself as a punishment and roamed about the holy land associated with the advent of the Lord as Krishna, singing His Name. That blind singer was Suurdas. With the Name on the lip and the picture of the glory on the mind, no evil can attract you.
 Repentance purifies, contrition cleanses. Krishna appeared before blind Suurdas and offered to restore his sight. But, Suurdas pleaded for inner vision and discarded the outward-bound eyesight.
 God is no stony-hearted despot. He is Compassion, He is Grace, personified. Once you have cleansed yourself by tears, He draws you near and grants you consolation and courage. Without a cleansed heart, realisation is impossible. Wisdom can enter only a purified mind. Saadhana--- slow and steady---can succeed in purifying it. Victory is yours if you model yore selves on Arjuna, and his yearning.
 Everyone of you can be Arjuna and achieve victory The last shloka of the Geetha was quoted now by Sri Bhagavantham. It says, "Yathra Yogeswarah Krishna Yathra Paartho
Dhanurdharah, Thathra Sreer Vijayo Bhuuthir Dhruvaa Neethir Mathir Mama"---"Where there is Krishna the Supreme Yogi and where also there is Arjuna bearing his bow, there victory for truth and justice is assured." This verse assures victory not only when the Mahaabhaaratha Arjuna wields the bow in the presence of Krishna.
 Everyone of you can be Arjuna and wield the bow and achieve victory. For the bow is but the symbol of courage and faith, of high resolve and undaunted calibre.
 And how can you become Arjunas? Arjuna means white, pure, unsullied, without blemish. As soon as you become that and hold the bow (the Upanishaths declare that the Pranava or Om is the arrow and God is the target), 'Krishna is ready with His Presence, for He is everywhere at every moment. There is no need to invite Him or instal Him. He will answer from your very heart.

Janmaashtami day, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 31-8-1972

You may say that progress is possible only through My Grace; but, though My Heart is soft as butter, it melts only when there is some warmth in your prayer. Unless you make some disciplined effort, some saadhana, Grace cannot descend on you. The yearning, the agony of unfulfilled aim melts My Heart. That is the Aavedhana (anguish) that wins Grace.

How so many Navaraathris and Shivaraathris you may attend at this place, unless you illumine your heart and make it shine clear and pure, it will be shrouded in darkness, immersed in raathri (night) only.

Sri Sathya Sai

46. The sea-saw

MAN is misled into believing that nature is his rival which has to be defeated and conquered; he struggles and suffers loss and pain in the process. He considers it heroic to undergo travail in what he calls conquest of nature. But, if only he feels kinship with nature, as equally saturated with divinity, and proclaiming with equal clarity the immanence of God, he can be happier and much more restful and content. When you see everywhere, on every inch of ground, in every being, small or big, the foot-print of God, nature is seen in a new vesture of glory, a manifestation that demands worship, rather than exploitation and enslavement.

The ego in man sets him against all else; silence it and all becomes one's kith and kin. The ego is the first sprout from the seed of ignorance, which is not a positive acquisition, but only, the absence of knowledge. When knowledge shines, inner and outer natures are both seen as divine.

There is nothing that is not IT. When this is experienced, love floods the heart and flows towards all. There is no independence; there is only interdependence, for all waves are equally dependent on the sea beneath. You use the word, 'my own'; who is this 'my' who owns you, and whom you own as yourself?. It is the Divine in you, and in all. Sueccha is the word in Sanskrit, for "one's desire," the iccha (desire) of sva (oneself). Since the self of one and the self of all else are the same, sueccha should be the common factor in all desires, namely, love. Listen to the voice of God, that warns, directs, prompts, and prevents; you cannot then be wrong.

Direct all your powers towards God

It may be said that love is a universal virtue and it is being manifested in human relations, more or less, by all. But, it is limited and poisoned by petty considerations and dried up by hatred and envy. Love must see the best in others and not the worst. Love cannot ignore the divinity in others. Blind men have the right to deny light; but, those with eyes, have no such explanation.

When such men swear that they see only the many, and not the One, it is surely the fault of the vision. Try to correct it, through saadhana (spiritual discipline).

You have three means of understanding: Ichhaa-shakthi (the power of the Will), Kriyaa-shakthi (the power of Action) and Jnaana-shakthi (the power of Knowledge). Direct all three towards God; Desire Him, Serve Him and Know Him. Do not let senses and the emotions run away with you on their back. Hold them in check. Set before them the goal of God. If your emotions prescribe one direction, guide them in the contrary direction; that is the way to counter their evil.

Once it happened that Krishna, Balarama and Saathyaki who were quite little boys at that time, scarcely four or five years old, strayed into a thick jungle, all alone, when darkness fell, and there was no way of reaching Gokulam! Of course, as you must have guessed already, it was a stratagem of Krishna; even at that age, he would do nothing without a deep purpose behind it and the purpose would invariably be teaching some one some good lesson. They decided to spend the night, just where they were; Krishna put fright into them, with his descriptions of ghosts, ghouls and demons roaming in search of human prey. He proposed that two shall sleep for three hours at a stretch while the other one kept watch.

Anger can be subdued only by forbearance

It was Saathyaki's duty to keep awake and be on the lookout, from 7 to 10; Balarama was to be vigilant from 10 to 1 a.m. Krishna was to start his part of the duty at 1 and keep on till 4.

Saathyaki sat up to 10 and Balarama and Krishna laid themselves on beds of dried leaves and slept soundly. Meanwhile a demon did actually present himself, before the little Saathyaki. He fell upon the boy, who resisted heroically dealing and receiving hammer-strokes with fists, with a good number of clawing and biting in between. The demon had to retreat at last, leaving Saathyaki badly mauled, but, happy. The two brothers were sound asleep; they had not been disturbed in the least by the noise of the encounter. Saathyaki had met blow with blow, and dealt injury for injury. At 10, he awakened Balarama and stretched his body on the heap of leaves, as if nothing had happened. The demon invited Balarama too for combat and had to retreat humiliated, because Balarama too was as fierce as he, and his blows were even more terrible than Saathyaki's. Balarama too curled himself into the bed at 1 a.m. after waking up Krishna who was to keep watch until Brahma-muhuurtha, the auspicious hour when Gods are to be propitiated, that is, 4 a.m.

The demon came roaring like a wounded tiger, and advanced ferociously at the little Divine Boy.

Krishna turned his sweet charming face at him, and rewarded him with a lovely smile. That smile disarmed the demon; the longer he came under its influence, the weaker became his vengeance and venom. At last, the demon became as docile as a lamb; when the other two woke, they were surprised at the victory that Krishna had won by the weaponry of Love. You cannot destroy anger by anger, cruelty by cruelty, hatred by hatred. Anger can be subdued only by forbearance; cruelty can be overcome only by non-violence, hatred yields only charity and compassion.

Become rulers of the inner empire

Arjuna too once charged his eldest brother, Dharmaraaja, with callous indifference to the sufferings of his other brothers and of their queen, Dhroupadhi and her children; he flung arrows of scorn at him for his blind adherence to 'morality and righteousness', despite the heinous provocations to retaliation, that their cousins aimed at them. As a result, Arjuna told him, "Our mother lives apart from us, our wife is insulted in open court, we wander as exiles in the jungles, my son has been surrounded and done to death, and we have been defamed and disgraced beyond endurance. All the while, you have been putting up with all this ignominy, content with your clinging to virtue."

When he had finished his tirade, Dharmaraaja replied calmly, with no sign of resentment, "Patience, tolerance, love---these alone can bring success; of what use is victory, if it is gained by falsehood and ferocity? Such a war will breed wars for ever. We shall act ever as if we are in the presence of God, as if God is watching and weighing every thought, word and deed. See yourselves in all, see all in yourselves; that is the road to lasting peace and joy. Let us not seek the outer empire; let us become rulers of the inner empire. Let us not try to defy the outer enemy, leaving the inner foe to grow in striking power. We have Krishna with us, and so, who can defeat us? We shall win through winning His Grace." Do not allow faith to be upset Never stray from the path of right, whatever the trouble or temptation. Do not loosen the grip; do not turn back. Do not allow faith to be upset. If you attach importance to riches or children or fame or fortune, you are thereby-announcing that you are devoted, not: to God, but to riches, children and the rest. If you are devoted to God, how should you manifest that devotion? Let me tell you how. By manifesting divine qualities, divine virtues, divine love, divine strength.

Become Sai, be Sai.
When the river Chithravathi is boisterously rolling along, we call it a flood; when the waters have receded, we call it a river. When desires, plans, wishes, and yearnings roll along, we call it the 'mind'; when they subside, we call it 'chittha' (consciousness). When the white cloth is dirty, it is mind; when the whiteness is restored by washing, it is chittha. When desires make you greedy to possess, it is mind; when love makes you revere and adore, sympathise and serve, then, it is chittha. The mind can be transformed into chittha, only through ijinaasa and saadhana (inquiry and discipline). Ijinaasa is the stage of studentship or apprenticeship; saadhana is working on a job; and when you go through these two stages, you can afford to be calm, contented, loving all and being loved by all, as the old man who retires on a pension. When you give expression to your innate Divinity, it takes the form of Love.
Raamakrishna Paramahansa could not tolerate someone walking on grass; he felt the weight of the feet and the crushing himself.
View the Universe as the handiwork of God
You have to busy yourselves with activity, in order to use time and skill to the best advantage.
That is your duty and duty is God. The dull and the inert will hesitate to be active, for fear of exhaustion or failure, or loss. The emotional, passionate individuals will plunge headlong and crave for quick results and will be disappointed if they do not come in. The balanced persons will be active, because it is their duty, they will not be agitated by anything---failure or success. The godly will take up activity as a means of worshipping God, and they leave the result to God.
They know that they are but instruments in the hands of God. The godly are following the Saathwik, but, due to sheer ignorance and the unquestioned obedience to the senses, man is suffering pain and grief; that is the sad state of affairs, not only in India but all over the world.

Try to sanctify every item of work by dedicating it to some Divine end. The Universe is the handiwork of God, and therefore, meaningful and moral. View it as such and derive the utmost benefit. Without dedication, work is like a paper-flower, unfit to be offered to God; cheap, fragranceless, dry, tawdry. Offer God real flowers grown in the garden of your heart, fragrant, beautiful, delighting. Try to see everyone as a ray of God.
Life is a see-saw, with man sitting on a plank, poised on the round log---Inaana Shakthi, his basic nature of Wisdom. When the plank comes down to one side, it is Icchaa Shakthi---Bhakthi Yoga, emotional adoration; when it comes down on the other side, it is Kriyaa-Shakthi---Karma Yoga, activity to adore men as embodiments of divinity, service to man, adoration of nature by fostering love and tenderness. So long as the see-saw is based on Inaana, one is safe. Inaana (Wisdom) is the awareness that God is all. He is the seed, the Universe is the tree; instincts, impulses, emotions, passions---these are the branches and boughs and twigs; intelligence is the flower; pure unattached consciousness is the fruit; love is the sweetness in the fruit.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, 26-9-1972
The root of all religions, the substance of all scriptures, the rendezvous of all roads, the inspiration of all individuals is the Principle of Prema (Love). It is the firmest foundation for man's mission of life. It is the light that ensures world peace and world prosperity.
Sri Sathya Sai
47. Yajna: what it teaches
THE Vedhapurusha Sapthaaha Inaana Yajna, being celebrated every Dhasara at Prashaanthi Nilayam, is a rite that promotes the welfare and prosperity of the whole of mankind. But, it is difficult to convince doubters and disbelievers that this is the truth. Many feel that since such Vedhic ceremonies can be performed in orthodox style, with all the manthras uttered in correct style, only in India, their efficiency, if any, is confined to this land only, and so, they ask, how can this be beneficial in other regions where people have no faith in such rituals and hymns?
Such doubters restrict the meaning of the word, Yajna, Yajna means, 'any activity dedicated to the glory of God,' not merely, this activity prescribed in the ancient scriptures. Activity dedicated to the glory of God is being done, and can be done in all climes, in all realms, by all races. The 'dedication' ensures success. Without it, there will inevitably arise anxiety, fear and faction.

Every activity in the world is God-directed, God-ward moving, whether you know it or not. Only one has to be aware of it and share in the thrill of that knowledge. If God is not the inspirer and motivator, how can the Universe be moving in harmony, wheeling so smoothly? Else, there will be chaos, anarchy and an inferno of gamble.

Charity and self-control are integral parts of Yagna

Do not think that the Yajna is only this ceremony performed in this enclosure, marked out as specially holy, attended by readings and recitals from sacred texts and the chanting of Vedhic hymns, and nothing other than this. No. Yajna is a continuous process; every one who lives in the constant presence of God, and does all acts as dedicated to God is engaged in Yajna.

Three processes go together in spiritual discipline, as laid down by the sages: Yajna, Dhaana and Thapas (Sacrifice, Charity and Self-control). They cannot be partitioned and particularised thus.

Charity and self-control are integral parts of yagna. That is why Yajna is translated as Sacrifice, for, the process of charity or Dhaana is essential in yajna. Also thapas, that is to say, strict regulation of emotions and thought-processes, to ensure peace and faith.

There are various yajnas prescribed by the Vedhas. This is the Vedhapurusha Yajna, a sacrificial ceremony dedicated to the Purusha extolled in the Vedhas, the Purusha mentioned in the Purusha Suuktha as constituting the Universe and subsuming it wholly as the limbs of His Cosmic Body.

Every house-holder has the duty of performing for his own welfare and the welfare of the society in which he lives, five Yajnas like Pithryajana (yajna by which the forefathers are worshipped), Rishiyajna (yajna by which the sages are honoured, that is to say, by the study and practice of their teaching), Bhuuthayajna (yajna by which the animals and lower-beings are revered, that is to say, by provision of shelters, fodder etc.) and Dhevayajna (worship of God).

The Vedhapurusha is the Purushotthama (the Supremest Person) for by His Will He manifested Himself as the cosmos and its components, out of Himself. There is nothing that is not He; so, how can you be different? In these matters, faith comes first; it has to.

Believe that you are

Divine; conduct yourselves in accordance with that sovereign status; then, you will be blessed with the Anubhuuthi---the experience, the vision, the realisation, the awareness, the bliss. And, as a result, you are merged in that everlasting Aanandha.

The only one God can be reached by a thousand Names

Remember, you cannot have the anubhava (experience) and the Aanandha (Bliss) first. And, you cannot postpone fail:h, until you get them. You cannot bargain: "Give me the Aanandha and then, I shall have faith." See the Purushotthama in all purushas.

Purusha means, he who lives in the pura (port, city, or town). Each one of us is the resident and the sole resident of a distinct house of God. But, the Purushotthama---the 'Supreme Resident in all the cities---is God. You can recognise this Purushotthama, if you educate yourselves properly.

Take this Yajna performed here. In this One Fire, offerings are made concurrently with the recitation of the names of God, enclosed in elaborate hymns. More than 3560 offerings are made each day, for seven days. Each name describes God as having a special form. But this One Fire consumes all the offerings, and through its intermission every one of the offerings reaches the

One God, the One that really IS.

Or, consider this: you perform worship with 1008 Names, a rite called Sahasranaama archana.

You keep an idol or picture before you and offer one flower at a time at the feet of that symbol of God, repeating the names, one at a time. The one symbol of the One God is only One, though He can be reached by a thousand names.

Though you are acknowledging only One in all these rites, proclaiming the One Adhwaitic (nondualistic)

Divine, your sense and your intellect and your mind, its pack of desires, insist on running after the Many. This is the Maaya (delusion) that casts its enchantment on weak and ignorant men. It urges man towards wild prolific greeds of the manyfaced senses.

When you take food, do it in a prayerful mode

To realise the One, the Universal Absolute, which personalises itself into God and Creation, there is no discipline more valuable and more effective than SEVA. All the 1008 Names of the Sahasranaama archana reach the One. All the 1000 names of thousand-faced society connote only the One God that plays in those 1000 roles. The One appears as if it is enshrined in the 1000 bodies. This is the truth you have to realise and cherish as the most precious in life.

You have observed that the Vedhic Pandiths (priestly scholars) are pouring ghee into the Fire, every time the recitation of a hymn is over. Every day, when you take food, you are offering eatables to the Fire that God has lit in you to digest food. You have to eat in a prayerful mode, in profound gratitude. The Geetha says that the fire which cooked the meal is God, the meal is God, the eater is God, the purpose of eating is to carry on the work entrusted by God or pleasing to God, and that the fruit of that work is, progress towards God.

You must perform another yajna too, every day. Pour the egoistic desires and emotions, passions, impulses and acts into the flames of dedication and devotion. In fact, that is real Yajna, of which these are reflections and prompters, guides and prototypes.

This yajna is only the concrete symbolic representation of the abstract underlying Truth.

Just as a child is taught to pronounce the words, head, net, wave, garland, by making it associate the sounds and the letterforms with pictures of the objects so named, through this kshara (temporary) symbol the Akshara thathwa (the Eternal Principle) is brought before the consciousness.

Make every thought a longing for God

This Puujā, this Yajna, and this Homa, are arranged here every Dhasara, in order to help you to learn that other, ever-lasting, abstract Yajna, which every one of you has to do, to save yourselves from fear, grief and anxiety.

You must have noticed that the Pandiths close each day's Yajna with a prayer that calls for World Peace, peace for all mankind, peace and happiness, for there can be no peace without happiness and no happiness without peace. Lokaas samasthaas Sukhino bhavanthu, they pray.

"May all the world have happiness, and peace."

Peace of mind cannot be gained by wealth or fame or scholarship or skill. For that, you have to clean the mind, purify the heart, yearn for service of the divine forms that move around you. Do every deed as an act of worship; make every thought a longing for Him; change every word that comes from your tongue into a hymn in His praise.

This is the lesson that you have to learn from Prashanthi Nilayam, every Dhasara, during the week the Yajna is celebrated.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 11-10-1972

Each of you has struggled upwards from the stone to plant, from plant to animal, from animal to man! Do not slide back into the beast; rise higher to Divinity, shining with the new effulgence of love.

The Divine is the energy that animates, the urge that circulates the blood in your veins, that transmits knowledge and experience through the nerves, that correlates and collects for storage the impressions your senses gather, the conclusions your intelligence garners!

Keep in line with the Divine, by means of Love, Truth and Goodness.

Sri Sathya Sai

48. Poornachandra

A BUBBLE is born on water, from water and merges in water! Man is born in God and merges in God! This is the lesson India has been teaching her children as well as all men anywhere for centuries. She gave the message of Divinity to humanity. Festivals like Dhasara are designed to make man aware of his Divinity, to endow him with purity to become aware of his holiness, to imprint on his heart the wisdom won by the sages after years of yearning. The monastic heads, hereditary gurus, the leaders and rulers of the land are not inspiring people to awaken to this truth. Though millions get a glimpse of the ecstasy of union with the Divine Beauty and Divine Majesty from these festivals and pilgrimages, the real purpose of the festivals and the benefit one has to derive from the concourse of like-minded people is not understood or explained by any one. The holy teachings of our land are not being implemented by the so-called custodians of culture---the educationists, the preceptors and the gurus.

Pilgrimages impress on people the lesson of unity; they bring together people from all corners of the world, irrespective of language or locality. The places of pilgrimage are also distributed all over the land. Festivals like the Dhasara at Prashanthi Nilayam bring together Sadhakas from all the continents, irrespective of religion, caste, creed, and colour; they are all motivated by the same urge, to involve themselves more and more in attempts to realise their innate Divinity.

They have met here to enjoy the supreme delight in the Holy presence of the Lord and to recognise the unity of all in the Divine Aathmic splendour.

Desire knows no justification and has no end

But man is caught in low desires. Desire is the sole cause of sorrow and distress. Sacrifice is the best means of avoiding desire and the consequent grief and disappointment. Several devotees come to Me and complain, "Lord! I am suffering from this problem," "I am suffering from some headache," "I am suffering from stomach ache." I give all of them the same reply, "Santhosham"

(I am happy), to every one. When a bereaved wife tells Me that her husband has departed, then also I say Santhosham. You may wonder why I give the same reply to all such persons.

Santhosham is not the common type of joy or happiness, the transient, trivial pleasure you get from worldly success or material gain. "San" means anything gained through fair means, honourable methods. Thosham is sacred, holy, exaltation, ecstasy. Of all the gifts that you receive from God, the greatest gift is Santhosham. The opposite of Santhosham is 'Sorrow', which is the fruit of aasha (desire) that arouses hope and almost always results in disappointment or despair. One aasha engenders another: one desire proliferates into a hundred, even when it is fulfilled. Aasha is like the shadow caused by the morning Sun---it gets longer when you run to catch it. It tantalises you and makes you a fool. It knows, no justification and has no end. So,

Santhosham is the supreme blessing of the Lord, who in His infinite Love, puts an end to that unquenchable thirst. No wealth or other attainment can equal it in efficacy. Santhosham is the culmination of Desire in full contentment and sacred satiety. The sacred texts of India have abiding, vitality

The culture of India has been exhorting people to learn this lesson and practise this discipline but, the glitter of the West with its scientific advance and technological superiority have enslaved the brain and hems of Indians and they pay no heed to the Voice of the Mother which warns and teaches. They are like the dull-witted inhabitants of the Gangetic basin who dig wells on the banks of the holy river---instead of drawing the sacred water itself for their needs! You should pledge yourself to protect, practise and promote the ancient time-tested culture of your country.

It is not an accident that you are born in this land. A sacred responsibility is resting on your shoulders. The greatness of India is something unique; so is your good fortune to be living at a time when it is being fast recognised all over the world by anxiety ridden, fear torn, humans.

A word about; Poets who read poems now. According to tradition only the Rishis who had intuitively cognised the hymns in praise of God and the Divine in man were revered as Poets or kavis. Of course, rishis or sages were honoured as poets, and the appellation rishis was not given to 'poets.' Rishis could be called kavis, because, 'kavi' meant he who understood the past, realised the present and educated people for the future. Since the poet has a purified consciousness, he could pronounce impartial judgement on the past, he could lay his finger on the ills and 'wells' of the present and he could recommend the paths for progress in the future. People could place faith in their words and listen to their call. They would not mislead or misinterpret.

Genuine poets are aware of the three periods of time, can roam in their imagination over the three worlds and be ever fixed in consciousness with the three Divine Entities of the Trinity. The Shaasthras, Puraanas, Epics and other sacred texts of India have abiding vitality and validity, only because their authors had such unquestioned authority to guide and interpret the Age 'in which they lived and composed their works. The sages of India desired to establish peace on earth Vyaasa and Vaalmeeki underwent a long process of asceticism and study, as well as experience 'of spiritual bliss and thus lifted themselves upto the heights of rishihood, before they composed the epics and texts bearing their name. The question may be asked, "Why should they compose poetry, however exalted, after attaining rishihood? What was the urge that prompted them?" The answer is: "They were overcome with compassion, for the fellow-pilgrims struggling along the path they had traversed; they were full of agony at the plight of fellow-beings who were sweltering in the heat of worldly entanglements." They desired to establish peace on earth and good-will among mankind. Their attention was ever on the Vedhic message, "Swayam theernah, paraan thaarayathi." "Themselves having crossed the Sea of Samsaara (change), they help others to do likewise." Themselves risen to the Divine, they helped others to rise.

Nature has no beginning and no end
One of the stages of development of beings into Divinity is Maanavathwa (Humanness), being endowed with Manas (mind), which is an instrument for bondage to, as well as for liberation from, physical shackles. Some people define 'Prakrithi' (the objective world) as a mere fancy of the mind. But, it 'is as valid, as real, as the Lord Himself. God has no beginning and no end.

Nature or Prakrithi too has no beginning and no end. Prakrithi is a stream that flows from beyond time into the timeless future. The individual is the Purusha, the person who resides in this Pura (Body or Castle or Fort). There are two Purushas---the Kshara Purusha, and the Akshara Purusha. The Kshara Purusha is bound up with material life and so is subject to change. He is entangled with the five Koshas (Sheaths), the five Praanas (Vital Airs) the five Indhriyas (senses of perception). The Akshara Purusha is the Saakshi (Witness).

There is another over-all Purusha, the Purushothama, who is beyond the three segments of time, the three Universes and is everywhere at the same moment and all moments. His Glory is evident in all things and beings. You should strive to escape from the identification with the body and feel that you are only the residents of the Body---the Kshara Purushas. Then, by saadhana you are able to cognise the Akshara Purusha, the Witness of even the Kshara Purusha, the Jeeva. By practising the unbroken presence of the Purushothama (Supreme person) who is resplendent in all creation, you can ultimately merge in Him, as the consummation of all the lives you have spent here below.

Devotees who worked with a spirit of dedication Members of the Sai Organisation and those who adhere to the Universal path to Sai should not be carried away by ideas of inferiority or superiority based on differences of religion, caste or creed. They should honour Faith, Steadfastness, Sincerity, Purity, wherever found. There are some people who ascribe all the ills of Society to the prevalence of religion and the importance given to social divisions. They say all the unrest and turmoil prevalent today are the direct results of this system. This is not true. Diversity of religion and faith is conducive to the welfare of mankind. Division of labour is a genuinely beneficial social need. Life can be sanctified and elevated to a worshipful pilgrimage if only everyone clings to his way and sees it in its proper perspective. Idle brains exaggerate matters and cynics cause great social damage. Gulfs are widened by thoughtless criticism. If only all of you remember the twin principles of cohesion, the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, mankind will soon become a mighty family full of peace and joy.

I must mention one instance of good work done by people who are actuated by sense of duty. This spacious shed, these lines of three storeyed flats, this addition and artistic alterations which are made in the Prashanthi Mandhir are all examples of work done in the spirit of worship.

Swaami confers blessings on the engineers whom He has called up to sit on the dais---for they have done signal service to provide more facilities for the streams of devotees who long to stay in Swaami's Presence.

We have here the 82-year old engineer B. Sathyanarayana of Aandhra Pradesh, who has held positions of great responsibility and high usefulness in the past. He has worked with full fervour and enthusiasm using all skills for the works allotted to him. Ioga Rao has shouldered the responsibilities laid on him as an Engineer by Swaami admirably well. He has worked night and day in a spirit of dedication. I bless them and their families. May they enjoy peace, health and happiness.

Become free from the taint of selfishness This vastly spacious shed with all amenities of lighting and sound equipment where you are sitting comfortably in thousands, with this platform so broad and deep, and so impressively designed are the products of the dedication and sense of duty of another individual about whom I want to tell you. Keeping in mind the target date set by Swaami, Sri P.R. Kamani, one of the greatest of Swaami's Devotees, has personally supervised the erection of this shed. Supplying scarce articles like iron and cement and also the technical guidance and skill, with a smiling face and an exuberant heart, he sought to fulfil Swaami's Sankalpa and succeeded. Sri P.R. Kamani is responsible for giving you all so much delight. His devotion and the loving care and steady attention that he bestows on any work connected with Swaami is really remarkable. It is decided that this great auditorium shall be consecrated to the memory of Sri P. R. Kamani. From this day, it shall be known as Poornachandra Auditorium.

Poornachandra, where we derive all this Aanandha is like the Full Moon, the embodiment and symbol of a full mind that is free from the taint of selfishness and wavering. It is my intention and desire that all those who use this Auditorium and who listen to and are inspired by the discourses and Special Programmes that happen here should also become 'Full Moons'.

Sometimes, we pursue this or that fragment of the mind and derive some little Aanandha, spending our lives this way and that, but the highest fulfilment is to have the full expansion of the pure mind, which is symbolised by the Full Moon--- Poornachandra. The mind is the Moon, the buddhi (intelligence) is the Sun and both are interacting with each other, rotating in the heart, which is the sky! In the sky, clouds of pleasure and sorrow, disappointment and success, joys and griefs, may be rolling along. But, in spite of these, the Sun and Moon carry on their allotted duties. So man too must carry on in a spirit of dedication, as P. R.

Kamani did. We can assert; that there is no fulfilment greater than that, there is no merit higher than that, to be acquired by man.
Because this great devotee has always cherished Swaami in his heart and was ceaselessly engaged in the thought of Swaami only, he is ever with Swaami and in Swaami. This Auditorium shall be known as Poornachandra---His memory, enshrined in that name, will live for ever.
Prashanthi Nilayam, 17-10-1972
49. Why Shivam?
THE construction of this Mandhir named Shivam is a special Saadhana for the residents of Bhaagyanagara (Hyderabad). Its appearance is unique, for it is to be built in the shape of a Linga, the form most approximate to the conception of the formless, attributeless Absolute. The Linga is the form of God, emerging from the Niraakara (formless) to the Saakara (formfilled). Other Aakaaras (Forms) are all subsumed in the Linga Form. Prakrithi, the objective world, is the base; it signifies that the Lord is established in that manifestation of His, which is the concrete presentation of His play, His potentiality and His Shakthi (Power).
That is why the Lord is described as Shiva Shakthi Aathmaka Swaruupam---"the Supreme which became the Shiva and the Shakthi," the latent and the patent.
You will notice that the base has a horizontal superstructure, over which the cylindrical Linga is placed. The base is Sathyam, the structure over it is Shivam and the Linga is Sundharam. One is the flower, the second is the perfume and the third is the wind, the Formless that wafts the fragrance, which is the symbol of mangalam (auspiciousness) which is Shivam, Sathyam or (Truth) is the base on which the Universe and all that it implies rest.
The message this building will convey is that man is the embodiment of Sathyam, Shivam and Sundharam, and it will call on all to live up to that glory. He has to realise the Truth and demonstrate in thought, word and deed that Truth is the very basis of his existence. Know the Truth and the Truth shall make you strong, steady kin with all, and free from the bonds of lust and hate. Man has to learn the lesson of Shivam: swallow the poison of anger and greed, and make it ineffective in its effort to harm the world. Spread consolation and comfort through speech and action.

Man has to realise that he is Shivam Shiva wears the crescent on His crown so that the soft moonlight might mark out the pilgrim route to God, and make the journey less toilsome. He spreads joy and peace. But, the fiery, ferocious poison, Shiva hides behind the blue patch on His throat.
That is a lesson for man: keep under restraint, within you, the qualities and tendencies that are anti-social, the poisonous hatreds and competitive greeds. The Shivam does not mean any particular God or unit of the Trinity. It includes all mankind, for man has to realise that he is Shivam. Then, the Sundharam too is a reminder that Truth is beauty, and Beauty is Divine, not mere physical beauty but, moral and spiritual beauty. Give up ugly thoughts, unpleasant speech and disgusting acts. Have the ideal of beauty ever in mind.
Avadhaani said just now that such buildings are the landmarks of the Sai Era and that they should be built all over India. I have no such desire. I do not appreciate or encourage such accumulations of stone and cement, of brick and mortar. I long to reside in your hearts, fragrant with the incense of fine virtues, merciful intentions and compassionate emotions. That is the Shivam I desire, the Mandhir built of Truth, Beauty and Goodness.
Inner Charm is the genuine Beauty. Seetha interned in Ashoka Vana in Lanka, was suddenly confronted by a monkey; but, that ugly creature struck her as full of beauty, when it brought her the long awaited message from Raama! The loveliness of the Vana (garden), the appealing scenery, the bright beautiful ware that Raavana spread before her could not win her heart; but, the one word, Raama endeared her to the strange monkey crouched on top of the tree under which she was encircled by ogresses.
Smog of hatred and greed tarnish the temple towers The beauty of Nature is but a reflection of the Beauty that is God. But, like all images, it is not substantial. Flowers fade, clouds scatter into new patterns, physical charm is but a flash that disappears in a moment---but, Divine Beauty is eternal, full, free. That Sundharam, is Sathyam, unaffected by the passage of Time, unchanging with the location; that Sundharam is the real Shivam, the only Good that is. Pursuing paltry physical beauty leads man astray; it is as calamitous as the pursuit of trivial joy.

Shivam is Goodness; the Body is for realising Godness, which is total goodness. But, the body is not itself goodness or godness; it is an instrument that breaks down every moment and that is rebuilt every moment getting weaker in the process. The father says proudly, My son is growing fast, but really, his life is ebbing fast. The body is valuable, only on account of its use in realising God. So also, a Mandhir or this Shivam is valuable only when you are able to realise the God that dwells therein. The Gopuram (Tower) of a temple or mandhir is like the raised hand of God calling on the weary pilgrim to halt and take rest, and proceed faster to the Goal he is seeking. In most places, these old towers are hidden in the forest of chimneys that have crowded around them in recent times. The smoke from these factories and the smog of hatred that emanate from faction and greed tarnish the atmosphere of the temple towers. Even the temples have been denigrated by the bargaining for fees and the collection of toll for religious services. The stream of Aanandha that flows from worship is interrupted by demands for monetary contributions. Temples are not allowed to pour into the social mind a constant stream of peace and joy.

"Why this Mandhir? you may ask. Is it for My stay whenever I happen to visit Hyderabad? I do not need a huge building, nor the furniture and appliances you are proposing to collect here. It will serve more the needs of those who have now to follow Me around from house to house. Since I have no fixed residence, they are hard put to it, women and children, the well and the ill, to know where I will be available. This building will give them a place where they can await Me. It also gives Me another excuse to come to Hyderabad for, I am surely coming to 'open' this Shivam, when it is completed!

Hyderabad, 25-10-1972

50. Play the game BELIEVING that the body is All, and that there is no entity embodied in it---this is Mistake

No.1. Ignoring or forgetting that there can be no wave without the ocean, no body without the Aathma (Divine Self), is Mistake No.2. The Aathma has no modification or mood. It is the individualised embodiment that undergoes modifications and is caught in moods. Once you know that you are in essence the Aathma, you too will be unaffected. Another characteristic of the individual is that he cannot be alone, separate from the rest. Like a drop of oil on water, he spreads; he reaches out and far. 'I' seeks other 'I's and seeks to become We. Life is a march from I to We. But, it usually strays from I to They. And does not reach the God, We.

Intellect alone can direct man in the path of discrimination, between the true path and false, the proper step and the improper. This is the reason why man has been praying since ages, through the Gaayathri hymn: Illumine me, prompt my intelligence, so that I may walk aright."

The reasoning power of man is shaped, not only by the education he receives now, but, more by the impact of past lives and the import of future events. If the power is used for selfaggrandizement it feeds delusion; if it is used in service for others, it will promote the Revelation of Reality. Reason must examine the vagaries of the mind and make patent the Divinity, the resides and shines in every individual.

Avathaars are ever alert, aware, alight

Give away 'Love' to all; give up the ego; display heroism in service; with compassion to fellowmen, feel your intimate kinship with them. Visualise the Aathma that illumines all; derive unending Bliss therefrom.

All who come embodied are Avathaars, that is to say, advents of the Divine, manifestations of God. What, then, is the special feature of Raama, Krishna, Buddha, Christ? Why do you celebrate their birthdays with such reverential enthusiasm? The speciality is this: they are aware; you are unaware of the Aathma which is the Truth. Awareness confers Grace, Glory, Majesty, Might, Splendour. Awareness confers liberation from bounds, from time, space and causation, from sleep, dream and wakefulness. For you, sleep is fiction, dream is fantasy and wakefulness a many-directional storm. Avathaars are ever alert, aware, alight.

The wise man is he who keeps his reason sharp and clear, and sees things as they really are. He listens to the advice: Life is a Challenge, Meet it; Life is Love, Share it; Life is a Dream, Realise it;

Life a Game, Play it.

This is the real Pilgrim's progress. This is the Lion's march across the forest, fearless, masterful and victorious. The roar of the lion makes all the denizens scamper in panic; so too the Halo of Wisdom scatters the dark brood of fear and doubt.

Life sweeps along like a wild typhoon; the allotted years do melt like snow before the Sun; but, man wastes the precious chance, and strays into folly and frivolity.

The yearning of the human soul, "From untruth lead me into Truth; from darkness lead me into Light; from death, lead me into Immortality,"---this is unrealised. Of what use is it to honour the Avathaar and hold the day when the Avathaar took human form as sacred?

Plant the seeds of love in your hearts

The message of the Avathaar must be born, must become alive, must grow in you, your heart--- that is the birthday, you have to celebrate. Celebrate the Avathaar's Birthday in your own village.

You need not travel long distances to where I physically am. Plant the seeds of Love in your hearts, let them grow into trees of service and shower the sweet fruits of Aanandha. Share the Aanandha with all. That is the proper way to celebrate the Birthday.

I have been telling you that My Life is My Message. I am exhorting you in the Upanishadic way, "Revere the Mother as Divine, Revere the Father as Divine, Revere the Teacher as Divine, Revere the Guest as Divine." Now I am proceeding to the place where their bodies are entombed to offer, as I have advised you, to express gratitude and respect, to the parents. After that, the Prashaanthi Flag will be hoisted on the Mandhir. Hoist it on the shrines of your hearts, shrines where God is installed and realised in actual presence, every moment of your lives.

Birthday Discourse, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1972

A red-hot iron hammer can be hammered into shape by a cold iron hammer. So too, a person red hot with emotion and passion can be hammered by the hammer that knows no heat of anger or hate.

That is the reason Raama was able to defeat Raavana and destroy him. Why?

The very word Sathwa means strength, power, vigour, vitality. For virtue is power, goodness is power. Raama and Lakshmana are Saathwik Mahaathmas, embodiments of the powers that righteousness can endow.

Sri Sathya Sai

51. The three bodies

MAN is engaged in ceaseless search for happiness; but, he is incapable of defining what exactly is the essential component of happiness. So, he flits from one objective gain to another, ever discontented with himself, ever bothered by disappointment. He tries to possess, to accumulate, to acquire more and more of external junk, which cloud his vision and dulls his appetite for gains for lasting value. When can a man say, "I am fully happy; I need no more?" What is the nature of joy or comfort that external objects can give? Man does not pause to inquire. He is unaware that he himself is the embodiment of the highest and the most lasting happiness or Aanandha (Bliss).

That flaw has led him into disaster and disease.

Before seeking happiness through the senses, the mind and the intellect, man has to examine whether he is a bundle of senses, or a mind playing with them or an intellect that rationalises the mental cravings. The body is the gross body; the water which it is intended to contain and carry is the subtle body; the reality of the potter who shaped it and willed it is the causal body. The three bodies which each has are called respectively Sthuula (gross), Sukshma (subtle) and Karana (causal). Physical and vital sheaths are sthuula, mental and the intellectual sheaths are the Sukshma, and the Blissful or Aanandhamaya sheath is the Karana or Causal body of man.

Behind the Aanandha is the spring of Aanandha, the Aathma.

Three stages of Wisdom related to three bodies

There are three stages of wisdom correlated to those three bodies:

Inaana, Sujanaana and Vijanaana. Knowledge that is gained by the analysis of the objective world and the similarities of the behaviour of its components is Inaana. When this knowledge is further studied and practised to subserve the best interests of the individual society, it becomes Sujanaana, or beneficial wisdom. The intentions and urges that arise from the purified consciousness saturated with the Divine qualities emanating from the sage is Vijanaana, the Highest Wisdom. It is to be noted that the word Vijanaana is often misused to indicate mere Inaana, or co-ordinated information, analysed information about sense perceptions arising out of contact with the material objective world. Bhaaratheeya Culture uses the word for the Supreme Wisdom, which denotes the seer, the saint.

Intelligence, intellect, intuition---these three govern the thoughts and actions of man. One leads to another. This is the significance of the prayer with which Gandhi awakened the urge of liberation in this vast country, liberation not only from alien rule but also from alien tendencies and trends of thought. He caused the reverberation all over the land from a million throats of the prayer, Sabko sanmathi dhe Bhagavaan---"O Lord! Grant every one the equipment of beneficent intelligence." Once that is assured, progress is certain.

Lessons to be learnt from Hanumaan's mission to Lanka Once the intelligence is purified and dedicated to spiritual effort, there should be no slipping back whatever the obstacle, whatever the temptation. Hanumaan, charged with the mission of discovering the place where Raavana had confined Seetha, decided that he should take a leap over the sea towards Lanka to search for her in that island of Raam that he carried in his heart and on his tongue. A mountain immersed at the bottom of the sea felt a strong urge to do him some little service, for, he was the instrument of God, and engaged in an exhausting adventure!
Its name was Mynaaka. It rose above the waters and called upon Hanumaan to rest awhile on its crest, and refresh himself with the fruits upon the trees that grew thereon. Hanumaan declined to delay his landing in Lanka; he was engaged in a Divine Mission, which brooked no rest, no delay, no dallying. He turned a deaf ear to the importunities of Mynaaka, and sped forward to fulfil the command of the Lord.
Ponder over this incident: Consider the compassion and the eagerness to serve which the 'inert' massive mountain felt! Consider the steadfastness, the un-deviating faith, the single-pointed loyalty of the monkey, Hanumaan! Do they not teach invaluable lessons to man---lessons of heart that melts at suffering, a head that refuses to swerve from the path of duty?
The whole duty of man is to engage himself in good acts with the gross body, scatter good thoughts and good influences around him with his subtle body, and earn self-realisation and Bliss through his causal body.
Birthday Discourse, Prashanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1972 To search for God with the instruments of the laboratory is like trying to cure pain in the stomach by pouring drops into the eye.
There is a technique and a special instrument for that purpose, which the pastmasters in that science have developed and spoken about.
Equip yourselves with a clear eye, through detachment and love, sharpen your sense of discrimination, viveka, so that it has no prejudice or predilection; then, you can see God in you, around you, in all that you know and feel and are.
Sri Sathya Sai

52. For me, from me THE mother who bore you, the father who fostered you and the teacher who opened your eye to the mystery of Nature in and around you, have all to be revered.
However high you may rise in social status, however huge may be your bank account, if your parents are neglected in distress, your life has been a tragic waste. Parents are mightily happy, when their children evince the slightest regard for their comfort. Any little sign of gratitude is welcomed by them with delight.
If you have no urge to please them and make them happy, how can you ever hope to please God?
The envelope might cost a naya paisa only; inside it, the bit of paper might be shoddy and soiled.
The scribbling on it might be full of blotches; the letters might be higgledy piggledy, but, when the child writes to the mother, she reads and appreciates the letters with tears of joy. The envelope might be a deluxe one costing five rupees, the letters may be of gold, printed in choice antique type in an aristocratic press; but, she will not be interested even to look at it. The mother seeks love, craves for gratitude, thirsts after sympathy. She values feeling, not external display.
The Divine Mother too is moved by the same feeling. She does not appreciate demonstrative trappings like matted hair, rosaries, marks on forehead or sacredotal robes. She values sincerity, yearning, virtue, compassion, love.
Minds of men are cesspools of desire The Vedhas declare that Her Grace, that is to say, Immortality, can be achieved by Thyaaga (detachment), rather than by hectic activity, or affluence or progeny.
Give up; do not grasp in clenched fists. Release; do not bind and get bound. The units of the Sathya Sai Seva Organisation must emphasise through example and personal practice that no joy is equal to the joy of sharing, giving, renouncing.
You can understand this better when you pay attention to the behaviour of children. They are like realised souls, without attachment. There are three motives that rule man: rathi (attachment), praapthi (acquisition) and thusti (bliss). Rathi is the desire to contact the objective world; praapthi is the craving to possess the object; the thusti is the Aanandha (Supreme Bliss) available when the secret of Nature is realised. Examine the contents of a child's pocket. You will find a few pebbles, a piece of glass, or a twig or flower. The child gets from these more joy than an adult derives from a wad of notes. The child does not crave to possess and to deny others. It does not accumulate for coming days, or for the mere pleasure of becoming renowned as an accumulator. The child may have a dirt-covered body, but its mind is free from dirt; elders are scrupulous about physical cleanliness but, their minds are cesspools of desire, of hate, envy and clogging slush. Shed all envy and grow greatly in Love. This is because the real nature of God, Nature and Man is not understood. Man is but a wave of the ocean which is God. Nature is just a manifestation of the same God, appearing as having diversity, and as good-bad, gentle-cruel, useful-useless, and, such other dual attributes. Desire to acquire or anxiety to avoid comes because man is caught in this duality, which is fundamentally, a creation of his own mind. Man caught up in the tangle of desire, craves for much fruit with little effort; the man who is detached from the temptations of the objective world craves for a little fruit, but, is prepared to undergo much effort for the same. Just a little sign of Grace endows him with immeasurable delight, Aanandha. "For me," "to me" --- This is animal desire. "From me, by me" --- this offering is a sign of the Divine nature in man. Share, then the sense of One-ness gets established; you lose all fear and shed all envy, and grow greatly in Love. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 24-11-1972

When devotion shines full, the sky in the heart becomes a bowl of beauty and life is transformed into a charming avenue of Aanandha (bliss). That beauty of heart, that Aanandha in life can be won through the mind, if the lesson of Guru Poornima day is remembered and realised.

Sri Sathya Sai
53. To three Pandiths
THE wise are those who know the Aathma (Divine Self). They distinguish between That and This, Thath and Thwam, the Absolute and the Relative, the Universal and Particular, that is falsely conceived as separate from the Universal. When he experiences the Truth that he is the Absolute Aathma, man is endowed with Supreme Bliss. It is sheer waste if one has no such experience but has pored over mountains of spiritual texts or earned fame as a deep scholar. Man alone has the ability to understand the phenomenal world around him. He can grasp the ways and waywardness of the world; he can delve into its evolution and involution, its contraction and expansion. Therefore, he has to give it only a relative value, and follow as his only goal, the search for the Aathma and the attainment of the Aathma. And, the search has to be through continuous, consistent Saadhana. Boundless spiritual potential is encased in every being. In man, it expresses itself as Inaana (Supreme Wisdom). Man is neither a bit of clod, nor a bundle of flesh. He has in him the inexhaustible spring of Aanandha (Divine Bliss). A person is not just the body, with its limbs and other mechanisms. The Aathma is the Divine Person. The soul is the Personality. And the person realises Aanandha only when the Aathma is cognised. This achievement cannot be won through riches or authority of office, scholarship or status, fame or force. Discarding this perennial Aanandha, man imagines the sensual pleasures to be Aanandha and he spends his life in fruitless pursuits. He wanders about in the thorny jungles and desert sands. He humiliates himself and crawls and cringes for favours from all and sundry. This is the consequence of the ignorance that blinds. Man must die triumphant over death. Man is equipped with a return ticket, when he takes birth. Holding it in his grasp he earns and spends, rises and falls, sings and dances, weeps and wails, forgetting the end of the journey. But, though he forgets, the wagon of life moves towards the cemetery, which is its terminus. It brings no glory to man if he is tied helplessly to the wheel of birth and death. His glory and greatness consists in disentangling himself from that revolving wheel. Before death nips life, and thrusts him on to another birth, he must by means of Saadhana learn the mystery of the Aathma. When death comes one must be glad to meet it since he comes for the last time and there will be no more birth for him. Man weeps when he is born; he should not weep when he dies. He must die triumphant over death. Otherwise, he lives only to consume tons of food, as a burden upon the earth. You seek to escape pain and grief; but, they are inescapable. Life is as a dream. In the dream, you experience joy and grief; but when you realise that both joy and grief are unreal, when you awake into the consciousness of the Aathma, you will no more have the thrill of joy or the despondency of pain. You will not have any longer fear or anxiety, fear of death or anxiety about the future. The mind is the architect of your progress or decline. For the fool, the mind is a formidable dinosaur; for the intelligent, the mind is an angel. The trained mind is torn by fear; the pure elevated mind is placid and unruffled, like that of the homeless sage. The Vedhas teach how to purify the mind and render it a useful tool. Pandiths must themselves shine as inspirers Nothing is uncaused in the Universe. Every being, object, incident has been caused by the primal Cause and its direction or guidance' The Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) yearn for the discovery of that unseen Principle. Through sheer ignorance and perversity, the Shaasthras have been ignored and set aside, and man is misleading himself into the belief that his fancies are true, just and beneficial. Man has thrown his "humanness" into the crater of cruelty forgetting his best interests, under the influence of hatred, envy, conceit and power. He has cast aside the expanse of his culture. As a result peace has flown from the heart of man, from the fold of society and the boundaries of nations. The Pandiths and Scholars who have gathered today under the auspices of the Prashaanthi Vidhwan-Mahaasabha must promote and set themselves up as pioneers and examples for the task of making people aware of the greatness of Sanaathana Dharma, and of the Vedhas and Shaasthras in which is enshrined Dharma (righteousness). They must teach the people the Principle of the Aathma, and themselves shine as inspirers through their own practice of what they teach. Immersed in Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Sheer bliss in the total awareness of the Supreme Reality) themselves, they must communicate that joy and that wisdom to others. Plant in every heart the seed of Truth; I bless that you succeed in leading men into that Bliss of fullness and fulfilment. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 3-12-1972 Sath-sangh means Meeting the Sath, the Sath which is spoken of while extolling God as Sath-Chith-Aanandha. Sath is the Existence Principle, the IS that is the basic truth of the Universe. Align with the Truth, the Sath in you, the Sathya (Reality) on which the Mithya (false) is imposed by minds that do not see light. By dwelling in that Sath, the flame is lit, light dawns, darkness flees and Inaana Bhaaskara (the Sun of Realisation) rises. Sri Sathya Sai 54. He whom Christ announced RELIGIONS arise from the minds of good men, who crave to make all men good; they strive to eliminate evil and cure the bad. They are many, since they have to be adjusted to the individuals, their activities, their professions and roles, their character and characteristics. The individual has to start observing the limits and laws laid down, and derive joy and strength thereby. And, then, his cleansed mind will lead the way, to higher and higher stages. He and the society of which he is a unit will benefit thereby. It is therefore appropriate that the Birthday of Jesus, who felt the need to save mankind and who strove to achieve it, is celebrated; but, the celebration must take the form of adherence to the teachings, loyalty to the principles, practising the disciplines and experiencing the Awareness of the Divine that he sought to arouse. These days, the world is deriving satisfaction in mere words, and in witnessing clever rules designed to cover up one's faults. The Birthdays of the Great are honoured by such hypocrisy and external pomp. There is no examination in the light of the message they gave, nor, any effort to practise it and derive the bliss it promises. The Great Teachers belong to mankind. It is wrong to believe that Jesus belongs only to the Christians and the Christmas is a holy festival for the West only. To accept one of them as one's own and discard the rest as belonging to others, is a sign of pettiness. Christ, Raama, Krishna--- they are for all men everywhere. Man's life is conditioned by feelings and deeds. The various limbs and organs together form a body; various nations and communities together form the world. The sustenance given by Divine Grace circulates in every part of the body, helping it to function in unison. The stream of Love, endowed by Divine Grace, has to circulate in every State and community to make the world live in Peace and Joy. If this truth is realised, there will arise no idea of difference. If the members of a family are at loggerheads, the lands and other possessions of the family will be uncared for, and be either wasted or lost. The separation of one member will also be a big loss, for, the Grace that sustains the family will diminish and get lost. When a hand is amputated, the limb loses its function, and a great deal of blood too is lost during the removal. So too, the Divine Grace of Love is lost when a country sets itself apart: it also becomes a weak and functionless limb of the World community. Division, difference and distinction cuts one off from the life-giving Grace, that feeds every cell of the body and every individual in the World. The World is sustained by the self-same Grace. A tree requires for its growth, soil, sunlight and atmosphere. But, more than these three, it requires the seed. Man's life is conditioned by feelings and deeds, and the consequences of 'these feelings and deeds. But, his existence, his very Is-ness, depends on the Will of God.

Growing trees may differ, according to the nature of the soil, the quantity of sunlight and the quality of the soil. So too, men may differ according to the consequences of the types of feelings and deeds that emanate from them. But, just as it is true to say that "the seeds are the same, is

One, without any difference, the variety of forms, the variety of emotions and attitudes, the variety of communities and loyalties are the result of man's ignoring his fundamental Unity in the one Divine Will, and his acting contrary to that Unity.

Meaning of three statements made by Christ

The moving water of a river has the Moon in its depths; the still water of a lake has also the Moon underneath; the sky has the Moon up above. The Moon in the flowing river is broken and fragmentary, it flows fast, apparently, with the floods. The Moon in the lake is calm, unmoved, undistracted. These two are but reflections of the real Moon in the sky. The Moon reflected in the flood is the Individual Soul, engaged in activity, embroiled in- Maaya, cause and effect. The Moon reflected in the placid face of the lake is the Yogi, the Saint, who has attained balance, equipoise, peace, dwelling in the One. The real Moon in the sky is the Eternal Witness, the Absolute, the Primal Principle.

Christ spoke of these three, when He made, one after the other, three statements. Referring to the active individual soul, the flickering Moon, he said, "I am the Messenger of God;" referring to himself as the Yogi, who has risen beyond dualities, and attained balance, he said, "I am the Son of God." Realising that these two are but reflections, and that the real Moon is the Witness in the sky, that he too is the Formless, Nameless Absolute, he declared, towards the end of his life, "I and My Father are ONE."

All beings are images of the Universal Aathma, in the names and forms they have apparently assumed. This is the truth, enclosed, elaborated 'and demonstrated in the spiritual texts of India, which form the basis of Bhaaratheeya culture. The essence of all religions and faiths then, is this: the merging in this Unity. The goal of all spiritual endeavour is this: the merging in this Unity. The object of all enquiry is this: to cognise this Unity. But, this patent fact is ignored, and persons create strife, anxiety and unrest for themselves and perpetrate horrors to hold forth the support, the disunity so dear to their fractioned minds.

People today relish the very things religion condemned

The passage of time has clouded the splendour of the message, the fascination exercised by the material and the worldly has drawn them away from the path, and the expansion of science and technology has made them conceited and wrong-headed. So, people now relish the very things prohibited and promote the very things condemned by religion. All religions teach that one should revere the parents and evince gratitude to them; but, ridiculing them and neglecting them have become fashionable now. All religions lay down that the aged are to be honoured, since they are the repositories of experience and their guidance is indispensable; but, now elders and the aged are treated as nuisances and handicapped. All religions insist on truth; but now, the man who sticks to truth is laughed at as if he were a fool. Cruelty and violence, condemned by all religions, have raised themselves to the status of weapons of progress and means for desirable ends. However, the basic truths of religion are not affected or tarnished by the evil that men practise or the competitive propaganda they indulge in.

On Christ's Birthday, sacrifice at least a desire or two

Only those who are not keen on practising the message will waste their energies in condemning other religions and glorifying their own. And, once you enter sincerely into the path of spiritual practice, the urge to find faults in others or publish one's own excellences will disappear. Such people will celebrate the Birthday of the Founders in a spirit of dedication only, deepening the faith in their hearts and revering its doctrines by more intense practice rather than by more emphatic argumentation. If one has the yearning to reach the goal, one has to follow the path that leads to it. When you learn to reach God, you have to observe the guidelines He has marked out.

You need not dwell on His name, or His lineaments all the time! That may not take you far. But, walk along the Path; every step will bring you near. When you need to reach a village, you have to rise and move towards it; it will not rise and move towards you!

When you need to reach God, rise and move, as He has directed you to. By this means alone you can make life worthwhile.

Jesus taught simple practical lessons in spiritual advancement for the good of mankind; He manifested Divine Powers to instil faith in the validity of his teachings; he marked out the path that can confer on men the sweet nectar of Aanandha. He exhorted people by precept and example to cultivate the virtues of charity, compassion, forbearance, love and faith. These are not separate and distinct qualities, they are only the many facets of the Divine in Man, which he has to recognise and develop.

Significance of the story related to Christ's birth

People talk of the sacrifice of Christ as evidence by His crucifixion.

But, he was surrounded and bound, and crowned by the crowd who captured Him with a crown of thorns, and later, nailed to the cross by his captors. A person bound and beaten by the police cannot say that he has sacrificed anything, for, he is not a free man. Let us pay attention to the sacrifice that Jesus made while free, out of his own volition. He sacrificed his happiness, prosperity, comfort, safety and position; he braved the enmity of the powerful. He refused to yield or compromise. He renounced the 'ego', which is the toughest thing to get rid of. Honour Him for these. He willingly sacrificed the desires with which the body torments man; this is sacrifice greater than the sacrifice of the body under duress. The celebration of His birthday has to be marked by your sacrificing at least a desire or two, and conquering at least the more disastrous urges of the ego.

The followers of Jesus have got broken into schisms on various counts; but, the life of Christ is a lesson of Unity. When Christ was on the cross, ill-feelings towards the men who tortured Him troubled Him. Suddenly he heard a voice alerting him. "All Life is One, my dear Son{ Be alike to every one!" This was followed by another admonition, "Death is the Dress of Life." As one casts of the worn clothes and dons another set, so, the soul dons and doffs bodies. Therefore,

Jesus was warned against hate and ill-feelings, as well as the lamentation to which man is heir.

Manifestations seen when Christ was born

The lives of such personalities are lived out, in order to establish the welfare of humanity, the prosperity and peace of the world, and individual liberation from bondage to sensual desires and passions. This is illustrated by the strange phenomenons that occur at the time of their Advent. It is believed that when Christ was born there were such manifestations. The ruler of the realm had ordered a census, and each had to be counted in his own village. So Mary and her husband moved along the road that led to his native village. Mary was with child; the pains started midway; they knew no one in the hamlet through which they were passing; so they took refuge in a cowshed. Joseph made ready the space between the cows, and went out into the road at midnight, to seek some woman who could help. But, soon, he heard the Baby's cry.

And, the story says, there was a Star in the sky, which fell with a New Light, and this led a few Tibetans and others to the place where the Saviour was born. This story is read and taken on trust by many, though stars do not fall or even slide down so suddenly. What the story signifies is this:

There was a huge halo of splendour illuminating the sky over the village when Christ was born.

This meant that He, who was to overcome the darkness of evil and ignorance had taken birth, that He will spread the Light of Love in the heart of man and councils of humanity.

Use and misuse of wealth and wisdom

Appearances of splendour, and other signs to herald the era that has dawned are natural when incarnations happen on earth. Jesus was to shatter the darkness that had enveloped the world and the aura of light was a sign that announced the event. The Masters arrive in answer to man's prayer. "Thamaso maa jyothir gamaya" (Lead us from darkness unto Light!)

If each one does his duty, in the spirit of dedication, the Light can illumine all, but, if the doors of the heart are shut against the Light, how can darkness disappear? You cannot sit back, and expect the Incarnation to bring peace and joy into you. The incarnation comes to warn, to guide, to awaken, to lay down the path, and shed the light of Love on it. But, man has to listen, learn and obey with hope and faith.

There is a tale told of old that Wisdom and Wealth once quarrelled loud and long, about their relative importance. Wealth argued that without it, the body will be weak, the brain hazy and wisdom a will-o-the-wisp. Wisdom retorted that, without it man cannot even distinguish wealth from non-wealth or know how to earn it or use it. The Soul intervened and told them that they were both equally important, but, only when properly used. Wealth without wisdom becomes an instrument of exploitation and tyranny: wisdom without wealth becomes mere fantasy and a bundle of blueprint. Use makes them worthwhile; misuse makes them disastrous.

It is like the knife in the hands of a maniac, which becomes an instrument for murder; in the hands of a surgeon, it becomes an instrument which saves a life! Are you doing good with wealth? Are you benefitting others by means of wisdom?---that is the test. This day, Christmas, when we celebrate the birth of Christ, resolve to lead the lives of loving service to the weak, the helpless, the distressed, the disconsolate. Cultivate tolerance and forbearance, charity and magnanimity. Hold dear the ideals He laid down and practise them, in your daily lives.

The best way of celebrating the Birth of Christ

The ways in which Christmas is being celebrated now show how far men have moved away from those ideals, how much ignominy they are heaping on his name! The midnight hour is revered; illumination is arranged; the Christmas Tree is set up; and then, the night is spent in drinking and dance. It is a day of Holy Aanandha, but, the Aanandha is reduced to the level of the poisoning excitement of intoxication!

Drink is so pernicious an evil habit, that when man puts the bottle in, he himself gets into the bottle and cannot escape! First man drinks wine, then the wine drinks more wine; and finally, the wine drinks man himself! He is sunk and drowned in drink. Liquor destroys the humanity in man! How then can it develop the Divinity in him? One must dance in Divine Bliss; instead, sensual dance is indulged in as a deleterious substitute! Make your hearts pure, your activities holy, and your feelings beneficial to all. That is the best way of celebrating the Birth of Christ.

There is one point that I cannot but bring to your special notice today. At the moment when Jesus was merging in the Supreme Principle of Divinity, He communicated some news to his followers, which has been interpreted in a variety of ways by commentators and those who relish the piling of writings on writings and meanings upon meanings, until it all swells up into a huge mess.

Christ's announcement of the Advent of Baba

The statement itself has been manipulated and tangled into a conundrum. The statement of Christ is simple: He who sent me among you will come again!" and he pointed to a Lamb. The Lamb is merely a symbol, a sign. It stands for the Voice---Ba-Ba; the announcement was the Advent of Baba. "His Name will be Truth," Christ declared. Sathya means Truth. "He will wear a robe of red, a bloodred robe." (Here Baba pointed to the robe He was wearing!). "He will be short, with a crown (of hair). The Lamb is the sign and symbol of Love."

Christ did not declare that he will come again. He said, "He who made me will come again."

That Ba-ba is this Baba and Sai, the short, curly-hair-crowned red-robed Baba, is come. He is not only in this Form, but, he is in every one of you, as the dweller in the Heart. He is there, short, with a robe of the colour of the blood that fills it.

The great axioms of Bhaaratheeya culture found in the Vedhas---Ishwarassarvabhoothaanaam, Isaavaa-yamidham sarvam, Vasudhevassarvamidham---"God is the inner Motivator of all beings. All this is enveloped in God, All this is Vaasudheva, the Divine"---are to be in every one.

This is the inner mystery of Incarnation, God incarnating in all! All are One; The One is All.

There is only one God; He is Omnipresent. There is only one religion, the Religion of Love; there is only one caste, the Caste of Humanity; there is only one language, the Language of the Heart.

Bangalore, 24-12-1972

Roga denies you ease and peace. The roga (disease) can be cured by yoga (Divine communian), not by bhoga (material enjoyment). Bhoga means catering to the whims and wildness of the senses. Yoga means the regulation and reform of the impulses of the mind which run after goals laid down by the senses/ Make the senses the servants of the intelligence, not the overlords of the mind.

Tell them that the mind is dethroned, it is non-existent/ Sensuousness is a disease.

Sri Sathya Sai
Sathya Sai Speaks
Sathya Sai Speaks

But, who among us do listen and plant them in well-ploughed: hearts? And when they cleave the cold, and greenly grow who among us shed tears of joy? His words are for the inner ear; they have drummed us, along the valleys of night and led us, through smiles and sobs, into the shore of the vastness, basking in His love,

Sathya Sai Speaks

And, Lo!. the deaf awoken to the call; for, His words resound relentless, within.

Refuse; they stay; report; they sound sweeter; forget; they sprout; deny; they persist; for, they are the words we heard from the Mother's breast and the Father's lips, words, echoing in the ego cave, since we were worm and weevil fish and fowl, caterpillar, cat, until we shaped ourselves, through wanton history Into man, machine and monster!

Sathya Sai Speaks

He speaks pleasing profoundity, sweet, sustaining Reality.

He is we and We are He and all are only ONE

Sathya Sai Speaks

until the last of us, the least of us, Rest and run like rivers unto their Source

-N. KASTURI

1. Dedicated for defence

INDIA is a land dedicated to Truth, Right Action, Peace and Love; you are dedicated to the service of the Motherland, to defend her and preserve her independence. This is in accordance with the ancient injunction, Maathru Dhevo Bhava---Revere the Mother as you would revere

God. You are ready and prepared to sacrifice even your lives in her service, whatever others may do or may not do. I am glad your devotion is so strong and so sincere.

Truth, Right Action, Peace and Love---these are the four pillars on which the mansion of happiness, here and hereafter, is built. India too must build her happiness on these columns only. They are the real supports of India, of India's security, prosperity, and glory. We have forgotten this truth; we have neglected the foundation; hence all this suffering today.

God will always be with you in your struggle for the defence of this land. From within you, He will be guiding and inspiring you, to discharge your duty. Truth is God, and work is worship. By unselfish service, strict adherence to duty, and dedication to the cause of peace you are promoting the welfare of India and of all humanity. The Mahaabhaaratha War is a good example of the guidance that God grants when virtue defends itself against the forces of evil. Krishna was the very heart of the Paandava body; Dharmaraaja, the eldest of the five brothers was the Head;

Bheema, the second brother, was the Stomach; Arjuna, the third, was the Arms. Nakula and Sahadheva, the twins, were the Legs---and Krishna was the Heart.

God will not merely speak and guide from the heart; He will Himself be the Heart, provided you pray to Him to bless you so.

Be ever aware of God who is the real 'you'

We achieve Peace and Joy, only through sacrifice. Giving yields more joy and grasping. Since you are all prepared for the highest sacrifice, you are genuine sons of Bhaaritha. Many do not realise the joy that can be derived from unselfishness; they waste their years and their lives in the pursuit of selfish ends. They are so conceited that they do not revere parents, elders, the saints and the sages. They do not invoke the Grace of God through prayer. As a result, India is leaving off its age-old traditions and taking on new fashions and patterns of behaviour, thus landing people in misery.

The body is referred to in the Geetha as kshethram, that is to say, a holy place where God is installed. Kaashi is a kshethram, Bhadhraachalam is a kshethram.

The body-kshethram is Dharmakshethram as well as Kurukshethram, the abode, of virtue and of Activity. God in the Kshethram is the Kshethrajna (divine knower), the Shivam (eternally good) without whom the body is but shavam (corpse). Therefore, be ever aware of the God who is the real 'you,' and seek solace, sustenance, and guidance from Him through prayer.

Bangalore, 5-1-1973

2. Pretenders

WHEN the Buddha sat under the Bodhi Tree in Bodhgaya, after the illumination that revealed to him the Four Noble Truths, gangs of disbelievers gathered around him and poured ridicule and abuse on him. His disciples were enraged; they prayed to the Buddha, "Lord, Give us leave; we shall beat this insolence and ignorance out of these traducers." But, Buddha only smiled at their anger. He said, "Dear ones, know you not how much joy they derive from this exercise? You derive joy worshipping me. They derive joy pelting me with abuse.

You pour reverence; they pour ridicule, and receive equal satisfaction. Control yourselves; do not hate any one, that is the teaching. This is the ancient ordinance."

Some people cannot tolerate glory in others; some are filled with the venom of envy; some are demonic in nature and cannot tolerate holiness and divinity; some are perverted by disappointment and cast the blame on God; such people will indulge in abuse. If you associate with such people and their followers, you will only be contaminating your mind. Even ordinary men will feel ashamed to cast aspersions on the great, but, these expose themselves by their tactics as lower than the lowest.

God is above and beyond dualities You might say, we are the ordinary kind; when the Form we adore is traduced how can we bear it silently? Suppose some one sends you a letter by a registered post.
When you sign and take it, you become aware of its contents, though you may not accept the contents. If you do not sign, the letter goes back to the person who sent it and his purpose in making you aware of the contents is defeated. So too, don't give ear to the abuse; keep cool and uninterested; then, the foulness goes back to the sender, and cannot affect you at all. It will affect him as a re-sound, reaction and reflection. Instead of harming you, it will only recoil on him.

Look into the Bhaagavatham. What was the fate of Jaraasandha, Kamsa, Shishupaala?
Shishupaala ridiculed Krishna and his hatred reacted on him alone.
The Lord is not affected by either praise or blame. He is above and beyond the dualities that agitate man. He has neither favourites nor foes. Your goodness yields good to you; your badness brings about bad for you.

Your virtue is your shield; your vice is the weapon that inflicts wounds on you. Happiness and misery are but the reflections of the good and bad which fill your heart and shape your activities.

In the Bhaagavatham, there is mention of a certain Poundraka, who sought to become a passable 'imitation', of Kaishna. He added unto his name the name of Krishna, viz., Vaasudheva. He announced himself as Poundraka Vaasudheva. He got made an imitation Conch and an imitation

Wheel (out of wood) and carried them about, in his two artificial extra hands. He discovered the style which Krishna adopted while wearing his yellow silken robe and he scrupulously followed the same. He skilfully imitated the gait and gestures of Krishna. Some fools gathered round him, mistaking him to be the Lord they were seeking. His insanity finally brought about his downfall and humiliation.

Nature is the best preacher In this Kali Yuga also such imitations are cropping up just as Poundraka shaped himself into a Vaasudheva. We have today even Sathya Sai Babas. They get the same type of robe stitched, they strain themselves to cultivate the crown of hair, they study photographs and hold their hands up very nearly like I do and make themselves ridiculous by frantic attempts to imitate Me. They forget that "imitation is only human; but, Creation is Divine." Those who attempt to become Sathya Sai Babas by this ludicrous process of imitation only destroy whatever faith some people have placed in the Divine. They are poisonous pests which injure the peace and harmony of society. They collect around themselves insects of like nature. For only birds of the same feather can flock together. These 'pretenders' fall into ruin themselves and bring ruin on the society where they operate, as the proverbial horde of monkeys that ruin themselves and bring ruin on the forest which they inhabit.

Let Me tell you this' There is no need for you to follow this person or that person in the search for a Guru. The heart full of compassion is the altar of God. Nature is the best preacher. Life is the best teacher. Fill yourselves with awe and reverence at the handiwork of God, the manifestation of His Power and Glory that is called the World. This is enough Instruction and enough Inspiration for you.

Brindhaavan, 14-1-1973

Undigested food brings about illness in the body; similarly undigested knowledge imparted by the present day educational system has brought several illnesses in the social organism and the body politic. The disease is promoting contrary feelings that are expressed in mutual conflicts.

The educated are reacting with envious emotions towards those who have secured jobs; when they are unable to get jobs, they impute, motives of nepotism, etc. and develop resentment, anger and hatred.

The system of education is the root cause of the prevalent discontent and resentment.

Sri Sathya Sai

3. The fruit and the tree

BHAARATH is the most ancient of all the centres of civilisation that is surviving today with her heritage intact. But, out of a false sense of values, the leaders and the youth of the land are ignoring the traditions of this precious culture, and are adopting the ideas and ideals of the West.

Therefore, they identify themselves with the body they spend their energies and skills in catering to its needs and whims, and they believe that the material world is the only field 'for study and subjugation.' The result has been here as everywhere else, as even, in the most advanced Western Countries, fear, anxiety violence, corruption and pollution. Physical comfort, individual advancement, personal progress, these are held to be desirable.

However, though each person might declare that he cares for himself only, no one can live in isolation. Persons, sleeping on the same cot are caught having different dreams; each one has an inner life of his own, his own path and speed. But ask him why he is engaged in work, what he is bringing from the shop, why he looks worried. The reply would be that he was engaged in building a house for his family, that he was purchasing clothes for his children, that he was worried about his wife. So he is living, not for himself, but for others whom he is attached to, who are his near and dear ones. Man is under an inescapable obligation to shape his activities and attitudes in consonance with those of others, amidst whom he is placed. He is given parents to revere and obey; brothers and sisters to love and learn with; playmates to mix and move with; society to be changed by and to change. His affection and attachment are attracted by others, and his reactions are determined by others. Man has to expand his knowledge. He might be sitting at a table, before his plate on which dinner has been served; if some one rushes in to tell him that his child has been injured in an accident on the road, he runs out of the room and on to the road, without caring for the hunger and the plate. The call of the one he is attached to is louder and stronger than any call from within. In spite of such experience, man still believes in his ego, in an exclusive type of individuality. The family is essential for the blossoming of human personality; how can the helpless baby grow and learn, talk and move forward without the home? The home needs the community around it to keep it safe and happy. Even a bird in the bush cannot survive isolation from its kind. Man has to expand his knowledge, his emotions, his sympathies, his love. Expansion is life, expansion is love. When the community or the safe-guarding, sustaining Society is rendered weak, the family too tends to disintegrate and the individual suffers. Loyalty to society is essential for man. The individual's fulfilment, in the joy of liberation, is undoubtedly, the fruit of the tree of humanity. But, when you yearn for the fruit, you cannot neglect the roots, the trunk, the branches, the leaves, the buds and the blossoms of the tree; they all help the fruit to manifest and to be filled with sweetness. When Pakistan invaded India last year, their armies did not attack

Madras; but, yet did you not rush forward to teach them a good lesson? Attachment to the nation, affection to the language, reverence to religion and loyalty to Society are all essential. They are all facets of the overwhelming sense of gratitude one feels for all that has shaped one. Each such loyalty, instead of running counter to another, must feed and foster all the rest. Then they are most desirable. Patriotism prompts man to understand the ideals of the past and the teachings of one's forefathers, based on their deeper experiences; it urges him to live for those ideals and gain experience for himself on the paths laid down by the sages of one's country. But, there are in India people who call themselves patriots, though they are neglecting and even harming those ideals and ridiculing those experiences and those paths. Adhering to one's own likes and dislikes, however harmful it may be to the interest of the culture of the country, is very injurious to both. When the hand is amputated, it is not merely the limb that suffers, a great quantity of blood also flows out from the rest of the body and makes the system weak and exhausted. So too, when one separates himself from the Society or Nation and insists on a path that is not part of the culture and traditions, not only does he lose support, he harms the nation too. Love is the secret source of all sympathy. The world is one vast Society. Every individual in it is part of this Society, bound to it by the love that draws man to man, to be kith and kin. This love is there, deep in the heart of man. Only, it is unrecognised, ignored, doubted, denied, argued away. It is the secret source of all sympathy, and Service; it creates the urge to live in and for Society.. It is the Vishwa-Prema, that flows from One spark of the Divine to all sparks. When the eyes shine illumined by the highest wisdom, Inaana, they see all as the One. Man realises that Sarvam Brahmanam (All is pervaded by Brahman) Iagath (all that is apparently changing and transforming and moving). To have this One revealed as in All, one has to develop faith and discipline the mind. The mind has to shed its fancies and foibles; the Truth has to be known and experienced. Learning things by heart will result in only heartache. Learning shlokas or verses can only help you from not being engaged in anything worse during that time. They cannot take you an inch nearer the goal. How can mastery of the map equal the joy of the journey?

Faith is an individual asset; it is acquired and preserved by one's own efforts. Maanikkavasagar, the Thamil sage, used to say, "You have the freedom to say No; I have the right to say Yes." What he meant was, when one denies or asserts a thing, it is the outcome of his experience. How can any one dispute the experience of another? God may not exist in the horizon of your experience, but he has already risen in mine---that is what the thiest tells the atheist. The time indicated by the watch on his own wrist is the correct time for him and he asserts so, though others might not agree. And, he has the freedom to do so. Have faith; do not allow it to shake, because some one else has no faith.
Until you realise that you are Divine, that God is your Core and Reality, you will have to undergo these entrances and exists; the same newspaper should not be pored over again and again, day after day; one life must be enough to know the mystery. So, at least, recognise that there is a mystery, search for the secret, and unravel it for yourself. Yearn for the ecstasy of Divine Mother's vision Raamakrishna used to cry in agony at the loss of another day, without the vision of the Divine Mother. Have that yearning; feel that sense of urgency: Seek to know now, yearn for that ecstasy this moment. Do not postpone or spend time in discussing others. Trying to satisfy the sense is a dreary desert path. Do not imitate other nations, and compete with other cultures in external pomp. Yours is a mind, intelligence, ear and eye shaped by Indian tradition and culture, Indian history and Sanaathana Dharma (eternal religion). Move along those lines and success is certain.
You may have only a picture of Sai Baba before you, or an image in metal or an idol in stone.
But, if you have the faith that He is alive and present in it, and that He is in your heart and the hearts of all beings, then, you can get the ecstasy of that knowledge, the knowledge that He is omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent. While meditating, first imagine and feel that you are in the Light, then, gradually, you can feel the Light is in you, not outside you; and finally, you will realise the Truth, that You and the Light are One and will ever be One. The Divine is a wine, that would intoxicate you. It is produced by the nectar that the Name of the Lord is saturated in. Taste it and you forget everything else; you are transformed. Man is, they say, a monkey that has lost its tail; well, he must lose many more attributes of the monkey before he is entitled to call himself man. He must dedicate his thoughts, words and deeds to God, and surrender to His Will. Then only is this animal entitled to become a Man, in whom the Divine is enshrined.

Madras, 4-2-1973
There is a distinctive type of devotion by which you worship God with a good, clean mind and good conduct. This has been given the name of Paraa Bhakthi.
By worshipping God always with puuja (ritual homage) and flowers, the saadhaka (seeker) will remain stationary in his place. This is good in a way but to remain in one place all the time and failing to rise to a higher position is not good.
It is a superior type of worship---to worship God through good qualities, good conduct, good thoughts and good company.
Sri Sathya Sai
4. Teacher of teachers SHIVARAATHRI observed every month, on the fourteenth night of the dark half of the Moon, which is the presiding deity of the human Mind, has only just one night more to be a non-entity; with no influence on the agitations of the Mind. In the month of Magha, the fourteenth night is named Malina (Great) Shivaraathri, for, it is sacred for another reason too. It is the day on which Shiva (Supreme God) takes the Linga Form, for the benefit of seekers. Shiva is revered as the Form to be adored for the acquisition of Inaana (Supreme Wisdom). Inaanam Maheshwaraath lcceth, as the Vedhas advise. (Pray to Shiva for enlightenment, through Wisdom). So, do not treat this Day lightly, and reduce the disciplines prescribed by the sages for its celebration, such as fast and vigil and uninterrupted recital of the Name of God, into a routine ritual, or a chance for picnic, revelry, rivalry or factious fun. Contemplate this day and this night, on the Aathma Linga (elliptical idol which emanates from Shiva as His symbol), the Iyothir Linga (Symbol of the Supreme Light of Wisdom), and be convinced that Shiva is in every one of you. Let that Vision illumine your inner consciousness.
Feed the mind with good thoughts and Godly acts A fence is necessary to protect growing crops; but, when no crop is growing, why spend time and money on a fence? The orange is covered by a find which is not very tasty, in order to protect it from too early consumption. Outer ritual is prescribed to shelter the inner message from being tampered with. Shivaraathri too like all other holy days in the Hindhu and other religious calendars has many such outer ceremonial observances and a deep core of inner significance.

But, human nature prefers the easier path of outer formality to the path of inner discipline and direct experience.

Visiting Shiva shrines, arranging for worship through priests of Shiva Lingams, pouring sanctified waters, potfuls of them over consecrated idols, fasting, vigil and such other activities are resorted to on this Day. But, these are not quite relevant to the real purpose of the festival. To fulfil these rites and vows, one need not wait one full year and consult the astrologer and his calendar of holy days. When man takes in food four times a day, in order that his body may keep functioning, efficiently, is it too much to ask him to feed the mind with good thoughts and godly acts, at least once every day? The mind too needs clean and sustaining food."

Eeshwara, a Name of Shiva, means that He has all the glory that is associated with Godhead.

Shamkara, another name of Shiva, 'means that He causes by His Grace, Sham, that is, Aanandha

(bliss) at the supremest level. Shiva is the embodiment of Aanandha; hence the Thaandava

Dance, which He enjoys so much, with the Cosmos as His stage. To set apart just one day among the 365 for the worship of this Universal Omnipresence is an insult to His Majesty and Mystery.

Consider the significance of the Form that Shiva has assumed for human adoration: In His throat,

He has the holocaust-producing poison, Haalahaala, that can destroy all life in a trice. On His head, He has the sacred Ganga river, whose waters can cure all ills, here and hereafter. On His forehead, He has the eye of Fire. On His head, He has the cool comforting Moon. On His wrists, ankles, shoulders and neck He wears deadly cobras, which live in life-giving breath of air. Shiva lives in the burial ground and the burning ghat, the Rudhrabhuumi, as it is called---the land of Shiva or Rudhra. The place, is no area of dread; it is an auspicious area, for all have to end their lives there, at the close of this life or a few more lives. Shiva is teaching you that death cannot be shunned or frightened away. It has to be gladly and bravely met.

Linga is the Form in which all forms merge Shiva, again, is said to go about with a begging bowl. He teaches that renunciation, detachment, indifference to good fortune or bad, are the paths to attain Him. Shiva is known as Mrthyunjaya

(He who vanquishes death). And, He is also the Kaamaari (the destroyer of Desire). These two Names show that he who destroys desire can conquer Death, for desire breeds activity, activity breeds consequence, consequence breeds bondage, bondage results in birth and birth involves death.

Eeshwara is also symbolised in the Linga Form. Linga is derived from the Sanskrit root, Li, which means Leeyathe, 'merges'; it is the Form in which all forms merge. Shiva is the God who blesses beings with the most desirable gift of meaning in the Universe. That is the end, beyond death, which one should strive for, the end which Shiva can vouchsafe. Realise the God in you first; then, if you involve yourself with the material world, no harm can come to you, for you will recognise the objective world as but the body of God. But, if you try to involve yourself with the objective world first, and then try to discover God, you will see the material world only. Again, you can direct your spiritual efforts in either of two ways: Follow the commands of God, and He will be pleased to raise you up. Follow the path of inquiry and discover where He resides, and realise Him there. You can follow either means. But, reaching Him is the inescapable task of man.

Shiva is all Graciousness, ever Auspicious

Shiva means, Graciousness, Auspiciousness, Mangalam. He is all Graciousness, ever Auspicious, Sarva Mangalam. That is the reason why the epithet, Shri, which indicates these qualities, is not added to the name Shiva, Shankara Eeshwara etc. It is added to the number of Avathaars (divine incarnations), for they have taken on perishable bodies for a specific purpose.

They have to be distinguished from other humans, by the epithet, but Shiva is eternally gracious, auspicious, mangala and so the. epithet is superfluous. Shiva is adored as the Teacher of Teachers, Dakshinamuurthi. The Form of Shiva is itself a great lesson in tolerance and forbearance.

The Haalahaala poison is hidden by Him in His throat; the beneficent Moon which all welcome, He has worn on His head. This is a lesson for man to keep away from others all harmful tendencies and to use for their benefit all useful tendencies that he can command. If one uses his skills for his own advance, and his evil propensities for putting down others, he is only taking the road to ruin.

Man is inherently Divine; he ought therefore demonstrate in thought, word and deed the Divine attributes of love, tolerance, compassion and humanity. God is Truth; man too must live in Truth.

God is Love; man too must live in Love, eschewing anger. Master hatred through Love; master anger through sweet Tolerance. There are many who bargain with God, and offer Him gifts, of money or articles if He would confer Grace. If one believes that God can be mollified by the gift of a coconut or a purse of 116 rupees, I wonder what kind of God he has in his mind? Is his conception of God so mean, so contemptible? Those who plan to have their desires granted through riches can never deserve the name, Devotee. Those who encourage the payment of money for spiritual gains or for gaining Divine favour are also to be condemned. This is the reason why the Geetha lays down that God will be pleased by offering leaf, flower or fruit or even a drop of water. But even these four articles are materials.

How can men give to God what is not theirs?

The Geetha does not intend that you should pluck a leaf or flower or a fruit from some plant or tree and place it before God. Nor does it ask you to bring water from a well or river or the roadside tap. The Leaf is your own body, which like the leaf, sprouts green, fades, and finally falls off from the branch. The Flower is the heart freed from the insect pests of lust, anger, greed, attachment, pride, hate, etc. The Fruit is the mind, the consequence of its yearnings, which have to be dedicated to God. The Water is the stream of tears that flow from the eyes when one is in ecstatic Bliss at the contemplation of God's Glory. Giving these four is the real act of surrender, Sharanaagathi (total surrender). The offering of leaves or flowers or fruits or river water is at best a way of helping the plant or tree or river to secure a little merit.

There are some who declare glibly, "O, I have surrendered my body, mind, intellect, my everything to God." These people have no control over their minds and the emotions and passions they are filled with. They have no mastery over their reason. They are not even able to regulate their bodies. So, it is indeed ridiculous for them to claim that they have offered them to God. How can they give to God what is not theirs? What right have they? How can any one accept the gift of something which does not belong to the giver?

In fact, you need not surrender anything at all. Love all beings---that is enough. Love with no expectation of return; love for the sake of love; love because your very nature is Love; Love because that is the form of Worship you know and like. When others are happy, be happy likewise. When others are in misery, try to alleviate their lot to the best of your ability. Practise Love through Seva (selfless service). By this means, you will realise Unity and get rid of the ego that harms.

Brindhaavan, 5-3-1973

We should not aspire for acclaim and praise from those around us, but do service only to secure the grace of God and not for any other reward from anyone.

Sri Sathya Sai

5. Valour of the Spirit

I AM very happy to be in the Punjab Region, which has earned the respect and gratitude of the entire nation, by its heroism and sacrifice, for defending the country.

It is a sacred land and, though my visit to this place was planned long ago, the time has at last ripened, and I am here. A fruit takes a long time to ripen and fill itself with sweet juice.

This nation has sown the seeds of tolerance and friendship among all the peoples of the world for centuries. It has led the world both in materials and spiritual progress. It has been emphasising the fundamental need of man---to understand himself, before he attempts to understand others.

When you do not know your position in the Universe, your fate and your future, of what use is it to wander about in space? Let me tell you what the true nature of man is, so that you may make an all out effort to guard it and develop it. Truth is man's nature; to be untrue is to be false to one's nature. Dharma (right action) is the practical application in real life of the ideal of Truth.

Shaanthi (peace) is the result of Dharma and Prema (love) is the effulgence of Shaanthi.

Devotion should not be confined to the four walls of the shrine-room, or the few minutes you perform Dhyaanaa (meditation). It is a fulltime Saadhana (spiritual discipline). Your devotion has to be expressed as worship of every one, as a living embodiment of Divinity. See God in every one, even in persons whom you regard as your enemies.

Practise that broad, inclusive type of Love. How can you derive happiness by showing love and reverence to a stone idol, that does not respond or reflect the feelings? Living beings will return appreciation and gratitude and wish you well. You can see joy growing in their faces. That will confer satisfaction on' you. If you cannot educate yourself to love your fellow man, how can you follow the path of dedication to God?

Share your joys and sorrows with others

Find out the difficulties and troubles burdening others and help them, to the extent you can, to tide over them, and, to lead their lives so that they may not recur.

Learn to live with other men; share your joys and sorrows with others; be forbearing, not overbearing. When you live together in amity, the village will be happy and safe; and, when the villages are well-knit and strong, the State too will be strong and impregnable. Jealousy, anger, hatred and greed will disintegrate the State and make it fall into disorder and distress.

Drive away the divisive forces that keep man away from man, and prevent hearty co-operation and mutual help. Punjab has won special fame in our country, because of the valour of its people. I desire and bless that it should become equally famous for Adhyaathmic (spiritual) valour. Inculcate discipline in the field of Saadhana also and insist on people performing their duty to themselves and to their destiny. Devotion is like the head; duty is the trunk; discipline is the feet. Let devotion be linked with duty and led by discipline; then, success is certain.

The life of man should not be a wasteful round of eating, drinking and sleeping; man has the Aathma (soul) as his reality and so, he must learn to become aware of that unfailing source of Bliss. By the proper use of his intelligence, man can tap that spring and be supremely blissful.

Happiness can be won only by proceeding towards God, not by following the urges of the senses.

Essential requisites to earn God's Grace

This day, happiness also rose with the dawn and sunrise in this town. The depth of your devotion can be clearly gauged from your faces. You have been waiting for many long hours for the joy of this moment; that is itself proof that matters of the spirit are more attractive to you than material things and comforts.

Of the twenty four hours that are available to you each day let Me advise you to devote a small fraction to meditation or prayers or reading the scriptures or listening to discourses on the leelas (divine sport) of the Lord. Think of God, and the gratitude you owe to Him for the human life He has gifted you and the various material, moral and intellectual talents He has endowed you with; do this before you commence any task or piece of work. You will certainly experience great benefit, and you will have peace, joy and success in your endeavours through Divine Grace.

Do not get disheartened, if you do not progress in meditation. Utter the Name of the Lord, dwelling on the Glory and the Grace; that is equally effective. No one particular Name is necessary; all names denote only the One. The steadiness, the faith, the love that you cultivate in the heart and express through your words, deeds and thoughts are the essential requisites for earning the Grace of God.

Mogha (Punjab), 16-3-1973

Perform your bhajans (group singing), perform your puujas (external worship), but when you enter society, recognise society as a form of God, recognise what exists as Omnipresence in society and thereby acquire good qualities in serving society. Forget the agitations in the world. Then you can have peace, joy and bliss.

If you develop an idea that God, who is Omnipresent and is in the entire creation and the universe, is confined in a picture which is three inches by four inches, 'you are narrowing your conception of God.

Sri Sathya Sai

6. The prescription

THERE is only one path to God that will satisfy the aspirations of the Jeeva thathwa (essential nature of individual entity). That is the path of Bhakthi (devotion), of dedication of all activity to God and surrendering to His Will. This is called the Bhakthi maarga (path of devotion). But, Bhakthi has to be built on conviction, not on blind unreasoning belief. That is why, I always emphasise the role of intelligence. Intelligence is a special gift from God to man; it confers the power of discrimination between right and wrong. Peace or happiness depends on the choice of the right means and this is a matter to be decided by the Intelligence. Prosperity too depends on the intelligent exploitation of the resources available, human and other. The wavering 'intelligence' of man, that has lost its one-pointedness and purity is responsible for all the conflicts and quarrels that are prevalent today.

So, I would ask you to pray to God to grant you the capacity to think straight and right, and to stick to the correct decision once decided on, without being affected by egoism, greed or hatred.

Pray for a balanced mind unaffected by prejudices and passions. Attempt to acquire knowledge of yourself

Man has to pay attention to three basic duties in his quest for happiness: (1) He should forget what he has to forget, namely, the world around him and its tantalising pleasures. (2) He has to reach where he has to reach, namely, the goal of the Divine, the Presence of the Almighty and

(3) He has to give up what he has to give up, namely, material desires and pursuits. The Vedhic prayer Asatho maa sath gamaya, Thamaso maa jyothir gamaya, Mruthyor maa amritham gamaya (Lead me from untruth to truth, lead me from darkness to light, lead me from death to immortality) summarises these aspirations very nicely. Strive to move away from untruth towards truth; attempt to acquire knowledge of yourself and of the origin of all Selves and thus shed your fundamental ignorance. Move away from thoughts and anxieties about this body, subject to decay and death and become aware of the Immortal Soul, which you really are. This garland can teach you a great spiritual lesson. This one thread has strung all these different flowers together in beautiful harmony. It is called Suuthra (connecting thread) in Samskrithi. So also, there is the Brahma Suuthra, the Universal Brahma Principle which passes in and through every jeevi (individual) and binds them all in the aathmic bond. All the children of this motherland, all sons and daughters of this country are bound into one inter-independent group by the thread of Divinity that passes through them. Embodiments of the Divine Aathma as you are do not be afraid of sorrows and losses that might come in your way. An orange is enveloped in bitter skin. You have to remove the skin and eat the sweet fruit that it has protected so long. The sweet fruit, that is, your life, is enveloped in the bitter skin of lust, anger, greed, arrogance, attachment and jealousy. Remove the skin and throw it away, so that the sweetness can be tasted. God is present only where good pervades. Be always devoted to good and self-less activities. See that by your word, deed or thought, you do not hurt others, physically or mentally. When you see injustice and wickedness in others, examine your conduct and character first; for, what you see in others might be the result of what is in your own self. Wear the eyeglasses of Prema (Love); the whole world will be filled with Prema. God is present where only good pervades and prevails. If you examine the present behaviour of men, you will find that the vision is bad, listening is bad, thoughts are impure, and so, even the human nature in you is being besmirched and made bestial, if not worse. When God enters the vision, the things listened to, and the subjects thought of, your lives will be rendered happy and useful. Control the mind and regulate the impulses emanating from it by means of a clarified intelligence. These are primary requisites for a happy life. Keep the name of God ever on the tongue and the Glory of God ever in the memory; seek the company of the good and the godly. These prescriptions, if you follow, you can be free from anxiety, fear and falsehood. Mogha, 17-3-1973

7. Restore the balance

MAN is a pilgrim set on a long journey; he has started from the stone, moved on to the vegetable and the animal, and has now come to the human stage. He has still a long way to go, to reach the Divine; and so, he should not tarry. Every moment is precious; every step must take him further and nearer. Those born in Bhaarith are really fortunate, for here, millions have gone along that road, and there are available many kind guides who can lead you along the easiest and the shortest paths. They tell you the address of the place where from you have come; for, you have forgotten it and so, you are helpless when asked about it. They tell you also the goal which you ought to reach, when the toil of travel is over, and of the enticing attractions on the way, which you must avoid. Man is the synthesis of all the feelings, emotions and reactions that arise in his mind. The mind is the seat of all urges, desires and thoughts. When the mind is clean, the world cognised by it will also be clean. When the mind is turbid and fiddled with fear, the world will appear miserable and depressing. Many people blame the world, without knowing that the fault lies in themselves. Their thinking is crooked; their thoughts are not wholesome; their minds are restless, because they are too full of unfulfilled desires. Rich or poor, educated or uneducated, high or low, they see the world through the glasses of their own prejudices and predilections and they condemn or extol it in order to please themselves! Money comes and goes, morality comes and grows. The proper study of mankind is man. For, man is the centre of things. And, in man, the mind has to be studied and controlled and regulated. His thoughts originate in the mind, they express themselves through words and are materialised through deeds. These three have to be properly co-ordinated by the Intellect; or else, life becomes a tragedy. The mind has to be trained to develop a taste for the good and the godly; not, for money and material gains. Money comes and goes; but, morality comes and grows.

Man, in his ignorance, asserts that he lives for himself only, eats and drinks to appease his hunger and thirst, looks after his health and comforts only. Two persons may be sleeping on the same cot, but, each has dreams that stroll independently into strange regions of its own. But, the truth is quite different! This selfish attitude which curbs and curtails his interests to himself and his aggrandizement is really 'death.' Contraction is extinction. Expansion is life. Man has to feel himself a limb of the society into which he has been born and which has fostered him and fed him with ideals and ideas. Spiritual life is not isolated existence. Man has to sow the seeds of love in his heart and harvest peace. He should share that peace with all. Bhoomaa eva sukham, say the Vedhas. There is happiness only in the vast, the limitless, the huge; not in the little, the small, the limited. Love leads to expansion; hatred leads to contraction and death. This is the basic teaching of the scriptures of Sanaathana Dharma.

Peace has to emerge within

But, seeing the advances made in science and technology, you have lost balance. Man has learnt to walk on the moon, to live in the depths of the ocean, to penetrate into the deepest crusts of earth, but, alas, it is a pity, he has not learnt how to live on the earth and let other men too to live on the surface of the earth. How can man achieve happiness and peace of mind, flying high or swimming deep? He has to carry his troubles and worries, fears and failings, with him to those places also. Unless he rids himself of these burdens, he cannot feel light and loveable. Peace has to emerge within; it cannot be added from without.

Science has its vision, directed outside, towards gadgets and machinery providing external comfort and convenience. The scientist examines the objective world of matter; he tries to excel in external vision. The one who examines the soul and develops the internal vision is the Saint; the Scientist plans machines, the Saint relies on manthra (sacred formula). The balance can be restored only by cultivating the Inner Vision. This has to be done even in schools and colleges.

They have neglected this aspect far too long.

If you examine the nature of mind, you will find that it is very much akin to the lens of a camera.

The body is the camera, the mind is the lens, the heart is the photographic plate, the thought is the flash, and the intelligence, the switch. Turn the lens towards the source of happiness, not, to the seat of anxiety and fear; then, you will be-rewarded with a fine picture imprinted on your heart. It is difficult, nay, well nigh impossible, to turn the lens to the direction we are told by saints and seers; for, the mind is very truly characterised as a monkey! Why, it is even more wayward than a monkey for it jumps from one perch to another that is miles away in space and centuries away in time, in less time than a wink! The mind jumps from one desire to another, and entangles us in its coils. Reduce desire, evict the ego, eject anger, and the mind will be your slave, instead of being your master.

Duty without Love is deplorable Prema is the master key which can achieve all this. That is 'why, I say, "Start the day with Love;

Spend the day with Love' fill the day with Love; end the day with Love; this is the way to God."

On this path, you will not be waylaid by anger, lust or greed. You will have only the company of the good and proper facilities for speedy progress. Do your duty. with Love, as if you are 'thereby adoring God. Many leaders are today clamouring for freedom to follow Sveccha, that is, swa-iccha, one's own inclinations. But, real freedom is gained only when you are free of the pernicious influence of passions like lust, envy, pride, greed and hate. Swa-iccha does not mean any and every, desire that arises in your mind; it means the inclination of your true self towards

God. If you incline towards God, the passions that enslave you will be rendered powerless. Then, you will do your 'duty' as sveccha, for you will love it with all your heart. Duty without love is deplorable; duty with love is desirable; Love, without Duty, is Divine.

Sveccha means, the best interests of the individual, the purest thought that emerges from within him, for his own best. That means, all imitation is barred. Follow the dictates of your own clear conscience. Do not copy wishes and resolutions from some one; that is what the blind man does; but, very often he follows an equally blind man. God is enshrined in your heart; He is ever ready to guide you. He does not appreciate external pomp and exhibitionistic behaviour. He does not calculate the number of hours you did bhajan (congregational music) or japam (repetition of Lord's Name), or the number of miles you walked during Nagarasankeerthan (street singing of spirituals). He examines the purity of your heart, as evident from your words and deeds.

Do not preach; practise. In politics, in the field of administration, in schools and colleges, in spiritual institutions, everywhere, we have a surfeit of preachers but a famine in practitioners.

Heroes on platforms prove themselves zeros when they descend to the ground. Therefore, demonstrate in your own lives, how Love can confer peace and joy, how all faiths lead to the same goal, how all men are brothers of one another. The only message, the only lesson I can impart to you today is to remind you of the great traditions of Bhaarath and ask you to spread Love throughout the length and breath of this great land. Then, India can again be the spiritual leader of humanity and fill the whole world with Divine Love.

Simla, 17-3-1973

8. Bypass the bylane

I OFTEN tell young college students that they may worship a picture as God, but, should not worship God as a picture. They can entertain the concept that a carved stone is God, or that a piece of wood is God. For, in that process, they are raising that substance into that high status.

But, I also warn them that they should not degrade God into the status of paper, wood or stone.

Of course, God is immanent in every atom and cell of the Universe and if-you are able to recognise Him and adore Him therein, you are indeed blessed.

Do not move towards God, through the world around you. Confirm in your faith that you are the Aathma, which is the Divine Spark in you, and then, move into the world as heroes whom success cannot spoil or defeat cannot dishearten. It is not my intention to turn men towards God; for they have already God residing in them. There is no need to proceed towards Him, or call on Him to come from somewhere outside you. Become aware of Him, as your inner motivator (the Antharyaamin---that is enough. Travel outward, with the conviction that you are the Aathma; then, you will adore the world and not exploit it.

You are bound inextricably with all others

You must realise by constant contemplation that the world is the Body of God. And, you are a cell, in that Body. The prosperity of the world is your prosperity; feel so, act in that spirit; think in those terms. That is real spirituality. The Saadhak (spiritual aspirant) cannot cut himself away from the world and escape into solitude, for, the world will follow him into the deepest cave or the darkest forest. The Saadhak can claim progress only when he has established in himself faith in the one-ness of humanity. Ishwarah sarvabhoothaanaam hridhese, Arjuna, thishthathi, says the Geetha---"O Arjuna, the Lord is seated in the heart of all beings." Ishaavashyam idham sarvam---"All this is enveloped in God."

Everything and every being are but waves on the surface of the vast unbounded timeless ocean, which is God. Waves belong to the ocean and depend on it for their individual existence; but, the ocean has no need of waves.

Therefore, you are bound inextricably with all else and all others. The world will inevitably react on you; it will reflect your thoughts and plans: it will resound with your cries and creeds.

Your thoughts, words and deeds will shape others, and theirs, will shape you. It is your duty to be good, do good, and see good. That is the way to make the world good, and be yourself good.

These ideas and directions are 'the principal constituents of Indian Culture; but, they are honoured today only in the letters. Acts unworthy and damaging the fair name of Indian culture are done with pride, by the very sons and daughters of Bhaarath. Temples are neglected; places of pilgrimage are deserted; the very idea of holiness is ridiculed. Elementary rules of social conduct and individual behaviour, like revering parents and elders, revering teachers and guests, speaking the truth and treading the righteous path are disregarded as unnecessary restrictions on individual freedom.

People obey the whims of the moment

Uncontrolled living habits, unrestrained social behaviour---these are extolled as signs of freedom. It is only freedom to slide into the animal from which man has risen. The education system has not cared to instil the elevating ideas and ideals that fed Indian Culture for ages and so, youth is being guided into the bylanes of sensuous licence. People obey the whims and caprices of the moment; they do not delay to discriminate. When the ideals of detachment and simplicity were held forth as valid and valuable, India was really strong and happy; but, now, character has lost priority in the educational system. Animals have their seasons and reasons for behaviour; but, man does not pay heed to these. What has happened to the knowledge that has been accumulated by our sages and saints? What has happened to the wisdom enshrined in our scriptures? What has happened to the noble examples of the 'great men and women of the epics and puraanas? Since they are ignored, life has become dry, barren and miserable. Restore them in the estimation of the people, and follow their teachings; life will again become useful and purposeful.

Today, we have factions everywhere---at home, between husband and wife, in the school, between teacher and pupil, in society, between group and group. This is deterioration indeed!

Peace and harmony between members of the same family are the foundation for peace in the land. The individual must be at peace with himself. Just as the coordinated effort of all the organs of the body is essential for healthy life, coordination between village and village is essential; so too, between State and State and nation and nation. But, the Truth, if only you open your inner eye and visualise, is---there is only one nation, the nation called 'humanity'; there is only one religion, the religion of Love.

Divinity is inherent in every human being

Feel happy that this is your mother-country; love of the country is the basis on which you can build love for the world community. Love expands; it does not limit itself to boundaries. Love your mother-tongue; then, you will discover that all languages are as sweet as yours, for, a language is as sweet as the tongues of the speakers.

I want you to recognise that the human body has been gifted to you, so that you may use it for the good of the country where you first saw light and tasted love; and, for the good of the culture that your country has treasured for ages so that you may grow in its shade. If you neglect the roots, how can you harvest the fruits? Consider, what is it that gives us safety and security in this enormous structure, this Vijanaana Bhavan? We pay attention now only to superficial items like the seats, the cushions, the balcony, the sound systems etc. But, the foundation hidden in the ground, we pass over as out of sight. So too, the culture of Bhaarith is the basis of our prosperity, peace and progress.

The whole world is One Single Tree; the different countries are its branches; its root is God, human beings are the flowers. Happiness is the fruit and the Bliss of Self-realisation is the sweet juice therein.

How then can any one justify his anger against another man, or be jealous on account of another?

All are fed by the same sap; all share the same Sun; all are Divine. Divinity is not something separate and isolated, which has to be earned by toil. It is inherent in every man, woman and child. By means of some simple practices, and through some little effort, you can tap the springs of Divinity in your hearts.

Some people have asked Me whether Saadhana (spiritual discipline) has to supplement study and enquiry. Read the necessary texts, perform the prescribed exercises in logic---are these not enough, they ask! It is like asking, we have laid cables to bring electric current to every part of Vijanaana Bhavan; is that not enough? Why bulbs, tubes, and fans? Saadhana is the bulb, the switch, the fan! Insulin injection for the diabetic patient is the 'inquiry'; restriction in dietary habits is the 'saadhan'. Both inquiry and saadhan are needed to discover the Divinity latent in you and to manifest it.

This means that you must devote some time every day, regularly, for study, and for Saadhana.

Now, you are wasting time till late at night, in clubs and frivolous company. A portion of that time, if spent with God, can confer valuable results. This mother-land has given you a culture that is attracting, distracted people from all parts of the world. Be grateful; study the culture; practise the disciplines it lays down. Serve the poor and the helpless, and those who eke out their livelihood by hard work.

New Delhi, 22-3-1973

9. The year named Aanandha

IN every country today, men have become power-mad and they resort without any compunction to self-praise, and dry declamation. They develop hatred against others, foster envy and feed their fatal egos. They plunge the society to which they belong in fear, anxiety and disorder. They do not know that if elevating ideals are adhered to and practised, they could gain eternal fame; they are content with cheap applause and shortlived publicity.

You have gathered here today, since this is Yugaadhi Festival day, the day reckoned by you as the day that ushers in a new year with a new Name. This day in New Year Day only because you have decided to call it so; it is not astronomically or climatically or meteorologically different from yesterday or tomorrow. Even as New Year Day, many hundreds of thousands of such Days have happened on this globe and many thousands have been celebrated as Festival Days too. So too, this day has come and this too will be gone. If the New Year Day is used by any one to begin a new way of life, a new step towards self-realisation or self-enlargement through service, then the Celebration has a meaning and significance. Otherwise, it is devoid of value. The red letter on the calendar, which indicates this Day as separate from others is a warning and a reminder of this duty that you owe to yourselves. Do not anticipate anything, leave it to Him. The Name of the New Year that begins today is inspiring and auspicious. It is called Aanandha--

-Spiritual Bliss, inner joy, unshakable calm. That name is a clarion call, which must ring in your ears all the 365 days of the New Year---earn Aanandha, be Aanandha, become Aanandha.

Cleanse your instruments of Consciousness, devote yourselves to Service so that you might weaken the forces of Ego and strengthen the forces of Social Unity and cultivate Japa and Dhyaana (repetition of Lord's Name and meditation) so that you might rise towards Godhood--- these are the steps by which you can earn and establish yourselves in Aanandha.

Engage yourselves in your duties as intelligently and as devotedly as you can; but, carry out your duties as if they are acts of worship offered to God, leaving the fruit of those acts to His Will, His Grace, His Compassion. Do not be affected when the results you anticipate are not produced; do not anticipate at all, but, leave it to Him. He gave you the time, the space, the cause, the material, the idea, the skill, the chance, the fortune, and you did but little of your own. So, why should you feel as if you are the doer? Do your duty, as a sincere Saadhana. Aanandha is the name of the year and you are happy it is so. But, what is in a name except what you put into it or extract from it. A man named Raama must be inspired by that Name to manifest in himself the qualities that led Raama into the immortality which his Name attained. If a person carries about with him the name Dharmaputhra (son of Righteousness), it is only a shameful burden unless he justifies the burden by being as righteous as Dharmaputhra of Mahaabhaaratha was. Or at least, by endeavouring his best to manifest dharma (virtue) in his life. Man has to earn just enough for his upkeep. Man cannot reap the full fruits of his life here below if he only gathers riches, or collects popular votes, or loads his head with tons of tomes. He has to cultivate and practise virtues too. He has to adhere to Dharma. The Shruthis (sacred texts) direct that man has to earn just enough for his upkeep by honest means and use the rest of his time and skill for the general good, Dharmaartha.

Earn artha (wealth) through Dharma (right conduct). Then, he will certainly have plenty of Divine Grace. Dhritharaashtra, the father of the 100 Kuru Brothers who fought against the five Paandava Cousins---legitimate claimants to a share of the ancestral patrimony---had neither of these two, though he had abundant riches, superior armies and greater military skill and strategy.

So, Dhritharaashtra had to witness the total extinction of his dynasty and kingdom. Most men like Dhritharaashtra pursue falsehoods and ignore Truth; they amass the trivial and ignore the crucial.

They do not realise that Death is stalking silently behind them; they do not notice the quick paces of Time.; they do not know how precious is the chance that the human body, the human intellect, the human society and the heritage that it has accumulated for him has brought him, here and now. They are unaware that the same spark of Divinity that illumines every thought, word and deed in them is activating every other being too, in the Universe. They do not sense the brotherhood, they are not thrilled by the feeling of universal kinship. Man has to be above brutes and beasts. They are sprawling in the slime of self-praiser they are slaves of their egos. And, consequently, they are never free from fear or anxiety. They also spread scandal about others, and so, they bog themselves in sin. Though they claim the respect of others, they are objects of ridicule and hatred. They seek faults in others and so, their eyes revel only in faults. They cannot see good in any; so, they are consumed by envy and greed. Do not try to master others; master your own self, your own senses, your own mind. That is the real victory; they are the real enemies.

Do not waste time in unprofitable talk. Do not change your beliefs in accordance with changing loyalties, and changing surroundings. While accusing others of time-serving, be careful that you do not fall into the same evil. God is inherent in everything, in every being. You can find Him in and through all that you see or do. In the golden chalice of your heart, He is the Wisdom that fulfils. Closing your eyes to this fact, you are spreading your hands outwards to snatch it. You may be compassionate, but, that emotion must be regulated and pure. A compassionate man once brought home a fish he found struggling on the bank of a river in full flood; he placed it between the folds of a warm blanket and poured hot coffee down its throat. He thought it was suffering from a fit of cold. The hot coffee killed the poor thing. He could have saved it by throwing it back into the floods. He lacked the intelligence which would tell him what to do.

Many leaders at the present time have compassion, but, possess no intelligence. They do not know how to solve the distress that they see and sympathise with.
 They talk of the need to establish peace at home and prosperity abroad; but, their acts betray their ignorance of the means by which they could succeed. How can they succeed, if they promote hatred and dishonesty?

Any success won by adopting wrong means will only be trivial and temporary. Peaceful means alone, means that are wrought out of Love alone can ensure lasting benefits and real Peace. Fear not; frighten not. That is the message of God to man. Brutes fear; beasts frighten. Man has to be above both the weaknesses. Have faith in Truth and be fixed in Morality. You need not fear any one, for God will be on your side. You will not frighten, for all will be seen by you as Divine.

"I am the Witness of activity, not a Participant" Talking of names, let me mention this too. Some persons who do not care for truth or righteousness might adopt the name Sathya Sai, raise institutions in that name; they crave only the outer shell of fame and fortune; but you must know that they are unconnected with Me and are engaged in acts which I have not authorised. In fact, I am the Witness of activity, not a participant. I am like the electric fan; 'switch it on, it gives cool breeze. Switch it off, it allows you to swelter in the heat. I have no likes or dislikes. Those who talk ill of Me are also remembering My name and deriving joy therefrom and perhaps earning a few paise thereby.

They are happy when they write falsehood; you are happy singing the truth. I am unconcerned with either. I have come on a task which I imposed on Myself. That task will go on, from victory to victory, irrespective of praise or blame. It can neither be halted or hindered.

Truth knows no defeat, nor fear No trace of fear can tarnish the purity of the heart that is shining in the splendour of Truth. I am Sathya Sai. Sathya Sai means---(like the name Sesha Sai meaning, He who is based on, who reclines on the massive coils of the poisonous snake Sesha or the massive coils of objective desires)---He who is based on Truth, who reclines on Truth, which the massive coils of objective desires cannot entangle. Truth knows no defeat, Truth knows no fear.

 It marches on heedless of acclamation or declamation.

Do not attach yourselves too much with the world, for, it is ever changing fast and furiously. Be ever ready to fall into the hands of Death, gladly and gracefully, with gratitude for the chances afforded while alive. Never grieve, for God is resident in you as your Truth. Later, in the last stages of your life, when you look back upon your failures and successes, you will have to say, as Purandaradhaasa said, "Alas, we do not find Joy in this life as man." Do not spend your days in such manner. Be warned now itself. Use the days allotted to journey towards Love, Joy and Peace.

The New Year Day is called in this part of the country, Yugaadhi--the Inaugural Day of the Age, as if a new big epoch is opening today. This is an opportunity to contemplate on the vastness of time, of its speed, of the short span of time which we share, in this life of yours, and which has to be put to the best use. Contemplate on the beginning of things, of nature, of life, of man, of the heart---all emanating from God and journeying towards God. Dwell on the grandeur of this procession from birth to Liberation, through life after life. Become aware that you, Nature and all that is, was and will be, are God.

To attain this awareness, Love is the surest means. Do not inflict pain on any one, through word and deed. Control your passions, emotions and impulses, especially, anger, envy and greed. They thrive on the ego and make it a dangerous weapon. When you are enslaved by your passions, how can you stand forth and claim respect? Only cowards yield to their senses or passions. Brave men face up to them and win. The hero is he who overrules his mind and curbs his impulses; the zero is he who is overruled by them. Stand fast, like a rock, when the waves beat. Have faith in your ideals, in God. Do not allow faith to falter when failure comes into your door. Meet it as a new challenge, and triumph. Your Vishwaas (Faith) must not be like your Swaas (Breath); for swaas comes in and goes out, it is now in and now out. Let your vishwaas be firm, with no alternations of entrances and exits. If faith is one full continuous stream, Grace too will be showered on you in one full continuous stream.

Brindhaavan, 24-3-1973

The four goals laid down by Sai, are in fact those laid down by the Vedhas. They are Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema. Mankind has to understand the importance of these four goals, accept them, adore them, and practise them in daily life. Only then can the Divinity latent in man shine forth in all its glory.

Sri Sathya Sai

10. Sabko sanmathi

YOU are citizens of no mean land; Bhaarath is indeed a Dhivya Bhoomi---a land saturated since ages with devotion and dedication to God. The path to God was sought for, by even the common folk. Spiritual discipline permeated every activity of life and every detail of daily life. You are the inheritors of a great culture, which has survived the onslaughts of alien rule and political suppression. This culture has upheld strength of mind and purity of thought, which are translated into beneficial resolutions and desires, as the essential requisites of a progressive human being. The mystery and splendour of God can be grasped only by a pure mind and a clear vision. That is why the Lord granted a new eye to Arjuna in order that he might not be confounded by His Glory. A resolution adopted by the mind is like a stone thrown into a Sarovara or lake. It produces ripples that affect the entire face and unsettles equanimity. A good sankalpa (resolution) sets up a series of such thoughts, each contributing its quota to the process of purification and strengthening. Bhaaratheeya culture insists on purity of Sankalpa because, like a flagrant flower in the hand, it will spread its beneficial influence on others and through others, on the society and community, in which the individual operates. A bad thought desecrates the individual as well as the community. Misery too is infectious; your impurity can pollute too.

When the Mind acts in subordination to the Intellect or Discriminating Reason, it will help the Realisation of the Inner Truth. When it yields to the pull of the senses, then, it will tighten the bonds.

Be equipped with humility to win God's Grace

Good ideas have to be accepted and bad ones eschewed. Each idea has to be judged in the Supreme Court of Viveka (Wisdom). And, the 'ruling has to be treated as inviolable. It is in this context that we have to remind ourselves of the prayer of Gandhiji, Sabko san mathi dhe bhagwaan--"O God, Bestow right understanding on all."

Again, the individual born in the lake of Society must swim and float in the calm waters, and joining the river of Progress, merge in the Ocean of Grace. Man has to move from the stance of

"I" to the position of "WE;" this day, we see only the wild dance of ego-stricken individuals, who hate society and behave most unsocially.

Water flows from a higher, level to the lower levels. God's Grace too is like that. It flows down to those who are bent with humility. So, give up the ego, overcome jealousy, and cultivate love.

How can man be truly at peace with himself and with others, if he does not endeavour to win the Grace of God? While trying to get the best out of Nature's Gifts, you must first be equipped with humility and simplicity; otherwise, you will only be dragged along into ruin, through many unfulfilled desires. Raavana desired Nature (Seetha, who was found as a child in a furrow of ploughed land); but, he was not chastened by the effort to win the Grace of God; and so, he met his downfall. Desire leads to anger, when it is foiled; and anger weakens the body. It impairs the digestive system and chases him fast into old age.

Remember, when Prema (Divine selfless Love) is installed in the heart, jealousy, hatred and untruth will find no place there. Live in Prema, live with Prema, move with Prema, speak with Prema, think with Prema, and act with Prema. This is the best and the most fruitful Saadhana (spiritual effort). Do not want Prema from others, while yourself refusing Prema to others. This is not a one way traffic.

Love for all should spontaneously flow from your heart, and sweeten all your words.

Chembur, 30-3-1973

The Divine Prema is not easily comprehensible. So, My emphasis is not generally understood in its full significance. Prema is God.

God is Prema. To consider it as a method of speech, an attitude of mind or as physical behaviour is to sorely demean it. Prema has no trace of selfishness; it is not bound by motives.

Sri Sathya Sai

11. Drastic overhaul

BUILDERS of Future India, Patrons and Well-wishers of Educational Institutions! In this holy land of ours education is straying today into wrong directions, and encouraging wrong notions and patterns of behaviour. You are all aware of this trend, and its consequences. The sooner we set things right, the beter for all concerned. For, whether the students master the curricula or not, whether they understand, appreciate and assimilate the culture of India or not, the years roll by inexorably; time rushes past with no possibility of return; the span of life allotted to each is undergoing subtraction, every minute. Therefore, delay in this matter of reform is unpardonable.

The years spent by these persons as students in schools and colleges are the most crucial years of their lives. The heart of youth is pure, clean, full of enthusiasm and optimism. They are eager to achieve happiness to enter upon an adventure and earnest to serve others. It does not involve much effort to direct them along beneficent channels. Of course with equal ease, they can be directed along maleficent channels too.

The educational system must decide to direct them to the achievement of the Divinity latent in each one. Striving towards such a goal is an essential step, for ensuring social, national and world peace and prosperity.

Student life must be filled with cooperative activity. Humanity is like a train full of passengers, moving in one direction. Some alight at the little halt, some get off the station after that. Some alight a little further off. But, young persons travel longest. So, intensive care must be accorded to the problem of their education. Their lives must be made happier, more full of activity and contentment, more useful to the human community and this can happen only when the Divinity in them is allowed to blossom. The nation is-looking forward to these young men and women to realise its dreams of unity, integrity and prosperity; these bright young people have to confer confidence and courage, joy and enthusiasm. But, judging from the nature of the students today and from the patterns into which they are being moulded, one feels that the hope of the nation might not be realised.

The coming years might witness the decline of the fine ideals of Indian culture, cherished through the millenia.

Beautiful, fruitful ideals must be planted in the tender hearts of the youth. They are lovely creepers which can yield clusters of fragrant flowers, spreading the fragrance of truth and virtue.

They have to be fostered with love and care, by parents, teachers and all those interested-in the progress of the nation. It is a sacred responsibility which cannot be by-passed.

The years of student-life must be saturated with cooperative activity, social service, eager search for truth and readiness to sacrifice one's interests for the good of those who are less fortunate.

Moral and spiritual values have to be honoured as much as, if not more than, economic and material values. Life must be a harmonious blend of these values with emphasis on moral strength.

Education must fill students with self-confidence

Students, Embodiments of the Divine Aathma (soul)! There is a great and urgent need that you should delve into the problem---who exactly you are, and realise that you are Divine, so that you can raise yourselves to that level, instead of remaining merely human or degrading yourselves into the lower level of animality. What exactly are the degrees which you earn now, after such elaborate and exhausting studies.? The degrees are only begging bowls, which you can hold while presenting yourselves in front of office after office, seeking jobs. Education does not fill you with self-confidence, self-reliance and self-knowledge. How can even parents, teachers and the elders give you these, when they are themselves suffering from their absence? Since they do not have these qualities, the country is in the throes of poverty, faction and sloth.

Imbibe knowledge in schools and colleges with your minds, fully engaged in the task, with your hearts welcoming the acquisition and with your souls fully concentrated. Do not try to achieve distinction, through expenditure of money. How can money bring you knowledge? Yet the temples of the Goddess of Learning (namely the schools and colleges) have become this day temples where the Goddess of Riches is worshipped. Saraswathi, the Goddess of Learning is described in the Puraanas (ancient legends) as the rival of Lakshmi, the Goddess of Riches.

They are both as unfriendly as the proverbial mother-in-law and daughter-in-law. How can they be together in the same home? So, Saraswathi has been practically driven out of her temple and Lakshmi has installed herself therein. Money is demanded and being paid, for admitting a child to the school, for testifying that he has attended the required number of classes, for accepting his application to sit for the examination, for declaring him to have passed it, and to certify that he has secured the desired number of marks. The entire field of education has been thus degraded and disorganised, with incalculable harm to the country's prospects in the coming years.

Students have their minds polluted by hatred

The emotions that spring from the minds of youth have to be canalised and sublimated, now, while they are yet elementary and in the nascent stage; this is their primary duty. When you neglect it, youth runs amok and ruins its own destiny. At the present time, youth is exploding and running into extreme actions of arson and acts of disorder. The blame lies at the door of those who incite them and inflame them, letting them loose on society. Many lament the injury to life and property that these acts result in. But the more dangerous results are not so clearly recognised. The students, for example, are injuring themselves their careers and their usefulness to the community even more lastingly. They waste a great deal of hard-earned money; they waste something that cannot be recovered later, namely, Time; they have their minds polluted by hatred.

Politicians are to be blamed and avoided, for they inject hatred and prejudice in the minds of youth, in order to use them as instruments for their own aggrandizement. Students must keep themselves away from them. Their first duty is to spend the time for study; after completing the present task of acquiring knowledge they can take part in political activities, and distinguish themselves as leaders and pleaders. Now, they have to acquire skills, insight, balance and the spirit of service. They have to revere their parents, teachers and the elders. They have to understand the ideals of their country's culture and learn to mould their daily lives in accordance with them.

Students must learn discipline and reverence

Of course, the system requires drastic overhaul. For, the sons and daughters of this land have to know the standards set by our scriptures and sacred texts, the story of the origin and development of our ancient culture, and the life-giving 'principles of law and justice that took root on this soil.

Another point. Young persons have to join school, or college, not merely for getting instruction in the classes, or studying some books with the help of teachers, for if that were so they could as well sit in their own homes, and the instruction can be imparted to them while they reside there.

They have to join the institutions so that they may learn to live and move with persons of their age but from different social and economic backgrounds with different intellectual equipments and emotional peculiarities, so that they may learn discipline and reverence, tolerance and cooperation.

Some years at school and college will train them to react properly to society and to the outer world.

What happens at the present time is the result of the undue importance attached by parents and society to a pass in the examination. Students cram their hardest just a few days prior to the date of the examination; then they start to vomit the whole lot on to the answer papers, and return home, with a vacant head; for the knowledge gained has not affected their behaviour or opinions or attitude in the least. Education is not to be taken as a process of filling an empty sack and pouring out its contents, making the sack empty again. It is not the head that has to be filled through education. It is the heart that has to be cleansed, expanded and illumined. Education is for 'life', not, for a 'living'.

The sign of the educated man is humility that he has not been able to know the vast unknown that still remains to be explored. The educated man must realise that he has more obligations than privileges, more duties than fights. He has to serve the society amidst which he is placed and the heritage that has been handed down to him by his forefathers. He should be delighted to serve, and not desire to dominate. For service is divine; service makes life worthwhile; service is the best way to use one's skills, intelligence, strength and resources.

Nature is the best teacher

I must tell you of the paramount importance of Love. Love is God; Live in Love; God is the embodiment of perfect Love; so, He can be known and realised, and won, only through Love.

You can see the Moon only with the help of Moonlight. You can see God only through the rays of Love, the one Quality of Love, expresses itself as attachment to things, affection towards kith and kin, desire for objects, love in human relations, reverence towards the great, and devotion to God. Cultivate Love and all its aspects will be fed and fostered.

Through education, you have to interpret (in the light of the principles of Indian Culture) the knowledge of Nature and its components, and the knowledge of man and his various victories and failures. Of course, Nature is the best teacher; so be vigilant to imbibe useful and lasting lessons from Her.

This college is the result of the generosity of many donors, specially, the Raajamaatha of Nawanagar. You must rejoice that a lady of such magnanimity is associated with your college.

Be grateful to her; show your gratitude, by bringing into your daily lives, the ideals of spiritual progress, moral elevation and intellectual attainment which she holds before you. Develop the faith and the steadfast persistence needed to rise to her expectations.

I bless this Institution, so that from its portals may emerge brilliant young persons ready and able to serve the Motherland and to add lustre to Her Glory. I love students and educational institutions very much. I bless that each one of you may reach high attainment in education and earn good marks (not bad remarks), give your parents who have toiled long for your up-keep, the happiness they are hoping for and reward the Raajamaatha and other elders who are watching over your studies and upbringing, with such great affection, presenting them the fame you earn by goodness and scholarship.

Rajkot (Gujarat), 1-4-1973

We can be successful leader, only if we are disciplined follower, who do not issue command, to other, but rather set an. example of service in our actions.

Sri Sathya Sai

12. Bhaarithi-Bhaaritham

KARMA (activity) is primarily movement, motion. Movement results in energy and matter is but condensed energy. Ether, air, fire, land, water---all are the cause as well as the consequence of this incessant movement. All things that move are active, engaged in karma. To live is to change, to move; you may not move the entire body or any of its parts, but still, movement is taking place in you. Food is being digested, blood is being circulated, air is being drawn in, analysed, absorbed and exhaled, impressions are welcomed or resisted and conveyed or rejected. Life is karma; the Body is a karma-kshethra (abode of activity). All living things are engaged in karma offering themselves in sacrificial rite of ceaseless activity. The fruit of that Sacrifice is Selfrealisation.

When you have your eyes open, you see thousands here; when you close them, they are not here!

Or, if your sight is impaired, you don't see them. You cannot therefore say, they are non-existent.

Since your sight is impaired by doubt, pride, or prejudice you don't see God, who is in you as well as outside you. You long for a thing that is not; you ignore the treasure that is within your grasp. You swear you have no bird in your hand; you struggle for the birds, that you believe, are waiting for you in the bush. The bird in the bush is only the image of the bird you have in your hand but you are unaware of this truth.

You have faith in the senses and the knowledge they garner; you have faith in the fancies and fantasies of your mind; you have faith in the syllogisms of your reason; but you have no faith in God who cannot be bound or found by these. So, you fear, you grieve, you doubt.

It is wrong to cast blame on others

Have the curtain of "Thought of God" all around you; then, the deadly mosquitoes of desire and distrust cannot harm you. That curtain will confer health on you, through immunity from disease.

You will have undisturbed ease, with nothing to pine for, nothing to fear from. You will love all God's creation, you will welcome opportunities to serve and assuage the pain of others.

This morning, while conversing with a group of persons, the problem of suffering was analysed; it was ascribed to one's own past deeds and one's own mental tendencies. It' is wrong to cast the blame on others. But, some one pointed out that God was the originator of both joy and grief, that without His Will no blade of grass .can waver in the wind. Yes. If that Truth be firmly established in the heart, one gets the unique bliss of liberation. God gives everything, whatever we get is His Grace. You have no right to judge whether what you get is good or bad.

In order to get God so firmly installed, worship of idols or pictures, meditation on His Glory, recitation of His Name are all useful as preliminary Saadhana (spiritual effort). I won't say that temples or houses of worship, altars-and shrines where God is invoked and adored are wrong or wasteful. Until the letters are learnt, illustrations are necessary in the primers. The letter A is learnt in association with the Apple of which a picture is printed above it. On that account, you cannot be constrained to remember that Apple whenever you have to think of A.

Be in perpetual contact with God

I am always emphasising the value of Service as a Saadhana for realising the one-ness of all in God and the one-ness of one-self with God. I do not recommend the giving up of karma; for it is not possible. What is generally meant by Karma-Sanyaas (renunciation of activity) is the giving up of rites and rituals prescribed by the Scriptures. I call upon you to adhere to a new rite, Seva (selfless service), a new yagna, sacrifice of the ego, a new ritual of worship, Sharanaagathi (total loving surrender), dedication of all thoughts, words and 'deeds at the Lotus Feet of the Lord and acceptance of all that happens as Gifts of Grace from Him. Be in perpetual contact with God---let the pipe that leads into the tap which is you be connected with the reservoir of His Grace. Then your life will be full of unruffled content. Without that awareness of the constant presence, any service that you do to others will be dry and barren. Be aware of it; then any little act of service will yield plentiful fruit.

Sarvathaah paani paadham:

"God's hands and feet are everywhere." Sarvathokshi Shiro mukham: "God's eyes, head and face are everywhere." Sarvathaah Sruthimalloke: "God's ears are all over the Universe." Sarvam aavruthya thishtathi: "He remains, enveloping all."

When you pray for the Vision of the Feet, you are rewarded with it. When you cry out in agony and call on Him to listen to your woe, His ears are there to respond. When you plead with Him sincerely to come, He comes, to give; He gives. But, the best

Saadhana is to behave as you do, when you get a parcel of books by post. To get at the books you unwrap the parcel, and throw off the material used to pack the books. Now, take the prayer that is the deepest and the most significant---"Naaku Shaanthi Kaavaali"---"I require Peace". Unwrap it of the "I" (the ego) and of the "require" (desire); get hold of Shaanthi, in the core of the packet. When you are burdened with egoism and desire, how can you attain Shaanthi? So, throw away the packing and hold on to the thing packed and protected.

There are three stages in Spiritual Life

Man is Divinity humanised; in him is concentrated vast power, awaiting manifestation. But, man condemns himself into poverty, disease and despair. He begs for alms from all and sundry and debases the Lord within. He tells himself that God is far away, in an unreachable Heaven. He exiles himself from the Kingdom which is his legitimate heritage. He deludes-himself into the belief that it is he who feels, thinks, speaks, and acts. He curses himself as a fool or as a victim of fate, committing wrong with every such imprecation! Examine, each of you, your own minds and avoid this cowardice which denies your birthright.

Some years are spent in studies and apprenticeship; then one reaches the years of active participation in the building or upkeep of social progress through a job; later, in the evening of life, one lives on earned income, pension, rent or interest. So, too; there are three stages in Spiritual Life---first as a Ijnaasu---the seeker, curious, inquisitive, earnest, thirsty, enthusiastic.

Then as a Mumukshu---the Saadhak steady, straight, adventurous, hardy. Finally the Abhimukha-

--the realised person, face to face with Reality, strong, intelligent, good, showering Love on all.

The dull inert temper leads man to sloth and slavery; the passionate temper entices him to faction, competition, conflict; the balanced unruffled equable temper leads man to peace, justice, love and truth. Overcoming the tempers by the development of Saadhana, one must discover the Truth of oneself and others, namely, God.

Be happy when grief strikes you

Yan na Bhaarithi than na Bhaaritham: "What is not Indian is not knowledge; all knowledge is the domain of the Indian intellect." And all knowledge is synthesised, harmonised and summarised into the highest Wisdom, here, so that its alchemy can be experienced. And what is that Wisdom? Every individual is a spark of the effulgence of God; God is dancing in every cell of every being'. Do not doubt this, or ignore this, or dispute this. This is the Truth; this is the entire Truth; this is the only Truth. The Universe is God. (Loka is Lokesha). All this is He, His Body.

To run away from the place which you have been assigned is cowardice, it is foolish, it is fruitless. Don't honour such men as heroes. You can be engaged in any profession, employed in any job,--for all professions are His, all jobs are His. He is the Universal Master, the Universal Provider. And when troubles pile up or disappointment confronts you, be thankful for the toughening it gives to your character for the trial which you are privileged to face. You overcome the distress of the heat by resorting to a cooler; you overcome the distress of freezing cold by resorting to joy. Be happy when grief strikes you. Be calm when anger tries to inflame you. How can you put down fire with fire? Reason out and convince yourself that tolerance, forbearance, love and sweetness can alone ensure peace for yourself and for society.

Hyderabad, 4-4-1973

The touchstone for virtue in a person is his keenness to give up, to sacrifice, to develop detachment. I exhort students on many occasions to associate with good and Godly people only so that the precious aspect of divinity in them can manifest.

Many of them are humble and subdued and disciplined as long as they are in hostel and college, but once they enter the outer world, they resume the routine and ruin themselves. This should not happen.

Once Truth is accepted as an article of faith, one should sacrifice one's entire life to its practice. Or else, man degrades himself below the level of birds and beasts.

Sri Sathya Sai

13. Know the Knower

MEN everywhere are frittering away the precious years allotted to them on earth, in three vain pursuits: praising oneself, thrusting one's interests forward, aggrandizement at all costs; defaming others, blackening the reputations of others, scandalising the good and fawning upon the bad; talking frivolously, or irresponsibly, stoking the fires of hatred or slinging mud, helter skelter, with no care for the injury done.

Men try to know everything about everybody else; but, they do not try to know about themselves! The attempt to know about the knower is called saadhana; knowledge about the knower is Aathma Vidhya. It is only through that knowledge that man can live in peace anywhere. For, when you know that you are but a spark of the Divine and that all else are the same Divine sparks, you look upon all with reverence and true Love; your heart is filled with supreme joy; and the assertions of the ego are rendered ineffective. Man seeks joy in far places and peace in quiet spots; but, the spring of joy is in his heart, the haven of peace is in himself.

Even when he walks on the moon, man has to take with him, his fears, his anxieties, his prejudices and his pet aversions. Have faith in God, and in the correctness of moral living. Then, you can have peace and joy, whatever may be the fare that fortune offers you.

Love alone confers lasting happiness and peace

Goodness, compassion, tolerance---through these three paths, one can see the Divinity in oneself and others. Softness of heart is condemned by people today as weakness, cowardice and want of intelligence. The heart has to be hardened, they say, against pity and charity. But, that way lies war, destruction, downfall. Love alone confers lasting happiness and peace. Sharing alone can reduce grief and multiply joy. Man is born to share, to serve, to give and not to grab. When you instal faith in God as a .precious truth in the altar of your heart, you will welcome with equal' alacrity the blows and blossoms of fortune.

Man can have the highest joy and can share that joy with others; but he is now having only grief and sharing that grief with others. A king once granted a woodcutter in the forest an extensive sandal wood plantation as inaam (gift), in return for an act of hospitality that he had the chance to offer him. The fellow did not realise the value of the wood nor did he investigate the meaning and mode of the fragrance that emanated from the wood; he cut all the trees in a short time and burnt them for selling as charcoal. Most men waste their lives; they make charcoal out of sandalwood and are happy at the few chips, they get in exchange!

By means of prayer you can win the Grace of God; prayer saves you from slavery to the senses; when you extol God and feel that you are activated by His Will, you will become free from anger, anxiety, prejudice and envy; these passions ruin physical and mental health. Whenever you feel greed or resentment, try to control the emotion. Treat it as you would treat an illness; find the cure and master it. A monk was going along a jungle track when he was followed by a gang of tribals who showered abuse on him. He sat down on rock before the edge of the forest was reached; and encouraged them to do their worst for, he said, there he would be met by a group of his devotees who might beat them off enraged at their behaviour.

Discipline is the mark of intelligent living

Man is basically love, peace, joy and truth. He is the embodiment of all these, that is to say, of Divinity. He ought to behave only in accordance with his basic traits; but he overlays upon them the false traits of I and mine, and tarnishes his own personality. How to get rid of this tarnish is the problem of religion, everywhere. Bhajan (group singing of devotional songs) and Naamasmaran (remembering God's Name) are fine cleansing processes. Only, the mind must dwell on the sweetness of each name, and become sweet as a consequence. They must be done as a regular discipline, with the awareness that they will yield good results. They should not degenerate into mere mechanical routine items of a crowded schedule.

Discipline is the mark of intelligent living. Parents should not allow children to fall away from their control, and wander about without compass or anchor. Many parents feed and fondle their children, and then, in the name of freedom, leave them to find their own friends and pleasures.

They take them to films regardless of the impression they create on their tender minds. They entertain the friends of their children, but, do not inquire their antecedents or habits. They even encourage their children to smoke and drink, not knowing they will one day have to rue their action. They thus declare by their actions that they are the enemies of their own progeny!

The path of life has both ups and downs

I like children; I take great care of them; I pay them great attention. I give, and advise parents to give them, proper advice at the proper time. I insist on discipline, on reverent obedience to parents, on regulated food and play, on rigorous allocation of time for study, bhajan, meditation, etc. I also recommend some items of service, like nursing the sick. I condemn frivolous talk, luxurious living, deleterious habits, addiction to films, horror-comics, pen-friends, exotic dress, outlandish coiffures designed to draw attention to oneself etc. By these means, boys and girls are slowly drawn into unrighteous and immoral ways.

Discipline trains you to put up with disappointments; you will know that the path of life has both ups and downs, that every rose has: its thorn. Now, people want roses without thorns, life has to be one saga of sensual pleasure, a picnic all the time. When this does not happen, you turn wild and start blaming others. If each one cares for his own pleasures how can society progress? How can the weak survive? Mine, not thine, this sense of greed is the root of all evil. This distinction is applied even to God!--my God, not yours! Your God, not mine!

I am indeed very happy today that I could spend some time with you, children of the Remand Home. To spend some time in Divine Presence is a fortune which is the reward of past merit.

You are here going through sentences from coups for delinquencies. Let me tell you that all men are undergoing sentences for long or .short periods, with simple or hard labour, to atone for misdemeanours and crimes done by them in past lives. Every fall makes a dent; every fault has to be corrected; every sin has to be-cleansed. Every one is a prisoner. Learn the Golden Rule of Life

For, wherever he goes, two officers accompany them, and watch each action. It is only when one can go alone, that one can be said to be free. But, now, I as well as Mine, do not leave men alone; they walk on each side exercising their subtle influence over each step. I insist that you are the body, the mind, the senses, and the intelligence. It encourages you to care for the strengthening of the body and its beautification; to cater to the fancies that attract the mind, to pursue the fleeting pleasures of the tongue and eye; it tells you that reason is the only instrument for measuring truth, and decries intuition, and experience. Mind teaches you to grab, acquire, and possess, merely for the joy of possession, and the joy of depriving others of things of value. But, the mind can also be used for liberation from these two shackles: I and Mine. Let it be fixed on God; they will both disappear.

You must examine every act to find out. whether it will cause pain to others; if it does, withdraw from it. Don't do to others what you do not like to do unto you. This is called the Golden Rule.

Yes, It is the best test for. distinguishing right from wrong. If another person has with him what you like to have, do not make him miserable by snatching it from him. Would you like something you like to be snatched away from you by another?

Learn to serve people to the extent of your capacity. Learn to revere your parents, teachers and elders; they have your progress always in view. When you go back to your villages, join the Seva Samithis (service organisations) there and engage yourselves in bhajan, service programmes and study with the members there.

Hyderabad, April, 1973

This is Sai's Message to you all. May you all develop this Divine Love and stand out as the harbingers of a new age free from selfishness, greed, hatred and violence. Let each of you be light unto himself or herself and thereby be a light unto others. There should be no differences among devotees in the Sai Organisations. There should be no scramble for power or position. What matters is the purity, intensity and sincerity of the devotion and the spirit of selfless sacrifice in which each devotee renders service to the needy and the suffering.

Sri Sathya Sai

14.

14. Your image in His eye

MAN preens himself that he knows everything; but when asked about himself he hangs down his head in shame. Man knows the news of every land but he is ignorant of the nuisance that he himself is to himself and others. He is moving in darkness, but, yearning for aanandha (bliss).

He does not know the means of securing aanandha prayer, seva (selfless service), study of spiritual texts, meditation, silence. He has no faith that he is aanandha and that aanandha is his own nature. He is blown off by calamity; for he has no strength to withstand the blow. Faith in the God within is the toughest shield against the thrusts of fate. Nests laboriously built by birds are torn away by storms; the fragrant petals of flowers are felled by rain. Defeat and victory are the obverse and reverse of the same coin; when you welcome one, you have willy-nilly to welcome the other too. Forbearance, compassion and incorruptible virtue are the three pillars of a happy life. Only such a life can be called civilised; the rest is barbarian existence.

This meeting began with a Prayer. Good. But, prayer for some benefit or gain should not be addressed to God. For, it means that God waits until He is asked! Surrender to Him; He will deal with you as He feels best and it would be the best for you. God does not dole out Grace in proportion to the praise He receives! When you pray for a thing from God, you run the risk of condemning Him, if for some reason the prayer is not answered the way you wanted it to be, or as quickly as you wanted it to be. This contingency arises because you feel that God is an outsider, staying in some heaven, or holy spot, far away from you. God is in you, God is in every word of yours, every deed and thought. Speak, do and think as befits Him. Do the duty that He has allotted to the best of your ability, and to the satisfaction of your conscience. That is the most rewarding puuja (ritualistic worship).

Inner cleanliness is Godliness. When you stand before another, his image is in your eye, and your image is in his; haven't you observed this? You are in me, I am in you, that is the truth this phenomenon proclaims. When you have faith in this, and when you cultivate love, humility, reverence for life, and tolerance, you are on the right path. When you are not on this path, that is to say, when you are travelling left, you are certainly left out, when it is a question of sharing Divine Grace.

The body is the temple of God, isn't it? Well. What does the priest do in the temple every day? First, he cleans the utensils and sacred vessels in the shrine. He sweeps the room and washes the altar. The senses are the utensils for the puuja of the God within; they have to be cleaned and assiduously kept free from dirt. Inner cleanliness is Godliness. That is possible only through sense-control, and mind-control; or what amounts to the same saadhana, dedication of all desires and activities to God. There are various habits which can be learnt in order to ensure equanimity. When some one insults you or defames you or ignores you, accept it with a smile; this is the way of the world; it is basically ungrateful, ill-mannered, they are doing me a good turn, my strength is under trial, I should not yield to anger or resentment, tell yourself such invigorating things, and be quiet, with a smile of triumph on your lips. There was a sanvaasin (mendicant) once who was roundly abused by a gang of mischievous young men. He said, Carry on! Enjoy yourselves! I see that you are very happy at the chance. This is exactly what I desire for you." When you do not accept the insult some one casts on you, it goes back to the person who indulged in it first; a registered letter that is not accepted returns to the sender. Do not damage your mental peace, by receiving the letter and reading the contents. Refuse to receive it. You have a chance of correcting the wrong-doers too; accept it and you join the gang of mischief-makers. So, be warned! Perform duty as an act of worship. When God is recognised as dwelling within, every one will perform his duty. as an act of worship. Children have to revere their parents, that is their duty. Parents have to bring up their children as bright and willing citizens capable of earning their own food and helping others in distress; if they shirk this duty, they have failed in their worship. They should not also spoil them by allowing them too much of freedom and catering to their fancies. I know many parents who dote on their children, and admire them when they learn the bad habits of gambling or drinking! They do not curb them, when they swagger about in the bazaars, teasing and bullying those who pass by. They do not instil into the young minds the attitude of reverence towards property belonging to others. As a consequence, their children land themselves in trouble, and then, the parents repent and curse themselves for their unpardonable foolishness. Lean on your own strength and skill. There is also another responsibility that devolves upon the parent. He must live the householder's life, as laid down in the Dharma Shaasthras (Scriptures on Righteousness), so that a picture of a pure happy life may be imprinted on the young mind. If the parent is a drunkard; a gambler, and a cheat, no amount of textbook ethics can cure the son. I like children and the young innocents. I will not allow them to be blamed. The fault lies wholly on the shoulders of the elders, the parents the leaders who shape the norms which they imbibe.

Dhritharaashtra, the blind father, encouraged his hundred sons in their nefarious plots to bring about the destruction of the five Paandava cousins and thus paved the way for their own total annihilation. He did not teach them by precept and example, the lessons of love, sacrifice and contentment.

Do not lean upon others; lean on your own strength and skill. Live on your own earnings, your own resources. Self-reliance is the best food for growing young men.
It is best to live with honour for just a day than with dishonour for many decades; better a short lived hamsa (swan) than a century-lived crow. The hamsa is adored by all; the crow is detested and stoned off. Do not crave for the property of others or for things that can be got by trickery or dishonourable means. Earn by the sweat of your brow, then, you can be proud and happy, when you spend it.

Life is a mosaic of pleasure and pain Then again, I will advise children not to read horror comics, books on crime and sex, and novels of vice and wickedness. Avoid also films, for though they may be advertised as very educative and inspiring, the producers, in their greed for profits, smuggle in low vulgar debasing scenes in order to please raw untrained minds. Don't allow the virus of vice to infect your brains. If that happens you descend to levels worse than the beasts. Do not imagine that it will be possible for you to live happily, without any anxiety or bother. Do not build castles in the air, and hope to live in them. Life is a mosaic of pleasure and pain; grief is an interval between two moments of joy, peace is the interlude between two wars. You have no rose, without a thorn; the diligent picker will avoid the pricks, and gather the flower. There is no bee without the sting; cleverness consists in gathering the honey nevertheless. Troubles and travail will haunt you, but you must not allow them to deflect you from the path of duty and dedication.

When you go back after some years here to your villages, seek out the Sathya Sai Seva Samithi or Bhajana Mandali, in the place; join that Sathsang (good company). Share the Aanandha (bliss) of the seva (voluntary service) that they do---visit the patients in the hospitals, read nice story books sitting by the side of the patients in the beds, write letters for them, and generally be kind and friendly to them in their loneliness and pain. Go to the slum areas, move like lighted lamps full of love and sympathy, and help the people there to get things done which will improve their health, add to their income, and advance their education. When the sugar of Divine thoughts is added to the routine tasteless water of daily life, it becomes sherbet, and delightful to drink. So, do so yourself and help others to do so.

Man is the image of God; when you injure His image, when you discard him, or dishonour him, or keep him at arm's length, how can God confer Grace on you? "Mine is mine, yours in yours"-- if you declare, God too will keep you beyond the reach of His love.

Annie Besant said once that more than man seeking God, it is truer to say that God is ever seeking man, a man who loves and serves His Children, and treats them as endearingly as He does.

Look out for chances to serve others

Many are dispirited at their poverty, or misfortune; they hang their heads and fold their arms, and blame God for their plight. It is like the magnet and the piece of iron.

The iron weeps that the magnet does not draw it. "I have no legs to walk, no wings to fly, no muscles to crawl or creep!

How can I reach the magnet?" it wails. The magnet replies, "you are encrusted with rest, dust, and layers of mud; get rid of them and automatically, without any other ado, you can contact me and be with me for ever." It is sheer audacity to say, with all the rust and dust on, that God has no power to grant Grace; nor is it a sign of intelligence to say that God has no compassion in Him.

Examine yourselves, purify the heart and fill it with love towards all men and God will be with you.

God is not somewhere away from you, some one distinct from you. He is in you, before you, behind you, beckoning, guiding, guarding, warning, prompting, the Inner Voice speaking ever with you. You need not seek Him, He is there ready to respond to the call from the heart. Call on Me and I am always by your side. Prizes were given today only to a few boys; I wish to give prizes to all of you, when next I come. So behave that the Grace is deserved. Look out for chances to serve others, speak soft and sweet, revere your teachers and all elders, study well to the best of your abilities, do not waste a single moment in idle talk or pastimes. That is the message I leave with you today.

The world is a huge house of correction

Dear Children, Embodiments of Purity and Holiness, I am glad I am able to meet you again and spend some time with you. Bhagavantham said that this day is My birthday, being the Monday of the month Karthik, the day according to the Hindhu Calendar Celebrations at Puttaparthi and elsewhere are done on the 23rd of November, since that is the date according to English Calendar. But, Bhagavantham said that you must congratulate yourselves on this coincidence.

Four days are said to be days of luck; man must be congratulated if he gets this luck. The first is the day on which brothers and sisters, kith and kin are sitting around and attending a domestic festival showering joy on all. The second is the day on which one gets the chance to feed the hungry, the distressed and the defectives who cannot earn the wherewithal for livelihood. The third is the occasion when one gets the atmosphere and the opportunity to meditate on God. The fourth is the day on which a great person comes to us and instructs and inspires towards the higher life of the spirit. They feed the mind with aanandha (divine bliss) and teach us to overcome the obstacles towards God-realisation. You have today the great good fortune of being in the Divine presence, a gift which is the most precious man can acquire.

Chance circumstances have brought you into this remand home; but, do not get disheartened.

The others who consider themselves free are also in jail, for, the world is a huge house of correction. When a prisoner is transferred from one place of confinement to another, say, from Raajamundhry to Waarangal, he will have a police constable on each side of him, isn't?

Whenever he moves about, these two will be with him. When he can journey without these two, all alone, then, he is free. All men have two constables ever with them; they are the symbols of his sentence of imprisonment. They are abhimaan and mamakaar--- the egoistic feeling and the pride of possession.

You can ever be free from worries and fears

Man is a prisoner of his senses so long as these two keep him under guard. Man strays away into misery and pain, because he loses the sense of value, and runs after the temporary and the trivial.

He ignores the voice of God that warns and guides from within, and pays the penalty for the transgression. Life is to be dedicated not for mere food and drink, or mere catering to the cravings of the senses. It has to be devoted to the attainment of the aanandha that God alone can confer. Of course, worries and fears there will always be, along the road that you take from birth to death. But, you can ever be free from both, provided you have as the Giver of Light, the name, Sai Raam. At least from now on, recite the name and dear children, you will have joy and peace.

Never care for the obstacles that may come your way; the name will clear the path.

The Gopees (milkmaids) of Brindhaavan were chastised and punished by their parents, parentsin- law and even husbands for taking the name of Krishna, but, they had the name printed on their hearts, just like the pictures in the books you read, and they could not remove the Name, just as you would find it impossible to remove the picture from the paper!

When you have the Name in your heart and on your tongue, you will never go astray, your hand will be clean, your eyes will be bright, your face will beam with courage and self-confidence. Man has been endowed with inaana (spiritual knowledge), the capacity to distinguish what is good and bad, for himself, for the family into which he is born and for which he is indebted for bringing him up until adulthood when he was a helpless dependent stripling, for the village where he first saw light, for the country which gave him the rich heritage of culture, and for humanity of whom he is a valuable, a significant member.

God will never desert His obligation

Every culture has a body of customs and conventions laid down by the sages, to maintain peace and prosperity in the community. They are tested in the crucible of experience, and they are often grouped under the word, Dharma (duties). Or, they are known as neethi (ethics). To go against them-is to break the rule which binds man to man, and man to God.

When you have not grown enough and understood how hard it is to work and earn the fruits of work, it strikes you as easy to take hold of some one else's book or pencil or money and derive satisfaction therefrom. This tendency leads you to trouble, and to this place. Resist that temptation; be bold; tell yourselves that it is wrong, it will disgrace your parents, the reputation of your family, of your village, of your country and its ancient culture. If you feel you must have something to be happy, pray to God; "God! You have the responsibility to keep me healthy, happy, good and intelligent; give me this thing, which I believe is necessary for my happiness; but, if you think, I am wrong, give me whatever you think best." God will never desert His obligation; He will feed you and foster you.

Once a sanyaasin (ascetic) was proceeding to the forest for austerities, so that he may win the Grace of God. He saw a cow being led by a villager; drops of milk were shedding from its udder! He asked the villager, why? The reply was, "She is about to calve; this is the indication; the milk is already flowing so that the calf may have its milk, as soon as it is born." The sanyaasin then realised that God will give him, too, wherever he was, the thing most needed for his progress; He knows best, He is all-knowing, He is compassion itself, he felt; so, he turned back and contented himself with prayers and the constant contemplation of God as Providence.

Food got by foul means will injure you Have patience; do not in your hurry to enjoy cheap joys fall into error and unrighteous deeds.
Have faith that God will add unto you all joys that you desire for and deserve. People ask of men for favours; they extend their hands towards others and plead dhehi (give). But, dhehi also means, "He who dwells in the dheha (body), that is to say, God!" So, don't humiliate that Dhehi by calling out dhehi before others. Ask Him; say dhehi to the Dhehi; He will respond generously, graciously.

Food got by foul means, clothing procured through falsehood, these will only injure you. Do not think that ease and comfort are the main things in life. Disappointment, disease, distress are the lot of all, rich and poor, educated and uneducated, young and old. They are the common lot of all. Let not your pure, immaculate hearts be rendered dirty by falsehood and wrong. Do not soil your tongue using it for uttering dirty words. Utter the name of God; it acts like a spark which can burn into ash a big hill of cotton! All evil thoughts, and wicked plans and plots will disappear like fog before the Sun when the Name of God is remembered sincerely. As soon as you are back in your villages, join the nearest Seva Samithi (service unit) and share in their seva saadhana (effort of service) and spend your days in sathsang (holy company), so that you become good and useful sons of the land.

God is the refuge of the forlorn. This day, some devotees came to Me and impressed Me to spend some time with them. But, it is your call that I answered. I have spent more than an hour and half with you; but, I am not satisfied. I am sorry a good deal of time was spent in reaching this place; that could well have been spent with you. You are fortunate to keep Me so long with you.

Remember the directions given to you, and start the saadhana of Naamasmarana (spiritual discipline of remembering God's Name) this very moment. Hyderabad, April, 1973
Of course, you can and do announce, I surrender my mind, my thoughts, my feelings and imaginings, to God." But your monkeymind escapes from your hold; how, then, can you capture it and claim it and surrender it to God? What authority do you possess to offer something you are not master of?

Sri Sathya Sai
15. Love is the key MAN is so designed that he can derive aanandha and maintain it only through association with his kind. To divest oneself of all contacts with others, and tread a lonely path is a sign of weakness, of fear---not of courage. Lively association alone produces morality, justice, compassion, sympathy, love, tolerance, equanimity and many other qualities that toughen and train character, and mould the personality of man. Culture is the consequence of the co-mingling of hearts and heads. A group of individuals, who are charged with hatred or contempt of each other, cannot produce any beneficial effect on any of its components; a common outlook, or rather, a common inlook is the essential factor, Sama-chintha---the sameness of beliefs, opinions and attitudes---is the prime factor. This Sama-chintha must result in a flood of aanandha (divine bliss) that envelops and enthuses the entire group. If the individual knows he is Divine and that all else are equally so, that consciousness is the best bond for Society, that aanandha is the best atmosphere to sustain the Society. How can a person who knows that all are Divine keep away from the God He recognises? "I am he, he is I, both I and He are kith and kin in Him." This awareness is so thrilling, so satisfying, so uplifting, that such Society is the noblest Sathsang (holy company) man can ever come into.

This Universe is enveloped in God Shutting yourself in a room and offering incense and flowers to a picture or image of God, singing or reciting His glory are very poor substitutes for the discipline that will liberate you from ignorance. All beings are images of God; all men are His pictures; then, why shut yourselves in? All creation is marching on a pilgrimage to Him; why then behave as if you are trekking it alone? You believe that the time spent in church or temple or the domestic shrine in adoration and in ritual worship is devoted to God and the rest is spent for other purposes. But, you cannot demarcate and delimit the realms of God and man like that. God is ever with you everywhere. Vasudhevasarvamidham---"All this is God." Society is the school where this lesson is taught to those who earnestly seek. The sages of this land resorted to the hermitages in the forests, and mixed with the steadfast seekers there is scholastic discussion and disciplinary practices. They drew inspiration and instruction from each other, and learnt the Truth, Ishaavaasyam idham jagath---"This Universe is enveloped in God"---that God is the string on which the worlds are strung. When man gives up his conceit and becomes nature's pupil, rather than its tyrannical master, he can hear her voice advising, admonishing, and illuminating.

Man has-all the resources he needs in himself. He can tap them by identifying them and manifesting them, and by sharing them with others. He is Sath, Chith and Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss Absolute); He is Shiva-Shakthi Swaruup (Form of divine-energy). When man extols himself, he is extolling God. Do not cultivate the conviction that you are mere men; be assured that you are destined for Divinity. When Divinity takes on the human form as described in the Raamaayana, the Mahaabhaaratha, and the Bhaagavatha, one has to interpret the actions as providing examples and lessons, and not as human stories enacted for entertainment.
Mind of man has to be a garden of flowers The five Paandava brothers are five qualities in human character, all observing the norms set by the eldest, which is the noblest and the most righteous. Raama is the example of the uncompromising adherent of the principle of righteousness, whatever be the temptation to bypass it. Raama was charged with a love that transcended all considerations of advantage, of caste or creed, and extended to animals and birds, human beings. Love is the key to open the doors locked by egoism and greed.

If you allow your behaviour towards others to be contaminated by contempt, scorn, cynicism or hatred, then, you are spoiling the fair name of India, its culture and tradition will not tolerate it. It has proclaimed that God is One, and that He is known and can be known through various names and forms. It has declared that God is installed in the heart of every being. Look at the emblem of the Sathya Sai Organisation! It tells you that the Hindhu, the Muslim, the Paarsi, the Buddhist and the Christian are all adoring the same God for the same consummation. The mind of man has to be a garden of many-coloured flowers, a Nandhanavana. Krishna will certainly delight in dancing there, and playing on the enchanting Flute in the bowers of that garden.
A heart saturated with love of God can never entertain thoughts of violence. It is sheer hypocrisy, to kneel before God and, then, force men to kneel before you. God is love, God is peace: God is strength. How can a person be in contact with God, and yet, be proud and acrimonious? Agitated and angry? Weak and vacillating? His claim to be in contact with God is only a laughable foible; it cannot be true. A tree is judged by its fruit. Leaders of peoples have to develop this universal feeling of love, not limited to political boundaries which change from decade to decade, or religious labels which are affixed and erased to suit temporary needs. The prayer that rose from millions in this country from all its temples, yajnasalas, theerthas, holy seafrosts, shrines and altars for centuries, has been Sarve janaah sukhino bhavanthu---"Let all the 'peoples of the world be happy and prosperous;" samastha lokaah sukhino bhavanthu---"May all the worlds have peace and prosperity." So, pray for all humanity, for the welfare and happiness, the peace and progress of Russia, China, Africa, Pakistan, all countries of the world, and all beings everywhere.
Hyderabad, April 1973
Love as thought is Truth. Love as action is Right living. Love as feeling is Peace. Love as understanding is Non-violence.
Sri Sathya Sai
16. The garden of God MAN has to recognise his indebtedness to society and his duty towards it; this is the best way to solve the troubles of the day. Attention is paid only to arguments and counter-arguments, propositions and oppositions, plans and programmes; the aim of the egocentred is more to win a verbal victory than achieve a valid target. No attempt is made to foster the social virtues of honesty, tolerance and cordiality. Society is the expression of Divinity into manifold phases, with its love, its ardour, its eagerness to comfort and console. A chance conglomeration of humans does not become a society. It has to be welded into a unity by the consciousness of kinship of God, by the sharing of each other's joys and sorrows, and the cultivation of Samarasa (empathy). The individual has to manifest through word and deed, the Aanandha (Divine bliss) inherent in him and in society.

Turning the beads of a rosary between the fingers or sitting erect contemplating the tip of the nose are only harmless ways of spending time; active participation in society in a spirit of dedication and surrender, conceiving all acts as acts of worship, all men as embodiments of the Supreme, is a more beneficial form of saadhana (spiritual discipline). For, there is no spot where

He is not, no object which is not He. For, as the Shruthi (holy scripture) declares, He willed that He become all this! Worship, adoration, and pilgrimage cannot be the end-all! The goal is the realization of "I am He, He is I." That alone can fill the heart with Bliss. Dharma fosters those who foster it

When you separate yourself as an individual, envy, resentment, jealousy and pride start defiling you. Love alone can weld you into kinship with all. You are Shivashakthi---the latent-potent, positive-negative, inert-alert principle. Be ever cognisant of this secret truth about yourself.

Dhivaakarla Venkataavadhaani recited verses welcoming Me, in which he piled praise on praise.

Of course, the style was sweet and the sentiment, sincere. When once you transcend the human scale, and reach out to the Divine, the eagerness to adore will drop off. You can evoke the Divine in you by adherence to dhama (righteousness); that is the message of the Mahaabhaaratha.

Weighed down by sorrow, Arjuna one day laid all the blame on his eldest brother Dharmaraaja. He said, "On account of you our dear mother is separated from us, our wife is disgraced in the open court, my only son is slaughtered by our wolfish cousins, our dynasty is forced into exile and our heritage is stolen before our very eyes."

Dharmaraaja replied, "When you blame me, remember you are blaming dharma; no one can ever suffer through dharma.

Dharma fosters those who foster it. The pain which Dharma inflicts is a blessing, it is a shower of joy. Since we have stuck to Dharma God will fight our battle and win victory for us."

To attain God, Love is enough

God is the embodiment of compassion. He watches for a grain of goodness or humility so that He can reward it with tons of Grace. In a certain temple for Shiva, the priest had silver basin with a hole in its base for water to drip continuously. He filled it with water and hung it over the Lingam (the idol of Shiva) so that the God who swallowed the poison which would have destroyed the Universe could be cooled and comforted! Even at night when the doors of the shrine were locked by the priest as he went home, the silver basin of water, was in its position.

So, a thief broke into the sacred apartment; his eyes were on the silver: he could not reach the rope that kept the basin in position; so, he climbed on the Lingam itself in order to take the costly booty down. Even as he was standing on the holy idol Shiva manifested Himself in all His glory before him, saying, "Son! I appreciate your surrender; you have cast on me your entire burdan!"

The thief prayed that Shiva may help him to secure the silver; there was no ladder or bench or any other article on which he could climb. So, the Lingam was his only refuge..

Once a Guru sent a pupil for further guidance to a mendicant in a Shiva temple. When he reached the temple, he found the fellow reclining in the central shrine with both his legs resting on the sacred Lingam. The pupil was naturally enraged at the man's insolence; when he spoke angrily against the behaviour, the man said, "Please lift my legs and place them where the Lingam is not." When he did so, there was a Lingam under the feet in the new position.

Wherever he deposited the man's legs, a Lingam rose to give them rest! That was the lesson the beggar taught him--God is everywhere; only win the vision to see Him so.

To attain God, feats of hard Saadhana are superfluous. Love is enough; avoid hating, envying or even disliking anyone. Put love into practice, through seva (selfless service). When the loveliness of the seed blooms, you have the flower. And God is the loveliness which blooms as mani In the Geetha the Lord has announced, "I am the Seed of all Beings"---

"Beejam maam sarva

bhoothaanaam." When the seed is immortality, the tree too is immortal, the flower and the fruit are immortal. When He is rasa (juice), sweetness and love, all His manifestations are sweet and loving. When He is light, nothing can be dark. When He is Chaithanya, Chith (Supreme, Awareness), nothing can be Jada (insentient), without awareness or intelligence or consciousness. The Universe is a pleasant garden You may pride yourselves on being God-minded and Godward- bound; but your pride proclaims that God is only on the circumference of your activity. You must be humble; you must not limit God to any particular Name and Form. How can you fix a label on God and compel Him to conform to your specifications.: Study the emblem of the Sathya Sai Organisation; it declares that all faiths feed the heart with aanandha, all faiths cleanse the mind of littleness, all faiths confer courage on the weak and the vacillating. The Universe around you is a pleasant garden full of charming patches of many-hued flowers filled with fragrance and nectarine elixir---each flower-bed being a Religion, which attracts the loyalty of millions of seekers. The garden too is God; God dances in that garden at His own handiwork, gladdening the flowers with the magic melody of the flute. Be full of joy and love; share that joy and love with all. If you utter "God, God," and inflict pain on man, you will be spumed as a cheat. You need not cry out God, God! But, if you confer joy on brother man, God will respond with His presence, though uninvited. There are, however, many in positions of authority-and influence who adore God and, at the same time, abhor mani They behave as if their God is a person of very limited intelligence who-can be easily deceived, who will. take their words at their face value and never look behind them for the motive and the. intention. Believe that God resides in all beings; speak such words, as would spread goodness, truth and beauty; do such acts as would promote the happiness and prosperity of all; pray that. all worlds have peace. Expand yourselves; do not contract into your own tiny individuality. Expand into Universal love, unshaken equanimity, and ever-active virtue. That is the Path which will bring out the Divinity in you to the fullest. Hyderabad, April, 1973 Swaami is always with you, in you and around you. When all differences are eradicated and devotees in Sai Organisations conduct themselves with selfless devotion, you will all realise that Swaami and you are one. Sri Sathya Sai 17. The ladder and the steps INDIA was the nursery of heroes who adventured into the realms of the spirit, and achieved victories against the forces of evil; they opened up the paths to God that are described in the texts of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion). India is the sacred land from where the Voice of the Vedhas (sacred scriptures) rang over the world. It is the land which still retains the splendour of Yoga (Divine communion), and the glory of Renunciation. But, every Indian has now to question himself whether he is aware of this fact and whether he is helping by his acts, words and thoughts to promote that glory and that splendour. One has to admit that the glory is being dimmed, the splendour is fast fading out. The Gaayathri Manthra (Vedhic prayer to illuminate the intellect), enjoined on all, because it is the crucial manthra (sacred formula) of the Vedhas, has become a ritual of holding the nose while mumbling illegible sounds. Praanaayaama (breath-control) and its later stage of Prathyaahaara (the control of the senses and of their listless pursuit of external pleasure) are discoverable only in dictionaries. Yama and Niyama (abstention from evil doing and various observances of devotion to God)---the first steps in spiritual discipline are not practised at all, even by those who claim to teach and guide. Members of the monastic order, who have vowed to detach themselves completely from worldly involvements and attachments are running about frantically; accumulating and investing money, with even greater fanaticism than householders. One wonders whether this is the same land that one reads about, the land that held high the ideals of the spirit. Shankara's mission to revitalise Hindhu Dharma With the return of Krishna to His abode after the incarnation interlude, the Age of Kali darkened the world. Many preceptors', saints and sages tried subsequently to remind the people of their heritage and guide them along the ancient path. Of these, Shankara, who realised the weakness of a dualistic interpretation of the Universe---and the need for a unifying philosophy, was the most effective. He was born in the village of Kaaladi, situated in the Kerala State. Initiated into the Gaayathri Manthra in his fifth year he mastered the Vedhas and their supplementary texts on grammar, logic, prosody, astrology, etc., and in his fourteenth year itself, he ventured forth on his mission of counteracting the forces of doubt, dissent and denial and establishing faith, wisdom and devotion throughout the land. He encountered many scholars reputed for their dialectical skill and convinced them of the validity of the non-dualistic basis of the subjective and objective worlds. He wrote commentaries on the Upanishaths (metaphysical scriptures), the Bhagavath Geetha (The Song-teaching of Lord Krishna) and the Brahma Suuthras (aphorisms on Supreme Spirit)---generally accepted as the authentic texts of the Hindhu faith. He dedicated his short life of 32 years to the revitalisation of the Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion).

The weapon to destroy the delusion When Shankara was residing at Vaaraanasi (Benares City) on the banks of river Ganga with his pupils, he used to visit the Pandiths in their own houses, and draw them into beneficial conversation on themes of philosophy. One day, when he went to a Pandith, he found him immersed in complicated rules of grammar. When asked why he had taken up the intensive study of grammar, he replied that it would easily fetch him a few pieces of silver. "If I am designed a Pandith, I can go to the home of some big Zamindaars, and hope to receive alms and offerings from them, for the upkeep of my large family," he said. Shankara advised him in appropriate terms, and charged him with self-confidence and courage.

Returning to his hermitage, Shankara wrote a verse summarising the advice he gave the poor struggling Brahmin householder:

Bhaja Govindham, Bhaja Govindham, Bhaja Govindham, Mooda Mathe, Sampraapthe Sannihithe Kaale Nahi Nahi Rakshathi Dukrn karane.

"Praise God, Praise God, Praise God, you fool, When death does knock at door, rules of grammar cannot save. Shankara exhorted his pupils to disseminate the ideal of this verse, and they too, responded with verses on the same lines, each of the 14 contributing one verse. Shankara added another twelve of his own, as well as four more verses about the transformation that the teaching would confer.

Thus, there are 31 verses in all, in the text called Bhaja Govindham or Moha Mudgaram. The latter name means, "The weapon with which delusion can be destroyed." Each one is a step in the ladder which lifts man into God.

The study of these verses and the inspiration derived from them will promote discrimination and detachment, and thus, prepare the mind for the vision of the Supreme. You have to be initiated into these disciplines now itself, when you are young and entering on the adventure of living, and so, I have decided to expound to you one verse a day, during this Summer Course.

"Those who deny the Aathma are fools" says Shankara. Shankara addressed these verses to "mooda mathi" (The foolish person). Now, who are these fools? He has given the answer in another context: "Naasthiko mooda uchyathe"---"Those who deny the aathma are fools." Those who assert and believe that "I am not this perishable body; I am not this feeble intellect; I am the undying, everlasting, all-knowing, all-inclusive Aathma" are few indeed. The vast majority assert and believe that "I am the moulder of my destiny, I am the captain of my ship. I choose my likes and dislikes, I fulfil my desires through my own efforts."

These are the fools. But, even this vast majority pay taxes in ordinary life for the water they use, the electricity they consume, the houses they live in, and the professions they are engaged in. Now, what tax are they paying to Him who provides them with the essential requisites for mere living---the Sun, the Moon, Fire, Water, Air, Space, etc? Those who do not recognise the giver, the provider, the principle, the person, they are the fools.

Scientists can weigh, measure, and analyse materials that already exist. They can, by means of permutations and combinations, put into currency strange forms and shapes from out of existing matter. But, they cannot create oxygen or hydrogen or any other thing anew. That can happen only through the Will of God. Without any matter originally supplied, no scientist can deal with things from the very beginning. They are helpless in the realm beyond earth, water, fire, air and space, the subject matter of the senses. Their activities are confined to nature, which is but the part-manifestation of the Divine.

The verse with which Shankara started off the Moha Mudgaram speaks of the moment of the approach of the end of life. This indicates that of all the fears of man, the fear of death is the fiercest as well as the most foolish. For, none can escape death, having committed the error of birth. To get rid of the wheel of birth and death, awareness of the undying unborn Aathma which is one's Reality is the only method available to man.

So, Shankara advises man to pray to Govindha. He refers to God as Govindha. Govindha means,

"He who is the Cowherd." Man is both an animal and divine being. He has risen from the animal level and is on the way to reveal his divinity. He should be vigilant that he does not slide into animal again. Man alone can rise into Godhood, for, he is equipped with the endowment needed for the achievement.

Brindhaavan, 21-5-1973

18. Friends you need

WHILE in this transient world, wading through joy and grief, man has sore need of some one of his kind to whom he can communicate his feelings, with whom he can share his discoveries and depressions, his moments of bliss and sorrow, to be by his side while trekking the hard road to truth and peace, encouraging and enthusing him towards the goal.

Who is one's true friend? Who is one's false, fake friend? It is clear that, as understood today, friendship and friends are far off the mark, of the ideal. Friends who can confer real counsel, comfort and consolation are precious gifts, rarely found today.

A friendship knit by monetary bonds is disrupted as soon as you ask the loan to be repaid. So, when you oblige your friend with a loan, the friendship too is broken at that very moment. How can friendship be cemented by words or by coins? Heart must understand heart, heart must be drawn to heart, if friendship must last. Friendship must bind two hearts and affect both of them beneficially, whatever may happen to either---loss or gain, pain or pleasure, good fortune or bad.

The bond must survive all the blows of fate, and be unaffected by time, place and circumstance.

Each must correct the other; for each knows that they come from sympathy and love. Each must be vigilant that the other does not slide from the ideal, cultivate habits that are deleterious, or hide thoughts and plans that are productive of evil. The honour of each is in the safe keeping of the other. Each trusts the other and places reliance on the other's watchful love. Only those deserve the name "friends"---who help in uplifting life, cleansing ideals, elevating emotions and strengthening resolves. Those who drag you into pomp, pedantry, paltry entertainment and petty pranks are enemies, not friends. Friends cannot be got by social status, financial squandermania, outer scintillation and verbal assertions. See into the very soul, the inner motives and motivator, the deeper aspirations and achievements, and then, yield your loyalty to such.

The friendship between Kuchela and Krishna

You might have heard of the friendship between Kuchela and his 'class-mate' Krishna. How could the friendship between these two survive the immense gap between their worldly positions and their spiritual status. Krishna was God Incarnate. Kuchela was a mere man. Krishna was a ruler, a king-maker, an unsurpassed hero, monarch, and preceptor.

Kuchela was so poor that he was ever at his wit's end to procure his next meal. They had studied together for a few years at the hermitage of the sage Sandeepani. That had sown the seed of friendship.

So, his wife sent him to Krishna, assuring him that he would not be turned from the door.

Kuchela agreed to proceed but he hesitated long to send word that he had come, even when the guardsmen enquired why he had come and who he was. How could he, a broken, bent, befogged beggar dare stand before the Lord in His palatial Hall with its jewelled throne, and announce himself as a 'friend'? He was aghast at his own audacity.

God only can be the true friend of man

But, all his fears melted away, when Krishna recognised him and came forward to receive him warmly and with evident joy. Krishna filled him with supreme bliss by His words. His acts of hospitality and His attitude of hearty welcome. Krishna also blessed his wife with enormous wealth and comfort, peace, prosperity, in quantity much more than ever she hoped for or prayed for. No one asked him for it; but, His love took that shape, His Grace awarded them the happiness. But, Kuchela was ever content with the friendship of Krishna; he never desired anything other than that. He was overwhelmed with delight when he experienced the compassion and love of the Lord.

The feeling of friendship must activate every nerve, permeate every blood-cell, and purify every emotional wave; it has no place for the slightest trace of egotism. You cannot elevate the companionship which seeks to exploit or fleece for personal benefit into the noble quality of friendship. Perhaps, the only friend who can pass this rigorous test, is God.

To understand and practise this noble emotion, the Bhagavath Geetha is an invaluable guide.

When Arjuna was dispirited and dejected, Krishna injected courage and a high sense of duty into him and helped him avoid disgraceful defeat. And, Arjuna, too like a good friend, took the advice in good spirit, with the full confidence that Krishna meant well by him. Why, we know how confident he was of the wisdom and power inherent in Krishna. When Krishna gave him the choice, "To help you in battle, you can have either my entire army or myself alone, unarmed and determined not to fight in spite of any provocation." And, Arjuna did not hesitate to decide which of these two he wanted. He chose the unarmed Krishna, and prayed that He might be his charioteer, during the days when he rode into the field. Friends who stand witness for ages

Long ago, there was a person who had three friends. Quite by accident, he was charged for some crime and a warrant was issued against him by the Court. He approached one friend and asked him to bear witness to his innocence. He said, "I will not move out of this house; I can help you only from within this." The second friend said, "I can come only upto the porch of the Court. I will not enter the witness box." The third friend said, "Come, I shall speak for you, wherever you want me to." The first friend is the 'property and possessions' which can bear witness only from within the house. The second is 'the kinsmen, the members of the family, who come as far as the cemetery but would not accompany the person to the Judgement Seat. The third, friend is the fair name earned by one's 'virtues and service,' which persist even after the death and burial; they stand witness for ages, and announce the innocence and greatness of the individual. They decide the nature of the next birth too.

Young as you are, you must make efforts to acquire good friends and keep them. Do not postpone this task, listening to some elders who advise that the path of spirituality can well be trodden later when you have retired from active life. They say that you can take on hand the Bhagavath Geetha, when you have grown old. But, that advice is like telling a nation that it can afford to wait till war is declared, to train an army to counter the enemy. Long years of preparation are needed to have an army that can meet any 'contingency; otherwise, if arms are distributed to the untrained, it spells disaster even to the persons wielding the arms.

Have God as your unfailing guide and friend

The good deeds and thoughts that one welcomes and entertains during the years of life will stand in good stead, firm, like a good friend, when one is nearing the end. So, you, young men and women, must resolve to engage yourselves in acts that promote your peace and progress and the peace and progress of all mankind. Do not damage your future by pursuing temporary benefits and selfish aggrandizement. Yearn for and earn good friends, who will keep you on an even keel.

Have above all, God, as your unfailing guide and friend. The heart of the Gopees had struck deep roots in the love of Krishna and when Akrura came to Gokul to take Krishna with him to Mathura, the Gopees struggled heroically, to keep Him with themselves. They held on to the steeds of the chariot; they gripped the wheels and sought to prevent them from moving.

Friendship is the expression of unshakeable love, love that is noble, pure, free from desire or egoism. I bless you that you may have such friendship from others and that you too make others happy by granting this holy type of friendship.

Brindhaavan, 24-5-1973

19. Light on lights

SOME days in the year are marked out as Holy days, in the calendars of all human communities.

They are distinguished by greater attention being paid for worshipping deities, propitiating the deceased, praying to the forces of nature and similar elevating spiritual exercise. They are occasions to remind man of the God without and the God within. Such holy days are prescribed and observed in India also, along with other festival days. One such festival is Dheepaavali, the Festival of Lights, which people are celebrating today. Dheepaavali means a garland or festoon of lights, the most characteristic way in which the festival is observed by all.

Illumination, such as is done today, is a sign of victory, or triumph over some foe or some obstacle to happy living. It is a way of expressing one's joy and attracting the attention of others to one's achievement of unexpected happiness. Festivals of which illumination is a part are found among the Parsis, the Christians and the Muslims. They are celebrated in Malaysia, Nepal, Japan and a host of other countries.

There are countless legends which seek to explain the origins of Dheepaavali. In Northern India, it is believed to be the Day when Sri Raama was crowned Emperor after his return from exile. In Kerala, it is believed to be the day when Emperor Bali, who was allowed to visit the erstwhile kingdom just for one day in the year, is welcomed by his grateful subjects. The Lord had trampled him down into the nether regions, as a punishment for his egoistic expansive programme of conquest; but, He melted a little when he pleaded for mercy, and allowed him to return to earth for just one day out of three hundred and sixty-five days. On that day his subjects could welcome him, with illumination and fire-works. Discard worn-out prejudices on Dheepavali Day. The most widely current among the legends refers to the demon Naraka whom Lord Krishna, accompanied by His Consort, Sathyabhaama or Sathya, destroyed in battle, this day. Naraka was the son of Mother Earth, as the story goes, of Bhoomaatha. She asked for a boon from the Lord, that the Day should be observed, in his memory, as a day of light or joy and the sharing of joy by one and all. Therefore, hundreds of tiny lamps are lit this evening and kept in rows before and within every home in India; but, few are the lamps that are lit in the cavity of the heart to destroy the darkness that lies thick within. Deepavali is the day when old clothes are discarded and new ones worn; when the home and its precincts are swept clean, given a new look, and made to appear fresh and fine. Flowers are arranged in lovely designs in each room and in the courtyard; festoons of green add charm to every door. But, even while doing all this, attention has to be paid to the discarding of worn-out prejudices, the adoption of new habits of love and mutual respect, the freshening of one's attitude towards one's kith and kin, brothers and sisters of all creeds and castes, the hanging of festoons of friendship and fraternity over the door sill of the heart. This will make the Festival really meaningful and fruitful; it will be saved from the calumny of being an occasion for only pomp and barren hilarity. Profound meaning of Narakaasura Legend. Who exactly is this Naraka, the demon Naraka-asura, let us inquire. He is described as a tyrant, who had no reverence towards elders and saints, who was afflicted with a severe type of landhunger, who looted and plundered unchecked, who carried away princesses and damsels by the hundred and threw them into prison without any compunction, and who never repented for any of his crimes and sins. When the good men of the world appealed to Lord Krishna for succour, He invaded his kingdom, laid siege to his capital City, and overwhelming his forces, allowed His Queen, Sathya, to slay him on the battlefield. This legend has a profound under-current of meaning, which you should not miss. Naraka is an a-sura (a demonic person). His City is named, Praak-iyothhisha-pura---praak means, the previous, iyothi means, light; and sha means, forgetting and ignoring. So the City's name means: the city of those who have laid aside the previous or ancient light. That is to say, the city of those who are ignorant of Aathmic splendour. No wonder they are demons. No wonder they were lustful, full of hatred, greed, envy and egotism. They had become so lost in their sins that Lord Krishna did not vouchsafe to give them the honour of being killed by his Hands. He directed Sathya to destroy them. Yes. Ignorance so fundamental and so deep can be destroyed only by the sword of Sathya (Truth). The lamp is also the symbol of the Aathma. Egoism is of earth, earthy; not of heaven, heavenly. So Naraka is the son of Earth. And, he is called Naraka, Nara means, man, who knows his manas (mind), who practises manana (discrimination of reflection on what he has heard and what he has been taught). But Naraka which means hell, is the name appropriate to one who believes he is the body and toils to cater to its needs and its clamour. When man grows in physical strength, economic power, mental alacrity, intellectual scholarship and political authority and does not grow in spiritual riches, he becomes a danger to society and a calamity to himself. He is a Naraka to his neighbours and his kin. He sees only the many, not the One; he is drawn by the scintillating manifold into the downward path of perdition. A-suras (demons) have another name in Samskrith Nakthancharas---those who move about in the dark. This is a fair description of their pathetic condition. They have no light to guide them; they do not recognise that they are in the dark; they do not call out for light; they are unaware of the light. Their intellect has become the bondslave of their passions and their senses, instead of establishing itself as their master. When at last, truth appears before them and overwhelms them, they recognise the One and merge happily in it. The lamp is not merely the symbol of the knowledge to Truth. It is also the symbol of the One, the Aathma that shines in and through all this multiplicity. Just as with one lamp, a thousand lamps can be lit and the One is as bright as ever in spite of the thousands deriving light from it, so too, the Aathma (soul-spirit) illumines the jeeva (individual self) and shines in and through them, without undergoing any diminution in its splendour. The Aathma is the cause; all else are effects.

The lesson that Dheepavali teaches man Naraka sought to act freely, as his emotions and passions dictated.
But, the Samskrith word used for this kind of license has another and deeper meaning: Sva-iccha, one's desire, means, the desire, if at all, only for merger absorbing the sparks that have emanated from it, the waves that play upon its surface. The Upanishaths call upon man to roam about in the 'jungle of life as the King of Beasts, the Lion, and not as panic-stricken cowardly sheep ashamed to lift its head. Face the six foes that are ferociously gnawing the heart of man - lust, anger, attachment, pride, hatred, greed---and be Man, Nara, not Naraka, who cringes before these foes and tries to propitiate them by yielding to their demands, That is the lesson that Dheepaavali teaches.
The Vedhic Prayer is, "Thamaso maa jyothir Gamaya," ---"From darkness lead me, O Lord, into light." Lead me from the blindness of ignorance into the vision of the truth. Cleanse the mind and the Truth will be reflected therein. This is not as difficult as some people imagine. The tiny ant can travel hundred miles, if only it puts its legs forward and starts. Faith and steadiness will achieve the rest of the journey. But, if an aeroplane that can fly faster than sound does not rise from the tarmac, it can only be where it is. Each one must first decide on what is worth living for and striving for. For this, one has to meet and converse with elders who have travelled along the same route; one has to taste the bliss of realisation that their lives express. And, inspired by their example, one must practise what they prescribe, with single-minded confidence.
Lesson taught by careers of Naraka and Bali
When man fails to use his attainments for the welfare of others he becomes a narakaasura (hellish demon). But, when in a competitive race for individual glory, he spends billions on getting to the Moon and bringing rocks from its crust, instead of feeding millions who starve down below and promoting the prosperity of backward nations, he is only condemning himself.
Even the best of things can be misused by men. Raavana, Shisupaala, Kamsa, and other demonish persons mentioned in the Indian puraanas (ancient legends) and epics had vast scholarship, enormous economic and military power and even immense yogic and occult skills won by years of austerity, and disciplined living. But, they could not earn one skill, the skill to suppress the ego, and so, they became too obstinate, too obstructive and too dangerous to be allowed to live and prosper. The lesson taught by the careers of Naraka and of Bali is that man should be master of his ego if he is to succeed in the art of successful living.

Dheepaavali is also a Day dedicated to the Goddess of Riches, called, Dhanalakshmi. They celebrate the day as Dhanalakshmi Puuja day in many States of India. Newspapers highlight the celebrations with big headlines. But, riches when one comes by them, have to be revered as something given on trust, and must be used for the amelioration of the wants of society, and not for personal aggrandizement. When people use it for parading their wealth, they become ludicrous specimens of humanity. How can wealth and scholarship shine, except against the background of virtue and humility? Riches may come or riches may go; scholarship may be acquired or may not be acquired; even joy may come and go. Whatever happens, man must be unmoved, he must not swerve from the path that he has chosen towards the goal.
Sai's message on Festival of Lights There was a merchant once, who, while walking through the streets of Benares, was suddenly confronted by two sisters who were frantically quarelling over the issue, who was fairer. They were none other than Dhanalakshmi and her famous sister Dharidhralakshmi, the Goddess of poverty. They stopped the merchant and compelled him to agree to be the judge; they pressed him to pronounce who was the fairer of the two. The merchant feared to say that Dhanalakshmi was fairer, for then, the Goddess of Poverty might inflict her boons on him; he feared to declare that Dhanalakshmi was the fairer, for then her sister, Dhanalakshmi might deprive him of her favour. So he devised a stragem, to save his skin. He asked that the sisters walk a few steps, forward and backward, in front of him; he stood silent for a while watching their slow deliberate comings and goings, and then, he asked them to come near him, in order to hear his judgement.

He said, "Dhanalakshmi is fairer when she comes towards me; Dharidhralakshmi looks fairer when she goes away from me; How then can I give a definite verdict?" This was a clever reply, framed to escape punishment. But you should not change the face of truth to please people; utter what you have in mind, act according to the words you utter. That is the safest, the easiest and the most correct procedure. That is how a self-respecting man should behave. Nothing is more right than truth. Do not play false to the God in your being and led into evil through fear or greed. March along, straight, never deviating towards falsehood or trickery.
Do not be attached by the glamour of name and form; seek the Aathma, with one-pointed zeal.
This is the Message I give you on this festival of lights.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, 25-10-1973
You should recognise the truth that man's life should consist of making the journey from the position of 'I' to the position of 'We'.
If all the time you simply stay, sit in the place of 'I' you will remain where you are.
This creation is like the bridge which connects man with God. 'I' is one hill. 'God' is another hill. The bridge between the two is the aspect of creation. If you break and destroy the bridge, you can never reach the destination.
I am hoping that you plunge into society and do service to society and thereby use the bridge to reach God.
Sri Sathya Sai
20.
20. Body without heart THE Ocean is a vast mystery. It is boundless and as old as time. It has, in its womb, chaotic whirlpools, raging currents, and it has a face with furious moods. No one can hope to sail over it from one shore to another land-bank, without a sturdy reliable boat.
So too, man requires the sturdy boat of Divine Grace to cross the raging ocean of this samsaara (ever-changing, ever agitated flow of life). This Ocean too is vast and full of mystery. It has its unplumbed depths! It tosses man about from birth to death and again from death to birth; it inflicts on him many uprisings and downfalls, many illnesses and morbidities; in it roll the waves of desires and resolutions; it frightens man by its monstrous denizens, greed; it draws the reason of man into the whirlpools of doubt.
To equip oneself with the Ocean-worthy boat of Grace, one has to develop in himself the qualities of faith and discipline. One has to clarify and purify the chiththa (past impressions).
Time is the gift that God has blessed man with, for this purpose. So, man should use it as an instrument for the clarification and the purification. Contemplating the glories of God, discovering His presence in beauty, goodness and truth seen anywhere, meditating on His Form, repeating His Name---by these means the process can be made successful. Of course, these are not possible without virtuous living and kindness towards all beings.

Thus, the mind will be rendered harmless, beneficent and even of great help in one's spiritual pilgrimage. Through the purified mind, one can transmute himself into the divine. Maanava (human) can become Maadhava (God) Himself. For, it is the destiny and the right of every human to attain that status and immerse himself in the limitless Aanandha (Divine Bliss) that it confers.
Path of devotion will cleanse the mind All the religions emphasise the importance of devotion and dedication to the Supreme Sovereign.
The means of reaching that stage may be different; the description of the ecstasy that one can experience in the final stage and all along the path may be different; for it is beyond all attempts at description. Bhakthi maarga (path of devotion to attain liberation), which is only another name for this devotion and dedication, will certainly cleanse the mind. And, the mind will be illumined into divinity.
Man has fallen into ignorance, egoism, and greed, because he has forgotten his real nature, which is unaffected by loss or grief. In truth, man is the embodiment of all the great virtues---love, peace, righteousness and truth. He has not realised this; he runs after low vulgarising pleasures, and so, entangles himself in falsehood, injustice, and violence. He has to cure himself of these by the remedies of thyaaga (voluntary sacrifice) and yoga (renunciation and self-control). And, along with these remedies, he must regulate his ways of living and follow the regimen of faith and devotion.
As butter is inherent in milk, God is immanent in the Universe. When it is churned, the butter separates itself and becomes cognisable. So too, by means of love and the discipline of the recitation of the name, God can be concretised. Temples in villages are the places where such concretisation has been effected. The temple is for the village as the heart is for the body. In fact, the temple is conceived on the basis of the body, being the temple man carries about him. A body with no heart, a village with no temple and a tank with no water are all three without function or value. So you must maintain and foster the temple in your village as carefully and as constantly as you attend to your own heart and its condition.

When you belch, you get the taste of the food you have eaten; the quality of the bread depends upon the quality of the flour; as the steadfastness in faith is, so is the devotion; as the devotion is, so is the realisation. As your saadhana (spiritual effort) is, so will be the truth revealed to you.

Brindhaavan, 15-11-1973

Religion is three-fourths character. Only those who preserve character can be pronounced truly religious.

Sri Sathya Sai

21. Choose your God

THE times have gone awry. Relations between man and man, man and God, man and the human community; and man and those entrusted to rule over groups of men are getting tainted by hatred and anger. The people of this land are accepting wrong as right, and discarding right as wrong; they are journeying blindly along wrong roads. And, they are proud of this too; they believe they are progressing!

Happiness and misery are the consequences of the attributes one cultivates and foster---the three chief ones being Saathwik (selfless equanimous and tolerant), the raajasik (marked by activity, ambition, passion, emotion) and the thaamasik (marked by indolence, ignorance, inactivity, sloth, dullness). When Saathwik predominates, one is happy; when Raajasik predominates, one is discontented. When Thaamasik qualities are supreme, there can be no joy and no happiness.

When the attributes pursue the path of attachment and pleasure, man is bound to the wheels of pain-joy, death-life. If they seek liberation and simplicity, they lead him to love, light and freedom from the birth-death wheel. Man is today caught in doubt and deviation; he does not know which road to follow, and with what preparation. He loses his precious heritage, degrades himself, and denies his Nature which is really Divine. Mind has to be regulated and controlled by reason. People determine the nature of the Divine through the categories of logic and dialectics. But, intellect cannot grasp it; reason cannot delve into it. For, both are shaped by one's prejudices and predispositions. We appreciate only what we like; we see only what we would like to see. "When prayer is answered and one gets what one desires, God is real; when they are not answered, God is a fake, a figment of the imagination!" Arjuna acclaimed Krishna as the omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient God, when the foe was defeated, day after day. But when his son Abhimanyu was killed in the conflict, he raved in his grief that Krishna had not guided him properly and guarded him efficiently. His mind wavered with every wind of fortune. To many, the mind is master of the intellect also. One must be vigilant and preserve the impartiality of the instrument called reason or intellect. Clarify reason; then it will reveal God everywhere, even in you. Once you accept God as the core of the Universe and yourself have that faith strong and steady.

Of course, it is difficult in the atmosphere of "faithlessness" to light the lamp in one's heart and keep it burning, straight and sturdy, without falter or flicker. Today, the wife has no faith in her husband, the husband has no faith in his wife; sons doubt the father; father suspects the sons; students have no faith in the teachers, teachers cannot rely on their students; so, how can faith grow in one field only, the field of religion? This calamity has happened since man has allowed his reasoning faculty to be blunted by passion and prejudice. Krishna says in the Geetha, "I am Buddhi (intellect) among the faculties." "I shall confer the discipline of Buddhi on you," He tells those devoted to Him. Reason is the instrument by which the mind has to be regulated and controlled; it should not be subordinated to the whims of the mind. Reasons for God's incarnations. Talking of the Geetha, I shall mention one problem that might confront you therein. Krishna declares, "Samoham Sarvabhuutheshu" "I am equal in all beings. I behave equally with all. I have no love or hate, no partiality or prejudice. Joy and grief are brought on by you on yourselves, not by me on you, through attachment or want of it." When such is His declaration a doubt may arise in your minds' Why did He also announce that He would be incarnating in every age, in order to foster the good and punish the wicked? How is it that He talks of good and bad men? Does it not mean that He likes some and dislikes others? Are not all parts of Him? Are not the waves parts of the ocean? Yes. All are parts of Him. The hand is yours; the fingers are yours; the nails are yours. Why then do you pare and trim the nails? Urine and faeces are in you, of you, but yet you have to get rid of them, to maintain health. Under certain circumstances, one has to cut off a limb in order to save the body. In fact, the Kauravas were dangerous viruses that had caused a spreading wound; Krishna had to operate them off, through major surgery, with Arjuna as His 'assistant operator,' in order to save the 'body politic' of Bhaarith.

When one is sunk in the slime of 'desire' one cannot distinguish with clarity between 'good' and 'bad.' In order to achieve this, the intellect has to be pure and clear, sharp and straight. There should not be the slightest trace of egotism, envy or greed in the make-up of man; for these will drag the arguments at a tangent. Vacillating minds, wandering eyes---these cannot help the intellect to decide correctly. Give importance to ideals of tolerance and love

When one chooses a life-partner now-a-days, the first consideration is paid to external beauty and charm. Next, the economic position is taken as the basis. How rich is he or she? How much does he or she earn? Questions like, how far they are educated, what is the social status of the families to which they belong are asked later. Carried off by mere external frills and foppery, people enter into wedlock, and get entangled in misery or a destructive 'family life. The family cannot be stable if it is built on such slender foundation. Prime importance has to be paid to the fundamental requisites of a good character, high ideals of tolerance and forbearance, love and service. When beauty fades or wealth wanes, the bond too becomes less strong.

It is same with the God whom you choose, adore, and yearn to live with. You should not choose God for the benefits He can shower on you Do not expect God to satisfy your worldly or materials ambitions; and when they are not realised, do not desert the Path towards God. "Baba, appear in my dream this night," you demand, and if it does not happen He is not Sai Baba, he is Rai Baba (stone Baba) and you go in search of some other God who will be at your beck and call. You must hold on. to your faith, whatever might happen, success or failure, appointment or disappointment. When God is your very core, irremovably fixed in your consciousness, there will be no room for elation or dejection. God is bliss, and when God is the undying spring in you, you will have bliss forever.

The two paths of Bhakthi Yoga

Man has to engage himself in activity, for his upkeep, as well as for the sake of happiness. But he has to choose his activity intelligently and without over-involvement in its consequences. Use the activity to earn what is really good. Seek something supreme, something of the highest value, something that is beyond diminution and decline--that is true bhakthi (devotion). Bhakthi is the love and longing directed to the attainment of such a-goal. The means adopted for this are Karma (activity). They are known as Karma Yoga; for Karma becomes Karma Yoga, when activity is disciplined, dedicated and demarcated with skill. True love directed towards God can reveal His reality, and grant the highest Inaana (Supreme Wisdom).

A tree has a trunk and the trunk branches far and wide, into boughs, with leaves and flowers. Karma Yoga is the trunk for the tree of life; the branches, leaves and the fragrant flowers symbolise the Bhakthi Yoga; and the ripe fruit and the sweetness, therein, is the Inaana Yoga, the Wisdom. If the tree yields no fruit and if the fruit is not sweet, then, it could as well not grow at all.

Bhakthi can flow along two paths- Saguna Bhakthi and Nirguna Bhakthi. When' you feel that God is far away, far higher, far beyond you and when you plead for mercy, petition for Grace, and pray for boons, it is Saguna---you adore Him as Lord and Master, as Guardian and Saviour; you go through the ceremonials of praise, propitiation and prostration, submission and service.

But when you practise the discipline of seeing Him in all beings, as the core of every cell or atom, alive and aware, and experience Unity with all Creation (for Creation is but His body and you are also in it and of it) then, it is Nirguna. The Nirguna is the contemplation on the sugar; the Saguna is the adoration of some one sugar doll, which has caught your fancy and attracted your love and loyalty. Among the ceremonials we have the yaina (sacrificial rite), the chief feature described in the Vedhas. Meaning of rites performed in Yaina

An important rite in the Vedhic Yaina is called soma-pa. In order to grasp the tuner significance of the Vedhic or other ceremonials, one has to spend some thought on symbolism. For example, let us take this Soma-pa itself. Pa means 'drinking' and the rite is generally supposed to indicate the drinking of a juice called soma. No! Soma means the Moon; and the Moon cannot be swallowed or drunk by man. It also means the 'mind' ---"the changing mind that waxes and wanes, is never the same for long," That is why the Vedhas say that the mind was mothered by the Moon. So, drinking the Moon means the process by which the mind is controlled, made defunct and harmless. That is the purpose of the Yajna---the sacrifice of the whims of the mind for gaining the realm of the Universal Eternal Truth. With the mind left intact, no Yajna is fruitful, for it has a thousand tricks by which it can drag you into perdition. Fix the mind on the name (the sound symbol) of the Lord; then, it cannot wander away. The Divine is the flame of the lamp ever burning in the altar, namely the body. Keep the flame safe from the guffs of wind, namely the gusts of passion and desire, that blow from all quarters. Sit in a quiet place, away from crowded groups of men or sensations or thoughts that distract. When you have reached the stage when you can be wholly engrossed in the Name and the Form it represents, isolating yourself from distraction is not required. But, that does not mean that you can parade your spiritual practices in the market place as some crazy people do now. Do not yearn for approbation and appreciation from the public. Pray that God may approve, accept and appreciate your toddle and your prattle. Soak every moment in Love, in God. Cleanse your emotions, passions, impulses, attitudes, reactions. That is the essence of spiritual discipline, as laid down in all 'faiths. Examine your mind, your thoughts; do not seek the faultridden person. See only purity. Speak ill of none; and if, you slip into slander, repent and resolve not to give vent to the habit another time. Do not humiliate any one; respect persons for the good in them. Their grief at your behaviour will haunt you during your last moments. Let every act of yours stand as your credential when you quit the world. Let no single act be a drag, or a debit. Soak every moment in Love, that is to say, in God. Of what avail is it to spend hours in dhyaan (meditation), if, when you rise and move amongst men, you spread anger, inflict resentment by your words and deeds? The Geetha asks you to be 'sathatham yoginah'---"ever controlled, ever restrained, ever yoked with the Divine." So, be vigilant, be steady, be earnest. The steady person earns wisdom. By the absence of careful tending, a spark can be nursed into a huge conflagration; by vigilant care, even a conflagration can be reduced to a splutter.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1973

22. Gurus---not teachers

EDUCATION confers humility; endows one with an authority to command that will entitle one to affluence. With the help of this affluence, charity and compassion can be made fruitful, and by this means, happiness in this world and peace in the next can be won. Education is thus a great constructive force for mankind. But, reformers and reconstructionists have tinkered--so much with the process of education that it has now been reduced to a caricature of itself. The effectiveness of the educational system, and the boons it could confer on man have been ignored and neglected; the name is now given to the art 'of collecting information of the objective world.

The far more important task of transforming the nature of man into the divine is given up, as beyond its ken.

The difference between the ancient ideals of education and the modern practices is appalling.

Today, the educational process is denied to the aspirant, if he fails to pay his fees; the teacher too feels that he has no duty to teach, if in a certain month he is not paid his salary. Students pay for being taught; teachers are paid for the teaching they do. Money decides what is taught and how it is learnt. "Pay and receive; be paid and give." That is the bond between the teacher and the taught. "Love, reverence, affection"---these have no place in the transaction. How then can education be fruitful? Gokak said just now that when teachers love the children, they will be rewarded by the love of the children who sit around them. Now they are loved for the sake of the money they bring, and so, the relationship is artificial and without roots in the heart.

Heirs to the richest cultural heritage

The teacher and the pupil will both be immersed in joy only when Love that does not calculate the reward binds them together. When material gain is the goal, the joy based is on matter and does not thrill the mind. It cannot be pure, steady and sincere. As teachers of the Baala Vikaas classes throughout the country, you do not look forward to monetary or material benefits, and so, you have ample opportunity to make the child's heart and intellect blossom, through the rays of Love. Let Me tell you that most teachers today have specialised in western types of training, and so, they have lost their moorings in our own culture, and so are unaware of the deeper springs of the spirit.

They have been rendered materialistic, worldly, and egoistic. They are caught up in the pursuit of sensual pleasure and in the earning of money. They do not know that real education consists in helping the child to manifest the Divinity latent in him. Remember that the children who come to you are all heirs to the richest cultural heritage that the world can give. They are the 'Children of Immortality' extolled as such in the ancient texts by sages and scholars of this land. Do not turn them into experts in mathematics, unable to add up a simple domestic bill; scholars in the geography of America, but, unable to direct a pilgrim who desires to know in which direction Kaashi lies; prodigies in algebra who are helpless when asked to define the area of their own rooms; past masters in drill and gymnastics, but, all at sea, when requested to sit in the Padhmaasana posture; proficient in Botany, but, ignorant of the uses of the common Thulsi plant, found in the courtyard of every Indian home! They can draw realistic pictures of dogs and foxes, but, their hand-writing remains an illegible scribble. How can we expect that Indian culture will be preserved and fostered by these products of our educational system? The teachers who have brought them to this pass, and the educational administrators who divised the system are both equally to blame. Be aware of the high purpose of education. Correction of these faults must start with the teachers; they must become aware of the high purpose of education, and the goal to which it must guide the children of the land. I know that great enthusiasm prevails today among both the pupils and teachers of our Baala Vikaas classes, for the spiritual ideals cherished in this land since ages. Nevertheless, I must say that there is a great and urgent need for you teachers to receive training in the methods of child education. For example, when teaching the recitation of bhajans or poems or hymns, you have to pay attention to the correct enunciation of each sound, the correct pronunciation of each letter; for, otherwise, the meaning is liable to be warped out of recognition. The three R's are most neglected to-day. In olden times, teachers took particular care to explain to the pupils the origins and roots of each new word, even of words like Sah and Thwam. They taught, not only the meaning of the word, but, delved into its roots, and opened up before the pupil a vast vista of related words and a huge expanse of meaningful vocabulary. Since words in Indian languages get transformed when written or pronounced in conjunction with other words, there is a duty cast on you to teach how they are to be separately recognised and identified. Boys may write Raamunithoka pivarudu itlaniye (meaning, "Raama's tail, Pivara spoke thus," (which is absurd), instead of Ramunitho kapivaarudu itlaniye, meaning, "With Raama, the Lord of monkeys spoke thus," (which is quite correct). The word, santha pakodeelu, which I once used to indicate the error involved when people desert the true path and pursue degrading objective pleasures, which I compared to the pakodeelu (savouries) sold in santha (village markets during fairs and festivals), for they attract by their colour, have ruinous components and destroy health. Kasturi who did not know much Thelugu, divided the word into santhapa and kodilu, making the meaning absurd, for kodilu means fowls, and shanthapa, like pivarudu, has no meaning at all, being a mere jumble of sounds! Unless training is given in reading aloud, with concurrent attention to the meaning of the words and phrases, such mistakes are bound to recur. The three R's are the skills most neglected today. Writing has also to be taught well, for the knowledge of the correct form of each letter has to be mastered by all. Or else, even here, a tiny slip might change a sublime idea into ridiculous jargon. Rishikoti, when written wrongly in Thelugu, as a consequence of the omission of a single upward curve was once mis-shaped into 'bushcoat' and the whole sentence was rendered ridiculous thereby! Scrupulous care and steady attention alone can make the pupils avoid such errors. Study of books that is worthwhile for children. One point I have to emphasise here is, that you should be careful, while handling some books being published for school use by so-called scholars, at the present time. They cast doubts on the truth of great epics like the Raamaayana, and assert that Dhasharatha and Raavana did not exist in authentic history. They characterise them as representatives or symbols of opposing Cultures, the Aryan and. the non-Aryan, and sow the seeds of factionalism and hatred. By such writings, children begin to doubt the very foundations of goodness, truth and beauty; they are confused while deciding on fight conduct and behaviour, right ideals and ways of living.

You must examine every story or account that you place before the children from the point of view of individual faith and social harmony. Does this lead the child to a better, more harmonious, a more God-oriented life? That is the question you should ask yourself. Prahlaadha has beautifully summed up this principle, in the verse he utters, in the Bhaagavatha, while advising his playmates on the disciplines that should be welcomed. "The study of books that describe the Glory of God is the study that is worth-while. The preceptor who tells us about the Glory of God is the preceptor to be sought after and revered. The father who directs you to approach God is the father who deserves the reverence and obedience of the children, not the others."
Hills and mountains are overlaid with rock and boulder, the sculptor gathers them, and shapes each of them into something useful and beautiful, depending upon the nature and characteristics of the stone. Out of one boulder, the artisan might carve a huge mortar and pestle to be kept in the corner of the kitchen of a populous home. Out of another the sculptor might produce a rough hewn gargoyle being incorporated into a building as an eerie object to ward off the evil eye! A third stone might get transformed into a charming little danseuse to embellish the shelf of a museum. Another stone, catching the eye and attention of a skilled sculptor might be elevated into the idol of a Divine Manifestation, fit to be installed in a temple where it receives the adoration of millions for generations.
Parents have important roles in children's education Though they were the progeny of one peak, each has a different destiny, depending upon the care and consecration bestowed on it by the sculptor. Teachers are the sculptors who shape the rocks into things of beauty and significance, of utility and inspiration. They study the pupils, their nature and equipment, and decide on their roles in society, their paths and the stages in their progress.
But, it must be pointed out that the sculptor or teacher is not the only factor, to be reckoned with, in the process of education. The mother and father of the child too have important roles in the process. The positive and the negative must both meet in order to produce the electric current;

even God needs the yearning and the endeavour of the devotee to fulfil His Will to save him from perdition. You may have flowers, and a length of string and a needle too; but, without the garland-maker, how can the flowers be strung on the string? You may have a lamp, oil and wick; but you can get light only when someone strikes a flame and lights the lamp. So too, the teacher and the pupil have to be brought to each other and encouraged to learn and teach, to share lovingly their knowledge and experience, by the parents, so that education might proceed and the child inherit the heritage left by its forefathers.
The teacher must win the reverence of the pupil by showering on him his Love; the pupil must win the Love of the teacher by showering on him reverence and affection. It is a mutual transaction, a sharing of the emotions of the heart. How can a proper congenial atmosphere for study and teaching be built on a foundation of doubt and hatred? Nowadays, the atmosphere is polluted by the teachers' fear and suspicion, and the hostility and audacity of the students. There is no Love to lubricate the relations between the teacher and the taught.
The Guru is equal to God Himself
We have heard the Guru being praised as equal to God Himself. Gokak quoted the shlokha (verse) where the Guru is referred to reverentially as Brahma, the first of the Trinity entrusted with Creation; as Vishnu, the second of the Trinity entrusted with the preservation and protection of Creation; and as Maheshwara, the last of the Trinity, charged with destruction and dissolution.
This description is symbolically correct, as we can see when we analyse the work which the Teacher or Guru is expected to carry out. The Guru sows the seeds of virtue, of wisdom, and of faith in the heart of the pupil. He is, therefore, Brahma, of the nature of the Creator. He is like the farmer who plants saplings in the well-prepared soil of his field. But the farmer does not sit with folded hands there-after. He takes incessant care to see that the saplings grow vigorously and well, and he is vigilant to water the growing crops and feed them with fertilisers at the appropriate stages of growth. This is the role of Vishnu so far as education and the educator are concerned. The Guru cannot sit back and silently watch the fate of the pupil, after the first few lessons. He has to guide the pupil at every step, foster and encourage good habits, sound reasoning and valid emotions, and act as Vishnu, the second- of the Trinity.

Teachers must inspire high qualities in their pupils

The Guru has also the duty cast on him, to watch every step of the pupil, and warn him off, when he takes false step, or develops a bad habit, or entertains a deleterious doubt. Like the farmer who has to be vigilant against the growth of weeds or the upsurge of pests, the Guru too must be ever alert to destroy the pests of vice and the weeds of sloth and unsteadiness. The word 'teacher' cannot denote these high roles; it can mean only those, who transmit information, and train in skills. I direct that Baala Vikaas teachers should hereafter be known by the vastly more appropriate name of Guru, so that you may be conscious always of the spiritual role which you have taken on, and its responsibilities and value. You are the lamps from which their tender hearts must receive Light and Love. By your adherence to truth, righteousness, peace and love, you have to inspire these qualities in the children that come to you and the homes from where they come.

There are many who shiver at the prospect, when they contemplate the future of this great country. You should never entertain such doubts and fears, for you are the builders of that future and you know that it will be glorious. The Baala Vikaas children whom you are guiding and inspiring, will be the leaders of tomorrow in this land. The virtues you implant in them, the counsel you are providing them and the examples you place before them will remain carved in their memories and transform their outlook and behaviour in the days to come. Ask any one assembled here whether they can bring back to memory the book that he read this morning; ninety five per cent of this vast gathering will fail in this test. But ask them to repeat from memory some one sthothra (hymn or moral verse) that their grandfather or grandmother taught them when they were little children sitting on their knees, and I am sure most of you will be able to recite the shlokha or sthothra. The things learnt during those early years stick in the memory and act subtly and silently on the growing mind to modify and purify the conduct of later years.

Spiritual education must start early in life

Some short-sighted critics declare that spiritual matters should not be communicated to children, for they are too young and inexperienced to benefit by the instruction. But, if a thing deserves to be done, the sooner we set about it the better. The slogan, "Start early, drive slowly, reach safely" applies not merely to journeys by road or rail; it applies also to the journey from Untruth to Truth, from Darkness towards Light and from Death to Immortality. The unrest, anxiety, fear and hatred that torment the world now is largely due to the neglect which kept off from the growing child the disciplines that can regulate the passions and emotions of man.

We postpone this essential task of education at our peril; for, when children are equipped with the discipline to secure balance, equanimity, harmony and peace, they can no more be drawn into wild adventures and barren activities. You have to learn spiritual disciplines along with the information-giving subjects of the curriculum. You have to earn the high Diploma which the Upanishaths offer you, namely, Amruthasya Puthrah (Child of Immortality), along with the degrees M.A., B.Sc., etc., which help you eke out a livelihood, up to a certain stage of life.

Everyone must learn the secret of happiness

But, remember you cannot take up the threads of Saadhana (spiritual discipline) all of a sudden after retiring from active service! You cannot learn spiritual Saadhana, when you are physically debilitated and overwhelmed by the approach of death. How can a man think of God, his Saviour, when he himself is overcome by sorrow at the need to depart from this world and when all his kith and kin are weeping and wailing loud and long?

No. Every one must learn the secret of happiness which consists in refusing to shed tears for anything less than God. You have won this human body, this human life, as the reward for many lives spent in acquiring merit. You have won this chance, this unique good fortune of being able to get Dharshan (sight or audience) of Sai. Plunging deep into the waters of this tumultuous ocean of Samsaara (worldly life), you have heroically emerged from its depths, with this rare Pearl in your hands---the Grace of Sai. Do not allow it to slip from your clasp and fall into the depths again. Hold on firmly to it. Pray that you may have It for ever and be filled with the joy that It confers. That is the way by which you can render this life fruitful.

Instruct the children of the Baala Vikaas to revere their parents. This is the first thing to do. It is a simple act of gratitude, for those who endowed them with the material instrument for life. But, mere possession of the human body, however wonderful it may be, is not enough, for one's peace and joy. One must know how to unravel its mysteries and how to regulate one's own impulses and hungers. This process is accomplished by the Guru, and so the pupils must be instructed and encouraged to revere the Guru, in gratitude for the service he renders. Education must aim at providing the child, not livelihood, but, a life worth living. For this, the acquisition of skills in doing or reasoning is not enough. Faith in one-self and in the Divinity of one-self are absolutely essential. That is the precious treasure of wisdom, stored in our ancient scriptures and in the experience of the Saints and Sages of all countries and faiths. There is only one religion, the Religion of Love. There is one more point, which I wish to emphasise. Some teachers have asked Me whether the Baala Vikaas classes, can serve children of all faiths or whether they can admit only children of the Hindu faith. The question has arisen because the questioners do not know the very fundamentals of the Hindu Faith. There is only one religion, remember, and that is the Religion of Love; there is only one caste, and that is the Caste of Humanity. You must be careful not to encourage or entertain the slightest trace of 'difference' on the basis of religion, caste, creed or colour, in the Baala Vikaas classes. Do not tarnish the spotlessly clean minds of the children by infecting them with a sense of distinction between one child and another. Impart instructions and inspiration equally to all. Select stories from the scriptures of all faiths to interest the children in the values of good life. Speak to them of the moral heroes of all lands, the Saints of all faiths. For, they are all of the same stamp. No scripture enjoins violence or lays down untruth as a way of life. All religions extol Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Brotherhood, and Love. All saints are embodiments of service, compassion and renunciation. Do not compare the various manifestations of the Divine and pronounce judgement, declaring that Raama is greater than Krishna or Shiva superior to Vishnu. This line of thought is poisonous and harmful to the devout aspirant. You do not know your own self; but, yet, how dare you pronounce judgement on personalities and powers you have never experienced or understood. Raama is as unknown to you as Christ, and so, it is best to keep silent, and revere both with equal ardour. For, all are manifestations of the same Divine Effulgence. I bless you that you succeed in the great task you have imposed on yourself, and that you will be able to light the way for the children of this land into the glorious region of Everlasting Joy.

Raajahmundhry, 3-1-74

Those who seek to acquire steadiness of faith must first acquire the strength to bear grief and pain, insult and injury. The succession of joy and grief must help confirm the faith and make it immovable. That alone can evidence true devotion.

Sri Sathya Sai

23. Nearer and nearer EMBODIMENTS of the Supreme Aathma! Look at the condition of the people of this ancient land, Bhaarath, today. Afflicted by multiplying wants, with no faith in experience beyond the sensual, scorning the sacred scriptures of their forefathers, weakened by fear, anxiety, and lack of confidence in the capacity to overcome these, having no knowledge of the Source of Strength and even denying the existence of a Source which can be tapped in prayer---they are revelling in untruth, injustice, and unrest. Tossed in restlessness themselves, they do not allow others any rest or peace. Here, in days gone by; Karmakshethra was Dharmakshethra; the Field of Action was also the Field of Righteousness. But, now, declaring that Action and Righteousness cannot coexist, these people are bringing disgrace on the very name of Bhaarath.

Of course, many lovers of the glory that was India are trying to revive it through means and methods their mental and intellectual resources indicate. But, unless one removes the disease from the root, no amount of care bestowed on branch, leaf and flower can save the tree. The pests are to be found deep down, inside the roots. They have attacked and impaired the two taproots of Indian Culture---Braahmanyam and Brahmacharyam. We must also have again in this land the Braahmin, so known because he is set on the path of Brahman, the Supreme Absolute.

We must also have the revival of the ideal student life earnest, humble, celibate, concentrated study. This Navabhaarath Gurukul, where we have assembled for this Conference is an example of student life, sought to be set on proper lines. The seekers of Brahman and the scholars of the texts on Brahman have lost their status and honour, because they did not live according to the truths they expounded.

The two classifications of Dhaiva Character, conduct, daily behaviour, attitude towards others---these are all-important, for Dharma (righteousness) is essentially Social Morality. The Shruthi (holy scripture) says, Dharmo Vishwaasya Jagathah Prathishtah---"on Dharma, the World is installed." Dharma endows man with joy and keeps away grief. Every being in the world, whether it is aware of it or not, is dependent on Dharma, for peace and happiness. All triumphs, whether acknowledged so or not, are earned only through Dharma.
 Dharma is classified as general and special by the sages: general, including the virtues of truth, love, charity, etc., which every one has to cultivate and cherish; special, meaning those duties that are incumbent on one, as a result of his social obligations, professional status, etc., like the special Dharma of the Braahmin house-holder to maintain the Sacred Fire through ritually prescribed ceremonies. The Vedhas lay down the ceremonies; they speak of the intimacy between the Braahmin and the rites of fire worship.
 Individuals are limbs of the Society You are aware that, at the present day, both in India and outside, there is a wave of spiritual discontent surging in thousands of hearts and, as a consequence, we have eager groups who give up everything worldly and seek God and Godly preceptors. But, many do believe that this search concerns only the individual and that society need not get involved in their yearning or their endeavours. This is as foolish as saying that one need not worry about the darkness prevailing outside the walls of his residence. The individual and society are intertwined inextricably. There must be illumination, for both. Aanandha (divine bliss) must surge out of the individual and fill the lake of society, and from thence, stream into the Ocean of Grace. Society is just a name for a group of individuals; but, it has no corporeal body. Individuals are the limbs, that nourish and support the 'corpus' called society.
 Society shapes the individual, provides the arena for his development and sets the ideals he should plant before himself. When the individual is stronger, more intelligent, more service minded, and more efficient as a worker, society benefits; when society is more aware of its role and of the need to cleanse that role with humility and wisdom, the individual benefits.
Sai has resolved to transform the individual and society by promoting this mutual regeneration, by the action of one on the other; hence, the formation of this Organisation, and the establishment of its Units in all countries, for the sublimation of the human into the Divine.

 I have however to tell you that the units of this Organisation have not advanced much in the task that is expected. You must identify the reasons for this and infuse into yourselves the needed enthusiasm and effort. Lay your hands on the true situation and discover the remedies for curing the malady that is diagnosed. Whatever is considered by you as good when done by others in your case, endeavour to do them in the case of those others yourselves. Do not advise, exhort and direct others, without yourself following that advice. Again, many of you get discouraged when you meet with cynicism or criticism.
 Getting involved in Sai Organisation will induce faith One person came to Me some days ago and asked, "Swaami! Are all the many thousands who are concerned with this Organisation imbued with devotion and dedication, with full faith in the Vedhas and Shaasthras (spiritual sciences), in the efficacy of righteousness and the Glory and Grace of God?" I told him that the very process of sharing in the activities of the Organisation and getting involved in its activities will induce faith and bolster devotion and dedication, and make them better and more useful citizens and happier and more peaceful individuals. Then, I asked him, to which organisation he belonged. When he mentioned that he was from a political organisation that had a membership of about 5 million, I asked him, "Is every one of them a true patriot? Do they all tread the path without deviation? Are they dedicated to the Nation? Or to Power? Or to places of Profit? Why, I find that though you wear homespun as per the rules of your organisation, you have as underwear, a banian manufactured in a foreign land? Your loyalty to the ideals of the organisation which you serve is mere superficial show." Bear calumny and criticism with courage Sathya Sai Seva Organisation has to be unique, in this sense, that it is free from the slightest taint of hypocrisy, and the attempt to rationalise faults and failings. In the name of Social Service, many institutions and organisations thrive in this land but, consider, for a moment, the social service that is rendered by the Sathya Sai Seva Units in this East Godhaavari District.

Spontaneously, members have come forward in thousands to this place where the Conference was arranged and, offered their services freely, sincerely and efficiently, to such an extent that the Organisers have not spent a paisa as wages for all this work---clearing this vast area, erecting these imposing sheds, laying down cables and pipes, and a host of other exhausting and expensive undertakings, so that the thousands of delegates that have come from all the States of India can have comfortable lodgings and satisfying boarding. They engaged themselves in this Seva with no desire for publicity; they simply followed a spiritual urge to do Saadhana in this form.

This is the genuine Karmayoga (path of dedicated action). Karma motivated thus will cleanse the mind, faster and better than other Saadhanas; the cleansed mind can reflect more clearly the Light of Wisdom; the Light of Wisdom will reveal the Truth and man will be saved from the consequences of the ignorance haunting him. Selfless, sincere service is therefore to be welcomed and practised. Each act of service is a step toward the Goal of Liberation.

The Objectives, Rules and Regulations that the Organisation has laid down have to be scrupulously observed by you all, whatever be the difficulties whatever be the reaction of others.

Bear calumny, criticism and neglect with courage; do not allow these to affect your equanimity.

The good that you do will guard you; have that faith rooted in your mind. Do not exult when your desire is fulfilled; do not be dejected when it is not realised. Faith must be built on stronger foundations. Believing one moment and doubting the next, is like living and dying alternately.

Faith is the very breath of Seva; doubt is death. One who wavers is as useless as a living corpse.

You have a duty to uphold and foster Dharma

When you join the Seva Samithi (Sai Organisation) and share in its activities, you are doing so not for the sake of Swaami, nor for the sake of the people, but the sake of the Dharma which you have a duty to uphold and foster. Attachment to Dharma, practice of Dharma and its varied manifestations of Seva (Service) and Prema (Love), can alone help transform Maanava (human) into Maadhava (God). The destruction of the insidious poison of egoism is essential for the restoration of health and happiness of the mind. Unless you tap the inner spring of joy in your own Sath-chidh-aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss) principle you cannot be established in Aanandha (Divine Bliss). This is the best way for you to offer the highest possible Seva to the Motherland. For, India is since millennia the Yogabhuumi (the land of Divine communion), Thyaagabhuumi (the land of Detachment) and Karmabhuumi (the land of Godward-leading Activity).

Vivekaanandha asked Max Mueller in London, when he met him at a Dinner given in his honour by that great Savant of Oriental Scholarship, "When do you propose to visit India?" And, the answer was, "How can I ever think of returning from India, once I reach that holy land? I would rather leave my ashes there, than come back. In the whole world, India is the only Heaven." He declared, "What is not in India is nowhere" by which he meant that what India does not teach is not worth learning. When those who have delved deep into the sacred scriptures of our land adore it like this German Scholar, how foolish are the sons and daughters of our Motherland to decry in their blindness her Glory and the Grandeur!

Duty, Discipline and Devotion are essential for everyone

I find that even you, who have come here as delegates selected by the members, do not strictly observe the disciplines enjoined on you. What shall we then say of the rest? Remember, Duty, Discipline and Devotion, all three, are absolutely essential for every one in our Organisation.

You may have Devotion, you may discharge the Duty entrusted to you. But, unless you are saturated in Discipline, the other two are useless. Many of you rushed forward when I walked along the passage this morning and tried to reach out your hands for touching My Feet, falling over others while so doing. This is definitely an instance of devotion outrunning discipline.

Discipline must regulate and control, not only your activities as members of the Organisation but, every activity of your life.

I have been telling you since years "Duty is God." Work is Worship. But, it is clear that you have not as yet taken this to heart; you have only received into the ear. Duty involves loyal adherence to the rules and regulations framed for the efficient working of the Organisation. Look upon them with a pure vision, a steady mind, and an attitude of reverence in the heart.

Do not talk ill of any one with contempt, do not think of any one as low or mean. Christ declared, "All are One; be alike to everyone." Hating an individual, or institution, or a religion is a low act. The Aathma (Soul) is immanent in every one; it is the spark of Divinity which gives him light, love and joy. Do not be content by addressing gatherings from platforms, "Brothers and Sisters" that becomes merely histrionics, unless you feel the Brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God. When you have not felt in your heart the Aanandha of realising that Ishaavaasyamidham Sarvam (All this is enveloped in God), Ishwarah sarvabhoo-thanaam---(God is installed in the heart of all beings), or Vaasudhevas sarvaamidham (All this is God), you do not deserve to speak those words, while addressing others. With every Conference you must arrive nearer the goal You long. to receive from others gratitude, love and respect; but, when the occasion arises for you to offer these, you hesitate or refuse. This is wrong. For, this is no one way traffic! Give and take. That is the rule. Assess in this Conference how far you have put into practice the rules framed in the Fifth All India Conference; examine where you have failed or succeeded only partially, and why. Unless this is done, gathering in Conferences like this is a mere waste of time, energy and money. The money could be spent to greater advantage in feeding the poor or helping them in some other way. With every Conference, you must arrive nearer and nearer the Goal or else, it becomes misuse of time, money and energy. All over the land, we have now Bhajan Mandalis (Spiritual Congregations), Study Circles, Mahila Vibhaaghs (Women's Sections), Seva Dhal and Seva Samithis (Service Corps and Organisations) besides Schools, Libraries etc., studding the entire area. Certain of these who have strayed away into wrong lines, regardless of the ideals placed before them, have to be guided back into the Path. More than everything else, Baala Vikaas (Child Development) classes have to be multiplied so that the children may be saved and trained, to shine as true inheritors of Bhaaratheeya Culture. May the Culture of India which is fast going dry in the land of its origin be restored to its pristine power and purity through your loving and loyal efforts. I bless you that you may be endowed with success. Raajahmundry, 4-1-1974 Karma is the sincere discharge of one's duty, as laid down in the scriptures and as beneficial to our standard and status.

Through karma done for some benefit in view, man progresses towards karma with no benefit in view, so that he does it as a rightful obligation, undeterred by defeat or unaffected by success. He does karma, regulated by dharma (virtue). Then, his consciousness is purified and elevated and can help him to become aware of his Reality as the Self which includes all, Brahman (Omniself). Sri Sathya Sai 24. The five-year child THE mind of man is a bundle of desires, always in agitation, ever on the run, in pursuit of objects and sensations. When man submits to Its whims, he falls. But he can master it, tame it and forge it as an instrument for achieving even Liberation from bondage to objects and sensations! It is said that-the mind is the cause for both liberation and bondage. When I see a person helplessly enslaved to his mind, I get a picture of a dressed up doll squeaking and speaking through a talking disc attached and operated He acts mechanically; as the strings are pulled by dominant desire; he' talks as directed by that master; he thinks on lines that desire lays down. Therefore, there is a great deal of artificiality and insincerity. We know that the pictures in a film projected on the screen are each in its true nature, stationary. But, since they are projected fast in a series through a lamp, they appear as if the men and women are walking or fighting. The sound tracks supply the appropriate voices and noises at the appropriate time and so, it appears as if the men and women talk and sing. Though one knows that the pictures are projected on the screen in this manner, but when one sees the film, one is moved into grief or joy, hatred or sympathy. Joy and grief are modifications of the mind The mind is agitated and so, you too are led into passions and emotions. When the plank on which you sit moves, you too move; when the train runs fast with you sitting in the compartment, you feel that the trees too move with you. On the other hand, the mind makes you feel stationary, on the earth, though the earth revolves fast on its own axis and also around the Sun. These are all tricks of the mind, hiding the truth and imposing its own illusions on your experience. Real truth is different from the picture of truth that the mind presents. To ascribe the joys and griefs that one passes through in life to the nature of the Individual Soul is an act of ignorance. One has to dissociate one from the other. Elation and depression, pleasure and pain, joy and grief are modifications of the mind, not of the jeevi

(the individual soul). It is the mind that reacts to external objects and events and pronounces them as desirable and undesirable, good and bad. This explains why the control of the waywardness of the mind is to be achieved.

He who masters the mind can direct his life straight and steadily on the path of Truth, Right Action, Peace and Universal Love. He can become an Amrutha-puthrah (child of immortality).

Becoming immortal does not imply that one can avoid death and continue living in the physical body for all time. It means only that his Name and Fame will shine in the memories of people, when his character and achievements are noble and beneficial. When your deeds are holy, coming generations would emulate them and offer gratitude for the example. But, if they are harmful, even your contemporaries will condemn you, and wish that you were never born.

In the Sathya Sai Seva Organisation, you have all the chances you need and all the direction and encouragement you want, to make your names cherished by generations. For, the Organisation strives to establish World Peace and Prosperity, promote mutual service in Society and cultivate selfless love in the individual. You have only to share in its various tasks, gladly and with perfect humility.

This Universe stands on the foundation of Truth

What is the 'highest objective' for man? What is his most precious ideal? The Vedhas decalre, Sathyaannaasthi paro dharmah---There is no rule higher than Truth. This Mansion named Universe stands on the foundation of Truth, Sathya.

You are all members of the 'Sathya' Sai Seva Organisation; remember that 'Sathya' is My Name.

It is the first and foremost ideal that has to shape and sustain all the activities of the Organisation, as well as every one of its members. Give Sathya the first place in your thought, word and deed.

There was a King called Sathyavrattha, in ancient times. He was named so, because Truth was his way of life, his goal and his guide. He derived great joy through the strict adherence to Truth.

One day, a few hours before dawn, during Brahma muhuurtha (the time dedicated for meditation on God), he proceeded alone through the Lion Gate of his Fort, in order to have a holy dip in the Sea, for the day was a holy one marked out in the calendar as sacred for such ceremonial baths.

Only Truth sustains charity, riches and good relations

While he was passing through the Gate, he saw a fair maiden with a halo of splendour going out; curious to know who she was and why she was making her exit at that early hour, he accosted her. She replied that she was the Goddess of riches, Dhanalakshmi. "I have been long here, now,

I desire a change. I do not stay in one place long." Sathyavrattha told her, "Go! Go! I do not object, or obstruct." Presently, a charming masculine figure was seen quietly going out through the Lion Gate. The King asked him who he was and what errand was on which he was leaving.

He replied, "I am charity; when Dhanalakshmi has left, what do I stay here for?" The King allowed him to leave, and he moved on.

Within a few moments, another charming person was going through. The King found that he was Sadhaachaara, representing goodness in social behaviour. "How can good social relations be sustained without riches and the quality of generosity?" he asked. "I am leaving, because the two are here no more," he explained. The king agreed; and he moved on.

So too, the next emigrant,

Fame, lamented the disappearance of the other three and himself wanted to go. The King let him go. He said, "How can fame survive the absence of riches, charity and happy social life?" and the King felt he was right.

Meanwhile, a person with overwhelming splendour came into the gate from the Fort, with intention to leave the city. When asked who he was, he said, "I am Truth." At this, the King pleaded with him to stay in the city, the Kingdom, the Palace and the homes of the people. He said that if he leaves, the loss would be irreparable, and life would not be worthwhile. At this,

Truth decided to stay.

And, Fame returned to the fort in a trice, for Truth is enough basis for fame to flourish. And,

Sadhaachaara returned and grew. So too charity and riches came back and established themselves in the kingdom. All the others were delighted to share the glory of Sathya (Truth).

Dedicate your lives to the Good and to God

You too must take delight in sharing the Glory of This SATHYA: that is MYSELF. You are members of the Organisation bearing My Name and, so, you have to live every minute in the consciousness of that responsibility. Bearing a 'High Class' name, you should not live in a 'low class' way. Rise into Divinity, do not fall into bestiality. Many rise only to get a better view of the lowly earth, as vultures do, when they fly high to get a wider view of the spots where carrion lies.

Maanava (human) must achieve the status of Maadhava (God). And, who is God? Truth is God, Love is God, Peace is God. Develop truth, cultivate love, establish yourselves in peace--you are on the road of divinity.

Become water, so that you can merge with water; if you remain oil, you cannot merge! So, develop Divine characteristics. You are now in His hands, in God's care, but, you do not realise it; this kerchief is held by Me; if my hand does not hold it, it falls. So too, if God does not hold you, you fall. Whatever you do, wherever you are placed, believe that God has put you there for that work. Then, it becomes an education and a saadhana (spiritual practice). In this Conference, learn this lesson: take up the work allotted to you gladly, and carry it out to the best of your ability, for the greater glory of God. Do not dedicate your lives to material goods, dedicate them to the Good and to God.

When the petromax lamp grows dim, you clean it with a pin; when it starts giving trouble, you pump vigorously, don't you? When that is done, it shines bright and gives good light. Consider the State Conferences held at more frequent intervals as the treatment with the pin and the All India Conference, such as this, as the vigorous pumping process.

The objects of both these Conferences are the same: the establishment of peace and harmony in the world, through the Organisation. For the lamp that this Organisation is, the oil is Love; you know that, to light that lamp, you have to use a little methylated spirit. Well, Inaana (Supreme Wisdom) is the 'spirit'. A little quantity of that is needed for Love to be steady and Universal.

And, there must be plenty of the oil of Love. Good company, good acts, good thoughts---these are of great help.

This is the Sixth All India Conference. Five Conferences have met and resolved on various plans and rules. What has been the progress? I must say we are very much in the same place---no advance at all. It is pardonable if a five-year child plays about and is drawn hither and thither by the five senses. The Sixth year (the Shashthi-abdha) warns you that you must now transcend the trammels of five senses and become free from both pride and depression, carrying out your tasks boldly, with faith and devotion. Every day, with every act, every thought, every word, you must approach nearer and nearer God. That will give you the supermost bliss. That will confer true liberation.

Raajahmundry, 4-1-1974

25. A programme for college teachers

EMBODIMENTS of the Divine Aathma! Open your eyes and look around with some circumspection. Ponder over the heights we had attained in ancient times and the present pitiable predicament of mankind. What an abysmal descent! Isn't our situation very much like that of a man who has tumbled down from a mountain peak to the depths below? We had, by observing and upholding Dharma (virtue), reached the pinnacle of perfection in every sphere, spiritual, material, scientific, economic. We followed with great veneration the principles and guidelines laid down in the Shruthi (sacred scriptures), and the smriti (body of traditional law), which embody the commands of God Himself, and as a result, we were bound together by mutual love and affection, and our culture shone with supreme excellence.

But, today, we are in quite a terrible situation---the very opposite of the glory of the past.

Wherever we look, we find men sunk in utterly low moral and material conditions. The Dharmaic duties prescribed by the Lord in the Shruthi and Smriti in order to save mankind from these very evils have been discarded. Infected by mutual animosity and distrust, we are spouting the fire of violence and cruelty and jeopardising World Peace.

Violation of the laws ordained by God is the chief factor, responsible for the absence of abiding peace in the world.

It is our paramount duty to restore Divine Dharma

Is not the transgression of Dharma (which is another name for the Commands of God to man) the sole cause for the poverty, the despondency, the despair, and the lack of spiritual knowledge and effort, that are so rampant at the present time throughout the world? It is heartening for us all to note that a few people, at least now, have discovered the reason for the crisis, through a study of the sequence and the negation, and are striving to resuscitate Dharma which alone can confer prosperity and peace on the world. If the annihilation of something is causing injury to something else, then, the only method for the regeneration of the latter is the revival of the former. Isn't this principle universally acceptable and applicable? We are noticing that the decline of Dharma has caused the destruction of world peace. When we plan to bring about prosperity and peace to the world, isn't it our paramount duty to restore this Divine Dharma?

Teachers! It is your imperative duty to wake up and strive at least now, without further delay, for the preservation and fostering of Dharma. For, today, some persons are endeavouring to destroy Bhaaratheeya Dharma (Indian morality code), attacking it and plucking it by its very roots. If we fail to resist their attempts, Dharma is in danger of being completely uprooted.

Some persons enamoured of modern civilisation and bearing the respected designation of social reformers and reconstructors, are trying in manifold deceptive attractive ways to pollute Society itself, by depriving it of Dharma.

Bhagavaan will be your unfailing support

The Dharma, for upholding which we have been all along willing and ready to sacrifice wealth, honour and even lives, is the Dharma named Sanaathana Dharma. Sanaathana means 'eternal', existing and effective for all time. Wake up. Get Ready. The moment has arrived, when you have to demonstrate your indomitable valour and irrepressible heroism.

You are born in the ever-effulgent land of Bhaarith. You are the valiant and invincible descendents of heroic Hindhu warriors, who were worthy embodiments of courage, fortitude, valour and moral integrity. You are scions of the holy and lofty lineage of Rishis like Bhaargava, Kaushika, Vashishtha, Bharadwaaja and Kashyapa who forced even the 'three worlds' to tremble in fear, at their spiritual might and majesty, won through severe penance. You will be unworthy of such great ancestry if you remain indifferent, slothful and apathetic like cowards, when the Dharma which is as essential as the very breath to our lives is being undermined. Resolve to engage yourself in the task of promoting the welfare of the world; be assured that Bhagavaan will be your unfailing support.

As days pass by, the process of reshaping and reforming affects each field. Naturally, it is being applied to the educational system also. In former times, children were initiated in the spiritual path at the proper age and their studies began thereafter, under the Guru (preceptor). In course of time, when Westerners became the rulers, many were lured to the study of their language, for, thereby they could secure the 'second' of the four goals of man, namely, riches. Thus they were transformed into supporters of the Western system of education.

In the past, teachers saw to it that the pupils were 'equipped with devotion to God in addition to the curricular training. So, the students were well versed in spiritual discipline and knowledge; every act of theirs was motivated by the yearning for salvation and spiritual joy.

Teachers and students lack spiritual awareness

Boys and girls were instructed by Gurus who had full knowledge of the Country--its history, and traditions--and the principles of religion and culture. Now, since the teachers' are themselves woefully ignorant of what culture means, what spirituality consists of, and what the significance of religion is, the pupils are deprived of the wisdom that alone can confer peace and joy to their hearts.

The propaganda for atheism, the declaration that the Vedhas have no historical validity, and the teaching through history that Hinduism is destroyed---these are the activities of the teachers who suffer from the mania for Western culture and civilisation. Can we call such a system of instruction, education? Can we call those who instruct these things, Gurus? Vidhya (education) is the communication of the knowledge of the divine power, and the inner Reality of the Aathma.

This alone justifies the claim to be educated.

Since they have no spiritual awareness, students are taking part in disorders and disturbances; they become easy targets to mob violence, unworthy of the educated; they descend to levels lower than the blind in their ignorance and draw down upon themselves the ridicule of the observers. They disfigure the educational institutions and bring disgrace upon them.

Teachers! We have to inculcate in our College lofty ideals and take up highly noble projects. I am now communicating to you My feelings and plans, because I know that you are enthusiastic, inspired by spiritual ideals, and worthy of Sai's love and affection.

1. Mere formal teaching of the prescribed lessons in the College will not raise the students to the stature we desire. By mere planting, a sapling does not become a tree. It has to be fostered by the provision of the appropriate security, care, and periodical attention.
2. To shape the simple innocent students from the villages into votaries of the English language, devoid of the virtues of humility and fidelity, politeness and faith, which are so necessary for happy living, is not a task which will promote the welfare either of the student or of the country.

By the mere acquisition of an academic qualification which will assure them a job, they cannot progress either in morality or straightforwardness. Proper activities must be devised and adopted to make them useful to their parents. They must be able to serve them skilfully and gladly and thus earn their blessings.

3. There are 200 students coming to our College from villages around. We should group them into batches of 20 or 30; one teacher should accept the responsibility for guiding each group.

When they find a student backward in any subject, they should encourage him, by special teaching in that subject; they should pay attention to the conditions and circumstances of each student and keep in touch with the parents too; they should help the students to cultivate and develop the high ideals that they have in their minds and the noble plans to which they wish to dedicate themselves.

Establish a Spiritual Centre in each village

4. Proper steps must be undertaken to put an end to the evil habits, the evil thoughts and evil talk that are rampant in these small villages. It is only then that the educated 'rural student' can maintain and develop his virtues. Or else, his attainments in virtue will be evident only as long as he is studying. As soon as he returns to his village, the behaviour, the way of speaking, the habits of life that the villagers practise will become natural for him also. Therefore, through each one of the students of our College belonging to a village, we must establish a Spiritual Centre in that village; the Centre must guard against the spread of parties and factions in that village and should not observe or honour any distinction between the villagers, on the basis of caste, creed, or family status. This will bring about a great change in the methods and message of education.

5. One day in each week or fortnight, teachers should gather the students and instruct them in certain lofty ideals of life; they should go to the villages of those students, and devote themselves to some programme of welfare activity in the village. This is very advisable. If you do the spade work and make the preliminary arrangements I shall come (I am returning to Brindhaavan in February) and in the months of February and March, all of us can go to one village, one after another, and establish these Spiritual Centres. We shall transform them into ideal villages. It is only then that the value of education can be demonstrated, expanded and sanctified.

6. For each one of these objectives to be realised, it is necessary that teachers must be idealistic and enthusiastic. Then only will students follow their guidance. Our College must become the pioneer leader in translating these high ideals. This is essential, not only for the individual, but, in equal measure, for all mankind.

Students should acquire the virtue of humility

7. Consult the students, group by group, and find out who among them are interested in establishing such Spiritual Centres in their own villages; if they make proper arrangements in their villages, then I shall myself come and inaugurate the Centre and confer on the people of the village necessary enthusiasm and adequate facilities.

We shall start in this way, in a small measure; we can thus rescue the villages from the chaotic influence spread by politics, and, make them wholly loving and helpful filled with Saathwik (good and noble) ideals; this is the fruit of real education.

8. When the students of our College coming from villages see a village or two, developing on these lines, every one of them will come forward, asking for the inclusion of his village too.

They will acquire along with Vidhya (education), the virtue of Vinaya (humility). And, with humility, they can easily earn spiritual knowledge. This is very essential, and very urgent work.

Due to the absence of these two, people are today, disgracing their humanness, though they are 'educated', behaving like fools and blind men, giving up the power of discriminating between the temporary and the eternal. It is enough progress, if men live as men! Man must be vigilant that he does not descend to the level of demons, that he does not pollute society and inflict 'earthquakes' on the country. If we do not take on hand these activities, we cannot remove the fear and anxiety that seem inevitable in the future for our students.

9. You must all meet together and take necessary interest in this matter. You need not compel any one who is not interested. It is enough if we have some five or six who join with love and faith. If they have the desire, and if all share in this task, the greater the joy. There should be no trace of compulsion in organising this. I am placing a car at your disposal for carrying out this programme. On this holy Shankraanthi Day, I have given expression to the thoughts that I was having for a long time, taking into consideration your enthusiasm for work. I wish you will take the steps necessary for implementing this programme.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 14-1-1974

What does surrender of the Self signify or imply? To experience God as Om nip resent, to be aware of nothing other than God--- this is true surrender.

To see God in everything, everywhere, at all times, is true Sharanaagathi. He gives, He enjoys, He experiences.

If you offer, and God accepts, you become superior; how can God be all-powerful? You should not reduce the glory of God through such high-sounding statements.

Sri Sathya Sai

26. You and I---together

A COLLEGE which does not confer the knowledge of their Aathmic Reality to the students engaged in the pursuit of various objectives and material studies is as barren as a sky without the Moon, or a heart without peace, a nation without reverence for law.

Colleges in India have a greater responsibility in this matter, for, here, more than the material, technological and scientific side of civilisation, emphasis was laid for centuries on the social, cultural and spiritual side. The goal of life and the ways of ensuring harmony were discovered here and propagated by saints and sages. The young men and women that emerge from the colleges of India have to cleanse this land of untruth, injustice, violence and fear. They must spread the message of peace, tolerance, righteousness and service, and be exemplars of these qualities for the people.

You are not educated, if all that you have achieved is, the study of a ton of books. The body and the mind have to be illumined by the light of Love that emanates from the awareness of the Soul and its essential Divinity. Since education today deals only with the body and mind, and is unrelated to the Soul and Spirit, the youth of the land is wafted hither and thither by every gust of passing, like rootless vegetation. Awareness of the Aathman will grant unshakeable power and courage. The Vedhas teach the means of securing this awareness, and drawing on it to meet the challenges of life. That alone can crown education with success. That alone can strengthen youth to encounter the problems of unrest and anxiety. The colleges have to teach not only certain subjects, but, the subject-object relationship too. The process by which man can transcend this duality and cognise the Unity has also to be communicated, in order to render 'education complete.

Today deceit is the rule that guides man

Institutions where education is imparted today have no atmosphere of moral or spiritual value.

Discipline is missing; honesty is at a discount; politeness and good manners are estimated as outmoded forms of behaviour; grab and not give is the rule; intolerance is held in high esteem.

If a man is not equipped with detachment, virtue, tolerance and truth, how can he raise his head and proclaim himself a human being? Man has so degraded himself that he revels in untruth in an unashamed manner---his intention is different from his words, but still his actions belie his profession. Thought, word and deed are not co-ordinated. Deceit is the rule that guides. Man should redeem himself from this downfall; he should not sacrifice his glory and his goal for the petty triumphs of the moment; if he does, he would only make himself cheaper than clay.

Men should grow straight, without any crookedness

At the present rate and under present conditions, the future of India, once the Preceptor of Humanity, is grievously poor. Students must awaken in time and decide to transform themselves into worthy instruments for the revival of the grandeur of Bhaarith. They must grow straight, without any crookedness. They must grow as Indians on Indian soil, in the Indian atmosphere; they should give up the itch for aping foreign fashions of thought, speech and dress. Instead of delving into their inner reality and living true to it, they are now exploring the outer delusions and imitating the outer trappings of equally deluded people. They silence the Voice of Conscience and behave in exotic styles. The heart warns, the brain protests, but, the mind prods on. He who smothers the voice of God is as good as a living corpse.

Note the type of dress that is now considered fashionable---the weird uncouth bush-shirts and drain-pipe pants. Note the side-burns and the weird moustaches and beards that besmirch the face of youth. Note the value attached to slovenliness and primitivity, to foulness and frivolity.

No one can appreciate this trend, except those who are victims to it; disgust is the only reaction one gets. When the exterior is reeking with untidiness, how can the interior be tidy? How can harmony and honesty be installed in such a cluttered heart and in such a lumbersome brain?

Young people move about like clowns; they pay no attention to the seriousness of the task which lies ahead of them. When the parents, society and the nation yearn that they should become

'biggers', they revel as 'beggars', before the fashion fabricators of other lands, the imitators of other countries and the hysterics of other cultures. Use the present moment best to face life's challenges And, every tick of the clock snips a length off the thread of life. Money when unspent remains in your account at the bank; but, spent is your life with every moment whether wisely or unwisely. It marches relentlessly on. Use the present moment best, to sharpen your skills, to broaden your intelligence, to expand your heart and to master the technique of facing the challenges of life with courage and equanimity. That will be the reward you offer your parents for the love and sacrifice they have poured on you; do not offer them in return, an ill reputation, a ruined career, a damaged character. Make them happy and proud; win a First Class in your studies and a First Class in your character. Do not despise the villages where you have grown, do not desert the parents, who have sacrificed so much for you. Live with them and make them happy. Also, love and serve every one in the village, as if it is an extension of your own family, as if all are your kith and kin. Do not be led away by the artificial brilliance and deceptive display of the towns; whatever salary you may get front jobs in those places will be frittered in trivial pursuits; you cannot be free, fresh and pure in that atmosphere nor can you serve your parents and people. You will be a burden on others and a problem to yourselves. I am depending upon you, students, for a great transformation in outlook, a great revolution. Students of the Sathya Sai College must lead this movement. The older generation can only talk; it is you who must act. You have to prove yourselves worthy of this College. Be disciplined; be sweet in manners, in speech, and in your relations with the less fortunate. Be grateful to your parents, your villagers and those who strive for your welfare. Try your best always to earn a fair name for yourselves, for your College and for your parents. Do not be under the impression that you and I have come together only now since you study in this College! You have come to Me for the sake of far higher triumphs, as a consequence of merit acquired in many previous lives. You and your teachers are destined to achieve tremendous tasks under My guidance, in the execution of the Mission on which I have come.

Brindhaavan, 31-1-1974

Days that are marked out as festivals in the calendars of all races and religions are significant because they have a deep spiritual meaning. They have to be used by man for examining habits and practices, prejudices and partialities, and for cleansing the mind of these. The attitudes and guidelines that are clogging progress have to be discarded and fresh fruitful ones welcomed. The days have to be dedicated for trimming the old and planting the new.

Sri Sathya Sai
27. The Shiva in all Shivoham, Shivoham---was the exclamation that rose from the souls that knew the Truth in a flash of illumination, after long years of cleansing the mind through the process of thapas (penance). I am Shiva; Shiva am I---Though denoted by many names and recognised in many forms, the Divine Principle is One, without a second. It is Shivam and it is latent in each being, including man. Holy days are to be spent in the contemplation of this Truth and in special exercises to make oneself fully conscious of one's Divinity. God is the seed, which has expressed itself as all this. But, this fact, so deeply implanted in the hearts of every Indian for centuries, has been overlaid by veils of doubt and man has lost the courage and the energy that the faith had given him so long. This was the very core of Indian culture, but, children of India have neglected and very nearly lost this precious heritage. The fascination for Western fashions of thought weakened the belief in one's religion; that led to the giving up of the disciplines which shaped one's daily life; this in turn led to deterioration in moral standards; this has bred misery, disunity, hatred and disgrace. It is time to open one's eyes to the tragedy and retrace the steps. Meaning of worship of the Snake The saints and seers of this land never spoke lightly or acted irrelevantly. They had the good of the generations always in view. When they invested some places as holy and named some days as sacred, they also prescribed the rules and ceremonials to be observed by pilgrims and Saadhakas (spiritual aspirants), so that time, expense and effort could be used for the expansion of Love and the education of the instincts and impulses. The object of every rule was to bring the realisation of the Aathma, as one's Reality, a few steps nearer. For, the Aathma in the individual is the Aathma in all; Shivoham is the Truth; and the Truth alone can make man free and full of Bliss.

Take one prescription, the worship of the Snake. Those afflicted with barrenness or serious illness or skin diseases of virulent types vow to proceed on pilgrimage to shrines of Subrahmanya (conceived in the form of a Snake). People laugh at this practice. "Indians offer adoration to snakes, because, in their opinion, they have poison in their fangs!" The Truth is quite otherwise. The inner meaning of snake worship is quite different. The spinal column of man ending with the 'thousand-petallied lotus' in the brain is very much like a serpent poised on its tail with hood widely spread. In the science of Kundalini Yoga, the vital energy of man lying dormant like a coiled snake, at the bottom of this column in the lowest Muulaadhaara Chakra (the Basal Plexus) is awakened and aroused, so that it courses up through six more wheels (centres of superior consciousness) until it reaches the Sahasraara (thousand-petalled Lotus Energy Centre) at the very top of the skull. The passage for the Kundalini is through the Sushumna nerve in the centre of the spinal column. The worship of the Snake, ridiculed as superstition, is the symbolic counterpart of this great Yogic Saadhana which confers vigour and vitality. Every appellation of God has deep significance. Take the demarcation of Thirupathi as a holy place of pilgrimage; Lord Venkateshwara, the deity worshipped there is called the Lord of the Seven Hills, for Seven Hills have to be climbed before the Temple is reached. Obviously the six Chakras (energy centres) and the Sahasraara are indicated here, for in Raajayoga, the supreme is revealed, only when the individual raises the Vital Energy---the Kundalini Shakthi---up to the seventh stage. One of the hills is named Seshagiri, meaning, Snake Hill. From the plains, the range gives the appearance of a snake with a raised hood. And, what exactly does Subrahmanya mean? Spend a little thought on that. It means, 'He who has attained the realisation of Brahman the Universal Absolute, the Primal Cause, the Cosmic Consciousness.' Every appellation of God has deep significance. In the Vedhas, Vishnu, for example, is named Parama. It means Paramanu, the Atom: He is omnipresent, as omnipresent as the atom, found as the substance and substratum of the Universe. Vishnu is the cause as well as the effect, for, there was nothing else when Time began. The One became many; the many disappear, the One remains. Cattle are different from horses; true. But, when four-footed animals are considered, they are both the same. Under 'animals' a vast variety of beings are included. Thus it goes on, until only One is. Strengthen the belief that all objects belong to God To teach the Unity behind the appearance of multiplicity, that is to say, to help realise the Adhwaitha (Non-dual nature of Existence), Shankara, the greatest expounder of that school of thought, established four seats of practical philosophy called Mutts in the four regions of India. The very first step in the endeavour to realise this Unity was, according to him, Upaasana or Worship of the concrete symbol of God, which gives one the experience of the ecstasy of Union. One day, Shankara was seated in meditation on the bank of the Ganga River. Suddenly, he exclaimed, "Lord! I am yours; but, surely, you are not mine." His pupil, Thotakacharya was by his side then; he was astonished at this statement, which, according to him, went against the Adhwaithic stand. So, he asked him how he could ever declare any distinction between I and you. Shankara replied, "The waves belong to the Ocean; but, the Ocean does not belong to the wave. The wave is the ocean, but, the Ocean is not the wave." The main point to be attended to is, the elimination of the ego, the elimination of the identification with the body and its needs, satisfiable through the senses. For, you get joy when these needs are fulfilled; grief when they are not, anger when something comes in the way, pride when you win over that opposition. To eliminate the ego, strengthen the belief that all objects belong to God, and that you are holding them on trust. This would prevent pride; it is also the truth. Then, when you lose a thing, you would not grieve. God gave; God took away. Of course you hear almost all talking in this strain and advising this reaction. But very few follow that advice themselves. This is the sin of all sins; saying one thing and acting quite the opposite, denying in practise what you assert as precept. Shiva is eternally auspicious Shiva is known also as Eeshwara, the 'repository of all the resources essential for Prosperity. The most important resource is Inaana (Spiritual Wisdom). Three kinds of Inaana are demarcated: Ieevaprjna (concerning the individualised Divine), Eeshwaraprajna (concerning the Cosmic-Manifestation of the Divine) and the Aathmaprajna (Concerning the Universal Absolute of which the individual is the temporary-particular). This is also mentioned in some other texts as Delta-prajna, Jeewa-prajna and Aathma-prajna, but, the meaning of the words is the same as in the other list. Eeshwara confers the Aishwarya of Inaana. He is also known as Shankara, and sages have experienced Shiva as conferring Sam or auspiciousness of all kinds, Happiness in all ways. Shiva is eternally auspicious; He does not come embodied in other forms, with other names, as often as Vishnu. So, He is not described as Shri Shiva or Shri Shankara or Shri Eeshwara. Shri is inherent in His very Person and so it is superfluous to add Shri to His Name.

When you realise Shivoham (I am Shiva), then, you have all the happiness, all the auspiciousness that there is. Shiva is not to be sought on the peak of a distant range of mountains, or in some other special place. You must have heard that sin and merit are inherent in the acts that men do; so too, Shiva is inherent in every thought, word and deed, for He is the Energy, the Power, the Intelligence that is behind each of them.

All energy, power and intelligence are in you; you need not search for them outside yourselves.

God who is manifesting as time, space and causation is in you; why then do you feel weak and helpless? Man is tossed about by his ambitions and the craving to fulfil them. But, he must first know where he stands and where he should decide to reach. Now, his efforts are wanton and wasteful. He is an expert in mathematics, but, unable to do a small sum in arithmetic. He has mastered algebra, but unable to measure the area of his home. He knows botany, with all its Latin names; but, ask him about the uses to which the common thulasi plant and its leaves can be put; he has no answer. He has mastered all the physical exercises taught to him; but, he is helpless when asked to sit in Padhmaasana. He can talk loud and long on Moksha and of its being the final goal; but, he does not know that he 'is already free; he imagines himself as bound and behaves as such.

Do not get too bound with, or give up, the world Attachments to illusory objects bind him. When the illusory nature of the objects is revealed, the attachment falls off and he is free. These attachments persuade him to tarnish the acts of worship also; for, he prays to God for granting him trivial boons. Pray to God for God; do not use Truth to achieve Untruth. Have the inner vision, not the outer. Do not be attracted by the objective world; concentrate on the subjective world.

You do not scatter seeds on the surface; you plant them deep enough for the roots to get a foothold.

Do not dig the seeds into the soil too deep. Follow the middle path. Do not tighten the strings of the violin or veena too much; nor leave them loose. Do not get too bound with the world; do not also give it up.

The Shivaraathri Festival, as celebrated here, is an example for you. You might ask, "Swaami has often declared that all days are holy days, that there is no special rite or ritual that has to be observed on any single day; but, Swaami Himself is pouting vibhuuthi (holy ash) on the Idol and calling it abhisheka (anointing the idol); is this right?" Swaami is doing so, to teach you a lesson.

When desire is destroyed, Love reigns supreme

The Vibhuuthi Abhisheka has a potent inner meaning which Swaami wants you to grasp. The Vibhuuthi is the most precious object, in the truly spiritual sense. You know that Shiva burnt the God of Desire or Kaama, called Manmatha (for he agitates the mind and confounds the confusion already existing there) into a heap of ashes. Shiva adorned Himself with that ash, and thus He shone in His Glory, as the Conqueror of Desire. When Kaama was destroyed, Prema (Love) reigned supreme. When there is no desire to warp the mind, Love could be true and full.

What greater offering can you give God to glorify Him than the ash signifying your triumph over tantalising Desire? Ash is the ultimate condition of things; it cannot undergo any further change.

The Abhisheka with Vibhuuthi is done to inspire you to give up desire and offer Shiva the ashes of its destruction as the most valuable of all the articles you have earned. Ash cannot fade as flowers do in a day or two; it does not dry and disappear or get soiled and unpotable as water does; it will not lose colour as leaves do, in a few hours; it does not rot as fruits do in a few days.

Ash is ash for ever and ever. So, burn your viles, your vices, your bad habits; worship Shiva, rendering yourselves pure in thought and word and deed.

Shiva is the source of Bliss

Shiva is worshipped with the three-leaved bilva, for, He is immanent in the three worlds, in the three phases of Time, in the three attributes of Nature. He removes the three types of grief; He has no basis outside Him; He is the source of Bliss; He is the embodiment of the sweetness and efficacy of Nectar. Since every being is Shiva- Swaruupa (of the nature of Shiva)---for without Shiva, it is mere 'shava' (corpse)---man has to live up to that Divine status. Scholars and Pandiths who propagate Dharma (right action) in our country are doing great disservice, for, they cast doubts on the very majesty of Godhead. Swaami Karunyaanandha spoke now of the episode where Brahma became jealous of Krishna, and stole the cows and cowherds from Him in order to bring discomfiture on Him. He said, Krishna created the same number of cows and cowherds, every one exactly similiar, and thus, foiled Brahma's conspiracy. People who hear such tales will naturally wonder how Gods can be envious of each other just like human beings; their faith in the Divine will be undermined thereby. These scholars are more 'intent on exhibiting their textual scholarship, than revealing the Glory of God. They do not mind the damage they cause to the very cause they are pleading for. There was an old woman in a village, some years ago. She sold a patch of land that she owned, and with the money, she had four gold bangles made, two for each arm. She wore them with great joy and went along the streets very proud of her new acquisition. But, she was disappointed, because no one in the village turned aside and looked at her bangles; she could as well have not worn them, for the villagers did not notice any difference in her. She tried various means to attract their attention towards the bangles, but, without success. One night she could not sleep at all, for, this neglect pained her much. At last she got a brilliant idea which, she decided, must succeed; the villagers must be drawn to notice the bangles. All beings are actuated by the same Divine Power. Next day, after sunrise, she set fire to her own dwelling house! When the flames rose, and commotion ensued, the villagers rushed towards her, sitting and wailing in front of the burning house. She shook her hands pathetically, at the faces of the frightened villagers, causing the bangles to jingle and shine in the red light of the high flames, crying out, "Alas! My house is on fire," "O, pity my fate," "God, don't you see my plight?" Everytime she shouted a sentence, she put out her arms vigorously at some one, so that she or he could not miss sighting the bangles.

The pity of it! She was so anxious to exhibit her bangles that she did not care for her house itself; the house was on fire but she was happy her bangles were noticed. The scholars who are lost in admiration of their own cleverness are as foolish as this old woman. Do not say or do anything that will bring Indian culture into disrepute, or that will undermine the faith of people in Goodness and in God. Do not claim to be - orthodox and encourage heterodoxy or heresy. Cast aside the desire for happiness and prosperity, do not moan that you do not secure Heaven; it does not matter, if you are smothered by difficulties. Stand up boldly in defence of the honour of your country. That will bring you all happiness and prosperity, all the Grace you yearn for. Indian Culture teaches that all beings are actuated by the self-same Divine power, blessed by the self-same Divine grace. So, love all. Do not develop jealousy or hatred. There are many Saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) who enjoy perfect calmness and equanimity while sitting in Dhyaana (meditation) or while in the Puuja (worship) room before the shrine. But, once they rise and come out into the open, they behave like demons. The Geetha says, Sathatham yoginah---"Be in Yoga, always." Be immersed in love, with no trace of pride or envy. This is the highest saadhana (spiritual practice). At the present day, all grades and groups of people all over the world resort to violence and hatred in order to satisfy their desires and demands, bringing about fear, anxiety, panic and revolution. The gains through such tactics are not much; the gains will be greater and more lasting if the path of love, tolerance and peace is followed. Love brings people together; hatred drives them apart. You cannot be happy, when you cause misery to others. God showers Grace when the nine steps of bhakthi (devotion) are observed. Masters or rulers can be won over by the same means---sacrifice, love, devotion, dedication in the path of duty. When success is achieved by means of unrest and violence, it has to be preserved and prolonged only by further unrest and violence. Therefore, let this be the lesson of Shivaraathri for you: Shiva is in all beings and all things. He is the inner motivator. Be aware of this always; do not cause pain to any one, do not harm or injure, anyone, or hurt his self-respect. Love all alike, cultivate tolerance and spread brotherliness.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 20-2-1974

28. "You are freed!"

Do not be misled by what you see; what you 'do not see with your eyes is much more significant.

Why waste your life without achieving its purpose---namely, knowing and experiencing the truth? Come, come with Me, you can make your life worthwhile; you can succeed.

Man has in him all the Bliss, as well as all the equipment needed to unravel it; but, he is caught in dire ignorance of his own inner resources. He can have supreme peace but, he does not strive to earn it; his attempts are weakened by doubt and indecision, and so, they are doomed to failure.

Of course, there is the flow of water underneath the ground. But, how can we benefit by it unless efforts are made to dig down into that. source? A good deal of 'desire-for-sense-satisfaction' has to be removed before that inner spring of peace and joy can be tapped.

Your lives are essentially of the nature of Shaanthi (Peace); your Nature is essentially Love; your hearts are saturated with Truth. Rid yourselves of the impediments that prevent their manifestation; you do not make any attempt towards this, and so, there is no peace or love or truth in the home, the community, the nation and the world. The husband and the wife do not live in concord; the father and his sons are involved in factions; even friends do not see eye to eye!

Twins take different paths. For, they live in a competitive waning world of passions and emotions. It is only when God is the Goal and Guide, that there can be real peace, love and truth.

The Divine must be revered at all times; what pleases the Divine must be understood and followed

Feel that all your skill and strength are God's gifts

The Raamaayana gives two examples of such consecrated lives, those of Aanjaneya and Lakshmana. Aanjaneya (Hanumaan) dedicated every moment of his life, every wave of thought, every twitch of muscle, to his Master, Raama. When Raama sent him in the southerly direction on the mission to search for Seetha, he was neither elated on being thus recognised as an efficient instrument nor depressed at the dangerous nature of his task. He knew that Raama would confer on him the skill and strength needed to fulfil the errand; in fact all his skill and all his strength were 'His gifts'. To feel that he was too weak an instrument was, he concluded, an insult to Raama's Omniscience and Grace.

Lakshmana too was a mighty hero, for, he drew strength from the Divine itself. And, he had no other strength. Once while moving about in the forest as exiles, Raama instructed him to choose a nice spot and erect a Parnashaala (green-bower) thereon, for Seetha and Himself. Lakshmana was so shocked with pain at this that he fell on the ground; he lamented that he had fallen from grace. Raama said that he had 'risen' instead, for, he was asking him to select the site himself.

That was the very reason why Lakshmana felt he had fallen: "Have I a will apart from yours?

How could you ever imagine that I could exercise my judgement independently and select a site myself? Tell me, where and how; it will be done. But, I have no judgement of my own; I have surrendered it long ago." That was the reply of Lakshmana.

Bhajan must become an unbroken stream of Bliss

You too declare that you have surrendered; but, that is just a verbal statement. If you sit in a car, you go along with it; on the cycle, you move with it; on a horse you go wherever the horse takes you. But, in this case, you say and perhaps you believe that you have placed yourselves in My hands and so, you are going along the path I have laid down. But, your mind and your heart are not fully in Me and so, the surrender is only in name.

As a sign of this deed of surrender and in order to sustain it, nothing more is enjoined than constant remembrance of the Name. No regimen of exhausting Saadhana (spiritual discipline) is prescribed. Smarana (remembering) is enough. You have recited bhajans (group singing of devotional songs on Lord's Names) extolling the Names which summarise the Glory, all through the night, after the emergence of the Aathmalinga (symbol of the elemental form of Shiva). But, this is only an appetiser. Bhajan must become an unbroken stream of Bliss on your tongues and in your hearts; it must confer on you the uninterrupted awareness of Soham---of the Unity of I and He, of This with That. It is called Akhanda hamsa japa---unbroken japa of the Hamsa mantra, Soham (inner sacred sound formula). I will ensure freedom from anxiety, fear and grief.

Mahaashivaraathri is dedicated to the disintegration of the aberrations of the mind, and so, of the mind itself, by dedicating oneself to Shiva, God. The Moon as well as the Mind whose Deity it is, have each 16 phases. On the Shivaraathri, fifteen of these have disappeared; and, there is just a streak of the Moon in the sky. The New Moon that follows will have not even that streak visible.

Symbol of Time-Space manifestation of divinity

The mind too must be mastered every day until, on the fifteenth day, fifteen phases have disintegrated and only a streak remains to be removed by a final flourish of effort. That is the saadhana that you did through the night, bhajan, vigil, fast. When the mind goes, there is more moha (deluding desire and attachment) and the kshaya (decline) of moha is moksha (liberation).

Smarana is the surest means of mastering the wiles of the mind. You are indeed blessed, since front among the billions of people on this earth, you alone were able to come into this congregation, this presence, on this occasion. People gather in many a sacred place for.

Shivaraathri, but, you were able to be here on this thrice-holy day and witness the emergence of the Dhasa angula Swaruupa---the Upanishaths declare that God is athyaathisthath dhasha angulam, the ten-inch-symbol of the kaala (time), desha (space)---manifestation of divinity, as described by Sage Kapila, the incarnation of Naaraayana Himself. When Kapila who too was the personification of time and space was born, he called upon the Gods to gather in the Presence and take dharshan (audience); his mother who called upon the Gods is therefore named, Dhevaahuthi (She who called the Gods). And, when the Gods came, Kapila asked them, "Don't you know who I am?" Even now all human babies ask the same question as soon as they are born---Koham? (Who am I?).

Having had the unique good fortune of witnessing the emergence of the time-space-embodiment in the Linga-Form, I assure you that you are released from the bondage of birth and death.

Recollect (and live in the recollection of) that moment of emergence and meditate on the significance of the Linga Form. This is the chance that is seldom gained through the performance of yajnas or yaagas or other elaborate rituals; or as a result of years of arduous saadhana. When you are asked what happened at Prashaanthi Nilayam, tell them that your life's mission has been fulfilled, that you were able to witness the Lingodhbhava, see the Linga which emerged during the auspicious hour.

Mystery revealed by Shiva's three-pronged spear

The Linga, as you can see, is dhasha angulam, ten inches in circumference. It has within it, shining with native light the Thrishuul (three-pronged spear) of Shiva, symbolising the three phases of Time---past, present and future---and the three dimensions of space---earth, sky and the nether regions, as mentioned by Me already. Time is measured in units of ten (60 vighatikas, 60 ghatikas and 360 days for the year), and in this Linga too, as you can see even from where you are sitting, the colour of the Thrishuul inside the Linga changes into a new one, every ten minutes. The handle of the Thrishuul demonstrates the One, of which the three are manifestations. This is the grand Mystery that has been revealed to you. You have witnessed the Divine Creation; you have seen the Divine Symbol; you have shared the Bliss. Out of the world's population of many crores, you alone secured this fortune. The Shruthis declare the Purusha as splendour, as Iyothi. You have seen the splendour when the Linga emerged; you have seen the triple Iyothi in the Linga itself. No greater fortune can befall a man. Live hereafter as befits the recipient of this rare Grace. Thyaagaraaja the Saint-singer sang of the Raama Naama, as being composed of two vital sounds Raa and Ma, Raa being the life-sound of the manthra devoted to Vishnu (Om Namō Naaraayana) and Ma being the life-sound of the manthra devoted to Shiva (Om Namasshivaaya). The two sounds became Raama, the One which became Vishnu and Shiva, just as the Linga is the One from which all Forms manifest, the Elementary form which symbolises the First Emergence of the Will of the Divine. I repeat that you who have experienced the sublimity and splendour of this Divine Event have acquired thereby merit enormous enough to save you from the cycle of birth and death.

Dwell on this mighty moment, this holy hour that you were privileged to spend here; contemplate the majesty of the event that you witnessed; sanctify your days by thoughts that are sacred, words that are suffused with love and deeds that are in accordance with the Grace you have won this day. Alert yourselves, whenever you are prone to deviate from this responsibility. Be ever vigilant that you do not stray or weaken or vacillate. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 21-2-1974

Make the mind, the voice and the actions agree in harmony. That is the right way of life.

Sri Sathya Sai

29. Cells of the body of God

WHAT has sociology or the social sciences to do with the sciences of the spirit or the inquiry into the human spirit? This is a question that is commonly raised. So too, many do ask: What has the spiritual student and saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) to do with society and its problems? It must be said, that both these attitudes are wrong. No society can find its fulfilment, no social ideal can fructify, without the blossoming of the spirit of man. Mankind cannot realise the Divinity whose expression it is, without careful and constant attention being paid to the cultivation of the spirit. How else can this Divinity express itself than in and through individuals? We can apprehend only the jagath (world of change), this moving, inconstant, fantasia; we cannot see or hear, smell or taste or touch the Director of the fantasia, God. In the same manner, we can apprehend the individual, but not the entity named Society. For, Society is no separate, distinct, complex formed out of elemental components. Society is the divine proliferation produced by the Will Supreme. Think, speak and act in the attitude of Love. Man is mortal; dust he is and to dust returneth. But, in him, there shines Aathma, as a spark of the immortal flame. This is not a term of flattery invented by the vedhaanthins. The Aathma is the source, the sustenance of every being and every organistaion of beings. It is the one and only Source, Substance and Sustenance. The Aathma is God; the particular is the Universal, no less. Therefore, recognise in each being, in each man, a brother, the child of God, and ignore all limiting thoughts and prejudices based on status, colour, class, nativity and caste. Sai is ever engaged in warning you and guiding you so that you may think, speak and act in this attitude of Love. Society cannot justify itself by planning to divide the spoils gained out of Nature either in equal shares or unequal shares. The consummation that must inspire Society has to be---the establishment and elaboration in every social act and resolution, of the knowledge of the One Universal Aathma and the bliss that knowledge confers. Sai does not direct, "the Aathma has no death, therefore, kill the physical sheaths, the bodies." No. Sai does not encourage wars. Sai directs you to recognise the Aathma as your closest kin, closer than the members of your family, your blood-relations and your dearest descendents. When this is done, you will never more stray from the path of right, which alone can maintain that kinship. Familial attachment operates even against the performance of one's legitimate duties. But, attachment to the Divine fills that Duty with a new dedication which ensures both joy and success. It activates man as nothing else can: it confers on him during the process of doing his duty the highest wisdom. Hence the advice, Do not enter the prakrithi (objective world) in the hope of realising the Aathma; enter the objective world, after becoming aware of the Aathma; for, then you see Nature in a new light and your very life becomes a long festival of love. There are many who use their scholarship and intelligence, even Vedhic scholarship, for dreary debate and competitive contests. They are enamoured of their petty triumphs. They declare that society is an arena for winning such triumphs. But, Sai calls on you to seek and strengthen another type of society, where there is no room for such trivial desires. Man is too weak to keep his nature under control. Disputative Vedhic scholars crave for the fruits of their endeavour and efforts, through ritual. Nature does not crave so; the clouds bring rain, as a homage to God who is their Lord. But, they attribute it to the efficacy of their rites and use it to inflate their ego. They play about, among the far-spreading branches of the tree of desire. They are entangled in the coils of the three 'ropes'--- the thaamasik, the raajasik and the saathwik (the ignorant, the egoistical and the good). You have to go beyond the three ropes, the three bonds. You have to be, ever, in the unchanging eternal Truth. You must be established in the One, as the One, with no trace or taste of two. Earning and garnering should not interest you; you must not be caught in the pursuit of Yoga (Divine communion) and Kshema (well being); for, you are FULL already and have no wants. The ideal of a high standard of life, instead of a high level of living, has played havoc with human society. A high level of living insists on morality, humility, detachment, compassion; so the competitive greed for luxury and conspicuous consumption receives no encouragement and will be destroyed. Now, man is the slave of his desires; he finds himself helpless to conquer the thirst for pleasure and luxury; he is too weak to keep his nature under control; he does not know how to arouse the Divine Consciousness that is latent in him.

Give up reliance on the vagaries of the mind Mere moral practices or instruction cannot help you to achieve this. It can be done, only, by spiritual saadhana. For, it is a basic transformation. It involves the elimination of the Mind, which is the arch-obstacle in the path. Grace of God, if invoked and won, can endow you with power. And, the Grace is available within you, awaiting the call.
 Man must give up reliance on the vagaries of the mind. He must act ever in the consciousness of his innate Divinity. When that is done, his three-fold nature (composed of the Gunas--- thaamasik, raajasik and saathwik) will automatically express itself through only holy channels.
 That is the genuine Manifestation.
 Another point. The argument may be raised: If one has to give up the desire for comfort, luxury and pleasure, why should one be embroiled in society? This presupposes the belief that Society is justified only by the provision of such worldly joys. But, what kind of society can one build on such slender foundation? If built, it can be a society only in name, it will not be bound by mutual love and cooperation. The strong will suppress the weak. Social relations will be marred by discontent. Even when attempts are made to divide the resources of Nature equally among all, the cordiality will be only on the surface. It will not be spontaneous. We can limit the resources available, but, we cannot limit greed, desire and craving. Desire involves seeking beyond the limits of possibility. What has to be done is, to pluck out desire by the roots; man must give up the desire for objective pleasure, based on the illusion that the World is many, manifold, multicoloured etc., and not on the Truth that the world, nature, all creation, is ONE. When one is conscious only of the ONE, who desires which? What can be acquired and enjoyed by the second person? The Aathmic Vision destroys the desire for objective joys, for, there is no object distinct from the subject.
 Experience the unity: "the whole world is one family" This is the true function of Society---to enable every member to realise this Aathmic Vision. The men and women bound by mutual interests in a society are not merely families, castes, classes, groups, or kinsmen, kinswomen; they are ONE Aathma. They are knit by the closest of family ties; not only the one society to which they feel they are bound, but, all MANKIND is ONE.
Vasudhaiva kutumbakam, as the Shaasthras (moral codes) declare,

"the whole world is one family." This unity must be experienced by every one.
 Natural resources and wealth are now being misused for the boosting of one's ego. But, when the Aathmic Unity is realised, they will promote the new way of life through Love. What is now 'mercy' or legally enforced mutual 'help' will then be transformed into 'Divine Love' that can effectively purify the recipient and the giver. This consummation is beyond the region of common politics, ethics or economics. They cannot transform the receiver and thrill the giver, however much they attempt to equalise. They do not have the appeal and they have no power to sustain. The equality they establish will be haunted by a shadow, the shadow of the ego. This shadow can disappear only when identity as ONE is known and felt.
 It may be said that not all desires are wrong; the raajasik ones which harm and exploit others can be condemned; but should one renounce the Saathwik desires? Desire is desire, though the object may be beneficial and pure. The fruit of effort, the mind that seeks it, the vitality that activates the mind, life itself---every one of these has to be turned towards the Lord, with devotion born out of the vision of the ONE.
 Devotion to God goes ill with hatred towards others Those who argue that the Spiritual Path is for the Individual only, and that the Society should not be involved in it are committing a great mistake. It is like insisting that there should be light inside the house, and saying that it does not matter, if there is darkness outside. Devotion towards God goes ill with hatred towards, fellow-men. Fellow-men and the world must be seen ever in the mirror of Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss Absolute). Kinship based on this recognition will alone last. That is the Sai Kinship. When you deepen that kinship, the True Presence, the Constant Presence of Sathya Sai will be yours. Do not be led away by your fancies into the jungle of words and feelings. Be firm, true to your innermost nature.
 Good and evil are based on the reactions of individuals; they are not inherent in things or events.
Vedhaantha (Vedhic philosophy) or Atheism is accepted or rejected, when one likes or dislikes it. They do not depend on logical acceptance or rejection. Only experience can establish their validity. Who can delineate Godhood as thus and thus. Those who do so are indulging in a futile exercise. They have no authority for declaring it. If they claim the right, they are but concealed people relying on their limited intellects.

 Divinity is fully immanent in every one, it is patent for the eyes that can see dearly and deeply.
 Whoever denies this is only cheating himself of his reality. He cannot dismiss it by denial, either from himself or others.
 The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable, that, it is the duty of man to see in Society the expression of Divinity, and to use all his skill and effort to promote the welfare and prosperity of Society. Men must cultivate: (1) this expansive feeling, (2) this inclusive thinking and (3) this intuitive vision. Without these three, man is but an inert being; if he derides these three, he loses his title-to be human.
 All men are of one Divine Lineage
 The spirit of renunciation, adherence to virtue, the eagerness to cooperate, the sense of kinship-- -these are the characteristic signs of man. Life which considers the as encumbrances cannot be valued as 'life.'
 The brotherhood of man can be translated into life only on the basis of the Aathmic Vision. All men thirst for peace, happiness and bliss. They are the precious heritage which is their right, for, they are God's Treasure. They can be earned only by recognising the bond that knits man to man.
 All men are of one lineage; they are of Divine Lineage.
 All men are cells in the One Divine organism, in the Divine body. That should be your faith, your fortune, your forte, your fullness. Awareness of this alone gives you the right to call yourself a man. Learn to live as men. This is the saadhana, this is the message of Sai.
Brindhaavan, 1-3-1974
 30. Full circle or half circle?
 You have joined the Study Class at Dharmakshethra, and are engaged in poring over all types of books and gathering information and instruction. But, what have you gained? Knowledge about what this author says or that sage teaches is not what your Study Circle must aim to acquire. Not information, but transformation; not instruction, but construction should be the aim. Theoretical knowledge is a burden, unless it is practised, when it can be lightened into Wisdom, and assimilated into daily, life. Knowledge that does not give harmony and wholeness to the process of living is not worth acquiring. Every activity must be rendered valid and worthwhile by its contribution to the discovery of Truth, both of the Self and of Nature.

Of what use is it to know everything about nature, if you do not know anything of the Self?
 Nature is only a projection of the Self, and so, unless the Self is known, knowledge of Nature is either distorted or deceptive.
 The Self is Aathma, of which the entire Creation is composed and so, knowledge of the Self alone can quench the thirst of man.
 You are the Infinite Universal Absolute You tell Me that you have read the Bhaagavatha Vaahini and all other. Vaahinis that I have written for you. Good. But, let Me ask you, have you put at least a single direction given in them into daily practice? Question yourself calmly and decide, to benefit by practising the processes mentioned in them. This is the proper plan of study---reading, reflection and regular application in life. Study is WORK. Inquiry into the value and applicability of what is studied is WORSHIP; the experience of the validity and value of the practice is WISDOM. ' You must first learn about 'what others think you are.' They deal with you as a body, with a specific name and an identifiable form. Then, you must learn about 'what you think you are.' You are aware of your mind and its monkey tricks, its prejudices and preferences, its passions and pursuits. You are aware of your individual consciousness, of your version of 'me' and 'mine.' Learn about the mind as an instrument, which can harm you if used unwisely or help you, if used wisely. You' have to learn about yet another 'you!' The YOU 'you really are.' For, you are neither the body, nor the mind. You are the embodiment of Purity, Power, Love, Bliss. The miserable little prison named 'Individuality' has to be denied. You are free, but, you fancy you are bound and mope in the cell you imagine is limiting you. See the Truth that will set you free. It is within you, feel it. Feel it. You are not the body, the mind, the intellect, the brain, the heart, the denotable diminutive ego. You are the Infinite Universal Absolute.
 You have to get yourselves established firmly, unshakeably in this awareness. Paramahamsas (ascetics of the highest order) have that awareness. Every one of you can attain that state; it is your destiny, your duty to yourself. Merely finishing the study of book after book serves no purpose. Practising one line from any one book is enough to save you from aeons of darkness, of ignorance, and of yearning for Light.
 External and internal saadhanas are both essential

Mere gymnastics will not do; the Bhagavath Geetha (the Song of God) can be used as a Bhagavath Duutha (Messenger from God) if only you welcome It into your heart. Once a famous Pandith was expounding the Bhagavath Geetha before a massive gathering; he gave an elaborate explanation of the shloka (verse) recounting the Glory of the Lord, through the media of different epithets. The Lord, he said, is Kavi (He knows the past, the present and the future), Puraana (the Ageless One, the effulgent light and life-spirit in all beings), Anu-shaasitha (He who lays down the Law which regulate the Mind and lead it on to its source and sustenance, the Universal Spirit). The audience was amazed at his encyclopaedic scholarship; but, that was all. He had no experience of the God whom he was delineating in such attractive colours. He had only learnt it from books, parrot-like from teachers. You must be guarded against pride that infects the scholar who has mastered a certain number of ancient texts. Do not judge others as inferior, because they do not participate in bhajans (group devotional singing), nagarasankeerthans (public devotional singing by moving groups), or your type of Study Circles. You can be very wrong, if you estimate a person's spiritual development, by mere externals. Inner purity cannot express itself through pompous show. Only He who sees into every heart can know who resides therein: Raama or Kaama (God or selfish desire). Of course, disciplines like bhajan, Nagarasankeerthan and japa (silent repetition of God's name) are needed for cleansing the mind; to cure the terrible malady of birth and death, the external medication of these saadhanas (spiritual practices) and internal medication of dhyana and sheela (meditation and virtuous conduct) are both essential. External discipline is dharma vidhya (the acquisition of righteousness as a way of living); internal discipline is Brahma Vidhya (the acquisition of spiritual experience as a perpetual treasure). That is why the Vedhas command "Sathyam Vadha, Dharmam Chara"---"Always speak Truth. Always do Right." This is. the way to God. Have the goal of putting into practice what you read. Every one of you is a pilgrim on that road proceeding at your own pace, according to your qualification and the stage reached by its means. The advice that appeals to one of you or applies to one of you might not be appropriate to another, who has travelled less distance or reached a more advanced state. When I tell one person to follow one line of saadhana (spiritual discipline), it is specifically for his benefit; do not take it as prescription for your benefit also, saying, "Swaami told him thus; let me also adopt it." Each has a different make-up---mental, physical and spiritual. The doctor directs one patient to drink curds and prohibits another from drinking it. When a man is obese, he advises certain types of food; when he is lean, he advises other types. When doctors who treat diseases of the body have to prescribe different remedies, how much more specific and personal must be the remedies for the complex and varied conditions of mental situations and spiritual yearnings and aspirations? Unless you make earnest inquiry, you cannot discover the remedy applicable to your temperament and its problems. Study with faith and devotion. Delve into the significance and the meaning of what you read; and, always have before you the goal of putting what you read into practice. Unless you do so, the Study Circle will remain a half-Circle for ever; it cannot be a full Circle. And, pay attention to one other point also. Do not confine your Studies to this Circle and these Books. The whole Universe is University for you. You can imbibe wisdom from the sky, the clouds, the mountains, the rivers, the daily phenomena of sunrise and sunset, the seasons, birds, trees, flowers, the insects---in fact, all beings and things in Nature. Approach these teachers, with awe, reverence and humility; they will respond with their lessons. Do not worry that you have no mastery of Samskrith; Samskaar (purificatory act) is enough equipment, for the University that lies around you. Samskrith is the language of the ancient Scriptures and of Classical Literature; Samskaar is the Language of the Heart, the refined medium of fruitful communion with Nature, in all the manifold outpourings of Divinity. Bombay, 3-3-1974 Where Divinity is sought after, one ought always to behave in the spirit of Love, devoid of the slightest trace of hate, envy and anger. When one cultivates the inner look, one attains the conviction of the basic equality of all. Sri Sathya Sai 31. To those who are Mine THE world is a furnace and factory; where man has to shape destiny by his honest untiring efforts. He who takes up this challenge and spends his allotted years and the skill and intelligence with which he is endowed, in purposeful activity, is really entitled to the status of Karma Yogi. You, who work in these Deogiri Mines are genuine Karma Yogis. For, from dawn to dusk, you utilise every ounce of your energy in work that is beneficial to yourself and the people of this country. You do not waste time in wasteful habits; you devote your strength and stamina for productive aims; you strive to feed and foster your wives and children and sit down for your meals with them in the happy family circle. Really God is delighted to reside in your hearts. Keep the heart pure, unsullied by evil or vice. Let the rays of Love' illumine it. Let the foul bats of hatred and greed fly away from the cavity of your hearts; let the clean air of mutual cooperation and help render the cavity safe and sweet.

You see these trees; they are able to stand firm and grow, because of the roots that have spread out of your sight. You see this garland in my hand. The hundreds of flowers are held together by a thread, which you do not see. You see this building over there; the walls have risen so high, because the foundations inside the earth are also high, though you cannot see them. So also, this world is so plentiful, so charming, so rich, so comfortable, so regular in its movements and moods, because it has an unseen master and law-giver, God. The unseen is the sustainer of the Seen.

The rich desire more and so are disappointed more

Have faith in His Grace, and lead a virtuous life, a life devoted to service of the weak, a life spent in thoughts about the might and glory of God. The nation relies on you to-supply it with very essential commodities; you are in duty bound to answer that call. Pray that you may carry out that duty well. God will certainly answer your prayer, for, you are so simple and innocent.

Let Me tell you that you are really more fortunate than most of the so-called rich, for, the rich do not sleep as soundly as you. Their burden of worry is much heavier; they desire more and so are disappointed more. They are tempted into worse and worse styles of living and so, they alienate themselves more and more from Grace.

When you spend your hours in thoughts about God, you are also free from evil ways. You will not be tempted to abuse others or harm them in any way. You live in Love, accepting all the events of life as His Gifts. Homes such as yours are, really speaking, heavens on earth; the joy that bubbles in your hearts is the symbol of Vaikuntha; the earnestness and care that you evince in your work is the sign of Kailaash, the abode of Shiva. Hearts dedicated to these noble ideals are indeed 'golden.' They cannot be tarnished by the ups and downs of life; they can remain unaffected and pure.

Approach your work in a reverential spirit

You are drawing wealth out of Prakrithi (Nature). Prakrithi is the manifestation of Purusha (God). When you desire to master Prakrithi, and bend it for your needs, you have to earn the Grace of Purusha. So, approach your work in a reverential humble spirit. Raavana sought Seetha (who is Prakrithi, since she was the daughter of the Earth, discovered by Janaka in the furrow on the field he was ploughing). But, he did not first win the Grace of Raama, the Purusha (God), who is the master of Nature. So he brought untold disaster on his head and on the heads of all his kinsmen, clan, and followers. Everyday before you begin work, pray to God a few minutes at least; and, at the end of the day, when the work is over, gather in some consecrated spot, a mandhir (hall of worship), and offer grateful thanks to the Lord, singing his name and meditating on his majesty. That will make you real Karmayogins, even heroes of the Karma path.

This place is full of charm; it is quiet, with a forest all around. Such retreats are sought after by saadhaks (spiritual aspirants) and sages, but, you have the luck to be working in these surroundings. This is a thapovan (hermitage), I should say, a spot which aspirants would love to settle down in. I bless that you all have lives of joy and happiness, of love and service, of the ceaseless shower of Divine Grace.

Deogiri Mines, 9-3-1974

32. The second visit

EMBODIMENTS of the Divine Aathma! I am addressing you thus, so that you may recall to your minds, at least occasionally; the noble truths that are treasured for your sake in the culture of Bhaarith; meditate on its width and depth and derive solace and strength therefrom. That is your privilege; the Avathaar (divine incarnation) has come to call your attention to the profundity and profitableness of the Dharma (righteousness) that Bhaarith has been upholding for centuries, but, which is undergoing neglect at the hands of the very children of this land.

Bhaarith was the home of many centres from where the message of eternal peace and Universal

Love spread all over the world; but, today; it is in the grip of fear and anxiety, hatred and greed.

The ways in which man spends his days are really ludicrous in the extreme. He craves happiness and is ever on the go in all directions in its pursuit. And, when he finds that when secured, the happiness is but a flash in the pan of misery, he starts cursing himself and' others. Though all the sacred books, all the saints of all the lands and all the creeds, and all the teachers and preachers have been saying that God alone is the source and spring of lasting happiness, man turns a deaf ear to the counsel and goes his own blind way.

The more you have, greater the bother and anxiety

There is the story of a young man who was riding a cycle on a dark night along a crowded road; the policeman on duty asked him to stop and alight, for, he had no lamp on his cycle. The fellow, however, shouted, "Policeman! Keep away. Of course, I have no lamp; but, beware, I have no brake, either!" That is the pathetic' condition of every one now. No one has the lamp of wisdom, or the brake of sense-control. How then can they go along the road to Aanandha (divine bliss), without causing injury to themselves or others? The cyclist must have both; man too has need of wisdom and self-control. Or else, he is certain to ruin this chance he has got to save himself.

Man has been sent into the world, in order that he may use the time and the opportunity to realise the truth that he is not man, but God. The wave dances with the wind, basks in the Sun, frisks in the rain, imagining it is playing on the breast of the Sea; it does not know that it is the Sea itself.

Until it realises that truth, it will be tossed up and down; when it knows it, it can lie calm and collected at peace with itself.

Food, clothing, shelter---these are incidental; the more you have, the greater the ill-health, the bother, the anxiety, the fear. And, nothing can save you from death, when you have to leave everything and disappear from the scene. If you are good, if you serve others to the best of your ability, and shower Love on all, then, though you may be away, your name will remain in the memory of man. That is the marble monument you can legitimately covet and work for. But, it is your duty to serve, and to be good, whether men honour you or throw scorn at you. What do you say, to your Master or Guru? "I Liberation want," or, "I Aanandha want," isn't it? Well. The means of getting it is in your own hands. Liberation and Aanandha (bliss) are in your hands already, packed between the upper cover (I) and the lower cover (want). 'I' means the 'ego;' 'want' means 'desire.' Remove the two covers, the ego and the desire. What remains is Liberation, Aanandha. In order to remove the upper and lower covers, intelligence is wanted. That is why Gandhiji went round the country with the prayer Sabko Sanmathi dhe Bhagavan: "O Lord, Give every one good intelligence."

Discover ways and means of expanding Love

Intelligence has to be directed to good ends; to seek and discover ways and means of expanding one's Love and deepening one's compassion. It should not descend to cynicism, and the search for faults in others. When a rose is held in the hand, its fragrance can give the holder joy; the fragrance can be enjoyed by people standing near. So too, when your intelligence is saturated with the fragrance of virtue and charity you can derive contentment and joy, and those around you also can share in the peace and harmony.

It was as early as 1949 that I first came to Saandur State. At that time, there was no chance like this for Me to meet so many of you and tell you about such valuable spiritual principles.

Everything in its own good time, as the saying goes. A flower blooms; but, a long time elapses before it grows into a fruit and is filled ,with nectarine juice. A child is born; but, he takes a long time to grow into a strong intelligent member of society. I am glad I came now and was able to meet and bless so many thousands of the people of Saandur.

Saandur, 10-3-1974

When you are in bed, asleep, dreaming and wandering through varied escapades and experiences, what has happened to the body which you had fostered as you yourself?

And while in deep sleep, where have all the levels of consciousness taken refuge? Sleep is short death: death is a long sleep.

You, the I in you, endow the inert material vehicle called body consciousness. You are the Cosmic Consciousness, God, temporarily in the role of 'I.'

The body-mind-complex is the instrument to be utilised for that Will. This is the message of Rig Vedha.

Sri Sathya Sai

33. The poetry of Love

ANTICIPATING the rains at the appropriate time of the year, as dictated by previous experience of himself and his forefathers, the ryot prepares the field with plough and harrow; then, when the rains come and soak the furrows, he sows the seeds, so that they may sprout and shoot through the soil. If he delays or desists, how can he reap the harvest? Or, if, when the crop is ready for the sickle, he does not reap the sheaves and bundles them home, how can his granary be filled with the food he needs must have?

 The rain is the gift of God; man can only pray for it, and propitiate God by righteousness. The ploughing, the sowing, the weeding and the reaping are the saadhanas man must undertake to deserve the Grace and to get the strength to thank God for His Gifts.
 Without God, life is like a school without a teacher; it is a wire with no current passing through it; it is a body with no soul. God is in us, around us and beyond us; as the air is imperceptible in the absence of breeze or of things that it moves; so God too can be known only by His manifestation in man and beast, plant and bird, in things and beings all around us. No one yet knows the mystery of the electric current, why it behaves so, what is the exact nature of its origin and flow; but, yet it is manipulated into a thousand uses and it is manifesting through a thousand appliances and instruments.
 God is a Reality ever present in every being So too, God is present everywhere; but we can understand only that part- of Him that manifests before our cognition. Ordinary people will swear that the earth does not move at all; it is held forth in poetry as a symbol of stability. But, it has two motions, both unbelievably fast! It rotates on its own axis at a speed which exceeds a thousand miles per hour; even while rotating so, the earth moves round the Sun at an astonishing rate of speed! But, do we notice it while it happens?
 God too is a reality, ever present in us and in every being; but, we miss Him, as we miss the movement of the earth. We have to infer God through proofs and evidences of His Providence, His Grace, His Majesty and His Glory, just as we infer the movements of the earth, the Moon and the Stars, by watching the sky, the seasons and the precise procession of day and night.
 We cannot describe God in the vocabulary learnt upon the earth. We have to experience the Bliss of realising Him as the core of our being. Man is endowed with a sense of wonder and awe, the sense which makes him either Karma Yogi (a participant), Inaana Yogi (an inquirer into the mystery) or Bhakti Yogi (a devout adorer). When he suppresses or ignores or bypasses this sense of wonder, he gets involved in the physical world, physical needs and physical pursuits. He starts worshipping Mammon and he strays away from the good, the just and the beautiful. He barter the Chalice of Bliss for a mouthful of dust.

 Poets have to discover God first Since we have today a few poets reading their poems before us, I am tempted to tell them something about their art. The poets of today are in the forefront of those who regard God as dead, a decorative piece, if not an encumbrance or a nuisance! They cater to their fans sweets coated with fashionable slogans and catchy phrases. They never care for the higher values of life, or the lasting ideals for living. Their poetry deals with external objects, sensuous emotions, and trivial tinsel. It is all extremely shallow and sapless.
 Real poetry emanates from the call of the Divine within, to express itself in sublime vocabulary.
 It grants lasting joy to the poet as well as the reader. It does not lower one's estimate of the world and its Creator. Readers must be drawn more often to read the poem, and each time they browse on it and ruminate over its lines, new vistas of meaning must open up before their minds. Then only can the poem be for all time and for all men.
 Poets have to discover God first and then, disseminate their ecstasy among those that are thirsty for that bliss. And, who has not got that thirst deep within himself?
 Every one is an exile, pining for his home in God. The pilgrimage towards God can be made smooth, quick and safe, by the fight type of poets. A blind person or a lame person cannot cross a river at the ford, all by himself. The lame man can ride on the shoulders of the blind man and lead him across, safe. For, he has the eye and the other has the purposefulness and the strength.
 The poet has the eye full of experience; he knows the path; he can avoid the pitfalls and help others to do likewise. He can encourage, enthuse.
 In the same manner, a person cannot, by himself, acquire the inaana (spiritual wisdom) or discover the path to realise the soul within him; the poet is the Guru (Preceptor) for such earnest Saadhakas (spiritual aspirants). He must be aware of this high role, as the Rishis (sages) of old were aware; he must train himself for this high status. When I speak to you, I do not pause to examine whether I am following your rules of grammar; the words pour from the heart, full of Prema (divine love). The heart renders all words sweet and soft.

Sweet words and sweet manners lead to sweet actions and sweet reactions.

There is no power more effective than Love

Fill the heart with love; then, the words coming out of the heart will be full of vitality and power.

There is no Shakthi (Power) more effective than Prema (Love). The grammar of Love makes the words enter the hearts of the listeners and moves them into acceptance, appreciation and action.

A child's prattle has no grammar, but, it wins the love of the mother.

Raamakrishna

Paramahansa did not know the word 'pension'; he said 'pence' once, instead of pension. Swaami

Vivekaananda interposed with the correct word, but, the Paramahansa said that the word did not matter, it was enough if what was meant to be communicated was understood. The bhaava (the idea intended to be communicated) is the real thing; the bhaasha (language in which it is clothed) is of superficial interest only. I want you to imbibe the bhaava; I want the poets to inculcate pure bhaava, not pretty bhaasha.

If you understand the bhaava which I am transmitting, then you can become genuine devotees and Saadhakas, and progress on the path of self-realisation. Now, there are bhaktas (devotees) by the million! They are increasing daily in number. And you might have noticed, Sai Babas too have become very large in number! Also, people claiming association with Me, claiming that I have blessed them more plentifully than others, and authorised them to go about among the bhaktas and gain importance by collecting funds or donations!

Real devotees will never announce such absurd claims or listen to such claims made by others. A true devotee will be steadfast in faith, whatever the ups and downs Of worldly fortune. He prays to the Lord not for padhaartham (material objects or the fulfilment of worldly desires), but, for Para-ar-tham (the happiness that is supra-worldly). The Paandavas were such devotees and so,

Krishna declared that He dwells in the heart of every one of those five brothers, as well as of their queen, Dhroupadhi. They are five examples for mankind, in this Kali yuga (Iron Age). I exhort every one to cultivate Prema, for, I am Prema, and when you manifest Prema, you are only expressing Me, the Indweller of your heart.

Hyderabad, 1-4-1974

Individual spiritual practice is the negative pole and service is the positive pole. The conjunction of both poles can alone bring success. The mind carries the Divine Principle (the Light of Love) and conveys it to all who contact it.

Sri Sathya Sai

34. Limits that liberate

THIS is a Yajna, a holy ritual. The participants in this 'sacrifice' can consider themselves rewarded if they acquire two benefits therefrom: Understanding the true state of Prakrithi (Nature) and Visualising the true path of spiritual effort. The students and teachers who have come from the far comers of this country and from beyond the seas are the officiating priests; they have to be vigilant and full of care, lest the Yajna be tarnished by sloth, waywardness. In the sacrificial fire it is customary to pour ghee and a variety of precious articles as oblation. But, here, in the fire of this Yajna, I call upon you to offer your selfishness and false pride. This Yajna needs two ceremonial rites: fix your mind on the higher truth; expand your sympathy and love so that they may encompass all living beings and activate you towards real service.

For, Life is a journey from the position 'I' to the position 'WE,' from the singular to the plural, from the imprisoned One to the liberated One, who is seen in the Many. The vision of the One, immanent in the obvious Many is the fulfilment of all the years of one's life. This is the teaching contained in the ancient texts and scriptures. But, these have been forgotten, ever since the minds of the people of this land were won over by Western Civilisation. When this happened, the goal of life became the amassing of money and not the awareness of the Self.

Man has in him a spark of the Divine

What has to be gained is not money, but, virtue. The means of sustenance are sought after and collected by birds and beasts; there is nothing specially human in this pursuit. When intelligence is used for the acquisition of food and physical comforts, man is lost. in animal pursuits. Human life is much more meaningful than that of birds and beasts. Man has in him a spark of the Divine; his body is the temple of God. So he must live in such a manner that the innate Divinity expresses Itself through Love, through service of others, and through the recognition of the Constant Presence of God, in him and all around him. When man dedicates his skills to the search for food, he estranges himself from the light that shines within him, the Aathma.

Man consumes as food many living beings, plants, eggs, fish, cattle, sheep, etc. These are born as human beings, on account of this act of consumption. But, since they have not had the education which can reveal the God within, they vegetate or stay brutish, without appropriate ticket or passport for rising higher than the human status in which they have been hurriedly placed. Like most men, they roll along from womb to tomb, bondslaves to the senses and the ills that the bondage brings inevitably in its train. Do not be content with slavery; yearn to reach the Sun of Splendour, the Source of Perfect Wisdom. Attempt to assimilate our ancient culture. Man does not discriminate and discover the special excellence of his own faith, as compared with the faiths of others, or, the difference between his beliefs and religion and the beliefs and religion that others hold dear. He does not evaluate his viewpoint, in the light of the viewpoints and attitudes of others. He does not weigh his acts and judge them, as worthwhile or waste. The seers and sages of India have laid emphasis on this discipline and prescribed measures to achieve these ends. But, now Indians have no knowledge of this discipline or of its value. As a consequence, the sons and daughters of India are pitifully silent, when cynics and purblind critics discredit their ancient culture and point the finger of scorn at what they interpret, as absurdities and inconsistencies. Do not join such people in their campaign of vilification. On the other hand, attempt to assimilate the culture and yearn to experience the Bliss it promises. It is indeed a great shame that people calling themselves Indians are not informed enough or experienced enough to silence the opponents and traducers of Indian Culture. The fault lies in the system of education that does not give them even a glimpse into the glory. The country is now sunk in fear and the cure lies in your understanding the remedies prescribed in the ancient texts, practising them and propagating them. You are now being led away by people who do not know the true characteristics of that Culture. And, the ideas you have about the epics and the Puraanas (mythological stories), the Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) and the Vedhas (sacred scriptures of the Hindhus) are warped by the prejudices that these people have implanted in you. For example, the story of Virgin Mary giving birth to Jesus Christ is acclaimed as an evidence of Divine Will, but, you who accept this interpretation, are not able to affirm that the birth of Karna to Virgin Kunthidhevi is equally an evidence of the same Divine Will. You are apologetic and ashamed when the fact of Karna's birth as a result of Divine Will is twisted and turned by the so-called scholars of today. Students are woefully deficient in general knowledge. People who are completely ignorant have no doubts or misgivings; those who are fully wise, too, have no doubts or misgivings. It is the half-baked variety of scholars and students that fall into the traps laid by the prejudiced and perverted. We hope that your contact with the ripe mind, the intelligent learning and the experience-filled hearts of those who come to speak to you during the course of this Camp will strengthen your resolve and enthuse you to foster and support the principles underlying Indian Culture. Education should not aim at merely making students get acquainted with a pile of books. It should insist on their assimilating the essence of the teaching which they elaborate. Now, students direct all their efforts towards acquiring more and more knowledge of just one specialised branch of learning. So, they are woefully deficient in general knowledge, and are unable to adjust their behaviour or conduct, and survive the vagaries of fortune. Minister Ghorpade referred to the relationship between Science and Religion. Of course, science has to develop more and more, for, science makes life more comfortable. It has given man many items that make living faster, more entertaining, and more standardised. But the trouble is that while Science and Technology have advanced by leaps and bounds, man has not learnt the art of using them in the right manner. He has allowed Science and Technology full licence to cater to his sensual desires and thereby demeaned his stature and status. Humanness and Godness co-exist as inseparables. You must avoid this mistake. At this age-period when your intelligence, your alertness, your awareness are all in good condition, you must learn how to keep your impulses under control, and to master the senses that tend to drag you into wrong and vicious paths. When the desire for pleasure overcomes your reason and your innate goodness, you are left only with the shape and form of a human being; you have no right to be called a human being. Humanness and Godness co-exist as inseparables; they are the negative and positive poles, that have to be together to produce the warmth of love and the light of wisdom. Once you have established your Self in the Higher Self, you would not get lost; you can then wander freely in the realms of the Unreal. If you have not experienced the Self as a spark of the Supreme Self, your wanderings will be as fruitless as the trekkings that animals do, by instinct. So try to transform the humanness with which you are endowed, into the Divinity which is its real core.

The Universe is the body of God; every particle in it is filled with God, His Glory, His Might,

His Inscrutability. Believe that God is the inner Truth in every thing and being. He is Truth, He is Wisdom. He is Eternal. Be humble, before the evidences of His Power and Majesty.

It is the God in you that guides and guards you

We have the example of Hiranyakashipu, the father of Prahlaadha. He was the repository of enormous knowledge. He had won enormous skills through his asceticism and efforts. He was so proud of his achievements that he denied God, and declared that he had no need for him. But, a day came, when even he had to call out and clamour for God. So too, you may deny or dismiss God, out of ignorance or perversity; but, a day will come when you have to pray for his compassion.

You are God in reality. It is the God in you that guides you and guards you. When you deny God, it is tantamount to your arguing, "I am born of a barren woman," or asserting very vociferously, "I am incurably dumb!" It is as absurd as denying yourself. This great Truth is well explained in the scriptures of this land, and every one of you has the right to know this heritage.

The seers of this land have marked out the limits and lines, to be respected by aspiring men. The Vedhas give these injunctions: Maathru dhevo bhava; pithru dhevo bhava; aachaarya dhevo bhava; Sathyam Vadha; Dharmam Chara.---"Revere your mother as God; Revere your father as God; Revere your Teacher as God; Speak Truth; Act Righteously." These five are as the five vital airs that sustain the body of man. Believe them as such; have unshakeable faith, that they have been laid down for your material and spiritual progress.

Practise these precepts sincerely and without slackening. That will ensure success in your pilgrimage from humanness to Divinity.

If you revere your parents today, your children will revere you in the coming days; for, the present shapes the face of the future, as it was, in its turn, shaped by the past. That is why I always insist, 'Be Good, See Good, Do Good; this is the way to God'.

Pleasure is but the interval between two pains

When you return to your places after the Summer Course, each one of you must be equipped with the knowledge of these five disciplines and the fervour to practice them in your daily lives.

Concentrate your attention for the full period on this task; do not mind the inconveniences, the change in diet, or the regulation of play and entertainment. Bear with these handicaps and rules patiently and gladly.

Life is all the sweeter for these restrictions and limits. You will encounter many obstacles in life, but do not be disheartened by them. Pleasure and pain alternate in life; in fact, pleasure is but the interval between two pains! And that makes it welcome and worthwhile. Have the future always in view, and put up with pain now, so that you can meet it boldly when it befalls you later in life.

Thyaaga (selfless sacrifice)'is the real Yoga (divine communion); renounce and become a master of yourself. Bhoga (enjoyment) brings about roga (disease); indulgence is the cause of disease.

Treat all who are sharing this Camp with you as brothers and sisters. Remember ever the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. People talk glibly while on platforms facing vast gatherings "Brothers and Sisters!" But are they prepared to divide their property among the brothers and sisters? Of course, you need not go as far as that; but, you must recognise the one Divine Principle that animates all. When you are inspired by that belief, surely, your eyes and ears will refuse to note differences and distortions. Your hands will refuse to engage themselves in low activities; your tongue will not tarnish itself by low talk; your mind will not entertain low thoughts and ideas. Resolve that you will attain and maintain this purity in thought, word and deed.

That is the central message of Indian Culture, which will be explained to you in all its interesting facets by the lecturers who have responded to the invitation of the Organisers.

Brindhaavan, 20-5-1974

The message of "Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man," which Jesus Christ proclaimed 2000 years ago, should become a living faith for the achievement of real peace and the unity of mankind.

The oneness of all creation affirmed by the ancient seers and sages must be expressed in a transcendental love which embraces all people regardless of creed, community or language.

Sri Sathya Sai

35. Terrible and tender

YAATHE Rudhra Shiva thanoo raghora paapa Kaasini---The Prajaapathi, who is the Divine Inspirer of the Vedhas has two natures and names, two forms and features---the terrible known as Rudhra, and the tender known as Shiva. When the Nara-simha Incarnation of God, human with the head of a lion, emerged from the pillar in the Audience Hall of Hiranyakashipu, Prahlaadha, his little son, saw Him as tender, charming and compassionate. For, he was saturated with devotion to God. But, the father who ignored God and dared to insult Him and injure His devotees, saw before him a terror-striking .form of total destruction. While 'Prahlaadha sang and danced in ecstasy, Hiranyakashipu shivered and shook in fear. It is therefore clear that man visualises in the One God the two opposites of terror and tenderness, reflections of his own mental make-up. The One God manifests Himself in these two aspects, so that the world may be sustained and fostered, improved and cleansed. These two---the terrible and the tender---are the characteristics found together in every single thing on earth, for, are not they all parts of the selfsame God? It is the mind that decides the desire Take the articles of food. it has the Shivam aspect, when taken in, intelligently and in moderate quantities. It can also be Rudhram, or devastating in its effects, if taken unintelligently and in excess. Every thing or thought that obstructs t-he surge of Aanandha (divine bliss)---every such situation, experience, idea---is Rudhra; every step towards limitation, regulation, control, progress, sublimation, is tender, Shivam, auspicious, fruitful, beneficial. It is the desire which haunts man that is responsible for making the one item, food, either a boon or a bane. It is the mind that decides the desire and directs it. A sharp knife can be used for slicing fruit or for stabbing: in the hands of a surgeon, it can save a life, rather than destroy one. The mind can liberate you from bondage or bind you more tightly with the objective world. God is Omnipresent, the inner motivator in every being. So, we have to' posit Him as resident in, and manipulating the mind too. When He manipulates it to our benefit we can call Him, Shivam; when He playfully or purposefully turns it against our best interests, we can call Him, Rudhra.

One point has to be emphasised here. We should not identify God as Shivam when we get happiness and Rudhram when we fall into misery. For, happiness and misery are not two distinct experiences. The absence of one is the presence of the other. Each is inextricably intertwined with the other. Undiluted happiness is a chimera; pleasure is the interval between two moments of pain; pain is the gap between two moments of pleasure. God is eager to award victory to the aspirants Again, God assumes or appears to assume the terrible aspect only to ensure the welfare of mankind and the happiness of the worlds. It is mentioned in the Epics and Puraanas that God placed various temptations and tribulations in the path of ascetics and aspirants, thus demonstrating that He is either cruel or vindictive or positively mischievous! No! God has no desire to prevent or postpone their spiritual progress; nor has He any apprehension that they might trouble Him if they succeed! He is eager to award them the victory they seek; that is the reason why He puts them through the obstacles. Being students, you know very well, that the University has prescribed certain examinations, at the end of every academic year. Do you ascribe tiffs system to any desire for persecuting you? Do you think it is a sign of displeasure? You know that they are conducted so that you could be promoted, aren't they? The Yogins, saadhaks, and aspirants are being tested by God, only to promote them. Instead of accepting the tests as signs of His Care and Love, people grow desperate and defeatist; they cry out, "O God! We cannot face these tests," just as students cry out, "We don't want examinations!" How then can progress be measured and achievement recognised? Those who pilot planes or drive cars or captain ships must possess certificates of having attained the required proficiency. They are tested before the certificates are awarded. Those saadhaks, who protest and clamour when tests confront them, are only proclaiming themselves as unworthy of higher positions, as content to remain where they are. God's test of Emperor Sibi's spirit of renunciation The story of Emperor Sibi is an illustration of this truth. Though endowed with power and authority, prosperity and wealth, Sibi was a genuine Saadhak, having attained a high stage in detachment and the spirit of renunciation. God decided to discover whether his achievements were deep-rooted and unshakeable. Agni (the God of Fire) and Indhra (God of the Heavenly Regions) took on the forms of a dove and a hawk. The hawk (Indhra) pursued the dove (Agm) across the sky, until the frightened bird fell into the lap of Sibi sitting on his throne, pleading for protection from the hawk. As befitted his Dharma, Sibi gave word that he would save the dove from its enemy and assured full protection for it. At that moment, the hawk presented itself before the Emperor and demanded its meal, its legitimate prey. "I am hungry, I had secured my food, you have deprived me of my meal," it complained. "Of what use is all your vaunted spirituality, if you rob me of my meal?" it lamented. At this, Sibi said, "Yes, I shall slice off flesh from my body weighing as much as this dove weighs; you can appease your hunger with that." The hawk agreed; a balance was brought; the dove was placed on one pan, pieces of flesh cut from the body of Sibi were placed in the other pan. But, 10 and behold, however many pieces or flesh were laid thereon, the pan on which the dove sat did not rise at all! It was indeed a mystery how a bird could weigh so much. At last, Sibi said, "Well. You can take all of me. Eat me whole. Here am I at your disposal." No sooner did he utter these words than the hawk became Indhra and the dove was transformed into Agni---Gods effulgent in their Glory! They were supremely happy at the depth of Sibi's spirit of renunciation; they blessed him profusely and departed. Though Indhra and Agni might appear to be terribly cruel in their dealings with Sibi, it was indeed only a test to provide him a chance to express his sovereign qualities of self-control, compassion, and charity. Krishna's test for Emperor Mayuuradhwaaja The Mahaabhaaratha has a fine story which proves the same point. The fact that God might assume terrible aspects in order to examine attainment and establish the truth of achievement is witnessed in the story of Mayuuradhwaaja. The Paandavas celebrated the Aswamedha Yaaga (Horse Sacrifice), and as part of that ceremony released the chosen horse so that it may take its own course across the length and breadth of the land. Whoever stops and binds the horse is thereby challenging the sacrificant for a fight; he has to win back the horse, after defeating the audacious obstructionist! Mayuuradhwaaja, a great devotee of Krishna, a virtuous ruler, a wise man learned in the Vedhas, a man of deep compassion, held the horse, and Arjuna, the Paandava hero decided to meet him in battle. But, Krishna advised him to desist; for, he desired to demonstrate to Arjuna the devotion of Mayuuradhwaaja which far surpassed his own; he also desired to proclaim to the whole world, the heights that Mayuuradhwaaja could reach in the realm of self-sacrifice and truthfulness. So, He proposed that He and Arjuna proceed to Mayuuradhwaaja's palace in the guise of a pair of Brahmins, seeking a meal. They were welcomed by the King, who offered them rich hospitality. But, before they could eat the very first mouthful, Krishna stopped very dramatically and recited a tale of woe. Emperor's humility rewarded, Arjuna's pride humbled "Listen! O Soft-hearted Emperor! As we were coming along through a forest on the border of your empire, a tiger snatched away the young son of my companion here. Before we could come up with the beast, it had swallowed half the body; but, it heard our piteous appeal, and promised to release the boy, and return him alive to us, provided it is given as substitute, one half of the sanctifying body of the pure and holy Emperor of the land, Mayuuradhwaaja. How can we relish your hospitality with this agony in our hearts? Promise to give the tiger half your body in exchange for the full living body of this Brahmin boy, and then, we shall partake of your hospitality". Mayuuradhwaaja agreed most gladly; when the lunch was over, he sat on the floor and instructed his queen and his son to saw his body into two halves. They placed the saw on the head and began the process of division, with the Brahmins witnessing the operation. They saw drops of tears in the left eye of the King. Krishna said, "O You are giving us the promised gift with tears, not with unalloyed willingness. I cannot accept anything given with tears." But Mayuuradhwaaja replied, "Sir, If I am unwilling or hesitating, both eyes should shed tears, shouldn't they? Only the left eye is shedding them now; and the reason is this- the right half is being used for a highly sacred purpose, to save a person from cruel death. But, what will happen to the left half? Cast away, to be eaten by dogs and vultures? So, the left half-is weeping, but the right half is jubilant that it is being put to some meritorious purpose." At that moment, Krishna manifested Himself to the great Mayuuradhwaaja in all His Glory and Majesty; He blessed him that he would have Krishna always installed in his heart and that he would be ever blissful and content. Arjuna too realised that there were devotees of Krishna far more advanced than he was His pride was humbled.

Mayuuradhwaja's humility was rewarded.

Tests such as these are evidences of Grace rather than of anger. The terrible aspect of God is not terrible in essence. God is described in the scriptural texts as, Raso vai sah---"He is sweetness Itself." How can sweetness ever become bitter? Godhead is a spotlessly clean mirror; you see in

It your own reflection. When you have terror-striking propensities, the reflection you see will strike terror into you. When you have soft harmless propensities, the reflection will be tender and soft. Do not lay the blame on Godhead, as you are prone to do. When everything goes right, you say that God has come close to you; when something goes wrong, you say that God has deserted you and gone afar! He does not move far or near. The distance from Him to you is as much as the distance from you to Him. He is everywhere. He always is in your heart. Recognise Him there; realise Him as closest and nearest to you. He is your own Self, neither terrible nor tender, but, simply IS.

Brindhaavan, 30-5-1974

You are not doing service for others. You are doing it always for yourselves, to the God in you, the God who is equally present in others.

Sri Sathya Sai

36. He sings ever

KRISHNA is the One Name signifying all Names, the One thought comprising all thoughts, the One deed encompassing all deeds. Utilise this festival which commemorates the advent of Krishna for developing bhakti (devotion to God). Bhakti is defined as the means of discovering the Divine Reality within each being. Four steps are laid down in the scriptures to help man succeed in this effort: discrimination between the permanent and the impermanent; withdrawal from the process of catering to the senses; positive control of the feelings, thoughts and pursuits; incessant yearning for liberation from all bonds.

Bhakti is the urge which manifests as all these four endeavours.

But, that word is applied to all sorts of desires and disciplines, so widely and so indiscriminately that it is identified even with epicureanism! Bhakti is derived from bha or Bhagavaan or God. It directs man to have God ever in mind and to cultivate love for God within him. It advises him to rid himself of egotism, to curb sensual desires. And to rise to the height of one's aspiration and achievement.

Bhakti leads man on to the Wisdom arising from the realisation of the unity called God. Just as childhood grows into old age and gets fruition thereby, devotion grows into wisdom, that is, bhakti grows into inaana (spiritual wisdom). There are some who deny the need for bhakti and assert that inaana can be won without the preliminary stage of bhakti. But, bhakti is as necessary and as inevitable a process as childhood.

Devotion is the most precious treasure

Devotion fosters the highest virtue; it is the most precious treasure; it is the truest path, the only way to God. Man must live in bhakti, for bhakti, through bhakti. For, bhakti is love of the purest and the noblest variety. Such love is the breath that sustains life, that supports the soul in the effort to merge in the Super-soul. The years of life spent without the light of love are years of ruin, of dust and disease. One could as well be dead, and decay for ever.

Love can transform man into a Divine Being; it helps him manifest the Divine which is his core.

Love can tame even the most ferocious of beasts. It prompts man to fill even the world with joy and to partake of that joy. It implants a deep distressing thirst for that exultation, that elevation of the spirit. The Avathaar (divine incarnation) of the Lord as Krishna and the career of Krishna on the earth were for the propagation and promotion of this Principle of Prema Divine Love), by precept and example.

Prema (the highest. Love) transcends the ego; it is pure; it is sweet, it is sacred and sanctifying.

Prahlaadha had that prema; so, whatever befell him---pain, grief, torture, disgrace---he bore them all, for he was unaware of anything except God whom he had enshrined in his heart. Meera too was so hungry for God and so agonised by separation from Him that she was always singing only of His charm, His might and His mystery.

God is the nearest and dearest kinsman for man

You must yearn to be blessed with that earnestness, that dedication and that devotion shown by Prahlaadha and Meera. That alone can give you the Supreme Bliss. But, now, though many declare their desire to earn that state of mind, their efforts are all towards exhibitionism and elaborate self-aggrandizement! Those days, the saadhana (spiritual discipline) was silent and subdued; now, it is all loud and lavish. Bhakthi reveals to you that God is in every one; so, the Love that surges in your heart towards God must flow towards all, for, all are embodiments of the self-same Divine. God is bound to you by the closest bonds of Love. Parents might fall out; brother might take up arms against brother; sister might slip away without recognising sister; children might not revere or even recognise their parents. Those are but 'social or economic ties,' they might declare. But, God will never desert you or deny you, or turn away from you. God is the nearest, the dearest, the most loving, the most eager companion, comrade and kinsman for man. This is 'demonstrated fully in the acts of Krishna, as related in the Mahaabhaaratha and the Bhaagavatha. Creation posits a Creator; nothing can happen without the Will to make it happen. Before the beginning -of things, there must be some Will that willed them to become. It can only be He that has become all this, whatever be the name or form that these have assumed. That Will is Love, it is Wisdom. It is Power, It is Bliss. Each one of you must 'insure your lives' with That. Like other Insurance institutions, this One cannot suffer loss or liquidation. It can never fail or falter. Pay the premium regularly as per the rules and you can claim the 'amount,' and receive it. Peace will dread the company of the egotist. The premium you have to pay is the 'Love' that springs from your heart towards all beings. Liberation from pain and grief, the Bliss everlasting, is the 'amount' you get. Or, we can picture the process as a Tree; which yields fruit at the end of a long process of cherishing care. Truth is the seed, faith in the Self, faith in the loving care of God---these are the roots that hold it firm and, feed it; the recitation of the Name, singing of hymns and psalms, meditation on the glory that encircles and elevates---these are the showers that feed the Tree. Bliss is the fragrant flower; Inaana (the wisdom that liberates) is the fruit. When man neglects this duty to himself 'he suffers grief. He is denied peace and security; he is restless and afraid, peace will dread the company of the self-centred egotist, the hard calculating miser, the sharp heartless demon. It keeps close to the stage, the generous giver, the virtuous earner, the wise seer. You must long to be of such type that peace can approach you and award you its presence. If, on the other hand, you stray away from the path of love, not only men but even nature will throw obstacles which hinder your progress. For, the evil in you will manifest as obstacle in your path. They are not laid there by your enemies, but, are set there by your own feelings and impulses. Think good, feel good, act good, speak good---the path will be free and fair, easy and effortless. Think evil, plan evil, do evil---the path will be strewn with fear and failure. Krishna taught his message by precept and example. The mind has to be cleansed for the path to be rendered smooth. Devotees do not deserve that status, merely by doling out charity or visiting holy places, or attending religious discourses; fill the mind with Love, remove hatred and envy; adopt straight thinking and planning, that alone can justify the status of devotee. Walk steadily and silently towards the goal, merging with God. This day, being the day reminding you of Krishna and His birth in human form, it is best to remember that, He taught this Message of Love by precept and example, throughout his earthly career. The Bhaagavatha and Mahaabhaaratha are full of lessons for you in the cultivation of bhakthi---one-pointed Love for God and all God's creatures. The Paandava Brothers and their consort were devotees of this high status. When Dhroupadhi their Queen, was humiliated and publicly dishonoured by their cousins in the Royal Assembly Hall, she did not call upon her spouses, the redoubtable heroes of many a battle, armed with heavenly bows and maces; she called upon Krishna, for she knew that He was her closest kinsman, shield and sword. Many years later, she quipped Krishna for responding rather late on that occasion, with His succour, but, Krishna asked her to repeat the words with which she called Him then; she said that she had called out, "Oh Dweller in the hearts of the gopees (cowherd girls)! Oh Wanderer in the floral bushes of Brindhaavan! Oh Resident of Dhwaaraka!" Then, Krishna explained that the delay was caused by the wrong address to which the prayer was directed. He said, "Your words forced Me to move on to Brindhaavan and Dhwaaraka, before I could come to where you were! If only you had cried, Oh Dweller in my Heart, I could have appeared before you at that very moment."

Develop the inward vision, taste the bliss it gives So, you should endeavour to install Him in your heart and be ever aware that He is there. Raadha alone had that consciousness and the uninterrupted Bliss derivable from that knowledge.
 Cultivate that knowledge, that closeness. When you are aware all the time, only of the body and its clamour for attention, how can you ever concentrate on the Dweller within? Develop the inlook, the inward vision, and taste the Bliss it gives, 'at least for half' a minute every day; that will surely confer on you great strength and security. Raadha prayed that Krishna must keep her in the cool shade of His Presence so that she might be saved from being scorched in the arid desert of earthly life.
 Embodiments of the Universal Aathma! Scriptures are endless; saadhanas (spiritual disciplines) are countless; opportunities are few; time is already overstocked. But, you can easily win the baffle of life, in spite of these handicaps, provided you arm yourself with Love, which is the essential teaching of all scriptures, the goal of all varieties of saadhana, the best use to which all opportunities can be put and the most profitable way of utilising the precious capital, time. The simple men and women who tended cattle in Gokul where Krishna spent His boyhood years knew no saadhana, learnt no Shaasthras (spiritual sciences), observed no vow, visiting no temple; they just kept the Name and Form of the God they moved with, ever in the shrine of their hearts. And they were saved.
 Embodiments of Love! You are agitated, I know, since the world today is tossed on waves of unrest and insecurity. But, do not blame the world for it. The unrest is but the image of your own unrest, which you have projected on the world. The insecurity is fuming in your minds; the fear is raising its hood in your heart. The forces of the world, the beings in Nature are all unaffected, unchanged! You have changed; you are nervous; you are afraid, you have no peace!
 Try to subsume the many in the One You wear coloured glasses and see everything through those glasses. Correct your vision; the world will get corrected. Reform yourselves; the world will get reformed. You create the world of your choice. You see many, because you seek the many, not the One. Try to subsume the many in the One; the physical bodies of yourself and others, the family, the village, the community, the state, the nation, the world, thus progressively march on towards more and more inclusive loyalties and reach the stage of Unity, in thought, word and deed. This is the saadhana of love, for, love is expansion, inclusion, mutualisation. The individual has to be Universalised, expanded into Vishwaswaruupa (Cosmic Form).

 When you enter upon this saadhana, you have to suppress all tendencies of hatred, greed, envy and malice, and concentrate on expanding love towards all, at all times. You might have to encounter opposition from all sides; but, consider these as tests of endurance, of sincerity and steadfastness. Your own parents, brothers and sisters, wife and children, kith and kin, friends and favourites, countrymen and others might try to turn you aside by ridicule and threats. You might even develop dislike for God for putting obstacles in the way; atheistic ideas might sprout in you trying to scotch the faith; but, you must overcome these with courage and confidence.
 The good are always the target of malice and envy, slander and abuse from the wicked. Be assured that your goodness can be made tough enough to stand these ordeals. Avathaars (divine incarnations) too are not exempt from the attentions of these wicked forces.
 Forces of evil dig for their own downfall Krishna had to encounter these obstacles from the very cradle, right up to the finish of His life on earth. Personal spite, false slander, unfounded abuse and defamation followed Him at every step.
 Demons who could not tolerate the Light and the Love that He cast around Him conspired to tarnish His Name and obstruct His Mission.' They tried to bind Him, to fail His plans and pervert His instruments. But, Truth triumphed and falsehood stood exposed and disgraced.
 Truth may be clouded for some little time by the fog of slander but, victory is certain. The forces of hate will be defeated by their own wiles; they dig for their own downfall; their action results in reactions, ruinous for themselves. In the Court of Dhritharaashtra, the Kauravas planned to bind Krishna and put Him out of action, when He went to His Court on the mission of peace; but, what happened? The stratagem recoiled on themselves and they were destroyed. Krishna was unscathed by their wiles and their campaign of defamation. When the Kauravas were indulging in their campaign of slander, many devotees were greatly distressed. For example, Sahadheva, the youngest of the Paandava Brothers, welcomed Lord Krishna back to their camp, with the words, "I am not concerned at failure of your mission; I know that it is all part of your plan. But, I am overjoyed that you have returned unharmed, from that nest of demons."

Krishna is undefeatable, ever pure, ever bright and ever effulgent in renown. Those who try to fail Him are for ever tarred by their own blackness. The malignancy of those who cannot bear His Glory will cause their eternal disgrace; it cannot affect Him in the least. His Glory will increase a hundredfold with every challenge from these pedlars of slander. Wicked men tried to bring the Lord into disrepute by persecuting and torturing devotees like Prahlaadha; but, when they stood up to every challenge with joyful fortitude, they failed ignominiously. Prahalaadha gained vaster glory and the Lord's Truth was magnificently vindicated.

Even Avathaars have faced campaigns of slander. Persons who cannot tolerate the Glory of the Avathaar have indulged in such campaigns, in every Age! They have contributed to the heightening of the splendour and the spread of the message, in every age. Their activities are all instruments to the propagation of the glory throughout the world.

Even today, such things happen; but, all of you must recognise their inevitability and their fundamental falsehood, and carry on your saadhana in full faith and assurance, with undiminished enthusiasm and joy. The Sai Principle, the Sai Divinity can never be affected by any slander; it can never be shaken by any tactics; its progress can never be halted. Do not pay heed to the barkings you hear.

A stray dog stops and looks at its own shadow in the stream; it mistakes the shadow for another dog and starts barking aloud. This sets all the dogs in the neighbourhood, and later in the region, bark in unison. The reason why first dog barked is its own ignorance of fact. The reason why the other dogs followed suit is that the first dog called the tune. A huge scare is built on a patent falsehood. Thus the story goes on, adding one thing to another.

Just as devotees remained unruffled in the Age of Krishna, you too must stand firm and be unaffected. Faith must endow you with courage and calmness. The life of Krishna teaches you this lesson more than others' do not lend your ears or mortgage your minds to purveyors of scandal or lies.

Devotion to the Divine will give you prosperity

Krishna had to meet these traducers and destroy them one by one, through His life. His parents, His companions, His devotees, no one had peace from this tribe. The message of this Festival is that you must see the Truth that is covered by all the tales and legends that tarnish the Name.

Devotion to the Divine will give you bliss, and prosperity and peace. It cannot inflict pain, perturbation or personal anxiety. It fosters love and brings all together as one band of brothers.

The Avathaar will not be affected in the least by these trivial tactics. It is love itself; so, it is always bliss, always happy in song and dance.

Krishna lived all His years singing and dancing in the ecstasy which was His very nature. He was humming a tune within Himself all the while, whether He was on flower bed or a battle field.

I too am unaffected by praise or blame. My Aanandha (bliss) never suffers diminution. Where there is love, there is aanandha; where there is aanandha, there is music. That is the reason why Krishna sang the Bhagavath Geetha (the Celestial song) while the clarion calls to start the holocaust were rising from the serried ranks, eager for the fray.

Love knows no fear, no untruth, no anxiety, no grief. I am love; I shower love; I share love; I am pleased with love; I bless that you have more and more of love to more and more Beings. Love is God, Love is Love---that is the message of Sri Krishna janmaashtami. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 10-6-1974

Just as there are three basic energies that govern man---the physical, the metaphysical and the psychical, the Aadhi-bhowthik, the Aadhi-dhaivik and the Aadhi-aathmic---Gaayathri has three facets: Gaayathri, Saavithri and Saraswathi. Gaayathri fosters the metaphysical, Saavithri, the physical, and Saraswathi, the psychical. These three karanas or instruments have to be cleansed and sublimated so that man can realise the goal of life.

Through the recital of Gaayathri manthra and meditation thereon, this great task can be achieved.

Sri Sathya Sai
37. Kindle the lamp

DURING the last thirty days, you have been listening to expositions of the meaning and significance of Vedhic words, like Brahman, Prajaapathi, Vaachaspathi, Saraswathi, and Brihaspathi; you have also been told the real significance of the name Bhaarith that this country bears. It is necessary that you should recognise, even when you are students, that the Vedhas are the basis of the culture of this country; the guides for material as well as spiritual progress. When you understand the hymns, the dedicatory verses, the ritual directives, and the invocatory formulae contained in the Vedhas, life would be rendered peace-filled and secure, against the winds of fortune, both fair and foul. It is natural for every being to seek happiness. Yet, each being must know that happiness does not emanate from the material things of the objective world.

You are students and so, I must tell you that the type of education that does not confer on you abiding happiness, the unshakeable sense of equanimity, the awareness of the Divinity behind every particle in the Universe, is not entitled to that name. Education must implant elevating ideals, and kindle the lamp of wisdom. Nowadays, education is aimed at providing a living; it is a bread-and-butter trade. But, do we not have millions who have not gone through this mill, wasting money and precious time in the process like you, but yet earning a decent living and enjoying peace and joy therein?

As science advances, man becomes a menace to man. Though they have not gone through school and college, they have had the more valuable schooling in the University of Life. Any system of education that does not help you to discriminate between fight and wrong, that does not instil the fear of sin and the love of God, train you in the codes of humility and reverence, widen the horizon of your wonder, encourage you to worshipfully serve your parents, and inspire you to dedicate your skill and attainments to the progress of your family, village, community, country, language and nation stands condemned! The corruption and cruelty that are rampant in the country can be traced to this grave defect. Selfish greed, pomp and injustice are prevalent in every field. The nation has no peace and the sense of security is feeble. As science develops and technology advances, humility and mutual love should also develop to the same extent. Or else, man becomes a menace to man.

Human sensitivity must be so high that no one can tolerate the misery of others. But, when one is not moved by the misery of even one's own-parents how can this trait be cultivated?

Students! You are pure in heart. Do not slide down into such depths. Bring to mind the Glory of Indian Culture. Do not crave for the trivial pleasures of the senses; do not condemn yourselves to be lazy lubbers; be active, earnest; bear with all troubles and disappointments; strive on and march towards success, or else, the nation will weaken and decline. Serve your family and be examples to others. You are a pin or bolt or nut or wheel in the huge machine called the Cosmos. If the pin is not in perfect shape, the entire machine will be hampered. Do not get disheartened and disabled; if you do, you are injuring the welfare of the whole world. Remember that Indian Culture is built on the faith Soham, 'I am that,' the undefeatable, majestic, mighty That. It is not built on the somari principle (the principle of laziness). True rest is ensured only by hard work. Sleep is the reward for hard physical labour. And, if sleep does not switch off the mind of man for some hours everyday, he would have spun out all sorts of wild fancies. Young people, that you are, work hard; serve the interests of your family and country, and be examples to others. Imagine how your forefathers during the Vedhic Age engaged themselves with no respite, in good deeds and beneficial acts, so that they could be happy and make others happy. But, alas, the descendants of those men have devised a system of education which does not ensure even a decent daily life.

Education was then called, Swaadhyaaya: (Swa---one's own; adhyaya---study). Study for one's own best progress, (that is, spiritual progress) which gives peace and joy immeasurable. Today this type of progress has become a matter of ridicule; the run is all behind fame, sudden fortune and power over fellow-beings, and their fates. The Vedhavidhs (men learned in the Vedhas), had but one ideal---the discovery of the I which they felt they were.

The Vedhavidhs marked three stages in the life of man and assigned one aspect of God to preside over each stage. The first---where man is deep in activity of some sort or other in Karma---is presided over by Vaasu. The second, under the protection of Rudhra, is filled with reverential worship of the God in all, discovered through the impact of Love. The third is the stage of inaana, the Supreme Wisdom, presided over by the source of Illumination, Aadhithya or the Sun.

Fancy and fantasy rule the mind of man. This is the genuine Bhaaratheeya Vision, to transform life into a pilgrimage towards the God resident in oneself, a steady march, along the straight path to Bliss. There is no such steadiness now. Fancy and fantasy rule the mind of man. You desire one thing in the morning; at noon, you change over to something else. That desire will not persist until evening. If your desire is fulfilled, you praise God and parade your devotion. But, if it does not prevail, you throw God overboard, and parade your unbelief!

I am reminded of a story in this connection. A clever villager used to enter the village temple in the early hours of the day, and sit on, with eye closed, in the hope that people will honour him as a great devotee. Since he did not get up and go about his business until about midnoon, the temple priest was hard put to close the doors and go home for his daily tasks there. So he struck upon a plan to stop the nuisance. He knew that the closed-eye session of dhyaanaa (meditation) was all a pretence. He hid himself behind the Idol of the Deity, and when the villager was well set in his pretence of deep meditation, he said, in an imposing sonorous voice, "Listen! Excellent Devotee! I am mightily pleased by your asceticism and your steadfastness. Come. I shall merge you into Myself." At this, the fellow ran fast out from the temple, leaving no trace where he had gone to!

Parents should practise the values of Indian Culture The devotion and sense of surrender of men are similiar to those of this impostor. Faith is weak, discipline is absent; earnestness is lacking. But, do not forget or ignore God; do not be misled into attachment for the world; do not dread death; be happy with whatever you have and hold.

Live ever in the remembrance of the Name of God.
I wonder how you would follow this advice! For, I know you are reluctant even to repeat the Name a hundred times a day or twenty five or at least ten times. You wag and waste your breath for hours together, but, when it comes to the pronunciation of the Name of the God, you have neither the time nor the inclination.

There was a son who was instructed by his aged father to repeat the sacred Gaayathri exactly 108 times a day. The fellow promised to do so but, he-simplified the task by reciting it only once, and then, saying ditto, ditto, 107 times! The same boy secured a scholarship to study in America. The father took him to a temple near the airport from where he was to board the plane, and made him swear before the idol of Dhevi that he would adhere to Indian culture and tradition while abroad. But, he returned quite lost to all the values cherished in that culture and tradition.

The astounded father took him to the same temple, and when the son stood before the Goddess, he accosted Her, "How do you do, mummy?" and moved forward to shake hands with Her. The father was so shocked at this impunity that he dealt him two severe blows on the spot.

Fathers today do not treat their sons so; they appreciate outlandishness, brazenry, vices and foppery. In fact, they are themselves even worse examples. The parents and the teachers have to learn and practise the values of Indian Culture. When the tank is full, the taps will yield water.

But, when the tank is dry, how shall the thirsty quench their pang?
Parents and teachers can earn My Grace only by becoming good and worthy examples to their sons and daughters, or their wards and students. You claim to have devotion to Me; but, you must examine and discover whether I am pleased with you. You must examine yourselves every moment whether you are observing the disciplines I have laid down, the programmes of service I have marked out. That is the way to earn My Love, Love others and serve them; then, you can win My Love.

Brindhaavan, Summer Course, 17-6-1974

The seers of God proclaim what they have visualised, and when people put their faith in it, it is condemned as blind faith as if belief of people in the number of star clusters in the Milky Way as proclaimed by those who have seen them is not blind! Have faith in the Divine and one can experience the Divine. Have faith in oneself and one can have faith in the Divine.

Sri Sathya Sai

38. Who is Sai?

GOD is inscrutable. He cannot be realised in the outer objective world; He is in the very heart of every being. Gemstones have to be sought deep underground; they do not float in mid-air. Seek God in the depths of yourself, not in tantalising, kaleidoscopic Nature.

The body is granted to you for this high purpose; but, you are now misusing it, like the person who cooked his daily food in the gemstudded gold vase that came into his hands as an heirloom.

Man extols God as omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent, but, he ignores His Presence in himself! Of course, many venture to describe the attributes of God and proclaim Him to be such and such; but, these are but their own guesses and the reflections of their own predilections and preferences.

Who can affirm that God is this or that? Who can affirm that God is not of this form or with this attribute? Each one can acquire from the vast expanse of the ocean only as much as can be contained in the vessel he carries to its shore. From that quantity, they can grasp but little of that immensity.

Each religion defines God within the limits it demarcates and then claims to have grasped Him.

Like the seven blind men who spoke of the elephant as a pillar, a fan, a rope or a wall, because they contacted but a part and could not comprehend the entire animal, so too, religions speak of a part and assert that its vision is full and total.

There is only one religion, the Religion of Love

Each religion forgets that God is all Forms and all Names, all attributes and all assertions. The religion of Humanity is the sum and substance of all these partial faiths; for, there is only one Religion and that is the Religion of Love. The various limbs of the elephant that seemed 'separate and distinct to the eye-less seekers of its truth were all fostered and activated by one single stream of blood; the various religions and faiths that feel separate and distinct are all fostered by one single stream of love.

The optical sense cannot visualise the Truth. It gives only false and fogged information. For example, there are many who observe My actions and start declaring that My nature is such and such. They are unable to gauge the sanctity, the majesty and the eternal reality that is Me. The power of Sai is limitless; It manifests for ever. All forms of 'power' are resident in this Sai palm.

But, those who profess to have understood Me, the scholars, the Yogis (spiritually advanced persons), the Pandiths (scholars), the Inaanis (liberated persons), all of them are aware only of the least important, the casusal, external manifestation of an infinitesimal part of that power, namely, the "miracles"! They have not desired to contact the Source of all Power and all Wisdom, that is available here at Brindhaavan. They are satisfied when they secure a chance to exhibit their book-learning and parade their scholarship in Vedhic Lore, not realising that the Person from whom the Vedhas (sacred scriptures of the Hindhus) emanated is in the midst, for their-sake. They even ask, in their pride, for a few more chances!

'Defeats' experienced by Avathaars are part of Leela

This has been the case, in all ages. People may be very near (physically) to the Avathaar (divine incarnation), but, they live out their lives unaware of their fortune; they exaggerate the role of miracles, which are as trivial, when compared to My glory and majesty, as a mosquito is in size and strength to the elephant upon which it squats. Therefore, when you speak about these

'miracles,' I laugh within myself out of pity, that you allow yourself so easily to lose the precious awareness of My Reality.

My power is immeasurable; My truth is inexplicable, unfathomable. I am announcing this about Me, for, the need has arisen. But, what I am doing now is only the gift of a 'Visiting Card!' Let Me tell you that emphatic declarations of the Truth by Avathaars were made so clearly and so unmistakably only by Krishna. In spite of the declaration, you will notice in the career of the same Krishna that He underwent defeat in His efforts and endeavours, on a few occasions; you must also note that those defeats too were part of the drama which He had planned and which He Himself directed. For example, when many Kings pleaded with Him to avert the War with the Kauravas, He confessed that His Mission to the Kaurava Court for ensuring peace had 'failed!'

But, He had not willed that it should succeed! He had decided that war would be waged! His Mission was intended to punish the greed and iniquity of the Kauravas and to condemn them before the whole world.

"Do not crave from Me trivial material objects"

Now, I must tell you, that during this Sai Avathaar, there is no place for even such 'drama' with scenes of failures and defeats! What I will, must take place; what I plan must succeed. I am Truth; and Truth has no need to hesitate, or fear, or bend.

'Willing' is superfluous for Me. For, My Grace is ever available to devotees who have steady Love and Faith. Since I move freely among them, talking and singing, even intellectuals are unable to grasp My Truth, My Power, My Glory, or My real Task as Avathaar. I can solve any problem however knotty. I am beyond the reach of the most intensive inquiry and the most meticulous measurement. Only those who have recognised My Love and experienced that Love can assert that they have glimpsed My Reality. For, the Path of Love is the Royal road that leads mankind to Me.

Do not attempt to know Me through the external eyes. When you go to a temple and stand before the Image of God, you pray with closed eyes, don't you? Why?

Because you feel that the inner eye of Wisdom alone can reveal Him to you. Therefore, do not crave from Me trivial material objects; but, crave for Me, and you would be rewarded. Not that you should not receive whatever objects I give as sign of Grace out of the fullness of Love.

I shall tell you why I give these rings, talismans, rosaries etc. It is to signalise the bond between

Me and those to whom they are given. When calamity befalls them, the article comes to Me in a flash and returns in a flash taking from Me the remedial Grace of protection. That Grace is available to all who call on Me in any Name or Form, not merely to those who wear these gifts.

Love is the bond that wins Grace.

There is no creature without Love

Consider the meaning of the name, Sai Baba. Sa means 'Divine;' ai or ayi means 'mother' and Baba means father. The Name indicates the Divine Mother and Father, just as Saamba-shiva, which also means the Divine Mother and Father. Your physical parents exhibit Love with a dose of selfishness; but, this Sai "Mother and Father" showers affection or reprimands, only for leading you towards victory in the struggle for self-realisation.

For, this Sai has come in order to achieve the supreme task of uniting the entire mankind, as one family through the bond of brotherhood, of affirming and illumining the Aathmic Reality of each being in order to reveal the Divine which is the basis on which the entire Cosmos rests, and of instructing all to recognise the common Divine Heritage that binds man to man, so that man can rid himself of the animal, and rise into the Divine which is his goal.

I am the embodiment of Love; Love is My instrument. There is no creature without Love; the lowest loves itself, at least. And its self is God. So, there are no atheists, though some might dislike Him or refuse Him, as malarial patients dislike sweets or diabetic patients refuse to have anything to do with sweets! Those who preen themselves as atheists will one day, when their illness is gone, relish God and revere Him.

I had to tell you so much about My Truth, for, I desire that you should contemplate on this and derive joy therefrom, so that you may be inspired to observe the disciplines laid down by Me and progress towards the Goal of Self-realisation, the Realisation of the Sai that shines in your hearts.

Brindhaavan, 19-6-1974

If you yield to alpabuddhi (inferior thoughts), you will be losing the akhanda-thathwa (principle of the Universal). Never give ear to slander, ridicule or praise.

They are all bubbles on the surface. They are mere manipulations of words, the magic of vocabulary, the tamasha of style, the dance of phrases. Learn the means of winning Grace and earning purity from those who know: the elders, the scholars who have put their learning into practise.

Attachment causes pain and detachment results in joy. But, you cannot easily detach yourself from activity; the mind clings to something or other. Make it cling to God, let it do all things for God and leave the success or failure of the thing done to God, the loss and the profit, the elation or the dejection. Then, you have the secret of Shaanthi (peace) and contentment.

Sri Sathya Sai

39. An epic moment

THE agonising years of torment, hope, and disillusion were over; the moment of decision had come, though it was sought now, by the sharp edge of the sword and not the soft words of Lord Krishna. The armies gathered by the Kauravas from their kingdom and from their allies were standing face to face with the forces of their Paandava cousins.

Cavalry, chariotry, elephantry and infantry, eager to start the destruction of the enemy, the chief actors all dressed and equipped for the fray! Conches were blown; trumpets rent the sky with their blare. The air was tense with hope, fear, anxiety and anger. Blood in million bodies became redder and warmer; hearts pounded quicker; arms grasped weapons in deadly grip.

Dharmaraaja, the 'eldest of the Paandava brothers, suddenly, removed his footwear; he laid aside his armour; he slid from his chariot; he walked towards the opposing cohorts, towards Bheeshma, the Generalissimo of the enemy forces. Dhuryodhana, the eldest of the Kaurava brothers, the cousin most responsible for the war, the unyielding opponent of the Paandavas, saw Dharmaraaja cross over to the aged Bheeshma. He was overjoyed; he guessed that Dharmaraaja had decided surrender, for, he was by nature against bloodshed and battles.

Dharma will guard those who follow Dharma

The four brothers of Dharmaraaja were astounded. Bheema, the redoubtable hero of a hundred contests with the Kauravas, the person most eager for the battle to begin, felt foiled of victory.

He recalled the many occasions when Dharmaraaja had stood in the way of revengeful action against the Kauravas. He feared that he would apologise and withdraw like a craven from the bloody gamble of war. Arjuna, the formidable bowman, witnessed his brother's defection with horror and anger. Nakula and Sahadheva, the twins, were struck dumb at their own helplessness.

Lord Krishna studied the situation from the seat of the charioteer on the chariot of Arjuna, which was in the front line of the Paandava army. He signed to the four of them to follow their eldest brother and do likewise. He said, "All these years you have revered him, and trod on his footsteps. Do so now. Do not hesitate; do not doubt." Dharmaraaja was the very embodiment of Dharma (right action); he knew the right and he practised it whatever the consequences. He knew that Dharma will guard those who follow Dharma. He never did a hypocritical or a non-Vedhic act; he never took a wrong step. He went straight to Bheeshma and fell at his feet. Standing before him with folded hands and bowed head, he prayed. "Grandfather! We had no chance to experience the love of the father; he passed away too soon. You brought us up from infancy with love and care, and made us what we are today. We have no fight to 'fight against you; but, fate has conspired to bring us now into battle with you. Please have mercy on us; permit us to raise our arms against you." Adherence to Dharma ensured Paandavas victory. Bheeshma was naturally charmed and overjoyed at the humility and righteousness of Dharmaraaja; his eyes were filled with tears at the strange turn that destiny had taken; he blessed him and said, "Dharmaraaja! You have stuck to Dharma, in spite of the temptations this situation has placed before you. What a noble example you have set before the world! This Dharma that you follow will itself give you victory." Next, Dharmaraaja and the brothers moved towards General Dhrona, the Brahmin Preceptor, who had taught archery to both the Kauravas and their cousins, the Paandavas. Dharmaraaja fell at his feet too and prayed, "Highly revered Preceptor! We five are your pupils; how can we rightfully take up arms against our Preceptor? The times have indeed gone awry. Pardon us, for this wrong. Permit us to engage with you in battle." Dhrona, the Aacharya, was visibly moved by this appeal. "Ah! How great and good, this Dharmaraaja is! Even at this moment when the hounds of war are to be let loose to spread death and fury, he is sticking to the dictates of Dharma!" Dhrona was thrilled at the thought. He clasped Dharmaraaja in his arms and said, "Son! You are dearer to me than Aswathaama, for, I am drawn to him only by duty, whereas I am drawn to you by love. You are all my sons, for, I love you as such.

Your right will certainly earn victory over our might." It is this adherence to Dharma that ensured their victory. Or else, was there any one on earth at that time who could force the redoubtable Bheeshma to lay down his arms? Could any one excel Dhrona in archery? The Kauravas, whom Bheeshma and Dhrona sought to support were defeated because they trod the path of adharma (vice), while the Paandavas never deviated from the path of Dharma. Dharma gave them the skill, strength, courage and tenacity to defeat these great masters of military strategy. The Kauravas went counter to their parents and their God. Their mother, Gaandhaari, counselled her children in a thousand ways not to continue their vendetta, against their cousins, the Paandavas. But, they did not heed her. Their father Dhritharaashtra pleaded with them to desist from the path of hate; but, to no avail. They turned a deaf ear to the advice offered by their Preceptor, Dhrona, to make 'peace with the Paandava cousins and give them their legitimate share of the realm. When the Lord, Sri Krishna Himself, went to them as a messenger of peace, as an Ambassador with the Mission of Peace, they refused to listen to His Divine words; they attempted even to overpower Him and put Him into bonds! If you follow the same line of wilful blindness, you will have to meet the same fate---total destruction. The five Paandava brothers are, you should believe, worthy of your reverence and have to be regarded as your 'five vital airs,' 'five sheaths,' 'five sense-organs.' Have them as ideals to be followed; you can then win the Grace of God. The memory of their travail and triumph will act as a manthra to purify and strengthen you, and elevate you to the Divine status which is your heritage. Brindhaavan, June 1974 40. Vaster than the vastest!
BRAHMAVIDITH Brahmaiva bhavathi (He who knows the vastest becomes the vastest), say the rishis (sages). Brahman is the word used for what they indicate as the vastest, which words cannot reach nor the imagination conceive. There is a Brahma, the First of the Trinity, with four heads, the Creator, from whom we have to distinguish this vast immanent Principle. This Brahman is described, not as one of three, but as the One without a second. The Vedhic statement Sarvam Brahma mayam ("All is Brahman") is the key to the understanding to the Universal Eternal Principle. The Brahman need not be sought, at some far distant spot, on the Himaalayas or in the depths of space. Some cosmonauts when they landed on Moon reported that God does not exist, because they did not spot Him anywhere in their spatial journey, as if He lives and moves in space and accosts all who dare flit through His corridors! Brahman is the Reality of the seeker, the Cosmonaut, the person who asserts its existence as well as of the person who doubts or denies. To say that the Divine is a fiction of some one's fancy is to be false to one's own genuine truth. The Divine is what integrates and unites all this diversity into one single essence.

Brahman is the activity in every atom and cell

We can easily become aware of it, if we observe the prescribed course of saadhana (spiritual discipline) and have the elementary faith to impart sincerity for that saadhana. One must sharpen the intellect and widen the imagination to be able to conceive of Brahman, which is subtler than the subtlest, vaster than the vastest. Brahman is the very urge behind all aspiration and all achievement, even the aspiration to know Brahman. It is the activity in every atom and cell, as well as in every star and galaxy,

Brahman also means sound, voice, word, manthra (sacred formulae), and, through the sound

OM, as well as through various other manthras, it is possible for man to develop the superfine intellect necessary to grasp the immanent and transcendent principle called Brahmam. Brahman means Brh or big, the biggest, the vastest. It is described as bigger than the biggest, vaster than the vastest. The Universe is the body of Brahmam that emerged from it when the desire to become many arose in it. The Universe rose when Brahman uttered the first word, and so, the vaak (word) is also called Brahman. The word is also called padha and all created things are referred to in Samskrith as padha-artha (the meaning of the spoken word). For, when the word was uttered, the thing was created or became manifest. The word produced its meaning, namely, the thing!

The Infinite Eternal Brahman can be cognised as having three attributes, for the convenience of awareness: Sath, Chith and Aanandha. The minutest particle in the Universe has these three characteristics, and the vastest too. Man too is the embodiment of Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss absolute); but, since he is too attached to the body and its impulses, he is unable to dive deep into his reality and benefit from the springs of Chith and Aanandha that are there.

See all as parts of the same whole

The attraction that the vast Brahman has for the anu (the small) is the attraction of the whole for the part. It is the basis of all love---the love of the mother, of the father and son, of the friend, the spouse and even of the devotee towards God. The jeeva (the individualised being) loves the Brahman or the totality of which it is part. See all as parts of the same whole to which you belong; then there can be no hatred or envy or greed or pride.

Saraswathi, the Consort (the potent power) of Brahma is celebrated as the Goddess of vaak (word) or the urge to express, to manifest. Her vehicle is, according to the Vedhas, the Hamsa (Celestial Swan), the pure bird that is endowed with the rare power of discriminating between water and milk, even when they are mixed and receiving only the milk (that is to say, separating the valid from the invalid, the lasting from the fragile, the true from the untrue). Moreover, Hamsa is a symbol of Soham, the seed-manthra that is uttered by human breathing (Soham-Soham; Soh means He and ham means I; He is I). I and He are the same from birth to death, meaning that the jeeva is Brahman, no more and no less. There is certainly difference in quantity but there is no difference in quality, between the two. A drop of sea water is as brackish as any other; you need not taste the entire sea to know that. The jeeva is Sath-Chith-Aanandha; the Brahman is also Sath-Chith-Aanandha. That is the reason the jeeva is asked to announce itself as "Aham Brahmaasmi"---"I am Brahman." It is as true as the drop of sea water saying, "I am the sea."

Yogis (spiritually advanced persons) can cognise this easily. That is why one yogi sang, "Go, mind! Rush to where the Ganga and Jamuna are." This does not mean that the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) should go on pilgrimage to Prayaag, Allahaabad where the two rivers meet.

Ganga and Jamuna are the Ida and Pingala, the two nerve-channels through which the Kundalini (soul power) is uplifted and Prayaag is the Bhru-madhyasthaan (the spot on the brow where they meet between the eyes). When the Yogi is able to concentrate on that spot, his 'serpent power,' he can become aware of the sea and transcend the name-form of the drop. That is the meaning of the Call.

Brindhaavan, Summer Camp, 1974

Man has to recognise the preciousness of time. Not even a fraction of a second should be wasted. He must be engaged always in the investigation of his own Truth and his own Duty to himself. Life is dripping away, drop by drop, from the leaking pot! Time hangs over every head like a sharp sword, ready to inflict the mortal slash. But, man pays no attention to this ever-present calamity.

Sri Sathya Sai

41. Instruments of the Divine Will

I AM happy to meet you and talk to you on this occasion---the very first gathering of the members of the Council of Management of all the State Trusts and of the Education and Publication Foundation. The aims and objectives of the Trusts are themselves your guides; they can certainly inspire you in your dedicated task. They can help canalise your skills and devotion into activities that can help your spiritual realisation, as well as the welfare and prosperity of your countrymen of all creeds and conditions. I am aware of this. But, yet, since we are working within the framework of the legal and administrative system, we have to pay attention' also to strict accounting and sincere adherence to the requirements of law.

There are many Trusts operating in this country and in others beyond the seas. I wish to emphasise that the Sathya Sai Trusts have to shine forth among them all by their special characteristics. They must be based on mutual trust and cooperation, built on the actual experience of the One-ness of all. There is no room here for egoistic poses, compulsory tactics, greed for power, recrimination, and jealousy.

Trust depends on faith in God

Of course, wherever money is dealt with, these evils are common; there are Trusts that are compelled to enter into the process of litigation even as far as the Supreme Court, against their own members for breach of trust. Remember that Trusts are built firmly on the foundation of trust; if you do not trust yourselves and your own reality, you can never trust another. Ultimately, trust depends on faith in God, as expressed in your own actions and in the actions of others.

Virtue can grow only in an atmosphere of theism; you must have faith in the omnipresence of God, that God is the witness, the guide, and the guardian. Self-confidence, confidence that you are the pure unlimited self, is the great reinforcement that religion can endow you with. When you establish this in your hearts, you can be entrusted with any type of responsibility, and any type of work.

The Vedhas lay down four goals before men: Dharma, Artha, Kaama and Moksha. But they have. to be pursued in pairs. Dharma and Artha (virtue and wealth) together and Kaama and Moksha (desire and liberation) together. That is to say, wealth has to be earned through righteousness, and desire has to be for liberation. But, man takes these four separately, and loses all.

He puts them into separate compartments and adopts distinct plans to achieve them. So, his personality is not integrated; he leads a broken life. He gives up dharma and moksha as beyond him and wastes his life pursuing sheer artha and kaama. They lead him into ruin.

You have to practise righteousness in the management of wealth, especially when the wealth is to be used for human uplift and human betterment as here.

Udh yogam purusha lakshanam, it is said. Udh-yoga means, as is commonly understood, employment in some job, something that is worth doing. No, it means udh (higher) yoga (spiritual discipline), a saadhana which has assumed the status of a job. All jobs which you take up are udh-yogas (higher disciplines), which "mark out the man" (Purusha lakshanam). When artha is sought through dharma, the purusha artha deserves the name 'parama-purusha artha' for it is parama or oriented towards the para (the higher eternal values).

You have to struggle to ensure spiritual progress

Tiffs is a chance for service for which you must feel extremely delighted, for, here you can.

transmute your devotion and faith into positive acts of service for the benefit of your brothers and sisters. And, since I am with you in all that you do, you have no worry about the success of the undertakings. You have only to be 'instruments;' you need not devise devious ways or roundabout tactics. Doing your duties as members, you have the need to preserve and develop trust in Sai, too.

This is Sai work, which you are invited to enjoy. This is elevating work that brings you nearer to the heart of the Divine. When Naaraayana hastened to save the elephant from the jaws of the crocodile, the Bhaagavatha says, He did not take with Him the weapons---wheel or even the Lotus or the Conch. He went empty handed, as far as eye could discern. The conscious hand must have the inert pickaxe in order to break the hard sod; so too, the Divine Consciousness must have the Prakrithi (objective world or objective instrument) to carry out His plan.

You have the chance to contribute to the happiness and beatitude of thousands. In order to carry out this duty, you have yourselves to lead exemplary lives. Your nithya jeevitha (daily living) must be transformed into live prayers and live saadhana. How much struggle are you now going through for ensuring physical comfort! You have to struggle much more for ensuring mental peace and spiritual progress, for sathya jeevitha (life in truth).

Calculate within yourselves the benefit that would accrue to you from this saadhana into which you are initiated now, and prepare for shouldering the task assigned to you---to be instruments dedicated for advancing the mission on which the Divine has come.

Brindhaavan, 20-6-1974

Control gives power; regulation gives greater strength; discipline reveals divinity. People pine for happiness. But, can one gain it by allowing a free rein to the senses? Can one be happy eating four meals a day, or riding prestigious cars or living in many-roomed bungalows? No. Happiness consists in helping others. It is brought about by giving up, not by hoarding. Catering to the senses makes man bestial. They will drag him into dirt and disgrace.

Sri Sathya Sai

42. Many voices and the Voice

OF the many billions of living beings, man alone has the privilege of being entitled to investigate the Truth of the Universe and to merge in the Bliss of its Realisation.

But, man is lost in the pursuit of wrong goals; he is struggling in the fog of doubt and divisive loyalties. He is frittering away energies and time in activities that bind him still further in the tangles of material wants.

This type of activity called Moha karma, flows from delusion and leads to further delusion. Man must outgrow this tendency, and turn towards Dharma karma---moral activity; idealistic activity; activity that sublimates lower instincts and impulses and transforms every deed into an act of dedication. When this attitude is confirmed and consolidated, all karma (action) becomes

Brahma karma (dedicated activity). Man merges in the Universal and loses the inhibiting individuality. That is the karma which the Aathma craves for and delights in.

Even in the first stage of Moha Karma (attachment/desire oriented activity), man should endeavour to charge it with Prema (divine love). For, Prema will correct the karma imperceptibly into the path of Dharma (virtue) and lead systematically, into the further stages of human progress towards Divinity. What then is Prema? It cannot be earned or acquired; it is the natural endowment of man. It cannot be refused or thrown off the mind. It cannot be taught or learnt. If directed towards sensual objects, it may well spell ruin-if directed away from them, it can well ensure salvation.

Yearning to reach for the sublimity is alone Prema Prema or Love is a much-misused word. Any positive response to the attraction is called Love; any feeling of attachment, however trivial or transitory, is characterised as Prema. We must certainly coin new words or set aside specific words to indicate the forms of love. The.

attachment of parents to their children or of children to the parents must be called affection. The response to the attraction of sex can be best described as fancy, fascination or Moha (delusion).

The feeling of kinship or comradeship evokes dearness. The pleasure one gets through a sense of possession, especially of material objects, can be known as satisfaction. The yearning to reach for the sublimity that lies inherent in Truth---this alone is entitled to be called by that holy word, Prema. For, that is the sweetest, the most charming, the most satisfying possession of Man.

Prema is strong and steady enough to leap over all obstacles, confront with equanimity all changes of fortune and defeat, all attempts to delay or deviate. It does not judge one incident as good and another as bad; it does not ascribe them to different agencies. Just as the same Sun causes both day and night, the same Divine Will causes joy and grief; so the devotee does not wince or exult, when ill or well.

The fault lies in man's fascination for the 'many,' instead of the 'one;' he pursues the diverse, and forgets the unity 'in the universe. Really speaking, the 'many' are but different vehicles for the expression of the 'one. Take the example' of the electric current.

When the fan whirls, we say that there is the current flowing; when it stops whirling, we note the absence of the current. When the bulb is on, we notice its presence; when the bulb is off, we note its absence. The current, by itself, is 'invisible;' it is niraakaara (formless). It activates various things and so we recognise it.

So too, Divinity is in all things and behind all activity. To understand it and to recognise it, we need instruments, vehicles, upaadhis (limiting adjuncts). Clean the eyes of the cataract of ignorance. The eyes see; but, can the organ 'eye' see of itself?. It cannot function without prompting-of the Divine Aathma (spirit) within. The brain thinks; but, can the cells perform the process all by themselves? No. They must be activated by the Divine within. The 'one' is the basis, the cause, of the manifestation in the many. Through Prema alone can the inherent, the immanent One be recognised. For, the Divine is Prema, more than anything else. Ishaa vaasyamidham sarvam, "All is enveloped by Me, activated by Me", says the Lord. All is one. The One appears as many, to the prejudiced eye. Clear the eye of the cataract of ignorance, and it cognises all as One. In fact, you see with your eyes, only yourself, everywhere. You talk only to yourself, to whomsoever your speech is addressed. You are pleased with yourself; you hate yourself; you harm yourself. There is no other! Even when Divinity comes down as Avathaar (divine incarnation), man is unable to pierce the veil and revere the Divine. Lord Krishna says that people are unable to recognise the Divinity that is He, because they deem Him merely human. Only those who are aware of the current within, the Aathma, can identify the Source of Power before them. Always, listen to the voice of God within. Three disciplines are essential, to become aware of Divinity in all and in the Avathaar: No activity should be taken up with individual aggrandizement in view; intellect and emotion must be directed to the revelation of the Resident in the Heart, Aathma; every act should be done sincerely, with love, with no yearning for acquiring personal profit, fame or benefit. Above all, listen to the Voice of God within. As soon as one contemplates a wrong act, that Voice warns, protests, and advises giving up. It pictures the shame that has to be suffered, the punishment that has to be faced, the disgrace that it entails. It would appear as if there are two personalities inside you, the one that prompts and the one that prevents. The warning signal, the timely advice, is given by the Jangam (the spirit of right) in the Angam (the physical body). It reminds you of the absurdity and the danger inherent in the identification of the Self with the body, it encourages you to discriminate between right and wrong; it is God, enthroned in every heart as the Highest Wisdom, the Prajnaana (consciousness), the Eternal Witness, whom you can contact easily in the depths of Dhyaana (meditation). In fact, when you examine your mind, you will find there, holding sway not one but many 'counsellors' with their contrariness, causing confusion. For example, no sooner have you planned to Come to Puttaparthi to take the Dharshan (vision) of Swaami, these counsellors start playing their game. One voice advises you to start only after ascertaining whether Swaami is actually present there. Another voice suggests that you can put through a call to 'so-and-so' and discover whether Swaami is at Bangalore or at Puttaparthi. A fourth lays before you alternative routes and means of transport, and causes a good deal of headache. This is the Sangam, around the Jangam, the Sangam (group) of voices that play around the spirit of fight, trying to distract it. Cultivate the vision directed inward. Another voice might say, when the others have finished, "Well, my dear man! Consider from all points of view, this desire of yours. You may go there, putting yourself to a lot of expense and bother; think of this possibility also---you may or may not get an interview with Swaami." Another voice might-intervene and say, "O! Considering all the wrongs done and all the faults committed, it is very doubtful, if Swaami will grant you the interview." In the wake of this Voice another will begin its argument of assurance. It will comfort saying, "No! Swaami is the very embodiment of compassion. He will certainly pardon all errors." This principle that guides and guards you along the spiritual path is the Lingam (symbol of the formless), that is in the centre of the Sangam, clustering round the Jangam. The Lingam is in the very core of the heart of man, as the sole purveyor of bliss, power and illumination. Cultivate the vision directed inward, so that the Lingam might grant you these three. The mind will then be illumined with the cool comforting Light of Love, Wisdom. That is why the mind has as its presiding deity the Moon---Chandrama manaso jaathah. Hence, the celebration of the Day of Thankfulness for all Gurus (spiritual preceptors) and the Prime Guru, Vedha-vyaasa, is done on the Full Moon Day. Unless you cleanse the mind with Love, the Full Moon of spiritual wisdom cannot shine therein. The recital of the Name, the observance of vows and vigils, of fasts and festivals, may scintillate on the inner sky of the mind, as stars stud the sky; but, until the Lamp of Love is lit, the darkness will not vanish.

Guru means remover of ignorance
This day is a Day set apart for the worship of the Guru. Who is the Guru? How can a person who has not reached the goal guide you towards it? When he is himself groping in the dark, how can he illumine your path? Most Gurus who profess to lead are themselves not quite sure of the road or quite convinced of the rightness of their path. 'Gu' means darkness, or ignorance; 'ru' its removal. So the Guru must know the process by which ignorance can be removed in another.
How can he do it when he has not done it for himself? The blind cannot lead the blind.
Guru has a further meaning too. 'Gu' means gunaatheetha (beyond the three strands of energy of which the Cosmos is composed) and 'ru' means ruupa-rahitha (devoid of any particular form).
Now, no mortal has transcended the guna (quality) and ruupa (form). God alone can be described as unaffected by these. And, God is the Guru, fight in your heart, ready to lead and enlighten.
He is all-knowing, all-powerful, all-pervading.
Scatter the dark clouds of ignorance and egoism that cover the face of the Sun shining in the sky of your heart. Your parents might disown you, your kinsmen might desert you. Your friends might give you up; your treasure possessions might be lost. But, God will be ever near, ever dear, ever ready with counsel and courage. People will gather around you so long as you have pelf and power; you will be left severely alone, when you lose these. They are like swarms of frogs that infects a full lake, croaking flattery, but, disappearing, when the lake is dry.
Guru worship can be done all days of the year You rush here, for the Guru Poornima Festival; but, there is no need to await this annual event for revering the Guru. People spend this day in worshipping the Guru and seeking his directives.
This can be done all days of the year! Selecting a special day smacks of superficiality and exhibitionism. I desire to discourage this attitude of yours; I want you to cultivate not these external ceremonies and festivals, but, the internal Saadhana, the inner vision, the spiritual longing.
I do not claim that I am a Guru; or, consider you as disciples or pupils. When I am All that is, who can be separately specified as Guru and who as disciple or pupil? Ignorance of the One leads one to this dichotomy. Realisation of the Truth will end this distinction. None need teach, none need learn. All are fundamentally Chith (Awareness). This is the Reality.

The teacher---that is the more correct appellation---should not feel superior; the pupil should not feel inferior. Both are Aathma in reality. There is no high and no low. All are waves in the ocean of Bliss. When your body is healthy, charming, fully content, consider how happy you are! Now, know that the bodies of all beings are you--really speaking. And, when all those other bodies are happy, healthy, strong, and full, calculate how much Bliss you can cherish in your heart! The vision of the Viraat (the Cosmic Form), is given for those who surrender their ego and take refuge in the Lord (as Arjuna did) and who imbibe with care the Geetha sung by the Lord in the silence. God is Omnipresent; He is the Inner Motivator of every particle in the Universe. To declare that He is amenable only to your style of worship, that He will answer only to the Name that you have learnt to use, is to insult His Omniscience and His Glory. See Him in all, serve Him in all. Revere Him in all. Pray, "-Let the whole-world prosper; let all mankind be happy." This is the Special Message I give you on this Day.
Guru Poornima Day, July 1974
When you are driving a car, the car is your God. When you are doing business in a market, the market is your God. According to the culture of Bhaarith, we first make obeisance to the work which we have to do. Before we undertake to do any work, we should regard that work as God.
Thasmai Namaha Karmane---"The work I have to do, I regard as God and make obeisance to God in that form"---that is what the Upanishaths are teaching us.
Sri Sathya Sai
43. To the mothers
MANY of you sit in Dhyaana (meditation) and after some time start complaining, "O Why is it I am not able to concentrate? Bhagavaan! Help me to fix my mind on you!" Do not get impatient and bewail. Feel rather that you must make the mind pure and clean, so that God Himself will be tempted to possess it. He is the chora (thief) of the heart. When thieves enter the house, they select things of value; they will not bother about firewood or charcoal bags! God too when He comes in the role of a thief, looks for the most precious thing, the thing He values most, the thing you have taken most pains to foster. He carries away the pure thoughts, the deeds soaked in the sweetness of sympathy and compassion, the feelings of Love that do not crave requite. God is no ordinary thief!

 This Thief makes people richer by His theft! Richer in happiness, serenity and self-esteem. This thief is loved the more, the more He steals! He wakes up the sleeping and then steals what the household has kept for Him. Many times, the people pretend sleep so that He may come and steal the things they have kept for that very purpose. He calls out: Thasmaath Jaagratha.
Jaagratha! "Therefore, wake up, wake up;" and then, He carries away the treasure He seeks and finds.
 What is taught must be imprinted on the heart
 You have that treasure in you; but, you do not know it; hence, you do not keep it ready for Him.
 You feel you have nothing to give Him, and that you are poor and downtrodden. Once you offer the heart to God, there is no more wail or want.
 Those of you who are not affluent, have to borrow some vessels for cooking the marriage feast from some rich neighbour or acquaintance. Or, you may hire them from some institutions which keep such big vessels for helping others. The code of conduct, whether you borrow or hire, is: clean the vessels before returning them; they have to be given back just as they were brought from the owner. Cook in them; then, cleanse them before you restore them intact to the person who lent them.
 The Immortal Beings, who have assigned for themselves, this role, this venture of celebrating a 'life-time on earth,' have as it were, borrowed a HEART from God!-- the Supreme Giver, in a clean condition. When finally you give it back, see that they are as clean and pure as when He gave them. That is the code of conduct; or else, He will not accept them!
 Even experienced teachers' nowadays delight in the mere injection into the brains of the children under their care the components of the text books! For, they endeavour only to push them through the 'examinations;' so, it is just a question of guessing correctly the questions that might appear in the paper and mugging up the answers for just those! Once the boys and girls have written the things which their heads have been stuffed, they return home, with-heads emptied and hollow. What you teach must, however, be imprinted on the heart, not stacked in the brain. That will mould their character and make them useful for themselves and society.

 Take the example of Dhruva. His stepmother told him that he can win the favour of the King, his father, only through God's Grace, which he has to win through penance! So, the five-year-old boy went into the forest and practised austerities that were unparalleled in history) As a result of the penance, his desire was so sublimated that, in the end, he declared, "I do not care for royal favour, or even the worldly throne! I shall attain the Kingdom of God; I shall sit in the lap of God." Thus, he rejected the lordship over humans and preferred the joy of being a child of God, with God.
 Recognise the great potentials of the child In the tender hearts of the children, there is much potentiality of devotion and attachment to higher ideals and objectives; this can be developed and cultivated by you. Do not think that they do not know anything; that you can divert them any way you wish; this is a mistake. Recognise the great potentials of the child; adopt such methods as the child himself might suggest or indicate, Help the child to reach Godliness and become aware of its high destiny. Do not presume that the child is some inferior personality or that is incapable of attaining the heights.
 The parents themselves are not competent to guide the children; they dote on them and do not know how to correct them, they have reprehensible habits and ways of life. They smoke, play cards, gamble, drink, and fight in the home; they utter falsehoods, talk scandal, boast and slander, in the presence of the children. How then can they lead their children on right lines? You will have to persuade such parents to mend their ways and be inspiring examples, rather than enemies and obstacles.
 But, before you advise the parents see that you have no defect to which they can point their fingers! Learn the right to advise, before you venture on the mission. First, set right your own homes; see that atmosphere of the home is free from hatred, pride, slander and greed; see that Love is the fly-wheel of the home, that faith in God is the bedrock on which the relations between the members are built.
 India stands forth as the teacher to humanity Indian traditions and Indian modes of living are now being fast cast away; crude manners of dress and speech and personal appearance are replacing them; children should be taught to look upon these with disgust, they should know them for what they are--- aberrations and vulgarities!

Now, obscene posters are pasted along the roads by cinema theatres in order to attract fans; they contaminate character very subtly and silently; children must make the elders ashamed when they permit such demeaning and deleterious posters to appear in public view.! They have to waken the elders into a sense of shame, at the lowering of human values. Unless we plant these ideals in the children, India will go down to the depths of degradation. How can you tolerate these obscene pictures, these posters publicising pornographic films, this most objectionable type of dress, this brazen behaviour and appearance? Do everything possible to root out this evil. Train the children and the young, to remove this blot, from the face of Bhaaratha Maatha (Mother India).

India stands forth as the teacher to humanity, thanks to the virtue, the fortitude, the moral strength of the women of the past and the present. You have to maintain these qualities and foster them so that she might hold her head high among the nations of the world.

Children are the roots of the National Tree Establish the status of the mother in the home, as the upholder of spiritual ideals and therefore, the Guru of the children. Every mother must share in this effort---the expansion and steady manifestation of the God-consciousness latent in every child.

Children are the crops growing in the fields, to yield the harvest on which the nation has to sustain itself. They are the pillars on which the foundation of the nation's future is built. They are the roots of the national tree, which has to give the fruits of work, worship and wisdom to the next generation.

The Sathya Sai Baala Vikaas has been evolved in order to feed these roots, strengthen these foundation pillars and fertilise the growing crops. Children are now growing up in an atmosphere polluted by corruption, anxiety and hollow pomp, because people are enamoured of the shallow material culture, mainly imported from the West. Parents and teachers and even the leaders of the nation are devoid of admiration and adoration, understanding and practice of the basic principles of Bhaaratheeya. Culture; children are denied the precious heritage which is their due; they are inducted into alien ideals, thoughts and habits. They are praised for reciting foreign Nursery Songs, to the neglect of native rhymes! The educated child cuts himself away from the village child or the children of the unschooled.

The older persons have but a little distance to travel, before they disembark. But the children, remember, have many miles to go and they take the nation along with them, to perdition or progress) The rishis (sages) of old knew the value of our culture and the deep peace and security that the heritage of that culture can give in times of turmoil and strife. They prescribed three disciplines for every one, young or old. They declared, Maathru dhevo bhava, Pithru dhevo bhava, Aachaarya dhevo bhava. So long as a nation grows up with these three noble ideals, it can never be pulled up by its roots and get dried up. For, adoration of the mother as Divine, of the father as God and of the Preceptor as God will make the growing generation cherish the heritage, which is handed down by them and through them. The generation gap will not be an unbridgeable chasm.

Bangalore, 10-7-1974

One of you may be working in an office, another in a shop, a third in the press but every one must engage in saadhana with devotion, discipline and a sense of duty. Do not feel that your role is low and the other persons high. Do not be depressed when you find your role is minor; do not be proud when you discover that your role is a major one.

Give your best to whatever role is allotted to you. That is the way to earn Grace.

Sri Sathya Sai
44. The higher role

Eakam sath; vipraah bahudhaa vadhanthi---"The One alone exists; wise men call it by many names." This is the harmonising unifying Truth that India teaches through the ages. Another lesson that Indian culture embodies and Indian thought emphasises is: When the process of living revolves around the body, it is steeped in misery; when it revolves around the Aathma, the Divine spark within, it is resplendent with joy.

When the years of life are spent and man has not discovered at least who he is, surely, such a life is a stupid, waste. Search for the Reality, for the Witness within, the Divine that animates; this is the first duty of man to-himself. Indian .Culture calls on all to discover for themselves the special nature of his 'isness' and its sacred consequences and to shape his activities and attitudes accordingly.

Ayam Aathma Brahma---This Aathma is Brahma. The Individual is the Universal, 'pretending to be separate!' The individual exists, cognises and is cognised, delights and confers delight, because it is the Universal. The tiny flame of a candle can light a thousand other candles and yet burn with undiminished strength. The other flames have to acknowledge that they have with them only the flame of the first one. The One has lit the many; the One is shining in and through the many; the One is the many. Ekoham bahusyaam---"the One decided to be many," to enjoy its own manifoldness. The One appears as all this diversity. That is the Truth.

Seek the Knower behind the knowing process Air which is but One, appears as storm, whirlwind, breeze, simoom, assuming various forms by change of speed in movement. The names too differ from form to form. The insistence on the fundamental unity of all creation is the special feature of Indian thought. It is faulty vision, to see variety as variety, the world as composed of disparate elements and forces. In spite of this great heritage which Indians have come by, they are today disparaging it and devaluing it by their behaviour and beliefs.

The beliefs of man must be free from asuuya (jealousy), as the Geetha declares. Asuuya is the evil nature that cannot tolerate the happiness and prosperity of another, that prevents man from loving his neighbour, from serving the distressed, and seeing, in all, the same Divine Motivator that he himself has, as his inner charioteer. It makes man eager to pick holes in the activities of others and renders them blind to their virtues and excellences.

This is a College, an institution that imparts education and prepares the rising generation to be better women and better citizens. Education must open the eyes and enable them to recognise the One behind the many. When that One is known, the many can be known easily and clearly.

Pursue the vast, the cosmic, the all-inclusive Truth; do not be satisfied with paltry partial scraps of information; seek the Knower behind the knowing process. That is the Real victory.

Education must promote peace and happiness Educationists must concentrate on methods by which unity will be imparted and distinctions relegated to a subordinate role. But, unfortunately at the present time, in the name of individuality and the sheer fancy for distinctness, every encouragement is given to idiosyncrasy and adventurism, foppishness and flippancy. Parents and elders have to hang down their heads in shame at the vagaries of their children.

Education must promote, peace, security and happiness. But, as a result of the educational process through which they have passed, youth is :causing anxiety, fear and unrest in the society of which they are a part. Neither have they any peace or joy or security. The Kaurava brothers sought for power, fame, selfish gain and competitive victory. They loved separatist divisive policies. Their thirst for power could be quenched, as Krishna said, only by a rain of arrows which wiped them off the face of the earth. In order to remove the terror that stalks the land from end to end, an immediate reform of the educational system is called for.

Roots hold the tree firm; the foundation keeps the building from collapsing. Awareness of one's responsibilities, detachment from entangling bonds, confidence in one's own sense of righteousness---these have to be fostered in colleges. Integrity, sincerity, and the desire to use one's skills and intelligence, for the service of one's fellowmen are essential in youth.

At present, educated people are wanting in the grit necessary to act according to their convictions; they know a thing is right but lack the will to carry it through. Teach the students to discriminate in a detached manner and arrive at right conclusions, and encourage them to put their faith into practice fearlessly. Now that the cultivation of the spirit is in the name of secularism, beyond the ken of the system, teachers who are themselves unaware of higher values are leading youth into less and less firm grounds, into fear and fickleness. How can such people, who have no inner strength, no vital faith in themselves, lead others? What can the country expect from this method of bringing up the young, this foolish and futile round, where the blind lead those unwilling to open their eyes in series of fallow circles? The God within does not fail to warn, to counsel Naayam aathma balaheenena labhyah---"The soul cannot be won by the weak." That is the pronouncement of the Vedhas (sacred scriptures). Without the awareness of the source of all strength, the Aathma, man is basically weak and he can only lead men into further weaknesses.

There are many who swear that they have infinite confidence and faith in themselves, but, they assert they have no faith in God. How then could they have faith in themselves? For, who exactly is I? Is I a bundle of bones and muscle? Is I the name?

No. The reality of I is God; the I is a wave of the Ocean of Divinity, endowed with the same sublimity, the same taste, the same depth. How then can defeat descend on I?

Man has to be continually examining every desire that emerges in his mind, so that he may suppress or destroy or by-pass or obey. He must learn, from parents, elders, teachers, friends and the leaders of the land besides the books written by wise men of his own as well as of other countries, the standards by which he can test his desires. He has to accept them or reject them.

There are some who are wilfully wicked, who attempt to justify by specious arguments the inequities they perform. But, even then, they know that they are on the wrong path. The God within does not fail to warn, and to counsel.

Become instruments to reestablish righteousness

Students! If you are drawn into evil in pursuit of momentary pleasure, you will have to suffer misery a thousand-fold as a consequence of the impulse. Wicked thoughts, wild schemes and frolicsome escapades might give pleasure for the moment but in the long run they are sure to land you in irretrievable ruin.

Your role is something far higher. You have to correct and transform those who behave like blind men though they have eyes; those who move about as lame men though their legs are strong and straight, those who behave like insane men though they are equipped with bright minds; such men are in all fields now. There are hypocrites who talk 'peace' and practise 'war.'

Your task is to expose them and educate them back into normalcy and virtue. Become instruments in the great effort to reestablish Righteousness throughout the world.

This College has not been established just to prepare you for earning degrees. The main purpose is to help you to cultivate self-knowledge and self-confidence, so that each one of you can learn self-sacrifice and earn self-realisation. The teaching of the university curricula and the preparation for presenting you for the university examinations and the award of university degrees---these are only the means employed for the end, namely, spiritual uplift, self-discovery and social service through love and detachment. Our hope is that by your lives you will be shining examples of spiritual awareness and its beneficial, consequences of the individual and society.

Ananthapur, August 1974

From the tree of your life, to pick out such fruits which you have protected and which you have grown in the form of good qualities and offering them to God, there is some distinctiveness in that.

In order to promote good qualities, you have to undergo several troubles. So, it is through these good qualities that your mind can also acquire a divine concentration.

Without good qualities and without good thoughts, how can you fix your mind in meditation?

Sri Sathya Sai

45. The banana and the peel

THULSI DHAAS has said in his Raamacharithaamaanas that he composed the great epic on the story of Raghunaath for 'swaanthasukhaaya' that is to say, for his own sukha or happiness and

joy. He engaged himself in that self-imposed task, not to any patron or even Raama, but to please, himself. He derived great Aanandha (divine bliss) while writing it and when it was finished. That was the urge which moved him.

In fact, all that a man does, is, ultimately, traceable to this urge---the urge to earn selfsatisfaction.

A man builds a house, writes a book, enters a job, executes a plan---all because he gets joy therefrom. The cuckoo coos sweetly, and derives joy therefrom, far more than those who happen to listen. The rose blooms on the plant, because of an inner urge, not an outer prompting.

The father fondles his baby and receives thereby more joy than he ever gives. The various disciplines undergone by saadhakas (spiritual aspirants), monks, ascetics, and those on the march along the path of self knowledge are all adopted and adhered to, because they give joy to oneself, and fulfil an inner need.

Sacrifice, is at the very basis of Bliss

This day is celebrated by you as the day when Emperor Bali was both humiliated and blessed by God, in the form of Vaamana. Emperor of the three worlds, Bali called himself, so, for, he had bala (power), more than any one else. He was saturated with egotism. God came to him, while he was busy with a Yaaga (an offering), in the form and guise of a Brahmin boy, and asked for a gift of just three foot-measures of land. Bali told him that he could ask for infinitely more riches and lands; but, the Boy insisted on that tiny gift only. The preceptor of Bali warned him about the identity and bonafides of the strange mendicant; he mentioned that he may be God Himself.

Tiffs made Bali happier, for, if it was true, he was so mighty that even God came to his door as a mendicant. Such was the measure of his conceit.

But, when Vaamana drew Himself up to cosmic proportions and measured the entire earth with one foot and the vast expanse of space with another foot, Bali was humbled; he offered his own head as the third foot-measure, and let himself be trod-down into the nether-world. This day marks the day when the Incarnation of Vaamana happened, in order to teach this lesson that pride meets with doom. Once the ego was thus suppressed, Bali became cleansed and God blessed him, with various boons. He assured him that He would ever be his guardian. He permitted him every year, on Onam Day, to come up into the world and see for himself his empire and receive therefrom the homage of his people. So, this is the Festival of Vaamana's Advent as well as Bali's Transformation.

This day also extols the merit of gifts, renunciation, charity, however little, to any one, for, all are images of God. Thyaaga (Renunciation or Sacrifice), is at the very basis of Bliss, of Grace, of Immortality. Na medhayaa na prajayaa dhanena, thyaagenaike amrithathwam aanasuh---say the Vedhas. ("Not by intellect, not by progeny, not by riches, but, by renunciation alone can the Bliss of Immortality be attained"). Onam is the Festival which instills this message into those who observe it with an eye on its inner significance.

Every obstacle is a step that leads to Aanandha. Kerala has contributed a great deal to the preservation of Vedhic culture, and Sanskrit learning, Keralites have a name for faith and dedication. Witness the age-old privilege the Nambuudhiris of Kerala enjoy, priest-hood of the great Vaishnavite shrine thousands of miles away from their land, namely Badhrihath among the Himaalayas.

Of course, wherever faith and dedication to God are evident, forces that tend to ridicule it, diminish its strength also are found. Where Aasthika (believer in God) is, there Naasthika (athiest) too will raise its head. But, disbelief in God or in some Supreme Will can be only a pose, assumed for the sake of personal aggrandizement or advertisement. It cannot stand the light of reason or of experience; even so-called atheists have Love in their hearts, honour Truth while dealing with Society and live on the basis of some eternal basic principles of justice. So, they are believers in Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss Supreme).

You have the duty to stand witness in your lives to the courage, the joy, the strength, the generosity, the humility that true spirituality and faith can impart to man, while faced with disappointment, distress, defeat, defamation and other calamities against which the atheist has no such shield. Gold gains in value when it is melted in the crucible. A piece of diamond when it is cut into a many-faceted gem is thereby rendered more brilliant and more costly. The dull stone is not sought after by all. Prahlaadha, the grandfather of emperor Bali was subjected to torture by his irate father; but, that only added to his lustre. Bali himself shone all the brighter for the punishment he received from the compassionate Lord. This is the lesson you have to garner today. Every obstacle is a step that leads you to the Aanandha that can never be destroyed or taken away.

It is natural of man to raise himself up

There is another duty that you owe to yourselves, which you have to recognise today. The world is the playground of Nara (human) and Naaraayana (God). Nara transforming himself into Naaraayana and Naaraayana transforming Himself into Nara, and playing their roles in unison.

You know full well that Naaraayana has come in human form for reestablishing Dharma (morality) in the world, for feeding the roots of faith, in God and for interpreting God to man; you have to be assured that it is natural of man too to raise himself up, through spiritual discipline, moral elevation, expansion of love and other means to become Naaraayana. But, man is unaware of this high destiny. He misinterprets his skills and strength and is so absent-minded that he slides down the scale into a monster or a monkey. Of course there are many who struggle with these downward dragging tendencies and endeavour to elevate themselves; these most often grope in the dark and are badly led.

Devotion 'must flourish, unaffected by time

There are two truths that must be accepted by every pilgrim or devotee: (1) Devotion has to be full, free and comprehensive. (2) Divinity must be conceived as full, free and comprehensive. On the other hand, devotion today is almost always only 'part-time.' That is to say, whenever disease, defeat, or disappointment happen to assail you, you turn to God and pray for His Grace; but when you are happy, prosperous, healthy and in good shape, you ignore God and claim that they are all due to your own abilities and achievements. God is ignored in sunshine, He is wanted only when there is night. Devotion must persist and flourish, unaffected by time, place or circumstance.

God too has to be experienced in His fullness, and the Aanandha of that experience made one's permanent possession. Kasturi recited that poem, which,, was sweet to the ear and full of Sanskrit words. But, words seldom come out of actual experience. It is impossible to experience God and also talk about him. Words like Sarvajnaana, Sarvavyaapi, meaning that "He knows all," "He is everywhere" are used by people, since elders and saints have used them from ancient times; it is impossible for any one to have the fullest and the most comprehensive experience of these qualities of the Divine, and also speak about that experience.
The Geetha speaks of God as achalam chalam evacha, "immoveable as well as moveable," which strikes one as impossible. God appears to move, to act, to bless, to save, to test; but, He is unconcerned basically with these. Look at a tree. The branches, leaves, etc. might be moving with the wind; but the trunk is steady and unmoved. God is but appears as not is. The body moves, the intellect moves, the mind moves, but the Aathma is unaffected; it is steady, firm, unchangeable. The lake is unmoved; the surface is tickled into wavelets by every passing breeze.
The colourless unmoved curtain or screen is unaffected by the pictures of fire, faction, floods, and glaciers that appear upon it in a realistic manner. When the pictures are seen, the screen is unseen; when the screen is seen, the pictures are unseen. But, without the screen (Brahman), the pictures have no meaning, carry no message, tell no story. They impart no Aanandha.
God is the stealer of hearts You may carry a match-box in your pocket, with no danger of fire emanating, though the components are there in that box. So too, there are the components of Divinity in you; only, it is not patent, it is not expressed. Take a stick and strike its head against the chemical coating given on one side of the box, and suddenly, in a flash, you get the flame of fire. So too, take the Jeeva (the individual) and strike it on the Brahman-principle that is immanent in the Universe, make it aware of it, so to say, and the Individual too manifests the Divinity latent in it. The tree is the Individual; the Forest is the Brahman. The one, apart from the Many is the individual. The Many. and the Manifold is the Brahmana; Kasturi standing alone, apart, is Vyashti; when he goes and sits among you, the thousands who have come here for Onam, he merges in the Samashti.

Samashti is Brahman; Vyashti is the Jeevaathman.
Prahlada's grandson, Bali whom you honour today, extolled the Lord standing before Him, as Master of the entire Cosmos, as "Arch-thief among thieves," (Dongalalo gajadonga). For, God steals the most precious possession of man, even when its owner is awake. He steals the chiththa; He is the chiththa apahaari, the Stealer of Hearts. I disappointed you; I even requested you not to come so far, away from your homes for this festival; but, yet, your hearts have been stolen by Me and so, you could not stay away. Onam is the day when you Keralites feast on the banana; when you eat a banana, you have first to remove the skin. So, too, when we desire to eat a mango or a lime fruit. The sweet substance has to be reached after removal of the bitter skin.
For Bali to be received and accepted by God, the bitter cover of egoism and power-mania had to be removed. Ignorance, maaya (delusion), illusion, pride, all are the components of the skin.
Onams come and Onams go; but, people are no nearer the Goal. This is because though Onam is given a hearty send-off, generosity, renunciation, love and the spirit of service are not given an equally hearty welcome. You have to take this as the Onam Message-- -strive to manifest, cultivate and express Love, and suppress pride and egoism, so that you can win the Grace of God.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, 30-8-1974
I ask only that you turn to Me when your mind drags you into grief or pride or envy. Bring Me the depths of your mind,, no matter how grotesque, how cruelly ravaged doubts or disappointments. I know how to treat them. I will not reject you, I am your mother.
Sri Sathya Sai
46. The Vedhic rite EVERY one of you ought of feel proud that you took birth in this holy land, long famous as the land of Yoga (divine communion), of Thyaaga (selfless sacrifice) and of God-oriented Karma (dedicated action). You are the children of Mother Vedha, whom she loves so affectionately that she has called you here to witness this great Vedhic Yajna. Bhaarith is the land that God loves, for, He has taken Avathaar (divine incarnation) here often, and is even now moving on this land, carrying out His Mission of restoring Dharma (righteousness) to people who are ignoring it. This Yajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice) is an item in that great Task.

 It is a great pity that Bhaarath which earned such eminent renown in the spiritual field is today in the throes of a devil dance of vice and wickedness, in the background of falsehood, injustice, hatred and faction.
 The land is sunk in anxiety and fear. Therefore, at this juncture, it is necessary to light the lamp of love and hope and impart courage and confidence, by both precept and example.
Vedha means "that which makes you know" The Vedhas (sacred ancient scriptures) are the very roots of Bhaaratheeya Culture. So, it is the.
 bounden duty of every son of India to observe the rites and rituals, the injunctions and instructions, laid down in the Vedhas. Many have fallen into the habit of asking, what is the object of these directions, what can we gain from them? Well, let Me tell them that the one single object that the Vedhas have in view is to make man Divine, through a series of spiritual exercises. They lead man from the animal stage, when he believes he is just this body suffering hunger, thirst and desires of various kinds, into the state of humanness, when he recognises that he is far higher than an animal and later, the Vedhas persuade him to use his intelligence and discrimination to sublimate his passions and emotions to the Divine level where he is in eternal bliss.
 The Vedhas elaborate the Sanaathana Shaasthra (the primal science of the spirit). Understanding this science well and practising it form the duties every man owes to himself. That science results in the removal of ignorance, the gaining of knowledge; not the knowledge of material, worldly things, which changes and gets superseded every few years!
 It endows the seeker with the knowledge that is the key to the entire gamut of knowledge, that which if known, everything else is known.
 That is why the Vedhas are called so. The word means, Vedhayathi ithi Vedhah, that is to say, "Vedha means that which makes you know." The cosmic principle is amenable to the mystic formulae and sound patterns that the manthras (sacred formulae) of the Vedhas represent; the four fundamental urges of man (Dharma, to be righteous; Artha, to earn and accumulate; Kaama, to desire and get the desires fulfilled and Moksha, to expand and get liberated from the 'here and now' into the ever and everywhere') get sanctified and sustained by the Vedhic path. The material physique of God can be adored by the yanthra (machine); his spiritual physique has to be propitiated by means of manthras.

 There is nothing in creation that is not Divine Coming to this ritual of Yajna which we are inaugurating, you will notice that when the sanctified offerings are laid in the holy fire, the Pandiths (scholars) utter the word, Svaahaa, as often as they offer. The reason why that word has to be uttered is, according to them, to enable the offering to be totally' reduced and consumed by the fire. Now, it is the very nature of fire to consume and so, there is no need to call upon fire in this manner; it does not stand to reason to declare that fire has to be prayed to for being and behaving so.
 It is uttered to acclaim the energy and splendour that are latent in fire and to invoke the Divine Thejas (lustre) that enables fire to shine and purify. The presiding diety is called upon to-carry the offering to the particular God to whom it is dedicated, saying, Indhraaya svaahaa.
Kesavaaya svaahaa, Rudraaya svaaha, Varunaaya svaahaa etc.
Indhra, Kesava, Rudhra and Varuna will receive the oblation through Agni the presiding deity of Fire, only when He is invoked and aroused by the syllable Svaahaa.
 Not only is Fire Divine; all the elements are Divine. In fact, there is nothing in creation that is not Divine. Kaalidhaasa in the Kumaara Sambhavam Poem has addressed the Himaalayas and the streams, glaciers, peaks and trees thereon as Divine, as symbols and signals of the immanent Divine. For every element and being, fire which gives heat and light is considered to be the very life-principle, the vital breath.
 Activity declares whether the society is good or bad There is another clarification which I feel I should make just now. The Vedhas are countless--- 'Anantho vai Vedhaah,' it is said. Now, the doubt may arise why countless Vedhas are necessary to lay down the path of spiritual progress. Let us take an example. To make a child understand the meaning of one word, the parent or teacher uses very often a whole barrage of words.
 Explanation means elaboration, repetition, re-emphasising. So, to make clear to men of average intelligence or no intelligence, it became necessary to have a number of supplementary or complementary texts and scriptures, and since their number is immense, they came to be known as Aanantha (countless). The aim of every Vedha, however large the number, however varied the approach, is the same: to lead man from the animal stage through the human into the height of Divine self-realisation.

From the Universal Absolute manifested the Brahman, the Cosmic Principle. From the Brahman, Karma (Regulated Activity) based on Vedhic prescriptions originated; from this kind of Karma, the Gods are delighted and they shower rain, directing the rain God Parjanya to bless the world and its people; since rain falls, crops grow and food is available for consumption; through food, man gets health and strength and vitality; as a result of this vitality, man multiplies and reproduces himself. This is the cycle, according to the Vedhas-- Karma, Rain, Crops, Food, Fecundity. Krathus (elaborate rituals) of this type, are undertaken for invoking timely rains, congenial seasons and peace and prosperity for the whole world. It is the activity which declares whether the individual or society is good or bad. The thermometer measures the temperature of the body and announces whether the body is well or ill. The Karma or activity is the indicator of inner character. Observing one's actions, their motives, their consequences and the extent of one's involvement, it is possible to declare one as a pashu (beast) or Pashupathi (the Lord of Individual Souls), that is to say as Divine as God Himself.

Vedhic yajna is for the prosperity of all mankind. The Krathu is also a Karma, albeit a Vedhic Karma, dedicated to the acquisition of the welfare of the world. All Karma done to ensure the welfare of others, without, any aspiration for personal benefit, is good Karma which the Gods would appreciate as a Krathu. The evil consequences that are sure to affect you when you have committed wrong karmas can be counteracted by engaging yourself in beneficial Karmas, thereby earning merit. There is no attempt now to counteract evil by good and so, the country is fast sliding into ruin. How can the country uplift itself? The country is not just a piece of the map, or a slice of earth. It is a collection of men, women and children, bound together by tradition and certain common ways of life and thought handed-down as valid and valuable by generations of patriots and leaders of spiritual life.

Once upon a time, since the vices of greed and vanity developed uncontrolled among men, the Vedha was so incensed and insulted that it took the form of a black deer and fled into the forests. At this, it is said, the Vedhic Pandiths, sages and scholars followed it with prayerful importunities; but, it would not return. They had to come back, with just the skin of the deer and be content with that remnant. These rithwiks who officiate in this and other Vedhic rituals wear, as you can see, pieces of the skin of the black deer, to warn themselves against the recurrence of that catastrophe. They also take their seats on deer-skins. Every act and gesture, every accent and tone of the manthras has a meaning traceable to the deep past and the experiences of the makers of our culture. The skin is called 'charma' in Sanskrit. But, worn during the ritual it gives 'sarma,' which means joy and enthusiasm, aanandha and sukha. Yajna means, as you know, sacrifice, thyaaga (renunciation). The Yajna celebrated here, has no particular individual desire to satisfy. The aim is to ensure the prosperity and peace, not of any one individual, nor of any region or community or country, 'but, all 'mankind. Gandhi used to go round the country praying Sabko sanmathi dhe Bhagavaan: "O Lord, give every one, give all, goodness of mind." You who are attending this Yajna dedicated for the welfare of the world should pray likewise and, yourself entertain only sanmathi, so that the world will profit by the example.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 10-10-1974

True human greatness consists of a continuous series of tiny acts executed with absolute sincerity and largeness of heart.

Sri Sathya Sai

47. The flag of victory

THE hoisting of Prashaanthi Flag on the Prashaanthi Mandhir (Hall of Worship) is the Inaugural Function of all festivals celebrated at the Prashaanthi Nilayam. This has become an event, looked forward to with eager expectation and enthusiasm by the thousands of devotees who gather here.

But, most people do not know that the hoisting of the Flag is a meaningful signal of victory, and, even, those who know, do not often recall to their minds what the victory is, that is indicated by the hoisting of this particular flag.

Of course, as all of you have realised, the Dhashara Festival marks the triumph of the forces of good over the forces of evil, of Paraashakthi (Supreme Divine Energy) in Her three Forms of

Mahaadurga, Mahaalakshmi and Mahaasaraswathi, subduing and destroying the asuric - (demonic) embodiments of lust, greed, hate and other Raajasik (quality of pride and passion) and

Thaamasik (quality of inaction and ignorance) vices.

But, what is your share in this struggle and this victory? What is the impact this ceremony should have on you? This Prashaanthi Flag symbolises the victory that each of you has to achieve over the demonic urges that infect and torment you. The triumph that deserves to be celebrated here by you is the one accomplished over the forces of ignorance and delusion, that, by their subtle and sinister influence veil your true nature and reality and lead you into the desert wastes of the sensory world.

All that are created undergo a process of change

Of what benefit is it, to know everything about the 'object,' while knowing nothing about the 'subject'? Such incomplete knowledge is of no avail at all; to boast of it is tantamount to making oneself the target of ridicule!

Examine any object of Nature; examine anything, alive or inert, in Creation. You will observe that they all undergo a process of disintegration, of transformation, of transmutation; they are never one moment what they were the previous moment! It is a flowing river, you cannot dip in the same water more than once! A seed fallen on the ground soon becomes different: a sprout! It fast becomes a sapling, a tree, with a variegated equipment of trunk, branch, twig, leaf, bud, bloom and fruit! Each of these manifestations has a distinct colour, got evidently from nowhere; it has a distinct feel, form, taste, and name, and so, it has a unique purpose and use. The seed itself disappears from the ground, but, is found, multiplied a thousand-fold in identical forms, encased in each of the thousand fruits! What a grand mystery is this!

The same heap of clay is transformed by the deft hands of the potter into a vast variety of plates and pans. The one nugget of gold is transformed by the artistry of the smith into a fascinating array of beautiful jewels. These facts are within the experience of every one. The fruit, the pot and the jewel are 'effects'; there can be no effect without a 'cause.' The seed, the heap of clay and the nugget are the material causes, the gardener, the potter and the goldsmith are the instrumental causes; the manipulative causes. So far as the creation of the manifoldness of the Universe is concerned we call Him, God.

When the Cosmos manifested through the Will of God, who is the Universal Absolute, It arose from the Absolute only, since there was then, only ONE, just as even now there is only One, inspite of all this seeming variety. That Will which 'emanated from the Absolute persuaded us to see and experience Many; that is all that has happened. The One Reality is still the One, it has not undergone any change. We have super-imposed on the One, the illusion of the Many!

Nature is God's Body, Cosmos is His Will

God, therefore, is the material cause as well as the instrumental cause, the gold and the goldsmith, the potter and the clay, the seed as well as the tree..

"Beejam maam sarva

bhoothaanaam," Krishna says in the Geetha: "I am the seed of all the elements and all beings."

Nature is His Body; the Cosmos is His Will; the Vedhas are His Breath.

The Saankhya School of thinkers declare that the objective world arose out of the conglomeration and conjunction of disparate atoms; but, they do not pursue the matter and explain what induced the atoms to join with their kind in particular designs and groups. How does this urge arise? How does this awaken, within the minute atom? Who has planted this desire in the tiny heart of the atom? These questions are by-passed.

Most philosophers especially in the West, ignore the problem of identifying the cause of all the effects we find every moment all around us. The Upanishaths (integral wisdom of Vedhas) declare, Ekoham bahusyam---"I am one, let me become many," willed God; and God became all this, in response to that divine desire, the primal urge.

He became all this. He is therefore the Anthar-aathma (the Inner Reality); and the Anthar-yaami

(the Inner Motivator). The Vedhas declare Vaasudhevah sarvamidham---"All this is Vaasudheva, God." They all say, Neha naanaasthi, kinchana---"There is not the slightest trace of many-ness here." Ekam eva---There is only ONE; adhwithiyam---Without a Second.

Realising and experiencing this basic Truth, becoming blissful and aware of one's native Divinity is the victory that this Prashaanthi Flag denotes.

Have you won that victory? No. Why then, am I hoisting it for your exhilaration, on this Festival

Day? I am only hoisting it to instruct you, to inspire you, and to remind you of the precious heritage of Upanishathic wisdom, that your forefathers have earned and left for you. You are basking today in the sunshine of their glory; you have the chance to live on the fortune they have left behind for their children and children's children. This Flag invites you all to share in that immeasurable treasure.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 16-10-1974

Every being in the Universe has the potentiality of transcending the senses. Even the little worm will one day transcend the senses and reach God. No life will be a failure. There is no such thing as failure in the universe.

Sri Sathya Sai

48. Vehicle care

DOCTORS agree that illness is caused through faulty food habits and foolish ways of spending leisure. But, they do not seem to know that food is a Word that connotes a wider variety of 'intakes.' Every experience that is drawn through any of the senses in 'food' has an effect on one's health We say food for thought ; whatever we see or hear or smell or touch has an effect on the body; good or bad. The sight of blood makes some people faint; or, it may be some bad news, that administers a shock. Allergy is produced by unpleasant smells, or when something intrinsically unwelcome is contacted or tasted. A sound mind ensures a sound body; a sound body ensures a sound mind. The two are interdependent. Health is essential for happiness; happiness or a capacity to be happy, whatever may happen is essential for physical health, too.

The food we consume should be tasty, sustaining and pleasant. It should not be too 'hot' or too saltish; there must be a balance and equilibrium maintained. It should not arouse or deaden.

Raajasik food enrages the emotions; thaamasik food induces sloth and sleep. Saathwik food satisfies but does not inflame the passions or sharpen the emotions.

Five types of bath prescribed in the scriptures

Nature has many mysteries in its make-up. Man is able to unravel only those that are cognisable through his five senses; he does not realise that there is a vast unknown beyond the purview of the five faulty instruments of perception that he has. For example, from every being and thing, constantly, without intermission, millions of minute particles and millions of vibrations are issuing forth. Certain substances like camphor emanate so much of these that a lump disappears in a few days. The bodies of others affect us by these emanations and we too affect them in the same way. For good or bad, we are interacting in this manner, inescapably. Naturally, the growth of the body is affected, as well as its health and strength, by the contact or company we develop.

These emanations are intensified when dirt accumulates, or sewage collects, or drains are choked. Sanitation rules are framed to reduce the possibility of disease spreading from such areas.

Five types of bath are prescribed in the Hindhu scriptures, in order to maintain physical immunity from the emanations of others. First, we have the 'mud bath,' wherein fine mud is applied over the body and kept on for some time before being washed away. Second, the 'Sun bath' is recommended, because the rays of the Sun are powerful disinfectants; they feed as well as freshen.

Third: bath in water. If the water is a flowing river, considered holy, and if the bath is taken after propitiatory hymns etc., the bath will cleanse the body and, at the same time, elevate the spirit.

The fourth type is the 'air-bath,' when the body is, exposed to the cool breeze, and its salutary effect. The fifth and last type is the 'ash bath,' where the body is given a coating of fine ash or Vibhuuthi (sacred ash), revered as the mark of Shiva. The ash guards the body from evil contacts and the deleterious effects of the vibrations proceeding from others; it also sanctifies and purifies the vibrations of the individual wearing the ash, for, it reminds him always of the inevitable end of all that one feels as one's own, except the Lord who is the very person himself.

Uncleanliness has become a popular cult Untouchability as a social practice must have had its origin in the realisation of this truth. But, practices like avoiding contact with demeaning or defiling men or things later became a ritual, a hollow round of negations. Those who are ridiculed for observing such restrictions and taboos are finding it difficult to explain the inner significance of their behaviour. These observances originated from the anxiety to earn length of life and strength of body, so that the seeker might gain the goal. The Geetha speaks of yukthaahaara vihaarasya--- "habits of feeding and recreation which are controlled and regulated." The gross part of food is discarded as faeces, the subtle part is transformed into muscle, blood, etc. and the more subtle of the subtle aspects are transmuted into the mind and its activities. That is why the sages have prescribed certain limits and levels of food, in order to promote the spiritual urges and prevent contrary tendencies.

But, nowadays, as a result of the downgraded time-spirit, food that damages the spiritual urge is being increasingly favoured! The elementary rules of personal cleanliness are neglected in the name of 'novelty and neospiritualism.' Bath is given the go-by. Oral hygiene is not cared for.

Damaging habits are cultivated and tolerated. The mouth is the gateway of the physical mansion; if the gateway is foul, what can we say of the residence and the inmates! Uncleanliness has become a popular cult; it is necessary to keep away from its votaries, for, cleanliness is next to Godliness. Unkempt, dishevelled, dirty heads and bodies denote unkempt, dishevelled intellects and minds.

The body will shine if the character is fine

Of course, it is true that many sages and saints paid little attention to personal cleanliness, since they were always on the higher plane of nearness to Reality. Imitating them without the inner conviction that one is not the body but that one is the Universal Indweller .can only be hypocrisy and exhibitionism. Eeshwara swallowed the poison that emerged from the Ocean; but, mortals cannot do the same, even to remove the minor poisons of the world. Develop equanimity, install in the mind the faith in the Divine and then you get the authority to neglect the claims of the body, with impunity. You cannot challenge the wisdom of the sages and ask, what harm is there if I too behave likewise! Great harm will certainly ensue, when you venture into these realms of the spirit with the ego bloated big.

The body has to be carefully and tenderly fostered; it is a precious gift, a very complicated but well co-ordinated machine, given for achieving a laudable task. Its exterior too must be clean and full of the charm of goodness. The skin of the fruit of Aanandha (divine bliss) is the physical body; the succulent flesh is the muscle, bone and nerve; the hard uneatable seed is the evil that gets mixed up in life; the juice which the fruit offers, for which the tree was planted and nourished is the Bliss it shares with all. The body will shine if the character is fine; service of man and worship of God will preserve its charm. The Lord will be watching with a thousand eyes the least activity of man to discover any slight trace of selfless Love sweetening it.

In the past, illnesses were cured by the simple remedies that nature herself provided,--roots, tubers, fruits, leaves etc., rest, change of residence, regulation of diet, saadhana (spiritual discipline) etc. But, now man lives in an age of tablets and injections. Do not believe that health is retained or maintained through doctors; nor can drugs alone guarantee it. Were that So, the dead should all be alive now. Well, examine whether the doctors themselves follow the advice they offer to others. They are victims of the very habits which they advise against! They condemn smoking and drinking intoxicants as dangerous to health, but, they indulge in both, and thereby, encourage the very evils they condemn!

This is the type of health-advisers that we have! In every field---spiritual, moral, .economic, political, and literary---absence of proper leaders is the root cause of all the distress, anxiety and fear that torment the world.

You are embodiments of the Divine Aathma. Do not crave for recognition and respect from others; crave rather for winning Grace from the Lord. In the pursuit of that aim, do not be misled by the emergence of obstacles and obstructions.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 16-10-1974

49. Honour your kith and kin VOLUNTEERS! Embodiments of the Divine Aathma! Service without idea of self is the very first step in the spiritual progress of man. For, it trains you to transcend all the distinctions artificially imposed by history and geography and realise that the human community is ONE, and indivisible. Learn this truth; experience it in action. That is the duty of the Seva Dhal Organisation. How can a person be held 'divine' (as every man truly is), unless he has established himself in the sense of this Unity and shaped all his actions thereby? Man has been brought forth so that he may enjoy his heritage, namely; the Bliss that comes of the realisation of the One. Any activity solely intended for the individual is, on that very account, barren.

For, the community is essential for the individual, for his very survival. Your service will confer on you and on the community wherein you live untold benefits; it will also bring an invisible but potent benefit, namely, Divine Grace, Seva (selfless service) is an important ingredient in the nine-fold discipline of Bhakthi (devotion). You can see, sense, understand and sympathise with others who are akin to you, and so, you have greater reason to render them help and service.

God will not accept hypocrisy

If you do not feel the call at the sight of human distress, disease or deviation from the right, how can you muster the determination and dedication necessary to serve the unseen, inscrutable, mysterious God. When you do not love man, your heart will not love God. Despising" brother man, you cannot at the same time, worship God; if you do, God will not accept that hypocrisy. God is the resident in every heart; so, serve any one, that service reaches the God within him; it brings on you the Grace of God. The heart that does not melt at the sight of persons caught in the coils of ignorance, disease or deprivation has to be labelled demonic; to call it bestial is an insult to the beasts. Give up egoism, sensualism and greed; fill your hearts with renunciation, belief in the glory of the Aathma (Self) and Love. That is the means by which you can make yourselves efficient Seva Dhal workers. Thousands arrive at the Prashanthi Nilayam during the festivals; among them we have a large number of sick people, the aged and children. You have to serve these visitors with special care and love. Do not go about strutting with pride that you have a badge and a scarf; go humbly among the people with love in your hearts and softness in your speech and sweetness in your acts. It is a badge which a "servant" alone is entitled to wear, not a master lording over others. The badges rest on your hearts, don't they? If your hearts are filled with pride, and a sense of superiority over others who have no badge on their chests, then, the hearts themselves will be affected by the evil aroused by this decoration. When you disregard or disrespect the badge, you are disregarding and disrespecting your own inner reality. The badge and scarf do not entitle you to roam about in the bazaar, or lounge in the hotel outside the Nilayam, indulging in low talk and vulgar habits. It does not allow you to exercise authority over any one or appropriate anything from any one. It is a call and a challenge for you, to provide comfort and consolation to those in need, to seek out means and methods to increase the ways in which you can help others and contribute to their joy. Serve the community, the Community will serve you Be worthy of this gift of Grace; maintain' the high ideals of the Seva Dhal organisation. This opportunity has been given to you out of sheer Grace; it is not given as a consequence of some rule or claim. It does not bind you; it gives you distinction and duty, both. If you have it with you, and yet, -withdraw from service or hesitate to render it, you are 'on the wrong, track. People come to this Presence to get rid of sin and accumulate spiritual merit; if you dishonour the badge, you are retaining the sins and accumulating a lot more. Remember, with each act of Love and Service, you are nearing the Divine Presence; with each act of hate and grab, you are moving farther and farther away. The ideal of service must inspire those in authority, those who possess riches, those who-are endowed with skills and intelligence, leisure and health. Serve the community and the community will serve you. Exploit it and it will exterminate you. Put an end to laziness; bury your clamorous ego; bury the greed for power and pelf; then, you get the qualifications needed for a member of the Seva Dhal. I know that some people allow others to use the scarf and badge given to them; they do so to escape work or to please their friends. This is very wrong; these symbols of Seva are as vital to reach one of you as your own breath. When you give them over, you do great injury to your own breath. Or, there are some, I know, who keep them hidden, out of sight of others, when they drink, gamble, or smoke and indulge in such harmful and shameful acts. This too is despicable. Soft speech reaches the heart quicker Now, about some things you have to bear in mind, when you serve the people who come here and stay for the festival. Distribute water to the thirsty; help the aged to find places away from the scorching sun or pouring rain. At the gatherings, arrange to seat the persons who have come from long distances for the first time, eager to take Dharshan (audience), in places and rows wherefrom they can see and enjoy the festival in all its aspects. When you meet with cases of illness, report immediately to some doctor and help them to get relief. Do not delay. When your services are called for, do not rush thither in huge numbers; go in as small a number as is required. Too many enthusiastic persons can only hinder the work; and, work in other fields will suffer. I am Prema (divine love), and you should hold on to Prema as your method of Seva (selfless service). Soft speech reaches the heart quicker and deeper. Reveal in gentle words the reason why you do not allow certain things to be done or you require certain other things to be done.

Win the willing co-operation of people, not their resentful acquiescence. Do not rely on harsh behaviour, or violent means. That is a path into which many slide easily; but, they do not realise that they are ridiculed as alsatians or bull-dogs by those who suffer their attentions. Do not also use your status to show favour to your kinsmen, or friends in any manner. All are your kith and kin, in the Sai Family.

This is your home, and the thousands who come to this home are your kith and kin. Welcome them, as you will welcome your nearest and dearest relations; as far as in you lies, make their stay comfortable. This scarf and this badge confer on you the right to declare that Prashanthi Nilayam is your home. Keep that in mind and do not behave in any manner that will tarnish the brightness of that declaration. That status is a precious gift. Do not overstep the limits imposed by the Organisation; do not disobey the rules laid down; do not deviate from the ideals laid down. March straight on, and reach the goal.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 16-10-1974

Peace is inherent in man. When ego becomes egoism, the Aham becomes Ahamkaar by enfolding itself in a form. 'I'--pure and simple, maintained pure and simple---is still 'being'; it 'becomes' when the I identifies itself with something other: I am a man, I am a monk. I am a student. The 'I' has become an 'ism;' has put on a form, a vesture, which it is loath to give up, the aakaar which has rendered it Aham-kaar, egoist!

Sri Sathya Sai

50. The Labyrinth

THE real and the unreal (that appears to the ignorant as 'real') are not two distinct things; one is the absence of the other, that is all. The 'absence' of reality cannot be an 'unreal thing.' The absence of light cannot be raised to the level of a distinct thing called 'darkness.' There is only One; it appears as two. In order to explain this, Brahmasri Mudigonda Pichayya Shaasthry gave a good example. He spoke of a red-hot cinder, which burns the hand, since fire has entered into the piece of coal. So too, when the ego enters the jeeva (individual being), the ego develops attributes and appears many-faced.

But, just inquire, how the coal itself came into being. That too was a result of fire! The jeeva itself was manifested since the feeling of aham (ego) arose in the nirguna Brahman (the attributeless, desireless Universal).

The Shaasthry also spoke of the difficulties involved in releasing the jeeva from the clutches of the ego. He said it is like separating the heat from the red-hot cinder, it has become part and parcel of the coal. But, by the process of cooling, the coal can again rid itself of the heat that informed every particle of its substance.

He called 'life,' a labyrinth, from which few can escape, though all have entered it easily! He quoted the Mahaabhaaratha episode where Dhrona, the teacher of the clans in the art of warfare

(also called Kumbhaja, born in pot) had arrayed the Kaurava troops as a labyrinth on the battlefield of Kurukshethra; Dhrona challenged the teenage son of Arjuna, Abhimanyu by name, to come into the padhmavyuha (labyrinth of the lotus shape) and fight his way out, if he dared. His father Arjuna was not present in camp; his wife was pregnant at the time and, so, as the Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) declare, the prospective father had no right to gamble with his life. When the young warrior mentioned the challenge, his mother expostulated with him, and told him that he could well excuse himself from the ordeal.

The pure mind reflects the Reality of God

The reasons she gave him for this withdrawal have a deeper meaning. The labyrinth was constructed by Kumbhaja, which means, one born in intelligence, Brahman Itself, for, Brahman is Prajnaanam (the Supermost Wisdom). How can a person break through the labyrinth devised by Brahman, when he is overwhelmed by the egoistic pulls, consideration for his-wife and his child-in-the-womb and the absence of his father? These two excuses are the symbols of I and Mine.

The Mahaabhaaratha declares that Arjuna alone had capacity and skill to break the Padhmavyuha (that is to say, the labyrinth of birth and death, the tangle of desires and fulfilments). Why? Because, Arjuna, (the word means, pure, unblemished, immaculate) was free from the ego and so could foil its stratagems. Through the pure mind alone can the chain be broken, the tangle cleared. The pure mind reflects the Reality clearly, the Reality of God that is the basis of One---Self as well as the objective world. Chiththa-shuddhi brings Inaana-siddhi---

"the pure mind confers the boon of wisdom." God is immanent in every particle in the Universe; the clear vision can experience Him everywhere at all times.

"Soham" is the refrain of every breath

That vision gives immeasurable, inexpressible bliss. Of what avail is all the loud chanting, praying, singing and wailing, when the heart is soiled by egoism and selfish desire? A person behaving so might be taken by ordinary mortals as highly devoted to the spiritual path; but, deep in his disturbed consciousness, he will be tormented by anxiety and fear. On the other hand, a person might appear poor, distressed, and depressed, to ordinary mortals; he might not have the exterior demonstration of devotion. But, God would be ever installed in his heart, guiding and guarding him. He might be doing all acts as acts of worship to the God residing in his heart.

The bird in this physical cage wherein man is imprisoned is always, from the moment of birth to the moment of death, chirping 'Soham,' declaring that 'in reality the jeeva (embodied soul) and dheha (body) are ONE. It is this affirmation that is the justification for the gift of life. When that chirp does not emanate from the breath, the body is a shavam (corpse)! When it manifests, illuminates and fills the cage 'with the Divine fragrance, it is a tabernacle, Shivam! Identify yourselves with the manthra (sacred formulae) the bird chirps, the breath repeats. You might forget any other saadhana (spiritual discipline) or any other duty to yourself---but, the breath never, even for a moment forgets this Saadhana--reminding you of your innate Reality, namely, Sah (He). "I am He. He is I"---that is the refrain of every breath. What deeper instruction, what greater inspiration do you require, to keep you on an even keel of equanimity?

Faith in God must be constant and firm A devotee once lamented, saying, "O God! You have forgotten me!" This is never possible; it is the devotee who forgets that he is the child of God, that God is his never-failing friend and guide.

God is all-knowledge, all-power, all mercy. Faith in God has to be constant, firm in the face of every challenge by fate or fortune.
On one occasion, the deers of the forest held a huge conference to consider their plight. The leader of the vast multitude that had assembled counselled courage and unity; he said that it was a real shame that mean creatures like dogs, who were not as fleet as they and had no horns, could put terror in their hearts. At this, the vast congregation unanimously resolved with loud acclamation that no deer shall henceforth turn its back when dogs pursue them, should stand their ground and give a fight to the finish. While the echoes of the acclamation were still booming through the forest, but with the distant barking in an instant, not a single deer could be spotted where thousands had assembled to pass that resolution. They dissolved into thin air, and denied their own resolution. This is verbal hypocrisy, which is fatal to spiritual progress, and ruinous in any field.

The fault lies in the belief that things happen as a result of human effort and planning, human intelligence and care. No one can succeed in any venture without Divine Grace. It is a God's plan that is being worked out through man but, man prides himself that he has worked for it.

This reminds me of a story. A poor simple villager made his first rail journey. He purchased a ticket and entered a compartment; he found it occupied already by a few passengers who had kept their boxes, bundles and odd items of luggage on the racks or under the benches on which they sat. They were unconcerned with the extra effort that the engine would have to make to drag along those boxes and bundles. How cruel of them, the villager thought. The engine has to pull along their weights, and now they are imposing on the train, this additional burden too. He for one was not going to inflict this extra trouble on the poor thing; so he kept his box on his shoulder and his bundle on his head. He believed that he was carrying his box and bundle along, and not the engine. Most people behave in the same silly fashion, ignoring the fact that God is All; man is but an instrument in His hands, for the execution of His Plan. Faith in this fact is the key to peace and joy.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 23-10-1974

Desire destroys devotion, anger destroys wisdom, greed destroys work. Hence these bad qualities must be sacrificed. With good and sweet words, keeping desires under check and control (for ultimate removal), one should start on the path of sacrifice.

Sri Sathya Sai

51. Diamonds in the dust COMPASSION towards all creatures is the greatest virtue, wilful injury to any creature is the worst vice. Have full faith in this; spread love and joy, through compassion, and be full of joy and peace, yourself. You do not have joy and peace now, mainly because, your vision is warped and wobbling. The vision is now directed towards the faults, and failings of others, never towards one's own faults and failings. The ears too delight when stories of failures and foibles of others are related. No attempt is made to examine the failures and foibles of oneself. Really speaking, inquiry and the investigation have to begin with oneself. For, what we see in others is the reflection of our own selves, our own prejudices and preferences. Besides, when your attention is focussed on faults and failures, vices and wrongs, the mind too becomes infected with the pollution and it starts relishing only experiences of such tastes. Hence, the lives of such people lose the peace and joy that are the heritage of the wise and the wary.

Let us take the example of the snake. It has two characteristics: (1) It never moves straight. Its path is always crooked. (2) It strikes at all that comes in its way. Man too is snaky, for, he exhibits these two characteristics in a marked manner. So, he shares another characteristic too of the snake, namely, poison. Slavery to sensory objects is like snake's poison. Poison is called in Samskrith, visha. A kindred word is vishaya, which means, the sensory objects, which poison the mind of man with lust, anger, greed, craving, pride and hate. The snake's poison is the cause why it is destroyed wherever seen. Man's slavery to vishaya is the cause of his downfall. But, the situation is not without some hope. The serpent can be tamed and its poison-fangs removed, when music from the naagaswaram pipe is played and when it is fascinated by that sweet melody. The poison that vishaya exerts on the human mind can also be eliminated and countermanded, when man is fascinated by the sweet melodies of Naamasmarana and sankeerthan --- that is to say, by the repetitive chanting and congregational singing of the meaningful Names of the Lord. The poison in both can thus be transmuted into pure nectar.

What happens to man when Naamasmarana withdraws his mind from the sensory tangles is --- the acquisition of Samachiththa --- a new balance of mind, of blissful equanimity. Nature is in constant flux; nothing remains the same even for a few seconds. The sweet dish that is cooked now becomes stale and stinking a few hours hence and is ruined so much that it acts as a danger to health, when consumed. Other types of changes happen in other fields, other things and beings.

And, man not only expects these changes, he prepares himself to face them; in fact, in many cases, he is unhappy if the change does not happen! If things remain the same, it is certain to cause deep disappointment. A new-born babe must grow in weight, in movement of limbs, in intake of food, and the output of energy through activity. Or else, parents become anxious and run from doctor to doctor. The same thing happens when the child does not walk or talk, weep or laugh.

Aim at constant consciousness of the Reality. In a normal babe, there exists real Samachiththa, for, there is no desire (except the instinctive desire for food, drink and maternal protection), to agitate it. The babe is the inheritor of Immortality; so it is unaffected by anxiety, that haunts the adult. The word Samachiththa is, in common parlance, taken to mean, sheer equanimity---an unshaken balance, when confronted by success or failure, loss or gain, pleasure or pain. But, 'Sama' has another and more significant meaning, namely Brahman, the Universal Eternal Absolute principle. Samachiththa, therefore, in its philosophical sense, means, a consciousness established in the Absolute Brahman, and as a consequence, above and beyond the storms and stillness of the world of duality. This constant consciousness of the Reality is the fruit of yajna (selfless sacrifice), the Vedhic symbol of thyaaga (renunciation), as mentioned in the statement na medhavaa, na prajayaa, dhanena, thyaagenaike amruthathwam aanasuh---"not by the intellect, nor by progeny, nor by wealth, but, only by renunciation can immortality be attained." Yajna (sacrifice) means thyaaga (renunciation).

It is to emphasise this great axiom that during Dhashara every year, the Vedhic Yajna is performed; the thousands who attend the Festival can share the knowledge and the inspiration that the Yajna provides. Master the assertive ego by the Real Self. This day is the Samaapthi of the Yajna. Sama means, as I just now said, Brahman. So, Samaapthi means, the attainment of Sama or Brahman, which is the summum bonum of the ritual. The realisation of this Braahmic Reality is the birthright of all men. But, though born with the fight and the responsibility, as the Amritha-puthra (Child of the nectar of immortality), man denies himself the victory, courts defeat and prides himself as an Anirtha-puthra (child of the Illusory, the delusion). The realisation which is his due is not an attainable achievement; it is a simple conquest, so simple that people never attempt it!

The assertive ego that urges him to identify himself with the body and the instrument with which it is equipped, the motives with which those "instruments work and the reactions which those motives breed, has to be mastered by the Real Self, a wave of the great Ocean of Cosmic Consciousness, that is all. Now, man declares himself as aham and takes pride in his ahamkaara (egoistic-consciousness). But, he is not aware of the inner meaning of the word aham! Aham is just a verbal symbol for what he really is. A is the sound that represents the Omnipresent Godhead, named also as Vishnu. In the Geetha it is asserted, aksharaanaam a-kaarosmi--"Among the letters I am A," (pronounced as in anatomy, etc). Ham means Shakthi (energy, power, force).

So, when one points to himself as aham, he is unconsciously announcing that he is the hardened energy of the Omnipresent Universal Absolute Brahman called also Vishnu.

Besides, the Lord says in the Geetha, mayaa kritham idham sarvam---"I have made all this out of Myself!" When all is He, you and all jeevas (individualised beings) are He. How then can we demarcate some as bad, and relish the stories concerning them and list their faults and failings?

Make the mind concentrate on the Brahman

The question may be raised, "The good and the bad are so obvious, how can we deny them or ignore them?" They are obvious only so long as the individual is not fully established in the truth that Vaasudheva sarvamidham (God is all). Until that moment, the body dominates thought, desires haunt the mind, ego rules the intellect; so dualities lord over man. When like the boy Prahlaadha, one is sunk and saturated in God-consciousness, there can be no feeling of gain or loss, pleasure or pain. He is immersed in the word, and is unconcerned about its meaning which is manifested in all its variety in the objective world. The one Word seems to have many meanings, as a result of ignorance. It is the word, the Paraa-shakthi (the Supreme Power) that gives value and validity to every one of the meanings.

Another idea called ekaagratha (one-pointedness) too can now be elucidated. Saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) often bewail that they do not earn one-pointedness. They mean, by that term, that they are not able to concentrate their attention long on a flame, light, picture, or idol. The eye concentrates on something seen; the nose, on some fragrance; the ear on some melody. But, the mind concentrates on the One, (the Ekam), the Brahman---which is described as ekam nithyam vimalam achalam sarvadhee saakshibhootham (the One, the eternal, the pure, the unmoving, the all knowing witness of all). Ekaagratha, therefore, denotes the concentration of the inner vision on Brahman (Omni-self). The intellect, the ego, the senses--these should subserve this great purpose and help in attaining the ideal. They should be vigilant that they do not divert the vision or deviate it from the Brahman. Nature is beauty, truth but man sees it ugly, false

However, it has to be admitted that such saadhana is now very rare; very few fix their inner vision on the universal and the eternal; nor do they listen to its majesty and mystery. The tragedy which has fallen upon mankind is just this: the mind of man has strayed away from its moorings, and is being tossed about on the waves of doubt and diversity. Brahman is One, unchanging, everlasting. A mind filled with the yearning for Brahman will see the One in all, it will remain unaffected by the smiles and sneers of fortune. But, man's mind has been tempted into strange paths that can lead him only to fear and frustration. Man condemns the world and calls it a seat of wickedness and war.

The fault lies not in the world, but, in himself. He has war in him and so, he sees war; he is inherently wicked and so, he observes wickedness all around him. A brilliant lamp cannot remove the darkness which a blind man has always around him. For those who have eyes to see, it is brilliant, the light around them. The darkness the blind man swears by is in him, not outside him. So too, the man who is at peace with himself, will discern peace all around him. Nature is beauty, truth, peace. Man sees it ugly, false and violent---that is all. It is strange, but true Immortality lies enshrined in the mortal; there are diamonds in dirt and dust; wisdom dwells in this mansion of muscles; the aathma illumines this tabernacle of the jeeva (individual being). Man does not look into himself; he is poor, though under his feet there lies buried treasures. Heir to inexhaustible bliss, he runs after momentary pseudo-pleasures! He gets as reward only distress, disappointment and defeat. He spends all his allotted years in this wasteful adventure, and even at the last moment of life he is beset with sorrow and fear. He has no peace when he leaves his body, for, he has lost the chance of winning peace through its instrumentality.

The Will to live in man is very strong

There was a woodcutter once, going daily into the forest and collecting a bundle of fuel which he sold in the village nearby for pittance; which just sufficed to keep his wife and children alive.

One morning, while he was stepping out of his hut, the wife reminded him that it was Yugaadhi (the Thelugu New Year festival), the next day; she pleaded with him to collect a heavier bundle of fuel that day, so that they could get a few more paise to give the children a morsel of sweet rice each. The man nodded assent and walked on. He succeeded in gathering an extra huge bundle, but, with that heavy load on his head, he was soon exhausted; he had to deposit it on the ground, before he could approach the village. This set him thinking of his plight.

He had lost all his old zest for living. He called upon the Angel of Death, the Mruthya dhevatha, to relieve him. He cried, "O Death! Have you no mercy towards me? Why have you forgotten me, so long? How I wish I could die and escape from this daily grind?"

The Angel of Death took pity on him, and appeared before him, to fulfill his wish. But, the woodcutter suddenly receded, he cleverly changed the purpose of his appeal to the Angel. He had no wish to die, though in his despair, he had called for her help. He said, "No. No. I had no one here to lift this bundle on to my head, so I called on you to come to my aid. That was the only reason behind my prayer.

Please help me to lift this burden and place it on my head; I have to reach the village soon!"

Since man is innately immortal, he recedes from the grasp of death, the Will to live is very strong, much more persistent than the Will to die.

The shadow of man is neither true nor false

It is like the story of the Sun and darkness, this question of meeting death or vanquishing death.

The Sun-God was, one day, very much impressed by the 1008 Names with which a devotee offered Him worship. He listened to the Names, as he uttered them in steadfast faith. He was particularly alerted when he called-upon Him as Andhakaara dhweshi--"He who is looked upon as the enemy of darkness." He could not tolerate the existence of an enemy alive; so, He called for a war unto death for this demon called Darkness. He went into all the places where Darkness hid himself; but no sooner did He spot him, the demon disappeared so that He could never come into grips with him. Finally, He concluded that darkness was nonexistent and was only a creation of the imagination of His adorers! Before the splendour of Immortality, the darkness of mortality too would flee in haste.

The resident in the body has no birth and therefore, no death. But, man is hugging the falsehood that he is the body and so is subject to death and birth. A silver cup can be reshaped by the smith into a plate, or later, into a paan-box; but though the name, the form and the function might change, the silver is there, in all three, unchanged in substance, in spite of the births into plate and box and the deaths as cup and plate. When a man stands on the bank of a sheet of water, his shadow appears in the water. People say it is he, but Vedhaantha (Vedhic philosophy) says, he is not it. When the shadow is beaten with a stick, he is not hurt; so, it is not he; but, when some one says it is misshapen, ugly, etc., he gets angry! So, he is it. The shadow is both he and not-he. It is neither true nor false, it is real-unreal, it is mithya (only mythical). The eye is distinct from the objects it sees; the eye is an instrument used by the I, which is a ray of the Splendour of the Aathma (soul). The senses are mirrors and when the light of that ray falls on them, things and objects are reflected therein. The Aathma shines and all the inner organs of perception awaken to their duty of gathering knowledge and revealing Bliss. It is their duty to function according to their nature; the result is not to be aimed at. It follows when the duty is done efficiently to the best of one's ability and Will. A knife cuts vegetables; but, does not eat them. It cuts a fruit; but, is not tempted to taste their sweetness. Let us imagine a cup, full of fruit-juice. The cup is not aware of the sweetness of the juice. A straw is used to sip the juice, the juice fills the entire length of the straw-, but yet, the straw is a stranger to the taste; the tongue has the juice on it; but it has no knowledge of its calorific value or its components; it can only pronounce judgement on its taste; for other purposes, it sends the juice into the stomach. The stomach discriminates and distributes the essentials of the juice to every part of the body, every nerve and cell, and contributes to their efficiency and strength. The cup is the body of man; it has in it the Divinely sweet Aathma principle. The sense organs are the straws; intellect is the tongue; the ego principle is the stomach; it converts the sweetness into spirit and confers bliss, peace and light.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 25-10-1974
52. Four steps to freedom THE culture of this ancient land is as deep as it is vast, it is built on strong and sustaining principles of human development. But, Indians at the present time are neglecting its lessons and entangling themselves in the search for material joys and pleasures.
They ignore the true and eternal values. They turn a deaf ear to the call of the Divine; they respond to the siren voice of the worldly. This is the twentieth century, the Age of Science and Technology. There is plenty of material comforts and sensual pleasure easily available. So driven by an insane urge for the temporal and the trivial, man rushes into rain, and loses the precious heritage of Aathmic (pure spiritual) treasure which the culture promises him. In fact, if only man knew the purpose and plan of Life, he would not waste his years and his skills in the pursuit of mere time-bound joys.
That he is everywhere engrossed in these endeavours is a pitiable fact, which can be attributed to his misfortune or his ignorance. Of course, man has lost faith in himself; so, there is no wonder that he has lost faith in God also. Only those who know themselves and have confidence in themselves can acquire knowledge of God and confidence in God.
Know thyself, first; then, your attempt to know the world will be rendered simple.
Wisdom can come only through work as worship Indian Culture has laid emphasis on four aashramas (stages of life) for individual development in order to assure everyone with the education needed to know himself. For Aathma vichaarana (enquiry into the Self), Aashrama dhanam (code of duty) is very essential. Through adherence to the regulations and prescriptions of conduct and study-assigned to each stage or Aashram, the earning of knowledge and wisdom is made easy and automatic.
Wisdom can come only through work as worship; the Aashrams guide man to sublimate all activity into worship.
Just as we have four stages: childhood, youth, middle age and old age, we have four corresponding Aashramas: Brahmacharya, Grahashthya, Vaanaprastha and Sanyaas-- studentship, householdership, reclusership and monk-ship. During the years of childhood and teenage, man has to equip himself with the information necessary to share in the work of society and to derive health and happiness thereby, and acquaint himself with the tools of knowledge and the paths along which wisdom can be garnered. As a-householder, raising a family and sustaining a society, he has also to uphold the ideals of justice and truth, and promote them by his actions. He must feel the innate majesty of mankind and live in accordance with that high status.

As a recluse and monk, in old age, he has to be the guide and teacher of the people around him, imparting to them the fund of wisdom he has won through his experience.
The Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) lay down the lines along which man has to direct his thoughts and activities. Sincere adherence to these laws and limitations alone can guarantee jnaana (spiritual wisdom). Otherwise, man drifts aimlessly along the crosscurrents and whirlpools of life and ends up ignorant, both of the nature of loka (world) and the glory of Lokeshwara (God).
Forces of atheism have gained strength now The higher paths must be trodden from childhood; it cannot be adopted at an advanced age. The child must learn to be truthful in word and deed, and avoid the cowardly habit of falsehood.
Later, boys and girls have to become conscious directors of their senses, instead of being automatic slaves. Heads of families have to adhere to the schedules of rites and worship prescribed for them; they have to supervise the behaviour and conduct of the members of the household; they have to render hospitality to guests and deal charity to the poor; they have also to equip their sons and daughters with processes by which they can have mental peace and equanimity, under all conditions. Because these obligations have been neglected for some generations, the forces of atheism have earned strength now.
When the seeds are ridden with defects, how can the tree yield richly? When parents and elders do not provide good examples to the children growing under their shade, how can the country prosper and be free from anxiety and fear? You cannot separate the rind, the pulp and the seed that a tamarind fruit has, when it is still green. But, once it has ripened, the separation is quite easy. So too, until a person becomes ripe in experience and can be pronounced wise, he cannot discard his identification with the body, the senses and the mind. He will not be able to differentiate between Aathma (spiritual Self) and non-aathma, kshethra (the body) and Kshethrajna (the controller of the body). Prakrithi (Nature) and Paramaathma (Supreme Self), Guna (impelling characteristic quality) and Trans-guna, and such other entities.

Man's restlessness affects society too
 Let me tell you a small example: Krishna killed the Kaaliya serpent that was poisoning the Kalinidi river and destroying all trace of life for miles around, by means of deadly fumes. No sooner was Kaaliya killed than the 'wives' (serpents) of his harem, prayed to Krishna for succour and surrendered to Him. This story is according to the Bhaagavatha. Now, what does this signify? In the Mind-lake (the Maanasa-sarovar) of man, there lurks a poisonous serpent, desire.

When that is destroyed, the various frailities and frivolities, triumphs, trials and failures, pains and pleasures, that desire brings in its train, surrender to God. Desire can be killed, only when faith in the Aathma as the very core of being is firmly established. Since all efforts are now directed to the accumulation of material goods and the satisfaction of sensual desires, man is tossed about on the waves of fight and faction, falsehood and greed. The individual is intimately related to society and so, his restlessness affects society too.

The individual Will is ultimately responsible for the welfare and well-being of the world. The world is but a mental image of the individual. How this happens is a mystery. One can only say, that just as sleep is the cause of dreams, maaya (Worldly illusion due to basic ignorance) is the cause of Creation. Doctors ascribe dreams to various reasons: indigestion, the compulsions of thought, the confusions of mental pictures, etc. But, we can be certain only of one reason, namely sleep! Dreams are nullified when the person becomes a inaani (one aware of the Truth).

At that stage, one gets rid of the night-dream as well as the day-dream.

The four Aashramas have been devised in order to awaken man into the inaani stage. Education today, in all grades, is a process of packing information in the brain and skills in the hands. It is useful only for parading scholarship, dialectical controversies and mutual recrimination. It does not instil humility, a sense of balance and equanimity. Of course, spiritual training is totally absent. Perhaps, the feeling is that spirituality is a solitary pursuit, which can be undertaken only in the silence of the forest. No! True spirituality is the awareness of the fundamental unity of man in God.

The main mission of man is the march towards Unity People celebrate the birth of a child; they are happy when the child grows tall and strong. But, the fittest event for such celebration is when the child justifies its birth, by achieving good fame as a benefactor of man or a servant of mankind. Emperor Dhritharaashtra had hundred sons! He must have celebrated their birthdays, too. But, no one of them did any one good; they were all arrogant, greedy and full of spite. Therefore, they accomplished only the extinction of the entire dynasty and all who were attached to it!

Sons and daughters are now keen to share the properties of their parents and spend their portion as quickly as possible. They do not care for the much more precious wealth of experience that their forefathers have earned for their sake. They waste their years in fallow efforts so much that even their health is destroyed; children wear glasses when barely ten; they dye their hair when barely fourteen; they age fast and show signs of senility when barely sixteen! To praise the habits that people adopt today as 'modern,' or 'conducive to progress' is ridiculous to say the least.

As the ancients emphasised, food habits and recreation habits have to become Saathwik (conducive to health of body and mind), that is to say, such as cannot arouse and feed the passions of man, or make him dull and stupid, idle and listless. Above all, everyone must realise, (and guide himself accordingly), that the main mission of man here below is the march towards the ideal of Unity and Peace.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1974

If you can fill your heart with love, then peace will come into you from outside. Through bad qualities, to some extent, we lose peace. With truthful thoughts, a man will have peace. If you can get rid of all thoughts, you will become a saint. It is only when you can be free from all thoughts that you can have peace. Your own bad thoughts are responsible for all your pain and sorrow.

Sri Sathya Sai
 53. Never a party
 EMBODIMENTS of Divine Aathma! You are celebrating this day as the Birthday of Swaami, and deriving Aanandha (divine bliss) through various programmes here, carried on with enthusiasm by you; but, in fact, I have no wish to consider this as a special day because it is the birthday and celebrate it as such. I have come on purpose to reveal to man the mystery of his Reality and the goal of his life; I have not come to set them the task of celebrating the birthday or to get arranged any pompous and personal festivals. I have no such desire, at any time, in this or any other sojourn.

On what day do I celebrate my birthday? On that day when all of you experience genuine Aanandha, in your hearts! Now, when your hearts are surging with manifold fears and anxieties, and torn by miseries and losses, and riven as under of grief, declaring this day as-My birthday seems to be barren of meaning!

While on this subject, it is essential that I warn you of another subject also. Do not spend your time trying to understand Me; do not waste your time in the attempt. The reason why I am saying this is: It is beyond any one's capacity to understand Me. So, trying to do the impossible, you are only wasting your time and your effort. It is only when you succeed in knowing yourselves that you can know Me.

Need for establishing colleges by Sathya Sai Trust

I need nothing, however great or small, in this Universe. At no moment has desire affected me for any thing or activity. I am the person come to give, not to receive. And, what you can offer

Me is just this: pure, unadulterated love. When you offer Me that, I derive Aanandha.

During the recent Dhashara Festival, some announcements were made; if you ask Me what connection I have with those announcements, I reply, the connection is that of the name only.

Otherwise, I have no connection with these.

Considering the wrong and undesirable paths that youth is courting and preferring all over the world at the present time, the Members of the Sathya Sai Central Trust have decided to establish Colleges in many States and through these institutions, to provide youth opportunities to transform itself in various ways, to maintain unimpaired the ideals of Indian Culture, and to equip youth with the strength and sweetness that are the common virtues of all faiths and their basic truth. For the realisation of this plan, they resolved to utilise the fiftieth birthday of Swaami and celebrate it with its unfoldment, on a grand scale. They decided thus, as a result of earnestness and depth of devotion. In order to establish colleges, funds are needed; no task can be fulfilled without money, even the smallest and least important. So, they agreed on a method by which each devotee gives as a life-time contribution, the sum of fifty rupees; thus, a corpus can be built up, out of which they could start and develop educational and health services. They were moved by high ideals and pure intentions to resolve thus.

Spending huge sums on any festival is heinous crime

This resolution they placed before Me. I responded to their proposal in this manner: Well. Do not carry out this task in a hush-hush way, swayed by the one purpose of collecting money. Be frank about it; adopt such means as will remove all doubts from the minds of individuals, of the Government and of the world outside.

Finally, they made the announcement that day. But, many have imposed on that announcement their own interpretations and absurdities, and they have started propagating that it is proposed to spend fifty lakhs of rupees, for the celebration of Swaami's 50th Birthday!

Really, to spend 50 lakhs of rupees for wastefully celebrating either a birthday or any other such festival is a sin which cannot be compared with any other in the degree of iniquity. When people all over the world are affected by manifold miseries consequent on the absence of food and shelter, if someone spends 50 lakhs of rupees on his birthday, it has to be proclaimed a vast misuse, a heinous sin. I can never be a party to such activities.

Not only this. In Prashanthi Nilayam, no misuse or extravagance can ever happen, for any festival, either Shivaraathri, Navaraathri or the birthday. Many people imagine that lakhs are spent here for the dhashara celebrations; but, all who come, serve their best in the fullness of devotion that dwells in their hearts and so, not a naya paisa is spent for any purpose. The rithwiks (Vedhic Priests) who officiate at the yajna, the lecturers who deliver discourses---all come and share in the joy, out of love and faith; their comforts are looked after by the members of Seva

Dhal and the Seva Samithis and by the volunteers, who dedicate their strength and skills to make the Festival a success. No paisa is spent on any item.

Today, you find the Prashanthi Nilayam area clean and pleasing. What is the reason? How many sweepers have we employed, how many coolies are engaged?. You may wonder. No, not one. Everyone cleans the place where he is staying, and the area adjacent. Thus, cleanliness is ensured, without any cost. It can be asserted that at no place in the world are resources put to such good use, with the least expense, as at Prashanthi Nilayam.

Always be ready to help the sick and the poor Prashanthi Nilayam is holding forth and exemplifying the highest ideals, in the material, ethical, economic, moral, spiritual, worldly, and even political fields. There is no place here for anything contrary. This can be asserted without any possibility of contradiction. In spite of this, some ignorant individuals rely more on their guesses than on facts, and indulge in spreading wrong conclusions. Let Me tell you that if a single person in the whole world points out a wrong step in Prashanthi Nilayam, he shall be met and convinced. For, the Prashanthi Nilayam is eagerly bent upon the task of upholding and demonstrating high and holy ideals achieving spiritual realisation. It does not seek these worldly riches; nor does it yearn for earning favours and fame.

Embodiments of the Divine Aathma! When you feel the desire to give away in charity, direct your minds towards the development of good educational institutions, the provisions of healing facilities for the sick, and the amelioration of distress among the poor.
Not in this place, but, anywhere, the members of our Organisation must be ready and eager to help students, the sick, and the poor. Feel that this work, wherever carried out, is work that pleases Me.

You need not offer Me anything; I only want that you should realise the goal of life by playing your role in the activities that help and cure, carried on by such institutions.

You are all aware of this: I do not allow anyone to bring here even a flower, a fruit or a coconut.

However, some persons, carded away by their devotion and dedication, or moved by sudden enthusiasm or exultation, send by post or bring when they come here clothes for Me and place them before Me. From this day, I am directing that this should not be done; observe this as My command. If anyone brings clothes despite this he shall not be admitted to Prashanthi Nilayam.

Such persons will be treated as acting against Swaami's wishes and orders. What you should place before Me as offering is Pure Love; only that.
Therefore, from this day, spend your days and years in activities that help those who are in dire need, and thus make this human existence of yours worthwhile and fruitful. I wish you will conduct yourselves accordingly and I bless you.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1974
54. The mind stuff

IT is a vain task to divide the things of the world into good and bad and it is also sacrilegious!

For, when all are the products of His Will, how can anything be extolled or condemned? Besides, what is good for one may be bad for another; what is good at sometime may be bad at another time; what is good in small quantities may be bad in large quantities.

The crow relishes the bitter neem fruit; the cuckoo eats the tender leaves of the mango tree.

People find joy and satisfaction in a variety of things and experiences, of the most contradictory character. Therefore, one can only infer that it is the mind of each that directs one to seek this thing as good, and avoid that other thing as bad.

Philosophy tells us that the mind decides, not merely the goodness or badness of a thing or experience, it creates all things and all experiences. Without the mind, there can be no object or feeling or emotion. No mind, no matter! The mind revels in name and form; it imposes name and form and thus, helps in creating things and experiences. It cannot contact or operate upon anything without name and form. That is why the mind is helpless when meditation has to be done on the nameless and the formless. It clings ever to name-form.

Mental pictures have concretised themselves as objects and as ideas; so, the Shruthis declare: "Yath bhaavam, thath bhavathi" ("As the thought, so the consequence.")

Realisation of God instils Divine Bliss

But, God is beyond Name and Form; He is all names and all forms and yet, incomprehensible and mysterious. How then can God be apprehended by means of dhyaana (meditation) on nameform?

This is a legitimate question. It can be answered by means of a simile.
Water drowns man;

water also helps him to swim. It draws in and it buoys up both. Only, man has to learn the process by which he can keep afloat. In the same way, name and form which appear to be limitations and handicaps can serve as instruments and helps to transcend Name-Form and realise God.

The realisation of God instils Aanandha (divine bliss), which has no form, but only a man-made name. It springs and wells up in the heart, and pervades the entire body and expresses itself in the face. The face is the index of inner bliss. Sadness, anxiety, fear, hope, determination, doubt all are reflected on the face, and can be easily spotted.

The mind can remain unaffected by the storms of emotion only by bending to the yoke of buddhi (intellect). It should escape from the grips of the senses and yield to the reins of the reasoning faculty, and obey unquestioningly its dictates. The senses are inert, so long as the Self keeps away from inducing the mind to accept the information submitted by them. This mike before me helps those who are sitting all over this vast Auditorium to listen clearly to My words. But, the mike and the loudspeakers are inert metallic things. A few minutes ago, the College student made a speech which was interrupted for a few minutes, since the electric current failed. Without that current activating them, they cannot work at all.

The eye that sees is inert; all objects 'seen' are inert; only the seer is 'intelligent.' And, the current of intelligence is supplied by the aathma, which is your Reality. When the current does not activate, the eye might look on but it does not see; the ear might be hearing, but, the hearer does not react or recognise. For, the mind is elsewhere. It has to function with the help of the Divine Consciousness within.

The mind has to be watched vigilantly

The mind is like a fragrant flower; it emits fragrance whether it is held in the right hand or in the left, whether the person who holds it is good or bad. It walks blindly along, irrespective of the lie of the land. It is blind; and so, someone has to take it on tow. When you invite ten blind people for dinner, you have to lay twenty plates. For, each blind person brings with him, and has to so bring with him, a guide who can lead him to your home. So, the mind too must have a guide who knows the way, the obstacles, the shoals and ferries.

The mind has to be watched vigilantly, and warned against its own tricks. It is a clever actor, embroiling you in many a close adventure. The mind is like the revered old gentleman who appeared alternately in the houses of the bridegroom's party and the bride's party during a marriage festival and issued orders to all and sundry, which were honoured by both, since each party thought he was a person with authority coming from the other party! His very pomposity aroused the suspicion of both, before long, and when they jointly sought him and asked him who he was, he took to his heels and made himself scarce. The mind too is just like the gentleman. Catch it and inquire wherefrom it secured credentials to order you about; it will disappear in no time!

Let your mind repeat 'Soham' all the time

The only method which you can adopt to escape from the coils of the mind is the cultivation of pure intelligence. This is the sum and substance of all spiritual discipline. And, the intelligence gets cleansed of all partiality and prejudice, hatred and greed, only by the adoration of God through love poured out to all the beings created by God and standing witness to His Glory and Beauty. Share love with all; earn the treasure of love, store it in your heart and invite all to share in it. When you try to distribute the property earned by your grandfather or father, legal, moral, economic and practical obstacles will stand up before you. But, when you are distributing your 'self earned' property, nothing legal or otherwise can stand in the way.

Remember the mind is a very talkative imp, it can never keep quiet even for a second. You have been listening to Me since more than an hour and perhaps you are under the impression that your mind has been quiet all that time. No. The mind has been holding conversation with itself, when it is supposed to be silent! Give it perpetual tasks. Ask it, (as some rishi did to a demon who acted as his servant but threatened to devour him the moment he did not have any task allotted to him); ask it to climb a pillar and slide down it, whenever it has no other work. The pillar is Soham, (I am Thath), a mantra (sacred formulae) that the breath is repeating from birth to death, 'So' when you inhale and 'ham' when you exhale. Let it repeat Soham all the time.

Bhajans (congregational devotional singing) have to be sung and offered to God in an attitude of utter humility; they are not to be taken as exercises in an exhibition of talents and as competitions for mastery of musical skill.

They have to please the Lord, not your fans. With each bhajan song, the mind must be rendered purer, freer from passion, and stronger in faith. But, you find that you do not succeed in this task.

The adoration does not arise from the heart; nor is it addressed to the Supreme by the sincere Self. It is tainted by the admixture of envy, pride and hate. How can prayers so fouled reach God?

Devotees should not develop attitudes of difference

For example, I find that when any new-devotee sings, others leave him alone and do not sing lines after him! They ignore him and insult him in this manner. But, when one of themselves, one of the usual group leads with a song, they join enthusiastically. This kind of group politics has no place among Sai devotees and cannot be tolerated in Sai Bhajan groups. I find this evil trait spreading in most Bhajan Mandalis--members divided into rival groups competing for chances to sing, trying to attract the attention and appreciation of the people. Urged by this selfish motive, they discourage the sincere bhajan singers; they keep mum when they offer their songs; this means either that they have lost their voice or that their hearts have been so deadened by selfishness. Attitudes of difference and distinction should not enter the hearts of devotees so far as this sacred saadhana (spiritual discipline) is concerned, nor can the song of such people be pleasant to the ear; for, it is only when the feeling arises in the heart that the song will appeal to the hearts of others. It would be far better for all parties if such self-important and conceited folk stay away from bhajan, rather than pollute the sacred atmosphere by the spirit of rivalry and factionalism. All are sons and daughters of Sai Maatha. When devotees taking the name of Sathya Sai behave in such a manner, that is to say, people to whom the world is looking for guidance and inspiration, when they descend to such levels, what is to happen to the uplift of the world and the restoration of dharma? Bhajans, where you quarrel and compete, and revel in putting down others and raising yourselves, might give you satisfaction; but, let Me announce here: they do not please Me at all. I am pleased only when love is the keynote, when the feeling of Unity prevails, when the melody comes from a cleansed Godloving heart. The office-bearers in the Units of our Organisation should be ever vigilant, that this poison does not creep into the working of the Units, either in bhajans, or in the activities of the Mahila Vibhag or Seva dhal. Remember all are the sons and daughters of Sai Maatha (Mother SAI). How can I tolerate when the sons and daughters quarrel among themselves and divide themselves into rival groups? Unless you sing bhajans for your own joy, you cannot bring joy to others. The Sathya Sai Organisation has been established to provide sacred tasks for every moment of wakeful life, to make people conscious of the vagaries and vanities of the mind and teach them the processes of disintegrating the mind and establishing the reign of the pure intellect, by which alone the One behind all this multiplicity can be realised as the only Reality.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 24-11-1974

Certainly, every human being must be educated, irrespective of race, religion, caste, colour or creed. But, like the foolish mother who is happy when her child's limb swells with disease, believing that it is getting stronger, we too mistake this increase in size and number as a healthy development! In reality, we are only witnessing a disease, which results in debility, greed, hatred and envy.

The flowers in nature fade always, drop down, lose fragrance and also develop an odour which is not pleasant. Instead of worshipping with such worldly flowers, which are impermanent, and receiving impermanent rewards from God, we should worship Him with what is truthful and thereby attain a stage which is higher.

Sri Sathya Sai

Sathya Sai speaks

Sathya Sai Speaks---and, what do we hear When we listen, alert, in joy, to Him?
We hear the Voice of the Vedhas, God's own Breath,
The cheer that is showered by the epics of yore
The soothing balm that heals our wounds The Counsel that whips us to waken and work Lessons which teach us the Aathmic science.
From Him they heard from, then We hear the gracious words He spoke To many a saint and monk, many a seeker keen, In distant times and climes.
We hear the parables of Galilee, of Arab shades, We hear the tales of twenty lands To probe us on the onward march to Him.
We hear of prophets, Priests and Kings, Simple folk and sages, young and old--- We hear the echoes of Chaithanya's keerthan call; Of Moses, of Jayadev, Meera, Kabir--- Echoes rebounding from His reciprocating Love.
We hear, as we listen, temple bells and gongs, Conches and the drum, the choir resounding in the aisles, Filling fragrance, faith in the recesses of our hearts.
We hear the first little stir, the cosmic sigh That caused this multimillioned maze.
We hear the twinkle, the stellar swish,
Of His Mighty Will that fills the sky;
We hear the waves of eternity lapping our littleness---
We are eternal---when we listen to His Speech For, listening to that Voice, the Om that weaves the Universe, We merge...in Him
We cannot but; He thrills us, entralls us so.

N. Kasturi

1. Culture---Agriculture

INDIA is a sacred land, whose glory has spread over all the continents, whose sons and daughters have won by their material and spiritual excellences eternal fame amidst all mankind.

They have freed their motherland from the shackles of foreign rule; they have added to human happiness by their attainments in music and the fine arts. Even today, India has a name that is revered and held in high esteem. You have a great responsibility, for, you have to maintain and develop the splendour that was India.

We have met here today in a spirit of prayer and saadhana (spiritual discipline), to dedicate ourselves for a new step in education. The objectives of true education are two and only two. The first and the most basic of the two is education for the provision of food, clothing and shelter, for the promotion of health and harmony in society, for avoiding pollution and promoting honesty.

In the olden times, when the student underwent the basic training under the teacher, he learnt, before he was 15 years of age, to spin, weave and procure clothes for his own use; to produce the food he required; and to look after his needs for basic comfort. He was contented and happy, with simple habits which gave him ample leisure for saadhana, and contemplation of Nature.

Everyone must endeavour to be self-reliant and self-sufficient, so far as food and clothing are concerned.

Education should develop the culture of the mind

The rulers of this land are scared of the growth in population and they are excitedly advocating wrong and dangerous means to curb the increase. But, they forget, that with every extra mouth that has to be fed, we are getting also two extra hands, and a pair of legs, besides a brain that has vast potential for development into a national asset. We have no scheme to use the two extra hands and the precious little brain for national uplift and national prosperity. We encourage laziness, by making it the sign of affluence; we do not condemn it, wherever found. We have no strategy to maximise production and minimise waste, even in food. If only everyone in this land will consume just the quantity of food that he needs and nothing more, there will be no scarcity at all. This country has never lacked in the wherewithal to feed her children. This is the land of Goddess Annapoorna (Food plenty).

The second objective of education is the culture of the mind and the spirit. This too is very much like agriculture, which provides food and clothing for man. We want dhaanya (grains) to sustain the body; we require dhyana (meditation) to sustain the spirit. In agriculture, you prepare the soil, plant seeds, feed the plants with fertilisers, and reap the harvest. In heart-culture, we have to plough the hrudhaya-kshethra (the field of the heart), remove the weeds and wild growth, and plant the seeds. The weeds are pernicious tendencies, attitudes and habits; the fertilisers are devotion and dedication. Water to help the plant grow is the quality of love. The seeds are the Names of God, which are deposited within the purified heart. The harvest which is the reward of all this spiritual discipline is Wisdom.

Plant seeds of Love; reap the harvest of Wisdom

Heart-culture has been the goal and aim of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion), the ancient religion of India. It is essential for a happy contented peaceful life. This Dharma exhorts us to plant the seeds of Love and reap the harvest of Wisdom, for the sake of social harmony and national prosperity and the uplift of all humanity. Sanaathana Dharma makes you realise the Unity that underlies all the diversity that is apparent. The unity is the basis and the justification for loving all, with no desire for any benefit therefrom.

But, Indians have developed so much cynicism and scorn about their heritage that they ascribe the discovery of the Vedhas (sacred-revealed ancient scriptures) and their compilation to the crooked designs of some Brahmins! Muslims revere the, Quoran as the Word of God; Christians revere the Bible as the word of God; but, Indians treat the Vedhic scriptural texts as negligible teachings of interested persons! And, they stray away from the right path into distress and discontent. Max Mueller said that what is not found in Indian culture is not found in other countries. But, as soon as Indians learn English or any other foreign language, they develop so much of ego that they start decrying their own ancient culture and adopting the manners and mannerisms of the alien civilisation.

Everyone is at cross-purposes with the rest

Gandhi said, "My India is the India of villages." The freedom that has been won and the prosperity that is looked forward to, can be ensured only when the villagers are free and prosperous. And, this depends in its turn on the freedom and prosperity of each family in the village. Now, there is no unity, no mutual co-operation, no love between the four or five brothers in the family; everyone is at cross purposes with the rest. How then can the village enjoy freedom and peace and prosperity? And, what to speak of the country, when the condition of its villages is so bad?

Every person seeks positions of authority, without trying to deserve the authority by means of the qualification necessary to use it in the right way. Of course, if a person who has good intentions and full capabilities and the vision of the Divine, he can well seek authority and discharge it well. But, we seldom see any one thinking of one's duty; everywhere, people are after the acquisition of positions of authority.

As a result, several malpractices have entered the field of education. Money is paid to gain admission into schools and colleges, money is paid to acquire marks and degrees. The teacher does not transmit taste, style, attitude or outlook; it is all a matter of books and more books. The student is left to gather these from outside the educational institutions. Moreover, more value is attached to information and its collection; no attempt is made to gain transformation and to the correction of habits and characteristics. How did the great artists who drew the frescoes of Ajantha and carved the temples of Ellora learn their trade? They did not attend any school; they learnt from the teachers, the master craftsmen, the inspired artists. Books cannot give the guidance and the inspiration for real good work. Also the worldly aspects must be harmonised with the spiritual aspects. In order to live a full life. Then only can man have self-confidence and avoid the imitative path. Mental peace cannot be secured by blaming others and avoiding one's own responsibility.

Fill your heart with love and light. Today, we are establishing this Agricultural Polytechnic, so that those who study here may not depend upon others to give them a job but, so that they can earn a livelihood for themselves by their own skills and effort. This will be a spiritual discipline also and it will give them ample chances to develop their spiritual attainments too. Students here will be encouraged to practise working with others in mutual and productive co-operation. The five fingers of the hand have to come together so that a thing can be grasped firmly. Nowadays, you know they appoint what are called Committees for all kinds of works, a Committee for Water Supply, a committee for the supply of electricity, etc. But, they do not work smoothly; there are bickerings and factions. They come for tea and do not deliberate and determine anything. Mutual respect can be built on the faith that all are children of God and all are Divine. Then on that basis, there can be co-operation, and enthusiasm for work. Each will then do his best, knowing his duty and his responsibility.

The future of the country depends on the skill and the sincerity of the youth. Therefore, the necessary enthusiasm and encouragement must be generated among the youth. All my hopes are based on the students, the youth. They are very dear to Me. They are faultless; It is the parent and the school that are at fault for all the waywardness and violence. They lead them into wrong directions. Instead of filling your heads with facts and figures, fill your heart with love and light.

Have confidence in the vast powers of the Aathma (soul), which is your reality. Have faith in the Grace of God, which you can secure by prayer. Do your work with devotion as an act of worship. While praying and using manthras, sacred formulae or such expressions, one must know the real meaning and significance of the words and their deep implications. One individual for example did not know the full implication of the word Shiva; he meant by that word, the Form of God who is supposed to live in Kailaash with his consort and family. He told me that Shivoham meant, 'I am Shiva' and was shocked when asked, "Then, what is Paarvathi to you?"

Many people do japa (repetition of holy names) and join bhajans (group singing of devotional songs), but, they are not aware of the meaning and value of the words they utter mechanically.

Elders who propagate manthras and pose as spiritual teachers do not themselves know the inner meanings of what they recommend to others or hand on to their disciples. Shivoham means that you are Divine.

In education spiritual values should be emphasised Man must be engaged in work; he must do it with faith and devotion, as an act of worship; In this way, he will derive wisdom. But, the education imparted today does not direct him along these lines. It is sterile instruction, as it is. I hope that in this Polytechnic, whose foundation stone

I am laying now, will pay attention to these points also. Moral and spiritual principles have to be emphasised all along, even while merely material subjects are taught and learnt. I want the Committee in charge of this Institution to propagate the ideals of service, love and saadhana, which Sanaathana Dharma embodies. Even a small number of such Institutions will be enough in our country to serve as examples and guides to others.

 A College in every City is not necessary. We do not have several commanders-in-chief: we have only one, though soldiers are million or so. This one college in the city of Bombay, if it is run in an Ideal manner, can spread the ideals of the Unity of Man and the Value of Love throughout its vast population and even outside its limits.
 Students who undergo training here, in this College, when they go to the other States will spread the ideals they have imbibed here. The role of the teachers is also important, for, if a student deteriorates, only he will suffer. We must try to raise in this College good teachers for similar colleges in future. The citizens of Bombay should endeavour to promote educational Institutions of this type and also institutions fostering the health of people, so that the land may have peace and prosperity.
 Now man is devalued into a machine Today, there is a great deal of talk that this country is lacking in peace. But, this is not right; for, the lack of peace of mind is an intensely individual complaint and phenomenon. The country has not deteriorated at all! It is the individual that has to be cured; it is their thoughts and feelings that have to be corrected and cleansed. It is not possible for any one individual to change his ideas, his habits, his attitudes and impulses. For example, we find that the price of every article is soaring sky high. The rulers of the land are devising various plans to bring down the price. But, this can succeed only through one means: raise the value of man, and the value of everything else will come down. Now, man, is devalued into a machine. Man too has forgotten his worth. He is demeaning himself into a beast and not realising that there is Divinity in him. Today, commodities are valued as essential, but, man is not so valued.
 If man is valued at his true worth, and treated as a Divine spark enclosed in the body, then, he will rise into new heights of achievement and produce all the necessities of life in profusion. He will not grab or cheat: he will be a good worker, a pure person and a sincere saadhak (spiritual aspirant). He will cultivate the inner vision and realise that he is not the body or senses or mind or even intellect. He will be full of prema (love) and self-confidence.
 It is not good for man to be constantly engaged in exciting things---exciting food, talk, books, films and games. They are raajasik (passionate) things that disturb and agitate the mind. Nor is it good for man to be engaged in cruelty---cruel thoughts or actions.

 Today, the foundation has been laid for this Agricultural College. I hope a beautiful building will come up here before long. I hope there will not be any misuse of money in wasteful expenditure.
 I hope students who are trained in this College will become efficient farmers, self-reliant young men, who depend on their own skill, character and stamina for earning their livelihood. I bless you all.
Bombay, 5-1-1975
 By good thoughts and by good ideas, you will become a saadhu. Saadhu does not mean one who merely wears an orange robe, shaves the head and wears Rudraakshas (holy beads). He who has good thoughts and good ideas is a saadhu. A saadhu is one who is a Sathya Sankalpa Swaruupa (embodiment of truthful thoughts).
Sri Sathya Sai
 2. Not twice, but thrice!
 You are all sharing the joy of serving others, doing good to others, according to your capacity and skill. The main objective of the Sathya Sai Organisation, which you must always keep before you is to help man to recognise the Divinity that is inherent in him. But, this Divinity is latent; it is veiled; it is not always apparent to oneself or others.
 There is nothing wholly bad or wholly good in Creation. There are few who do not commit mistakes; there are few who do not perform good deeds. Both good and bad, beneficent and maleficent, constructive and destructive, are ever present everywhere. You, as members of the Managing Committees of the units of the Samithi (Organisation), and as Members of the Seva Dhal (Voluntary Service Corps) and of the Mahila Vibhaag (Women's section) are unique, because, you have dedicated your talents and time to the service of others, and, ultimately, to the promotion of your own best interests.
 First of all, I want that you should give up the blind imitation of other cultures, other social systems and other ideals. This tendency has now conquered 99 out of 100 people, in our country.
 Your conduct and behaviour, your dress and food habits, your sports and games, your methods of agriculture and industry, your art and architecture---all are borrowed from other societies. Even your intelligence follows the processes of other cultural groups. You are leading lives which have no roots in the past; it is guided and controlled by these other civilisations.
 Do not give importance to differences of religion To escape the pull of these alien attractions and material pleasures, faith In God as your Inner Reality and the source of immense power is essential. The Sathya Sai Organisation must recognise and reestablish this Truth---that the Aathma (Divine Self) is the Reality of everyone, however, distinct they may appear in physical form and mental equipment. When one lamp lights many lamps, all shine with equal brilliance. The Paramjyothi (the One Supreme Effulgence) is the origin and source of all the jeevan-jyothis (particularised effulgences). Ekam eva adhwithyam:

There is only one without a second: The same wind is referred to as breeze, whirlwind, storm, typhoon, hurricane etc. The same God is referred to by different Names. This is the very foundation of our culture.

So, your duty is to emphasise the One, to experience the One, In all that you do and speak. Do not give any importance to differences of religion or sect or status or colour. Have the feeling of one-ness permeating every act of yours. Only those who do so have a place in this Organisation; the rest can best withdraw.

The Ever present God notes all that you do

You have to re-establish the moral outlook and the righteous behaviour in this great Country.

That is the tradition appropriate and native to India. However, do not look down upon the cultures of other countries; do not try to discover faults on other cultures and decry them. The Bhagavath-geetha advises that you should be "adhweshtaasarva bhuuthaanaam," not condemning or hating any being.

You have been in this Organisation since 7 or 8 years. It is time for you to ask yourselves, whether you are in it out of compulsion or of your own free will; whether You are giving It the best you can, in efficiency and enthusiasm. Has the work been exhibition-oriented or has it been genuine? Is your faith in the rightness of Service patent in every act of yours?

Let me tell you that if you serve with your whole heart, the result will be Aanandha (Divine Bilss) for you; half-hearted work will give only superficial joy or fame. Remember that the God you worship by this work is resident in your own heart. Others may or may not see; but, the ever present God sees and notes all that you do or feel. He meets out to you the consequence, in full, of whatever you do or feel.

There was a rich man once who owned a rice mill. He heard a Pandith (scholar) expound that the service that God appreciates most Is the gift of food to the hungry. So, he decided to serve food to the poor in his village. But he had no mind to use good varieties of rice for the purpose. He felt that any rice is good enough for them. So, he got the rice that was rotting In his godown---he did not care even to remove the worms that Infested it; he cooked it and served it to the hungry poor, who ate it and suffered many Illness as a consequence. His wife expostulated with him and told him that good food given to 10 persons would be more meritorious than bad food given to hundreds! But, he was In no mood to listen to sound advice.

Everyone has to suffer for the injury he causes

The wife therefore hit upon a plan to him. She placed on his plate every day food that was rotten and full of worms. When he' grew angry and castigated her, she replied, 'The Pandith said that everyone has to suffer for the injury he causes others. You have to eat, in the other world, rotten food, full of worms. I am giving that type of food to you, even now, so that you may get used to it. It will. help you to eat the consequence of your evil deed." At this, the husband realised his iniquity; he repented for his wrongs and learnt better ways of service to the poor.

When you visit the patients in a hospital serve the patients with a full heart, sincerely and to the utmost extent possible. I must say that the service programmes you have undertaken In Bombay

City are being carried on very well. They can be the ideals for other clues to follow.

But, do not put a full stop; have only a comma. Move on with greater and greater enthusiasm, and achieve more progress in all directions. Service is a life-time programme, it knows no rest or respite. This body has been given to you so that you may devote its strength and skills to the service of brother-man. Serve man, until you see God in all men; then, what you do will be elevated as Worship.

God is love and can be reached and realised through love. God is truth and can be reached and realised through truth. But, are you concentrating on the development of love and truth?

The tender age is the best for religious instruction

I must say that the Mahila Vibhaag, is evincing greater enthusiasm and love in their work---the Baala Vikaas (children's section)classes, for example---than the men, in the Samithis. This is, I know, because the men have not got as much leisure to devote to Samithi activities; but, they can use the available time in sacred ways and to greater benefit. The kind of Seva (service) which the women are doing in the Baala Vikaas is very useful, for it ensures a good future for our country,

The children are trained in a very fine manner. These children will bear the burden of the country, better and more intelligently, with more attachment to the culture and traditions of Bhaarith.

Tell the children what they cannot learn by themselves, by observation, namely, the stories of Raamaayana, the Bhaagavatha, and the Mahaabhaaratha. Tell them also stories from the Bible, the Buddhist texts, the Zend-Avesta and the Quoran. That a horse has four legs is a fact which one need not teach the child; it can discover it in a moment. What is not known to the children are the stories and verses that embody our culture.

Do not be deterred by people who say that the information and inspiration you give will be too much of a burden on the tender minds. It is only grown-ups that would find learning new facts burdensome; the tender age is the best for this kind of instruction.

Tell them the Importance of OM and its significance, as the basic sound of all creation. It is meaningful symbolic sound; it is quite unlike the useless jargon which children learn today, in the very first lesson at school; Ba Ba, Black Sheep! Ding Dong Bell; the Pussy is in the well!

Aim at the promotion of Faith in God

The Seva Dhal members must spend their leisure time in sath-sang (good company) and not waste even a moment in frivolous play. Take some good books and read them out to illiterate brothers and sisters, spread the Message of our culture among all those who have no chance to know about it. Do this service to the slum-dwellers, the people who live in hutments, and the villages. The city dwellers are used to silly story books and novels that drain their brains and plant evil thoughts in their minds. But the poor in the villages and in the huts will welcome you and listen to the stories and lives of saints and Divine Incarnations.

Transmit to these people the sacred texts of all religions and the lives of the Saints of all faiths.

Do not imagine that your task is to propagate Sai and speak of Sathya Sai and His Message. This is not right But, through the nine of Sathya Sai and the emphasis on the message, aim at the promotion of Godliness and of Faith in God. Create the spiritual attitude; promote spiritual discipline. It does not matter what Name you use, or what Form they concentrate upon. Through some Name and some Form, lead them into the path of Faith and saadhana (spiritual discipline).

Just now, some among you felt that the Sun is scorching the spot where I am and you wanted to do something to avoid it, But, this is happening to many people here, and you should not be content with measures to prevent the Sun from hurting one individual. Seva Dhal must care for the comfort of all. There is the Aathma in everyone. This body is for you and all these other bodies are also Mine.

Your Prema, your shraddha, your bhakti {love, steady faith and devotion} have persuaded Me to come over to Bombay, twice a year! If you promote these virtues even more, in a still larger measure, I will come to Bombay not twice, but thrice a year, and give you Anandha (divine bliss). I give you blessing for all the Seva that you have undertaken and all the love you are sharing with others.

Bombay, 6-1-1975

The real saadhu is he whose deeds are in accordance with the words of advice he utters. Devotion cannot tolerate in the devotee the slightest trace of envy or jealousy. Make your daily life holy and pure. Render your life worth-while through service to man and service to society. That is the most important aspect of surrendering the self.

Sri Sathya Sai

3. Parents beware!

SEEING this Rally and listening to the Marching Song, and witnessing the other items you presented, I can now say that what happened this morning is not the rise of the Sun, but, it was in fact the Rise of Anandha (divine bliss). People, are talking about the glory of India's past- they go on praising endlessly about the reign of Raama, or in recent times of Ashoka, or Krishna Dheva Raaya. They try in vain to assess the present in terms of the past; they close their eyes to the dismal present and dream about the past. If children are put into the right path, and guided along the path that you are now treading, Raama Raajya can again be established in this land.

Every child of this land has four debts to discharge---reverence to mother, respect to the father, obedience to the teacher, and adoration to God. Besides these, every child must learn to live in peace and love with other children and other families. The idea that one can live for oneself and that one need not worry about the wants and weaknesses of others has to be removed quite early in life, by the Baala Vikaas Gums. Encourage the child to cultivate the pleasure of 'togetherness.'

They will enjoy it; and, you will be sowing the seeds of social peace.

The seeds will grow into Universal Peace and Universal Bliss.

Share with others the good things you are given Life is like a train journey. You, young children have a long way to go; but, the elders have to alight from the train pretty soon. You must learn to make your journey comfortable and happy. Do not carry heavy unwanted luggage, with you. That will make the journey miserable. Do not indulge in faultfinding and in picking quarrels with others. Don't desire to have the best things for yourselves only. Share with others around you the good things you are given. Anger, hatred, envy, jealousy, these are the heavy luggage I asked you to avoid taking with you in the journey.

I must give the elders, the parents who are here in large numbers some advice. Do not set bad examples for these children to follow. If you are truthful, just, be calm under provocation and full of love in all your dealings with others, these children too will grow up in sathya (truth), dharma (righteousness), shaanthy (peace) and prema (love). If you tell your son, when you are actually at home, to speak through the telephone, when some one is calling, to reply that father is not at home, you are sowing a poisonous seed, which will become a huge tree.

Parents should be good examples to children

Let me tell you a story to illustrate the danger of such small beginnings. A mother carried her son on her shoulder, when she went to the market. A woman with a basket of fruits passed by her the child lifted a banana from that basket and started eating it. The mother noticed it, and when she was told that he had cleverly lifted it from the basket of a passing fruit seller, she complimented the son on its smartness. This made the child indulge in petty thieving and picking pockets, as it grew into a boy and in actual house breaking and dacoity, Once during a dacoity, he committed even murder, and when he was caught and jailed, he expressed a wish to see his mother before being hanged. The wailing weeping desperate mother was brought before him. She was sobbing at her son's fate. The son asked her to come closer to him; suddenly he tried to strangle her, and the guards separated them. The son said, "she deserves the punishment; for, it was she who brought me to this doom. Had she reprimanded me when I stole a banana when I was a child of two years instead of complimenting me, I would not have fallen into this evil way."

Parents set bad examples uttering falsehood, scandalising others, gambling, drinking, behaving violently, inflicting injury, becoming addicted to night-clubs, pictures and drinking parties, quarrelling at home after arriving home past mid-night. How can children used to such low sights and sounds learn to become bright fresh fragrant flowers of the Sanaathana Garden of India?

Many such parents do not allow their children to join the Baala Vikaas Classes, or to attend bhajans and Sathsangs. If the children clamour at home that they may be permitted, they shout at them, and call them mad. They say that religion and God are only for idlers or old senile people, and that the path will lead them on to Sanyaas (mendicancy), which is a calamity to be avoided!

They reverse the very values of life. Parents must correct themselves before they try to correct their children.

Children! Learn the best teaching of all faiths, put them into practice. Chant the Name of God with your whole being. Imbibe the noble qualities that those Names represent. Purify yourselves and purify the world. That is My blessing.

Dharmakshethra, 6-1-1975

The Gaayathri manthra has in it the validity of the Vedhas. It contains the essence of Vedhic teachings. Each of the four Vedhas has a core axiom (Mahaa Vaakya) enclosed in it: Thath thwam asi (That thou art), Prajnaanam Brahma (Consciousness is Brahma), Ayam Aathma Brahma (This Self is Brahma) and Aham Brahmaasmi (I am Brahmam). When all these are synthesised, the Gaayathri emerges.

Sri Sathya Sai

4. Naaraayana seva

THE gift of food is the noblest of all gifts. You have today arranged the feeding of a large number of people and thus justified the name of this village. The years of life allotted to man is very short; the world in which he lives is very wide; time extends far behind and far beyond.

What little man has to do here has to be done quickly, at the place that is assigned to him within the time that is allotted to him. And, man has such a formidable task before him; it is to fulfil it that he has come as man, exchanging for this human habitat, all the merit he has acquired during many past lives. The task is no less than the manifestation of the Divinity latent in man. The easiest and the most pleasant means by which this can be accomplished is seva---the service of man, done in a spirit of dedication and devotion. And, in villages like this, Seva (service) is a potent and profitable discipline. And, the best type of seva is feeding the hungry. The first step in this discipline is the establishment of mutual help and co-operation in all seva activities among the residents. This will ensure peace, security and prosperity for the village.

Pollution of character is spreading in cities
A single homestead cannot make a village; many have to cluster together and live as one family in order to constitute a village. And, for such seva as you are doing, each homestead and every member thereof has to lend a helping hand and achieve success in the common venture. The physical strength, the monetary resources, the intelligence of all have to be pooled in order to make the project succeed. This garland has not happened out of a single flower; many flowers of different hues and fragrances have strung themselves around the string in order to achieve the common aim of decorating the picture of person. No one in the village can stand apart and say, "This work is not mine; it is the responsibility of that man or this group."

For, today, the Cities have taken a turn towards confusion and conflict; they have no peace, no security, no calmness. It is all agitation, anxiety, fear, faction and suspicion. It is only in villages like yours that a modicum of quietness, fellow-feeling, tolerance, and truth can be found. The pollution of character that is spreading in cities is fast invading the villages also. The villages should not yield to the temptation of imitation and invite catastrophe on themselves. They must appreciate the ancient Indian ideals of simplicity and sincerity, service and spirituality-oriented living. You must curb greed and anger, envy and pride, and live in amity and the spirit of brotherhood. Then India will be happy and prosperous. Each one must carry out the duties of his role in a worshipful attitude. Deserve the Grace of God by helping the weak I see that only a few young persons and elders are running about and carrying on the various tasks this function entails. This is the case in most villages. If all do not share in the cost, the village cannot benefit. Life has been bestowed not for just eating and digesting, roaming and reclining, but, for a far greater purpose---the realisation of the Divinity in us, in all that exist around us and even beyond all things that strike our senses, To waste such a life in vain pursuits, and in mere sense-pleasures is not the sign of an intelligent person. Deserve the Grace of God by helping the weak and poor, the diseased and the disabled, the distressed and the downtrodden.

Do not laugh at others or take delight in insulting them or in carrying tales demeaning them.

There is no more heinous sin than hurting the feelings of others. Man must develop two qualities:
Fear of sin and devotion to God.

To cultivate devotion to God, always endeavour to mix with good persons, engage yourselves in Naamasmarana (in the early hours of the day, join the choir groups that sing the names of God and move along the streets thrilled with the joy that wells up when you do so). You have a few temples in the village, make them active, and alive. Gather there for an hour each day and sing bhajans (group singing of devotional songs on Lord's Names and glory). Why waste time or even pollute time, by talking ill of others? The eye, the hand, the nose, the head, the stomach, each looks different; each does one special task; each has different name and function. But they subserve the Interests of the one body to which they all belong, they do not work at crosspurposes, do they? So too, each of you is a limb in the body called the village. Do your work without a murmur; work in full co-operation with all. The village can be healthy and happy only then. Love, love alone can bind you to others and to God, who is the very embodiment of love.

You are referring to the gift of food as Anna-dhaana (the charity of food). But, no one has the authority to give In charity what has been given by God or be proud of it or even to feel that he has given something In charity. God gave the rains, God fostered the sapling and God ripened the grain; what right have you to call it yours and give it in charity? It is not dhaana (charity) that you do; you are only offering gratitude to God; you are sanctifying the grain you have harvested by offering the food prepared out of it to these Naaraayanans (Gods in human form). Call it Naaraayana Seva! That will be more correct. Anyway, since you are doing it with love and humility, in spirit of Divine worship, I have come to your village to bless you. Do not cast all responsibility on a committee, or a group of enthusiasts; join them wholeheartedly and offer to share the burden. I want everyone to join in this Naaraayana Seva and that it should be done, not once a month as now, but even at more frequent Intervals.

Sore-Hunise Village, 28-1-1975
5. 'Youth Guides' for youth WELL-WISHERS of Youth! Instructors of Youth! Young men of the College! When you look deep into the theory and practice of modern educational institutions and compare them with what we know of the theory and practice in ancient Indian-educational institutions, you will be shocked at the vast difference in the two systems. The ancient schools aimed at self-knowledge first and knowledge of the objective world as a corollary. Truly, that is the sign of the educated man---his awareness of his own reality. How can a person be termed educated, when he does not distinguish between the really real and the relatively real in himself as well as in the outer world?
Among the educated, we do not find signs of self-knowledge; nor do we see another quality that we expect every human being to have, namely, the quality of mercy, of sympathy or compassion.
The 'un-educated' have this quality, more than the 'educated!'
'Education' seems to harden hearts and squeeze out the feelings of pity and piety. Many species of animals are soft, and tender in their habits and nature. The deer, the elephant, the cow, the horse--- these live on Saathwik (pure) food and behave in a Saathwik manner; so, they are adored and even worshiped by man.
Tigers, bears, hyaenas and other wild animals are feared by man and driven by him into the dark recesses of forests. The wonder is that the wildness, the cruelty and the terror-inflicting attributes of these beasts are developed, and exhibited by man himself! Man prides himself as the crown of creation; he declares that he has in him the spark of the Divine. But, he ignores it or suppresses it and revels in displaying the qualities of the ferocious beasts of the jungle.
Man has become the lair of cruel habits Imagine the fate of the cows, when a tiger enters the manger. Can they survive the invasion? So too, the 'cows' of Truth, Justice, Peace and Love cannot survive in the human heart when the 'tigers,' namely, greed, anger and pride enter and play havoc. Today, the human heart, (especially the hearts of those who are 'educated') has become the lair of wild desires and cruel habits, Rajoguna (restless) has overwhelmed the saathwik (pure) traits.
A blind person cannot see the travails of others; nor can a deaf person be moved by the groans of a man in pain. The sight of suffering softens the heart; stories of distress urge one to rush to the rescue. But, education, as imparted now renders men indifferent to the sufferings of others, blind and deaf, in fact. Things are even worse, for educated persons undergoing education in colleges and schools now inflict harm and pain, cause loss and injury, and revel in violence; and apparently enjoy doing so! Observing this downfall in standards, one is tempted to doubt whether these are men, or, beasts in human skin!

Students of today are the teachers of tomorrow Embodiments of the Divine Aathma (Divine Self)-Yours is the responsibility to cherish and develop the ancient culture of this land. Bhaarith is the land of Love, of yoga (divine communion), of spiritual search, and of joyful sacrifice, of the lower self to promote the interest of the higher self. But, this day, Bhaarith is afflicted with the poverty of all these precious qualities. Greed, anger, hatred and other evil traits have displaced the traits of love, brotherhood and compassion. In the educational field, too, the evil has grown.
Educational institutions are the nursery for tradition, loyalty to culture, and ideals of service to society. They train youth to benefit by the experience of the previous generations and to march on towards victory in the campaign to master this world and the next.
Therefore, I desire that the youth of the land must make the fullest use of these precious years, when they are at College, to learn and practise the culture of this great land, they should not fritter away this crucial period In their lives, indulging in wasteful and wild adventures causing loss and pain to others. The students today are the teachers of tomorrow's colleges; they have to shape the destiny of this land, through their precepts and example.
You cannot be young for long. Every day you are moving nearer and nearer to the 'age' when you have to take up the burden of running a home, and running the country. If you relish the infliction of loss and damage, of suffering and pain, today, surely you cannot complain when later, you have to encounter those very evils at the hands of the youth of those days.
Wisdom grows where only humility prevails Wisdom flashes like lightning amidst the clouds of the inner sky; one has to foster the flash, and preserve the light. That is the true sign of the 'educated' person. Do not believe that mastery of many tomes make you wise. Wisdom can grow only where humility prevails. It thrives when man is afraid of vice and sin, and is attached to the Divine, in himself and in all else. The crisis of character which is at the root of all the troubles everywhere has come about, as a result of the neglect of this aspect in education.

I shall illustrate this by one little example. The Universities lay down the rule that a student is entitled to a degree, when he gets thirty marks out of a total hundred prescribed for a question paper. This means that you can get the distinction of being an 'educated person, even if you commit seventy mistakes! When such a degree holder gets a job on the basis of having committed seventy mistakes(!), he easily slides down, by force of circumstance, into a hundred mistakes out of every hundred tasks that he has to do. Naturally, the country suffers and people bemoan the educational system. Education today has to move haltingly and half-heartedly through a series of strikes, gheroos (lock-ins), and other interruptions and so, students are seldom able to carry out their primary duty of study. Later on too, when they become responsible officers, they easily tend to neglect the duty that is primary to them at that stage.

While you are students, you must feel that study is your first and only duty. Be witness of what is happening outside the classroom; do not rush out and get distracted. Try to identify the One in the many; become strong, physically, mentally and spiritually; imbibe as much as possible the wisdom that has been gathered in the past; cultivate the skills by which you can serve society.

The heart soaked in compassion is verily the Altar of God.

If you forget these ideals and allow greed, conceit and hate to take root in your hearts, you are only lowering yourselves to the level of the beast. As a first step in educational progress you must revere your parents and have gratitude and love towards them. It is through them that you have this wonderful chance of life on earth. They are the custodians of culture, the earliest teachers who instilled virtue into you. In this College, the ancient ideals of Truth, Righteousness, Equanimity and Love are held before you, all the time. I am sure you have imbibed them, and I bless you that you by your example, propagate them wherever you are. Have compassion in your hearts for the unfortunate brothers and sisters, who are unlearned, ill or suffering. Try your best to open their eyes, to cure their ills and to alleviate their distress.

That is the message I wish to give you this day.

College day, Brindhaavan, 23-3-1975

6. Advice to seekers

If somebody says Sai Baba's powers have been given to him, then we run to him. Sai Baba's powers are such that they are not given to anybody else. Nobody has the ability to take powers from Sai Baba, nor the ability to give them to someone else. Sai Baba's powers are not given like that, and you should not be led away by such statements. Each one's power is within him; it is not possible to give such power to another person. In this manner, by allowing a weak mind to get control over us, if we begin running from place to place, when are we going to get strength of mind, and control our own mind? We must be able to follow one thought, one path. One does not have to search for spiritual power, going around the world and spending a lot of money. Be in your own house, develop it in yourself, such spiritual power is in YOU! You don't have to run for it here and there. God is not external; God is not outside you; God is inside you.

You are not a man, you are God yourself. You are not one person, but three, the one you think you are (physical); the one others think you are (mental); and the one you really are spiritual is God. Don't be under the delusion that God is somewhere and you have to search for Him. God is in you, and when you are able to realise that, and when you are able to develop the spiritual power from within you, then you will see God. You are going in the path of worldly consciousness. When you take the path of superconsciousness, you will get realisation, and you will be able to see the Truth.

Give up the continual wandering of the physical body

The first thing you have to do is to develop self-confidence. It is such people who have no confidence in their own self who begin to wander about and to waver, and take to various different paths. When you take your body to different places, and when you go about moving aimlessly, the mind also goes to different places. The first thing is to steady your physical body.

If the body is moving all the time, then the mind is also moving. If you have a container filled with water, if the container is continually moving, then the contents will continually be moving.

So in this context, we should not keep moving our body and our limbs in an aimless manner; this is very essential part of our practice of meditation. We should sit quiet and the body should be steady.

Why do we ask people to sit straight and to sit quiet in meditation? Because when the body is straight and quiet, the mind inside is also straight and quiet. If you cannot control your body, how can you control your mind? The FIRST thing is to control your body by having all the limbs and body organs in a steady manner. The basis for the mind wandering is that your physical body is also continually wandering. So the first thing you have to do is to give up this continual wandering of the physical body.

Difference between concentration & meditation

Many people think that concentration is the same thing as meditation, but there is no such connection between concentration and meditation. Concentration is something which is below your senses, whereas meditation is something which is above your senses. But many are under the false impression that concentration is identical with meditation, and they take to a wrong path. Concentration is something which we use involuntarily in our daily, normal, routine life.

dust look at this, I am now reading the newspaper. My eyes are looking at the letters. My hand is holding the paper. My Intelligence is thinking now. Mind is also thinking. Thus when the eyes are doing their work, the hand is doing its work, when the Intelligence is doing its work, and the mind is also doing its work, then I am able to get the contents of the newspaper. It means, if I want to get at the matter that is contained in the newspaper, all these enumerated senses are concentrated and they are all coordinated and are working on the newspaper.

Not only this, if one wants to drive a car, unless one has concentration, one cannot drive a car on the road. All the normal routines, like walking, talking, reading, writing, eating, all these things we do only as result of concentration. If concentration like this is part and parcel of your daily life, then what is that we practise to get concentration? What we have to practice is something which is beyond these normal senses. We must rise from being below the senses (that is the state of concentration) to the senses (that is, the middle position, called contemplation); and from there we must rise above the senses, that is called meditation.

Between concentration and meditation there is border area which covers both and that is the area of contemplation. To be in that area of contemplation is to free yourself of worldly attachments.

If you break away all the worldly attachments---all the routine attachments in the world---then you will enter the region of contemplation. When you have completely broken away ALL your attachments, you break through this area of contemplation and you get into the area of meditation.

First develop confidence in your own self

These steps can also be described as starting from self-confidence, and then getting selfsatisfaction and then self-sacrifice, and the last step is self-realisation. The ultimate step of selfrealisation depends upon the base of self-confidence. You must therefore develop as a first step confidence in your own self. Without having and developing confidence in your own self, if all the time you are talking of some power being with someone and some other power being with someone else, if in this way you travel all the time and depend upon power which is with someone else, when are you going to acquire any power and confidence in your own self. Peace and bliss are within you they are not something which is external to you. You may think of going to the Himaalayas for getting peace. Yes, your body may go to the Himaalayas for getting peace; but your mind may be left behind in the city. How are you going to get peace? You have brought your body to India; but still, if you have the same habits which you are used to in America, what is the use of bringing the body to India? Body is not the essential thing. The transformation should come in your mind, the change should come in your mind.

Many people collect a lot of information, they take a lot of information, but they do not use it to bring about a transformation of their own self. Information is useless, but the transformation in you is important. You can go on mentioning the names of many eatables. Are you going to relieve your hunger on this way?. But even if you actually eat one thing only in practice, you are going to relieve your hunger. Therefore, instead of saying so many things in your talk or in your speech (all that is simply book knowledge), if you are able to put into practice one of the things you say, that is going to be useful.

Brindhavan, Good Friday, 28-3-1975

If you have the inclination to do good work, God will give you the time to do good things.

Sri Sathya Sai

7. Give them their due

It is the bounden duty of every son and daughter of this land of Bhaarith to implant in the hearts of every child of this land the basic lessons held precious by the founders of Bhaaratheeya Culture. This should be the very first vow to be carried out by every parent, every teacher and every person who dedicates himself to the service of human welfare. For, Bhaaratheeya Culture is the precious heritage of the whole world, and of every human community therein. The lesson that the Aathma (Divine Principle), resident in everyone is the real core of the Universe and that It is the supreme sovereign of the Cosmos will certainly bring together all mankind and ensure Peace and Harmony among the nations. Of what avail is life when the Truth is not known? Why deprive children of this great treasure and look on, when they lead dry fallow lives? Every person has to try to know his own Truth and lead his child into that awareness. What is happening today is quite the opposite! Parents, teachers and leaders are inflaming the passions of young minds and encouraging them to Indulge in violent deeds. The very people who preach the message of Peace, who talk of the basic principle of child education, who harp on love, harmony and mutual love, and who elaborate on the principles of social progress and national uplift are themselves undermining these hopes by their example. Elders must lead exemplary lives of simplicity Bhaaratheeya Culture emphasising humility, sincerity and unity is the best cure for such emotional errors. More than the pursuit of luxurious life or competitive comfort, the acquisition of wealth or power, which are all liable to quick decline, the ideal of simple living and high thinking laid down by the sages of India will lead to happy lives and greater social peace. You must have experienced the thrill of witnessing the plays enacted now by the children of the Sathya Sai Baala Vikaas children. The plays were inspiring and instructive; the acting was appealing and attractive; the meaning, has gone deep into the hearts of the children, as well as the elders who witnessed the plays. But, let me tell you, this is not enough. Along with the Baala Vikaas, the elders too must experience Vikaas (flowering or development), and lead exemplary lives of simplicity and sincerity, of spiritual discipline and steady discipline. Children are wayward and vile, today, since they have no other examples to follow. Learn the lessons of duty, devotion and discipline from the lips of these children; let each child be a ray of sunshine in the home, shedding light and love. Let the child's desire to serve other children and the defectives around be an inspiration to you. Children do not say one thing and do the opposite. They are very straight forward and innocent. Imbibe this nature now from them, for elders have strayed far from that ideal. The signs are favourable. The fame of this country will not diminish; it will only grow, with the coming days; very soon, India will be free from fear, and will soon regain her old position as the preceptor for mankind. New Delhi, 31-3-1975 Instead of saying a hundred things, it is better to do one thing properly. Sanctify your life by doing selfless work. For the person who talks a lot, there is no time for work. For the person who is engaged in work, there is no time for talk. Instead of wasting time in your words, use your time in service to mankind which is service to God, all the while repeating the name of the Lord. Sri Sathya Sai 8. The middle path THROUGH saadhana (spiritual discipline), continuous and consistent, man can control the vagaries of the mind, which by their variety and vanity cause disappointment and distress. "Saadhana can achieve what appears impossible," says a Thelugu proverb. What is required is the awareness of the vicious game that the mind plays. It presents before the attention, one source after another of temporary pleasure; it does not allow any interval for you to weigh the pros and cons. When hunger for food is appeased, it holds before the eye the attraction of the film, it reminds the ear of the charm of music, and it makes the tongue water for the pleasant taste of something that it craves for. The wish becomes very soon the urge for action, the urge soon gathers strength and the yearning becomes uncontrollable. The burden of desires gradually becomes too heavy and man gets dispirited and sad. Train the mind to turn towards the intelligence for inspiration and guidance, not towards the senses for adventures and achievements. That will make it an instrument for reducing your vagaries and saving time and energy for more vital matters. You are all 'living cells' in the Body of God

Desires when fulfilled breed further desires; when unfulfilled, they lead to further instalments of life on earth, in order to calm the urge. The only method by which the delusion of desire can be destroyed is to dedicate all activities to God and engage in them in a spirit of worship; leaving the consequences to Him and ceasing to attach yourselves to them, Look upon everyone as the embodiment of the Divine and worship each, as such, by offering love, understanding, and service. Only the blind will be indifferent to the dismal condition of others; only the deaf will be unaffected by the sobs of others. In fact, there are no 'others!' You are all, 'living cells' in the body of God, each performing its individual function to promote His Will.

The joy one gets while promoting another's joy is incomparable. Your heart must melt in compassion when the eye sees another person suffering. That is the sign of the Saathwik (pure or noble) individual; the Thaamasik (Ignorant) individual will be Indifferent, he is too dull, too bovine, to be affected. The Raajasik (passionate) man will rush to punish the person who caused the suffering and might even forget to relieve the misery of the person affected! Callousness is the root cause of all the cruelty that defaces the Divine Nature of Man, in all the lands on the earth.

There are thousands of Bhajana Mandalis (groups for devotional singing), under the auspices of the Sathya Sai Seva Samithis active all over the world. They hold Bhajana Sessions for about an hour, once or twice a week, and disperse thereafter. They sing the glory of God, under various Names and in various forms, and are elated by that experience. Avoid excess in all places. The purpose of this type of loud, congregational prayers is different from the silent individual prayers. It is a joint, concerted and mutually helpful effort of Saadhana to overcome the six internal foes of man-Lust, Anger, Greed, Attachment, Conceit and Hatred. These nocturnal birds infest the tree of life and foul the heart where they build their nests. When we sing aloud the Glory of God, the heart is illumined and they cannot bear the light. Besides, the voice that rises from many throats frightens them and they fly away. It is advisable to all to allow the Middle Path. "Athi Sarvathra Variayeth" is an ancient axiom; it means, "Avoid excess, in all places." You must respect the 1imlts set by the experience of ages in the sacred texts. They act like embankments that curb the flood waters; they direct the raging passions towards harmless channels and save you from ruin. Of course, man has elementary needs- Physical, Mental and Intellectual, these have to be fulfilled in some measure. But, there is no need to encumber oneself with unwanted food, superfluous furniture and multi-roomed mansions. Luxury enervates and enslaves. Leaders of people have to set an example in this respect, for men usually try to Imitate and emulate. Example is more effective than precept. An ounce of practice is worth more than a ton of preaching. That is why I declare "My life is My message." You must transform your lives into examples of the ideal you preach. Parents must set good examples for children; teachers must set good examples for students; leaders must set good examples for those whom they expect to follow them. Preaching austerity and practicing luxury will only reveal one's hollowness. Choose God as your leader and guide. Parents talk of honesty but they utter lies in the presence of children and even encourage them to speak falsehood. The father, while at home, asks the child to tell the unwelcome visitor that he is not at home! The child is thus taught his first lesson in prevarication, by the father himself. There is no use blaming him if he grows into a social menace. Really speaking, the best way to gain happiness is to choose God as the leader and guide. Then, He will guide and guard, from the heart itself. Emperor Shivaaji once sent some persons from the Court to Saamartha Raamdhaas, his preceptor, with a large quantity of provisions---grains, clothes, sweets and vessels. He asked them, "For whom have you brought these and why?" They replied, "For you. You have no one who can provide for you, and so, Shivaaji Maharaaj has sent all this." Raamdhaas laughed and said, "I have Providence itself to provide for me; God alone has no one to provide for Him. Ask Shivaaji to send these things to God!" Now, there Isa wave of anxiety spreading over the world as a result of rising prices, and attempts are being made frantically to bring down the level. The fundamental cause for the rise in prices is the decline in the price of man. Man must realise his pricelessness; he should not regard himself as a cheap nut or bolt, that has no higher purpose in life. He should know that he is the imperishable unconquerable, Aathma (Soul) and the body is only a vehicle for the Aathma.

Love based on the innate Divinity is absent

Everyone should respect all others as one's own kin, having the same Divine spark, and the same

Divine Nature. Then, there will be effective production, economic consumption and equitable distribution, resulting in peace and promotion of love. Now, love based on the Innate Divinity is absent and so, there is exploitation, deceit, greed and cruelty. If man becomes aware of all men being 'cells' !n the Divine body, then, there will be no more 'devaluation' of man. Man is a diamond; but, he is now treated by other men and by himself as a piece of glass!

Man can realise his mission on the earth only when he knows himself as Divine and when he reveres all others as Divine. And, man has to worship God in the form of Man. God appears before him as blind beggar, an idiot, a leper, a child, a decrepit old man, a criminal or a madman.

You must see even behind those veils, the divine embodiment of love, power and wisdom, the Sai, and worship Him through seva (selfless service).

God cannot be identified with one Name and one Form. He is all Names and all Forms. All Names are His; all forms are His. Your Names too are His, you are His Forms. You appear as separate individual bodies because the eye that sees them seeks only bodies, the outer encasement. When you clarify and sanctify your vision and look at them through the Aathmic eye, the eye that penetrates behind the physical (with all its attributes and appurtenances), then, you will see others as waves on the ocean of the Absolute, as the "thousand heads, the thousand eyes, thousand feet" of the Viraat Purusha (Supreme Sovereign Person) sung in the Rigvedha.

Strive to win that Vision and to saturate yourself with that Bliss. New Delhi, 1-4-1975

You come to Puttaparthi, secure a picture, and taking it home, begin worshipping it every day or every Thursday; but, all that is simply sathkarma---good activity. They won't take you far.

You must also develop sath-guna---virtues, good habits, good attitudes, good characteristics, a good character. Otherwise your life is a chain of pluses and minuses, one cancelling the other out, totalling up to a mere zero.

Sri Sathya Sai

9. Himaachal

PEOPLE of Himaachal Pradesh! Lord Shiva resides on the Himaalayas, as the Puraanas (mythological legends) declare. The inner meaning of this declaration is- Lord Shiva lives in hearts that are as pure, as white and as cool as the snow (Hima) and also as steady and unmoved (achal) as these mountains. Your surroundings, therefore, are teaching you a lesson whenever you turn towards them. They exhort you to be pure, unblemished, comforting to the distressrd and unmoved by either luck or misfortune. You must have won nativity in this region, as a result of the merit earned in many previous lives.

Man has to become aware of his genuine nature and be established in that. Or else, he ceases to be entitled to that name. When fire does not burn or when water does not flow, can they lay claim to those names? Genuineness consists in being true to the deepest core.

Man has Truth as his nature. That is to say, you can rely on man's behaviour being always true;

he will speak out only what he feels to be sincere; he will act according to his words; his thought, word and action will be consistent and complementary. If in any one case, this concordance is absent, then, the person is a man only in outer form. He is worse than a beast, for, beasts are free from the burdens of thought and speech.

The intelligence has to be kept sharp and clear

All things in Creation are subject to the law of change and man too is subject to his law. But, man should use the law for progress, and not for sliding lower in the scale. Dharma (righteousness) is the norm, which he must adhere to, so that he changes from good to better and from better to the best. Dharma is that which is 'worn;' man must wear the apparel of Dharma so that he is saved from the cold winds of ego. Man has been endowed with buddhi (Intellect), so that he might at every turn decide what is beneficent for observance and what is detrimental.

Gandhi while going through hate-ridden regions, prayed, "Sabko san-mathi dhe Bhagavaan!" (O Lord! Give everyone good mind!). The Intellect has to be kept sharp, clear and straight.

There are four directions in which the intellect guides man: (1) Swaartha-sukha-buddhi. This indicates the fully egoistic nature, where the Individual does not care for even his wife and children, but, is eager to fulfill his own needs first and foremost. Then, we have (2), the Swaartha-paraaartha-sukha-buddhi, this allows some consideration for the happiness of others also. Birds feed their young and undergo great exertion to bring them up. The next variety is (3) Paraartha-buddhi. Those who have this, seek for others as much happiness as they seek for themselves. They are prepared to undergo any trouble to secure for others too what they feel will grant them happiness. The next is (4) Aadhyaathmic-buddhi (spiritual intellect). This leads man ever on the path of renunciation and service, for, they alone lead to Spiritual advancement.

Develop the vision to see the One behind the many India was for long centuries the guide and Guru (preceptor) of mankind, because people' cultivated this type of spiritual intelligence. Today it .has yielded place to falsehood, hypocrisy, injustice, and greed. The Aadhyaathmic intellect recognises the Unity of creation and so, what the other person feels is felt by the individual too, to the same degree. This vast gathering of people will appear to the Aadhyaathmic Intellect as a garland of multi-coloured flowers strung on the one single thread, God. Develop this vision; see the One behind the many; see the Brahmasuuthra---the string that runs through each flower.

When you win the Love of God, His compassion will flow unto you. Love gives and forgives.

Ego gets and forgets. When your son steals some money from the house, you do not hand him over to the police; but, when your servant steals a spoon, you have no such qualms. For, you have no love for the servant.

Live without hating others, condemning others, and seeking faults in others. Vyaasa, who wrote eighteen voluminous Puraanas summarised all the Puraanas in one single line of a small couplet: "Doing good to others is the only meritorious act; doing evil is the most heinous sin."

When you feel you cannot do good, at least desist from doing evil. That itself is meritorious service! Do not try to discover differences; discover unity. Creeds, castes, country of origin may differ but the inner hunger is the same for all men. Understand that the purpose of life is to know the Embodiment of love, namely, God, through love, and demonstrate through your own Love that you have known Him.

The limbs of the body have to work In unison for the common purpose of sustaining the body and keeping it fit for its prime mission. If one limb quarrels with another or refuses to cooperate or help, the entire body, Including the refractory limb, will suffer. When you see a thorn on the road the feet move away; the eyes saw and immediately, sympathetic vibrations warned the feet.

The love and cooperation between eye and feet come from the Aathma (divine spirit) within and the love which is its very nature, dust as your body is kept safe and secure by love, may the country also be kept safe and secure; for, It has a great mission to fulfill, as the guide and Gum of mankind.

Simla, 4-4-1975
 If it is good and will harm no one, go ahead. If it is not good, put it aside. If not sure, do nothing until sure.

Sri Sathya Sai
 10. Thirty-five and sixty-five
 THE future of India lies in your hands. You are fully aware of the characteristics of this Kali Yuga (age of conflict) we are passing through. You find around you injustice, irregularities, immorality and untruth with all their devilish attributes and atrocities. But we have to march ahead in spite of all these with a quiet, tolerant and benign attitude towards life. Almost all the fields and walks of life are polluted with these poisonous feelings, but the field of education being the most prominent organ, needs our special attention. We should first enquire and try to find out why the parent or pupils or their teachers are taking active part in these anti-academic activities. The main reason for this disorder is that the human mind is haunted and dominated by two devilish blemishes, viz., selfishness and ambition. These forces are standing In the way of human beings in realising the human values which go to make up humanity. It is not becoming of a man to exchange his valuable life---as precious as gem---for worldly desires and ambitions which are as worthless as a coalstone. Man becomes Immortal neither by deeds, nor by progeny nor by wealth. What makes him eternal is the spirit of sacrifice. So we should try to make our lives meaningful by sacrificing personal comfort for the sake of our fellow beings.

The student today is a seeker of worldly pleasures Today when we find our educational trends going astray and causing anxiety to parents and society, we need to reiterate our old values, according to which an education based on our cultural heritage can alone lead one' to real education---Aathma Vidhya---the state of selfrealisation.

Every Indian will have to recognise the culture based on Vedhic philosophy. You will know how restless and agitated the youth of India is today trying to rob every thing with all pride and no achievement and thus getting involved in meaningless pursuits.

The student of today is not able to realise what he should primarily be concerned with. It is only in name that he is a Vidhyarthi--a seeker of knowledge. In practice, he is only a vishayaarthi---a seeker of worldly pleasures.

It is the duty of every human being to understand and respect his parents. Similarly, in a nation it is the duty of every national to assimilate and appreciate the historical and cultural background of his nation and consider these two factors as his father and mother. In fact, one who is ignorant of the historical and cultural heritage of his country is like a stupid person who has no knowledge of his parents. We have therefore to make manifold progress in the Field of education today to keep pace with the general advancement that is taking place. But we are ignorant of our great classics and scriptures like Raamaayana, Mahaabhaaratha and Bhagavath Geetha.

The end of education is character
Once a District Educational Officer was inspecting a school. He asked the teacher to find out from one of his pupils as to who wrote Raamaayana. The pupil innocently replied, "Sir, I never wrote it; perhaps you might have written it." Then the teacher found himself in a miserable plight and turned to the Inspecting Officer to assure that he has not done so and tried to enquire if the officer had by any chance written the work. The District Educational Officer referred the matter, to be safe, to the Vice-Chancellor, who finally observed that some Brahmin must have done it and advised the officer concerned to close the issue. This means that the state of affairs in our educational field today is so pitiable that our students, teachers, inspecting officers and Vice-Chancellors are all sailing in the same boat. Nobody knows about the author of a work-like Raamaayana. In these circumstances we are not justified in calling ourselves educated. We are wasting our precious time on imitation. The end of education is character and the end of knowledge is love.

Education does not mean mere knowledge of books and acquaintance with them. If we concentrate on book knowledge at the cost of practical application, we will be spoiling the name of education itself. In olden times, only those who secured hundred per cent marks were allowed to pass a test, but now, thirty-five out of hundred will enable a person to get through an examination. That means, a student is allowed to commit 65 mistakes out of hundred. If a student is allowed to make 65 per cent mistakes when he has full time and energy at his disposal there is no reason why a grown up not be given the margin of committing 100 per cent mistakes. It is therefore the duty of each and every student to attain hundred per cent perfection in his knowledge. If he cannot do this as a student in spite of his advantages of age and energy, he will not be able to do Justice to his work when he takes up a job and assumes false notions of prestige and dignity. Charity makes man happy in both the worlds. Moreover, education should lead one to humility, which in turn equips him with all the eligibility. Eligibility provides him with necessary material wealth, which again enables him to do some charitable deeds. Charity makes him happy both in this world and the other one higher than this.

Today we think of our rights and responsibilities. On one side we have the Individual freedom and fundamental rights, and on the other we have our responsibilities and duties to be performed. We are no doubt anxious about our individual freedom in the same proportion. We should do full Justice to our social obligations and establish the reputation of our country and Its culture. The colleges today are not paying adequate attention to this cultural aspect. It therefore became necessary for us to establish Sathya Sai Colleges with special objectives pointing to this end even though there are thousands and millions of colleges all over the world. A Sathya Sai College is not Intended to prepare graduates who carry their degrees like begging bowls going from door to door begging for a job. These colleges are being established to promote a sense of self-reliance and a spirit of service to society and humanity at large. Man cannot live In isolation like a drop of oil on water surface. He is a product of society. He has to live In it, grow with it and work for it. Human birth is supposed to be a rare one, not easily granted to the animal world.

Everyone should have the feeling of 'one nation' We who are crossing the ocean of Samsaara (the chain of birth and death) need to cultivate the art of swimming through Bhagavath chinthana (contemplation on God). However, learned we may be, if we do not have this training and cultivation, we are bound to sink. Life is a boat which enables us to cross the ocean of Samsaara with the aid of meditation on God.

A country needs an ideal as a human body requires recoupment. Body is an assembly of various organs. No single organ can constitute a body. When the various organs get separated, the human body gets weakened and even loses its existence. Similarly, if a nation is split up into different parts, It gets disintegrated. There may be different states in a nation but there should be feeling of 'one nation' throughout the country. We should develop a habit of visualising unity in diversity and not diversity in the unity that is divine. God is everywhere and in everyone. The whole universe is inhabited by Him. One should find God in every object. These are the Ideals we find

In our scriptures.

There are bulbs of different colours and their voltage also differs. But whatever the colour and whatever the voltage, current that flows is the same. This kind of thinking is highly essential today. In our culture, we respect our father and mother as God. It is only when we respect our parents, that we can expect our children, in turn, to respect us. There is reaction, resound and reflection, for everything in the world.

We assign a special place to women in India

The young girls who study in this College today will become mothers tomorrow. It is therefore necessary that they should equip themselves with all the culture, learning and wisdom that they need in their future lives. In India, we assign a special place to women. It is therefore all the more important that the girls who are studying here should train themselves in such a way that they can live up to the Ideals and aspirations of an Indian woman.

We consider women as Grihalakshmi, Dharmapathni, and so on. A woman has to maintain her house. She is not only the house wife, but on her depends the glory or otherwise of the whole country. That is why we say this is our motherland. It is in this spirit that we refer to our country as Bhaarathamaatha (Motherland). We also find that women are given the first position when they are associated with their counterparts as Seetha-Raama, Lakshmi-Naaraayana, Raadhaa-Krishna and Paarvathi-Parameshwara. It is only to establish this prominence given to women in our country and to train our young girls on these lines that we took up the task of opening such colleges.

I expect the young girls studying in this college to cultivate such good qualities which will bring name and fame to the native homes and also to those where they proceed after marriage. The bad habits and vulgar behaviour that we find in most of the young girls today should not find a place in the girls of this College. The girls of a Sathya Sai College should maintain the ideals of the institutions and keep the prestige of their homes, their society and their culture. It is only then that the purpose of establishing this college can be served.

Jaipur, 10-4-1975

Rig Vedha teaches the lesson of serenity. Peace is like rose water scent; when it is sprinkled on you, smell it but don't drink it---that is to say, accept it and thrive on it.

Blame is like a medicine. Examine yourselves whether you have the illness and if you have, accept the blame and benefit by it.

Sri Sathya Sai

11. Raamaayana for everyman

THE Raamaayana is a guide book, a sacred text, an inspiring scripture, for everyman in all lands, at all times, whatever his creed or condition might be. For, it imparts poise, balance, equanimity, inner strength and peace. Peace is the best treasure, without which power, authority, fame, fortune are all dry and burdensome. Thyaagaraaja has sung that there can be no happiness, without inner peace.

To earn this peace and to be unshakably established in it, man must develop Abhyaasa (steady practice) and Vairagya (full detachment). From birth to death, man is the slave of habits and practices. One must examine these and rely more and more on those that lead him towards subjective joy rather than objective pleasure. Subjective joy can be acquired by harmony in the home, mutual co-operation among the members of the family and community, acts of service to others and concern for the welfare and prosperity of the society in which one is living.

The Raamaayana holds up the ideals to be pursued by the father, the son, the mother, the brother, the friend, the servant, the master, the teacher, the pupil, etc. The happy home is the basic cell of the national organism. It ensures a happy world, for mankind is one family, and if any one unit is sad or struggling in distress, how can, the rest be safe or satisfied?

There is no object without fault or failing

Vairagya (detachment) does not imply renunciation of family ties and fleeing into the loneliness of the jungle. It means our giving up the feeling that things are permanent, and capable of yielding supreme joy. The mind plays tricks with man and believes that some things are good and some bad, some eternal and some transitory. You might have a plateful of nice eatables before you and they might appear to be delicious and fine; but, if the cook announces that a lizard had fallen into cooker when it was on fire and has been boiled alive, all the fascination for the' food disappears in a trice! There is no object without fault .or failing; there is no joy that is unmixed with pain; there is no act that is not tainted with egotism. So be warned and develop the detachment which will save you from grief.

The Raamaayana instils this wise, valid, valuable detachment, or thyaaga (sacrifice). Raama gladly journeys into the forest as an exile, the moment he knows that his father's wish was that he should do so; and, remember, he was to be crowned Emperor just that moment by the very same person who ordered him to go into exile. When those who have full powers and claims, renounce positions of authority in the Raamaayana, we see today persons with no powers or claims, clamouring to occupy position of authority!
The lesson Raamaayana teaches about Duty Duty is God, that is the lesson the Raamaayana teaches. The word duty is today used to indicate the methods by which one exercises his authority. No. Duty is the responsibility you have to respect and revere others and to serve them to the best of your ability. You claim to have the freedom to walk, waving your walking stick around you; but, the man coming behind has as much freedom to use the road as you have. To exercise your freedom so that you do not limit or harm the freedom of others---that is the Duty, which becomes Worship.
When Raama, Seetha and Lakshmana reached the banks of the Ganga, Sumanthra, the aged Minister of the Court who had taken them so far in the Royal Chariot, could not follow them; he had in duty bound to return to the Capital. So, he turned back with tearful eyes; Guha rowed them across the river, they entered the forest and started walking in single file through the thick jungle---Raama, Seetha in the middle and Lakshmana following behind. They reached the hermitage of Vaalmeeki soon; when the Sage came forward to welcome them, Raama asked him to indicate a place where he can reside. Valmeeki said, "We sages reside in You; you reside in us. Where else can I request you to reside? Though you have assumed this human form, "You give yourself away by the Beauty that shines in You." Man is doomed when evanescent overcomes him The Beauty of Raama was the Beauty of Inner Peace, the Splendour that fills one when he is conscious of living in Dharma (righteousness). Raamaayana teaches also the need to give up the false identification with the body. When Raama saw Thaara wailing over the corpse of Vaali, he gives her lessons on the evanescence of the body and the foolishness of identifying a person with that vehicle he uses for the purpose of his journey to Divinity.

When desire for the evanescent overcomes man, he is doomed; he becomes distant from the goal. Consider Seetha. She renounced everything that she thought would give her comfort in the palaces of her father and father-in-law and preferred to follow Raama into the forest. So, she secured the Proximity and Presence of the Lord. But, alas, when she saw the false form of the Golden Deer, she yearned for it, and sent both Raama and Lakshmana after it, so that she might fondle it and feed it and have it as a pet. What was the result of this fatal desire? She was forced to live far away from the Lord and to pine for Him in great anguish.
When Raama is installed in the heart, everything will be added unto you---fame, fortune, freedom, fullness. Hanumaan was a mere monkey leader until he met Raama; he was a minister in the court of his master; but, when Raama gave him the commission to seek Seetha and sent him, that is to say, when Raama was Installed in his heart as guide and guardian, Hanumaan became immortal, as the Ideal Devotee.
The Raamaayana has a deep undercurrent of significant meaning.
Dhsharatha means, he who rides in a chariot of ten, that is to say MAN. He is tied up with three Gunas (qualities), or three wives, as in the Raamaayana. He has four sons, the Purusharthas-- -Dharma (Raama) Artha (Lakshmana), Kaama (Bharatha), and moksha (Sathrugna).
These four aims of man have to be systematically realised, always with the last one, Moksha, clearly before the eye. Lakshmana represents the Buddhi (Intellect) and Seetha is Truth. Hanumaan is the Mind, and it is the repository, if controlled and trained, of courage. Sugreeva, the master of Hanumaan is Discrimination. With these to help him Raama seeks Truth and succeeds. That is the lesson of the Epic to everyman.
Ideals underlying the ancient culture of India The culture of this land is based on the high ideals of Righteousness enshrined in the Raamaayana and the Mahaabhaaratha, in both of which God has led mankind in the garb of man. There is a story of Alexander the Great, which illustrates the glory of Indian Culture. It seems Alexander used to go incognito to the villages around his camp, in India, in order to learn the habits and manners of the strange new land into which fate had brought him. One day, he found a man pleading with another to accept a pot of gold, which the other was refusing even to look at!

He came to know that the pot of gold was discovered under the soil of the field purchased by the man from the man who refused to accept it. The buyer argued that he had bought only the land and was therefore not entitled to own the pot of gold; the seller said, he had no more right for anything found on or in the plot, that he had sold.

Alexander watched this contest for some time; both did not yield. At last, the village elders were called in to decide the issue. And, even as Alexander watched, the elders found a happy way outthe buyer's son shall marry the seller's daughter and the pot of the gold shall be given to the bride as dowry! Alexander felt elated at the heights to which human virtue could rise; he was also ashamed at his own adventurous ambition to conquer another's property by force of arms. The ideals underlying the ancient culture of India have to be studied and practised by every Indian at least, so that the world might have the benefit of the great examples this can provide.

Turn your sight inside, to purify and clarify

This day, when you are celebrating the birth of Raama, you have to dedicate your activities to these ideals propounded in the life of Raama. The fact that you are alive this day is a blessing, for, you can know of these ideals and also the means by which you can realise them in actual daily life. There are many who spend much time in mechanically reciting the name Raama or systematically reading the entire Raamaayana according to a fixed time-table, or who worship the images of Raama, Seetha, Lakshmana, and Hanumaan, as a daily ritual, with pomp and pedantry; but, like the person who puts a foot forward only to draw it back again these persons do not progress at all, though years might elapse. Without gaining purity of thoughts and intentions, compassion and the urge to serve, these outward expressions and exhibitions are but ways of cheating the society which applauds you as a great devotee.

Your sight must become insight; it must be turned within and used to purify and clarify.

People talk glibly of Saakshaathkaara (Vision of the Divine), the vision that liberates. The Seeer and the Seen have to merge and become One and experienced as One only, without a second.

That is the Saakshaathkaara that is worthwhile. You may have a fruit. You may earn the fruit of thapas (penance) in your hand. But, unless you eat it, digest it, and make it part of your own nature and derive strength therefrom, you are not saved at all. Merge into the Divine which you really are; that is the consummation.

In order to reach this goal, you have to proceed far. First examine your present equipment; find out its defects, for example, whether it is damaged by egotism, greed, insincerity, waywardness and sloth. For, with these faults, it is difficult to concentrate on thoughts of God, either within or without. You must also cultivate the positive quality of Prema (Love) for the Embodiment of Prema can be realised only through Prema. That is the message the Raamaayana gives all those who study it with sincere desire to learn. That is the message I wish to give you today.

Raamanavami, Brindhaavan, 20-4-1975

12. Why I love villages most

THE Sun is not the only gift that has dawned on this village this day; Aanandha (divine bliss) too has dawned. For, I have come to make you aware of the Aanandha you are. Aanandha is the home from which you have strayed away! It is your place of Nativity. You seek your home elsewhere and so, you are afflicted by distress and disappointment.

Know that Aanandha is your Nature, your sustenance, and your goal.

Villages are the places where this knowledge comes easier to man, and takes deeper roots. That is the reason I love villages most. For, the virtues of detachment, uprightness, honesty, and sincerity which are essential prerequisites for acquiring this awareness are surviving, in however attenuated a form, only in villages this day. They have disappeared from towns long ago. Of course, you have your troubles and handicaps; but, certainly, you have less obstacles to overcome, when you decide to lead the good life and attain the awareness of your Divinity.

Man's body is essentially the receptacle of God

Why is man-afflicted today with fear and anxiety? Are we to search for the reasons outside us or do they lie with us? The reason lies in the false emphasis we have laid on things of the material world, ignoring things of the spirit. The body that man bears is essentially the receptacle of God.

It is a temple, where God is installed and where God is the Master. It does not deserve all the attention you now pay to fulfil its urges, needs and whims. It is equipped with very valuable instruments which can help you in the journey; but you seldom use them! The senses bring you impressions from the outside world, but, you do not evaluate these impressions by the touchstone of a clear reason or a balanced mind. You do not proceed from one step to another in the march towards the elimination of the ego and the emergence in to the One. City-dwellers are buffeted by storms of passion and emotion, and they are hunted or haunted by phantom desires and wild imaginings. They have neither the inclination nor the insight to dedicate their time, their skills and their activity to Divine ends.

The Divine is the core, the essence of your being. God is everywhere; when He is recognised and adored as the Indweller of your body, it becomes a Temple, and it is no more a burden. God is shining, announcing Himself through you; He is expressing Himself through every thought, word and deed that emanates from you.

Go deeper within, where the treasure is stored

In the temple that is built and put together, we have an idol that is sculpted and moulded by man.

But, in this temple that is gifted by God, God shines in His own Light, and manifests in His own Glory as Love, Power and Wisdom. He shines and manifests thus not only in a single body, but, in all bodies. He is the Indweller in each; so, when you insult, injure or inflict infamy on another, remember you are inviting the pain to visit your own self, for, the other is none other than your own self.

Seek the gem of Divine Knowledge within you, just as precious stones have to be sought in the bowels of the earth. Now, what you seek is trivial trash. Go deeper, where the treasure is stored. I know you have, in this village, as in most villages, a big chariot festival, when the replica of the

'Installed Idol' the processional Form, is taken round the entire village with great pomp and paraphernalia. The wheeled chariot or the palanquin is decorated with reverent attention; bands of musicians and dancers are engaged to precede the chariot; many come to the festival to admire the decoration of the chariot; more are interested in the songs and dances, the songsters and the dancers; only a handful are drawn by the idol which is the central figure of all the gaiety and adoration.

The human body too is a temple chariot; the Aathma (divinity) is installed therein; and it is dragged by emotions, impulses, passions and urges along the streets of desire. Success and failure, joy and grief, gain and loss, are the dancers who accompany this procession of Life.

Here, too, many pour their attention only on the chariot, its height, its decoration and its progress. Many others are concerned with the dance of dualities, the pain-pleasure duet, that is part of the procession. Few pay attention to the Aathma, the Crown and Consummation of human existence.

Develop the habit of listening to the Inner Voice

But, sages and saints have known that the most noteworthy achievement of the senses of man is the glorification of the God within. "They are not eyes, they are but globules of glass, that do not earn a vision of God," says one. "They are not ears, they are but muscular protrusions that do not relish the praise of God," says another. Suurdhaas condemns the hand that does not worship God and calls such hands, sucks of wood. The world and Its attractions may appeal to your instincts and impulse but, God draws out your Love, as no worldly thing can. Develop the inner Vision, the habit of listening to the inner Voice, and you are assured of unshakeable peace and infinite joy.

In the village, you are ever in contact with God, His Grace, His tenderness and His Love. In the cities, life is more superficial. You may not have the benefit of the radio or the electric current;

but, you can hear the birds sing at Sunrise and you can bask in the bright Sun underneath the pure blue sky. When you get the twin gifts of medical care and schooling facilities, you need nothing more for marching onwards to happiness and peace. But, I find that in several villages, the behaviour of some one person or some one family disrupts life and breeds fear, faction and fighting. This can be cured only by the potent drug called Love. The forces of brotherhood, mutual help and sympathetic understanding have to overpower the sinister influence of these individuals and promote unity and strength.

Heart and spirit of man have to be fed and fostered

Many leaders of this country are promising to provide a quantity of food, some kind of dwelling, and a few yards of clothing to everyone so that people may be happy.

They also promise to each sufficient schooling so that they may write and read letters, and grasp the news from the papers.

But, these cannot ensure peace, for, man is not merely a bundle of bones and muscles; he is equipped with a heart and a spirit and these have also to be fed and fostered.

Men may have superabundance of food, clothing and houses; but, their hearts may be dry and their spirits gloomy. Sense-control, self-confidence, contentment, absence of hatred and greed--- these are far more precious as possessions than land, money, or houses. The Seva Samithi that has been started in your village, with its subsidiary units of Mahila Vibhaag and Baala Vikaas (all Sai Organisations) will sow the seeds of these disciplines and promote peace and happiness.

Above all, cultivate unity and brotherhood. A single fibre of hemp cannot bind even an ant; thousands rolled into a rope can tame a wild elephant into quiet submission. In unity lies strength and prosperity. Unity in tile villages can usher in a new era of joy and prosperity in the entire nation.

Make the temple of Vinaayaka inaugurated today the hub of this new movement. The temple is to the village, as the heart is to the body. You have all joined to build it and bring it into being;

continue to reap its benefits together and to share its light together.
With the Grace of God, what seems impossible can be achieved quite easily. All are children of God; do not injure anyone, for, that injury will react on you quite soon. You reap as you sow; you cannot grow a fruit-tree when the seed you have planted is that of a weed.

Time spent on thoughts of God is rewarded There are some ignorant persons who laugh at bhajans and other acts of worship and characterise them as waste of valuable time! These persons might laugh at your pouring bags of paddy seeds on slushy fields and condemn that act too as waste of valuable food material! But, you know that for every bag of seed, Mother Earth will give back, in a few weeks, grain tenfold or even twentyfold. Time spent in thoughts of God or adoration of the Divine is indeed well-spent, for, it rewards you with a rich harvest of mental peace and courage.

When thieves attack the neighbour, you become alert and keep vigil; you feel that it may be your turn next. So you must see that thieves do not enter the village. For, then, all can be safe and secure. Your neighbour's loss is as much your own. Do not inflame your anger and blow it into a conflagration which may destroy the entire village. Be cool, calm yourself. Take a glass of cold water and lie down quiet for a while, till the fury loses its heat. Do not fly into a passion and throw vulgar abuse at the person you dislike, And be careful; do not indulge in behaviours and start imitating them before your children; for, they will learn these behaviours and start imitating.

You cannot easily correct them later.
Make all efforts to remove evil from your heart Goodness is Godliness. Never talk ill of others; spend your time in showering love and in mutual help. Wake up early and sing the glory of God in group bhajan moving along the roads and cleansing the atmosphere, polluted by anger and hatred. Let the air you breathe be free from evil vibrations. When you mention the sky you point your finger upwards, to indicate that it is there.

But the sky is here also. It is one of the five elements, the Panchabhuthaas. Its sign and symbol is sound; wherever sound is, there, we can infer, is the sky. There is an inner sky also, the Aakaasha in the Heart. Just as the Sun and Moon in the outer sky are hidden by thick masses of cloud, the Sun (Intellect) and Moon (Mind) in the inner sky are also hidden and suppressed by thick clouds of vice and evil. So, make all efforts to remove these clouds, by the strong gale of Devotion to God.

When you cook any item of food, in a copper vessel, however fresh and fine the vegetables are, however clean the dhaal (lentils) and salt, however free from grit and dirt the tamarind fruits, if the vessel has no lining of tin, the food made therein will turn into poisonous stuff. You all know this truth. The heart too is a copper vessel where you prepare various types of food for yourself and others. See that it has a good lining of Love; or else, it too will cause harm and pain, to you and the rest.

Conquer anger by means of fortitude Love...Love...Love...First...Love, as long as Life lasts. For Myself, I can say, I shower more blessings on those who decry or defame Me than those who worship and adore Me! For, those who spread falsehoods about Me derive joy therefrom; I am happy that I am the cause for their exultation and joy. You too must accept this line of argument and be very happy when someone derives joy by defaming you. Do not respond by defaming that person; then, the chain of hatred will bind both and drag both down. Life will become a tragedy. Conquer anger by means of fortitude; conquer hatred by love. Do not feed anger with retaliation; do not feed hatred with fury. Forget and forgive all that has happened amongst you until this very moment; start a new chapter of Love and Brotherhood from now on. The Professors and the students of the Sri Sathya Sai College are ready and eager to come to your help, whenever you need it. Some young men from this village are students of this College; when they come home, you must remind them of the ideals of service and reverence that we are instilling into them. The College is trying to help them not only to earn a University degree but also to become skilled and enthusiastic servants of the weak and the disabled, and efficient citizens of the nation. They should not behave like the half-educated haughty youth, who wander the streets with a transistor on their shoulders, pursuing the vanities of the world and running into debt and dissoluteness. They should preserve and develop their ancestral patrimony; (not only land and riches; also, heritage and culture); they should be assets to their parents, the society and the nation. They should not exploit the innocence and ignorance of the very parents who have sacrificed their everything in order to send in them to college and maintain them hostels. Send your sons to the College; there they can learn to escape these temptations and to be useful and efficient for the task of preserving Indian culture and spirituality. Encourage your sons to realise the meaning of My Mission and to become fit instruments for spreading, by the example of their lives, the Message which I have come to give mankind.

Panathur Village, 28-4-1975

Illness is caused more by malnutrition of the mind than of the body. Doctors speak of vitamin deficiency; I will call it the deficiency of Vitamin G, and I will recommend the repetition of the Name of God, with accompanying contemplation of the glory and grace of God. That is the Vitamin G. That is the medicine. Regulated life and habits are two-thirds of the treatment, while the medicine is just one-third only.

Sri Sathya Sai

13. The basic error

You may have cows of different breeds and bands, colours and continents, but the milk they give is everywhere the same in composition! You may get gold from different places and engage different goldsmiths to make for you different types of ornaments but the basic substance does not undergo any diminution in value. It remains gold for all time. Living beings belong to widely different species but, the Spark of Life, the Jeewa (individual being) in each is the same. God is the goal of every prayer, in whatever language or dialect it is spoken. You may see people kneeling or prostrating, with folded palms or arms extended, in church or mosque or temple but they are all asking for help, succour, strength, wisdom, security or happiness from the inexhaustible reservoir of happiness, wisdom and power, God. But, people in their pettiness, do not recognise this basic truth, they pride themselves on their holiness and disparage the others, as having gone astray! They do not have mental peace themselves, nor do they allow others to live in peace. Such is the stupidity of the fanatics. It is good and helpful to have an enemy. Ignoring the unity of all mankind in the Aathma (divine soul), man relishes in quarrels and factions. He classifies some among his contemporaries as his friends and some as his foes. He manufactures duality where basically there is only unity. It is his own likes and dislikes, prejudices and passions that is reflected back, that creates all this reaction of love and hatred, all this resounding echo of factiousness and friction. Friendship and enmity arise from your heart; they are labels fixed by you, not marks which other people are born with. The same person is the thickest friend of one man and the mortal enemy of another---both because of his one act or one word! Of course, it is best that you do not develop too much attachment with others and get entangled either through the silken bonds of friendship or the iron chain of hatred. But, if you ask Me, it is more beneficial to cultivate enemies. Kabeer has stated many times that it is good and very helpful to have an enemy that is ever eager to criticise you for your faults than a friend who will cast a blind eye on them. The enemy takes delight in abusing you and it is said in the Puraanas (mythological legends) that, as a consequence, he goes on diminishing and wiping off from your account the demerits you have to live out in misery. The faster and fouler his abuse, the sooner and better are your future prospects brightened. The enemy absorbs your sins and their effects.

Moreover, since you are always aware of the enemy and his tactics, you are alert not to give him any chance to point his finger of scorn at you. He is your censor, corrector and conscience. Be thankful to him who talks ill of you, for surely, he is doing you very great service by examining your every act on the touchstone of morality, truth and righteousness.

Most people live superficial lives

But, the best path for Saadhak (spiritual aspirant) is to transcend all dualities and recognise the oneness of the Aathma behind and beyond the diversities of Nature. Mistaking the One to be the Many is the basic error that has led man into pain and misery. He sees multiplicity, he engages himself in manifold activities, he is pulled in many directions, he is distracted and distressed. He has no time to meditate on the One Basic Truth. He is confused by the kaleidoscopic transformations. He is tossed between hate and love, attachment and repulsion.

Only recently when I was touring the Delhi area I asked some persons who came to Me with the complaint that, since they did not attend 60% of the bhajans, the Committee meetings, etc., their names are threatened to be removed from membership. "Why could you not attend even that number of meetings?" You will be surprised at the reply they gave Me. "Swaamiji! We have no time even to die!" That is the plight to which this fundamental ignorance of the One (that appears as Many) has driven people.

Man does not delve deep into the significance of all that happens around him. Siddhaarta, who became the Buddha, had that urge to know and inquire. Most people live superficial lives. They are like logs of wood tossed up and down by the waves of the sea, insensitive, dull, Thaamasik.

Haste lands them in waste; waste increases worry. They have no time to sit and meditate on the reality of their own existence, their own knowledge and their own joy. If that is done, they can contact the source of all existence, all knowledge and all bliss. They don't take even the first step towards their self-inquiry. How then can they derive self-satisfaction, at their vastness, indestructibility, infinite power and wisdom?

Duty must be done with skill, sincerity and love

You have it in your power to make your days on earth a path of flowers, instead of a path of thorns. Recognise the Sai resident in every heart and all will be smoothness, softness and sweetness for you. Sai will be the fountain of Love in your heart and in the hearts of all with whom you come in contact. Know that Sai is Omnipresent and so, He is present in every living thing and you. Adore everyone as you adore Sai. Allow the other man as 'much freedom as you like to enjoy; do unto him just as you would like to be done to you.

Don't do unto him anything you don't like to be done unto you. That is the sum and substance of Saadhana (spiritual effort).

One individual goes along the road swinging his walking stick merrily. He is quite happy with himself and his conditions. He has every right to do so. But, he has to remember that others are also walking along the road and have every right to do so. So, his stick should be so swung that no harm or injury is inflicted on other rightful users of the road. Your freedom is restricted by the freedoms you have to grant to other members of the Society in which you live and thrive. As a matter of fact, if there was no other person, you have no duties at all.

Duty arises when you have another person to deal with. You have a duty so far as the other person is concerned and he has the responsibility to see that he deserves that duty which you feel bound to fulfil towards him.

Duty must be deserved by the other; it must be done with skill and sincerity and love. This is easy if you feel that your duty is part of your worship, that you are offering it to the Sai in the other person. Your duty is to your own self, the Sai that is your real core.

Be aware of both your duties and responsibilities

You will be false to Sai if you delay doing it, or do it clumsily or half-heartedly. Your station in life, your position of authority, your account, your kinship with others, your status as father or son, husband or wife, master or servant, teacher or pupil, each has its own Swadharma (individual morality and duty)---both of duties and responsibilities.

Abide by them; be aware of them always. Bhaaratheeya Culture has emphasised this in every scripture and every epic.

Begin your Saadhana by offering the joy of the Jeeva (individual being) to the Dheva (divine being)! Of course, Dheva does not need the offering of joy made by the Jeeva. The waters of the lake do not need fish swimming in it; its joy is not lessened by their absence. But the fish need the waters. Do not be led to believe that God will be feeling a void, if there are no devotees or worshippers! The person with devotion in the heart, with the thirst for Truth in his brain, with the yearning for surrender in his mind, will certainly feel lost if there is no God whom he can approach and adore. Be eager to do your duty as best as you can Faith in God is to be translated into action. It is an imperative act of worship to discharge faithfully all one's duties and responsibilities. It will be dangerous if the right work is not done by the right person at the right time. You must be eager to do your duty as best as you can. Maintain your own self-respect, by this attitude and by this sense of obligation. You must also be vigilant about the honour and reputation of your family and forefathers. There was a washerman in a village, who belonged to the family that washed the clothes of its residents, since generations. It was his hereditary profession. Every one, high and low, rich and poor, gave their clothes to him for cleaning and ironing. He had two donkeys to bring the soiled clothes from the house to the river and to carry the burden of the washed clothes from the river to the streets and the houses of his customers. He had also a dog to watch over the washed clothes hung for drying in the open spaces by the side of the river. One day, the washerman had to wash a big lot of silken sarees and dhothis because of a marriage in the house of the richest man of the village and he had kept them all nicely washed and ironed, in one of the rooms in the hut. It was night. The dog and the donkeys were in the backyard, of the house, dozing off. The washerman had, in his anxiety to get all the clothes washed, had forgotten to feed the dog that evening and the poor animal was both hungry and angry. So, when a thief stole past him in the darkness and began breaking into the hut to steal the silken clothes, he kept mum. The donkeys noted this and were upset because their master was being robbed right before their eyes. So, they raised a hue and cry, braying their loudest. The washerman was awakened by the noise; he came out of the house, red in the face, because the donkeys had disturbed his sleep. He took up a cudgel and beat up the donkeys mercilessly! They suffered because they took upon themselves a duty that did not rightfully belong to them. It was not their Swadharma. Humility, Forbearance, Sincerity---these are the primary virtues of a genuine son or daughter of Bhaarith. Your duty is to cultivate these and make the City of

Bombay, which is the stomach of Bhaarith, healthy and clean. Then only can Bhaarith be happy. That is why the Dharma kshethra (Mansion of Morality) and the Dharma Stuupa (Monument of Morality) have both been erected first in your City. Dharmakshethra, 11-5-1975 More than listening to a hundred lectures or delivering them to others, offering one act as genuine service attracts the Grace of God. Sri Sathya Sai 14. Four F's THE process of education must render the individual a happier and more useful person; it must also make him a better citizen, able and willing to further the progress of the nation to which he belongs. It must give up its present emphasis on the grant of degrees which are serving only as bowls, with which the graduates roam about the country asking for jobs to be deposited in them. Today, we hear a great deal about 'duty' and the responsibility to perform the duties concerning each group. This is all to the good. But, the connotation of the words is not properly understood. The student thinks that his 'duty' is only to be punctual when he attends college or school, and to be attentive during the lectures and other academic exercises. The teachers too consider their duty done, when they attend during prescribed hours and perform the assignments allotted to them. This misconception has to be given up. Education has to be welcomed as a Saadhana (spiritual discipline) for the establishment of Shaanthi (peace) in the individual heart as well as in Society, including the Human Commonwealth. Education is a spiritual endeavour, over which Goddess Saraswathi presides. Saraswathi is the Shakthi of Brahma, the First Member of the Trinity, who is the source and sustenance of all creative activity. Gaayathri---the vital Vedhic manthra, which prays to the Source of Light, to illumine the Intellect of the aspirant--- is also a facet of that Shakthi. People have now ignored Saraswathi & Gaayathri The Gaayathri manthra (Vedhic prayer to illuminate the intelligence) is a universal eternal call from the heart of man to the embodiment of Love and Light. It is the very basis of the educational effort in all lands and at all times. But, people have now ignored Saraswathi and Gaayathri; they have installed, Lakshmi, the Goddess of Wealth, in the altar of Education. The emphasis is on soft furniture, soft curricula, soft tests, and soft treatment for the idle and even the mischievous. The aim is to draw as much as possible from the common pool, not to contribute one's best and most of it. The teachers and the students try to do the minimum so far as teaching and learning are concerned. This College is run on far contrary principles. Here, the emphasis is on giving and forgiving, not, on getting and forgetting those who gave what you got. We also encourage service, especially among the illiterate and the needy, in the villages around. We try to highlight the responsibilities of youth, rather than rights. The right is earned only by the proper discharge of the responsibilities. When duty is shirked, you have no right to ask for your rights. In the observance of Swadharma lies progress. Remember that the years that you spend in this College are the most precious in your lives; if they are wasted in indifference or positive idleness, you will have to rue for it, all the rest of your lives. And, being in this College is the highest piece of good fortune and, if you do not rise up to our expectations through negligence or waywardness, the loss is Irreparable. You will learn here the valuable lessons of detachment, loving service, fraternity, humility, sincerity, fortitude and fearlessness. Treasure them, for, they will serve as reliable props when you enter the world of action. In College, you will be marching from smaller truths to bigger truths, until you are taught the know how to reach the Ultimate Truth. There is no false doctrine, as such. What is so called is only the result of ignorance. No falsehood is deliberate; it is only truth clothed in fog or fumble. You discard the foggy, vision and attain clear vision; and that reveals Truth. You give up fumbling knowledge and attain free, full, clear understanding. That is the purpose of all this teaching, all this curriculum. You are now at the initial stage of a long journey. You have to equip yourselves better for it. You must know where it leads. Beware of the distractions on the way that might tempt you to alight from the railway train and lose your goal. Be steady in the faith which will smoothen the journey for you. Have confidence in the teachers who will guide you, and in God who decides your destiny and confers strength and sustenance.

Do not disturb your journey and delay it, by resorting to wild upheavals of anger or discontent. Your Dharma (prescribed duty) as students is to study. It is the Dharma of teachers to teach. In that Swadharma (performing one's duty that accords with one's nature) lies security, progress and peace. Every moment spent in these fallow pursuits is a moment lost, or a moment that inflicts even damage. Today's students are the makers of tomorrow. Remember you are the makers, the leaders and the guides of the India of tomorrow. Your shoulders have to be stronger than those of the present generation of leaders, for, as the years roll by, the burden is becoming heavier. Your hearts must become more expansive, your intelligence must become sharper and clearer, for, you have great things to do, for your own selves and for humanity. You must prove to be fine examples of the educational system that India has to adopt for her progress and for the progress of mankind. Therefore, imbibe the ideals of Duty, Devotion and Discipline during the years you spend here. Devotion must be tested in the crucible of Discipline. It must be directed along the lines of Duty. Dharmaraaja, the eldest of the Paandavas, was the very embodiment of Devotion to the Lord Krishna. But, he had on both sides of him, Duty in the form of Arjuna and Discipline in the form of Bheema. So, he was able to defeat his enemies and crown himself Emperor. Do not stuff your heads with the trivialities that fill the columns of periodicals, or absurd details of the personal lives of stars in any field. Don't get excited with external events; or, depressed with events that appear like failures. Keep your head high over the flood waters; do not be carried away like stalks of straw. Every student must cultivate Devotion and Faith. I appreciate the student who is not merely academically efficient, but, is also, full of Bhakthi (devotion) and Prema (selfless love) towards all. The student who secured the First Rank in the University Examination is, I am glad to say, named Premaa-nandha! When the results were announced and it became known that he had secured this unique distinction, the students gathered around him and pressed to give them 'sweets.' I too asked him for sweets! Do you know what his reply was? He held my hands, and said, with a flash of joy in his eyes, "Baba! You are sweetness itself; how can I give you sweets?"

Devotion and faith such as this must be cultivated by every student.

Be as devoted and disciplined as Arjuna. Be as intelligent and strong as Bheema. Be steadfast and sincere, like Dharma-raaja. Then, no harm can come to you; you will achieve victory in all your efforts.

There are four F's that you will have to fix before your attention. (1) Follow the Master, (2) Face the Devil, (3) Fight to the End and (4) Finish at the Goal. Follow the Master means, observe Dharma. Face the Devil means, overcome the temptations that beset you when you try to earn artha (wealth or the wherewithal to live in comfort). Fight to the End means, struggle ceaselessly; wage war against the six enemies that are led by kaama (lust). And, finally, Finish at the Goal means, do not stop until the goal of Moksha (Liberation from ignorance and delusion) is reached. The F's are fundamental for the pursuit of the four Purusharthas---Dharma, Artha, Kaama and Moksha.

I shall be ever with you, wherever you are, guarding you and guiding you. March on; have no fear.

Sathya Sai College, Brindhaavan, 6-7-1975

You must become an Aartha, torn by intense suffering to sense the Lord. Suffer the pangs of distress. You must realise that mere suffering is fruitless, without the knowledge of the path to attain the Lord. That is to say, you have to be transformed into a jiinaasu, a spiritual Seeker.

Analyse the four Purusharthas (four goals of life) and realise that Moksha (Liberation) is the goal, the culmination. Start craving for that, as an Artharthi, the lover of the truest Gain. Seek that which, when secured, all else is secured.

Sri Sathya Sai

15. The company you seek

KAMAL Sahaani, of the Second B.Com. Class of the College spoke now, using fine simple appropriate words, on the human body and the purpose for which it has been given to you. He said that the world is a stage and that the body is a costume that one has to wear in order to act the role that God has allotted to you in the play produced and directed by Him.

This is a correct interpretation. But, when you are allotted a part, your duty is to do it well and earn the appreciation of the Director.

The stage on which you play your role is an infinitesimal dot when compared with the vast unlimited Cosmic Space. The time when you strut about the stage in this costume or any other is also infinitesimal. Deepak of this College acted as Shankaraacharya on the stage at the Shanmukh-aanandha Hall, Bombay. But, his Deepakness was not lost thereby; even while he was Shankaraacharya, he was Deepak. His Shankaraacharya-hood was but a temporary phase.

So too, the Aathma (divine soul) is the eternal truth; the body which it dons is temporary and the role It Induces is also short. Or, to Illustrate this in another way---the time spent In dreams is infinitesimal, when compared with the time spent awake. The 'waking' stage is the representative of the stage of wisdom and illumination, of the Aathma; the dream stage is the representative of the 'Ignorance-wisdom' hazy stage of human life.

God by very nature, attracts man near to Him

The question may legitimately be asked, why or how did this eternal Universal Aathmic principle take up residence in this temporary, particularised Body box? Well. You do not keep diamonds In a diamond casket, do you? If you do, the robber would be doubly benefitted. You keep It in an iron box only. Of course, the iron box or safe will be artistic and charming, for, the container is chosen to suit the value or sanctity of the thing contained. To drink milk or some such beverage, you select a clean attractive tumbler or cup. But, for a spittoon, Inferior metals or mud is felt ample.

The Body is a chalice, wherein you collect the nectar of Divine Grace. That is the prime purpose for which it has been gifted to you. For, without a cup or chalice, a casket or jug, how can the nectar be taken? Raso vai sah, say the Vedhas: "He is sweet-nectar, no less." And When His Grace is showered, the body is thrilled. The body has to be kept ever clean and pure, unaffected by dirt, disease, distress, or defeatism. Nara and Naaraayana (man and God), are like iron and magnet. God by His very nature attracts man near, for in man, there is the Divine. When the magnet fails to attract the Iron piece, the Iron foolishly concludes that the magnet has lost its power! The real fact is the piece of iron is too thickly covered by rust and dust. It does not realise its own defects; it rushes to blame God (the magnet) or even to deny Him!

The company you join must be purer than you

The easiest and the most fruitful method of keeping yourself free from dust and rust, is the Sathsang (holy company). The company of the good and the godly will slowly and surely chasten and cleanse the persons prone to stray away from the straight path towards Self-Realisation. Care has to be taken to see that you select and stick to the proper company. A cup of water has no cash value; but, if it is poured into ten cups of milk, it acquires the value that people attach to milk! If on the other hand, one cup of milk is poured into ten cups of water, it loses the value It had and is condemned as useless. So, the Sathsang you join must be purer, more venerable, and sticking to higher ideals of virtue and truth than you yourselves. When a smoker joins a group of non-smokers, there is every likelihood of his giving up that bad habit; but, when a non-smoker falls into a den of smokers, he is certain to become a victim soon! Such is the subtle influence of the company one keeps. The company you join must be qualitatively and quantitatively greater and higher than the one in which you are now caught.

There are precious gems of wisdom within your hearts, which require excavation, in order to be of any benefit to you. Intelligence is the Instrument you have to use, in order to gain them. At the very start, you will encounter a boulder barring your way---that is the body consciousness, the Ego. Desires are the loose rocks that have also to be dug out and kept aside. Then, you come to a bed of sand---good thoughts, good words, good deeds; when this stratum is reached, you are nearing success. If you keep on in Sathsang, everyday, your hearts will maintain their purity unimpaired; but, if you seek one, only off and on, it will be difficult to win Grace or particles of it, for, the vessel will be tarnished and untidy. In your own households, you must have noticed that a vessel in dally use is bright and clean; but, vessels stored and used only now and then will have to be scrubbed with great vigour to become bright.

You must take all the trouble and welcome all the patience needed, to seek Sathsang and remain therein. For, It is not being born a man that is the sign of the glory; It is living as a man that confers the dignity.

Brindhaavan, 7-7-1975

The secret of perfect health lies in keeping the mind always cheerful---never worried, never hurried, never borne down by any fear, thought or anxiety.

Sri Sathya Sai

16. Full minus full

That is Full; This is Full; When Full is taken from the Full, Full remains---this is the Upanishathic axiom! The Divine is Full; Creation is Full; even when Creation happened and the Cosmos appeared to be produced from the Divine, there was no diminution In the Fullness of the Full. Fullness is the attribute, the nature of the Supreme. It cannot be diminished by the process of creation of the Cosmos. Why is creation also called the Full? Because, it came from the Full.

You go to the bazaar to purchase a kilogramme of jaggery. The keeper of the shop brings from his store a big lump, and he slices off a portion, weighing about a kg; he then weighs It and gives us, in return for the price amount, one kg. of Jaggery. We sample a piece from the big lump and we expect the portion to behave as sweetly as the original lump. We go home and take a little to prepare the sweet drink called paanakam. The paanakam is sweet; the kg of jaggery and the mother lump---all are equally sweet. Fullness is the quality of the Divine; it is found in part or portion or in half or whole. Quantity is not the criterion; quality is In the visible world that has been taken from the substance of the Divine, this quality is found equally full. We shall not consider the world as anything less than God.

God is in the world, in and through everything Of course, there are scholars who proclaim that the world is a hollow zero, that it has no latent or potent strength, being but a dream and a delusion. This is a sign of the blindness of Ignorance.

God is very much in the world, in and through every thing in it, with no exception. In the Geetha the Lord announces, "I am human among living beings, the cow among animals, the lion among beasts, the cobra among snakes, the eagle among birds, Prahlaadha among Raakshasas. No item is discarded as not worthy of God. There is no body that He does not activate, no Form that He does not reside in. He is fragrance, brilliance, sweetness and taste, intelligence, valour, austerity, fame, contentment---an desirable and even undesirable things and qualities. One can acquire unalloyed bliss only by knowing this universal all inclusive glory of the Lord.

There are four stages in securing the Grace of the Lord, by this means: (1)Attaching the mind to God: (2) Loving tile Form of God to which the mind has been attached: (3) Installing that Form in the heart and (4) Dedicating all that one has and does to the Form so installed. You have a great example of one who successfully travelled through these stages and realised the Goal of Life, in the Mahaabhaaratha, namely Ekalavya. Though Dhronachaarya refused to accept him as his pupil, Ekalavya attached himself mentally to him as Guru (preceptor); he Installed him in his heart; and finally, he offered at his feet all the skills and fame that he had won through the grace of Dhronachaarya!

The three grades of intelligence

It has become a routine affair---this observance of the Festival of Guru Poornima. This day, the Guru is adored, and Gods are worshiped, praised and propitiated by song and feasting. But, are these enough, let Me ask. The observance can 'yield fruit, only when the deeper significance of the Day is grasped and meditated upon. Gum is the person who destroys the darkness of Ignorance by his own illumination. Most Gums have only feeble, borrowed light; the removal of darkness has to be complete, with no trace of lurking shadow. Like the Full Moon that happens every year on this Day, the mind of man has to be charmlly fair, cool and full. This gift of Light can come only from God, for, he is self-illuminated; He Is the source of Light for all planets and stars, as well as for all beings.

In Vedhaanthic vocabulary, Chith and A-chith are two terms set against each other, comprehending between themselves, the Created Universe. Chith means 'Intelligent' and A-chith means

'non-Intelligent.' There are no two opposites like this. There are grades, slowly passing from one to the other, from the less intelligent to the fully intelligent. In fact, there are three grades, not two!

The first is: Shuddha thathwa, the second is: Mishra thathwa and the third is: Vaasana thathwa.

(1) The Shuddha thathwa is what Christ referred to as the Kingdom of God. It is far beyond the reach of Mind, it is the realm of pure equanimity. (2) Mishra thathwa is this earthly kingdom, alternating between repose and activity, sloth and adventure, Thamas and Rajas. While the first is spoken of as the Nithya vibhuuthi (the ever-lasting Glory of the Divine), this the second is spoken of as Leela vibhuuthi (the scene of the ever-changing ever-fresh sport of God). (3) This is the region of inactivity, ignorance and inertia, the Thamoguna.

The Vedhaanthic point of view

The Universe is the Field where God sports. Be aware of this fact, every moment of consciousness, and there is nothing more you need for a happy existence. For, you will then contact God in every thing through every thought at every place and at every moment. His Leela is evident in the smallest flower and the most distant star. The joy that you can derive from the contemplation of these proofs of providence is indescribable. Krishna has said in the Geetha that He is ever by the side of the joyous being. Be joyful yourself and make others too share in that

joy. To limit oneself and be happy while self-centred, is bad.

The third stage is called Vaasana thathwa. This is where your narrow selfish will takes charge of you, and enslaves you. Vaasana is the ingrained force of aeons of enslavement to the senses.

You have to overpower its subtle impact and liberate your will from Its hold.

Cultivate the attitude of un-attachment, of indifference, of bypassing the urges, through prayer and systematic practice. This will lead you to Dharma (Righteous behaviour) and Truth; you are then entitled to the Dharma sthambha, or Sathya sthambha (the Pillar of Righteousness or Truth). This is also referred to as the Vedhaantha point of view.

Vedhaantha does not mean, running away from home and the company of men and escaping into the solitude of the jungle.

(Home is certain to haunt you, wherever you may take refuge). It implies recognition of all this

(the idham) as Divinely Poornam (full). and dedication of all thoughts, words and deeds to the Divine. When you have the Vedhaanthic Vision, the place where you are will thereby be Kailaas for you.

When Leela entices God, it takes eight forms

The Sun cannot illumine God; God is the source of the illumination of the Sun. The waves can say they belong to the Sea; but, they cannot claim the Sea belongs to them. The individual can say, "I am Yours" to God; he cannot say, "You are. mine" to God. God is the support; you are the supported. The Nithya-vibhuuthi is the support of the Leela vibhuuthi; the Sea is the base on which waves happen. When Leela entices God, it takes eight forms:

Shuddha Brahmayi (the absolutely Pure), Charaa-charamay (the moving and the non-Moving), Iyothirmayi (the Luminous), Vaangmayi (the Vocal), Nithyaanandamay (the ever-blissfull, Parathpa-ramayi

(transcending this world and the next) maayaamay (enrapturing by its delusive charm) and Shrimayi (resplendent with wealth). The attributeless God assumes the Mind, the Intelli- gence and the Ego, and the magnificent Leela is inaugurated!

The experiences of the waking stage are laid aside when dreams start; dream experiences disappear when sleep supervenes. Being too is lost in becoming. Christ said, "Life is lost in dreams." But, whatever is experienced in any of these three stages, they happen on the basic Truth, that is, God---just as, all the fear and anxiety, the activity to beat and kill the serpent, is based on the rope that was ignorantly mistaken for a snake. Let your Love enfold all things and all beings So, man must endeavour to escape from this delusion and reach the state of fully Illumined wisdom. The best spiritual discipline that can help him to do so is Love. Foster the tiny seed of Love that clings to 'me' and 'mine,' let it sprout into Love for the group around you, and grow into Love for all mankind, and spread out its branches over animals, birds and those that creep and crawl, and let the Love enfold all things and beings in all the worlds. Proceed from less Love to more Love, narrow Love to expanded Love. The statement, "From untruth to Truth" is not correct. The progress is always from the lesser Truth to Truth which is God.

This is a story about the Gods. It deals with the greed of men. It was a fine day in Heaven;

Sriman Naaraayana and His Consort Lakshmi were talking away the hours, when Naaradha, the wandering minstrel, entered and attracted their attention. Naaraayana asked Naaradha whether the denizens of the Earth were happy. Naaradha replied that since they worshipped Him and won His Grace, men everywhere were quite happy and prosperous. At this, Lakshmi (who was the Goddess of Wealth) was afflicted with Jealousy and anger for, Her share in conferring happiness on man was not acknowledged. She challenged Naaradha to prove that Naaraayana was more adored than Herself down on earth. Goddess Lakshmi accepts a challenge Naaraayana accepted the challenge. Donning ochre robes, He transformed Himself into a monk and went down amongst the villages and towns, preaching the Path. Thousands flocked at these meetings and listened to the enchanting oratory. They followed Him from place to place and adored Him with effusive enthusiasm. He was being carried along on a huge wave of devotion and adulation. Lakshmi saw this and could not contain herself: She was overwhelmed by envy. So, she too donned the Sanyaasi (ascetic person)robe and came down to the very region which Naaraayana had conquered for Himself. The people were drawn towards Her by the effulgence of Her presence, many came away from the meetings addressed by Naaraayana to bask in Her Presence.

A few invited Her to their homes for dinner. She agreed but, declared that it was a vow she had Undertaken, not to eat out of plates other than her own. She said, she would bring Her own plate, cup, drinking vessel etc. The host was only too glad to comply with Her request, for, that helped him to overcome one bother among many!

Lakshmi took with Her when She went to the houses of Her hosts, a plate of gold, a cup and a water-vessel, all three of gold! The host admired and adored Her the more for this display of pomp and wealth. But, he was astounded and delighted, when, after dinner, Lakshmi said that she was leaving the plate etc., at the host's home, since that too was part of her vow!

When the news spread that it was highly profitable to Invite Lakshmi to Dinner and to adore Her, there was a huge clamour for Her Grace and millions deserted Naaraayana's Discourses and hovered around the Giver of Gold. People prayed to Naaraayana to go back to whence He came, for, they had no time to receive' Him or listen to Him. Lakshmi was monopolising their attention!

So, Lakshmi came back to Heaven, to meet Naaraayana who was already there. She asked Naaradha, "Who is being worshiped more, Naaraayana or Lakshmi?"

Righteous activity is prompted by Truth Naaradha replied with another question: "Whom are You worshipping, please?" Lakshmi answered, "Why? I worship Naaraayana." Then, said Naaradha, "Know that it is Naaraayana's Grace that is helping you to bestow those gifts of gold, which make men worship you."

Lakshmi's pride was humbled; but, man's foolishness continues. He worships Vasudheva (mere earthy riches), not Vaasudeva (indwelling divinity), Lakshmi, not Naaraayana!

Righteous activity is prompted by Truth. Truth is the basic teaching of all Faiths. Also, Morality and Love. These three have come to establish. This day is Guru Poornima. The morning I laid the Foundation for the Pillar of Truth, which supports and sustains the twin virtues of Love and Morality. In the Vedhic Rite of sanctifying the spot where the Pillar will be erected, you must have noticed that nine different grains that grow on the earth and nine precious gems that are got from under the earth were used. These represent the Nine forms of Bhakthi (devotion), the Nine stages in man's journey to God, the Navavidha-bhakthi. Of these, the most vital is Seva (selfless service) to fellow-beings. I exhort you to dedicate yourselves fully to this task and live in the full cognisance of this primary duty to your own self-service.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-7-1975

It is always preferable to approach God for the fulfilment of wants, rather than cringe before men, who themselves are but tools in the hands of God. In His own silent way, God will transform, the mind and turn it towards saadhana and successful spiritual pilgrimage.

He cannot allow his children to lose their way and suffer in the jungle. When you approach God and seek his help and guidance, you have taken the first step to save yourself. You are then led to accept His Will as your own. Thus, you achieve shaanthi (Absolute Peace).

Sri Sathya Sai

17. My wish, My vow

THIS day is a meeting between the past and the present, as all days are; for, we, In this College, are wishing well for those who have passed out and welcoming those who have just joined the classes. All moments are moments of crisis, when crucial decisions are urgently needed. Life is a struggle between the forces of good and evil, of joy and grief, of success and failure.

The doubt may arise whether, in the face of this perpetual fight, man can ever escape from the bonds of duality. Is it after all a vain hope, or a tantalising prospect or is it the sport of God? It is really the inescapable destiny of man, and it is to prepare you for this destiny that this College has been established.

The student who spoke a few minutes ago said that the perusal of a load of books cannot be education. Yes; it has to tend the body, mind and spirit, in addition to the intelligence. It cannot be confined to the four walls of a building. The Universe is a University for those who care to watch and learn. Awareness is life; so, the farmer, the carpenter, the smith, the sculptor, the merchant, all have the need to be aware of their duties and responsibilities, their skills and standards, which education must foster and fix.

Spiritual education is part of all types of education

Education is no book-worm affair; the process must include the study and appreciation of all trades, professions and guilds. It must encourage the acceptance of the good and the rejection of the bad. Spiritual education is not a distinct and separate discipline; it is part and parcel of all types and levels of education, In fact, it is the very foundation on which a lasting edifice can be built. Secular and spiritual education are like the two halves in the seeds of pulses; the germ that sprouts is in between; It is fed by both.

The feminine is the foundation on which a peaceful and happy world is to be raised. When women are true and brave, kind and compassionate, virtuous and pious, the world can have an era of peace and joy. Youth has the capacity to grow into strong straight Saadhakas (spiritual aspirants), who can scale the heights of spiritual adventure; but, it has no proper guidance. On the other hand, youth has evil temptation; evil example and evil advice are spread around on all sides, most attractively.

There are two evil sirens that entice them into futility and frivolity, diverting them along the paths of ruin. One of them is called, Dame Cinema and the other is named, Dame Novel. The film contaminates and corrupts; it pollutes young and innocent minds; it teaches crime, violence and greed; it destroys the basic human-ness and degrades it into bestiality. Even ochre-robed monks are steadily dragged down to sin by Its Insidious influence.

To-day's education has no life-line

Dame Novel too corrupts equally, with salacious pictures of bestiality. They both lead the young away into the wilderness of vice. They do not know, nor do they care to know, how to shape the young into self-reliant, self-confident, self-knowing citizens. The vital need is ignored.

There was a student once who held out his palm before a palmist for scrutiny. He examined the lines with care and announced that he would advance very much In education. The student was very happy. He predicted that he would amass large sum of money; the student's Joy knew no bounds. He declared that the lines indicated fame along with fortune. This filled the cup of Joy to the brim; it could hold no more. Then, the palmist announced that the 'life-line' was short and it ended abruptly, quite quick! The student fell in a faint.

Education too has no life-line, now; it does not ensure the skills and attitudes essential to live a life of peace and contentment. It is not 'full,' nor does it function in a comprehensive manner, taking all the needs and goals into Its orbit. It is satisfied now with cramming books, reproducing from memory, research into trivialities and awarding degrees which mean nothing special: And, its products parade their purposelessness, shouting that God Is dead and that virtue is a superstition. How can man exist without God, or God apart from man? There can be no garland without the string that runs through the flowers; there can be no men without the Inner kinship that God ensures for each. He is the Brahmasuuthra---the Brahman String, invisible, but inevitable.

 Millions of rupees have been spent on this College, not with a desire to add one more to the hundreds of colleges scattered all over the country, but, to train a generation of women who know how to live the ideals treasured in Bhaaratheeya Culture and who will uphold the dignity and destiny of womanhood.
 Expansion is the keynote of education The reason which prompted the establishment of this college is the need for women who as mothers will foster the expansion of love to include fellow beings everywhere. The first step for this expansion is the home, where you must revere and please the parents who gave you this chance to live and learn. If you ill-treat them or inflict grief on their minds, how can you ever gladden others by service and understanding? Expansion is the keynote of education. You know that when a balloon is blown, it bursts and the air Inside it merges with the vast limitless expanse outside. Your love too must fill your home and your society, and finally, burst even those bonds and become world-wide. A drop of water held in the palm is soon evaporated; it is too much alone. But, drop it Into the sea; it survives as a part of the sea. It assumes the name and the taste, the majesty and might of the sea!
 Cultivate Love; sow the seeds of love in all hearts. Shower Love on the desert sands, let the green shoots, the lovely flowers, the luscious fruits, the sweet harvest of nectar be earned by mankind. That is My Wish, My Mission, My Vow. When you earn a degree and go out of' this College, do not ask, "What is the country giving me?" ask rather, "Now, what can I give to my country?"
 "Reverence offered at the feet of parents reaches Me" Students, when they find distress or despair anywhere, do not now set about to reduce it. They pour oil on the flames and relish the damage they cause! My aim in starting and running this College is to train here the Ideal mother, the Ideal sister and the ideal wife, the Ideal woman, in fact. The curriculum which is followed in order to prepare you for the University Examination is just a bait to draw you Into this higher curriculum of character formation and development of Universal Love. The acquisition of a few bits of information without the transformation that is necessary is, for you, a matter of pride, though there is very little Justification for the same.

 The earth is but a speck in the vast Cosmos; India is a minute portion of that dot; Ananthapur is microscopic particle therein and you are one of the many lakhs of human beings living here.
 What reason have you to thrust your pride on the attention of others and feel superior?
 Women students and teachers have to be ever vigilant that they do not attract the eyes and tongues of young men by their dress, movements, laughter or behaviour. Be a little behind the times, it does not matter; it is better than adopting fashions that outrage the traditions and conventions of this country and Its culture.
 Do not bring dishonour to your parents or disappoint them by acting contrary to their dearest plans. The reverence that you offer at the feet of your parents is, let Me assure you, reverence that reaches Me. There are some special lessons and items laid down in this College to instil into you faith and spiritual discipline. Teachers and students much show special interest in them, for they are the unique features of this College, designed for your good and the good of the country.
 Teachers too must be examples of sincerity, simplicity and mutual co-operation and love; they too must evince interest in prayers, and other Items of spiritual importance.

Ananthapur, Sathya Sai College for Women, 25-7-1975

Attachment, affection, interest---these will create prejudice, partiality, illusion, they hide the Truth; they dull the intelligence.

Raaga is roga (attachment is a disease), so far as the enquirer is concerned. One does not become a Yogi to have Raaga (affection); he must be free from favourites, fancies and fondness. Once you attach yourself to some person or habit or mannerism, it will be difficult for you to shake them off.

Sri Sathya Sai

18. No bumps, no jumps

IT seems a person once saw a man struggling for life in the deep waters of a lake. The fellow could not swim and was really helplessly floundering. But without the least compunction of sympathy and without making the least effort to save him, the onlooker had the audacity to ask him, "Tell me, how deep is the lake?" Such is the behaviour of most people now-a-days. These persons are sunk In thamas---they are too wooden and dull, too hard and impervious. It is only when man gets rid of thamas {sloth and inaction} that he can rise Into rajas---the sphere of activity, emotion, devotion, compassion and service. When he rises higher into the saathwik stage (poised state of contemplation), the activity gets elevated into saadhana (spiritual discipline) and the effect is more spiritual.

I find here thousands of young men and women, members of the Seva Dhal, gathered from all the states of India. This is the third All India Conference of the Sri Sathya Sai Seva Dhal. It is time that we decide to assess what has been the achievement so far, whether the basic purpose for which the Dhal was planned is being realised. We have had reports from various State Conveners of Seva Dhal of many types of work that is being carried out by the units of the Dhal.

Let Me tell you that mere execution of some duties enjoined on the Dhal by the rules cannot be recognised as bhakti (devotion or dedication). Duty done without love is deplorable; duty done with love is desirable. But acts of love that emanate from a person because it is his nature and not because it is enjoined on him as a duty he has to fulfill, is really Divine.

"Your seva brings you nearer to Me"

Let Me impress on you another point. Every convener repeated the report of every other; there was more imitation than originality in ideas and programmes. Doing something because it is being done elsewhere is a sign of ignorance. The programmes must satisfy a local need, solve a local difficulty. They must arise out of felt needs and should be adapted to local conditions. It must be taken into consideration whether the place concerned is urban or rural, industrial or agricultural, a pilgrim centre or civic extension, a developing area or a sinking economy, a tribal settlement or a hill station.

The person who borrows some idea from another region and executes it might feel satisfied that he has achieved some concrete programme. But do the people whom he tried to benefit feel better and happier? That is the test. Do not think of the fame or praise you win; think of the good that people derive. Do not crave for publicity; crave for the joy that shines In the faces of the people whom you help. Seva (selfless service) brings you nearer to Me. The flower that is your heart gets fragrance by means of the seva you do, and so it becomes more acceptable to Me.

Love is the essence of that fragrance.

In seva there can be no high or low

Through seva you realise that all beings are waves of the Ocean of Divinity. No other saadhana can bring you into the incessant contemplation of the One-ness of all living beings. You feel another's pain as your own; you share another's success as your own.

To see every one else as yourself and yourself in every one, that is the core of the saadhana of seva. Again, seva makes the ego languish for want of food. It makes you humble before the suffering of others, and when you rush to render help, you do not calculate how high or low his social or economic status is.

The hardest heart is slowly softened into the softness of butter by the opportunities that the Seva Dhal offers.

Seva is prescribed as one among the nine steps towards Realisation. You must therefore be earnest about it and welcome all chances to serve the old, the sick, the disabled, the diseased and the distressed. Holding a fruit in the hand is just a preliminary step; eating and digesting must follow, so that you may be healthy and happy. So, too, wearing a scarf and badge round the neck is but an indication of the joy that is within reach when you actually serve. Your Seva will be Judged with reference to the mental attitude accompanying it. So, whatever work Is allotted, do it with fervour, understanding and reverence. In seva there can be no high or low, for Sai is in all.

Sai receives your seva, to whomsoever you may offer It. Do not be sad that you have been posted on some duty that keeps you far from Me. Know that I am nearest to him who calls on Me and sees Me in all beings.

Love is the solvent for the hardest of hearts

The world today is torn Into factions and groups that hate and hack each other. No method is considered too cruel If the aim is to destroy one's enemy. No one is aware of the innate Unity, the ever-present current of Divinity that animates every single living being on earth. You have the role now of demonstrating that all is not lost, that there are still people who believe in Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Love, that acts of loving service rendered in a spirit of humility and reverence are still making people happy, and that the day when the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God will shine bright and beautiful is drawing and dawning near.

All efforts are now being concentrated on the production of more food, the building of more houses and the manufacture of more cloth. But what is most needed today is a total effort to make man manifest more tolerance, more humility, more brotherliness, more compassion and deeper awareness of the springs of joy and peace that lie within the heart of each one. This country, Bhaarith, must be in the fore-front of this spiritual adventure.

Love is the solvent for the hardest of hearts. Without love, free, full and selfless, no spiritual saadhana can succeed. Without it, bhajan (group singing of devotional songs on Lord's Names and Glory) is waste of breath, sathsang (holy company) a waste of time and meditation a selfdeception.

Bhajan, sathsang and meditation done with a mind soaked in love, can confer peace, joy and wisdom. When the rain drop falls into the sea, It gets the name, form and nature of the sea. So, too, when the individual merges in the vast concourse of humanity and feels one with all, he is endowed with the name, form and nature of Divinity.

Whatever you do as service, to whomsoever you offer the act, believe that it reaches the God in that person: Ishwarassarva bhoothaanaam. So it is Ishwaraar-panam (dedicated to God).

Destiny of nations hangs on the youth

You have joined the Seva Dhal at the most important period of your lives, for youth is a stage of life when self-control, self-examination and self-effort are most needed and least exercised. What a mighty potential for progress is wasted by the empty vagaries of the youth today. If only the courage, the optimism, the strength and the imagination of youth is channelised into constructive channels, how soon the human community can attain peace and prosperity.

The youth are drawn easily into wild adventures, acts of bravado and exhibition of group fanaticism. They are given to sudden changes of passion or emotion. All over the world they are being swayed on the waves of anger and adventure. The destiny of nations hangs on the direction the youth will take in these turbulent times. They should not be led into the paths of hypocrisy, deceit or greed. They must act the way they speak and speak the way they think. They should think good thoughts, speak good words and do good deeds. That will give inner Joy and contentment. That will make them worthy sons and daughters of this ancient land.

Be eager and alert to render service

Within the next few days you, members of the Seva Dhal and of the Volunteer Force gathered here from all the states of India and even from beyond the seas, have a number of service assignments facing you. You have to shoulder heavy responsibilities and execute various duties in the spirit of saadhana, which enjoins you to revere duty as God and to engage in work not as dreary drudgery, but as worship of the Lord Himself. You have dedicated yourselves to seva, which has to be saturated in selfless love.

The service that you render must reward you, not only with your satisfaction, but with the satisfaction and relief of those whom you serve. When those whom you serve are not relieved or made happy thereby, of what avail is your elation or exultation at the help you have been allowed to offer? You should have the joy of the recipient as your objective. Do not sit back and talk of your having done what is expected of you, but try to discover whether your act of service has really been worth-while, whether it has been intelligently rendered with full appreciation of the peculiar circumstances of the individual who needed it. Do not feel that this is an obligation imposed on you by the rules of the Organisation or by the person nominated as your leader. Do not feel that the scarf and badge that you wear are impediments to freedom. They are reminders of the high mission to which you have been initiated, the keys to your Realisation of reality through the saadhana of seva. Even when you do not wear the scarf or parade the badge, you must be eager and alert to render seva to fellow-beings who need it.

Soft speech adds sweetness to living

Man is endowed with the equipment of senses, reason, feelings, passions and detachment, so that he may keep away from the enticement of pleasures and spend his life in helping, serving, sustaining and saving his fellow men. He has to live in seva, not bhoga (enjoyment). The badge on the chest helps to keep off the ego thumping inside, to broaden the heart and to focus all attention on the Lord resident therein. It is like the wheeled stand which helps the child to walk.

It has to be revered until you transcend it and feel that all mankind is your kin. The badge should not be impurified by your indulging in deleterious habits such as impulsive anger, selfishness, flippant conversation, smoking, drinking, gambling or loitering in un-sanctified places.

Do not wag or argue Just for the sake of argument. Let your words be few, fair and felicitous.

Soft speech adds sweetness to living. Even when you are engaged in discussion amongst yourselves, be short of speech and polite in behaviour. Some amongst you have been selected as leaders and guides; carry out their Instructions without demur or dimunition. If you feel any doubt, regarding the propriety or advisability of those Instructions, talk them over with the leaders alone, in a spirit of friendliness. But do not disregard to modify those Instructions at any cost. The leader has to pay attention to the overall situation which may not be so clear to you.

People from more than 45 countries from all parts of the globe are coming for the World Conference. So any failing or fault in your faith or in the fulfilment of the duties assigned to you, will reflect on this great nation.

Service is the best school for training in leadership

Bhaarith is the land where the triple saadhana of Discipline, Devotion and Duty was first laid down, and where it has had the largest number of votaries through the ages. So you have to demonstrate to the visitors that the lesson is still very much honoured and observed in this land.

Not only this, you have to maintain the fair name of the Sri Sathya Sai Seva Organisation. On the one hand you have the call of the motherland and on the other, the command of Sai, who is no less than the Mother Herself.

Ganesha is reputed to have two Mothers---Gowri and Ganga. Gowri is one daughter of the Himaalayas, who is merged in the left half of the body of Shiva.

Ganga is another daughter of the Himaalayas who has her place in the matted hair which forms the crown of Shiva. You, too, have two Mothers--- Bhaarith Maatha and Sai Maatha. You must emulate Ganesha not in the quantity of food eaten, but in His aspect as Vinaayaka, for to become a Vinaayaka, a special type of leader, you have to be for long an earnest and enthusiastic servant engaged in selfless, loving service. Service is the best school for training in leadership. You should eliminate in that school all traces of disgust, anger and impatience. Pride and personal prejudices will try to put spokes in the wheel as you go to serve the distressed and the diseased. But you should never give up faith

In the right path you have chosen. Remind yourself that you are a saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) and that seva is the spiritual path that you have ventured upon as the easiest and the best.

When you mix with volunteers and others who have no deep faith or sweet experience of the value of seva, you may get caught up in conversation that might shake your conviction. Do not allow their superficial Judgement to undermine your steadfastness. Keep away from such persons; let them test their doubts on the touchstone of their own experiences of seva. Take their disbelief indifferently, and allow them time to realise and overcome their doubts by their own will.

Be inspired as humans, not fitful as beasts

Discipline entails the strict observance of rules and regulations and directions. The sense of duty can yield results only when discipline is observed, and devotion to Sai and the Message of Sai is the basis for the sense of duty which keeps you ever bound to discipline. Do not be part-time devotees, leading one kind of life when you wear the scarf and badge and another kind of life when you have removed them. Be ever saadhakas and sevakas (servitors). Do not forget, do not modify. In the path of service that you have chosen, there should be no bumps of doubt or jumps of deviation. Move on steadily and bravely, with your eyes fixed on the Goal, the Grace of the Lord. Be Intent on the development of the man-mind. Not the monkey-mind. Do not hop about from decision to Indecision, from acceptance to denial. Be alert and inspired as humans, not dull and fitful as beasts. Above all, cultivate love, express love, move among other Seva Dhal members with love. Let love be your very breath. Let the sum of love help the lotus of your heart to blossom. May you be victorious in all your undertakings of service. That is My blessing for each one of you.

Poornachandra Auditorium, 14-11-1975

Bhaktha (devotee) is like the needle which is always drawn towards the magnet. But the needle has to be near enough; it has also to be clean enough. You stay far away and complain that Grace has not come. You do not scrape off, by the process of repentance, the mud and rust that prevent attachment.

You come near for some time and stray away into the distance. I don't mean physical distance at all. You may be physically far, but mentally by My side. I do not measure distance in miles or metres; I am with you, in you, beside you, ever; only you have to be aware of Me and make use of My Presence.

Sri Sathya Sai

19. The message of love

A PERSON who has mastered Vedhas (ancient spiritual revelations) and Vedhaantha (metaphysics of the Supreme Reality) might be honoured as a Pandith (learned scholar). Another might be praised for his brilliant writings in both prose and verse. But if such scholars have neither purity of consciousness nor elevating Ideals, their capacities will result in more harm than good. They will promote neither happiness of the people nor peace in society. They will pass through life without the awareness of Its sanctity or sublimity. The Lord blessed the boy Dhruva, appreciating his Innocence and his steadfast faith in Him. The Lord saved Prahladha from direct disasters planned by his own father, for the boy had surrendered to Him and placed unshakeable trust in His Mercy. The Lord showered Grace on Kuchela who suffered from agonising poverty because he never once faltered in his devotion to Him. The Lord is the refuge of all who seek refuge, the saviour of all who have to be saved. He is the Embodiment of Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being- Awareness-Bliss Absolute). He is now at Puttaparthi as the Effulgent Emperor over the region of Truth, Goodness and Beauty. Today man's behaviour is really artificial. Life sustained by food is short; life sustained by the Aathman (Divine Spirit) is eternal. Do not lay claim to long life, but to Divine life. Do not pine for more years on earth, but for more virtues in the heart. The Buddha knew and made known to the world the truths: Everything is grief. Everything is empty. Everything is brief. Everything is polluted. So the wise man has to do the duties cast upon him with discrimination, diligence and detachment. Play the role, but keep your identity unaffected. Have your head in the forest ashram (retreat), unaffected by the aimlessly rushing world. But it is your duty, a duty you cannot escape, to fully engage yourself in your work, unconcerned with loss or gain, failure or success, slander or praise. The Geetha instils this very lesson In you: "Whoever does upaasana with no thought other than Me, him I shall have with Me; I shall bear his burden now and forever." The Geetha says, "Keeping Me ever in memory, engage yourself in the battle of Life." This 'Me' to which Krishna refers is not something outside you or extraneous to you. It is your own Divine Reality which you can cognise in the silence of your own dhyaana (meditation),

when you shut out of your awareness the distraction of the senses, the mind and the ego. You can take refuge in the calm coolness of your heart where He has installed Himself as the Charioteer. You must only engage yourself in work that is purifying, with an attitude that sanctifies. Most people do not know how to set about on this most rewarding adventure. They waste their lives in sorrow, wading through disappointment and despair, for they cling to something as theirs and treat something else as belonging to others. They grab and grieve, and labour to acquire and lose. Desire multiplies desire, and man sinks deeper Into discontent and distress. The behaviour is really artificial; It does not conform to man's real nature, the prompting of his Aathman, which is Divine. In the universal, eternal sea of change, the Aathman alone is above change. All differences are apparent, not real. In creation, in the objective world, no one article is like any other. No two human beings are similar in every respect; there is some twist or turn which distinguishes one from the rest. Each has his own peculiar experiences. Immense diversity prevails. Nor is an individual the same for any length of time. The infant changes into a child, then into a boy, an adolescent, an adult, and soon becomes middle-aged, old, decrepit and, finally, senile. In one single day the Individual Is changed into a wakeful person, a dreamer and a sleeping log! So man must seek refuge in the changeless, the Paramaathman (Supreme Reality), from which all variety emerges, and into which it merges. Then only can be secure peace and contentment. The past is past; do not lose time looking back on the road you have traversed. Look forward, deciding to march on with confidence and courage. Take the first step NOW. Tomorrow may be too late. Repeat to yourself the truth that the world is as much God as heaven is. There are no two distinct entities or categories called material and spiritual. All distinctions are apparent, not real. Sai has drawn the old and the young to Himself and every one of them has Sai in his heart. The scriptures of different creeds---the Bible, the Quoran, the Upanishaths (philosophy of the vedhas, the Zendavestha---appear different, but their aim is the same: to establish the Brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God as the basis for the peace of mankind. No creed need put on airs of superiority as each is shaped by the compulsions of time and space, of language and levels of experience. You are all members of the Sai Family, bound by the religion of Love. Though ostensibly you profess to belong to different faiths, faith in Sai has removed the barriers in your minds. Love is God. Live in Love. Love must express itself as service. Your Aathman, which you mistake to be your body, your senses, your mind, your intellect, etc., can have no sorrow or Joy. It has no death, no birth. It is eternal and unchanging. What you judge as joy or sorrow is only like a passing cloud which cannot affect the splendour of the Sun or Moon. Know that such emotions follow one another when the wheel of life turns round from moment to moment. The sea has water that cannot quench thirst, but it has also pearl and coral. You have to get toughened by the hammer strokes of Joy and sorrow until you are unaffected by the vicissitudes of fortune. This year you have named My birthday the 'Golden Jubilee' of the Avathaar (divine Incarnation), and gathered in vast numbers from all parts of the world. I am sure you have benefitted by the Sathsang (holy company). I do not accost one particular date in the calendar as My birthday, for I consider the day when Divinity blossoms in your heart as My birthday in you. Therefore each of you should individually celebrate such a day as My birthday. The day when you resolve to practise My advice, to follow My directives, to translate My message into acts of service, and to engage in saadhana---that day is My birthday for you. The 23rd day of November which you now honour as the day on which I was born, is only like any other day if you celebrate it in a routine, ritual fashion. Adore man; the adoration reaches Me. Neglect man; you neglect Me. Of what avail is it to worship the Lord and to suppress man, His counterpart? Love for God must be manifested as Love for man, and Love must express itself as service. Through Love alone---Love acquired through saadhana, and shared with all as saadhana---can peace be attained, by the individual as well as by the nation. My Life is My Message and My Message is Love. That explains why you have gathered hither in hundreds of thousands. Prashanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1975

20. Why organise?

THE task before mankind is to plant the seeds of Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Love in the heart made ready for their reception, to foster the saplings and watch over them with love and care until they grow into trees yielding a rich harvest of sweet fruits, and to enable all to share in that sustaining repast. Sages who had succeeded in this beneficial culture have laid down the means and methods, the steps and slips, the helps and hindrances, that men have to consider while engaged in this task, and millions have benefited by their counsel. But never before has this become an organised movement in which the entire humanity was involved. Unless it becomes so, there can be no liberation from fear, anxiety and injustice. The sages of India knew that man was fundamentally Divine. They sought to make man aware of his inner Reality and expand that spark of Divinity into Light that can illumine the individual and society in the splendour of love. Renunciation alone leads to Immortality. As a first step they advised the discarding of violence which has egotism and greed as its roots. The Vedhas (ancient sacred scriptures), the Shaasthras (spiritual sciences), the Epics and the Puraanas (mythological legends) that they collated or composed, carry this message. Man is afflicted by misery since he is caught in the coils of never-ending desire and all consuming greed, Casting off these trammels, man has to march on towards the goal of realising God which is his Innermost Truth. The swimmer has to push the water behind him so that he might proceed forward. So, too, while attempting to march forward, man has to push back from him the evil thoughts, habits, deeds and Impulses that crowd into him. The Sathya Sai Seva Organisation has to teach this lesson, not by precepts elaborately described in elegant language, but by example that spreads conviction, Instils faith and assures success. Members of this Organisation must be examples also of the joy that can be derived from 'giving up' rather than from 'accumulating.' The Upanishaths proclaim that "Renunciation alone leads to Immortality". Thyaganaika Amrithathwam anasuh. In spite of this man looks for ease, yet reeks with 'dis-ease.' He pursues bhoga (enjoyment) and is rewarded with roga (disease). Saint Thyagaraaja the great mystic singer, had realised that Sannidhi (Treasure house of the Divine) is far more preferable to nidhi (treasures of men). The most desirable treasure is Truth-Righteousness-Peace-Love.

Truth about oneself is to be learnt first. When man does not know his own Truth, how can he judge others or deal with others? When man knows that he is the Indestructible, Eternal Aathman, he is free from fear. Truth can shine forth only from a purified mind and a clarified intellect. The units of the Sathya Sai Seva Organisations must be ever active in following and observing the disciplines laid down for these two processes. Man has to overcome the animal in him. The pashu (beast) has to be laid low and the Pashu Pathi (Master of living beings, God) installed in the heart. This aim has to be constantly borne, in mind by the organisation and its members; the journey towards it has to be steady and fervent. Sai devotees must free themselves of all prejudices. Patience, tolerance, fortitude, equanimity, fraternity---these, will prove invaluable equipment for the pilgrim. Do not distinguish between one fellow-pilgrim and another on the basis of caste, creed or colour, and do not divide them into friends or foes. Recognise only the common traits, the uniting efforts, the basic Divinity. Rich and poor, scholar and illiterate---these are distinctions that do not hold good for long, for they are but outer frills. A flower radiates fragrance and charm, whether held in the right hand or the left. It does not limit that gift to some and deny it to others. Everyone who comes near, is blessed. The members of the units of this organisation must be ever engaged in the twin processes of purifying the mind and clarifying the intellect. They have to free themselves from all prejudices and misunderstandings. They have to speak softly and sweetly, and give every one the respect and attention due to them sincerely. Humility and tolerance must characterise the behaviour of a Sai devotee. When the wind agitates the serene waters of a lake, wavelets dance all over its face, and a thousand Suns sparkle. When calm descends, and the waters are still, the shadow of the Sun within the lake is one full image. Seva should not be tarnished by pride. When one fixes one's entire attention on the sun instead of on the images and the water that caused them, there is only the one sun that is real. The sparkling little images in the agitated lake represent the symbol of dhwaitha (duality); the complete image in the depths of the serene lake is the symbol of visishtaadhwaitha (qualified dualism); the one Sun which is reflected as one or many is the Adhwaithic (non-dualistic) Truth. This fact is clearly, revealed in the three, statements made one after the other by Jesus: "I am the Messenger of God," "I am the Son of God," and "I and my Father are One." The three statements are revelations of the dhwaithic, visishtaadhwaithic and adhwaithic points of view. The Organisation must help people to realise the Unity behind all this apparent multiplicity which is only a super-imposition by the human mind on the One that is all this. The Vedhas proclaim that God is One, that the Goal is the same and that Truth stands Self-revealed when the Goal is the same and that Truth stands Self-revealed when the veil of the world is cast away or torn off. One simple way to realise this Unity is through seva (selfless service), seva that is not tarnished by a superiority complex, or by pride or even by a sense of duty towards the organisation with which you are bound. Revere the dweller within, not the house where He resides. The dweller is the same in every house, whether it is a palace or a hovel. Therefore devotion to the dweller must persuade you to worship every individual through acts of service intelligently executed with sincere enthusiasm. Regulation is the very essence of creation. Do not fret against the rules and regulations which the Organisation imposes on you; they are laid down for your own good. Regulation is the very essence of creation. The oceans observe their limits. Wind and fire respect their limits and bounds. The human body has to maintain its warmth at 98.4 F in order to be healthy and the heart has to beat a definite number of times a minute. How, then, can this Organisation escape the prescription of certain rules and regulations? Devotion has to be guided and controlled by discipline and duty. What exactly is duty in this context? By duty I do not mean the items of work entrusted to you by your superiors or society. Duty means the responsibility you have not to hinder or harm any one by your movements, speech, behaviour, or activities. When one walks on the street waving one's stick, one has to be conscious of the man coming from behind; if you have the freedom to wave, he, too, has the same freedom, and both should behave as if they have a duty towards each other. The units of this Organisation, too, have to respect other units, and help them in doing their duty. Rules are necessary until the members realise the spiritual Unity of all. When they become Incapable of inflicting harm or transgressing the moral code, rules become superfluous. Protect the plant from goats for a few years; then when the tree spreads its branches far and wide, those very goats can lie down under its shade and rest.

 All Sai Units are parts of one Sai Organisation We have five principal units in the Organisation, and in every village or town where we have these, there should be exemplary unity and cooperation between them. They are like the five fingers of a hand. The little finger is the Bhajan Mandali, the group devoted to singing the Glory of God. But they should not be proud that they are the pioneers and primary workers. The ring finger is the Baala Vikaas (Children's educational wing). On the precious gold plate of juvenile hearts, the Guru (preceptor) affixes the gems of goodness and Godliness. That is the ring which this finger wears. But that should neither make the Baala Vikaas proud nor make the Guru feel that the work done by it is the most important and so it has to be honoured most. The sense of unity and co-operation must prevail.
 The middle finger is the Seva Dhal (Service Corps), helping the two units on one side and the two on the other. But it should not hold its head high and claim to be superior to all the rest. The index finger is the Mahila Vibhaag (Women's division), the unit which is composed of women who point to the good, the great, the useful, the right, etc. They, too, should not be filled with overweening conceit. The thumb, naturally, is the Seva Samithi (Sai Organisation), the over-all executive, the guide and guardian, the promoter and provider. Thus each finger must feel that strength lies in working with the rest, that all are but parts of one hand which they cannot ignore.
 In a world torn by factions based on the flimsy grounds of caste, creed and colour, you have to prove that it is possible to have faith in Sai being the motivator for every living being, and get Inspiration for genuine service from that faith. Service to the Sai in the other person must be your daily act of worship. Of all saadhanas, this is the most effective. Seek out the slum dwellers, the poor, neglected dwellers in hamlets, and take love and light to them in plenty. "God is the refuge of those who have no place to rest," says a proverb. Go to places where you can find such, and carry the message of hope and strength into their hearts. Be grateful to them when they welcome you and provide you chances to serve them. Your happiness depends on their happiness; your health depends on their health. You keep your houses clean; their houses, too, are yours, for the same Sai that resides In you resides In them. Until all houses and their surroundings are bright and clean, how can you feel clean and bright?

 The Organisation must promote this high sense of unity and responsibility. It must constantly enthuse and educate members to engage themselves In the saadhana of service.
Hyderabad, 29-3-1976
 21. Expand the heart WITHOUT Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Love) the accumulation of scholarship is a barren achievement. Without them, all charities and services rendered to others are ineffective. Without them, positions of authority to which one is raised, become positions of persecution. Without them, no good act or meritorious achievement can yield fruit. There are four chief types of people. Those who see only good In everything and everyone; those who see the good as good and the evil as evil; those who see the good as evil and the evil as good; and, lastly, those who do not see the good at all, because even the good they see they transmute into evil. Of these one can tolerate the first three, perhaps, but the fourth type is definitely demoniac.
 Education is now caught up In confusion; instead of leading the country on along prosperity and fraternity, it struggles to take it along alien and degrading paths. It does not build on the strong, sustaining foundations of Indian culture, but is still based on the plans of Macaulay. Among most of the products of modern education we do not find even traces of moral virtue, honesty, integrity, eagerness to serve and readiness to renounce.
 One who lives for the sake of eating is a sinner The education that was practised in ancient India was far superior and far more fruitful, for it equipped the student with a healthy spirit of self-reliance. It endowed him with mental peace and equipose. It never allowed him to be enslaved by the glittering fancies and fascinations of other cultures. It taught him to discriminate between the flippant and the stable, the upgrading and the down pulling. It enthused the student to offer his life at the feet of his Motherland with a glow on his face and a sparkle In his eye. It armed him against all obstacles on the path of self-culture and self-realisation. It exhorted him to oppose, without rest or relief, untruth, Injustice and violence.

But instead of cultivating these high ideals and incorporating them in our educational system, we are now borrowing educational Ideals from other peoples with different heritages. We have no faith In the system that has been extolled by our ancestors for millennia.

Education is to be valued not as a means of earning one's livelihood, but as the essential requisite for a happy, peaceful and progressive life leading man from the animal stage of existence to the presence of the Divine, where love and light reign undisturbed. He who lives for the sake of eating is indeed a great sinner; he who lives for the sake of reaching the full awareness of his Innate Reality is blessed. The first one is a paapi (sinner), the second a gopi (blessed one).

Readiness to renounce is a prime virtue of character

Intelligence being the special mark of humans, every effort must be made to amplify and sharpen it so that it may be a fit Instrument for understanding the inner and the outer worlds. Along with intelligence, character, too, has to be cultivated in equal measure, for then alone can that Intelligence be used to serve society. The readiness to renounce one's pleasure in order to relieve the burden of another is a prime virtue of character. Moksha means liberation; renunciation, too, involves giving up, or liberation. The secret of both is the same.

What exactly has to be renounced? Desire is the worst enemy and it has to be canalised and reduced with determination until it ceases to bother you. Besides desire, anger and greed also have to be discarded, for they are present wherever there is desire.

When you say bowman, it is implied that arrows, too, are there with the bow. Thus desire is ever associated with anger and greed. Desire is bad even if it is for fame and authority. It is the avarice for power and pelf that ruins many a human life.

Life is a journey. The students here have to journey long. So, it is necessary to give them the skill, the enthusiasm and the security that can take them happily along. Their hearts are pure, steady and inclusive. Elders should so behave that they do not tarnish their hearts or make them narrow and vengeful. They must be encouraged to enlarge them and soften them through Intensive social service.

Wealth cannot yield joyous contentment

Our educational institutions have failed to maintain the high standards of yore. In the past, in the aashrams (hermitages) of the rishis (sages), one was declared fit only if one secured a hundred per cent marks in one's subject of study. Now, however, thirty marks out of a hundred are enough for the university to grant one a certificate of having passed. That means that one can commit seventy mistakes with impunity and be none the worse. When such is the ease with which degrees can be secured, and when degrees are the basis for being appointed to positions of authority, the person so appointed will tend to commit a hundred mistakes for every hundred assignments and be safe in his post. How can these people be the saviours and pillars of the India of tomorrow?

Therefore I always tell the students of my colleges to attach more importance to avoidance of 'remarks' than acquisition of 'marks.' Wealth cannot yield joyous contentment. Divinity alone can confer that. Yearn for God, and joy and peace will be added unto you. Embodiments of the Divine Aathman! When you pursue these elevating ideals, you will come up against many obstacles which others place in your path. So you must be ever alert and vigilant not to be taken in by their specious pleas.

Awareness is life; be aware of your Inner strength and glory. Express that glory through loving service to society. In northern India yogis (spiritually advanced person), sages and monks are addressed as 'Mahaaraaj,' which means 'Emperor,' for an emperor is he who has a rich treasury of the gems of detachment and service, not one who has his vaults full of precious metals. The wealth that you hoard is not yours; the wealth that you have shared is yours. For wealth that belongs to you needs not to be hidden.

Defamation and criticism also do some good

The wealth that you have given away is really yours. That is the reason why the Vedhas (ancient sacred scriptures) have declared, "Not through actions, nor through progeny, nor through wealth can Immortality be won; it can be won only through renunciation." The youth must acquire and

Invest in themselves all the skills and virtues which can help India prosper and shine forth as the benefactor and preceptor of mankind. They must develop self-confidence, the base for the mansion of their life; they must then erect the walls of self-satisfaction and put on them the roof of self-sacrifice. Then they can live In that house and achieve Self-

Realisation Thus they must progress along these steps and become exemplars of Indian culture in Its glory.

Some people, afflicted with envy at the reconstruction of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion) for the revival of the glory of India, are attempting to undermine its basic beliefs and create confusion In the minds of the youth. The kokil's song is harsh to the ear of the crow, but the crow's criticism will not silence the lark. The hamsa (swan) is defamed as ugly by the duck, but that does not worry the swan in the least, nor can the duck decrease the glory of the celestial swan. Defamation, criticism and slighting are all to be set aside, unrecognised; they shall not be valued at all. They are all in the order of things. In fact they also do some good in their own way, for they help to emphasise the excellence and bring it more to light. It is a foil to make the thing shine brighter. Besides, when one person says 'no' and another says 'yes,' it is an individual problem.

Youth should never yield to the call of fanaticism

The attempt to darken the splendour of Sai can never succeed, except by one means: Suppose Sai-splendour is indicated by a line of a certain length. Efforts to shorten it by wiping or erasing it will not make it shorter. But if you draw by Its side a longer line, then, automatically, it will become shorter! So do the things that Sai is doing, on a grander and more impressive scale, then the fame of Sai will certainly diminish. That is the more effective way, rather than the fabrication of baseless stories. Of course one must have the qualification and the authority to enter on that attempt. How can an ant measure the depth of the ocean? Still, many venture into this field for they have nothing better to do. They succeed only in causing a stir In the calm atmosphere of the land.

Jesus was crowned with a crown of thorns. A thorny fence around a tree is clear proof that the tree has edible fruits in plenty. Precious time should not be wasted in such games: it is best spent in realising one's Divinity and serving society.

The acts of Sai are all selfless, sacred and beneficial. Sai has never caused harm. He is establishing the path of Truth, the Path of Morality, the Holy path to God-Realisation. So Sai's work will march triumphantly on. The person who can make Sai give up His task in fear has neither yet been born, nor will ever be born hereafter. For Truth is Impregnable. Truth must triumph. A dog barks at his own reflection Imagining it to be a rival. Other dogs, not knowing the reason, take cue, and the whole area is drowned with barking.

Some bay at stars, but the stars are unmoved. You should not be perturbed by this empty noise; carry on your mission of service as now, with your usual enthusiasm. Youth should never, yield to the call of fanaticism or revolution. Try to control your emotions, even from this tender age. In one way the agitation is useful, because you can practise self control in these exacting conditions.

Your master is your heart, where God resides

I desire to tell the units of the Seva Organisation that very soon they will witness the realisation of all their ideals. But as and when success is achieved, as a reaction, carping and denigration will also increase. When the well grows deeper, the mound beside it will grow higher. That is but natural. Some people pay attention to the depth of the well; others watch the height of the mound.

I have been telling you one truth always: your master is your heart, where God resides. You.

yourself are three persons, not one: the one you think you are, the one others think you are and the one you reply are. The one you really are, is God.

God is in you, with you, above you, around you, behind you. All of you are Divine in reality; differences in name and form are but temporary and external.

Carry on your highest duty to yourselves---following the four F's- follow the master, face the devil, fight to the end and finish the game. Then you will win My Love in full measure. Love is my highest Miracle. Love can make you gather the affection of all mankind. Love will not tolerate any selfish aim or approach. Love is God; live in Love. Then all is right, all can be well.

Expand your heart so that it can encompass all. Do not narrow it down into an instrument of restricted love.

It is said that I try to attract people by miracles; the miracles are not 'performed' in order to exhibit power; they just happen, and serve as evidence of the power. As a matter of fact, whenever any one misuses his powers---physical, mental, economic or spiritual-Sai always condemns them strongly. Therefore, the Sai Power cannot be a subject for a university examinations; it is a subject for universal examination. Sai is limited only by His Own Will. But when a near and dear relationship is established, one can delve a little deeper into the Sai Mystery. That is the highest achievement possible. Embodiments of the Divine Aathman! Develop peace and equilibrium of mind and spend your lives in sacred pursuits like service to the distressed, the diseased and the deprived. That is My advice, and that will ensure you My Blessings.

Bangalore, 1-8-1976

22. Hospitals and health

HEALTH is an essential requisite of man. The man afflicted with ill-health is powerless to execute even the least burdensome assignment. The scriptures proclaim that health is the very root of all endeavour in the four fields of human achievement--- Dharma, Artha, Kaama and Moksha (righteousness, wealth, desire and liberation). Without health man cannot brave temptations, earn a decent living, fulfil his basic needs or succeed in spiritual saadhana. Man can engage himself in obligatory and optional functions only if he is healthy.

Food and recreational habits are the two main causes for ill-health. Great care has to be bestowed to ensure that injurious tendencies do not affect these two. At present, though drugs have multiplied and hospitals have been established in every nook and corner, ill-health is also widespread.

This situation is attributable to the spread of deleterious food habits and pastimes.

Physical and mental activities are closely interrelated

It is also necessary to keep the environment of the place where one works and lives, unpolluted by smoke, dust or dirt. The clothes that one wears as well as the body that one is encased in, both have to be purged and kept clean, Health endows a person with joy and brightness. The fruits of the tree of human life are sweet, but they are encased in the bitter skin of egoism and ignorance and have hard inedible seeds of desire, anger, pride, etc. One has to exercise one's intelligence to peel off the outer skin of ignorance, throw off the seeds of vice and wickedness and partake of the sweet kernel of life.

To remove the evil of egoism, service is the most efficient instrument. Service will also impress on the person doing service, the Unity of all mankind. He who dedicates his time, skill and strength to service, can never meet defeat, distress or disappointment, for service is its own reward. His word will be ever sweet and soft, his gestures ever revered and humble. He will have no foe, no fatigue, no fear.

The units of the Sathya Sai Seva Organisation are engaged in enthusiastic service in the two areas of Health and Education. To improve and maintain the health of the people, continuous education on the principles and practice of hygiene and environmental cleanliness is essential.

Education is the most effective safeguard against physical and mental ill-health. So these two activities are closely inter-related. The body is a temporary habitation; it is subject to all kinds of disease and injury. Yet the body is the boat on which alone we can cross the ocean of samsaara (birth and death cycle). The boat has to be kept trim and serviceable. It should not distract our attention more than the minimum necessary for its upkeep. It has to be used for reducing the burden of others, and should not itself become a burden on us. It should serve others, not demand service from them. That is the reason why this hospital is being established here to remedy disease and help people to keep their bodies in good condition. Most hospitals indulge in profiteering

People of this village and villages that are in the surrounding area, will resort to this hospital for medical relief and advice. Unfortunately hospitals that treat patients with love and care, with dedication and devotion, are a rarity. There are hospitals with costly equipments and expert doctors, huge buildings and spick-and-span interiors, but they indulge more in profiteering than affording relief. Their services are for those who can pay large sums of money. Villagers are not welcome there, who in turn do not feel at ease to approach them. Therefore this hospital is being started amidst the villages so that expert advice and treatment can be rendered, to them in a loving atmosphere of reverence and devotion. No charge will be levied here for any service. The villages and others can come here, regain their health, and return hale and hearty in order to carry out their tasks and fulfil their responsibilities.

The doctors and volunteers who help in this hospitals must feel it a part of their duty to advise the villagers about environmental hygiene and preventive measures. The members of the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal have a special duty for this type of service. They have to visit the villages, and after winning the confidence and love of the people, advise them on good food habits and other means of maintaining health. They must also exhort them to resort to this hospital as soon as the first symptoms of ill-health are evident. Early treatment will save the villagers from spending many days in bed away from the fields. Educate the villagers on the value of nutrient foods. The villager now lives on food that is deficient in vitamins and proteins, though he is growing vegetables and food that provide these ingredients in plenty and selling them to city-dwellers. He has to be told of the value of fruits and vegetables as a source of nutrients that will promote and preserve his health, for healthy parents mean healthy children, and sick parents pass on their illhealth to the coming generations. Members of the units of the Sathya Sai Seva Organisation can also join the Seva Dhal in this campaign of educating the villagers. This activity is as meritorious as worship itself. Today is the Vighneshwara festival, the day on which the entire country is worshipping the elephant-headed God who helps man overcome all obstacles. Worshipping Vinaayaka or Vighneshwara or Ganapathi, as he is also called, endows man with the courage and confidence needed to enter upon and carry through any undertaking in the world. The elephant is the largest animal of the forest. It is very Intelligent and has a powerful memory. When it marches through the thick jungle, it clears a path for all other animals to pass. The elephant-headed God confers intelligence and memory and the power to subdue evil and vice. Thus he is also a path-maker. So it is only appropriate that every rite, ceremony or project should be started with the worship of this God. Today we are Inaugurating this hospital so that it will provide good and lasting service to the people of this region. Doctors' sweet words are more effective than drugs. I must also point out to the doctors serving here that perhaps even more than the drugs they prescribe, the sweet, soft words they speak and the love and sympathy they evince can cure better and quicker the illness of their patients. Look upon them as your own kith and kin, as your special guests and as your closest friends; and attend to them lovingly and with unflinching care. I call upon you to maintain this attitude in every situation. Remember that the patient has to cooperate with you in order that you may effect the cure, and when cured, the patient confers on you satisfaction, joy and a sense of elation. Be grateful to the patient for all this. We have in this hospital as doctor, a lady devotee who is highly qualified and who has done signal service for the backward regions in Nigeria and Ethiopia in Africa. We have also others, equally able and enthusiastic. Experts in special branches of medicine and surgery will also be visiting this hospital off and on, and diagnosing, advising and helping patients who need their attention. It is now for you to make the best use of these facilities offered free and with fullness of heart. I am glad that the members of the Panchaayath of this place as well as of near-by villages are here today and have been with us ever since this project was started. If only they help the patients from the villages to be happy and healthy they will have no more need to beg for votes from door to door when the elections come round. The voters would themselves come in large numbers to get them elected in order to avail of their services in greater measure. India was long famous for the sense of compassion that animated her peoples. She is now dishonoured by some as a 'poor' country. No! She was for centuries the preceptor of the world, and she is assuming that status again today. India is the land where the Ideals of service, renunciation and spiritual endeavour were born and have flourished. It is only recently, after India fell under the impact of alien cultures which highlighted material comfort, physical luxury, sensual liberty and exterior display, that Indians have trodden the wrong path of exploitation and violence, idleness and pompousness. With the spread of alien cultures and alien ways of thought and life, diseases too have multiplied and mental imbalances have increased. But when simplicity, humility and the idea of social service (having root in the worship of the God in man) are restored, the nation will again be happy and healthy, full of peace, prosperity and joy. Sri Sathya Sai Hospital for Women and Children, Whitefield, 28-8-1976. 23. The Sai Religion. WHOM the Muslims adore as Allah, the Christians as Jehovah, the Vaishnavas as Phullabjaaksha and the Shaivites as Shambhu, who grants, in answer to their several prayers, health, prosperity and happiness to all, wherever they may be, He, the One God, is the God of all mankind. India has been teaching since ages the message of the spirit and the means to gain and ensure equanimity and joy. She has stood forth as the preceptor of the world for centuries. The prayer that she has taught her people is: Lokah samasthah sukhino bhavanthu (May all people everywhere be happy). This is the consummation of Vedhic thought since time Immemorial.

Such wholesome ideals were propagated and fostered by the rulers of this land, the seers and yogis (God-centred persons) who guided the populace, and the chaste mothers who reared generations in the atmosphere of spiritual effort.

But due to vicissitudes in the country's history, when the people were subjected to pressures and counter-pressures, these ideals suffered a set-back. The abstractions of faith received concrete form and got crystallised into specific identifiable names and forms. Each new attitude or aptitude, each new concretisation, became a special sect and every theory enveloped itself in its own shell.

Growth of new sects and sets of belief in India

Thus the one Vedhic religion became the parent of a number of sects and sets of belief, like Gaanaapaathya (centering around the concept of Ganapathi), Shaaktheya (centering around the concept of Cosmic Energy as the expression of the Divine), Soura (centering around the Sun as the source, sustenance and goal of spiritual achievement), Chaarvaka (centering around the concept of pleasure and material prosperity) and Veerasaiva (centering around Shiva as the inner motivator of all beings). Every one of these sects, and many more besides, elaborated their own rituals and modes of worship, their own priorities in spiritual attainment and their own body of doctrines about the individual, the objective world and God.

The purpose of these codes and modes was, in all cases, to purify the mind and Insist on the practice of high moral virtues. But this was soon ignored and importance came to be attached to superficial conformity and outer purity. The craving for personal aggrandizement and power made every sect, faith and religion, rigid and dry. There is a great need today to discover the Inner spring of all faiths, the spring that fertilises the outer rites and ceremonies. A little quiet study will reveal that there is an undercurrent of moral enthusiasm and spiritual adventure.

There is only one caste, the caste of Humanity

The word generally used for religion is matha; the word to indicate the mind is mathi. Putting the two together it can be said that matha is primarily engaged or ought to be engaged in straightening and strengthening the mathi. The goal, the purpose, the key, the essence of all creeds, faiths and religions is just this. the sublimation of the mind of man to guarantee liberation for the individual concerned and happiness for the society of which he is a unit. Principles and practices have grouped around this prime need, and various creeds are the result.

Religions attempt to implant holy ideals in the heart of man but man does not allow them to sprout and grow. His egoistic craving for power and competitive success has, in most cases, persuaded him to use religion as an instrument of torture and persecution. Instead of uniting mankind in a common endeavour, it has become a system of walled enclosures, guarded by hate and fanaticism. So each religion is an armed camp sunk in self-aggrandizement, trying to wean others into itself and preventing defections from itself. Religion, therefore, is being condemned as the root of chaos and conflict. In spite of great progress in many other areas of life, religious animosity is aflame even today in many parts of the world.

It has to be emphasised that religion is not the root cause of this state of affairs. The factional fight and fanatic hatred are due to the unruly ego that is given free play. Religion strives to destroy just this vicious tendency. So it has to be supported, not condemned. What has to be condemned is the narrow, perverted attitude of hating those who do not agree with you or who hold different opinions of the mysterious force that animates the universe. Religious wars and conflicts breed in the slime of ignorance and avarice. When people are blind to the truth that the human family is one indivisible Unity, they grope in the dark and are afraid of strange touch. The cultivation of love, alone, can convince man of this truth that there is only one caste---the caste of Humanity, and only one religion---the religion of Love. Since no religion upholds violence or despises love, it is wrong to ascribe the chaos to religion.

The diversity we experience is not a true picture

It is also not advisable to engage in campaigns of vilification or exaggerated propagation of any religion with a view to draw votaries. If only each one lives up to the ideals propounded by the founders of one's religion, unaffected by greed or hate, the world will be a happier and more peaceful habitation for man.

The religion of the Hindhus stressed the Unity of all creation and declared that the diversity we experience is not a true picture. But since faith in the One come into awareness only to a mind clarified to the utmost, the religion had soon to posit duality, and even multiplicity, with deities for every facet of the whole. The most widespread of these qualities is the Shaivite and Vaishnavite faiths, centered around the Shiva and Vishnu aspects of the One. This process of splitting into diverse viewpoints has taken place in all the major religions.

Islam has the Shia and Sunni sects; Christianity has Catholics and Protestants. But however deep the cleavage, no sect denies God and no sect extols violence and falsehood. Names may be different, the facets emphasised may be different, but the Almighty Providence is denoted as Absolute and Eternal. The terminology may be different but the concept is not different. God may be referred to as Allah, prayer may be called namaaz, Priests may be known as khaajees, scholars may be hailed as mullahs, the Bible may be in the form of the Holy Quran. But the undercurrent of energising power in all cases is love, love of all beings towards all beings. The founders had always in view the Unity of all life and the progressive march of man from mere humanness to the heights of Divinity.

Shankaraachaarya's adhwaita philosophy

The first among the interpreters of the Vedhas (most ancient revealed scriptures) to found a school of philosophy and lay down the path of spiritual discipline to benefit from that school, is Shankaraachaarya, born in the State of Kerala. During his very short life, he established on secure foundations of logic and intuition, the truth that there is only One God and that all else is an appearance of the One Reality. This is the 'no-two' or adhwaita philosophy or faith, that explains the individual nature and God in perfect harmony. The Vedhic axioms---Ekoham Bahushyaam (I am One, let Me become many), Ishwaras sarva bhoothaanaam (God is immanent in all), Ishavaasyamidham sarvam (All this enveloped and penetrated by God)---are thus illumined by the intellect of Shankaraachaarya into patent truths.

Merging in the Source is the ultimate destiny

Monism, as propounded by Shankaraachaarya on the basis of Vedhic texts, seemed to the majority of individuals too simple a solution to satisfy their inner urges. They had in them the yearning to worship, to dedicate themselves to a higher power. They could not grasp the truth of their inner Reality being the one and only. Their emotions and activities had to be sublimated by disciplines of devotion. Therefore, Raamanujachaarya commented upon the Vedhic texts and religious scriptures from a new point of view. This made the adhwaita take on a special outlook. So it was called visishta (special) adhwaita (non-dualism). The path of devotion was laid down to enable man to merge with God.

The goal is mergence, as the rivers know and strive for. The waters of the sea are raised by the Sun as clouds into the sky and the clouds pour them as rain back onto the earth, to flow back into the sea through many a ravine, as a stream or tributary-fed river. Merging in the Source from which one took form, is the ultimate destiny. The river has the passion of overwhelming love which leads it down the slopes until it reaches the loved one, where the lover, loved and love, all three merge in one illuminating ecstasy. Prema (highest love) is the attachment to God that does not allow anything to interfere or diminish its quality or depth. God is loved by the bhaktia (devotee) for His sake and not for any incidental benefit or blessing. It is spontaneous, sustaining and sublime, like a child before the mirror enjoying the reflections of its own pranks and gestures. Complete surrender to the extent of the annihilation of one's own individuality is also beyond most aspirants. Sugar cannot be tasted and enjoyed by sugar; you have to be an ant so that you can revel in the sweetness of the stuff. This craving of man was sought to be satisfied by Madhvaachaarya, who declared that the jeeva (individual soul) will remain ever separate from the Universal, and there can be no merging. In adhwaita, a flash of intellectual illumination reveals that the Aathman (Divinity) alone exists, and that all else is deluding appearance. The visishtaadhwaita posits that the river is an integral part of the sea. Dhwaita points out that the joy derived from adoration and worship is enough to draw the fulfilling Grace of God.

All paths laid down by all seers lead to the same goal

There were other seers, too, who laid down paths towards the same goal. They announced that the universe belongs to God and that man should not desire to accumulate or appropriate any portion of the Divine Treasure. They advised that the sapling of devotion must be protected from the pests of sloth, doubt and fanaticism by the cultivation of valour and vigilance.

Of the major religions I may mention one, namely Buddhism. Buddha was so agonised by the suffering that haunts the life of man that he investigated the behaviour of the mind and intellect of man and discovered remedial disciplines; he analysed the vagaries of the mind which lead man into the whirlpools of desires; he analysed the ways of reason, too and spotted the areas where prejudice takes root; above all, he preached surrender to dharma (righteousness), to compassion and to Buddha (the Enlightened One). Jainism, the religion that was rendered an all-

India movement by Mahaaveera, extols jina (the heroic conqueror of the senses), the emotions and the stratagems of the intellect. He called upon all to carry out the duties commensurate to their status and professions, with steady faith and enthusiasm. He declared that all things and beings are holy in their own right and are but pilgrims on the road to Realisation. Any Injury inflicted on any of them is an intervention in that sacred journey and so has to be scrupulously avoided.

The 'Sai religion' is the essence of all faiths

Zoraastrianism, the Paarsi religion, was founded by Zoraaster, who wanted that man should ever have the Fire of Wisdom blazing in his consciousness so that evil thoughts and tendencies might be reduced to ashes. It has to infuse all thoughts, words and deeds with the illumination of virtue and vigour, it must destroy all worldly desire and render man pure for entry into the heaven of freedom. Adoration, meditation and acts of selfless service are essential for the dawn of enlightenment.

The Sai religion, if the name of religion in its literal sense of binding man to God is accepted, is the essence of all faiths and religions, including those like Islam, Christianity and Judaism. The motive behind the formation and propagation of all these different faiths is the same. The founders and propagators were all persons filled with love and wisdom. Their goal and purpose were the same. None had the design to divide, disturb, or destroy. They attempted to do good, see good and be good. They sought to train the passions and the emotions, to educate the Impulses and Instincts and direct the faculty of reason to paths beneficial to the individual and society. They knew that the mind, which is the breeding ground of desire and attachment, ambition and aspiration, has to be cleansed and properly oriented.

Let the family become a centre of harmonious living

Sai considers that practice of these disciplines is much more essential than blind faith in a bunch of philosophical theories. No one has the right to advise others unless he is already practising what he preaches. First establish the reign of love between the various members in your own home. Let the family become a centre of harmonious living, sympathetic understanding and mutual faith.

The holy duty of man is to be ever aware of the Aathman (Divine spirit) that is installed in every living being. This will make him conscious of the kinship he has with all. This is the basis of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God. Cast away the vice of egoism, the evil of greed and the poison of envy. When you seek joy from something outside you, remember that a far greater joy lies in wait within your own inner consciousness. When you are afraid of someone or something outside you, remind yourself that the fear is born, fed and fertilised in your own mind and that you can overcome it by denying it. How can fear counter the path of a spiritual aspirant?

It can hide in no shadow, it can pester no saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) who has God in his heart.

Faith in the Almighty God is the impregnable armour that the saadhaka can wear; and peoples of all lands are saadhakas, whether they know it or not. Be steady, do not waver, keep straight on, hold fast to the ideal without despair. Pray until God relents; do not turn away sadly if God does not shower Grace when you expect it.

When a religion wants to extend its influence it has to resort to vilification of other religions and exaggeration of its own excellence. Pomp and publicity become more important than practice and faith. But Sai wants that the votaries of each religion must cultivate faith in its own excellence and realise their validity by their own intense practice.

That is the Sai religion, the religion that feeds and fosters all religions and emphasises their common Greatness. Take up this religion, boldly and joyfully.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 1-10-1976

The Lord is devoid of attachment or hatred. He comes on a Mission and is bent only on that task. It is His nature to support the right and admonish the wrong. His task is to restore vision to man, to turn his footsteps along the path of morality and selfcontrol, so that he may achieve Self-knowledge.

Sri Sathya Sai

24. Global bhajan

SHRAVANAM (hearing the Glory of the Lord), Keerthanam (singing the name and Glow of God), Vishnosmaranam (allowing the mind to dwell on that Glow), Paadhasevanam (adoring the Feet of the Lord), Vandhanam (experiencing gratitude and joy at His Grace), Dhaasyam (feeling oneself as His instrument), Sakhyam (awareness of his being one's constant and closest companion) and Aathmanivedhanam (dedicating one's full being to Him)---these are the nine steps In the path of Devotion.

"Listen, O people! Revel in this iron Kaliyuga, for there is none so propitious for liberation such that mere remembrance of the Name of the Lord and adoring Him thus are enough to win His Grace and set you free."

"This is bad, this is good---can such judgements ever be made about anything in God's creation when all are manifestations of His Will."

Samkeerthan is manifestation of inner ecstasy Embodiments of the Pure Aathman! Last November, on the 23rd, people from all parts of the world had assembled here to celebrate the Golden Jubilee and office-bearers of the centres were here for the Second World Conference and other functions that took place. Later they expressed their desire that they be allotted a date before the close of the jubilee Year, when they in their own places could celebrate the happy occasion. In order to overcome their disappointment it was decided that in all centres all over the world, bhajan and naama-sankeerthan (congregational singing and spirituals) be held for full twenty four hours, beginning at 6-30 p.m. on Saturday (yesterday) and ending at 6-30 p.m. today. Therefore in 42 countries around the globe more than 7,000 centres have enthusiastically taken up this pleasant assignment.

This has been named an akhanda-bhajan, that is to say, bhajan done without a break. But was it really an akhanda-bhajan? It is begun at 6-30 on the evening of one day, and is closed at 6-30 on the evening of the next day. Can we call it 'unbroken' bhajan? What is a period of 24 hours when we consider the vastness of the Universe and the eternity of time? it is just a wink, a minute part of the life of man on earth. By engaging yourselves in the recitation of the Name of God for one single day, you claim to have done bhajan "without a break!"

Akhanda-bhajan must be as continuous as breathing itself if it is to deserve its name.

You must probe into the real significance of the samkeerthan that you are engaged in. Keerthan is "singing aloud the Glory of God." Samkeerthan is the process of singing that originates in the heart, not from the lips or tongue. It is the expression of the joyous thrill that wells up from the heart when the Glory of God is remembered. It is the spontaneous manifestation of inner ecstasy,

No attention is paid to the blame or praise that others may give. It does not seek the admiration or the appreciation of the listeners. It is sung for one's own joy, one's own satisfaction, one's own delight. Keerthan of this supreme type, alone, deserves the name samkeerthan.

Naamasamkeerthan can cleanse the atmosphere

Singing this intense yearning for God and enjoying the experience of adoring Him, helps to purify the atmosphere. Man is today forced to breathe the air polluted by sounds that denote violence, hatred, cruelty and wickedness. Therefore he is fast losing the high attainments that are in store for him. The vibrations of the naamasamkeerthans (heart-felt recitation and Lord's name) can cleanse the atmosphere and render it pure, calm and ennobling. It is with this high purpose in view that this programme of global samkeerthan was designed.

No man can escape the influence of the pollution of the air he breathes. The sounds that we produce, with good intent or bad, spread throughout the air around us. This is our daily experience. The sounds produced at radio stations pass through the atmosphere and reach our homes when we tune in. The vibrations travel vast distances and affect the nature of those who inhale them. The atmosphere affects also the food man consumes. The pollution in the atmosphere is imbibed by the plants, the plants supply the grain, the grain is the basis of the meal and the meal shapes the character and behaviour of the person who consumes it. When the environment is clean and free from evil vibrations, the food too, is pure, and the person develops a tendency to be loving and simple. It is to ensure such an atmosphere that this saadhana (spiritual effort) initiated the world over.

Prayer should come shrieking through the heart

When a man falls into a well, of what use is it if he controls his voice and his emotions and whispers quietly, "I have fallen into this well, I have fallen into this well. I am in great danger.

Please save me?" No one will be able to hear or save him. He must shout full-throated, with all the anguish he is experiencing and with the extreme desire to be saved, "I HAVE FALLEN INTO THE WELL! SAVE ME! SAVE ME SOME ONE!" Then can he hope to get succour.

Similarly, when you are caught in the coils of this world, when you have fallen into this deep well of worldly misery, shout with all your might, with all your heart, that you may be saved by God. There is no use muttering faintly and half-heartedly, "Save me, save me; I am floundering in this samsaar (worldly life)." When the prayer comes shrieking through the heart, help is assured.

Samkeerthan or bhajan is of four types. Guna-samkeerthan, leela-samkeerthan, bhavasamkeerthan, and naama-samkeerthan, guna means 'attributes' (of God). So guna-samkeerthan is the adoration, in song, of the manifold Attributes of God--- Omnipresence, Omniscience, Compassion, Majesty, etc. Leela means 'divine sport.' Therefore leela-samkeerthan is the adoration, in song, of the various expressions of these attributes as evidenced by the accounts of sages and seers of all faiths. Bhaava means 'attitude' (of the mind). So bhaava-samkeerthan means the adoration, in song, of God pictured and contacted under various relationships.

Path of devotion is the most effective saadhana

Some may prefer to adore Him as the Giver of equanimity (shaantham), others as a Friend, Guide and Guardian (sakhya), still others as the child one loves and tends (vaathsalya) and yet others as the lover whom one loves with sovereign love (madhura). Naama means the Name of God, and so naama-samkeerthan means the adoration of God, calling upon Him by various Names, each describing His glory, His achievements, His relationship with the individual.

The Names are many, or even countless; it is so in all languages. We have many groups of 'thousand and eight Names' which can be used, for God, as the Vedhas (ancient revealed sacred scriptures) declare, has a 'thousand heads, a thousand eyes and a thousand feet.' Devotees can adore Him and derive bliss through that adoration, filling each Name with the meaning and significance it carries.

By whatever means God is adored, the path of devotion is the easiest and the most effective for it is a saadhana of the heart, and results in love and service to all as fellow pilgrims to the same Divine Goal.

Some people do question the propriety of calling God by means of such a multiplicity of names.

But each Name is indicative only of one aspect of Divinity. It denotes a single part of the Supreme Personality. The eye, the nose, the mouth, the hand or the finger may be denoted by distinct words, but they all belong to the same individual. So, too, one must remember that every Name is but a facet, a part, a ray, of the Supreme. The saadhana consists in recognising and becoming aware of the One that supports and sustains the many. That is the precious gem of wisdom that one must secure and treasure.

Let Liberation be your only desire

There is, however, a thief that lurks in the inner consciousness of man, planning to rob him of this gem. He is kaama (desire). When we have gained what we desire, lobha (greed), the accomplice of the thief, steps out and prods us to desire a few more objects. When what is desired is not gained, another accomplice, krodha (anger), steps out and prods us to hate and harm those whom we suspect. stood in the way of the gain.

Of course you cannot instantly eliminate all desire from the mind. So you should nourish the one desire prescribed by the Vedhas. The Vedhas lay down four goals before man: dharma (righteousness), artha (wealth), kaama (desire) and moksha (liberation). Since the first and the last are difficult to attain without detachment and deprivation of sensual pleasures, man has given them up as impracticable and is struggling in all lands and climes with the middle two--- wealth and desire. All the fear and misery of life can be traced to this dire mistake. What has to be done is to take the four as two inseparable pairs, Dharma-artha and kaama-moksha. That is to say, earn wealth through righteousness and use wealth for the promotion of righteousness. And let liberation be your only desire.

Words have a profound effect on the mind

Liberation means getting rid of bondage. Many people give up hearth and home, wife and children, property and possessions, and escaping into forest retreats pride themselves on their 'renunciation.' But this act of fleeing cannot be honoured by that name, for such an act by itself cannot confer release, when the mind still remains bound. The fundamental bond which has to be got rid of is the bond of ajnaana (primal ignorance). Death is sweeter than the bondage that Ignorance can impose on man. Cast away ignorance- you are free, liberated from all bonds that very moment. All spiritual disciplines have this liberation as their goal. Naamasamkeerthan (Heart-felt singing of divine names) too, helps you get rid of this basic ignorance.

Those who rely on reason alone or on the limited laws of science, argue that the repetition of the Name which is, after all, sound, cannot cleanse or correct the mind of man. But the Name is not just 'sound.' You are sitting quietly there, listening, but if some one merely says, 'scorpion,' you get frightened. Or when some one says, the juice of a lemon, your mouth starts watering. You may be sitting before a plateful of delicacies, but if some one speaks of something dirty or disgusting, you are apt to refuse the food. The mere sound creates so much of reaction:

A certain officer was inspecting the work of a teacher in a school. He had a hearty contempt for mere talk, so he asked the teacher, "How can you ever transform the nature of these children by the words you utter? Show them by deeds; act, don't speak." The teacher protested and argued that words have a profound effect on the mind. The argument continued for some time. At last the teacher resolved upon a plan to convince the officer of his point of view. He told an urchin of his class, "Here! Catch this officer by the neck and push him out of the room." Hearing those words, the officer flew into a great rage and started pouring abuse on the teacher. The teacher said, "-Sir, I only said a few words. No one pushed you or hit you or touched you. It was all mere sound. But see how it has enraged you. Words, sir, do help in modifying character and shaping nature. They have vast power," he said.

Do not seek to discover the evil in others

When words referring to worldly situations have such a transforming effect on the mind of man, words conveying spiritual and elevated meaning will certainly help in cleansing and correcting the mind of man. When we fill the air with harshness, we become harsh in nature. When we fill the atmosphere with hatred we, too, have perforce to breathe the air, and are hated in turn. When we saturate the air with sounds full of reverence, humility, love, courage, self-confidence and tolerance, we benefit from those qualities ourselves. The heart is the film and the mind is the lens; turn the lens towards the world and worldly pictures will fall on the heart. Turn it towards

God, and it will transmit pictures of the Divine.

Therefore always do good, see good, remember good and be good. Do not seek to discover or discuss the evil in others for the attempt will tarnish your own mind.

When you are engaged in searching for the faults and failings of others, you are paving the way for developing those faults and failings in yourself. Dwell on the good in others, and in time it will prove an asset to you.

The goodness latent in you shall then be urged to sprout and blossom.

Every thought leaves an impression on the mind

When you pray. "Swaami, appear in my dream tonight," there is a chance that you may be lucky to visualise Swaami in your dream. But if you pray, turning your attention to bad things, "Swaami, let not a pig or an ass appear in my dream this night," in all likelihood, the pig and the ass will present themselves to you in your dream. Why pay undue attention to things you do not need and do not benefit from? Every thought leaves an impression on the mind, so be ever alert that contact with evil is avoided.

Ideas which are opposed to spiritual tendencies, that narrow the limits of love, that provoke anger or greed, that cause disgust---these have to be shut out. For the saadhaka this is a very essential discipline. He must sublimate such thoughts before they cause an impact on the mind, and should concentrate on the very source of the thinking process.

This can be achieved by the practice of equanimity, unaffectedness or balance. This attitude is the mark of the jnaani (liberated person) and is called jnaana-shakthi (the power of wisdom). Of course it is not easily acquired. The path of devotion and dedication---the bhakti-maarga---is easiest for most. It is attainable by love, for love leads you quickly to the Goal.

God responds to prayer that emanates from the heart

Once upon a time, Naamadheva (noted for his mastery of the bhakti-maarga through constant recital of the Name) and Jnaanadheva (noted for his mastery of the path of wisdom), were together crossing a thick jungle. They were both afflicted with severe thirst but could not find water anywhere in spite of a tiresome search. At last they came upon a ruined well with a little water far down its depths, but they had no means of going down the steep sides. So Jnaanadheva used his power and transformed himself into a bird. The bird flew down and drank its fill, only to change itself into Jnaanadheva again! Naamadheva relied upon the power of the Name. He sat on the edge of the well and called, 'Naaraayana,' in great anguish. God responded to his prayer. The water rose up to where he sat and he could gather it in his palms and quench his thirst. He had no need to embody himself anew and disembody himself again for the satisfaction of a physical thirst.

When God is invoked by prayer that emanates from the heart, let it be but once, He responds immediately. But now the call emanates only from the lips, it has not the ring of sincerity and faith. From the lips, it must roll back on the tongue: from the tongue, it must go deep into the throat; from the throat, it must reach down into the heart. Continuous saadhana alone can grant success in this endeavour. You must become like an Infant with no inhibitions or stratagems. The mother may be attending to her daily chores on the first floor of the house, leaving the infant in the cradle on the ground floor. But when the child sends up a loud wail, either through fear or hunger, she rushes down to lift the child, fondle it, feed it and comfort it on her lap. She will not stay away because of the wall not being musical or melodious. Man's life has become pathetically artificial. Similarly, the Mother of the Universe. will not weigh the quantity of yoga (divine communion) that you have practised, or calculate the number of Japams (repetition of sacred formulae) you have rolled on the rosary, or the time taken by you for saadhanas of various kinds. She can be moved and Her Grace can be won by a genuine appeal emanating from the heart. Man is finding it increasingly difficult to call upon the Supreme Source of power and grace with such genuineness. His life has become pathetically artificial.

Kaamadhenu (the wish-fulfilling heavenly cow, can be drawn and tied to a post by means of a rope. God, too, can be drawn towards you by the rope (the Name), and tied to the post (the tongue). Then His Name will be dancing upon the tongue forever, conferring the sweetness of His Majesty. The Name has to be sung for your own delight, to quench your own thirst, to appease your own hunger. No one eats to appease another's hunger, nor takes drugs to alleviate another's illness. So do not care for what others feel about your dhyaana (meditation) or bhajan.

Do not seek the approval, appreciation or admiration of others, or refrain from dhyaana or bhajan because others dislike it or ridicule it. Be self-reliant, self-confident. See through your own eyes; hear through your own ears. Most people today believe their ears and deny their eyes; or they use the eyes, ears and even the brains of others and thus fall into error and fear.

You are shaped by the company you keep Consider this : Here you do bhajans twice a day, but bhojans (meals) are taken four times a day!

Physical exercises are resorted to in order to make the body strong and fit. Dhaanya (grain, cereal) is grown and stored and used to strengthen the body; dhyaana (meditation) is equally necessary for strengthening the mind so that in its weak state it may not yield to the viruses of lust, greed, anger, hatred, pride, etc. If the body is well-developed and the head is weak, it is a case fit for the lunatic asylum. Food should be for both body and head, and both these should be dedicated to the Realisation of God, the Truth behind and beyond all truths.

Seeking good company and spending all available time in that comradeship called sathsang (holy company), will help the aspirant a great deal. You are shaped by the company you keep; a piece of iron turns into rust if it seeks the company of the soil. It glows, it softens and takes on useful shapes if it enjoys the company of fire. Dust can fly if it chooses the wind as its friend; it has to end as slime in a pit if it prefers water. It has neither wing nor foot, yet it can either fly or walk, rise or fall, according to the friend it selects.

Knowing this truth, Kabir, the great mystic-poet, sang, "Here are my prostrations to the bad. Here are my prostrations to the good." When asked why he offered prostrations to the bad along with the good, he replied, "I prostrate before the bad so that they might leave me alone; I do the same before the good, so that they might remain near me always."

By the power of saadhana, man becomes Divine

Here is a burning coal; here, at some distance, is a cold piece of coal. When they contact each other, the heat spreads to the cold piece of coal, and the part that is in contact with the burning coal is rendered hot and red. If you vigorously sway a fan over the contact area, soon the entire coal becomes a burning ember. 'Near,' alone, is not enough for realisation; one has to make it 'dear' by the fan of saadhana. This is the power of saadhana, by which the human becomes Divine. The Vedhas say that he who knows Brahman, becomes Brahman. The coal knew fire and became fire. Saadhana is the cultivation of prema (love). Be full of love, taste the exhilaration that love can confer. Man is love embodied: he thirsts for love and he finds real joy in 1ovlng and receiving selfless love. You have forgotten your real nature, which is love, and so you exude misery, hate and jealousy. Never be morose or melancholic. Let all see you exuberant with love and light and joy. Do not entertain passion or prejudice, anger or anxiety. Take the saadhana of the Name, the naamasankeerthan, and the path will be smooth.

This programme of bhajan continuously done for 24 hours all round the world in all lands, has therefore and spread the message of love through the Names of Embodiment of Universal love. It has saturated the atmosphere with thoughts of God and of the peace and joy that He showers.

The bhajan that you have done here has affected not only this particular area and its environment, but it will transmute the entire atmosphere. Continue this attitude of devotion and humility, of service and tolerance, and the atmosphere will not be polluted by hatred. Do not contaminate the air by voices of acrimony, scandal, insult or slander. Keep silent when you feel like expressing such ideas; that itself is a service to you and to others.

Life is a song, sing it. That is what Krishna taught through His life.

Arjuna heard that song on the battlefield, where tensions were at their highest and when the fate of millions was to be decided by the sword. Krishna sang the Geetha for Arjuna to listen. Geetha means 'song,' and He sang because He was Aanandha (Divine Bliss), wherever he might be---in Gokulam, on the banks of the Yamuna or at Kurukshethra between the warring armies.

You too must pass your days in song. Let your whole life be a bhajan. Believe that God is everywhere at all times, and derive strength, comfort and joy by singing His Glory in His Presence.

Let melody and harmony surge up from your hearts and let all take delight in the Love that you express through that song.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 14-11-1976

25. Signs and wonders

THE conflict between persons who accept God and deny Him, those who declare that God is to be found in this or that place and those who affirm that He can be found nowhere, is never ending; it has continued throughout the ages. While considering this situation, one has to remember that while it is unnecessary to awaken a person already awake and easy to awaken a person who is asleep, we cannot awaken, however much we try, a person not wanting to awaken!

Those who do not know, can be taught by means of simple illustrations what they do not know.

But those afflicted with half-knowledge and proud of that acquisition are beyond any further education.

The two eyes give a picture of a vast expanse of space, but they cannot see the face to which they belong! They are Important instruments of the body, but they cannot see the entire body. When you wish to see your face and back, you have to keep one mirror in front and another one behind you, so that in the front mirror you can see the reflection of your back also. So, too, when you desire to know your reality (face) and your future (back), you have to adjust the mirror of 'Selfconfidence'

(confidence that you are the Self) in front and the mirror of Divine Grace behind you Without these two, to affirm that you are aware of your Truth or of your destiny, is sheer fantasy.

Divine Avathaars attract by their inexplicable acts

The Divine is now denoted by various words that are common currency in limited human vocabularies. They name phenomena revealing the Divine, 'miracles', magic, 'wonders', etc.

Of course, man cannot contain in his mind more than he can hold. He cannot express in words the in-expressible. Only those who have dived deep and contacted the underlying principle of Love, can picture Divinity with some clarity. The Divinity that is Me has not been acquired or earned, nor has it been added or evinced after the lapse of some years in the middle of this life.

The Divine has to reveal Itself through these manifestations, largely shaped and modified by the nature of the times, the region and the cultural environment. The signs and wonders that I manifest are given names that do not connote the purpose or effect. They can be called chamathkaara, that lead on to samskaara (purifica-ting acts), which in turn urge one on towards paropakaara (helping others) and finally result in saakshaathkaara (divine vision).

Chamathkaara is any act which attracts on account of its inexplicability. This aspect of attraction is Inherent in the Avathaar (divine incarnation). The very name, Raama, means 'He who pleases or causes delight. Krishna means 'He who attracts, draws towards Himself (Karshathithi- Krishna). This attribute of attractions is a characteristic of Divinity.

Attraction is the very nature of the Divine

Why does the Divine attract? Is it to deceive or mislead? No. It is to transform, reconstruct, reform---a process called samskaara. What is the purpose of the reconstruction? To make the person useful and serviceable for society, to efface his ego, and to affirm in him the unity of all beings In God. The person who has undergone samskaara becomes a humble servant of those who need help. This is the stage of paropakaara. Service of this kind done with reverence and selflessness, prepares man to realise the One that pervades the many. The last stage is saakshaathkaara. The Vedhas (ancient scriptures of Divine Knowledge) proclaim that Immortality (the stage when one is merged in the Birthless, Deathless, Universal Entity), is feasible through renunciation and detachment only, and not through rituals, progeny or wealth. When man renounces selfish desires, his love expands unto the farthest regions of the Universe until he becomes aware of the cosmic love that feeds all the four processes mentioned above. It is important that you know this underlying urge in all as I do. Let us consider the chamathkaara, acts that attract and cause wonder. You see a flower. You long to hold it in your hand only when its colour or fragrance is attractive. You enter the market and see heaps of fruits. If the fruits are not attractive, you have no urge to eat them and benefit by them. Attraction is the very nature of the Divine. Reason cannot measure the Divine. Once the person is drawn near, the process of samskaara starts. Without this, man remains fallow and feeble. He has no dignity or personality. A worthless steel lump is transformed by skilful manipulation and reconstruction into a watch that is worth several hundred rupees; this is the result of samskaara, which turned it into a useful tool for indicating time. Thus man can also be transformed into a noble, efficient, happy and disciplined member of society by the implanting of good thoughts, good feelings, good deeds and good emotions. Such transformed persons will spontaneously engage themselves in the task of promoting human welfare. They will be promoters of the ideals of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God. Nowadays persons who have no experience or knowledge of spiritual science and no conception of the Divine, make pronouncements on such subjects into which they stray. The eye can but see, the tongue can but talk and the ear can but hear. Each has to accept its limitations and be content.

The Divine can be grasped only through love, faith and saadhana (spiritual discipline), surcharged with Universal Love. Reason is too feeble an instrument to measure it. Denial of the Divine cannot negate it. Logic cannot reveal it. All the tirades now being made on the Divine are from atheists who are opportunists. So your duty is to preserve your equanimity. Be true to yourselves and do not waver. I am unaffected by praise or blame. My love and compassion envelop all; My Grace can be shared by all. I am declaring this so that you may face all this with fortitude. The more you dig, the deeper the derision; the higher the mound, the taller the praise. People with a disease in the nose cannot appreciate the fragrance of a flower. Those who cannot appreciate or recognise the Divine are suffering from an illness which handicaps them to do so.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1976

There are two statements in the Geetha, both complementary: Sraddhaavaan labhathe inaanam (the man with steady faith wins wisdom) and samsayaathmaa vinashyathi (he who doubts perishes). The doubt that overpowered Arjuna was removed by the teaching of Krishna and the necessary shraddha was inculcated. As a matter of fact, the Geetha is a conversation between the jeeva and Brahman, the limited, or rather the idea of the limited, with the unlimited. The dehavasthra is worn by the dehi: the body is but a vesture of God, who is eternal and permanent.

Sri Sathya Sai

26. Unbroken bliss

THIS day you have resolved to imbibe Divine Bliss by reciting the Glow of God in chorus and with music, continuously for twenty-four hours. You call it akhanda bhajan, even though it will end after that period. Still, the idea is good and the programme will yield good results. For in this busy age of fear and anxiety, the remembrance of God and the repetition of His name is the one means of liberation that is accessible to all. People toil for years for maintaining their families and bringing up their children, and though they do not succeed as much as they hope or wish, they continue their efforts unabated. But in the effort to gain the Grace of God, they do not evince even half the interest. They get dispirited when they do not see signs of Grace after short spurts of saadhana (spiritual effort). Bhajan (group singing of devotional songs on Lord's Names and Glory) is more important than bhajan (meals). Prayer is more desirable than pining for meals. Birds, beasts, insects and worms, all feed and keep fit. Man is the crown of creation, the monarch and master of all beings in creation. And if he, too, seeks only food and shelter as inferior species do, it is deplorable Indeed. From the moment of waking until the moment when he lays himself down again to sleep, man is engaged in endless errands, unceasing turmoil, never-ending tangles and boundless anxiety. And what does he gain therefrom? More confusion, more mental agitation.

Bhajan is a good disciplinary process

Is this the be-all and end-all of human existence? No. It cannot be. He has the nobler-goal of selfillumination, of lighting the lamp of love inside him, and sharing the light of that lamp with all around him. Kaama (desire) and krodha (anger) are the two enemies that will not allow him to keep that flame burning bright.

Bhajan such as this, is a good disciplinary process by which these two can be kept away. Kaama is the lust for physical pleasure, for power, for fame, for wealth and for scholarship. Krodha is anger, which is the result of foiled lust. If you long for peace of mind, you must take up the saadhana that will confer peace on you. If, Instead, you still engage in old habits, how can peace be yours? You stand at the square yonder, and wishing to come to Whitefield, board a bus that moves in the opposite direction and takes you to Hoskote. Is that the sign of an Intelligent man?

You choose the wrong path and then complain that you are lost. Salt and camphor look alike, but you have to exercise your intelligence to discriminate between them. Brass make more noise than gold, but you should not be deceived by that and choose brass instead of gold.

Through genuine prayer, evil can be destroyed

If men make more noise and mislead people into believing that they are wise, they are like brass.

Do not mistake them for gold. Ascribe value to pure hearts and dedicated deeds, never indulging in talk that hurts others. When you intend to harm another, the evil recoils on you. The grief which you suffer is only an echo of the grief you inflict in another's heart. So when you have injured another, pray for pardon; repent and resolve never to do it again. Through genuine prayer, mountains of evil can be pulverised and destroyed. From now on decide that your words shall be soft and sweet, your acts beneficial to others and your thoughts always about how to serve others who are weaker and less prosperous.

In this and in other villages, there are many persons who are either too old or too weak or with some physical defect---the lame, the deaf, the blind, the polio affected, the paralytic---who are finding it difficult to earn even a subsistence wage. Some of them also have families to look after. What they are able to scrape together is very inadequate in these days when prices are soaring sky-high. I am proposing to help such people in the villages around Brindhavan with finance and facilities, to start some employment opportunities through tailoring, carpentry, painting, spinning, weaving and other such village industries. They can recite the Names of God, sing bhajans and practise naamasmarana (Remembering God's Name) even while engaged in these crafts, so that they can earn both peace for the mind and food for the body. As Vemana sang, they will have the "art of earning money to be happy here, and the art of earning Grace to be happy there."

Bhajan has been part of our ancient culture

The others, too, villagers who toil hard in the fields during the day, can gather after their night meals in this Venugopaalaswami Temple hall and fill themselves with the joy and peace that bhajan can confer. Those who sing bhajans get what can be called 'double promotion,' for they derive Joy and distribute joy! Life today is filled with sorrow, it is beset with fear and despair.

The only time you can forget these thoughts and strengthen yourself to meet the hard times is when you contact the Source of all strength, God. You cannot get that peace and joy while you bend under the burden of daily life. You are carrying a huge load of worry all day; keeps that aside for an hour every evening and spend that time with God who can make your shoulders strong and your burden light. You will relish the bhajan as you make it a daily function, like eating and sleeping. You eat twice a day for the upkeep of the body; should you not do bhajan as least once for the upkeep of the mind?

Bhajan has been part of our culture, part of the Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion) tradition. But it has survived, In however attenuated a form, in the villages only. It has disappeared from the towns, where people have more 'exciting' ways of spending time and recuperating their spirits. But this programme of congregational bhajan by all must be fostered, developed and transplanted in the towns later. I am glad to note that the young men of this village and of the adjacent villages, especially those who are attending the Sri Sathya Sai College, are evincing keen interest in these bhajans. That is indeed a promising sign fraught with great potential for the future of this country and its culture. They are cleansing their own minds and helping to cleanse the atmosphere of these villages. The air even over these villages is polluted by vulgar film songs, by demeaning and disgusting conversation. The 24-hour long bhajan will purify it by Divine vibrations, and those who breathe the pure air will be healthier and more upright in behaviour.

The student who made a speech welcoming Me, ended by requesting Me to come once again to this place for some function which he referred to. I am ready to come to your village as often as you wish, for I find the humanness of man thriving only in the villages. In the towns people have lost it. You know Sri Krishna was born in a village where he later tended cattle. His brother always had a yoke on his shoulder, was proud of it.

Dharmasthaapana (the restoration of righteousness), has to start from the village where it is still found, however feebly or faintly.

Therefore you have to live in the path of Dharma and treat it as the very goal of all your activities. Be united in that adventure and encourage one another while proceeding along the path. Then success is assured.

Seegehalli, 4-12-1976

27. Jesus

MAN is as a seed. The seed sprouts, becomes a sapling, grows into a tree and fulfils its destiny, offering flowers and fruits to the world. 'So, too, man rises from childhood through adolescence into youth and middle age, and when fully grown up he has to justify himself by offering to the world the flowers and fruits of good thoughts and deeds, himself acquiring the fullness of wisdom. A bird has need of two wings; a cart must have two wheels. Without these, they are mortally handicapped. Man, too, must have two types of knowledge--- to live on and to live for.

The one helps him to eke out his livelihood and the other rewards him for having lived at all. The one is called jeevanopadhi (the means of living), and the other, jeevanaparamavaadhi (the goal of living). The one enables to us to garner the material riches which make our lives comfortable and safe; the other answers the questions that haunt us and pressurise us while we live---where have we come, to where are we proceeding, how did the Universe originate, etc. No religion concerns itself with the first type of knowledge, they all are interested in stressing the second type only. Each of you have to pay attention to this second type even more than to the first, for it has beneficial impact on the first also.

Dharma provides peace, contentment and joy

Man has set down, in all lands and communities, certain rules and regulations in order to secure orderly and smooth running of his daily schedule of activities directed to the actual process of living. Since they have become part of the code of conduct, they are also described as 'discipline.'

They are also subsumed under the basic principles of dharma (righteousness). Dharma promotes peace and happiness, contentment and joy. In every community, there have appeared, off and on, great personalities who shaped and burnished the codes and adapted the details to the needs of the times.

What we must strive for today is not a new religion or a new society or a new code of morality; they are there already, in each race and country. We also have the basic plans for spiritual training already laid down in most religions. But we need persons who have attained purity in all levels of consciousness. Man can reach perfect Bliss only when his heart becomes free from envy, egoism, greed and other evil traits. We need persons who can recognise and relish the recognition of the kinship and the identity between man and man, as well as between one society and another. They have to move beyond the bounds of the limited 'I,' to break loose from the entanglements of the senses. They have to jump over the battlements of the fort called 'body,' and enter enthusiastically the wide world beyond.

Turn inwards to acquire awareness of the Divine

From the narrow vision of 'individual need' man must voyage out into the broad vision of the 'Universal.' When a drop of water falls into the ocean, it loses its narrow individualities, its name and form, and assumes the form, name and taste of the ocean itself. If it seeks to live separately as a 'drop,' it will soon evaporate and be reduced to non-existence.

Each one must become aware that he is part of the one Truth that encompasses everything in the Universe. It is reprehensible to stick for one's whole life-time to the low narrow paths of selfishness, envy, and greed. Make the heart big and the mind pure. Then only can peace and prosperity be established on the earth.

This day is a holy day, the day on which Jesus was born He announced himself as the Messenger of God. In fact, all humans are born as Messengers of God. The sole purpose of this human career is to propagate the Omnipresence of God, His Might and Glory. No one has incarnated for merely consuming quantities of food and catering to one's senses.

Human life is much more precious than that. That is why the capacity to appreciate beauty, truth and goodness has been endowed only on man.

To acquire awareness of the Divine, one need not journey to any special region or place. It is enough if the eye is turned inwards. In the Bhagavathgeetha, the inner reality, the Aathman, is described as 'resplendent like a billion suns.' But man has not become aware of the Light and Power within; he still flounders in the darkness of ignorance. The scriptures proclaim that man is amrithasya putrah (the child of Immortality). But man is unaware of this glorious heritage. He feels he is mortal, his end is imminent and his existence is temporary.

Man reduces himself to the level of beasts

The scriptures also say that the Aathman, the Real Core of the individual, is Aanandha Swaruupa

(the very embodiment of bliss). But man being blind to this truth, invites sorrow and anxiety to hold mastery over him and discards the joy that awaits him. Every man is a messenger to fellowmen, entrusted with the task of spreading knowledge of the joy that is being missed. If he misuses this mission and fritters away his years in gratifying his senses, he only loses the chance and reduces himself to the level of beasts. He who announced Himself as the Messenger of God, developed, through the blossoming of Divinity and the expansion of compassion and service in

Him, to a stage when he declared Himself as the Son of God. And then, finally, He rose to the status of 'I and my Father are One.'

When Jesus declares that He is the Son of God, He becomes entitled to the paternal Majesty and Power. These He can claim only when He grows in the qualities that His Father has. As a result he attains saavyujya (mergence), which leads Him to assert, 'I and my Father are one.' The scriptures say, Brahmavith Brahmaiva Bhavathi: He who knows Brahman, becomes Brahman.

Jesus inspired all mankind through His example

These three stages are referred to as dhwaitha, visishtadhwai and adhwaitha in Vedhic thought. Messenger and master, the two are basically separate, and so this stage is one of dhwaitha (dualism). The son and father, though two separate entities, are bound by affection and kindred feelings and attitudes. They are like the whole and the part, the body and the limb. This stage is called visishtadhwai (qualified nondualism). And when the Son and the Father are

One, the stage is of adhwaitha (non-dualism).

Even a child would be eager to pass from one class to the next higher one; he would hate being in the same class, vegetating for years. Then what can we say of persons with intelligence and discrimi-nation, satisfied with the attainment of the lower steps?

Jesus passed through the entire process and inspired all mankind by His example and teachings, to be generous and kind, detached and discriminating, and to bring Light and Love to all. He attracted people by His miracles and transformed them into apostles and exemplary servants of man.

You must realise that the Divine current that flows and functions in every living being is the One Universal Entity. When you desire to enter the Mansion of God, you are confronted by two closed doors---the desire to praise yourself and the desire to defame others. The doors are bolted by envy, and there is also the huge lock of egoism preventing entry. So if you are earnest, you have to resort to the key of prema (love) and open the lock; then remove the bolt and throw the doors wide open. The education must train you in the difficult operation.

Give up the two evils of self-praise and scandal

You undergo training in various subjects of study, but the crown and cries of all subjects of study is Aadhyathmic vidhya (spiritual wisdom). People desirous of bathing in sacred rivers are advised by Thyaagaraaja, the famous mystic, poet and singer, to bathe, in the Ocean, for all rivers pour their waters into it. Therefore a bath in the Ocean means bathing in the waters of all the rivers at the same time. So, too, the Aathmavidhya if mastered, is the key to all knowledge. It teaches us Thath, which if known, all else is known. It reveals to us that the One is in the many and that the many are really One. Ishaavaashyam idham sarvam: All this is enveloped by God," as the shruthi (sacred text) declares.

Saadhana is the name for the mental discipline and intellectual effort to realise this Unity. Jesus sacrificed his life and poured out his blood to instil Love and Compassion in the heart of man, so that he may be happy when others are happy and sad when others are sad. It is not by festivity and fun that you should celebrate Christmas. Celebrate it, rather, by resolving and putting into practice at least one of the ideals He enunciated, or endeavouring to reach at least one of the goals that He placed before man. Let Me call upon you to give up, in memory of this holy day, two evils from your mind: selfpraise and talking scandal. Adopt one habit: the habit of loving service to the distressed. If you spend all your time and energy in worldly comfort and sensual delight, you are disgracing this human existence. Life is not to be spent In just eating; eating is only a necessity for living. You consider this habitation on of yours as your body; no, It is the temple of God. God resides therein. Keep it clean, fresh and fragrant through developing Compassion and Love. Use the temple of God only for holy thoughts, words and deeds. Do not demean it by using it for low, trivial and unholy tasks. Wherever you are, whatever you do have this resolution steady and strong.

Brindhaavan, 25-12-1976

Seeing one's own reality is the opening of the doors of liberation; for this, this mirror of the heart has to be prepared, by coating the back of the heart with sathya and dharma. Otherwise, the image will not appear. In every act of yours, if you observe truth and justice, then you can see your own reality revealed.

You may say that the burden of past acts and their inevitable consequences have to be borne; but the Grace of the Lord can burn that burden in a flash; the revelation of reality will, in a flash, save you from that burden.

Sri Sathya Sai

28. Hanumaan

HANUMAAN succeeded in co-ordinating his thought, word and act. Therefore he had the unique distinction of being great in physical strength, mental stability and virtuous character. He shines as an invaluable gem among the personalities of the Raamaayana. He was also a great scholar who had mastered, of all things, the nine schools of grammar! He knew the four Vedhas {sacred scriptures of the Hindhus) and the six Shaasthras (spiritual sciences). The Geetha says that a scholar is "one who sees the same Divine force motivating everyone"---Pandithaah Samadharsinaha.

Hanumaan was a good example of this outlook. He did not pride himself that he knew so much.

He was the very picture of humility, born out of genuine sincerity and wisdom. He realised that the Raama-principle, Aathmaraama, was illumining every being, and he adored it above all else.

During their wanderings in the forest in search of clues about Seetha, Raama and Lakshmana arrived at the Rishyamuka Mountain, where they rested awhile in a shady glen. They were sad in mind and weak in physique.

The King of Vaanaras, Sugreeva, and his confidante, Hanumaan, saw them from the top of a neighbouring hill. At first Sugreeva feared that they might be the emissaries of his brother, Vaali, who had sworn eternal vengeance upon him. Or, he thought, they may be his spies moving about incognito. So Hanumaan offered to approach them and return with correct information about their identify and Intentions. He advised that Jumping to conclusions without sufficient information is fraught with danger.

The three classes of messengers

He spoke to the brothers in sweet, pleasing words. Raama was struck by the grammatical accuracy of his sentences. They readily answered all his queries and Hanumaan was satisfied with their bonafides. He offered to take them to his master and monarch. The darshan (sight) of Raama and Lakshmana had removed all his sins, their sparshan (touch) burnt away all the consequences of his deeds in previous lives and their sambhaashan (conversation) filled his mind with Joy. That is the experience of all who welcome the impact of Divinity. As a result, Raama and Sugreeva, who had common anxieties and problems, entered into a friendly compact, and both were assured that their problems would be successfully solved through mutual help.

Hanumaan became the messenger of Raama. There are three classes of messengers- those who do not understand the orders of the master or do not care to understand, and who operate to the detriment of the work assigned them; those who do only Just as much as the order literally communicates; and those who grasp the purpose and significance of the orders and carry them out unflinchingly till the purpose is achieved. Hanumaan belonged to the last category. He never flinched in his efforts, whatever the obstacle, and reported back only after he was satisfied with the result of his assignment. He could delve into the commands of Raama and know what his order meant.

Raama's words made Hanumaan very efficient

As soon as Hanumaan received the order, he felt a thrust of power inside him and a new confidence that since he had been so ordered, the strength and intelligence, the courage and the adventurous spirit needed, would be granted by Raama himself. So he never had any qualms about his capacity or capability. His body and spirit were vitalised by the very fact that Raama asked him to do something. As electric cable has a copper wire inside its plastic coating; for good operation, both must be of high quality. So, too, the body and the spirit within, have both to be in good trim, and Raama's words made them both efficient and active.

The dhharshan (sight) of Raama conferred on Hanumaan an enormous reinforcement of power, even physical power. How else could he have jumped across a hundred miles of sea, a task that even Jaambavaan, Angadha and other vaanara heroes would, not dare venture upon, which he accomplished by the mere recitation of the Name of Raama.

An important feature of Hanuman's life

The youth of India must pay special attention to the feature of Hanumaan's life. He never calculated the pros and cons---can I succeed? Why am I, of all people, chosen for this mission?

When Raama asked him to discover the whereabouts of Seetha.

"Why should I weigh the chances of success or failure?" he said to himself. "The Raama who chose me will bear the responsibility." He decided to pray and do his best. While on his flight, a hill rose up from the sea and offered him rest and hospitality, but he refused the invitation. A demoness, rose from the sea and invited him to fight with her before he proceeded further, but he brushed her aside and flew on. He sped through the sky like one of Raama's own arrows. Self-confidence was the basis of his courage; over it he erected the walls of self-satisfaction; on them he constructed the roof of self-sacrifice, and he dwelt in that mansion enjoying the Bliss of self-Realisation.

Here is a fine illustration of the devotion of Hanumaan to Raama. On the completion of the bridge and on the night before the march across to Lanka, Raama was reclining on the sands of the sea-shore in the cool bright moonlight with Sugreeva, Hanumaan, Vibheeshana, Jaambavaan,

Angadha, Nala, Neela and others around him. He was lying with his head on the lap of Lakshmana. Suddenly he threw the question why the Moon had a mark on it and what that patch indicated. Each one ventured on an answer. Some said it was the shadow of the earth, some that it indicated a big hollow or crack on the surface of the Moon, and some said it must be a huge heap of soil. Raama asked Hanumaan, who had been silent for long, what he thought about it.

Hanumaan said that it was the reflection on the Moon of the face of Raama which he adored! He had the unique fortune of visualising Raama in everything that he cast his eyes upon.

The quality of rajas is to be watched carefully

Hanumaan is pictured as a monkey, and monkeys are by nature, wayward and frolicsome.

'Monkeyish' has become a synonym of fickleness. But Hanumaan did not have any trace of this fickleness. He was of Divine descent and distinguished with the Divine qualities mentioned in the Geetha. He derived Bliss in the contemplation of Raama. He had full mastery over physical and sensual cravings. He was shining in Aathmic splendour. He had established his life on the foundations of sathva (Truth) and dharma (righteousness) and led his companions also on the same path, exercising the force of his example on them.

Of the three gunas (qualities), sathwa (the balanced), rajas (the passionate) and thamas (the dull), rajas is the quality to be watched carefully, for its first progeny is kaama (lust). Lust destroyed Raavana, who was a great scholar, warrior, emperor and a mighty hero. It can overwhelm and neutralise every good quality in man and reduce him to the level of a beast.

Anger is the second among the progeny of this quality. Anger can seize the treasure chest of wisdom from your grasp and break it to smithereens. It is usually compared with fire (anala), which literally means, not enough. It always-relishes more and more fuel to feed its limitless hunger.

Hanumaan considered every woman as his mother

Hanumaan had no lust. His anger was not of the 'not enough' variety. In order to search for her,

Hanumaan had to enter the women's apartments in the palace of Raavana to look into the faces of the sleeping women to compare their features with Raama's description of Seetha. He felt very guilty going through this ordeal and even contemplated suicide, because he would be too ashamed to show his face to Raama after this experience. But consoling himself that it was after all the order of Raama that he was obeying, he returned to continue the search. He considered every woman as his own mother, and thus searched where his mother was, not where Seetha was. This is a good lesson for the youth of today.

On the occasion of the Coronation of Sri Raama at Ayodhya, presents were given to the ministers and distinguished visitors, collaborators and companions of Raama---Vibheeshana, Sugreeva, Jaambavaan, Nala, Neela etc. Hanumaan was not given any. Observing this, Seetha, who had benefited most by his selflessness and heorism, devotion and dedication, felt pained.

She communicated her feelings to Raama who was beside her on the throne. Raama told her that she could give him any present she wished. So she took off her own pearl necklace and placed it in the hands of Hanumaan. Immediately Hanumaan took the pearls apart, and putting them one by one between his teeth, he bit each pearl and spat it out in disgust!

Seetha became flushed with anger. She whispered to Raama that Hanumaan could be nothing but a monkey. When asked, Hanumaan said, "I was only examining whether these pearls had Raama in them; I could not find any one which had, so I eat them away. If a thing has no Raama in it, it is to me as worthless as stone."

An example of Hanumaan's devotion to his Master

At this, Agasthya, one of the renowned sages who was assembled in the hall, rose up and challenged Hanumaan with the question, "Hanumaan! You say that you will not wear or bear, eat or carry anything that does not sound of Raama. Well, you carry about this body, don't you?

Does it sound of Raama to you?" Hanumaan accepted the challenge. He pulled a single hair from his wrist and held it to the ear of the sage. Lo! It was reciting 'Raama, Raama' without interruption. So deep and sincere was Hanumaan's loyalty and devotion to all that belonged to his Master. That is the reason why he achieved success, whatever the assignment.

After the Coronation celebrations, Seetha, Raama and his brothers sat together, reminiscing over past events, and some of them expressed a desire to have a larger share of serving Raama.

Bharatha and Sathrugna were the most eager. So a list was drawn up of all items of service that could be offered to Raama and the items were allotted to those present. Hanumaan was not present at the time, and when he came in, the others announced, with certain amount of glee, that he had no more chance to serve Raama as everything was now to be done by others. Raama also joined in the fun.

Hanumaan was terribly dejected and pleaded with them- "Pray, go over the list again. Give me any bit of service, however small, that might have been over looked." They were sure that nothing had been overlooked and so the list was handed over to Hanumaan himself. Luckily he discovered one item that had not been allotted. When one yawns, there is a rite of snapping one's fingers in front of one's mouth. Of course the person who yawns usually does it himself, but in the case of Raama, Emperor of Ayodhya, it would surely be infra dig if he did it himself.

Hanumaan pleaded that he might be given the duty of snapping his fingers whenever Raama yawned. The others agreed, for they thought that the chances of Raama yawning would be very rare indeed. For Hanumaan, however, it was a Godsend. Now he was ever watching the face of Raama, his fingers ready, waiting for the chance of performing the rite that was his duty!

This, too, was the Grace of Raama, for what can happen without His knowledge and His plan?

Who can keep the devotee away from the presence of God? Raama demonstrated by this Incident that no one can obstruct His wish and stand between His devotee and Himself.

Brindhaavan, 1-2-1977

29. Quenching the thirst

THE responsibilities of the Seva Dhal are of a high order. It has to lead the members, and through them all mankind, along the path of, saadhana (spiritual effort), which takes the individual from the position 'I' to the position 'We.' This has given the Seva Dhal the importance it deserves. One can realise it only when one delves deep into its significance. You have to sublimate all work as worship and try to fill every moment of your lives with that outlook. Only then can you justify your membership in this Organisation.

Through activity man attains purity of consciousness. In fact man has to welcome activity with this end in view. And why strive for a pure consciousness? Imagine a well with polluted and muddy water so that the bottom of the well cannot be seen. Similarly within man's heart, deep down in his consciousness, we have the Aathman (Divine Spirit). But it can be cognised only when the consciousness is clarified. Your imaginings, your Inferences, your judgements and prejudices, your passions, emotions and egoistic desires, muddy the con- sciousness and make it opaque.

 How, then, can you become aware of the Aathman that is at the very base? Through seva (service) rendered without any desire to placate one's ego and with only the well being of others in view is it possible to cleanse the consciousness and have the Aathman revealed.
 By doing seva, you serve your own best interest So, for whose sake are you performing seva? You are doing seva for your own sake. You are engaged in seva in order that you may become aware of the Aathman in you, in order that you may discard the allurements of your ego, in order to know yourself and to get the answer to the question that torments you, namely, "Who am I." You do not serve others, you serve yourselves; you do not serve the world, you serve your own best interest.
 You may ask: how is it possible to transcend the ego through seva?
 By saturating with love, work can be transformed into worship. When the work is offered to God, it gets sanctified into puuja (sacramental worship). This makes it free from ego. It is also freed from the earthly desire for success and the earthly fear of failure. You feel that when you have done the work as best as you can, your puuja is accomplished. It is then for Him who has accepted the puuja to confer on you what He considers best. This attitude will make the work nishkaama (un-attached). Regular practice of this discipline will render the consciousness clear and pure. It will promote chitthashuddhi (pure consciousness). Without this primary equipment how can man ever hope to scale spiritual heights? Almost all the great sages of the past spent the early years of their lives in saadhana that would ensure a pure consciousness. However prospective your career might be, however much you might accumulate the wherewithal of a comfortable life, to whatever heights of authority you might have climbed through the exercise of your intelligence, your gains shall be nil unless your every activity is suffused with the Divine purity inherent in the consciousness.
 You get blessed or punished due to your own acts I shall illustrate this point. Take an ordinary postal envelope. Upon it, in golden ink, write the address of a person in very artistic calligraphy. Insert a beautifully worded letter full of amazing sentiments, and then drop it into a post-box. What happens to it? It will not move even a yard away from that box.

 Now take a mere post card, the cheap unimpressive thing. Write the address with no special care.
 Scribble the news you like to convey. Affix a stamp and drop it into the same box. Watch what happens! The artistically ornamental envelope is inert, while this inartistic, cheap, document travels a thousand miles towards the person indicated. Therefore, whatever may be the uniqueness or importance, the furore or attractiveness, the seva that you do can yield no fruit if it is done without a pure chiththa (thought).
 Your yearning to do seva and your enthusiasm while doing seva, are rescuing you from harm.
 God is the witness. God has no desire to bless, nor anger to induce Him to punish. You get blessed and punished as a result of your own feelings and acts. Yath bhaavam thath bhavathi. As you think and behave so it becomes.
 Bad deeds never yield good, Good deeds never breed bad.
Neem seeds never yield mangoes, Mango seeds never breed neems.
 Hence a person might be an expert in many fields of 'knowledge or a master of many material skills and accomplishments, but without inner cleanliness, his brain is a desert waste or a massive stone with no trace of love, mercy or expansive virtue.
 Rituals seldom purify man's consciousness Of the nine steps in spiritual saadhana, as laid down in the Bhakthi Suuthras (aphorisms on devotion), leading to the realisation of the self, dhaasyam, or the attitude of a servant to do seva, is quite near the final goal; it is the eighth step. The study of texts, the renouncing of wealth in charity, the repetition of the name or the chanting of psalms and hymns may be good exercises to sanctify the mind and to avoid falling into evil ways and ruinous pastimes, but they seldom purify the consciousness of man. Instead they serve mostly to bloat the ego and instil pride and promote a competitive craving for superiority. You may be sitting in the bhajan hall and loudly singing in chorus, but your mind may get involved in anxiety about the pair of chappals (sandals) you have left outside the hall. Always at the back of the mind there is fear of the loss of the chappals; this vitiates the bhajan and makes it a barren show.
Seva done to a suffering being reaches the Lord The saadhana of seva is quite distinct. In seva you devote all your energy and attention to the task at hand, for it is a dedicated task. You forget the body and ignore its demands. You set.

aside your individuality and its prestige and perquisites. You pluck your ego by its roots and cast it away. You give up your status, conceit, your name and form and keep all chiththa (thought) pure. Whatever the task you are performing, renounce your personal Individuality and share its travails and troubles, its fruits and benefits, with God. You need not bring in God from somewhere outside you; He is in you, all the while. This truth must be your own discovery, your own treasure, your own strength. This is the grand purpose of the Seva Dhal. That is the reason why the Seva Dhal is assigned a high place in the Sathya Sai Organisation.

A very pious person was once proceeding from Kaashi to Raameshwaram, at the other end of this vast country. He was carrying with him some holy Ganga (Ganges) water to be mixed with the sea at Raameshwaram. That would be the consummation of his long and arduous pilgrimage through many a holy place and many a sacred river. While half-way through, he saw by the side of the road a donkey in the last throes of life, since it was too Incapacitated to move towards some source of water to quench its thirst. Its dry tongue and rolling eyes indicated the agony of extreme thirst. The pilgrim was so moved by the tragic sight that he poured the precious Ganges water he had with him down the throat of the distraught animal. Moments later, the donkey recovered and could gain enough strength to pull itself out of the grip of death. Seeing this, the companion of the pilgrim asked him, "Master! The sacred water you brought from Kaashi had to be offered to the ocean at Raameshwaram. Why did you commit this sacrilege by pouring it into the mouth of this despicable animal?" The pilgrim replied, "But I have poured the holy water in the ocean itself, don't you see?" Any seva (service) done to a suffering jeeva (individual being) reaches the Lord Himself. and can never be a sacrilege, for seva to the jeeva is seva to the dheva (divinity). Always be firm in that belief.

The Play enacted by Shiva and Paarvathi

Millions come to Kaashi as pilgrims. It is said that those who see Kaashi will not be born again.

One day at Kailaasha, Paarvathi asked Shiva, "Lord, I have heard it said that all those who visit

Kaashi, where there is a celebrated shrine for your worship, will attain Kailaasha and stay on there in your presence. Millions are coming to Kaashi, but is this place big enough to accommodate all of them?" Shiva replied, "All the millions cannot come to Kailaasha. I shall design a play and make clear to you who among the millions can come here. You, too, have a role to act. Do as I direct you to."

Paarvathi became an old hag of 80 and Shiva a rickety old man of 90. The old woman had the old man on her lap, right at the main entrance of the famous Shiva shrine of Vishweshwara, and she implored in piteous tones the pilgrims who passed by on their way to the temple, "My husband is terribly thirsty. He is about to die of thirst. I cannot leave him and go to the river Ganga to bring him water. Will any of you pour a little water down his throat and save his life?"

There is no prayer more fruitful than Seva

The pilgrims were coming up from the ghats after their ceremonial bath in the holy river, their clothes still wet and clinging to their bodies. Some of them lamented that their peace was disturbed by the sight of this pathetic couple. "We have come to take dharshan (audience) of the Lord, and look what meets our eye." There were some who flatly ignored her cries and lifted their noses in the air. Some said, "Wait. Let us finish the worship inside the temple and then we shall bring the Ganga water for you." No one offered to bring the needed help to the aged patient.

Just then a robber who was hurrying into the temple to pick a few pockets, heard the plaintive voice of old woman and halted near them. He asked her, "Mother, what is the matter?" She replied, "Son, we came to this place to have dharshan of Lord Vishweshwara of Kaashi, but my husband has fainted out of sheer exhaustion. He might survive if some one will bring a little Ganga water and pour it down his throat. I cannot leave him here and go for water. Please help me and earn the merit."

The robber was moved into compassion. He had a little Ganga water in the hollow gourd he had with him. He knelt down near the dying person on the lap of the old woman, but the woman stopped him saying, "The moment the Ganga water wets his throat, my husband may die; he is in the last stage of living. Therefore speak a word of truth and pour the water. The robber could not understand what she meant, so she explained, "Speak within his hearing, some good deed that you have done in your life, and then pour the water in his mouth."

That created a problem for the robber. He was at his wits end. He could not quite comply. He said, "Mother I have, in truth, not done any good deed so far. This present act, the offering of water to this thirsty man, is the very first good deed I am responsible for." And saying this, he placed the gourd at the lips of the old man and gave him mouthful. Just at the moment, the couple disappeared and in their place stood Shiva and Paarvathi, blessing the robber. Shiva said, "Son, life is to be dedicated for the service of others and not devoted to the exclusive interests of oneself. Howsoever many wicked deeds you might have done so far, for your selfless offering of Ganga water with truth on your tongue, We bless you with this Vision. Remember there is no morality higher than truth; there is no prayer more fruitful than seva (selfless loving service.)" Three stages of enquiry into Brahmam On the royal road to spiritual realisation, there are three stages as mentioned in the scriptures: Karmajijnasa, Dharmajijnasa and Brahmajijnasa. Iijnasa means deep Inquiry. A person becomes fit to inquire into Brahman and succeed in that inquiry only when his consciousness has been trained and shaped by Inquiry Into the modes of activity and mores of conduct---the karma (action) and the dharma (righteousness)---which clarify and purify. He who discriminates well before engaging in any activity will naturally be righteous in conduct and behaviour. Good Karma will automatically lead to good dharma. Take the example of home-made coconut chutney. It is tasted only after it is ground and got ready, and when it is eaten you find out whether salt has been added or not. Then if you discover that the salt is not enough or that it has not been added, you have to add the needed quantity to make it tasty; but you will not add salt before eating a small amount. Hence the three stages are (i) Grinding and getting the chutney ready (ii) eating it, and (iii) adding the needed salt. The preparation is the karma, the eating is the dharma and the adding of salt to make it tasty and sustaining, is the Brahman. Act, dedicate and adore---that is the way to acquire a pure consciousness. An act dedicated as an offering to the God resident in all becomes as sacred as the highest seva. Devote yourselves to this seva. Avathaars (divine incarnations) of God are engaged in seva; that is why Avathaars happen. Hence, when you offer seva to mankind, the Avathaar will naturally be pleased and you can win Grace. This is a great chance you have as members of the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal. I hope you will make the best use of this chance. I bless you that you may. Brindhaavan, 6-3-1977 30. The victory of victories THE spiritual path is the path of detachment, of sense control, of rigorous mind training. Paarvathi sought to win Shiva first by the glamour of physical charm; she had the stratagems of the God of Love Manmaatha to support allurements. But Shiva reduced the God of Love to ashes and rejected her advances. Thereafter she entered into an arduous period of ascetic austerities, and through them was able to win Shiva's Grace to such an extent that she became the left half of His sacred body. "Man must first decide, after vigorous self-examination and continuous discrimination, the path that he wishes to traverse. Moksha (Liberation), means the removal of the bonds of Ignorance that cloud the Truth and create a mirage of untruth. In fact, living is only another name for the process of achieving alternate misery and happiness, hunger and contentment, illness and health, desire and fulfilment. Man reaches out to a new desire the moment one is realised. He is ever struggling and ever unhappy, for he does not seek the eternal, the lasting, the source and the substance. He is content with the transient, the trivial and the temporary. Derive joy from making others happy Use the body as a chariot for reaching Liberation through truth. It is your duty to see that on the four wheels of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (truth, righteousness, peace and love) the chariot moves along the road to the goal. It will move on that road only if it has less luggage, viz., less desires, less worries and less fears. Desires, worries and fears are multiplied when man thinks he is the body with all its appurtenances and not the owner of the body. Karma, Bhakthi, Inaana (Work, Worship, Wisdom)---these are the three paths to God. But through Kaama (desire), Karma is warped; through lobha (greed), bhakthi (devotion) is vitiated; through krodha (anger), inaana (spiritual wisdom) is befogged. But through prema (love) one can easily conquer desire, greed and anger. Learn a lesson from the insignificant ant. When an ant spots a lump of sugar, it does not hide the fact and seek to consume it all alone. Instead it moves round to collect its friends and kinsmen, for it loves to share with others the feast it has come upon. The crow, a bird that is despised and often out-cast, when it discovers a little heap of food, caws repeatedly until its kith and kin gather at the place. What is shared is more tasty; what is held back is bitter stuff. Life is short and full of misery, so do all you can to derive joy from making others happy. If others are miserable, how can you be really happy?

"The greatness of man lies in the fact that by conscious effort it is possible to remove the evil in him. But in the case of other animals, however much they may be subjected to training and education, their base Instincts will only lie low, ready to spring up at the slightest provocation.
Shivaraathri declares that by means of spending one full day in fast and one full night in vigil--- as symbolic of conquering the senses by sleeplessly watching their antics and preventing them from inflicting harm---darkness can be turned into light, shavam (corpse) can be sublimated into Shivam (God)."
There is a purpose behind all activities of the Divine Why should this creature, man, endowed with extra sensitiveness to share sorrow and joy with others, be born in this changing world of time and space? Nothing that is born can escape death; nothing that is built can withstand disintegration. Why, then, has man been sent onto this stage of fleeting experiences? There is a purpose behind all the activities of the Divine. Man has to manifest the Divine in him and lead and guide all living beings in that adventure. He has to liberate himself by his efforts and liberate all life by his example. He must become free and secure in his own Source. This is what is called Moksha (Liberation). He is liberated from littleness into vastness, from bondage to boundless Bliss.
The ego-alloy enters man only when he is misled by the apparent diversity, to posit multiplicity in creation. The Reality which is misconstrued in the dull dusk of ajnaana (primeval ignorance), is God. To see through the fog that projects many where there is only the One, is the purpose of all spiritual saadhana. If even after years of saadhana, by which ever religion it be prescribed, the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) continues to see differences, distinctions and diversities, we can conclude that he has a long way to go before he can fulfill the aim of this human existence.

Awareness of the One ensures unshaken tranquillity When the One is realised, there can be no fear. For how can the One fear itself?. There can also be no desire, for when there is no second, how can the desire to possess arise? Neither can there be envy, hatred, greed, pride or any of the evil passions that torment man and allow him no peace. The awareness of the One ensures unshaken tranquility, Prashaanthi. The One (call it God, Paramaathma, Brahman or the Universal Absolute), is all Love, all Knowledge, all Wisdom, all Sweetness. Raso vai sah, says the Upanishath (He is Sweetness). How then can there be any bitterness in Him or in man's real nature, for man is manifested by Him, from Him and for Him?
A goat cannot be born of a tigress. What emanates from God must be perforce Divine. Hence the appellation, amrithasya puthraha (child of immortality) for man in the Upanishath. Hence the Aathman in him, which has come from the Param-aathman, is also Immortal. Sparks emanating from the flames of fire have the same incendiary quality as the fire. The body is a Temple of God and has been organised for the sake of the God who decided to instal Himself therein. Until man realises the God within, and thus comes to understand that He is the 'mystery' that was evading him while he wandered about In the wilderness of the world, he has to attend assiduously to the up-keep of the body.
Strive, yearn and struggle to merge with the Source
He can earn that awareness only by leashing the wayward mind and directing it inwards.
Shivaraathri is a reminder to all mankind of the goal of mind-control. The Moon is the presiding deity of the mind, according to the sages, and even modern science has discovered a subtle relationship between the vagaries of the mind and the phases of the Moon. In the dark half of the month the Moon is seen less and less as the days move forward, and symbolically it may be inferred that the mind, too, is undergoing a process of decline. This day is the 14th night and there is very little left of the Moon to influence the earth or the mind of man. A spurt of spiritual effort by way of vigil, bhajan (congregational chant) and fasting done on this raathri (night) or period of Ignorance, will result in the extinction of the mind and therewith the conquest of all the tendencies and attitudes which it has entangled man in. Thus this raathri can be sublimated into the heavenly splendour of Shiva.

Strive---that is your duty. Yearn---that is your task. Struggle---that is your assignment. If only you do these, sincerely and steadily, God cannot keep back for long the reward of Realisation.

The river strives, yearns and struggles to merge with the sea from which it came. It has that consummation ever alert in its consciousness. It attempts to make itself pure and pellucid so that it may be welcome by its source. It overcomes every obstacle of terrain in order to journey successfully towards its goal. Man too must utilise all the physical, mental, moral and material endowments intellectual, that God has granted him so that he may journey to the goal of Realisation.

Love can never entertain the idea of revenge
Do not be misled by the belief of the existence of two entities: this world and the next, here and hereafter. Realise the hereafter here; this world is interwoven with the next. There is no truth in the disparity between the secular and the spiritual, the godly and the materialistic, the heavenly and the earthly. In all the worlds, it is His command that runs. Not even a blade of grass can quiver without His Will guiding the wind and agitating its position. The bulb of life is illumined by the current coming from the eternal, universal powerhouse, kaivalya, working according to His Laws and drawn through the cable of Love.

When that prema (love) is tainted by selfishness, it cannot illumine at all. Self is lovelessness; Love is selflessness. Self gets and forgets; Love gives and forgives. Love can never entertain the idea of revenge, for it sees all others as One-self. When the tongue is hurt by the teeth, do you seek vengeance against the teeth? No, for they both belong to you and are integral parts of your body.

So, too, when some other person insults you or inflicts pain, allow wisdom to have mastery over you. Discover the truth and do not rush to conclusions, always keeping love as your guide.

Of course, it is a difficult task, but not beyond the capacity of man. A task that can be finished without struggle and sustained effort is not something to be proud of. It is the difficult task that provides the challenge and brings forth the best and highest in man. Embark upon this task with ardour and faith; that will be sweeter. Once victory is achieved, the rest will be added unto you.

Shivaraathri, 16-2-1977
The Gopees knew the secret of spiritual surrender. Their worship was not tainted by any bargaining spirit. For those who bargain and crave for profit, reverence is equated with returns; they sell homage at so much per unit of satisfactory response. They are like paid servants, clamouring for wages, overtime allowance, bonus, etc. They calculate how much they are able to extract for the service rendered.

Be, on the other hand, a member of the family, a kinsman, a friend. Feel that you are the Lord's own. Then, the work will not tire; it will be done much better; it will yield more satisfaction; and, the wages? The master will maintain you in bliss. What more can any one aspire for?

Sri Sathya Sai

31. The Raama Era

Sarva Jeeva dharma shaantham

Sarva naama dharma Shivam

Satchidhaanandha ruupam adhvaitham

Sathyam Shivam Sundharam

The support of all beings, the Supreme Peace;

Known by all Names, the Supreme Good;

The One without a second; the Being-Awareness-Bliss

Truth, Prosperity, Beauty.

RICHES melt away only when you spend them, but the span of years you can live on earth is shortened every moment whether you like it or not, whether you are conscious of it or not.

Therefore, you must feel an urgency in the great tasks of life. Buddhi (intellect) is a special gift that has been offered to man. This has been given him so that he might know himself but unfortunately it is now used by him to know others. When man has been given a mirror to look at his own face and set right its blemishes, he is foolishly holding it before other people's faces!

The three debts to be discharged during one's life

There are certain fundamental duties that man has to accomplish through his intelligence. Three of these are referred to in the scriptures as ma (debt). Man has to discharge three debts as a consequence of his human birth and earthly career. The first one is Dheva-ma, the debt to be repaid to the Gods. Every organ of the human body, every function in fact, is dominated and controlled and motivated by a Divine Power, or God. Therefore as a grateful repayment for the debt man owes to Him he has to use his organs, limbs, functions and skills for the benefit of other men and for the welfare of the community.

The second debt is called rishi-ma, the debt owned by man to the sages, seers and ancient lawgivers.

Long before the birth of this generation, a beneficent code of morals and a precious collection of guidelines for the realm of the spirit had been preserved and handed down as heritage through the efforts of selfless seers and sages. Each generation draws inspiration and knowledge from the previous ones, especially from the pathfinders, the pioneers and bridgebuilders in the regions of ethics, law, mysticism, sociology and religion. These persons promote concord and progress and remove social conflict; their footprints mark out the lines of individual and social development. So an enormous debt of gratitude has to be repaid to them.

The sages and seers have handed down a precious quantity of knowledge about nature, about consciousness and also about the means and methods of testing and enlarging that knowledge.

But today man is neglecting this heritage and even discarding it as invalid and superfluous. This is suicidal. Man has to preserve this knowledge and foster it, revere it and use it. That is the way to repay the debt to the rishis (sages).

The best repayment one can make to the rishis

The festivals in the religious calendar like this Yugaadhi (The Lunar New Year), are instances in point. The rishis have laid down these days as holy days and it is your duty to become aware of the meaning and significance of the festivals and as to why they have been so designated. You can infer, from what is generally done in every home when this festival starts, the real purpose intended by the rishis. On this day people take ceremonial baths, wear new clothes, tie new fresh green-leaf festoons across their door sills, have their houses whitewashed and painted anew, draw novel designs on the floors and make their homes charming to behold. All these are reminders of the prime purpose, namely, that of entertaining fresh ideas and giving up the old faded ones, installing aanandha (divine bliss) in the mind, recouping courage and confidence and strengthening hope and faith.

Yugaadhis come and go; Nala gives way to Pingala. Plenty of milestones are soon crossed, but the Journey does not progress. You are still immersed on outdated beliefs and fancies. Observe the right codes laid down by the rishis with an awareness of the deeper plans they had in view.

Follow the Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) and perform the daily and seasonal rites, rituals, fasts, vows and vigils recommended by them, always laying emphasis on the inner meaning and significance and the spiritual aspect of the celebration. That is the best repayment you can make.

Debt to be repaid to ancestors is Universal

The third debt is the pithru-rna (the debt repayable to the ancestors), especially to the parents.

This debt is also Universal, that is to say, men in all lands and all climes have to acknowledge it; for we are all born of parents to whom gratitude is due for endowing us with a body. Adore the parents, make them happy, give them contentment and joy by paying loving attention and bestowing affectionate care. Another duty is to propagate the line through children of pure character, high virtue and noble endeavour.

Dhasharatha, the emperor of Ayodhya, desirous of paying back his debt to his ancestors, had to perform the Puthra-kaamesthi Yaaga, the Vedhic sacrifice that can bless the aspirant with sons.

This is the Vasantha Kaala (spring time). This season comprises two months---Madhu-Maadhava and Mesha-Rishabha. Mesha is the most glory-filled month in the entire year. It was in the Vasantha season that Dhasharatha released the sacrificial horse so that it may wander freely over the continent along an unhinderable course, and it was in the same month that it returned unopposed to Ayodhya. The Puthrakameshti Yaaga also commenced in Vasantha, and the four sons---Raama, Bharatha, Lakshmana and Sathrugghna---were born in Vasantha. This is the reason why the Yugaadhi is acclaimed as the Inaugural day of the Vasantha Navaraathri (the first nine nights of the spring season) culminating with the Raama-Navami (the day on which Raama was born).

Man is destined for some higher goal

Yuga means in era. This day is called not Samvathsaraadhi, the New Year day, but Yugaadhi, the first day of a New Era. The era indicated is the Dharma-yuga or the Raama-yuga, for Raama is identified as the very embodiment of Dharma (righteousness).

Raamo vigrahavaan Dharmah.

The prime duty, of every one who participates in this celebration, therefore, is to adhere to Dharma, to support Dharma and to foster Dharma.

It is mostly a question of the final goal that man sets before himself in life. The goal has to be realisation of the unity of the self with the Paramaathman (Supreme Self). Why else should the self take this human form? If mere 'living' or even 'happy living' was the goal, the self could have been encased in the form of birds or beasts. The very fact that man is equipped with memory, mind, intelligence discrimination ability to anticipate the future, desire to detach himself from the senses, etc., is an indication that he is destined for some higher goal. Inspite of this if man craves for a lesser consummation, he is a paapi (sinner). But he who persists, in spite of temptations and obstacles, on the path that leads to self-fulfilment and self-realisation, is a gopee, for the gopees (cowherd girls) of Brindhaavan were the most inspiring examples of such souls.

The most effective discipline that man can adopt to attain this lofty goal, is the control and conquest of the five senses, avoid the errors and evils that the eye, the ear, the tongue, the mind and the hand are prone to commit. These are called the panchadoshas (five vices).

The eye ever seeks the vile and the vulgar. Notwithstanding the danger to his own life and body, the motorist will stare at obscene posters advertising a movie film. The eye must be held in check so that it may not ruin the mind as well as the body of man.

The ear craves for scandal and salacious stuff. It does not persuade you to attend discourses that can really help in your spiritual development. Even if you chance to attend any, the ear dissuades you by giving you a headache. But when some one pours abuse on another, the two ears attain maximum concentration.

Start the day and end the day with Love

The tongue is doubly dangerous unless held in check, for it speaks scandal and creates craving for taste. It is well nigh Impossible to lead the tongue towards the path of japa and dhyaana (spiritual recitations and meditation), however sweet be the Name of the Lord. Suurdhas pleads with the tongue to call out the Names--- Govindha, Dhaamodhara, Maadhava. When the eye, ear and tongue are under control and capable of being used for self-improvement, the mind and the hand can also easily be held in check. Thus when man realises himself, there is no need to inquire where God dwells. He dwells in the pure heart of man, clearly shining in His innate splendour of Wisdom, Power and Love.

Give joy to all. Prema (Selfless Love) is the means to achieve this ideal. When Love can bring even God nearer to you, how can it fall where man is involved? Krishna could not be bound by any other means. That is the reason why Sai has declared Start the day with Love; spend the day with Love; fill the day with Love; end the day with Love. That is the way to God.

Yugaadhi, Brindhaavan, 20-3-1977

Through a desire to judge or estimate or evaluate, you cannot discover the mystery of God; through devotion and faith, you have to win His Grace, which will reveal Him to your understanding and experience. Steady faith alone can earn victory. You cannot be changing your allegiance as and when you please. Hold fast until the realisation is awarded.

When a man is suffering from the effects of cobra-bite, they give him chillies to chew; the idea is they will not taste "hot" if the poison is still in his system. So too, when the poison of worldly sensualism is there, puuja, japam, dhyaanam all will taste drab and dismal.

Sri Sathya Sai

32. The brother among brothers

THE ideal of brotherhood as depicted in the Raamaayana is without parallel in any other epic anywhere in world literature. When, during the battle with the raakshasa (demon) hordes in Lanka, Lakshmana fell unconscious and could not be revived, Raama lamented the calamity, saying, "Alas! Lakshmana is the source of my breath; there is no brother like him on the whole earth." Lakshmana's life and relationship with his brother Raama are shining examples for mankind.

It can be said that Lakshmana is the A in the sacred syllable AUM; Bharatha, the second brother, is the U; Sathrugghna, the third, is the M and Raama, the eldest, is the full AUM. Raama is the concretisation of the Brahman (Universal Absolute) that first emanated as the Primeval Sound, AUM. When Raama and Lakshmana were wading through the Jungle after the loss of Seetha, the sages who saw them described them as the 'Sun and Moon,' so majestic and magnificent was their mein. They shone with the splendour of courage and determination. When strength of body and steadfastness of mind reinforce each other, one's mein becomes attractive. Youth today has neither physical strength nor mental steadfastness, so young people appear old very early in life.

When the body is weak, the mind, too, gets weak. You must try to develop physical well-being and health, for a gem has to be treasured in a safe, strong box. The gem of Divinity that is your reality also has to be kept in a strong box, namely, the body.

Lesson for today's youth from the life of Raama Even during their boyhood Raama and Lakshmana were careful about how they dressed. During the period of their early spiritual apprenticeship, they discarded princely robes, even though Dhasahratha tempted them to wear costly jewels and clothes. When in the forest as exiles, they wore deerskin and had their hair knotted on top. They argued that a dress must be worn for one's own satisfaction and not in order to imitate someone else. They were never slaves to fashion or convention. They laid down the norms for others and never imitated others just to earn their favour.

Heroism was the hall-mark of the brothers. They met every obstacle squarely and exhibited the necessary enterprise and ability to meet and overcome opposition. The youth of today have to learn this lesson. They quaff before the tiniest obstacle and lose heart at the first difficulty they encounter. Like the heroes of the Raamaayana they should march forward bravely, whatever the handicap, in either the secular, the moral or the spiritual fields of activity. When the truth of One Reality in all, the Reality of God, is revealed, then there will be no more room for anger or hatred. They will seek and see only the good in every one. At present the passion in their eyes colours their version.

Lakshmana could not tolerate separation from Raama. Thulsi Dhaas, while composing his epic poem, Raamacharithaamaanas, wrote that the flowers in the gardens of Lanka were white. Hanumaan, who was present unseen, manifested himself, his face full of dissent, for he said that they were red and not white, as he had himself seen them:

Thulsi Dhaas refused to amend the adjective, but Hanumaan insisted that the error be corrected.

The argument almost turned into a scuffle and Raama Himself had to intervene. He told Hanumaan that since anger against raakshasas (demons) had reddened his eyes, the white flowers appeared red to him.

Lakshmana had a pure heart from his very birth. As he grew up he was able to overcome the urges of his senses and establish himself as their master. His character was above reproach. He eagerly welcomed any order from Raama and enjoyed fulfilling it to the best of his ability.

Lakshmana spent the first two days of his life wailing aloud in the lap of Sumithra, his mother.

She tried all remedies, magical and ritual, to console him, but the baby would not be consoled or persuaded to eat or to sleep. She consulted Vashishta, the Royal Preceptor, who advised that Lakshmana be laid beside Raama in the palace of Kausalya. She did as directed, and in the company of Raama Sumithra's child slept soundly and played most happily. He could not tolerate separation from Raama. His greatest desire was to be in Raama's presence. He followed Raama like his shadow, never residing in a place where Raama was not present. Raama was all that he wanted, all that he cared for.

Steadfast loyalty of Lakshmana to Raama

When Raama started out into exile in the forest wearing garments of bark, Lakshmana, too, did the same. For fourteen years he watched over his brother and his wife, guarding them day and night without any regard for his own comfort or even for sleep or food. Thulsi Dhaas pays great tribute to Lakshmana for this devoted service. According to him, when Raama returned to Ayodhya after his period of exile, the citizens in laks cheered at the distant sight of the flag on top of the chariot which was bringing him. But they did not know, he says, that the pole which carried the flag of Raama's triumph was Lakshmana, the devoted brother. How could the flag fly so splendidly without the dedicated service, the undaunted courage and the steadfast loyalty of the brother who gladly shared the travails of exile with Raama?

In the course of Naaraayana's enactment as a nara (man) named Raama on earth, He had a crucial role to play. Lakshmana laid down his life for the purpose of realising the Mission of the Avathaar (divine incarnation). He never transgressed by as much as a step, the boundary laid down by Raama. When Raama ordered him to raise a fire into which Seetha was advised to step as part of the fire-ordeal to prove her chastity to the world, Lakshmana obeyed with a bleeding heart. When Raama ordered him to take Seetha out into the forest and leave her alone and unguarded there, Lakshmana obeyed, though his heart was wrung with pain.

Lakshmana gave up everything to serve Raama

There were two occasions when Lakshmana had unfortunately to go against the specific orders of Raama. When Maareecha, after enticing Raama a long distance away by assuming the form of a golden deer, was finally killed by him, he imitated Raama's voice and cried out before dying, "O Seetha! O Lakshmana! Help me, Help Me!" Lakshmana, knowing this to be a trick of the raakshasa (demon) Maareecha, and in accordance with Raama's instructions, did not leave Seetha's side. However on Seetha's firm insistence to trace Raama's cry for help and on being accused by her of ulterior motives, he finally left her alone at the hut and went in search of Raama.

The second instance occurred towards the end of the Avathaar period. The Gods sent Yama himself to Raama, to remind him that his life as an Avathaar could be ended and all the Divine participants could return to their Heavenly abode. When Yama came into the audience hall, Raama directed Lakshmana to be at the entrance and not allow any one to enter and Interrupt the conversation. He told him to be vigilant, on pain of death. While Lakshmana was keeping watch, the short-tempered sage, Dhuurvaasa, approached him and demanded entry. He was furious on being stopped and threatened to lay a terrible curse of destruction on Ayodhya, its inhabitants and, on the entire Raghu clan. Lakshmana weighed the pros and cons and concluded that his death would indeed be a lesser calamity than the destruction of the entire population of Ayodhya. So he admitted Dhuurvaasa and gladly received the punishment. Lakshmana decided every act of his on the touch-stone of either Raama's wish or the general good. He gave up everything---his wife Uurmila, his mother Sumithra and the princely life at Ayodhya---for the chance of serving Raama and furthering His mission. When he killed Indhrajith in battle, Raama embraced him with unbounded joy, and exclaimed, "Ah, dear brother! What a great victory you have achieved today. Now I feel as if I have already got Seetha back." Humility, heroism and noble character of Lakshmana Between Raama and Lakshmana there was never any trace of envy or suspicion. Lakshmana was supremely indifferent to what was happening around him If it did not affect Raama. His greatness is immeasurable. He served Seetha every day for fourteen years, but never once raised his eyes to her face. His conduct was the height of righteousness. When the bundle of jewels that Seetha had thrown along the way while being abducted by Raavana was retrieved by the vaanaras at Rishyamuka Hill, they handed it over to Sugreeva. Sugreeva brought it before Raama and Lakshmana for identification. When Raama asked Lakshmana whether he could identify any of the jewels as belonging to Seetha, Lakshmana said that he could vouchsafe for the genuineness of only one jewel---that which Seetha wore on her ankles. He saw it every day when he fell at the feet of Seetha and so could recognise it as unmistakably hers. Such was the noble character of Raama's brother. When Lakshmana fainted during the battle with Indhrajith, the latter wanted to lift his unconscious body and carry him into Lanka as a hostage. But since Lakshmana was the incarnation of the cosmic serpent, Sesha, he was tremendously heavy and could not be moved.

So Indhrajith gave up the idea and went away. Meanwhile Hanumaan arrived there, and on his uttering the name of Raama, Lakshmana's weight was reduced to that of a feather, so responsive was he to Raamanaama even in his unconsciousness. This is a measure of the humility and the heroism of this great-brother of Raama.

Summer Course, Brindhaavan, 26-5-1977

Give the body the attention it deserves, but not more. Some people advise that you should cultivate disgust towards it; but, that is not beneficial. Tend it as an instrument, use it as a boat, as a raft. Disgust is not a desirable attitude towards anything in creation. Everything is God's handiwork, an example of His Glory, His Majesty.

Sri Sathya Sai

33. Yoga maarga

CAN thirst be quenched by water droplets or hunger appeased by grains of rice? The realisation of the Truth of Creation and the Creator involves hard discipline and steady faith in the paths prescribed by the sages. These paths lead man to the goal through inquiry, devotion, dedicated work, meditation, worship and other such disciplines.

There is also the process of Yoga (divine communion) which is widely advocated now-a-days as a means for self-realisation available to practitioners. It is being taught and propagated as a sure and simple means of Liberation. Novices and common folk are misled by the high promises, and they have to be warned in time of the limits and possibilities of Yoga as now taught and propounded.

The very first axiom of Yoga as a spiritual discipline is to 'conquer the agitations of the mind.'

However, this is more easily said than done, for the mind has to be dead, not dormant. Of course there are persons who have achieved this victory, but none of them will be available to you for guidance in mind-control or mind-conquest. They would be so sunk in aanandha (divine bliss) that the demands of the body, the time, the causal chain, etc. can never reach them.

Yoga is mergence of the individual into the Universal

What can be expected from a teacher of Yoga is only a diluted, limited, pseudo type of Yogadharshan

(Yogic Vision or realisation), for only those who have stopped half-way in the path of Yoga will come forward as instructors and guides. When one has gone the entire length of the road, one has perforce to leave the world and its needs behind.

Yoga means union or yoking, and the jeevaathma (The Individual Soul) has to be yoked with the Paramaathan (Supreme Soul); one has to find its fulfilment in the Whole, of which it is a part.

As the rivers carry the waters of the sea back into the sea itself happy to lose the limitations of their names, their size etc In that consummation, so the individual merges into the Universal.

That is Yoga. It is Yoga that happens to the salt doll that is dropped into the depths of the sea to calculate the depth of the water. The salt too comes from the sea and becomes one with the sea.

Man has five koshas (sheaths) covering his individuality---the annamaya (material), praanamaya (vital), manomaya (mental), vijnanamaya (intellectual) and the aanandhamaya (blissful). When man turns from the objective world to the subjective world within him, he can unsheath his Individuality and reach his Bliss Nature. But most men revel in the very first sheath---the material sheath---and remain engrossed and entangled in material pursuits and pleasures. Man does not realise that he sees only what he wants to see; he cannot see beyond his need. Therefore unless his desires are purified and clarified, he cannot penetrate it into the inner realms of delight.

The various chakras in the body

If you ask any one where the words he utters come from, he will reply that they do so from the vocal chords. No. The vocal chords can produce sound, but not words.

The spinal column, from the muulaadhaara chakra to the ajnaa chakra (the energy centre at lowest point of the column to the energy centre at mid-brow spot) is like the veena, the strings of which when drawn and played upon, produce resonance. The vital and the mental sheaths are involved in these regions.

When the playing fingers halt and press on frets fixed on the veena at irregular intervals, different notes are created and delight ensues. When the mind decides upon an idea that is to be communicated, the prana (life force) plays upon the strings and words emanate.

The muulaadhaara, the lowest of the chakras (energy centres) at the lower end of the spinal passage, is the embodiment of the Prakrithi (Nature) principle.

Therefore it is related to the annamaya kosha, the material facet of man. It is the prithvi thathwa (the earth-principle.)

The swaadhistana chakra at the point of the navel, is the guardian of the praanamaya kosha, the vital facet of the person. It is the agni principle, the spring and source of warmth in the body, that maintains the processes of digestion and protection from environmental change. The manipuuraka chakra is the next highest on the spinal scale. It is the jala thathwa (water principle), that helps the circulation of blood both into the heart and out of it, from all parts of the body.

The anahatha chakra is in the region of the heart. It embodies the vaayu (wind) principle which is in charge of the breathing process, inhalation and exhalation, so vital for life and activity. It also vitalises the spinal force, and passes over the frets of the inner veena.

The visuddha chakra is in the pit of the throat, near the pituitary gland. It represents the aakaasha (space or ether) principle and promotes abdha (sound).

The ajnaa chakra on the mid-brow spot is the embodiment of vijnana---the Splendour of Aware-ness---for when this chakra is reached, man glimpses the Truth, gets transformed and becomes translucent. It is only a step away from the final realisation, when the Sahasraara chakra (the thousand petalled energy centre) on the crown of the head is attained. That is the consummation of all saadhana (spiritual effort), of all search.

The stage of desire operates in the first two chakras, the stage of endeavour (kriyaa shakthi) In the next two and the stage of awareness (Jnana shakthi), is most evident in the last two. The awareness is there, latent in every one, ready to surface when the veils of ignorance are removed.

The individual life-force or jeevathathwam, resides like a lightning flash in the womb of a blue cloud between the ninth and the twelfth rings of the spinal column. It will be alert and awake only when saadhana of any type is done after the cleansing of character and habits.

Essential qualifications for the aspirant of Yoga

If, however, the Yoga path is undertaken when the senses are still potent and overbearing, the effects on one's emotions and passions will be disastrous. One will become insane and talk and write absurd and ribald things about oneself and others. I have known many cases of such saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) who have gone astray. That is why shama (control of the outer senses), dharma (control of the inner passions and emotions), uparaathi (withdrawal of the mind from external pursuits), thithiksha (acquisition of the power to bear heat and cold, grief and joy, profit and loss etc., with equanimity), shraddha (faith in the scriptures and in the experience of sages) and samaadhana (equal-mindedness and fortitude), have been emphasised as qualifications for the aspirant. Yoga as taught and learned at present is, at best, only a system of physical exercises, a means to acquire health and a sense of physical well-being. It cannot be spiritual discipline leading to selfrealisation.

The body which is composed of the five elements, can be affected by these Yoga practices. The mind has no illumining power of its own and, like the Moon, it can only reflect the light of the Sun or the Aathman (Divinity) within. The Aathman can be known only through Love; all claims to the contrary are spurious and missing the mark. Through the kundalini shathi

(Serpent Power) and its ascent through the chakras, it is well-nigh impossible to realise the Universal Aathman. Even when realised, the experience is not communicable through lessons.

The vision attained must be of the One without a second; only then can it be genuine. The core of every being must be recognised as One.

There was once a Guru (preceptor) who initiated his pupil in the Naaraayana manthra: Om namo Naaraayana. When the pupil left his presence, he called him back and gave an additional direction saying, "Have the form of Naaraayana (Lord Vishnu) before your mental eye when you repeat the manthra (sacred formula)." The pupil left, but the Guru called him back again and told him, "But be careful that you do not think of a monkey when you are reciting the Name and contemplating the Form." The pupil agreed, but whenever he Sat down to meditate, the monkey could not be pushed aside. He kept telling himself that he should not think of the monkey but the monkey insisted on peeping into his consciousness. So he complained to the Guru and asked for his advice.

The Guru said that Naaraayana is Omnipresent and immanent in every being and so he can meditate on Naaraayana as the reality of every being that appears in his vision. How can you separate some things as not God and others as God? They are all labs, organs and cells of His body. If you separate all such limbs, organs and cells, what is left of the body?

Therefore do not be led into the yoga marga. It is fraught with danger since there can be no efficient teachers. But yogaasanas can always be practised for better health under proper guidance.

Summer Course, 16-6-1977

34. The Universal Prayer

Om bhoorbhuvaha swaaha

Thath savithur varenyam

Bhargo dhevasya dheemahi

Dhiyo yonaha prachodhayath

THE Gaayathri (Vedhic prayer to illuminate the intellect) is the Universal prayer enshrined in the Vedhas (Divine Knowledge), the most ancient scriptures of man. It is addressed to the Immanent and Transcendent Divine which has been given the name 'Savitha' meaning 'that from which all this is born.' The Gaayathri may be considered as having three parts--

--(i) Praise (11) Meditation

(iii) Prayer. First the Divine is praised, then It is meditated upon in reverence and finally an appeal is made to the Divine to awaken and strengthen the intellect, the discriminating faculty of man.

The Gaayathri is considered as Vedhasaara---"the essence of the Vedhas." Vedha means knowledge, and this prayer fosters and sharpens the knowledge-yielding faculty. As a matter of fact the four Mahaavaakyas or 'core-declarations' enshrined in the four Vedhas are implied in this Gaayathri manthra.

Every human being has four birthdays

The Gaayathri is usually repeated at dawn, midnoon and dusk. But God being beyond time, it is a result of our limitations that we talk of dawn and dusk. When we move away from the Sun it is dusk; when we move into the light of the Sun it is dawn. So you need not be bound by the three points of time to recite the prayer. It can be repeated always and everywhere, only one has to ensure that the mind is pure. I would advise you young people to recite it when you take your bath. Do not sing cheap and defiling film songs. Recite the Gaayathri. When you bathe, the body is being cleansed; let your mind and intellect also be cleansed. Make it a point to repeat it when you bathe as well as before every meal, when you wake from sleep and when you go to bed. And also repeat 'Shaanthi' thrice at the end, for that repetition will give Shaanthi or peace to three entities in you---body, mind and soul.

Every human being has four birthdays. The first is when he emerges from his mother's womb and, being neither holy nor unholy, craves only for food and shelter; the second is when he begins his spiritual study to lead him from darkness to light; the third is when he has gained wisdom, having mastered the disciplines propounded by the rishis for achieving self-realisation; the fourth and last is when he realises his true identity and merges with Brahman.

Never give up the Gaayathri mantra

The vainopaveetham (sacred thread) is a symbol of purity which is necessary if you wish to participate in the vajna of Living. Life is a continuous series of sacrifices of the lower for the sake of the higher, of the tiny in favour of the vast. Upanayana, the word which has been given to this ceremony of Initiation, means the conferment of another eye.

Your two eyes cannot reveal to you the magnificence and the majesty of the realm of the spirit.

They are focussed towards the objective world and its transient attractions. So the Gaayathri mantra has been given to you as a third eye to reveal to you that inner vision by which you may realise Brahman.

Gaayathri is a treasure you must guard throughout your lives. If you have not caught the sounds of the mantra correctly now, learn it from your parents or from your family priest. Perhaps the others may not know the Gaayathri themselves or they might have forgotten it through culpable neglect. Then I would ask them to learn it from you.

Never give up the Gaayathri; you may give up or ignore any other mantra but you should recite the Gaayathri at least a few times a day. It will protect you from harm wherever you are--- travelling, working or at home. Westerners have investigated the vibrations produced by this mantra and have found that when it is recited with the correct accent as laid down in the Vedhas, the atmosphere around becomes visibly illumined. So Brahmaprakaasha, the effulgence of divine will descend on you and illumine your intellect and light your path when this mantra is chanted. Gaayathri is Annapoorna, the Mother, the sustaining Force that animates all life. So do not neglect it. Elders and priests, mantra, have given it the custodians of this the go-by. But you, as Inheritors and guardians of the great culture of this country, have a great responsibility in preserving it and demonstrating its efficacy and worth.

Upanayanam Day, Brindhaavan, 20-6-1977

It is as absurd as putting the cart before the horse. The physical is subordinate to the spiritual. The body is the cart and the spirit, the horse. Of course, the cart should be kept in good condition; vice ruins the body and makes it unfit for the journey of life. The mind is the horse and that is neglected and not groomed for the journey.

It is starved.

In this land where Meera, Jayadeva, Valmeeki, Thyaagaraaja, Raamadhas and Tukaaram, by their intense yearning and fortitude, showed the path of achieving lasting joy, precious years of life are thrown away in silly adventures.

Sri Sathya Sai

35. One-pointedness

EDUCATION must impart those qualities in the individual that will ensure his peace, and thereby, universal peace. It should cleanse the mind of all traces of narrowness and help in fostering unity and love. This is the message of Bhaarith from time immemorial. The Vedhas

(revealed scriptures of Supreme Knowledge) proclaim these as the goals of education. This is the Vedhabhoomi, the land that reveres the Vedhas, which the sages learnt through Divine Revelation. The seeds of this Message grew up as saplings and blossomed in the garden of the Upanishaths. These saplings then grew and into ancient Shaastras (spiritual sciences), and the winds carried the fragrance of their aanandha (divine bliss) to the four corners of the world to vitalise and awaken the people of all the continents.

In those days the sages lived with their pupils in hermitages, in quiet sylvan surroundings on the banks of rivers. Each hermitage was a university with the sage as the Kulapathi (Chancellor).

They were proficient in all the branches of knowledge and eager to give the knowledge over to whoever could receive it and make the best use of it. They succeeded in their mission as a result of their own efficiency, the enthusiasm of their pupils and the sublimity of the environment. It was all so simple and sincere, so fresh and free.

Teacher-pupil relationship in the olden days

The environment which surrounds educational institutions today is quite the opposite of this ancient picture. Then the pupils lived with their preceptor in his residence and imbibed not only information but also inspiration, not only manners but also morals.

They rose with the dawn, bathed in cold water and went through the rigorous schedule of prayer, study, meditation and household chores. They ate the food that the preceptor gave them.

There was no distinction made in any of these disciplines between the prince and the peasant, the son of a Pandith (scholar) or of an illiterate. There was no opportunity to waste time in idle pursuits or trivial gossip, or in satisfying vain whims and fancies.

Every pupil was acquainted with the basic values of Indian culture, their origins and developments and their essential validity for the progress of their country. Today the number of pupils has vastly increased but the quality of both teaching and learning, has suffered much. Serving the teacher was itself part of education in those days; it was easy to please the teacher and get the best out of him by the process of loving service. How can salaries and fees ever satisfy the teacher? They only increase the greed for more. Then the world's prosperity and peace were built on foundations of dharma (righteousness); now they depend on dhana (riches).

Man is the crown of the animal kingdom

The creation of the Universe must have happened when even time was unknown. Countless living beings have dwelt on this planet since, and the existing species are also innumerable. Man is considered to be the crown of the animal kingdom; his is the summit of living beings. Of janthus (living beings), it is said, he is the highest. Why? Because he is the only animal that can investigate his own self and realise and reveal the Divinity which is his reality. Other animals have no thirst for the basic inquiry and no hunger for this satisfying wisdom. This thirst has led many to posit that there is God and others to deny the existence of God. God is described in the Geetha as "more minute than the minutest and larger than the largest." Let us consider this paradox a little.

We cannot see the air that surrounds us though we inhale and exhale it every moment of our lives. How, then, can we see the minute atom and the particles of energy that it is comprised of?

Similarly with a clouded, and therefore limited, vision, how can we visualise Brahman, the basic Divine Force that manipulates even the subtle energy within the invisible atom? Of course when the vision is purified into its most subtle aspect, (suukshma-buddhi) and when we are equipped with the wisdom-eye (Inaana chakshu) as Arjuna was, then we can identify the Divinity that lies behind the minutest form or particle.

Stages of change of the created Universe

As for being larger than the largest, consider the Sun. It is about 93 million miles away from the earth. Hence if we travel towards the Sun at the rate of 500 miles per hour and 24 hours a day, it would take over 20 years to reach it. The Sun is so big that the terrestrial globe can be dumped into any one of the thousands of pools or 'pits' which astronomers have discovered in its surface.

The stars that appear to be so tiny and so multifarious are each far bigger than the Sun, and the distances between them are far greater than even the distance between the Sun and the earth!

How can the petty mind of man ever conceive this vastness of the entire cosmos? But here too the sages by their sharpened Intellect and ecstasy-filled minds, have been able to visualise God, Immanent as much in this macrocosm as in the microcosm and even transcending its boundaries of space and time. Their experience has led them to express their adoration through names such as God, Allah, Jehovah and Bhagavaan. These are embodiments of the Glory and the Grace they tasted, the Love they felt as being at the core of the cosmos.

The created universe is called Prakrithi (Nature); prior to the Manifestation, there was darkness; after the Manifestation, there was light. The darkness was the thaamasik (quality of inaction) state, when there was no activity. The light was the raajasik (quality of agitative) state, when with movement and agitation, uplift and downfall alternated. The 'five elements' were then formed, and in time attained comparative quiet. That was the saathwik (quality of serenity) state, when Divinity shone through them. These five elements are perceptible by the five senses; in fact they are the responses to the needs of the senses. The saathwik state is the Divine state, when light is shed on the Truth. This Truth was there even before the creation and the cosmos.

Meaning of 'one-pointedness' of mind

Truth is more fundamental than the atom. Every atom and every star manifests the Truth to those who have the eye of wisdom. Each aspect of science has a special feature when it applies to some one group of things or beings. What is the special feature of man? If he too lives and dies as any animal, how can his supremacy be justified? His supremacy lies in his capacity to become aware of his Truth. We use the phrase 'one-pointedness' when referring to saadhana. The meaning that we generally give to that phrase is not correct. Each sense organ or faculty has 'a point' which makes it valid. Don't we say, 'There is no point in it,' when we condemn some thing in an argument? Seeing is the 'point' of the eye; hearing is the 'point' of the ear. If there is no point or agram, it is blind or deaf. The sense is then afflicted with some disease, It has some defect. Even if you catch a slight cold, the nose loses its 'point' for it cannot discover smells.

Now what is the 'point' of the mind? When we say 'one-pointedness' it must mean that the mind should be pointed towards the One-the One that is denoted as being without a second, the One which has willed that It may become the many. Unless the mind lays aside all other pursuits and seeks to become aware of the One that has become the many, it can be said that the mind too is diseased and is suffering from some defect.

Elevate yourselves by speaking and doing good

The sages of ancient India had mastered this one-pointedness, and when they willed they could transmit this awareness to their pupils. Such persons are rare today. We have teachers in plenty but none of them has taken up with determination this task of discovering his own identity. With the disappearance of rishis (sages), the rishikuls (hermitages) of those days have become the schools (rishikul-shikul-shkul-school) of today.

I have told you often that besides your parents, your teachers and your elders, you have to also revere your deeds. Deeds elevate us or drag us down; they chain us to both, birth and death, or they deliver us from that chain; they result in Joy or grief, prosperity or poverty, gain or loss, pleasure or pain. You must realise that your enthusiasm or despair, success or failure, are but the consequences of your actions. While engaged in action, you come up against certain laws of nature which you cannot overstep. If you loosen your hold on something you have in your hand, it will fall down; similarly, if you slip while ascending a ladder, you shall fall, irrespective of your caste, creed or status. The law does not differentiate. In every deed or act, God is present as the Invisible Motivator; in every minute thing that you handle or manipulate, God is present as the Inner Core. So always try to elevate yourselves by doing good, speaking good, seeking good, and having the good of others in mind.

Education must confer humility and selflessness

You do not lose much if a finger is so damaged that it needs to be cut off. The body can still function and be a fit instrument. Even if you lose a limb, you can function and benefit with the help of your faculties. But If you lose your character, then everything is lost! You can be worthy of the name 'student' only from the day on which you imprint this thought on your mind. Do not allow laziness, hatred or anger to contaminate your hearts. The world looks forward to your leadership in establishing and ensuring peace; how can this be realised if you cultivate hatred and anger? Practise calmness and the habit of deliberation. Don't get agitated and yield to mass frenzy, that is a sign of weakness and waywardness.

If anyone blames, abuses or hurts you, do not return him with the same. Behave nobly and with patience. When a dog bites a man, the man does not bite the dog in return. Education must lead you from darkness to light. It is only those who wander in darkness that fall into pits; can a man walking in the light fall into a pit? If he does, it means that he is still in the dark, Vidh means light, and a vidhyarthi (student) must seek light and gain it. What is the use of an eye that does not reveal to you the pitfalls? Education must endow you with that type, of eye which will reveal in time the pits that yawn in your path.

Vidhya must confer humility, selflessness and the ideals of service. If a man adores his stomach and his material wealth as his heaven, how can he be honoured as a scholar?

The educated man must be ready and skilled to serve his parents, his villages, his state, his nation, his language and his culture. The air in a balloon is limited within the parameters and to the shape of the balloon; unless it bursts the balloon and overcomes its barriers, how can it merge with the Universe? Similarly, unless the self attains awareness and conquers the barriers of the ego, it cannot merge with the Omnipresent, Immanent Divinity.

You are born in society; it has helped to guard, guide and foster, you, to educate you and to fill you with dreams and Ideals, Repay to society the debt you owe to it. Proclaim aloud that you are Indians. Decide with pride and enthusiasm to serve India. The story of India and the culture of India---these are to be adored as your parents.

College Day, Brindhaavan, 30-7-1977

Man thinks he is enjoying the pleasures; but really speaking, it is the pleasures that are enjoying man, for, they sap his energies, dry up his discrimination, eat up his allotted years, and worm into his mind, infesting it with egoism, envy, malice, hate, greed and lust.

Sri Sathya Sai

36. The I in you

THE company one keeps determines one's character; a person tries to join the group where he can freely express his innate nature. So Sathsang (holy company) is a very important requisite for moral and spiritual advancement. Man, by nature, is prone to cater to the desires that arise within him or the urges that are prompted from without. Very often these are deleterious. So he ruins himself by giving them the chance to overpower his personality.

Consider the happy influence that good association can exert. A length of string is a worthless thing---no one will wear it in the hair or place it reverentially on an idol of God. But when it associates itself with a few fragrant flowers, then women decorate their coiffure with the length of floral garland and devotees place the garland on the idol they adore.
A block of stone in a public square is a much neglected and misused thing---street dogs often foul it. But let the stone receive the company of a sculptor or his pupils, it is shaped into a charming idol of God and installed in a temple to receive the homage of thousands. Again, take the example of the domestic mouse. In the houses where it dwells it is hunted and trapped, poisoned and killed; but when Lord Ganapathy adopts it as His vehicle, it comes to be adored as a holy animal.
Evil company demeans and debases man The serpent is hated and beaten to death whenever it makes an appearance, for it is dreaded and avoided by man. But in association with Lord Shiva (who has it coiling round His wrists, ankles and neck), the serpent receives reverence from millions. The company of the Divine gives it a halo of consecration.
So, too, evil company demeans and debases man. Take the example of fire. Fire is held to be sacrosanct and holy and is religiously fed and fostered in every orthodox home where the Vedhas (revealed scriptures of spiritual wisdom) provide the guidelines of life. But when the fire enters a ball or a rod of iron, it has to suffer hammer blows in plenty while the rod or the ball is being shaped into some tool by man! Attachment to the iron brings about this calamity for the highly venerated fire.
The years of life allotted to man as a result of the enormous amount of merit earned and accumulated through many lives in the past, have to be utilised for the purpose of rising higher into Divinity. For this adventure, congenial and inspiring company is essential. Riches decline only when spent, but life is, in its own course, being clipped short every moment. Even when we sleep, unconcerned, every minute makes us older, takes us nearer the grave.

The real end of freedom is Wisdom In order to direct time into useful channels, life has to be regulated and limited, habits have to be sublimated, harmful tendencies have to be corrected and constructive attitudes fostered. These imperatives are emphasised in the Sathya Sai Hostel, though some of you may not appreciate the restrictions and guidelines presented for your conduct. They might be irksome to you just now, for you have joined this hostel quite recently having grown up in totally different kinds of environment.
Perhaps you crave for what is called 'freedom of will and action.' But when you have not fixed an ideal before yourselves, this freedom can easily become licence to give yourselves up to deleterious habits. What is the end of freedom? The real end of freedom is not pleasure, but wisdom. Sweccha is the Sanskrit word for Self-Will. Self here means the higher Self, the Overself. Its Will is ever to merge with the Supreme and be immersed in Aanandha (divine bliss).
dust consider the fate of students in most of the other colleges and hostels. Note the unhappy state of affairs prevailing there. The atmosphere is not congenial either for academic achievement or for personality development. It is full of imitative excitement and factional politics. Has man evolved from the animal, only to descend to degradation worse than that of the animal? Is man to be motivated only by the needs of hunger and fear like a cow which comes forward to eat a tuft of grass, but runs away at the sight of a stick?
Man should be motivated differently. Again, can man be happy by merely attending film-shows or by roaming about in bazaars and spending time aimlessly?
Accept the ideal of a disciplined life In many cases the parents and elders are at fault because they are bad examples for their own children. They drink and gamble, hate and fight. Education has to save you from pursuing these wrong paths. I may tell you that students who lived in this hostel for some months, in accordance with its rules and regulations, have won the appreciation of authorities of its sister colleges in Bangalore for their punctuality, earnestness and disciplined behaviour.
A disciplined life is the best offering you can make to the country or to the Divine In you. One single person who is averse to regulated living may, by his example, spoil the careers of many others with whom he comes in contact. So each of you must accept the ideal after analysing its implications and being convinced of its validity. Animal instincts and impulses have persisted in human nature as vestiges, and it is only when their upsurge is controlled and gradually eliminated, that the springs of Divinity can manifest, themselves. This hostel provides you just the opportunity, and the sathsang (good company) here helps, you to accomplish this.

Nature can be modified by nurture; even dogs can cease to relish meat when they are trained to relish only vegetarian food. So open yourselves gladly to the influence of the sathsang available here. Of course, storks ridicule the swan and crows carp at the cuckoo's song, but in spite of all the cynicism the swan sails upon the water as grand as ever and the cuckoo has not developed any flaw in its song. Those who ridicule others eventually find themselves isolated and laughed at for their own idiosyncrasies.

Most intelligent schemes of men can become flops Very often even the most intelligent schemes of men result in the opposite turn of events due to some fundamental flaw in their reasoning. It was in Bobbili, years ago, that an infectious disease resulting in boils on the skin, spread fast. It was discovered that the infection originated from domestic rats. Since the rats could not be totally destroyed by means of traps, the ruler decided to encourage people to keep cats as pets, and he gave each householder a liberal monthly allowance of rice for feeding the cats. Five kilograms of rice was supplied to the householders every month. After a time complaints reached the ruler to the effect that the cats were not being properly fed, and that the householders were themselves consuming the rice intended for the cats. So the ruler ordered them to present themselves in the court with the cats they were rearing. When they appeared along with their pets, it was discovered that the rumours of misappropriation were false. Every cat was astonishingly well-fed and plump.

One cat, however, the one reared by Raamakrishna, was lean and hungry. When the ruler charged him with misuse of the rice supplied to him by the state, he said, "Master! None of these other cats has ever caught a rat. Those cats are too well-fed for that.

When they have no hunger, how can they seek out and kill rats? My cat catches at least dozen a day." The ruler had to agree that his plan was a big flop. It had produced just the opposite result! Remember, the rules laid down for you are for your own good. Whatever I do, speak, or order, is for your good, for rendering your future years happy and fruitful. This is the most valuable period of your lives and you must be thankful that you are spending it in this atmosphere, in the midst of this sathsang. All this is being done because I know that you are all Mine. Even if you deny that you are Mine, I shall persist in telling you that you are so until you understand. For I am the Divinity that is your Reality.

The 'I' in you is disturbed and becomes distressed when you stray into unrighteousness and wander into waywardness. Therefore understand well the value of the schedule of work and worship prescribed for you here, and have your personalities moulded to the best shape so that you may shine forth as inspiring examples of service to man and God.

Sri Sathya Sai Hostel Brindhavan, 17-8-1977

The pure heart is the best mirror for the reflection of Truth. So all these disciplines are for the purification of the heart. As soon as it is pure, all truths flash upon it in a minute.

Sri Sathya Sai
 37. The inner yajna
 THE deeds of man elevate him or engender his fall. All deeds of his that are in consonance with the principles of righteousness deserve the dignity of the appellation, yajna (sacrificial rite).

There are two types of yajna mentioned in the sacred texts; the external and the internal. The outer form is not so important or productive. It is mentioned only to be discarded and dismissed, for, of what use is a shell without the kernel? Adoring the Lord while meditating on His Name and Glory is also a form of inner yajna.

The yajna in which animals were sacrificed at the altar (bali-peeth), is an external act, but it has an inner significance. The mind is the sacrificial post and the animal instincts still resident in the human character are to be slaughtered on the bali-peeth of the mind. The megalomania in man which urges him on to blind pursuit of power is the buffalo that has to be sacrificed. The foolishness that overwhelms man and renders him weak and docile is the sheep that has to be renounced. The slyness and stratagem-filled mind of man is the cat that has to be given up in the same manner. This is the inner yajna of which the outer yajna is but a reflection. When the external rites are being performed, their inner significance must be kept in view. It is a sin to go through with the outer formalities without any knowledge of their significance.

Man is many animals in one Man has passed through many animal lives before he has come to earth in human form. Strains of animal nature such as cruelty, anger, greed and hatred still persist in him. Man is many animals in one. He has the jackal, the buffalo, the tiger, the elephant---all in him. He must east off these traits from his composition. When he indulges in needless and useless controversy on matters beyond his understanding, he is announcing himself as a sheep; when he jumps from one idea to another, from one ideal to another, from one project to another, without fully involving himself in any, he is exhibiting the nature of the monkey.

The nature of the Inner yajna can best be understood if we examine the story of Emperor Ball.

He was the grandson of Prahalaadha, the celebrated devotee of the Lord. Prahlaadha braved a succession of inhuman tortures inflicted on him by his father to force him to retract his faith. Bali placed at the Feet of the Lord, as an offering to Him, all the lands he ruled over, as well as Heaven Itself, which he could claim as a reward for his piety. Bali decided to perform the unique yajna named Vishwajith. One feature of this yajna is that it can be undertaken only by an emperor, signifying victory over his enemies and sovereign power over their peoples. The emperor announces by this yajna that he is the unquestioned master of the empire that he has enlarged, and immediately after this announcement he rids himself of the vast treasures he has earned and accumulated by force of arms, in lavish charity among all sections of his people.

Bali was a ruler who placed the welfare and prosperity of his subjects foremost in his consideration. He was the symbol of discriminating talent, Prajna shakthi. And the Lord who came to him as Vaamana, is the symbol of the Divinity latent in every one. ,When that Divinity manifests Its Omnipresence. It takes on the Thrivikrama (the trifold aspect), covering earth, sky and the heavens.

Reason for the Lord seeking charity from Bali

The Lord's Incarnation as Vaamana and His Manifestation as Thrivikrama, happened at the place later called Siddhaashrama, abode of achievement. This was the place also chosen by sage Vishwaamithra for his austerities. Vishwaamithra means "friend of the Universe." He was not merely a great sage, he was the embodiment of the Higher Will, the Icchaa Shakthi (Power of desire).

Legend has it that the Lord sent Emperor Bali down to the nether regions. This only indicates the trampling of the ego into oblivion. The usual belief is that the performance of yajnas according to Vedhic regulations will confer worldly prosperity and heavenly joy. But Emperor Bali renounced material benefits and illusory joys. That is the reason why he could get Divine grace to such a large extent that the Lord Himself sought charity from him!

Yajna is an exercise in renuciation

Any act that is performed as a dedication to Godhead is a yajna.

Manu, the ancient lawgiver, has declared that reverential prostration done before the mother, father and preceptor is indeed a yajna; when the egoistic pride or greed is absent and when the object is the good of all, certainly the deed is yajna.

Throughout the empire of Bali, there was none so poor that he was forced to beg for alms. Those who came into his realm from outside were also well provided for.

The yajna is an exercise in renunciation; it should not emerge off and on, and then be submerged. The spirit of renunciation must be evident in every single act throughout one's life. Bali was an example of this type of consistent renunciation. Those who manage to go through life without caring for honest living are akin to the crow, and those who adopt devious ways to earn a livelihood are akin to the jackal.

Though Emperor Bali was born In a raakshasa clan (known for its demonic nature, but with the one exception of Prahlaadha), he had acquired a pure heart, free from hatred and pride. He had mastered the waywardness of his mind. The Lord then appeared before him as a mendicant, as a great tribute to his worthy nature. The Lord asked from him only three feet of ground. This was a symbolic request, for the three feet meant the bhuu, bhuvar and suvar lokas, representing the gross, subtle and causal bodies of man. The lokas (worlds) are not placed one over the other or one after the other. They are Immanent, each in the other. The visible loka is the bhuuloka, the vital atmosphere around it is the bnuvarloka and the world of aanandha which envelopes the vital is the suvarloka. Man has five koshas (sheaths) which encase him. The material and the mental comprise the bhuuloka, the vital and the intellectual comprise the bhuvarloka and the aanandhamaya is the suvarloka. Man falls by attachment and rises by non attachment. The royal preceptor of Emperor Bali was Sukraachaarya. He had, by his austerities and scholarship, attained a place of high honour among the monks, but he stood in the way of the renunciation which Ball had set before himself. Sukraachaarya could teach, but he did not himself follow what he taught others as desirable. He was a highly respected monk, but he had this one great flaw. It is such people, who call themselves 'theists' and 'believers,' that promote atheism and disbelief. They have no faith in the validity of what they profess; their actions are contrary to their declarations. Scholars run after possessions which they declare are 'trivial and temporary.' They preach devotion to God but are devoted to mammon. They accuse others for causing the decline of dharma (righteousness) but they are themselves the cause. When Bali came forward to offer to the Lord three feet of ground that He had asked for, Sukraachaarya, the all-knowing preceptor, protested and pointed out that the Lord had come only to ruin Bali and rob him of his possessions. But the pupil was greater than the preceptor. He replied, "Well, if He is the Lord Himself who is extending His Palm to receive the gift, I am certainly the most fortunate being on earth. The hand that creates and fosters the Universe is now held before me, and my hand held over It is dropping the gift into It. Do not prevent me. Be happy that It has become possible for me to do this. I shall renounce heaven, my empire and even my life for this one piece of good fortune." Man falls by apeksha (attachment) and rises by upeksha (non-attachment). Ball reached the acme of upeksha and his preceptor failed to bring him down. The Vishwajith-yajna was the external yajna (sacrificial rites), but the inner yajna was the great renunciatory surrender of Bali at the Lotus Feet of the Lord. In the consecrated fire of the heart he poured, as offering, his ego nature; he rose, humbler and wiser, and saluted the Divine within Himself, manifest as Vaamana incarnate. Inauguration day of Yajna, Prashanthi Nilayam, 15-10-1977. What is heard has to be pondered over. What is pondered over has to be put into practice. It is only when all three are accomplished that the realisation of Bliss can be attained.

Sri Sathya Sai
38. Krishna Avathaar

This day is being celebrated as the birthday of Krishna. Krishna was born in prison, a fact that teaches us that God has to incarnate or present himself in the dark and narrow prison-house of our hearts, so that we may derive light and earn freedom. Maaya is the delusion that hides the truth of Being; it tends to identify one's truth as the physical body with its appurtenances, and prompts us to cater to the cravings of the body. Man thus forgets the Divine and instead listens to the call of the animal in him, consequently falling from his high ideal. But when Krishna is born in the cellar of his mind, man is saved. Man must therefore become aware of God within the cavity of his heart.

Yesterday while returning from Ooty we halted at Bandhipur Wild Life Sanctuary, and riding on a tame elephant, we moved into the forest to catch a glimpse of wild elephants. Imagine, sitting on an elephant, we were seeking elephants! When we caught a glimpse of a trunk in a bush, we were overcome with delight. Sitting on a tame, domesticated elephant, we were eagerly searching for an elephant in its natural surroundings, unaffected by artificial habits and skills.

Man, too, is everywhere ignoring the Aathman within himself in its natural environment and trying to seek the shadows that attract him.

Significance of Krishna being born as eighth child Sri Krishna was born as the eighth child of Dhevaki. This is significant, for Samaadhi is the eighth stage of spiritual effort, coming after yama, niyama, aasana, pranaayaama, prathyahara, dharana and dhyana. These are known as ashtaanga-yoga, the eight-fold discipline (abstension from evildoing, observance, control breath, posture, withdrawal of mind from sense objects, concentration, meditation and absorption in the Aathma. The Lord can be visualised only after the seven steps are successfully negotiated and the mind purified in the process. The term, samaadhi (superconsciousness state of bliss), is generally identified with a temporary loss of consciousness, or even more, a temporary heightening of the consciousness. But we have to judge the state by the effect it has on the person and his attitude towards himself and others.

Samaadhi combines sama (equal) dhi (intelligence), that is to say, intelligence grasping the fundamental equality of every being. Not only will all feeling of difference and distinction disappear, but even notions such as heat and cold, grief and joy, good and Samaadhi combines sama (equal) dhi (intelligence), that is to say, intelligence grasping the fundamental equality of every being. Not only will all feeling of difference and distinction disappear, but even notions such as heat and cold, grief and Joy, good and bad, will become meaningless. When man reaches that state, the Lord is automatically born in his consciousness. The moment Krishna was born, the chains that bound his father fell off, the doors that had been bolted flew open and the prison guards were immersed in the ocean of bliss so that they could not recognise any event or thing in the material world. The fire of hatred that was burning in them was cooled and darkness gave place to the dawn of wisdom. The sky showered raindrops to soften the earth and lay low the dust. How can the elements operate against the Divine Will? Sound, touch, light, taste and smell---all became sublime to celebrate the new era of peace and plenty. Depth of Vasudheva's devotion to the Lord Vasudheva, as instructed by 'the voice,' placed the child in a basket and carried him on his head across the Yamuna river (which parted to give him the right of way), to Gokul, where at the same time Yasodha, consort of Nandha, had given birth to a female child. Just when he emerged from the prison, a donkey brayed to indicate the good women, but Vasudeva was afraid it would awaken the guards. So after placing the basket on the ground, he held the child's feet with both his hands and prayed to him that he keep the guards asleep. That was the depth of his devotion to the Lord. When he went to Nandha's house and entered the lying-in-room, she had just delivered a baby girl. There was no one there, except Raadha, Nandha's sister, who was nine years old. Vasudheva lifted her babe and placed the baby Krishna by her side. The female child symbolised maaya shakthi (deluding power), for she ushered the Avathaar (divine incarnation) of the Lord. Yoga shakthi, too, has to be ever with the Avathaar, and it came as Balarama, born to Rohini, another wife of Vasudheva. Maaya shakthi played her ruse as soon as she was placed in the bed of Dhevaki. She cried aloud, awakening the guards, who reported the arrival of the child to Kamsa.

He had expected that the eighth child would be a boy, but nevertheless, he took hold of the girl and smashed her upon a rock. Maaya shakthi flew up into the air, declaring that the person who was to kill Kamsa was growing up safely in Gokul. Krishna being Divine, no one could harm him. Though Kamsa slaughtered a number of babies from Gokul, Krishna escaped his eye. Krishna systematically overpowered and killed various emissaries sent by Kamsa to Gokul under various pretexts. Puuthana, a demoness, assuming a charming human form, came to Nandha's house offering to breast-feed the child. She said, "Mother! You have lost a number of new born babies. Perhaps my breast milk might save this one." Yashodha, believing that she was a woman of true compassion and that her milk might have the holy effect she claimed, handed the baby Krishna over to Puuthana. But Krishna knew her intentions, and drawing out her breath he left her dead. But let us pay more attention to the boy than to his exploits. All these exploits reveal that Krishna being Divine, no one could harm him or suppress him. According to the folk-belief, they pierced the ears and nose of Krishna in order to ward off death, which had carried away many children from the family, and put a golden wire on the nose. The nose-ring had a small-sized pearl. The pearl is won by diving into the depths of the sea, so it symbolises the viveka (discrimination) that is won after diving into the secrets of the objective world. Also since it marked the tip of the nose, it sought to emphasise the need to concentrate, to meditate on the tip of the nose, the eyes not being fully open (for that would distract the attention), nor being fully closed (for then sleep would intervene and put an end to the process of meditation). They should be half open, their sight being directed to the tip of the nose, where Krishna wore the pearl. The three vows that Krishna took Krishna's complexion was neither fair nor dark; it was three parts dark and one-part fair, an amalgam of both. Since they were of the Vaishnava caste, the parents placed a line of musk on the centre of his brow. He wore silver kankans (bangles) on His wrists, such as cow-herd boys wore in those days in that part of the country. But the kankans that Krishna wore were not mere kankans. They had profound implications. One rite that every Hindu has to perform before undertaking any enterprise of a sacred nature like performing a yajna (sacrificial rites) or undertaking a vow or taking on a new stage of life, is the tying of a kankan to the wrist, which is symbolic of his determination to fulfill that vow or carry out the duties of that stage of life. Krishna had taken three vows and the kankans were symbolic of his determination to fulfill them. They were, as mentioned by Him in the Geetha:

(i) Dharma samsthaapanaarthaya sambhavaami yuge yuge (I shall incarnate Myself in every age, to revive and resurrect dharma). (ii) Yogakshemam vahaamyham (I shall bear the burden of ensuring peace and prosperity for all who rely on Me). (iii) Mokshayishyaami maa sucha (I shall save all those who surrender whole-heartedly to Me, and I shall liberate, them from the cycle of birth and death).

Thus Krishna assured man that He would save him from penury and grief and from sin and its terrible consequences, provided he adheres to Him and adores Him. He also assured the world that He would come in human form and lead mankind onto the dharmic path, and thus liberate it from its grief and the succession of births and deaths. Krishna was the embodiment of Divine Love. He says, when promising His Grace to all who adore Him with no other thought, that there is no restriction of caste, creed, colour or country or origin, and no one receives special favour as a result of erudition or age or caste. Krishna was the embodiment of Prema (love); His Prema had no bounds. How fortunate you are that you have today the same Krishna, the full Prema-Avathar, moving among you! I shall show you the very kausthubha that I was wearing at that time. (Here Baba waved his hand, and in a trice a brilliant flash of light revealed a unique Jewel in his palm---the kausthubha, famed in the Bhaagavatha and the Puraanas (mythological stories). A large greenish-blue emerald of unexcelled brightness, rectangular in shape and bordered by resplendent diamonds, hung on a gold chain. Then Baba moved among the students, teachers and others, and graciously allowed every one of them to see the sacred jewel from close).

Reason for the Divine to incarnate in human form Krishna moved among men as an ordinary person, and drew them to the observance of Hisprescriptions by means of His Divine Prema. He refrained from parading His Divine Insignia, comprising a Conch, a Wheel, a Mace and a Lotus. He did not wear even a crown. While a boy, he followed the cows into the pastures with just a towel bound round his head. (Here Baba called for a longish towel and wound it round his head to show how Krishna appeared at that time. He said that in those days, as now, there were peacocks in plenty in and around Brindhaavan and Gokul, so when he came across a fallen feather, he stuck it between the folds of the towel. It was a moment of rarest and finest delight when Baba stood revealed as the boy Gopaala, before hundreds of awe-struck and adoring devotees).

When the Paandavas celebrated the Aswamedha and the Raajasuuya yajnas, Krishna asked for some assignment to be given him, so that he might be of service. Though he could destroy the entire Kaurava race, he tried his best to instill good sense into them in order to save them. Now, as well as then, the Teaching and the Message are the same: "Know thyself, that is the only way to know Me."

Being associated ardently with all living beings winning their love through love, and through a process of correcting their vision and purifying their consciousness, leading them to the realisation of the God which is their core---this is the task before you. Unless the human form is assumed, no one will come near; if the appearance is super-human, people will keep away. So, as the Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) say, Dheivam manusha rupena: "the Divine in human form" has to come to save mankind. Believe "that which Krishna speaks" is truth. The 'five elements' are the products of the Lord's Will, so they obey the Will of Krishna. Whatever Krishna said, came true. In fact the only correct definition of Truth is, that which Krishna speaks, Believe in that. Be firm in that belief. One day when Krishna went on a stroll with Arjuna, he pointed to a bird perching on the branch of a tree and asked Arjuna, "Do you see that peacock?" Arjuna answered, "Sure, I do." "Oh, Arjuna. It is not a peacock. It is an eagle," said Krishna, and Arjuna promptly agreed that it was an eagle. Then Krishna corrected himself and pointed to the same bird, said, "I am sorry. It is a dove." Arjuna, too, corrected himself and said, "Yes. I see now it is a dove, all right." Krishna laughed at Arjuna and said, "It is not a dove at all; it is a crow," and Arjuna agreed without demur, "Undoubtedly, It is a crow," Krishna then accused Arjuna of stupidity, because he was blindly agreeing with every observation he made--- peacock, eagle, dove or crow. Arjuna replied, "What you say is the Truth for me. You can make a crow a dove, or a peacock an eagle. Why should I differ from that you declare? Your word is the Truth I go by."

You, too, must develop that faith and not be turned away by your egoism or other's cynicism.

Develop viveka (wisdom) and vairaagya (detachment) and then your hearts will bloom into fragrant beauty. You have here a picture of Sai standing on a lotus. Sai Krishna will instal

Himself in the lotus of your heart. He will be ever with you, as guard and guide, and will shower

Grace on you. He will be the Mother, Father, and Preceptor, the nearest kinsman; He will be your All.

Therefore I desire that you learn well the subjects taught to you as part of the curriculum.

Discharge your duties as students to the best of your skill and intelligence. Follow the disciplines imposed for your betterment. Practise japa and dhyana and cultivate the attitude of seva.

Become good sons and good citizens, and bring honour to the family, the society and the country.

Sri Sathya Sai Hostel, Brindhaavan, 1-6-1977

The mind has to be brought under your grip; then, the servants will fawn at your feet. The manas (mind) is the monarch; the indhriyas (senses) are the soldiers; the soldiers are now ruling the king, because he lends his ears to them and not to buddhi (intellect), who is the Prime Minister. Let Buddhi take charge; in a moment, the senses will be forced back into camp and the mind can save itself.

Sri Sathya Sai

39. Controlled pride

THE awareness of the Aathman (the Divine In man) can neither be gifted to another nor be accepted from another. It is there all the time, hidden behind the veil of ignorance. When the false image disappears, the Truth shines in all its Glory. It is like the Sun behind the passing cloud. Your duty is to deny this veil and let the Sun of Awareness shine forth and illumine your thoughts, words and deeds.

As Andhras, it is desirable that you revere your native region and native language. But the reverence should not lead to Irreverence towards other regions and languages. Be proud of your language and culture---In that there is no harm. But let not that pride lead you to dislike other languages and cultures. The languages by which thoughts are expressed may be varied, but the thoughts, emotions and feelings are the same. The language of the heart is the same, but when it comes to the tongue, it may take various forms. When it is known and appreciated that the One manifested itself as the many, and that the One is known by many Names, there is really no scope for hatred or irreverence.

Sathsang helps to develop freedom from delusion Attitudes of tolerance and reverence can be cultivated only along the spiritual path. That is the one path for attaining peace and harmony in this world of ceaseless striving and never-ending despair. The sathsang, the gathering of Godward-bound seekers, is a must for the sprouting of spiritual desire and its fulfillment. Even the tardy will soon develop a keen enthusiasm for the spirit through the influence of sathsang. A piece of string may be bright and white, but no one will wear it on the hair and round the neck. However, let it get entwined through some fragrant flowers and make of them a garland, and people will love to have it in their hair or round their necks. The sathsang of flowers gives it that high status.

A boulder, lying neglected and in-treated beside the road, will receive the adoration of millions if through association with a sculptor it becomes an Idol for a temple.

The common rat, despised as a pest, becomes holy when worshippers of Ganesh find It associated with Him as His vehicle. On the other hand, fire, which is worshipped as Agni dhevatha, becomes the target of the hammer when it enters a ball of iron. That is why Shankaraachaarya has sung in Bhaja Govindham.

"Through sathsang you develop freedom from delusion, through freedom from delusion you develop faith in Truth and through faith in Truth, you attain Liberation Itself."

Egoism is the crown of all evils

We become what we feel and act. Karma (action) shapes the future as it has shaped the present.

Karma is the supreme maker of one's destiny. So one must seek sathsang in order to purify one's Karma, which otherwise might act as a shackle. It is impossible to escape from the consequences of one's karma. The shruthi (revealed sacred text) requires you, therefore, to prostrate before every karma that you do, praying that it may not bring harm to any one or to yourself.

As child of Immortality, man is entitled to live a noble life and realise his Reality. The lotus takes birth in slush, rises through water, and dies when thrown out of water. It cannot survive for long when deprived of water. Man, too, is born in the world, lives in it, and has to exist in it. You must have heard the dictum, "All honour rendered to man reaches God." Hear also another statement, "All dis-honour inflicted on man reaches God." It is the law, as inescapable as the law that makes this piece of cloth that I hold in my hand fall to the ground when I release the hold.

Only when man is able to have the Grace of God and the reinforcement of dharma (righteousness) will he not be led into disaster. He will then be led along the path of spiritual progress, for dharma protects its protector. So long as man lives a life devoted to objective pleasures and objective victories, he cannot escape sorrow, fear and anxiety. Only the Inner Vision can grant him Aanandha (divine bliss).

For the Aathman is the fountain head of Aanandha just as egoism is the crown of all evils. Man must develop humility and a sense of proportion as regards his aims and ideals.

You have fostered this educational Institution. You must lay emphasis on universal ideals in the field of education. You must encourage those who talk the language of the Aathman, and not merely the language of the Andhras. The latter provides food for the stomach; but joy for the eye and bliss for the heart---these are given by the former. Man is not merely body; he has a mind, a heart, many levels of consciousness and a thirst for the Reality. Many practise dhyaana (meditation), but the evidence for progress in dhyaana is to be sought in a more universal outlook, greater steadiness, peace, forbearance and more eagerness to serve fellow-beings.

Dhyaana must reveal the Divine in man and thereby Induce self-confidence, self- sacrifice and self- satisfaction.

So regulate your lives in such a manner that you do not dislike others nor have others dislike you. Love all as embodiments of the same Divine Principle. Demonstrate by your lives, these ideals among the Maharaashtrians. Let them speak of Andhras as broad-minded and warmhearted.

With the co-operation of the Maharaashtrians you have built up this Institution, and I am happy to bless it and give all guidance and help. You are Mine; I am yours. When it is an educational Institution, I take special interest in it, and I am ever ready to visit It and bless the students.

Andhra Educational Society Junior College, Bombay, 30-12-1977

1. God, the source of good

SHIVARAATHRI is a very auspicious day for all. It is the fourteenth day of the lunar fortnight, when the Moon is waning and the Sun is in the sign of Aquaries. The festival is, however, related to the Moon rather than the Sun. That is the reason why it is called Shivaraathri (the night of Shiva). Unlike other nights, this particular night is the night consecration, of dedication, of illumination.

The mind is intimately associated with the Moon. Chandhra (the deity of the Moon), is the presiding deity of the mind. He loses one sixteenth of his brilliance every day after the Full Moon day and continues waning until on this night he is left with just one sixteenth of his power.

The waned Moon may be taken to stand for the mind with all its vagaries and waywardness reduced after it has been conquered by saadhana (spiritual discipline). On this night there is just a minute part of the mind left to be conquered and that can be done by keeping vigil and dwelling on the Glow of God. The vigil that is prescribed is symbolic of the eternal vigil one has to observe, while the rite of fasting is symbolic of divesting the senses of the pleasures they crave for. The night-long bhajan (congregational singing of devotional songs) is significant of the lifelong consciousness of the Divine Presence that every one should cultivate. The rites and vows laid down for Shivaraathri being absent on other nights of the year, their observance on this day comes as a reminder that they are useful.

The thoughts we indulge in, shape our nature

There are three types of men-the multi-centred, the uni-centred and the non-centred. The first group, who allow their senses, mind and intelligence to wander where they will, is a very populous group. So also is the third group, which comprises people who flit from one object to another, hop around from one thing to another in listless flippancy. For earning the concentration and single-centredness characteristic of the second group, the festival of Shivaraathri is very propitious. The bhajans and the ceaseless flow of keerthans (songs) and naamasmaran (remembering God's name) on this occasion help in the attainment of single-centredness.

You must realise that bhajan, naamasmaran and puuja (ritualistic worship) are not for pleasing or propitiating God, but for our own spiritual progress. Frequently people flatter the rich and the powerful---especially when they are in their employment or are beholden to them for some precious help---in order to induce them to shower gifts on them. But God does not shower Grace on people because they sing His praises. Nor does He come down upon them because they do not deify Him. Recitation of the Divine attributes only enables us to dwell on elevating ideals and approximate ourselves more and more to the Divinity that is our nature.

We become what we contemplate. By constant thought an ideal gets imprinted on our heart.

When we fix our thoughts all the time on the evil that others do, our mind gets polluted by the evil. When, on the contrary, we fix our mind on the virtues or well-being of others, our mind is cleansed of wrong and entertains only good thoughts. No evil thought can penetrate the mind of a person wholly given to love and compassion. The thoughts we indulge in, shape our nature; along with others, they affect us too. For example when a flash is released to photograph someone, his face is lit; but so, too, to a certain extent, is the face of the photographer.

Effect of thought on mind cannot be avoided

When a municipal truck full of refuse passes by, you are affected by the bad smell even though you may be standing afar. Similarly, a thought may be momentary, it may be trivial, yet its effect on the mind cannot be avoided. It was because the ancient sages knew this important truth that:

they declared: "He who knows Brahman becomes Brahman." The only way to become Brahman is to be ever immersed in contemplation of Brahman. With a lump of salt; on one's tongue, how can any one relish the sweetness of honey or fruits? With a lump of candy on the tongue, how can the taste of salt and savoury be known?

Immerse your mind in good thoughts and world will be good; soak it in bad thoughts and the world will be bad for you. So, recollect only good, think, plan and do only good, speak and act only good. Then as a result you will approximate God, the source of all good. This is the message of Shivaraathri.

Significance of Cosmic dance of Lord Shiva

According to numerology, the first three syllables of the word Shivaraathri---shi, va and ra--- connote the numbers 5, 4 and 2, and the fourth syllable, thri, means 'three.' 5, 4 and 2 make one whole, one composite picture of the eleven rudhras. Rudhra means,

"the one who makes man weep." The eleven rudhras are: the five senses of perception, the five senses of action, and the mind. These, by leading him astray in pursuit of trivial and transitory pleasures, ruin him and make him weep. But the Aathman, if it is sought and relied upon, sheds its rays on the eleven and makes them meaningful partners in the progress of man towards self-realisation. The rays from the Aathman illumine the intelligence, the illumined intelligence alerts the mind and the alerted mind gets control of the senses, making the path clear for the person to proceed through knowledge to wisdom.

Another significance of Shivaraathri is this: Shiva, or the Paramapurusha (the Eternal Absolute Person), in His desire to attract prakrithi (objective world), engages Himself in the thaandava

(the Cosmic dance). The dance is a divine plan to attract the material creation, for all divine miracles like those of Raama (He who pleases and delights) and Krishna (He who attracts), are for drawing people to the Divine Presence for the purpose of correcting or cleansing them, or for confirming their faith and then leading them on to the saadhana (spiritual effort) of service so that they may merge in ecstasy, in the source of all ecstasy--- chamathkaar (miracle) resulting in samskaar (transformation), leading to paropakaar (helping others) and finally conferring saakshaathkaar (direct vision of truth).

The thaandava dance is so fast that fire emanates from Shiva's body because of the heat generated by activity. In order to cool Shiva and comfort him, Paarvathi, his consort, places the Ganga on his head, makes the crescent Moon rest amidst the coils, of his hair, applies cold sandalwood paste all over his body, winds round the joints of his hands and feet cold-blooded snakes, and finally, being herself the daughter of the Himaalayas (the mountains with eternal snow), she sits on his lap and becomes a part of Him. At this Shiva rises, and both Purusha and Prakrithi dance together to the immense delight of the Gods and of all creation. This happens, according to the Puraanas (mythological legends), on the Shivaraathri day.

There are no shortcuts on the spiritual path

The significance of this myth lies in the secret taught by it of pleasing the Lord and winning His Grace. What a pity that a day of such sanctifying significance is being celebrated through a routine of meaningless and even harmful pastimes. Since a vigil is laid down, some people spend the night in witnessing a series of films or in playing cards. Can a person, rolling in bed because he does not get sleep, claim that he is observing the vow of vigil? Can a stork, standing on one foot on the bank of a stream to pick up a fish and gulp it, claim that it is practising meditation?

Can a person who refuses to eat his lunch because he has had a quarrel with his wife claim that he is observing a fast? There are no short cuts or tricks possible on the spiritual path.

A story of Shivaraathri festival at Shrishailam

Shivaraathri is celebrated in all Shiva temples, Shrishailam is a particularly famous temple of Shiva. There is a fine story told about this festival at Shrishailam. At the foot of the Shrishailam range of hills there is a village, where a boy of nine years named Baala Raamanna, attended primary school. He learned from his friends at school that their sisters and brothers-in-law were coming to their homes in order to attend the Shivaraathri celebrations on the Shrishailam Hills.

Raamanna came home and wanted that his mother should send his sister and brother-in-law too to the festival. His mother told him that he had no sister and, therefore, no brother-in-law. But he would not listen. He said he must have a sister and a brother-in-law like his friends. So his mother just to quieten him, said, "You have a sister and a brother-in-law, but they are in the temple on the Shrishailam. Their names are Bhramaraamba and Mallikaarjuna." She gave him the names by which Shiva and His consort are known--- Bhramaraamba meaning 'bee' and Mallikaarjuna meaning the 'white jasmine.' These names are very apt, because the consort draws inspiration, instruction and wisdom from the Lord even as the bee draws its sustenance from the jasmine flowers.

When he was told that his sister was in the temple on the Shrishailam, Raamanna insisted that he would go and invite his sister and brother-in-law to come home and stay there for some time. He wanted to take some presents for them, but his mother said that they were far too rich and that younger members of the family should not present anything to the elders. The mother sent the boy with a neighbour who was going to the temple to see the festival. She gave him some money so that he could get presents for the boy.

Raamanna hastened up the hill and rushed into the temple, crying

"Sister...Brother-in-law," and fell at the feet of the idol of Bhramaraamba. He held the idol in embrace and began dragging it, wanting it to accompany him. He clasped the idol of Mallikaarjuna and would not leave it. At last the priests in the temple drove him away as a mad boy. Shiva and His consort appear before Raamanna

Then in despair, he climbed a high rock and threatened to jump from that height unless his sister and her husband came with him. Just then he heard a loud voice from the temple "Brother-inlaw!... Raamanna! Don't jump! We are coming with you..." and soon Lord Shiva and His consort presented themselves before him and accompanied him to his cottage in the valley below. The mother and son were so overwhelmed with Divine Bliss that they merged in the Divine phenomenon and were seen no more. This story has added to the sanctity of the shrine of Bhramaraamba and Mallikaarjuna at Shrishailam.

Children in those days, and elders too, had innocent minds, simple hearts, and high ideals.

Nowadays cynicism and disbelief have become rampant. There is a wave of negligence and sloth sweeping over our people. For one word uttered they ascribe ten meanings to it and not one of them is correct. When a subject is mentioned, they start a series of arguments and counter arguments and in the dust that is raised, the truth is ignored. Their life is largely artificial and ideals shallow, so Divinity is beyond their reach.

Baala Raamanna had unadulterated faith, so he was able to dedicate his pure self to the Lord and reach the Goal. You must always exalt low things to a higher level by infusing them with higher meaning. Raamanna believed the stone image to be God; he did not bring God down to the level of a stone image. You may worship a picture as God, but you should not posit God as a picture.

Wood, stone or mud may be assumed to be Divine, but Divinity should not be limited to wood, stone or mud.

Dual attitude must be given up

Have high ideals. Strive to elevate yourselves. Make for the Highest Goal, God. Whatever the obstacle or opposition, do not be disheartened. Give up the animal in you, stabilise yourselves in human virtues and proceed boldly towards the achievements, of Divinity. Do not waver, going today to bhakti (devotion), tomorrow to sensual gratification and the day after again to bhakti.

When everything is successful you are all for devotion; when something goes wrong you are filled with despair; when discipline is enforced you start, holding back and when love is showered, you are foremost. This dual attitude must be given up.

The very Divine Principle which seekers strive to visualize by means of years of asceticism-and renunciation, japa (recitation of holy names) and thapa (penance), is before you here and now; realise the good fortune you are endowed with. I have this day, the holy day of Shivaraathri, granted pardon for all the errors you have fallen into knowingly or unknowingly up to this time.

Have auspicious thoughts, speak auspicious words and do auspicious deeds. And as a result of this, attain the Embodiment of Mangala (auspiciousness), Shiva Himself.

Mahaashivaraathri, Brindhaavan, 7-3-1978

Just as there are four stages in the life of everyone---boyhood, youth, middle age and old age---there are four stages in his acquisition of inaana (knowledge of Supreme Being), contemporaneous with these stages. Inaana is the ripeness of the fruit; which is the consummation of a long process, from the first appearance of the flower in the tree.

The first stage is the apprentice stage: being trained by parents, teachers, elders; being led, guided, regulated, warned, reprimanded.

The second stage is the junior craftsman stage: eager to establish happiness and justice in society, eager to know the world and its worth and values.

The third is the craftsman stage: pouring out energies to reform, reconstruct, remake the human community.

The fourth stage is the master stage: realisation that the world is beyond redemption by human effort, that one can at best save oneself by trying to reform the world, that it is all His Will, His Handiwork, His World, Himself.

Sri Sathya Sai

2. Tender saplings

STUDENT Inmates! Though you have to observe a rather strict regimen of duties in this institution, you should find in your stay here a valuable opportunity to mould your lives and shape your character for the better while there is time. A sapling can be helped to grow straight, but once it becomes a tree it cannot be guided in its growth. In your childhood you were led astray because you did not know which act was right and which wrong, There was no one to guide you along the good path. You fell into bad company because no one warned you or rescued you when you had done so. No one pointed out to you the way to God and goodness. If they had, you would have quickly absorbed the advice, for the minds of children are capable of imbibing the good as well as the bad. No one around you had faith in your innate Divinity or compassion to save you from evil and guide you into good ways.

Well, forget the past. It has already elapsed. The present is the most important time for us. Hold on to truth and follow the right path now. Sathyam vadha; dharmam chara---speak the truth, act righteousness---say the Vedhas (ancient scriptures of spiritual wisdom). Do not entertain thoughts of despair or dejection. Be happy that you have this chance of rebuilding yourselves into fine boys and girls with loveable manners and behaviour.

The Name of God on your tongue will guide you

People from the Seva Samithi (voluntary service organization) come to you and through bhajans and prayer raise an atmosphere of love and mercy. They tell you of God, the Avathaars (divine incarnations) and saints. Have Raamakrishna and Vivekaanandha as your ideals. Follow their ideals. In this institution you are given training that will liberate you, unlike the training which you had when you were children and which put you in bondage. Absorb the lessons you are taught here to the fullest possible extent and put into practice the guidance given to you.

Do not have any ill feeling amongst yourselves. Help others when they need your help and when you can really help them. Do not think that it is enough if you just sing bhajans (congregational singing) when the people from the Seva Samithi come and join you. Sing them in your minds, silently and sincerely, when you are at work with your friends, or even alone by yourself. Just as a torch in your hand shows you the way if you are walking at night in the dark, the Name of God on your tongue will guide you through the night of ignorance in your journey of life.

Resolve to be good and loving from this moment. Do your duties gladly and well, to the satisfaction, to your well-wishers. If you feel sorry for the wrongs you did, that itself will please

God and He will pardon you. If you endeavour to turn a new leaf and become better, God will shower His Grace on you. Here you are given protection and education and an opportunity to learn how to be useful sons and daughters of your great land.

Whenever an idea of hurting others or taking some one else's belongings or spreading falsehood about others enters your mind, turn to God for help. Ask Him to give you strength, for all these ideas are born of fear and cowardice, qualities which in turn come from weakness. Repeat the name of God or hum a bhajan, and you will find that all your bad thoughts-will flee, leaving you free from evil.

When you leave this institution, you must serve as examples for others by leading active, useful lives. This is a workshop where you have come like cars damaged through ignorance and neglect. You must leave the institution in fine running condition, rid of all your faults, and attractive in appearance and character. Your kith and kin, your friends, the elders of your village and all who have the welfare of the country at heart, must be happy and proud to see you acquiring new skills, fine character and eagerness to serve others.

Remand Home, Hyderabad, 19-3-1978

3. New version for Gurus

THE Baala Vikaas (organizational wing for children's development) is the primary basis of the great movement to restore dharma (righteousness) in the world. The elders are far gone in their ways, and it is difficult to expect change in their habits and attitudes. Children have to be led into good ways of living, into simplicity, humility and discipline. The parents have to be persuaded lovingly, through the example of bright, cheerful and co-operating children from the Baala Vikas classes, to send their children also to these classes. As you know, you cannot draw children to your side if you hold a stick in your hand; you will have to held some sweets instead. So the Gurus have to be embodiments of love and patience.

The ideal of the Baala Vikas is to raise a generation of boys and girls who have a clean and clear conscience. The actual syllabus is not so important as the creation of an atmosphere where noble habits and ideals can grow and fructify. The Baala Vikas pupils follow Baala Vikas discipline and curriculum only for one day in the week and attend their usual schools on the other days. So the impact of the Guru has got to be extra strong if it has to act as a catalyst in the process of modification of the behaviour patterns of these pupils.

Promote respectful behaviour to elders

The home too must feel the change in the child's behaviour. It may be advisable to gather the mother of the children once a month, or even more frequently, and give them guidelines on child care and on the higher ideals of family and social life. You can suggest to them ways and means of following up the work of the Baala Vikas in proper upbringing of children, while allowing freedom to these children at home. While allowing them due freedom, they should nevertheless hold harmful tendencies in check. They should promote respectful behaviour to elders in the family. They should be careful how they themselves behave in the presence of children, for youngsters learn a lot by emulation. A spirit of understanding and sympathy has to pervade the home. This can be emphasized with the mothers at these gatherings. This would be a necessary supplement to the Baala Vikas. The homes in which the Baala Vikas children grow, as indeed all homes, have to be clean and with vibrations free from hatred, envy, greed, spite and hypocrisy. The food that the child takes in has to be saathwik (pure). Between the age of two and five the child's mind is profoundly affected by the behaviour of those nearest it, so the parents must take care to set a good example. Workers, office-bearers, Gurus and Seva Dhal (Service Crops) members of the Sathya Sai Organisation all over the world, all must remember that they are subject to the scrutiny of the public, wherever they are and whatever they do. They must be free from the habits and practices which they recommend others to give up. The Gurus should not leave their own children out of the Baala Vikas class; they should not lose their temper; they should keep their emotions under control and not exhibit depression, dejection or a wavering Will. The quality of work is more important than the quantity, so they should not undertake to do more than what they can render satisfactorily. Let their own conscience be the judge: if they feel that they have discharged their duty sufficiently to the children or to society, then they may rest content.

Solve the problems with discrimination and love

Of course the environmental conditions for the propagation of spiritual ideals such as simple living, spiritual search and loving service, are lacking. Gurus have to deal with the children of families that are often not already devotees of Sai or of any other form of Divinity. Sometimes the husbands of Gurus may discourage the dedicated fervour with which the work is undertaken.

But even as it is, I know that great success has been achieved in spreading the Baala Vikas movement in the country. There is, however, still much more scope of expansion of this work, especially in the slum areas and in the villages.

There are also other problems of all sorts. Solve them with discrimination and deep love. Meet these problems with a desire to serve the children better and they will be overcome easily.

Gradually you will realise that the Baala Vikas is devised not merely for the education of the children but also of the Gurus. The Baala Vikas chores are bound to elevate and sublimate the thoughts and emotions of the Gurus far better than any other saadhana (spiritual discipline) can.

Remember that as Gurus, you too have a Guru guiding you and overseeing your seva (service).

So you too are pupils, and you too learn the lessons of equality, equanimity and selfless love while acting as Gurus.

Saints & seers of all lands are equally great

In the Baala Vikas classes you must try to have children from various faiths, so that friendship between them can grow into understanding, and the understanding into love. Do not talk about differences between religions in the beginning; rather stress the obvious similarities, so that the tender minds in your charge are not confused. Tell your pupils stories from the scriptures of all religions so that they can realise that the saints and seers of all lands are equally good and great,

Let the children realise that prayer is universal and that prayer in any language addressed to any

Name reaches the same God. Let them understand that God can be invoked through a picture or an idol to fulfil man's sincere desire, provided it is helpful to others as well as to oneself. Love can bind all children together for they have not yet learned to hate. Love can, similarly, unite all mankind, provided man is cured of greed, envy, desire, and attachment. The Guru should bring into his pupil's way the common factor of good advice about human conduct contained in the scriptures of all religions.

The Vedhas teach that man should adore and worship God in gratitude for His benedictions. The Bible teaches: that he should pray for peace and practise charity. The Quaran would have man show mercy to the suffering and to surrender his will to the All High. The Buddhist texts teach the lesson of detachment and sense-control. The Zendavesta exhorts man to get rid of evil propensities and shine in his own innate glory. The Guru has to imbibe all these qualities and then teach them to his pupils by precept and example.

Let your heart be not hardened by hatred

More than all else, the Guru must be equipped with sahana (tolerance) and a calm and quiet temper. He should be prepared to meet, without being ruffled, the buffetings of the environment.

When some one inquires whether you have a calm temper, do not get enraged. Some people get angrier and angrier when they are asked this. Even when you have to speak harshly to a child or parent because all other means of bringing a point home have failed, let your heart be soft, let it not be hardened by prejudice or hatred.

You must equip yourself for this task of seva (service) by some individual saadhana done daily with sincerity and regularity. The Pranava (primeval sound OM) recital is one form of such spiritual effort. It is laid down at Prashanthi Nilayam that the early dawn recital of Om should be done twenty one times. This number is not arbitrarily fixed; it has a significance of its own.

We have the five karmendhriyas (senses of action) and the five inaanendhriyas (senses of perception); we have also praanās (the five vital energies or airs) to sustain us. Then we have the five koshas (sheaths), enclosing the Divine Spark that is the Reality. These total up to twenty.

Hence the recitation of Om twenty one times purifies and clarifies all these twenty components and makes man the twenty-first entity, ready for the final merger with Reality.

The Jeethathwam (life-principle) merges with Parathathwam (the Supreme Reality). The jeethathwam may be pictured as a rider on the twenty-headed horse. Finally, you end the Pranava recital with the recital of 'shaanthi' three times. That completes the process of clarification and purification. The first call for shaanthi (peace chant) is for the purity of the aadhibhouthik (body) part of the Self. The second call is for the purity of the aadhidhaivik (the mind). The third is for the purification of the aadhyathmika (the spirit). This Pranava recital will tone you up, calm all agitations in the mind and quicken the downpour of Grace.

Om must be recited with deliberation

Om is the primeval sound, the sound caused by the vibrations of creation through the Emergent

Will of the formless and attributeless (the Niraakaara, Nirguna Brahman), and is referred to as Sabdhabrahman (divine transcendental sound). It is a composite of the sounds of 'A' 'U' and 'M.'

Just as G, O and D, taken together is pronounced 'God,' (not 'jeeodee') so too the letters A, U and

M are uttered as 'OM.' 'A' emanates from the gullet, U from the tongue lying in the interior of the mouth and M from the lips. But when Om is uttered, the sound emanates from the region of the navel.

Om must be recited slowly and with deliberation. The sound must be like an aircraft, first approaching from a distance to the spot where you are and then flying away again into the distance (soft at first, but gradually becoming louder and louder and then slowly relapsing into silence, this silence after the experience being as significant as the Pranava). 'U' is the zenith, the Kailash (abode of God), reached by the sound in its adoration. 'A' is the initial naadir, and 'M' the final.

In the Sri Chakra, the mystic figure in which the Paraashakthi (the Cosmic energy principle, and the deity presiding over it) is invoked and installed, Om is the very centre, and around it are all the other symbols placed. Man too must do this installation. Om is the real life-principle of every mantra (sacred formulae), of every man (symbolically speaking).

Mantra is what saves man, man being but the maha (mind), with which he can meditate on the mantra.

You can have this Pranava saadhana (practice of the transcendental sound) by watching the breath as it goes in and out, and listening in silence to the Soham ('so'---the 'silent' sound audible when the breath goes in and, 'ham'---the 'silent' sound audible when it goes out). You have to ponder over the meaning of Soham (I am That). What are you? You are That; you are a Spark of the Divine. You are not the body, senses, mind, intelligence, etc., with which you now identify yourselves. You are God, only caught in 'deluding yourselves that you are bound by this body.

Saadhana of this sort is a must for all Sai workers for that alone can give them shaanthi and the other most valuable gift, prema (love). It will change their vision and enable them to witness

Unity where formerly they were confounded by diversity---diversity of language, religion, nationality, creed, colour and caste. Baala Vikas can be best served only after cultivating this new vision. So both the Gurus and the pupils should decide to practise spiritual saadhana faithfully, and consider the Baala Vikas work too as a part of it.

Baala Vikas Gurus Training Camp, 6-6-1978

4. At every level of consciousness

IT is the bounden duty of man in this life, as also in later lives, to know and experience the basic cause of the Universe and all the love and sweetness it evokes in him. When that is done, man can have uninhibited bliss. All his misery is due to separation from that Source of all. He is Sath-

Chith-Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss Absolute)swaruupa (embodiment) and he must become aware of this fact so that he may be 'happy. If he believes that he is not Sath, but a lesser principle, subject to decline, decay and death, he will be haunted by fear and uncertainty. If he thinks that he is not Chith, he will be caught in doubt and dialectics and will wander on the devious paths of delusion. If he assumes that he is not Aanandha, he will be struck by every passing gust of disappointment and be subject to sorrow on every trivial defeat. The basic cause of the Universe is Sath-Chith-Aanandha, and since man too is a spark of the same first cause, he too is made of the same components.

The Original Will wished all this to be manifested. He who is the embodiment of that Will has to be adored and remembered in gratitude, for we are all expressions of that same Will. He is the One that deserves our love and homage. The gopees (cowherd girls) and gopaalas (cowherd boys), though they were not learned in spiritual lore or philosophic discipline, knew that Krishna was the visible embodiment of that Will and therefore poured their love at His Lotus Feet.

Man is Truth, his consciousness is Truth

The bubble rises from the water, floats on water bursts and finally merges in the water itself. The bubble is a temporary phase of water with a temporary name and a temporary form. If it should feel that being light and bright, it is separate from water, the idea is a delusion born of ignorance.

So, too, with man. Man is Aathman (soul), lives as Aathman (divine self) and merges in Aathman (Infinite Self). Anything conceived besides Aathman is false.

The fear and anxiety, the grief and pain, the defeat and distress of man's earthly existence---these are the result of his identification with falsehood. Man is truth, his consciousness is truth. So he ought to proceed from one truth to another, from one facet of truth to another brighter and clearer one. No one really moves from untruth to truth. What is called untruth is only partial truth, or dulled truth or clouded truth. The ultimate goal is the uncovering of Truth.

The mind is like a boulder which the intellect transforms into an image, even as a sculptor does.

If the intellect allows the senses to dictate the design, the boulder will be shaped into a horrid idol. If, however, the senses are sublimated by the spirit, the image wrought by the intellect will be simply adorable. One must have the mind fully co-operating in the spiritual discipline and not obstructing its progress at every step. Liberation is the goal and the mind must help the pilgrim at every stage of his journey. Mind should not admit any activity that is contrary to dharma (righteousness) or injurious to spiritual progress. Women preserve the culture of the country

The gopees had trained their minds to help and promote spiritual discipline and so their minds never wavered or strayed into wrong paths. They stuck to Krishna--- Krishna the Friend, the Kinsman, the Comrade, the Companion, the Lover and the Loved One. When Krishna was told by His friends and companions that the food packets that they had brought from their homes did not suffice to allay their hunger, He advised them to go a little way into the forest and ask food of the Braahmana priests who were performing a huge yaaga (sacrifice) there. But when they did so, the priests would not even speak to them for their ceremonial purity would be undone by conversing with people born of lower castes! Besides, the yaaga was not yet finished and the valedictory offering to the fire had not been made, so how could they even think of handing out food to others before they had eaten themselves?

When the boys returned with long faces indicating their failure to get food, Krishna asked them to go again, by-pass the men and ask the women instead. Krishna assured them that they would return happy and with large quantities of eatables. The boys found the women engaged in the kitchen. When they told them that Krishna had sent them to get some food, they left the kitchen and hurried to Krishna with huge quantities of the delicious food which had been prepared for the big feast ahead. Their hearts cried at the thought of Krishna in urgent need of food. They had heard of the Divine Leelas (miracles) of Krishna which revealed His Avathaarhood (nature of Divine Incarnation), such as the destruction of the demonic force sent by His wicked uncle Kamsa to slay Him. The priests peeped into the kitchen when the yaaga was over and found the vessels empty and the women gone to the presence of Krishna and His companions. Every Indian has four mothers to be adored Women preserve the culture of this country with greater tenacity and faith. They keep men on the moral path and inspire them to follow spiritual discipline. Their hearts are tender and full of compassion for the hungry and the distressed. That is why in this land women are adored and revered. Elders quote the Shaasthras (spiritual texts) which say that the home where the floor is soaked by the tears of a woman can never see peace or prosperity. Sri Raamakrishna Paramahansa took great care to see that Saaradhaamani Devi did not take his simple jokes and ridicules too much to heart, for then she might shed tears. We honour the land where we are born as our 'mother country,' the language we learn on our mother's lap as 'mother tongue' and the Universal ancient scripture that teaches us morality as VedhaMaatha (Mother-Vedha). In this way every Indian has four mothers, including the mother who gave birth to him. According to Indian culture, all these have to be adored as Divine. Cultivate non-violence, fortitude, equanimity In order to live up to the high standards, of morality which Indian culture exhorts, you must cultivate love, non-violence, fortitude and equanimity. The last three guard and foster the first, the love that you go out to cultivate. Many people have succeeded, with the help of the latter three qualities, to get their minds established in Universal love, but a large number of saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) give up the ascent midway because they lose confidence in their true selves. They do not believe in God who is the Embodiment of Love and is their real sustenance. The first faint whisper of doubt disheartens them and they slide back into a life of sensual satisfactions. Saadhana alone can steel such people to forge ahead on the spiritual path. The wise are buoyed up by the bliss of their genuine awareness; the seekers and aspirants have their urges satisfied by the experiences of people in whom they have faith. The atheists hang on, by the slim thread of reason, to the beliefs they have once entertained. If they had faith in their own selves, they would have inferred that their selves derive strength and joy only from the Overself or God. Those who deny God or the Supreme Will or the First Cause, can give no really satisfactory justification for their stand; nor can those who assert that there is God. Both have to rely on their own experience. After all how can sweetness be denied by one who refuses to taste sugar? How can one be convinced that sugar is sweet until one tastes it? We have to feel the great marvel of energy manipulating both the minutest atom and cell and the vastest, most distant star. How else can we understand this Omnipresence and Omnipotence except by accepting God as the Architect of the Cosmos?

You must have heard some people saying that no living person can be adored as God, even though the shruthis (revealed sacred texts) declare, 'Dhaivam manusha roopena' (God appears in the human form). Perhaps they can revere only a corpse! Not Shivam (God) but shavam (corpse) is what they wish to revere.

Truth is God, Love is God, Dharma is God

Many people fight shy of truth for they are afraid of facing the truth about themselves and others.

The Vedhas declare, 'sathyam vadha' (speak the truth), but these people have become so accustomed to expediency and temporary profit that they cannot stand the full dazzle of truth.

Nor is the path of dharma (righteousness) pleasant to them. They are used to byelanies rather than the straight highway of dharma. The Vedhas (ancient revealed sacred scriptures) say 'dharmam chara' (walk on the path of virtue), but for people used to crookedness, how can dharma be pleasant? Thus people repeat like parrots the two Vedhic dicta mentioned above, but they do not feel the need to observe them in actual life. In reality, Truth is God; Love is God; Dharma is God. The gopees and gopaalas saw in Krishna the Embodiment of Truth, Love and Dharma.

What He said was truth; what He was, was Love; what He did was dharma. They were so immersed in Krishna consciousness that they saw, everywhere and in everything, nothing but Krishna. Krishna for them did not exist as a separate entity in the home of Nandha; He was right in their own consciousness, at all levels of it. These gopees and gopaalas were true bhaktas (devotees) indeed.

Summer Camp, 6-6-1978

You know there is a rule here that you should come with empty hands, without even the traditional offerings of pathram, pushpam, phalam, thoyam (leaf, flower, fruit and water). Come with clean hands, hands that supplicate, not supply; hands that proclaim that they have renounced attachment to rishes; then, I fill them with Grace.

I must say that I accept certain things before giving you that Grace: I demand and take Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (I seek the gifts of truth, virtue, peace and love.)

I draw you to Me and then re-form and re-shape you. I am a kind of smith who repairs broken, leaky, damaged hardware. I repair broken hearts and fragile minds, warped intellects, feeble resolutions and fading faith.

Sri Sathya Sai

5. Madhura bhakthi

THE Yamuna bank: calmness.....charm... inspiration thrill. The cool breeze brought soft and sweet strains of Divine music from the Flute of Krishna to the ear.

Raadha came down from the high sand dune towards the waterline, with a big pot on her hip. Half way through she stopped short, for she heard her name wafted on the wind from where Krishna stood, 'Raadha, Raama.'

With eyes wide open she looked on all the four sides. No one was to be seen anywhere. And no habitation around. Krishna was ever thus.

Raadha went off in a faint and fell down, the pot still in the fold of her arm. Then she suddenly awoke to the Reality: "There is no place where You are not," she said in her heart, addressing Krishna. "The call surely came from You, none else could be so soft. and sweet, so sincere and compelling. But let me ask just for one boon of You. You made us all act our roles; we played our parts as best as we could. You urged us to laugh and to weep, and enjoyed both to your heart's content. I have had enough. Please, please let me go back to where I belong. I addressed myself in desire and in disappointment, in anger and anticipation, in anxiety and aspiration. I fed myself with sensual thrills---melodious sound, smooth touch, ambrosial taste, bewitching sight, and bewildering fragrance. I had on my ankles the jingle of illusion. I met both the applause and the jeering of the world. When I sang, delusion marked time in accompaniment. The thaamasik (quality of inertia) and raajasik (quality of passion) encouraged me to dance with their background melody. Now my limbs fall. I am sick of the whole affair. May the play end. Please, please agree to this my prayer."

Raadha and Krishna were indivisible

But Krishna did not agree. He approached nearer and nearer. The Lord is a clear mirror wherein the pure heart is reflected clear. Raadha was His image, the embodiment of His ecstasy. Raadha was the Aahlaadini Shakthi (Gladdening Power) of Krishna, and so the two were inseparable, indivisible. That is why Krishna called out Raadha, Raadha, when she made her appearance on the Yamuna bank.

Raadha continued, "This is the best chance for me to lay the gem of my devotion at Thy Feet.

Alas, it is still uncut and dull. I was misled for so long into the belief that the world is only sweet, but it is bitter as well. I have had enough. I am, as You know, prakrithi dhaara (uninterrupted flow of objective world), called Raadha. So I am burdened with three gunas (qualities)---the sathwa, rajas and thamas (goodness, passionate and dullness). Since Prakrithi (Nature) is feminine, I too, perforce am feminine."

Prakrithi is feminine and so its representative, Raadha, is also a sthree (woman). The Samskrith word sthree has three consonants - sa, tha and ra. These consonants signify the three gunas in that order - sa meaning sathwa guna (pure and good), tha meaning thamo guna (dull and ignorant qualities) and ra meaning rajo guna (passionate and aggressive qualities). Women have sathwa guna in ample measure. They are by nature helpful, tender, compassionate, humble and trustful. Next, they have also a good measure of thamo guna. They are timid, shy and unenterprising. It is good that women are such. They have been endowed by nature with only a small measure of rajo guna. Of course, this is only the general truth; there may be exceptions where the rajo guna predominates and the thamo guna recedes into the background. Rajo guna make women aggressively bold, adventurous and desirous of freedom from restraint. The day rajo guna is accepted as a mark of womanhood will mark the beginning of the end of femininity.

A woman is the first teacher of her children Man has only one home, but a woman has two homes to guard from ill fame---the home where she was born and brought up and the home where she marries. When she breaks all rules and runs unbridled into freedom, she becomes dangerous to the reputation and good name of both families---that of her parents and that of her parents-in-law. Indian culture and spiritual traditions have always awarded a high place to women, since upon her rested the strength of the entire social fabric. She is a companion and guide of her husband and the first teacher of her children---an example for their social attitudes, a model for their speech and a guardian of their health and mental happiness. She is called the ardhangini (half body) of the husband. There are many temples where God is worshipped as ardhanaareeshwara (half woman and half man)---the right half being male and the left half female. The honour and glory of a country is held to be in the hands of the woman.

 The wife can veritably make the home a temple Whenever a religious rite is performed or the Gods or Goddesses propitiated by some ritual, the wife must sit by the side of the husband or else the rite or ritual is ineffectual. This is the high status given to the wedded woman in the Indian religious scriptures. No charitable gift can be valid without the wife's assent. Of course, she has no authority to perform these rites by herself, and so she is called abala (one without strength or power). The power implied here is "spiritual power over rites." Unfortunately, the use of this word has become so widespread that women themselves have come to believe that they are fundamentally weak and powerless in all fields.

This is a big mistake; women are not weak, only authorisation to perform rituals is denied.

When Raama decided on performing the Ashwamedha yaaga (horse sacrifice), the objection was raised that Seetha was in exile in the forest, and so without his spouse he was not entitled to perform the yaaga. Some sages thought that a golden idol of the absent wife could be had by the side of the principal officiator, and so a golden idol of Seetha was made and placed in position by the side of Raama before the yajna (sacrificial rite) began. Abala does not mean lack of physical or mental strength. The wife can veritably make the home of her husband a temple, a school, a council-chamber or a hermitage.

Six streams of bhakti that flow towards God Raadha lived the life of an ideal woman in accordance with the standards set by the Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion) and kept her thoughts fixed all the time on the Lord in pure, unremitting devotion, and so she secured the bliss of merging with Him. This is the type of bhakti (devotion) referred to in the scriptures as "madhura bhakti" (mellifluous devotion)

There are six streams of bhakti, all flowing towards the Lord and characteristic of six different types of spiritual attitudes. They are shaantha, sakhya, dhaasya, vaathsalya, anuraaga and madhura.
Madhura is the highest of the six, since it gives the maximum bliss. Milk is curdled and churned, and butter produced and clarified into ghee. Ghee is the end, the final stage. So, too, madhura bhakti is the last stage in the experience of merging in the Lord. The journey ends and the feet stop when the goal is reached. When the madhura (sweet) experience is achieved, there is nowhere else to go to, nothing more to do. The totality of God is experienced in madhura bhakthi, His Poorna (full) aspect, His Prema (love) aspect. In shaantha bhakthi (calm devotion), the aspirant practises equanimity and considers all that happens to him as a gift of the Grace of God. Therefore he is unaffected by success or failure; he is ever grateful for whatever God grants him. In saakhya bhakthi (friendly devotion), the aspirant takes God as his constant counsellor, confidante, companion and mate. He feels the constant Presence of the Lord and is never unaware of Him. In dhaasya bhakthi (servitude of devotion), the aspirant feels that he is the servant, the instrument of the Lord, and revels in the role that God gives him on the stage of life. In vaathsalya bhakthi (devotion of parental love), the aspirant loves the Lord as the mother loves her child---with tenderness, anxiety, compassion and vigilance. In anuraaga bhakthi (devotion of deep affection), the aspirant is deeply attached to the Manifestation of the Lord, to all emanations of Divinity, and he is highly pleased when he gets a chance to serve them. Since man has, as his essential characteristic, the quality of love, he has only to foster it and attend to it so that he might love the Lord to the fullest, by loving the Lord's Creation as much as the Lord Himself. Then the tree of life will yield the sweet fruit of madhura bhakthi (intimate loving devotion). The fruit will have the bitter skin of I-ness and My-ness, which has to be removed. Certain egoistic desires and attributes might persist as 'seeds' which, too, have to be removed before the sweet pulp of love is offered to the Lord. When Raadha said that she had the vesture of desire and anger, she meant that she was unaffected by them. When she said that she was wearing the five elements contacted by the five senses in five distinct ways---sight, smell, taste, touch and sound---as a 'garland' round her neck, she meant that she was not contaminated by their contact. Naturally, the Lord knew that she was completely dedicated to Divinity, that hers was madhura bhakthi, that her prema had no blemish. So He granted the final consummation of bhakthi to Raadha.

 Summer Course, 9-6-1978
 6. The teacher and his task The Gurus, versed in yoga in ages past, Shed all fascination for the physical,

All dependence on desire.
 The Gurus, all through the centuries, Lead such lives and lead others too!
 EDUCATION has the responsibility of rendering every field of life fruitful and beneficial. It has a duty to the nation to make people skilful and upright. Unfortunately the educational institutions of today are following a contrary path. Man alone, among living beings, has the capacity to recognise the Divinity in himself and in all else, the sacredness of his mission and the capacity to realise his manhood, which implies detachment, renunciation, virtuous conduct and disciplined behaviour. But these qualities are not developed to any significant extent by our education today. We now believe that the acquisition of knowledge is for the acquisition of wealth. But this is not right. True education is really related to the very consummation of life. It has to do with the goal of life more than the means of living. It is only through education and more education that we can instil into the mind of man the sacred ideals of human life. Education is intended for the fulfilment of life. The cow yields milk only for feeding its calf. The calf after having its full, jumps about in joy and feels strong and happy. But we take hold of the milk intended for the calf and sustain ourselves with the strength it gives. So, also, education which is intended for the fulfilment of life is misused by us for the 'fill-fillment' of comfortable living. What we should do is to consider 'fill-fillment' as secondary and fulfilment as the primary purpose of education. What we are today teaching and learning in schools cannot be considered Bhaaratheeya education. Though our present system of education, is extolled as national education, it is in fact anti-national. It sometimes leads to the impoverishment of families because they have to sell even their properly to meet the expenses of the children. And what is the net gain? By education a young man gains a degree which is only another name for the bowl used for begging for jobs! Indian education should ideally emphasize self-reliance and independent living. It should confer on the student the courage to stand up against injustice, indiscipline, immorality and falsehood. It should grant steady faith in the Aathman (divinity) as the reality of man. These principles which should underlie Indian education are, to speak the truth, being gravely neglected by us. Our ancient education gave scope for the exercise of the Divine qualities in man. India became celebrated for her culture because in the gurukulas (hermitages) of ancient times, great teachers taught these ideals to their pupils, having already realised them in their own lives. Today much of the reform in our educational system is going to bring down the quality of the teachers.

Teachers must make efforts to live uprightly The profession of a teacher is the most responsible one in every country. If the teacher strays from the path of truth, the entire society will suffer. So you must make every effort to live your life uprightly. You have in your charge, looking up to you for guidance, children so innocent that they have no knowledge yet of the world and its ways. It is only when the teacher himself is wedded to discipline and observes good habits that his pupils will be able to shape themselves into ideal individuals and citizens.
When the teacher falls a victim to bad habits, undesirable manners, bad company and evil behaviour, the children too will naturally be drawn into evil ways.
Thus the teacher has to bear the responsibility of promoting the welfare of the world or bringing the world down to disaster.

Of course even today there are some teachers who follow the ancient ideals. Indian culture is, even today, flesh and green only because there are in the country some teachers filled with holy feelings and sacred ideals.
In truth, teachers who got the chance to attend this camp are fortunate. From the vast expanse of Andhra Pradesh where we have thousands of teachers working in schools, you alone---about six hundred of you---have been selected to attend this camp. And you have been assigned the duty of moulding the children of your schools into ideal pupils.

Rishikuls have disappeared today Every village school is to be transformed into a gurukula and every teacher into a rishi (sage) who will lead the children along the material, moral, ethical and spiritual paths, until they become ideal citizens of India. You too belong to the line of the ancient rishis, because you have been chosen for this task. What has happened today is the disappearance of the rishi from the rishikul (abode of sage), so that it has become the miserable 'shkul' or school!

Each religion teaches man the righteous path;
He has only to know it, and march along.
If the vision is straight, what can division do?
Listen to this truth, O child of India!

You should not give room for any doubt and discussion on religious matters. You must recognize the truth that can reconcile and bring together all religions without distinction. Teach the children this truth and instil love and harmony-in the tender minds of boys and girls. They are now lovely creepers who depend on you and your care for their proper growth and blossoming.

The holy undertaking has been started by the Chief Minister and the Minister for Education.

They have planted the sapling. Your teachers are entrusted with the duty of tending it and making it grow into a fine tree which will offer its flowers and fruits to the world. You must help the flower of peace to blossom and the fruit of spiritual equanimity to be shared by all mankind.

In fact you are not merely teachers at your own schools, but are teachers of the human race.

Therefore you have to cultivate in your own heart the spirit of sacrifice, the virtues of charity and the awareness of Divinity. Then only do you become entitled to cultivate these in the hearts of the children. But unfortunately these principles of Indian education are absent in schools today.

You must try your best to reshape the system and make it really Indian. Of course in the initial stages you will find this task very difficult and exhausting, but be assured that as you proceed you will find your task more and more easy.

Students must lead lives of service & sacrifice In the coming days we will take up each subject and the possibilities and implications of teaching it. Out of these discussions will emerge resolutions and programmes which we can all consider later. During these ten days, each day will be devoted to the consideration of one aspect of spiritual and cultural education: How to develop the attitude of love among the children? How to make them recognise the kinship that unites all mankind? How to implant in their minds feelings against caste distinctions, regional differences and religious prejudices? How to bring out the Splendour of Divinity that is the core of humanity?---These topics have to be given special attention.

Among the students of today there is little trace of moral and spiritual consciousness and the desire to judge what is right and what is wrong, India is an ancient nursery of yoga and home of renunciation. The students of this land should not waste their lives in seeking material comfort.

They must lead lives of service and sacrifice. We must resolve to guide the students in this direction. It is indeed a matter of pride that for the first time such an attempt on such a large scale is being made in Andhra Pradesh, through an institution established under the auspices of the Government. Remember that mere attendance at this camp cannot bring much profit. Your teachers have to play a really diligent role in making this experiment a success.

To-day humanness in man is absent
In schools we have teachers who teach history or geography or mathematics. The geography teacher opens out a map and points to some country and explains how people live there. The mathematics teacher writes on the black board: $13+3+3-9$. The history teacher relates the story of a kingdom. But the drill teacher has to stand before the lined-up pupils and himself demonstrate what they should do while he counts one, two, three, four, etc. Every teacher, like the drill teacher, has to do what he says. He must demonstrate in his own life, the truth and validity of what he advises the pupils to do.

For example, he punishes them for smoking, beedies and cigarettes. But when he is himself addicted to smoking, what authority has he to advise others against it? By this type of hypocrisy the teacher loses all respect in the eyes of his pupils. If, however, you observe the rules you impose and then try to put them in practise, your advise is certain to be followed. When can you reach this stage? It is possible only when you become at least embodiments of humanness and when you recognise what the essential human qualities are. The thought that arises in the mind, the word that is formed on the tongue and the act performed by the hand---when these three form stages of the same process, they indicate humanness.

Nowadays man appears to be man, but his humanness is absent, partly because he thinks one way, speaks another way and acts a third way. Speak what you think, do what you speak; that is the sign of true manhood. So you first act according to your own advice. Bring about consonance between your thought, word and deed, and then guide the children. Otherwise you, as teachers, cannot cut much ice with them.

Pupils in schools must have a strong foundation Through the centuries India has nursed many religions, creeds and sects. But the essence of all Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) is that in every being there exists the Divine. The teaching of this essence is very necessary today. As the Minister for Education said just now, the foundation of an edifice has to be very strong. Even a small house requires a foundation. For a tree to grow, the roots have to be strong indeed. Without roots the tree will collapse with the first gust of wind. A house without a foundation will also fall down in a heap. Similarly, pupils in schools must have, for their satisfactory progress in life, a strong foundation. And what is a strong foundation?

Moral, ethical and spiritual knowledge and experience are the best foundation.

But there is no use simply talking about foundation. When are we to build on it? We are all the time discussing only the plan. This present movement for Abhyudhaya (Progressive Primary Schools) is only the foundation. High schools would be the walls, and colleges the roof. All the three have to be planned at the same time. They are going to complement one another. Today we are laying the foundation, but that is not the end. The building has to be erected. The sapling is planted but it still has to be watered, manured and carefully tended. To be born as a man is the highest fortune of jeeva (individual being).

So you must make the best use of this rare chance. You must practise in daily life what the Aathman (inner conscience) urges you to do. When this is done, the villagers will also be charged with spiritual adventure through their children, and the entire Andhra Pradesh will vibrate with a new enthusiasm. I desire that you should make all efforts in this direction. I wish you would take a vow in this regard for, believe Me, there is no sacrifice higher than this, no yoga nobler than this, no offering holier to God than this.

Give, and you gain. Grasp, and you lose The children you claim to be yours are kaamaputhras (born out of lust), but the children who come to you for education are premaputhras (drawn to you by your love). In truth, more than your physical children, these children have a right to your love. So decide to make sacrifices for their sake. Thyaaga is the real yoga. Give, and you gain. Bhoga (enjoyment) results in roga (disease). Grasp, and you lose. Recognise the truth of these beliefs. Of course there are many among you who intellectually do recognise their validity. But so far you have had no opportunity to translate these beliefs into action.

In the Geetha, Krishna tells Arjuna, "Be an Instrument, O Savyasachi (skilled bow man)!" The present plan has become instrumental in bringing you all here and allowing you to share aanandha (divine bliss). This Abhyudhaya (development) scheme has brought us together and built a bridge between humanity and Divinity. Without this bridge of love, the journey from there to here and from here to there would be impossible. Life is granted to spend in karma as duty Embodiments of Love! I wish very much that you should fill your hearts with love and lead the children under your care along the path of Indian ideals. For this you have to form study groups in order to collect and codify your suggestions. You must analyse and examine the principles underlying the Abhyudhaya scheme and store enough of ideas during these ten days to help you to plan things for the next ten months. Time is most important. This body is given to us in order to use it efficiently every minute of its existence. Work has been visualized in all its details so that every moment of the assigned time can be made worthwhile by carrying out the selfless work of implementing the given scheme. Human life has been granted to us in order to spend it in karma (action), as duty. In fact time is to be considered Divine, and adored as such. God is described as Kaalakaala (He who is the Lord of Time), Kaalaatheetha (He who is beyond time) and Kaala thathva bodhaka (He who teaches the principle of time). So do not waste precious time in wandering about; outside the camp, imagining that you have come here to somehow spend ten days at Brindhaavan. Participate for your share in the seminars and in the study groups. Place before others your doubts and try to get them resolved. Spend your time in the company of others, not in gossip but in fruitful discussion. Even after you go to your village, take the children out for social service once or twice a week and help them to discard laziness. Laziness produces rust which in time turns man to dust. If man wishes to be happy and healthy, the first exercise he must do is to remove from his mind every bad thought, feeling and habit. What is the next step? He must welcome good thoughts, good feelings and good habits. These exercises can be started even from childhood. Removing the bad and substituting it with the good has to be done by you as a teacher for your students. You must be vigilant to prevent the children from being spoiled by the evils of injustice, violence, immorality and falsehood. This is the 'thapas' (penance) imposed on you as your duty.

These ten days you must collect enough courage and inspiration to undertake this thapas. You need not go in for any other spiritual exercise. Dedicate all your skill, strength and scholarship to this great yajna (sacrificial rite). Dedicated karma is the yajna. Let this yajna of selfless discharge of work become the practice all over this land. Bliss can be got only by dedicated work The bliss does not come out of books, nor can it be bought for any sum. It can be got only by dedicated work. When you complete this training and go back, through you, three to four thousand teachers can get inspiration every year. This 'scheme helps you as an individual and also society at large. After training, many continue to remain unemployed. But udhyoga (job) is not so important. What is important is yoga (divine communion). Without yoga how can udhyoga yield happiness? Everyone, from the watchman at the gate to the Prime Minister in the capital, is interested in udhyoga. But real udhyoga has its base in yoga, which harmonizes our psyche, enables us to stick to truth and keeps us on the path of dharma (righteousness). "Books are packed with learned stuff. Brains are stuffed with only dust." You must get and impart education that would mould you into holy, full and free Divine beings. The fool has mastered all knowledge. He struts about as a scholar of repute. Yet he knows not even who he is, And he dare not shed a single vice! His reputation comes from disputation, But his scholarship leaks from many a hole. He studies and studies until he dies, But he still knows not how not to diet Whatever one learns or does not learn, one must, after being born as man, learn about the Aathman (divinity), for that alone can confer bliss and immortality. Resolve today to sacrifice everything you have for the sake of the pure-hearted children who rely on you for guidance. So long as you are caught in the coils of monetary considerations and so long as you think that such benefit alone can make you happy, you will continue to be as you are. But you can gain aanandha the very day you decide on dedicated service. Whether you get or do not get the comforts you desire, you should pay attention to the task for which you have come and cultivate the means for realizing the Aathman. Teachers' Training Camp, Brindhaavan, 25-7-1978

7. Teaching is a saadhana

THESE days India is fast advancing in the field of science and technology. No wonder there are many who lay excessive faith by the conclusions of the physical sciences and ridicule the science of the spirit. These science-minded people would answer the question, 'Who are you?' by saying "I am a body which contains about 10 gallons of water, 1 gallon of lime, lead enough to make 9,000 pencils, phosphorus enough to make 11,000 matches and as much iron as there is in a nail two inches long." All this stuff would seem to cost only about a hundred rupees, but actually even if you spend ten million rupees, you cannot make a human body. For, as spiritualists would put it, the human body has arisen out of Divine Will, it is alive on account of Divine Power and it is able to act as a result of Divine Grace. Man must realize the immensity of the play of the Divine Will which manifests Itself in such abundant variety. But what does science say of this Will? It only declares that we should not believe things that we do not see. The Divine Will is beyond our power to see, so It cannot be testified to be real! This attitude is not correct. Take this kerchief which I drop from my hand. It falls to the ground instead of going up in the air. We attribute this to the gravitational pull even though we do not see the pull. The mind is only a bundle of desires. Today man is found of accumulating information by studying books. He likes to indulge in argument and explanation. He can analyse matter and talk along about it. But in the field of the spirit, study, experiment and analysis do not take you a long way. What is required is inner experience resulting from actual practice. When we have before us a plateful of eatables, of what use is it to simply recite the names of the different items? What is needed to benefit from their goodness is to eat them. So also for cognizing the Divine, the mind needs to be used, it being the instrument that can either bind or liberate. But when we use the instrument called mind, we must know all about it. Science would testify that the nature of the mind depends upon the food we consume. The gross material of food we excrete, but the more subtle part is used by our system to feed the intelligence and the most subtle part becomes the mind. In Vedhaanthic parlance we can illustrate this by an example: "What have I in my hand?" --- "A piece of cloth." "What does the cloth contain?" --- "Yarn."

"Where did the yarn come from?" --- "From cotton." First cotton, then yarn and, finally, cloth --- the names and forms are different, but the basic material is the same. Without the more basic cotton and yarn, we cannot have cloth. So also without food, we cannot have mind to exercise discrimination, mind to exercise preferences and judge do's and don'ts. When every yarn is pulled out, the cloth becomes non-existent. So also when there are no do's and don'ts, the mind cannot exist. For the mind is only a bundle of desires, it is no real entity, it has no power of its own. Thoughts of 'I and mine' result in bondage. Take another example. In whichever direction a camera is turned while its film is exposed, the resultant picture will be of the things in that direction. It all depends on the turn of the lens. Similarly, the mind reflects the nature of things that we are attracted by. When some one blames us we get into fury and behave madly. When some one praises us we leap with joy and think well of the person who does so. In either case the reason is our emotional perturbation. We must understand the secrets of the mind and the ways in which it plays with us. We must learn to be unruffled and steady, whether we are praised or blamed. Another little example. When the mind is turned towards God or goodness, it becomes human. If it is turned towards evil thoughts and wicked egoism, it becomes demonic. When we turn the key to the right, it opens the lock; when we turn it to the left, it fastens it. The same key does the two opposite operations, according to the direction of turning. If mind is turned towards good thoughts, it establishes detachment. Turned towards thoughts of 'I' and 'mine' it causes attachment. Attachment means bondage; detachment, liberation. In Thelugu we have fifty letters and each letter has its special form, name and sound. The pronunciation of each letter has to be learnt from those who know it. Similarly we may have a heap of flowers and a length of thread, but some one has to string them into a garland. We may have a lamp with oil and a wick, but some one must light it to make it glow. We may have gems in plenty and all the gold that is necessary, but without a jeweller they cannot be turned into an ornament. Similarly man has in his body bones, muscles, blood, brain, etc., but there must be some power which can make them all work in concert. That is possible only for God to do.

How one God can have many names & forms

The sages and seers who have from time to time investigated the nature of God from the ancient past to modern times, have discovered that "there is only one God and that He is known by various names and say forms." 'Ekam Sath, viprah bahudha vadhanthi, say the Vedhas (revealed ancient sacred scriptures). How can the One have so many names and forms? Well, don't we prepare sweets with various names and shapes, though they all have sugar and taste sweet because of it? When this fact of the One supporting all names and forms is firmly believed in, there is no more scope for delusion.

To recognise this Unity one needs training, though to be deluded by diversity one doesn't need any. For grass to grow rankly no effort on our part is needed, but if grain is to be harvested, the field must be ploughed, weeded, watered, manured and fenced. So also to get a harvest of virtue, intense saadhana (spiritual discipline) is needed, though no such effort is necessary to contract vices. Man has to struggle hard in order to attain the higher Stages of spiritual development. He has to overcome many hurdles and put up with many difficulties and disappointments.

Man can change his nature by disciplined effort

Man alone can rise through effort to higher stages of spiritual evolution. No other animal can do so. Animal tamers of the circus can train a tiger to perform various tricks, but they cannot change its nature. They cannot make it live on grass and completely deprive it of meat. But man is different. His nature can be changed by means of his own disciplined effort. He can control, by his will, the 'evil thoughts and ideas that arise in his mind. This is why birth 'as a human being is considered a rare gift.

Man is indeed the highest among living beings. The Vedhas proclaim four great truths about man: "Thou art That" (Thath thwam asi); "The Highest Wisdom is You" (Prajnaanam

Brahman); "This You is Brahman" (Ayam Aathma Brahman); "I am Brahman" (Aham Brahmaasmi). How are we to prove the correctness of the assertion, "Thou art That"? Suppose there is a boulder on a hill. A sculptor spots it there and carves out of it a beautiful idol of Krishna which is installed in a temple and adored ceremonially with every prescribed rite. The flaked pieces of the same boulder are 'lying about in heaps on the hill at the site where the sculptor chiselled the idol. These flakes are worthless---no temple is built to install any one of them as an idol, for they have undergone no transformation. Yet the flakes declare, "We are

That: We are the same as that Idol there," though they have been discarded by the sculptor.

All is stone---we build with stone, we worship stone, we break stone with metal. Square stones are building blocks, fiat ones are used as steps and round ones are carved into figures. Stone is the substance and we use it according to its shape and structure. We can similarly recognise the Divinity that is latent in man. We imagine that the eye sees and the tongue eats but, in truth, the eye does not see, nor does the tongue eat. It is the Divine Will within us that operates every one of the senses. For example, at the moment you are all supposed to be sitting in the Kalyaanamantap of Brindhaavan listening to Me, but some of you are thinking about your family back in your village and not listening to Me at all. My words fall on your ears, but your minds are not here.

We have to check up our faith off and on

What is the place of the mind with respect to the other faculties of man? Consider our body to be a car designed by God and having the four wheels dharma, artha, kaama and moksha (duty, wealth, desire and liberation). The car has two lights in the eyes. It has a loud horn, the mouth. It is equipped with a steering wheel, the mind, and a switch, the intellect. The four wheels outside are managed by the steering wheel within. The car travels in society along the road of life. The wheels have to be properly filled with the air of faith. We have to check up the faith off and on.

If it is more in one wheel or less in another, it will spell danger. There must be a balance between the four goals in man's life.

Only a volunteer can grow into a leader

We have to cultivate some qualities and destroy others. We must do this with an eye to becoming eligible for seva (voluntary service). We are born into this world for carrying on seva. In this context, I intend to give you some advice. But teaching is primarily an act of seva along with which you have to practise a little renunciation. When you return to the schools in your charge you will have to exert yourselves more than hitherto, and so you will feel like asking for more pay. It is not wrong to do so. But let Me tell you that whether you ask it or not and whether you get it or not, you must take up this task in the spirit of seva. Only a sevak (volunteer) can grow into a naayak (leader); serve, and thereby gain the position of a leader. Only a kimkara can become a Shankara---only a good servant can become a great master.

During our lives we have to accept help rendered by many thousands. We have to pay back this debt by helping at least as many people as we can. With a genuine keenness or readiness to serve others, you can be happy in any group or community. Derive bliss through seva that is not done with any desire to get something in return. When you get a chance to help someone, rejoice at your good fortune. The very eagerness to serve others will endow you with the power and skill necessary for the required service.

Today we regard it derogatory to 'serve.' We ridicule those who wish to serve others. But in service is great worth. Service helps us uproot the egotism that burdens us. Egotism is an evil that brings downfall in its trail. We all know the ultimate fate of the seemingly high and mighty demons like Hiranyaaksha, Hiranyakashipu, Raavana, and Kumbhakarna. These people had undergone severe ascetic discipline and thus earned many skills and powers, but they were ruined by the ego. The ego brings about the fall of man. When egoism is absent, the Aathman shines in its native splendour. The Aathman is bliss, it is beauty and wisdom, but we allow It to be tarnished by the ego. Engage in humble service and egotism will fade away.

Life is like a football ground and each one of you a ball. Your good qualities like truth, righteousness, peace and love are on one side, and bad qualities like attachment, pride and hatred on the other. Both sides kick the ball and try to score a goal. The poor ball must suffer these kicks so long as it is bloated with the air of egoism in it. But once the air is let out, the kicks also stop.

Is the 'I', this body or mind or intellect?

We must investigate what is meant by "I." When I ask your name you say, "Raamanna, Lakshmayya, Venkanna, Krishnamurthy," etc. When you are asked who this Raamanna or Lakshmayya is, you raise your hands and say, "I, I." I ask a number of people and use a number of names, but the answer is always 'I.' Where does this 'I' come from? It is found in everyone.

Has this 'I' got a form? Is it this body or mind or intellect or consciousness? It is not any of these.

The 'I' is not this body.

When I say my kerchief I imply that I am different from the kerchief. I say my table or my chair, because I am not the table or the chair. Now, if we have this 'I' in everyone, it must be the same in everyone. It is the One among the many. $1 + 1 + 1 + 1$ is equal to 4. But $1 + 1 + 1 + 1$ is equal to only 'I' for, the 'I' is, the same in everyone. To recognise this is to truly know one's real identity, the One, the Aathman. Without this knowledge, life is a waste.

Keep a balance between pleasure and pain

My dear students and teachers! You might have understood a little of My truth or you might not have, but if you grasp the truth of what I say, you will be free from anxiety and fear. Believe Me or disbelieve Me, it does not matter. I must reveal to you the Truth.

The castles and towers you see in dreams

They melt into nothing when you open your eyes.

I am now talking to you and you are all hearing Me. You look at Me with your eyes. You feel all this to be true. Certain things are happening to you, and to you this appears to be real and no dream. Later you proceed 'to the canteen, eat your dinner and go to bed. Then you experience a dream in which you are talking to someone in your village. While you dream, the thing is very real, but when you wake up it turns out to be unreal and the waking stage seems to be real. But both are dreams---one, a night dream and the other, a day dream.

During both dreams you are present and you experience the events. So you alone are real; the rest is a mixture of true and false. Understand this and keep a balance between pleasure and pain, joy and grief.

You may think that Swaami keeps a balanced mind because unlike you He has no responsibilities. But remember, teaching in this college and various other kinds of work are going on in an ideal manner only because I am directing the show.

You think that Sai Baba is comfortably sleeping in the mandhir (temple). Do you know where I find happiness? I am happy when I am with you. That is the reason why I declare "My life is My message." I am constantly engaged in some work or another at all hours. I do not get attached to anything nor do I need to detach myself from anything. I am ever in full Aanandha (divine bliss). Why? Because what happens must happen. Pleasure is an interval between two pains. Joy can never be derived from

joy. It can come only from pain and sorrow. If a person is always in an airconditioned room, he can never know what coolness means. He has to go, at least once, into the hot sun to realize the value of airconditioning. No lamp can glow brightly in daylight. Night alone can reveal its value.

All the dualities are part of Nature
 Many people come to Me wailing, "Swaami! We are in great grief; we are suffering from deep anxiety." When I hear these words I know what is happening to them. I never had the experience of either grief or anxiety. I know that these are but dream experiences. They are not real. Some persons may praise you, others may blame you: both are in fact unreal.

When a well is sunk, the soil that is dug out becomes a mound by its side. Some pay attention to the pit, others to the mound. I consider both with indifference. The soil that was the well has now become the soil that is the mound. This is the eternal see-saw. The Sun sets in West when the Moon rises in the East. These dualities are part of Nature. So long as you are here, try to practise equanimity.

Embodiments of Love! Man has become prey to several bad habits, willingly or unwillingly, which are injurious to his health. It is rightly said that health is the first requisite for realising any one or all of the four purusharthas (supreme goals of life). But these bad habits will weaken him and rob him of his honourable status in society. On account of his being enslaved by them, he cannot discharge his duties properly. His wife and children suffer from neglect. This new educational venture also can succeed only if you are healthy. What can plans and projects of the government achieve? One flower cannot make a garland; all flowers must come together to make one. So you must equip yourselves with strong bodies, sacred ideals and unselfish intentions in order to serve your country. You can achieve any high ideal provided you are co-operative, well disciplined, soaked in service and sacrifice and fully determined to succeed. The government can only then be properly guided by you.

Only the dedicated come by Wisdom Thyagaraja sang: "Rama! Let me have the strength of Your Anugraha (Divine Grace) that will force all the grahas (planets) to augur well. Let us also be heroes full of the spirit of service and sacrifice. Is it ever possible for us to practise what we preach?" Without a seed in the past there can be no plant in the future. Do not feel that there is no seed of devotion or dedication in you. This seminar has been arranged in order to make you aware of the good that you possess and tell you the methods by which this good can be developed and cultivated. Do not be misled into the cynical thinking that you are sent here just for some training and that there is nothing here for you to learn. 'Shraddhaavaan labhathe jnaanam' (Only the dedicated come by Wisdom).

Take the example of the eagle. It has big, strong wings, but until it has the will to fly it cannot move even an inch. And look at the ant, which can move something even ten times its own weight. Faith moves, doubt deters. When we develop faith and strength of will we can execute any kind of work, but when we feel we need not act, no activity is possible. A hundred men may carry a horse to the shore of a lake, but they cannot make it drink. It alone must will to do so. I desire that: you should develop faith and strength to foster the sacred ideals of Indian culture and spirituality in the children under your care, and cultivate in them the right priorities of life.

Teachers' Training Camp, Brindhaavan, 25-7-1978
 Hunger is the disease for which food is the medicine: thirst is the illness/'or which drink is the medicine.
 Food and drink, housing and clothing must be subsidiary to the needs of the spirit, the education of the emotions and passion, and impulses. They must take the place that salt and pepper take on the dining table today; uppu must be subsidiary to pappu; that is, salt must be little and dhal must be more; you cannot have more salt than the quantity of dhal, not even as much.
 So too, efforts to achieve health, comfort, etc. must be just enough for the purpose of sustaining the saadhana, not more, not less.

Sri Sathya Sai
 8. Love must win CONSIDER, O man, whether you earn any lasting joy at all from your toil from the time of your waking in the morning to that of going to sleep at night, a toil incessant and limitless, a toil which often does not leave you even a moment's interval to call to mind the glow and grandeur of God? No wonder that even though God is everywhere, those who have seen Him are few and far between. Govindha, as the proverb goes, belongs to all, but there are hardly any who actually claim Him as their all. Thousands there are who extol the beauty and majesty of God in glamorous prose or poetry, but a counted few are the souls that share His Grace. For the sweetness of nectar is known only to those who place it on the tongue, and not to those who collect it in cups, caskets or even barrels!

There were three Andhra mystics who had nectar on their tongues, so to speak, and so were able to sing of the ecstasy they experienced, the God they realized. They were, as you may guess, Potharaaju, Goparaaju and Thyaagaraaju. They were ever aware of the Divine Principle, the warp and woof, the cause and effect, the beginning and end of the entire cosmos. They did not deviate even a little from the path of devotion to and absorption in God. They had, each one of them, known once for all that they could rely on none other than Him as Master or Protector.

Today people adore the strong, the wealthy and the exalted as their patrons and protectors. They run after such persons and humiliate themselves by flattering them. But for these three the only Protector, Master and Patron, was God.

Raama in the heart can give un alloyed joy Thyaagraaju could have easily bided beside the thrones of rulers for the asking of it. He could have received invaluable gifts from royal patrons. But he refused the honours his contemporaries were prepared to heap on him. He said, "O mind, tell me if it is the treasures bequeathed by high dignities or the Divine Presence of Raama in the heart that can give unalloyed joy?" The emissaries from the palace had to return, carrying back with them the presents they had brought.

Potharaaju also had the same attitude towards worldly riches for he too was immersed in Divine delight. His brother-in-law, Shreenatha, once advised him to dedicate the great Thelugu epic poem, Bhaagavatham, to the ruler of the kingdom, for the king would shower diamonds on him and free him from poverty for ever. Potharaaju replied "Rather than wed this lovely, tender, angelic maid of poetry to wealthybarbarians to earn polluted food in return, I would gladly feed myself, my wife and children on what I can find of fruits and roots in the jungles. I will dedicate this epic only to God, who inspired me and bestowed song upon my lips. No one else deserves this offering. I am bound by loyalty to only the Supreme Deity, Raamachandhra."

Follow in the footsteps of saints

Then we have Goparaaju, who built the temple at Bhadhraachalam. Today it is difficult to find men who would refrain from unscrupulously misappropriating temple funds. But Goparaaju used his life and his means, even the lives and means of his kith and kin, for rebuilding and renovating the Raama temple at Bhadhraachalam. Later, while in jail for the alleged misuse of state revenue, he pleaded with Raama, "By spending 10,000 varaahas I got made a green gem necklace for Seetha, the Mother. I got made a crown of diamonds for you, my Raamachandhra. You accepted them coolly and put on airs! No, no, Raama, do not get angry at my disparaging speech. When these people here deal blows of injustice, I blurt out harsh words. Pardon me!" See how near and dear Goparaaju took Raama to be, and how full of prema (love) he was for the deity.

Such great persons are found not only in Andhra Pradesh, but in other regions too. The culture of India has ever extolled such embodiments of devotion and held them up as examples before the common man. You must read about these saints, revere them and follow in their footsteps. To do this, you must also keep yourselves in good company. In most of the Shiva temples you will find the idol of the bull installed right opposite the lingam. Devotees taking dharshan of Shiva look straight over the head of the bull, for the bull itself is taking dharshan with concentrated devotion which they want to share. Just as the devotees of Shiva keep company with His vehicle, the Bull, to earn His Grace, you too must choose friends who by their company would help in raising your aptitudes. Moreover, as teachers, you have to be models for the children as well as for their parents, who often look up to you as the only educated persons in the vicinity.

Treat the school always as a House of God

A little while ago, Nathaniel, a teacher from Warangal, promised that he would transform his school into a House of God. But the school is always a House of God. To treat it as a caravanseral or as a prison or a house of correction, is sacrilege. Treat it as a holy place where Saraswathi, the deity presiding over knowledge and the arts, is present and is worshipped. Then, in that atmosphere of veneration, the pupils will mould themselves into worthy examples for the entire world. By taking this care the teacher will be evincing an intelligent love towards the child. He will be prompting the pupils to accord their conduct with the sacred atmosphere of the school.

After all, even the mother of the child may ignore some of its faults or even appreciate some of its peculiar mannerisms, but the teachers must be vigilant enough to take note of them and correct them by soft, sweet persuasion. The pupil will surely, listen and obey if he senses the sincerity behind the teacher's love. If, however, the teacher preaches love but behaves as if he or she has no love, the persuasion would not succeed.

 Be warned of falling into the easy path of moving with the current.
 Heroism demands that you should promote your individuality and follow the ideals you deem best. Do not imitate others through sheer laziness of thought. Aim high and do not be disheartened if you miss your mark.
 Better it is to fail in shooting a tiger than to succeed in shooting a sparrow.
 Love will be rewarded a thousand-fold Once you have placed an ideal before you or set a goal, stick to it through gain and loss. It is not for nothing that the songs goes: Whatever you hold, once you have held it Hold on to it, till you win.
 Whatever you've asked, once you have asked it Ask aloud for it, till you win.
 Whatever you wish, once you have wished it Wish deeper for it, till you win.
 Whatever you've planned, once you have planned it Plan firmer for it, till you win.
 He must grant the victory to stop the wail--- Wail, weep and pray, till you win.
 Beware ! Don't lose heart and lag behind in effort.
Goparaaju, the Raamdhas of Bhadhraachalam, said, "I will not permit my feet to swerve from the path; I will not leave You without being assured of fearlessness." There are two ways of accosting God. One is in the manner of the beginner, of the devotee who is still in the elementary stage. He rhapsodizes, "Lord! You are the embodiment of mercy, you are Aanandha-swaruupa (embodiment of divine bliss), you are All-powerful," and hopes thereby to win God's Grace. But the dearer the devotee holds God, the more this distance disappears. It is just as when an acquaintance visits you, you welcome him with a hand shake and smiles which are largely artificial. But when an old friend drops in, you receive him with an informal hello and show him a seat with a twinkle in your eye and warmth in your heart.
 In the flood of formal praise, love is mostly absent. As it happens, in dealing with the personal God, love is the preeminent requisite. Therefore have faith, have patience and do acts of love and service. Love will be rewarded with Love a thousand-fold.
 Teachers' Training Camp, Brindhaavan, 30- 7-1978

Saguna and Nirguna (with Form and Formless) aspects of God create the same doubt in the minds of saadhak, whether they can both be true. It is like hardened ghee and liquid ghee.
 Ice and water are the same; water takes the form of the vessel which contains it. It is formless. But, there is no distinction between ice and water.
 In saadhana, the saguna worship and the nirguna meditation are like the right and left feet for the journey.
Sri Sathya Sai
 9. Music of the spirit GOD is the echo of the hills, the flutter of the leaves, the whisper of men, the babble of children, the Om (divine sound) that is wafted everywhere. God is present at all places, but to recognise Him, saints have had to prescribe a thousand methods! He is in every one, yet he evades discovery by all but a few. Being all-powerful, he is the Giver of all gifts, the Providence bestowing upon us all the wherewithal. 'Sarvam Aavarithya Thishthathi' (He remains Allencompassing).
 There is nothing except God. Nature is His Manifestation. Man must recognise God in all human beings and in all else that exists. Since the jeeva (individual being) limits his viewpoint to the physical frame he occupies, and confines his attention and interest; love and attachment to a small circle of relations and friends, he limits God also to a certain name and form, and sees His Compassion and Grace, Blessings and Benediction, limited to a small circle of 'devotees' who adore that specific name and form.
 Human desires are narrow, so He who grants fulfilment is also imagined to be narrow in His Grace. Ideally, therefore, when one prays, one should in complete resignation say, "Thy Will be done," and ought not to ask for this or that, for he has neither the wisdom nor the foresight to know what is best for him.
Pranava, OM, is the Geetha of God The Bhagavathgeetha teaches that envy and greed can be overcome by practising love and detachment. People have themselves resolved upon a day as the birthday of the Bhagavathgeetha, which they celebrate with pompous puuja and speeches! In the midst of this confusion the essential teachings of the Geetha are ignored. When exactly did the Geetha originate? What does Geetha mean? Literally the word means 'song'.
 Since God is Omnipresent, the Song of God, too, must be Omnipresent. So, in reality, Pranava (Om) is the Geetha of God.
 God's song cannot be only for a few or only for some people or in a language understood only by one nation. Om is Universal, eternal, full of the essence of all spiritual significance. So, Om alone, can be the real Geetha of God. And It can have no birthday that man should celebrate, having itself arisen before time began.

Our Self is resonant with Pranava. But amid the clamour of the market-place and the noise of the commerce of life, our little selves are not able to hear it. Our own senses lay claim to our attention. Our minds crave for being let free among the pleasures of the outer world. Obviously our passions and prejudices have to be calmed before we can hear Om, the Song of the Lord that wells up from the heart.

Do not accept even gratitude for service

March on with your eyes on the goal. Do not worry about the past, its mistakes and its failures.

Do not follow the whims and fancies of the mind any longer. They will fill the ear with praise or blame and drag you away from the aadhyathmik (spiritual) path.

Follow the call of the Divine arising from the hearts of all living beings. Serve them in an attitude of worship, not expecting something in return. Do not accept even gratitude, having dedicated all your acts to the indwelling God. This will purify you so that you shall be able to listen to the 'Soham' that your breath repeats every moment. Soham transmutes itself into Om when the distinction between He and I has dissolved in the process of samaadhi.

Believe that the Soham merging into Om is the SAI thathwam. Sai principle 'S' stands for Sai, 'A' for And and 'I' for the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) himself. Thus SAI in fact symbolises the Vedhic dictum: Thath thwam asi (Thou art that). In the first stage the saadhaka says, 'I am in Sai,' in the second stage, 'Sai is in me,' and in the third and final stage, 'Sai and I are One,' the duality between the two having been shed. When truth strikes the individual like a streak of lightning in the midst of dark clouds, and abides, it confers Bliss, and in that moment of illumination Om is revealed in all its grandeur. By practising the teachings of Krishna, one gains that Illumination, the Inaana Iyothi (Wisdom of Light), Om.

Krishna's flute is the expression, the elucidation of the four Vedhas and Om is their quintessence.

'A', 'U', 'M' and the dot (signifying the reverberation of the Sound in the depth of the heart), are symbolic of the four Vedhas. Om is also symbolic of the 'Raama-Principle. The four brothers, Raama, Lakshmana, Bharatha and Sathrughna, represent the Rig, Yajur, Saama and Atharvana Vedhas.

When man neglects the Divine aspect of their nature and fails to pursue the saadhana (spiritual discipline) that ensures the awareness of the Omnipresent and Omnipotent Om, he falls prey to the impulses and instincts dominated by the "ego and develops faith in material gains. He spends his life in amassing wealth, power and authority over fellow beings and believes that holding others under his sway is a desirable achievement.

Man knows so little of what is worth knowing

If there were a vacancy in Heaven, man would surely apply for the position of God, for he believes that he has all the necessary attributes! He forgets that the real attribute for superiority is unshaken faith in one's Aathmic Reality. Of what use is it to only know one's puny self? It is like a so-called learned band of doctors knowing a bit here and a bit there but being ignorant of the treatment of maladies like cancer and the common cold. Science must make man humble by revealing that he knows so little of what is worth knowing.

The Divine aspect of your personality will encourage humility, adherence to truth, love and eagerness to serve, fortitude and detachment. Cherish the first; manifestation of these qualities in your life and practise them whenever you get a chance. The innate brotherhood that sanctifies the human race is destroyed by the weeds of envy that grow in the mind. These weeds ruin one's personality. They grow so rank that they strangle the individual himself.

Sorrow is the shadow that haunts the ego. When a neighbour of yours grieves over the loss of a loved one you console him by saying that it is not wise to weep over worldly losses, that weeping cannot bring the departed one back. But when death visits your own family, you grieve so much that the same neighbour has to repeat the same argument to console you. All this happens because neither has developed faith in the Aathman, and neither has Naama (name) on the tongue and Prema (Love) in the heart.

A man builds a nice house for himself and feels proud of the garden surrounding it, of the colour effect of the interior painting, etc. If during an election campaign, some urchins scribble slogans on the walls enclosing his garden, he flares up against them and threatens to thrash the young villains for having damaged" the immaculate whiteness of the walls.

But once he sells the house and it no longer belongs to him, he is not affected in the least even if the house is reduced to a heap of bricks! Such is the insidious effect of listening to the ego.
Before you were born you had no kith and kin; when you die they leave you alone. Why, then, develop this bond with them just for a short intervening life, and for its sake forget the very purpose for which this life has been granted? Always be conscious of the flimsiness of worldly achievements while ever using your talents, skills and everything else to the best possible advantage in the service of Go in man.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 13-8-1978

10. Sneha

SNEHA is the eighth of nine stages of bhakti (devotion) described in the Bhaagavatha and other texts. It is usually translated as 'friendship,' a term that has been understandably vulgarized by application to certain transitory relationships between living beings.
Friends come together as a result of a variety of reasons and circumstances which are mostly of worldly and temporary interest. People who have ample resources gain friends quickly, as do also those who have a great deal of patronage in their hands or can distribute favours.
Those in authority also gather friends, who, of course, stay on during fair weather but disappear when the authority fades. Most friendships are based on selfish considerations and last only as long as selfish interests are promoted thereby. As the proverb goes, When the lake is full there are also frogs in plenty, but when it runs dry not a single croak is heard." Friendship ought to be a spiritual bond, a heart to heart kinship based on full understanding of and pure dedication of one to another. Students should be vigilant against false and fleeting friendships and not be simply led away by hellos and handshakes. Do not cultivate close friendship with anybody unless you know that the motives on the other side are pure, unselfish and spiritual.
Unique friendship between Krishna & Arjuna Genuine friendship can only be possible between one aathman and another, that is to say, between two persons who have each realized that Aathman is the core of their being. Nowhere on the mundane plane can you get the genuine sneha which is declared as the penultimate stage to sharanaagathi or aathmanivedhana (total surrender and dedication to God), among the trivial, transitory friendships of worldlings.

Arjuna and Krishna had this genuine sneha between them. Arjuna saw Krishna as his sakha (friend), and therefore had the temerity to use words of jesting irreverence during 'play, or while in repose, or when seated by him, or at meals' (vihaara shayyaasana bhojaneshu). The two often ate meals from the same plate, and were ready to help each other under all circumstances. Do not be under the impression that Arjuna was insidiously overpowered by Krishna. He was mature in character, well-versed in the Vedhic lore and a redoubtable warrior and Bowman full of courage and heroism. Krishna was the Purushoththama (Supreme Being), Arjuna the naroththoma (best human). It was a friendship between the Embodiment of the Highest and the embodiment of the best. Krishna was the Avathaaric (incarnated) Person; Arjuna was the aanandhic (blissful) person; it was a coming together of the Avathaara muurthi and the aanandha muurthi. Arjuna was often addressed by Krishna as Kuru nandhana. This name has a deep significance. Kuru means 'act, activity, karma.' Nandhana means 'happy, delighted.' Kuru nandhana, therefore, means he who is delighted while engaged in activity. Throughout the eighteen chapters of the Geetha, Arjuna is alert and active, participating vigilantly in every turn of argument.
Krishna's assurance to all who offer their self Raamakrishna Paramahansa was fascinated by the sneha that was exemplified by the Krishna-Arjuna relationship. He learned from the Bhaagavatha and the Bhagavathgeetha how the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) can go through all the nine stages of bhakti (devotion). He was also determined to emulate the gopees (cowherd girls) and earn for himself the viraha (passionate) type of bhakti, madhura bhakti (sweet devotion), that the gopees had. When he read the Raamaayana, he decided to emulate Hanumaan and practise his dhaasa bhakti (devotion of servitude). Of all the slohas (verses) in the Bhagavathgeetha, Raamakrishna was especially impressed by the one that emphasised the attitude of aathma nivedhana or sharanaagathi.
Manmanaa bhava madhbhaktho madhyaaji maam namaskuru Maamevaishyasi yukthvaivam aathmaanam mathparaayanah.
("Become one with Me; be devoted to Me; sacrifice unto Me; bow down to Me. Thus having made thy heart steadfast in Me, taking Me as the Supreme Goal, thou shalt surely come to Me.")

One day, while Raamakrishna was going to Kamarpukur, night overtook him and he was caught in heavy rain right in the centre of a burial ground. Of course he was in such an ecstatic mood that the time, place or weather mattered little to him. When he awoke, Raamakrishna called upon God by various names---Raama, Shiva, Krishna, Kaali, Hanumaan. Then he suddenly realised that the names all referred to the One, and he repeated within himself the verse from the Geetha that reminded him of sharanaagathi (absolute surrender) to the One.

Surrender absolutely to God to get peace

Many interesting incidents took place at Dakshineswar. When Raamakrishna was once asked to go to the temple office to receive his monthly salary, he was very much upset, for he never wanted any wages for being given the chance of worshipping His Mother. At another time, thieves broke into the Krishna temple. When Raamakrishna and Mathuranaath came by there and discovered that Krishna's idol was absolutely bare and that every jewel had been stolen, Mathuranaath fell into a rage and began blaming Krishna Himself. "You are adored as the Guardian of the 'fourteen worlds,' but you cannot guard even the jewels on your own body," he said. Raamakrishna reprimanded him soundly for this sacrilege, saying, "Krishna has Lakshmi as His Consort, and for Him your gold and gems are as cheap as dust. As a matter of fact, what is gold but dust in another form?" He made Mathuranaath repent for his silly outburst, making him aware of the true nature of God-head.

If only you surrender your wish and will, your fancies and fantasies to God, He will lead you aright and give you peace and joy. You must not run after diverse ends and flitting pleasures.

Leave everything to God; accept whatever happens, as His Will.

Ambareesha was a King who stuck to all the Vedhic injunctions and observed all the rites and rituals laid down in these texts.

He was noble, sincere and very devoted to Vishnu, the Form that embodies the fostering and sustaining aspect of God.

True devotion of King Ambareesha

Fasting on Ekaadhashi day and breaking the fast as-soon as Dhwaadhashi came in, was one of the important rites that Ambareesha observed meticulously every fortnight. Ekaadhashi is the eleventh day of the Moon and Dhwaadhashi, the twelfth day. The fast has to be broken with prayers to Vishnu and the partaking of the offering made to Him as soon as, according to the lunar calendar, the twelfth lunar day has started. On one occasion, a few hours before the approach of Dhwaadhashi, the great sage Dhurvaasa, reputed for his frequent fits of fury and burst of uncontrollable temper, arrived at the palace of Ambareesha. He was heartily welcomed by the King. Ambareesha pleaded with him to proceed to the Ganges, finish his ablutions and return in time for the breaking of the Ekaadhashi fast. But the sage took his own time and was nowhere evident when the crucial moment arrived.

Ambareesha was in a fix. He consulted his preceptor who advised him to sip a few drops of sanctified water, since that could be considered breaking of the fast. On Ekaadhashi day, even water is taboo during the period of fasting. He said that Dhurvaasa had no reason to get angry, since the drops of water were taken by him only as a token to keep the vow. But when the sage came and learnt about it all, he became so wild that he cursed Ambareesha for having broken the fast in his absence and started the meal. As the curse took form, the Chakra (discus) of Vishnu appeared on the scene and confronted Dhurvaasa. A devotee takes the curse as a gift from God. Ambareesha took the curse as a gift from God; he submitted himself to it in the spirit of a sharanaagathi, for he had no will of his own. Thus God came to his rescue. Ambareesha did not call upon Vishnu and pray that he may be saved from the anger of Dhurvaasa. He accepted that too as the Will of Vishnu. The Chakra pursued the terrified sage over all the three worlds, and when Dhurvaasa fell at the feet of Vishnu, He directed him to approach Ambareesha himself to pardon. The attitude of surrender or aathma nivedhana (offering the self to God) makes a person dedicate his entire personality at the Feet of the Lord.

In the Raamaayana, too, we have an episode that illustrates this. Raama and Lakshmana were combing the forests to discover where Seetha was. They were tired and thirsty. Suddenly, they came upon a clear pool and, while placing their bows on the ground, dropped their arrows which partially sank into the wet bank. After slaking their thirst they put the bows on their shoulders and pulled the arrows out from the bank. Raama noticed a stain of blood at the tip of his arrow and was curious to find out how it came there. Lakshmana discovered a little frog that had been hit by Raama's arrow when he dropped it on the ground.

Raama told the wounded frog, "Poor thing! Why did you not cry out when you were hit?" The frog replied, "Whenever in trouble, I cry out to you Raama. But, when Raama Himself inflicts pain, whom am I to cry out to? I accepted it as His Grace." Bheeshma adored Krishna even when He was rushing towards him with His Chakra to take his life. His sense of sharanaagathi (total surrender to Divinity) did not desert him at the point of death at the hands of the very Person whom he revered as God: "Kill me or save me, I shall not falter in my loyalty," he said.

See God in every being, sneha will blossom Raamakrishna had the same sense of total dedication. He was in great pain as the result of a cancer, and his disciples asked him to pray to the Mother for alleviation of the pain.

Vivekaanandha was desperate when his master refused to ask this little favour from the Mother with whom he was literally on speaking terms. But Raamakrishna replied that if it was the Mother's Will that he must suffer, he was not going to pray for palliatives. But his disciples were adamant. They bothered Raamakrishna so much that one day he prayed to the Mother that he may be helped to take a little food in spite of the cancer in his throat. Raamakrishna told his disciples that at that time he heard the Mother admonishing him for his ignorance: Are you not eating through all these billion throats? Why regret that one throat is incapable of taking down food?" (Vaasudhevassarvaamidham). This truth was brought home to the disciples by this revelation.

The sneha (friendship) stage of Arjuna is the stage when all distinctions between the devotee and God disappear and the two friends are One. When this stage of utter trust, unshakeable faith, and complete absence of doubt, fear and anxiety is reached, the next stage of aathmanivedhan is natural and easy to cover. This is real friendship to which the youth must aspire. See God in every being and then true sneha will blossom, This type of true sneha can come only when you follow the advice of Krishna.

Adhveshta sarva bhuuthaanaam maithrah karuna eva cha Nirmamo nirahamkaarah sama dhukha sukha kshami.

("He who has no trace of hatred towards any creature, who is friendly and compassionate

towards all, who is free from the bondage of 'I' and 'mine,' who takes pain and pleasure as equally welcome and who is forbearing in spite of provocation...")

Develop these qualities in you, for they are the signs of true sneha, for it is only when you are proceeding on the Godward journey along the nine stages of bhakti (devotion) that you can attain this Divine ideal of true friendship.

College Hostel, 20-8-1978

You should not plunge into action spurred by momentary impulse; ponder deeply over the pros and cons; weigh the expected benefits against the likely harm; then act so that you escape pain and you do not inflict pain. This is true in worldly matters as well as it, the spiritual field.

Sri Sathya Sai

11. Learning and liberation

MEN crave for a prosperous future, for positions of authority and power and happy, care-free lives; they never desire to possess pure, clear, loving intellects and a humble disposition.

Therefore the youth today, in India as well as in other lands, are afflicted with deep discontent which manifests itself in revolt against rules, regulations, curricula and social norms, and an agitational approach to every little problem that affects them. What is the basic cause of this phenomenon?

The reason lies in the fact that they have started to neglect the ancient culture of India and its ideals. They are imitating undesirable and fanatic norms of behaviour and are addicted to a code of disbelief, having no roots anywhere.

The most fundamental teaching of the ancient culture of India is Love. For generations, the youth of this land have been exhorted, encouraged and taught, by precept and example, to love the poor, the helpless, the handicapped, the illiterate and the disabled, for the same spark of Divinity that is in us is also equally evident and active in them. Education must endow man with this compassion and this spirit of service---intelligent, timely and full.

That is to say, education must not only inform, it must also transform.

True education is that which liberates man

Unless knowledge is transformed into wisdom, and wisdom is expressed in character, education is a wasteful process. If education confers this gift of transformation, then surely life will become peaceful, happy, and full of mutual help and co-operation. But the aim of education today has degenerated into the acquisition of certain skills and intellectual tricks. It provides the educated with food, clothing and shelter and considers that its task is over with that achievement.

The sages who laid down the goals of education have declared, "Saa vidhyaa yaa vimukthaye."

(That is true education which helps to liberate man)---liberate him from greed, hatred, unrest, narrow loyalties and ego impulses. Education today, adds to the unrest already in the heart of man; it does not liberate him from the prison house of desire into which he has strayed. Man builds rest-houses where he can cool his tired brain and revive his exhausted nerves, but he has yet to build shaanthi mandhirs (temples of peace) where he can unconcernedly learn to witness the happenings of the world, aware of the level of the world, aware of the level of their relative importance. That will give him equanimity. Faith in an All-knowing, All-operating God will render him free to watch with interest the ups and downs of history.

Education has to clarify the goal of life

Just as the body needs rest, the mind too needs quiet. Faith in God is the best guarantee of mental quiet. Man must follow the path of virtue, practise spiritual disciplines and take an enthusiastic part in social service. These three have to be accepted, adored and assimilated into daily life.

Education has to clarify the goal of life to the rising generation and indicate the ways and means of accomplishing it.

Women are taking to modern education in larger and larger numbers nowadays. They are serving in offices, schools and factories. They are also rising to positions of authority in other fields. But most of them are prompted by urges of personal aggrandizement rather than ideals of service.

When women run after jobs, who is to run the family? If both father and mother move into offices to earn money, what becomes of the children? Pouring over books, how can the kitchen work? More money may be earned, but it leads only to more anxiety, more unrest and more loss.

The women who take up jobs are finding that they have no happiness worth the name. The educated woman must utilise her knowledge and skill to bring up her children into healthy, virtuous and disciplined youths who may be of use to their country, their culture and their community. Earning money is not the end-all of education. It is the greed to earn money by any means, as fast as possible, that has led to the evils that we see in society today. Money breeds pride, pride fosters hatred.

Cultivate the habit of self-examination

No one has the golden quality of contentment. The discontented man is as bad as lost. There is no limit to man's desires. Every person wielding power over others yearns to rise higher and higher and exercise more and more influence, but no one attempts a rigorous examination of himself to find out whether he has merit enough to be conferred with the position he craves for.

Those who contentedly carry out the duties commensurate to the positions they hold, are very few. Every one, fit or unfit, throws stones, on the off-chance of getting a fruit from the laden tree. Students must cultivate humility and the habit of self-examination.

Another reason for the prevalent overwhelming dissatisfaction of the youth, is the chronic hypocrisy of elders. The very people who proclaim the efficacy of sathya (truth) from platforms, the very preachers who dilate on dharma (righteousness) and shaanthi (peace), live without any regard to sathya, dharma or shaanthi. The determination that one must act according to one's profession has disappeared. We can establish peace and prosperity, morality and uprightness in the land, only when those who preach and those who teach high ideals, act up to their own exhortations.

Sheer ignorance is the root cause for the disrespect that is being shown to Indian culture and the fascination exercised by the culture of the West. Do these people at least grasp the values of Western culture fully? No. Only the fringe and the foppery are adopted. How can a person who is unable to understand his own culture and heritage understand the meaning and significance of an alien culture?

The true sign of education is humility; for there is much more to be investigated and learnt.

There are always many more who are far more learned. They carry their scholarship more lightly. Discipline is important in order to progress in learning, and even more so in dealing with others. An indisciplined person is a danger to society; any moment he may run amuck. Man must recognise what limits, regulations and do's and don'ts are laid down by the sages of the past in order to ensure social security and individual advancement.

Be conversant with some spiritual discipline

The code of conduct laid down for the students of this college helps you to develop qualities that will stand you in good stead later in life. The eye, the ear, the nose, the tongue---the four senses of sight, hearing, smell and taste---are all located in the head. Of course, the eye and the tongue have been provided with doors, so that the doors can keep out what is not desirable and welcome what is. Desire only the sight of beneficial things, only to speak out what will be conducive to peace and harmony. Do not indulge in talkativeness. If you get a reputation for talkativeness, you will suffer from weak memory, social odium, and nervous debility. You have the great responsibility of motherhood and the duty of educating your children into strong and good citizens of this country. Along with the University degree, you must also acquire some general knowledge which is essential for householders and others. Otherwise, though the husband and the wife may both be degree-holders, they would be helpless and desperate even if the baby caught a slight cold. You must also be conversant with some spiritual discipline like naamasmarana (remembering God's name), dhyaana (meditation) and yoga (divine communion), so that you may not be carried away by every changing breeze. Practise the constant presence of God. It is best that you imprint on your hearts the dual nature of the world that is a mixture of pleasure and pain, joy and grief, victory and defeat. Practise the constant presence of God and learn to offer all your activities at the feet of the Lord as an act of worship. Then they will be free from fault. Krishna advised Arjuna to enter 'the fight,' and at the same time told him not to have hatred towards the 'enemies.' These may appear to be two irreconcilable attitudes, for war is raaga (passion, attachment) and renunciation of hatred is vairagya (absence of raaga). Arjuna asked Krishna how he was to reconcile these two attitudes. Krishna said, "Maamanusmara, yudhyacha" (Keep Me ever in thy mind, and fight). "Do not cultivate the egoistic feeling that it is you who is fighting. I am-using you as My Instrument," He said. Even the food you take should be to propitiate Him, who is resident in your bodies as the Vaishwaanara, eager to digest the food we place in it. It is the Lord who receives the food, digests it and supplies strength thereby to the various limbs of the body. This college was established ten years ago. Hence it is now a sprightly girl of ten summers. A baby girl of two or three will not dare venture outside the home alone. A girl of twenty can well look after, herself wherever she is. But a girl of ten can neither be kept at home, nor does she know how to look after herself outside. Therefore we have all to guard her and guide her with great care and diligence. We must see that the ideals and aims of this college are maintained and fostered. On your discipline, devotion and duty are based the success and reputation of this college. Now, and later, you must lead lives of exemplary virtue and bring honour to parents and your alma mater. Do not hanker too much after irresponsible liberty. Women suffer most when they are moved by this desire. You must be the torch-bearers of the educational ideals of this college. When one teacher neglects her duty or lowers her standard of conduct, hundreds of students are affected thereby. The moral strength and virtues of the teachers will be reflected in the students under their care. You have to treat them as your own children, children who need and deserve your love. Be like mothers to these children and let this college ring with Love given and Love received. Women's College, Ananthapur, 30-8-1978 The Aathma (divinity) is the Sun in the firmament of the Heart. Now, the light of the Sun is obstructed by the thick clouds of vishaya-vaasana (desire or sense objects and objective pleasure); let the strong wind of paschaath-thaapa (repentance and resolution) scatter the clouds, so that the aathma may shine forth brilliantly. Sri Sathya Sai 12. Enemy number one THE world today is rolling in a sick-bed, afflicted with fear, anxiety and all types of phobia. It is not as if there is no remedy to cure it and make it whole and healthy again. What is the treatment that can set the world right? Man must realise his high destiny, his precious heritage and his innate strength and virtues. That will remove the hatred, greed and suspicion that have caused this morbid situation. Developing the bond of brotherhood is the remedy suggested by various practitioners. But that is not enough. Peace and harmony cannot be ensured when people tell themselves that they are brothers. We find that brothers and sisters born of the same mother fight against each other, seldom placing full trust in each other: They pollute their minds with anger and envy and render their lives miserable. Filial reverence and fraternal co-operation are mostly absent today among mankind. They fight for shares in property and spend most of their time and money in courts, trying to wreak vengeance against one another.

As a consequence of pride in one's own strength and power a person might injure thousands, but the pride will injure that person most, being like a devil (difficult to exorcise) that possesses man.

Man cannot claim to be man until this ego, that prompts him to ruin others and ride over others, is destroyed by saadhana (spiritual discipline). The Geetha directs man to be "nir-mamo, nirahamkaarah"

(without 'mine' and 'I'). The Divine in him can manifest only when the dark forces of 'mine' and 'I' are rendered ineffective. To overpower the ego is a well-nigh impossible task.

We have heard of the six internal foes that haunt man every moment of his life. But the sense of

'I' and 'mine' are far more deep-rooted. People have conquered the six foes---lust, anger, greed, attachment, pride and hatred. Indeed there are many who have achieved this victory. But rare indeed is the-hero who has demolished his ego and escaped from its nefarious urges.

Egotism makes enemies of fast friends

Egotism is a thorny bush which, when planted and fostered in one's heart, one has to pay the penalty. Egotism makes enemies of fast friends and ruins many good causes and projects, for it does not allow two good men to work together. Grief follows it like a shadow. Where there is no ego, joy, peace, courage, co-operation and love flourish. When man is aware that the same

Divine Consciousness that motivates him is equally motivating all others, then love ousts the ego into the background and takes charge of man's activities, words and thoughts.

When ego is awake, no wisdom can appeal

Consider this incident: A man suddenly loses his son and is in great grief. So a neighbour goes to him and tries to console and comfort him by various arguments and anecdotes. "My dear friend!

Why is a man born? Why does he die? The reason why he was born also explains why he died.

Birth means death. Fate plays strange games with us. We are but puppets in the show. What is the good of grieving over the dead?" He pours into the ears of the bereaved person all the Vedhaantha (philosophy of detachment) he knows. But the grief continues as before until the man becomes aware of the truth himself, unaided.

A few months later, the neighbour loses his son. Now the man who received all the Vedhaantha a few months ago comes to him and repeats the same questions seriatim, He says that one lives only so long as one's karma (destined activity) lasts, and that one's life is cut short when one has no more karma to atone for. It is all a question of paying off old debts. But these statements do not console the aggrieved neighbour, for the loss is entirely his. When ego is awake, no wisdom can appeal. The feeling, 'my son,' is the root cause of one's grief and another's calm.

We build a house for ourselves and are happy it is 'ours.' When some one pastes a cinema poster on the wall, we feel 'our house' is tarnished and we even go to court to punish the offender. When the election time comes around the walls are disfigured by loud and loathesome slogans, and we quarrel with all and sundry for defacing 'our' walls. Some time later we sell 'our house' to someone and move off. After that, even if the house is bombed, we are not in the least worried.

It was the ego that caused all the worry so long. How does this egotism get into our system? Is it a weed that grows in us and is cultivated by us until it destroys us root and branch? Where was this ego in the beginning? Where were we before we were born? Where will we be after we die?

All our ideas and inferences are but products of the period between birth and death. When the girl you married was seriously iii as a child, you did not worry for she had not become 'yours.'

We ourselves develop this attachment, as a cohesive and stabilising factor in life. But we then allow it to grow into huge dimensions, till it hinders our spiritual progress. Cultivate love, not delusion. Love your wife and children and do your duty towards them as a husband and a father.

But always hold on to the true values. Do not lose your sense of proportion.

All kinship is basically only physical

Take this illustration: There is an areca-nut palm, swaying, tall and slim, in the wind, It has a long shadow, also swaying, on the sandy ground below. God is the truth and the world is His shadow. You desire to pluck a few nuts, but mistaking the shadow for the tree, walk along the thin dark line and clutch the shadow nuts. This is your delusion. But climb the tree, the truth.

You get the fruits, while your shadow also appears hopping along the thin dark line plucking nuts. So proceed on the path of love, the path of God, and you can get both the worlds. Love will expand your heart so much that you cannot escape from your duties to your kith and kin.

Remember always that wife, son, mother---all kinship is basically only physical, body-bound, time-limited.

The ego brings wave after wave of wants and wishes before your attention, and tempts you to attempt to gain them. It is a never ending circle. So try to reduce your wants and expand the range of your love in order to be free from the coils of your ego.

Living involves many confrontations, companionships, separations, conflicts and neglects. We have to give up both the types of contacts---viyoga (the repugnant separation) and samyoga (the pleasant union). Attach yourself to God, and the delusion of the world will automatically fall off. Take the case of Hiranyaaksha, Hiranyakashipu, Kamsa, Raavana and the rest. They had all the wealth and power to be happy and peaceful. But they were ruled over by their ego, which finally led them to ruin.

Monks should be free from egotistic pride

The ego attacks the sage, the scholar, the teacher and the devout spiritual aspirant, even more than ordinary men. Their ego makes them proclaim that they, can defeat all others in controversy, that they are the most learned and that they are the ones nearest God. When egotism enters man, envy follows fast and occupies the heart.

Some Gurus who have religious institutions under them, laugh at you when you tell them that you are proceeding to Puttaparthi for this year's Dhashara. "So you have also become a victim of this Sai Baba madness?" they tease you. Instead they should be pleased and say, "Good! You should gladly go to any place where you can get peace of mind, where you can acquire aanandha (divine bliss) and become aware of Divinity. I am glad you have secured such a place. God is One and is Omnipresent."

Monks wearing ochre, robes should be free from egotistic pride and envy. I always tell you that God is present everywhere, in everyone; that all names and forms are His. I direct you to go to any place where you can carry on saadhana quietly, where you sense the atmosphere of Divinity and where you receive love and can cultivate love through service.

When Arjuna reduced to ashes the huge Khandava Forest, his ego did not raise its head. But when he stood before the Kaurava army, the ego told him to flee. He had made enormous preparations for the fray; he had amassed specially destructive weapons after years of austerity and adventure.

When Krishna offered to mediate with the Kauravas and gain some token of their having yielded to the entreaties of the Paandavas so that war could be averted. Arjuna argued with Him and told Him that His mission was bound to fail: "Can jasmine flowers yield fragrance when thrown into fire? Why waste Your sweet words of persuasion on their deaf ears? Can life-sustaining nectar be got from life-killing poison? You may please yourself by going amidst them. For myself, I am all for battle, this very moment."

Arjuna who was so bold and bellicose, was suddenly attacked by the delusion of egotism. He said, "I have no desire to rule over a burial-ground, I would rather beg and eke out my livelihood than kill these kinsmen of mine." Then Krishna told him in the Geetha, 'nir-mamo nirahankaarah prashaanthim adhigachchathi' --- "He who is devoid of the 'I' and 'mine' tendencies, these are not mine, 'this is I' and 'this is not I,' he alone can attain Prashaanthi (the Higher Peace)."

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 11-10-1978

13. He too is He

SOME people hope to accumulate merit by charity; others feel that asceticism is superior; still others adhere strictly to what they believe Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion) to be, considering it a better way to secure Divine Grace. But these, and even the highly praised path of sathya (truth) and dharma (righteousness), are not as fruitful as the path of seva (service). This sacred land of Bhaarith has earned great renown in the world for its consistent practice of this ideal of service through sacrifice.

Embodiments of the Divine Aathman (Self)! Shiva is Omnipresent; He is the Inner Motivator of all beings. He is ever present, everywhere, in our realm as well as in the realms around us. This fundamental truth has to be firmly believed in by every Seva Dhal (Voluntary Service Corps) member, and, realising this, he has to be humble and full of reverence towards all. You have to encounter various contrary gusts of passion, emotion, impulse, and intellectual doubt.

Nevertheless, bear them bravely and overcome them through prayer and meditation.

The Lord, too, will provide many tests to ensure that your faith is firm, that your spirit of seva is full and universal. The weaker practitioners of this seva saadhana (service-centred spiritual effort) will soon be shaken by these tests, and stray away from the right path. The six enemies---lust, anger, greed, delusion, pride and hatred---that lie in wait to foil their saadhana (spiritual effort), overpower the inner urge and make them slaves of the merely physical and material.

Keep "Heads in the forest, Hands in society"

The Seva Dhal member who shines in the splendour of the faith that "God is in himself and equally so in all," can transform the members of his family, his neighbours, the society in which he lives and the country to which he belongs, for the better. His love and light will bring him, unasked, a great deal of respectful attention.

As a preliminary to seva you have to win purity of heart. You must examine your motives and skills, your intentions and qualifications, and discover for yourself what you hope to achieve through the seva. You should ferret out any trace of egotism, and also the desire for fame or even of being near Swaami. If you have an irrepressible urge to possess things that contribute to your comfort or sense of superiority over others who are your friends or kith and kin, then the sooner you leave the Dhal the better.

You have heard some basic directions that I have been continuously giving. I have been telling you to deal with them as directions for life. "Duty is God; Work is Worship," and another dictum, "Heads in the forest, Hands in society." Do deeds that are holy and beneficial, untarnished by ego and the greed to benefit. Start on the sacred pilgrimage to the Divine Goal and make every minute of your life holy and purposeful. Then, surely, this earth, your karmakshethra (field of work), will be transformed into a dharmakshethra (field of righteousness).

While judging the seva done by a member of the Dhal, it is not the quantity or number of individual instances that matter; they do not count at all. Judge rather the motive that led him to serve, the genuineness of the love and compassion with which the seva was saturated. You may explain that it was your duty and so you had to do it; you may say that it was a responsibility which was imposed on you by the scarf and badge. But the explanation that appeals to Swaami is that you did the seva with no taint of ego, and that you derived unsurpassed aanandha (bliss) as a result.

Do not hesitate to practise humility

Preliminary to any seva, you have to uproot all egotistic tendencies, get rid of all sense of mine and thine and burn to ashes the pride that comes of the feeling that you are offering service to someone poorer and less fortunate. I find that the members of the Seva Dhal seldom aim to attain this stage. They are still growing the thorny bush of ego in their hearts. And the thorns are bound to hurt them more than they do others. The feelings of 'I' and 'mine' are at the root of all the misery in the world.

Do not hesitate to practise humility and obedience, discipline and compassion. Give up pride at your status, wealth, scholarship or official position. "Can I, a big officer, a rich merchant, a great scholar, a man highly respected in society, descend to this level of chumming with this sorrowing man?" Do not ask such silly questions. Every one of these qualifications of which you boast will disappear with death, or sometimes, sooner. The aanandha that you give, the love that you share, these alone will be your lasting possessions.

Watch for the Divinity latent in every man

Others not motivated by the spiritual urge might ridicule you, caricature your activities and even put obstacles in your path. But do not lose grip over your courage or hate such persons. Do not yield to anger. Watch for the Divinity that is latent in every man. That will give you peace and fortitude. Pay attention to the One that is the Truth of the many. You have met statewise, in groups, and arrived at certain conclusions about the types of seva. These have been presented now.

Rajesh Khanna from Delhi showed you the mini first-aid box that each Seva Dhal member can carry in his pocket so that he may be ready at any moment for any eventuality. It is indeed a good idea which can be taken up by other states. Health is the primary requisite for all activities--physical, mental, intellectual and spiritual. Any injury or illness that affects it adversely has to be attended to with loving care.

But more essential than these aids is another type of seva. Carry in the inner pocket, the heart, a box with a few tablets of discrimination, an ounce or two of sense-control and a few packets of powder prepared as the mixture of love and forbearance. Use this box to infuse courage and compassion in others and in yourself. Sense-control will guard against all evils

Sense-control will guard you against a host of evils. Do not believe that because you are equipped with the senses nothing harmful can happen through their free exercise. You may have your car registered in your own name and be driving it yourself, but if you do not apply the brakes timely, accidents are bound to be your lot. Your body can be compared to a car. Your eyes are like the lights; your stomach, the petrol tank; your mouth, the horn; your mind, the steering wheel; dharma (right action), artha (wealth), kaama (desire) and moksha (liberation), the wheels; the air within the tyres is faith and intelligence, buddhi (intellect), the switch.

The worship of jeeva (individual being), which is the other name for seva can be worthwhile only when the heart is pure. All the various types of service that one may write and talk about are mere empty, boasts if the mind of the sevak (volunteer) is not pure. A heart bubbling with aanandha and a mind saturated with love may do any tiny bit of seva, yet that will win much more Grace than huge projects undertaken in pride and pomp.

Nowadays, faith in God and goodness has declined. The means have become subordinate to the end. Success is sought by fair means or foul, foul means being the first resort. Misuse of official position, terrorising ignorant and innocent people to get one's way, creating situations of fear and despair, to undermine the moral strength of people---these have become accepted tactics. Victory won through questionable means is as shameful as defeat; defeat, while pursuing honest and compassionate means, is to be welcomed as victory. When you do not stray from the straight path, when you hold fast to truth and when you do not lose courage, your failure is as creditable as success.

Seva Dhal members should not become machine-minded and mechanical. They must have faith not in yanthra (machine), but in manthra (sacred formulas). They must consider each living being to be a part of the One God. You select a bamboo which is straight and long. But when selecting a cane, you look to the sugar content. Similarly, do not select Seva Dhal members for any qualification other than the saadhana by which they are aware of the Divinity in each individual.

Sai is the Inner inspiration for each worker

I advise through another slogan also: "Even if you cannot oblige, you can at least speak obligingly." This means that you have to cleanse your speech of cynicism and satire and be ever sincere and sweet. You may differ from co-workers on methods and programmes, but this should not leave a scar on your heart. Office-bearers in this Organisation are leaders who bear the brunt themselves, guides who walk along the path they wish others to take. They shall not command or punish, they can only persuade and advise.

The name of Sathya Sai is attached to each wing of this organisation. It is Sai that inspires each activity of each wing. This fact has not been taken to heart by many of you. Sai is the Inner inspiration and light for each worker. The different wings should not feel free to act according to the whims and fancies of the members or office-bearers. Each is dependent on the other. When a thorn pricks the foot, the eye sheds tears. There is a Divinity that moves and motivates the entire system of physical, mental and intellectual activity in the body:

Anthar bahischa thath sarvam, vyaapya Naaraayana sthithah (Inside and outside, all that is, is saturated with God). When one organ is happy, all are happy. When one limb is ill, all are in misery. Feeling of hatred is a serious sin

The name, Dhal, that you bear, has another great significance. Dhal means the petal of a flower.

The lotus has as many as a thousand petals. They all emanate from the central karnika (pericarp).

Each petal draws its strength, sustenance, colour, fragrance, and charm from the karnika.

Detached from the karnika the petal cannot survive. That attachment and that affection can be secured when the petal clings to the ideals of 'Sai and the lessons of Sai. In My Message to you, there is no scope for your seeing differences or distinctions among those you serve.

Lokaassamasthah sukhino bhavanthu (May every being in all the worlds be happy). That Is My wish and blessing.

Cultivating prema (divine love) is the one and only saadhana that can endow you with this outlook and faith. If there arises in the Samithi or Seva Dhal or Mahila Vibhaag, any feeling of hatred between members, clash of opinions or envy against some other member, treat it as a serious sin. It is a sacrilege, an act of treason against the organisation itself. Let the past be past, for that we cannot recover. Let us not brood over what has already happened. But from this moment, give up envy, pride and hatred in your hearts and plant therein, love and mutual help.

Give up the pernicious habit of seeking faults in others; seek first the faults in yourself. You discover faults only because you have those faults. Faultless people can never find fault in others.

Inner cleanliness is important for sevaks

We have here ten thousand Seva Dhal members, trained and dedicated for seva. However I doubt that you are being sincere in your duty to yourself and to others. As part of rural service you go into the villages adopted by the samithis and repair roads, clear drains, give some medicines, conduct bhajan, (devotional songs sung in groups) and deliver lectures. Is this the work that the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal has to do? Suppose you have a glass which you use to drink water from. Is it enough if the glass is cleaned on the outside? Inner cleanliness, inner health, inner illumination---these are far more important and the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal has to take them up in a big way.

Find out how many families are in misery and poverty on account of the evil habits of their bread-winners. Drinking, gambling and other vices have to be tackled with humility and love, through persuasion and even personal submission. Even the government builds hospitals, provides roads, arranges for water supply and caters to their other material needs. But only a spiritual, band of saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) like you can succeed in reforming their habits and bringing them on the path of peace, prosperity and harmony.

Every effort to give the villager a few more coins through employment will only make things worse if his moral fibre is not made strong enough to overcome the temptations of drink and gambling. Lead him slowly and surely along the path of God and these habits will drop off one by one.

"Fight to the end" and "Finish the game"

Do not hope to gain Grace by looking down upon mankind and looking up' at Sai. Remember, also, that your dress, behaviour and appearance, will reveal your character and attitude towards others." Always have sweet, soft words on your tongue; cast your eyes only on holy sights. Wear' clean, simple clothes and do not imitate those who are fascinated by latest fashions in dress and style. How can you do seva when you move so far away from the common man? I advise you to 'Follow the Master.' By 'Master' I mean the Conscience within you, the Voice' of God. Only then can you 'Face the devil' and escape from his temptations unharmed. And you must be ever vigilant that old habits and past attitudes do not come home again. Thus following the third rule of 'Fight to the end,' you finally gain the victory in the fourth round: 'Finish the game.'

From the moment of birth, your breath has been proclaiming your Reality, for it repeats incessantly the manthra (sacred formulae), 'Soham' (I am He, I am Shivam). Be conscious of this and you can never be wrong. You can never injure or insult anyone, for he too is He. Once that repetition of Soham stops, man is reduced to shavam (a corpse). Therefore cultivate the Divine qualities of love, compassion, humility and reverence for all living beings, reverence towards the earth and all the other elements. You can thus draw upon yourself the Grace of God and render you life beneficial and fruitful.

IV All India Seva Dhal Conference, 22-11-1978

14. Happy Birthday

THE same Divine Compassion that blessed Dhruva, saved Gajendhra, restored Kuchela and stood by Prahlada, has come to the earth as the refuge of the refugeless, as the Lord of peace, harmony and righteousness, as the Lord of all the worlds, as the Sath-Chith-Aanandha muurthi, as the Puttaparthi Sathya Sai Sath-chakravarthi--the King of Kings. How fascinating is the face of the baby, resting in the lap of the mother! It has no fear in its eyes; it has joy on its lips. It is full of peace. It is unaffected by those evil forces---envy, greed, anger and hatred---that rob man of his peace and joy. It has no egoistic desire, no anxiety to impress others or to show off. It has no plans for the future, no regrets for the past. Its faith in the love and strength of the mother is so unshakable, that even if the sky were to collapse and fall, its calmness would not be disturbed. Why is it that when the baby grows into adolescence and manhood, this calmness and this joy disappear, giving place to fear, anxiety and hatred? The reason is to be found in the overpowering effect of the senses and their clamour for being catered to. Again, man today tends to see only the 'many;' he casts aside the Vision of the One and encounters, as a result, competition and conflict, disappointment and despair.

Devotees seek the path that is popular

As the child gathers more information and experience and becomes more comprehending, it sees the world as a battlefield of opposing forces and armies, where it needs to struggle for victory by devious means. Each head has its own thoughts, says the shruthi, "Munde munde, mathih bhinnah" (No two agree; differences breed disputes), and finally, life becomes an arena where ego fights ego. The situation is as bad as in the medical field, where specialists who can diagnose and deal only with the illness of the eye, the nose, the throat, the stomach, the liver, the heart, the skin, etc., forget that these are all unified by the organism called body, and that it is not advisable to study them separately as many distinct; parts. The universe, the individual, the Paramaathman---all are inseparably unified. Scientists parade the little peeps they have of the universe as big victories. Even the technology that science has encouraged so far is fraught with danger to mankind. It cuts up the cosmos and the force behind it; and specialises it in minute parts, thus presenting false pictures of reality.

 Devotees are also caught in this game of seeing many where there is only One. They seek the path that is popular, that will bring them fame, rather than the path that can ensure liberation and illumination. They place their own idea of God in the forefront and fight for precedence and support. The Vedhic Suuthra (Vedhic dictum)---Ekoham bahushyaam (I am One, I shall be many)---is ignored. It is the One that pretends to be many. So one has to feel the impact of the One rather than of the many, while moving in the world.
 Faith is very essential for the pilgrim on the aadhyaathmik (spiritual) path. Man is now caught up in temporary and trivial pre-occupations in the too short interval between birth and death, and he deceives himself by placing faith in these rather than on truer and more lasting realities and experiences. He does not hold on to discrimination and deeper realities, and is carried away by every gust of doubt or disappointment.
 Man has lost the capacity of faith The baby is calm and unaffected on the lap of the mother since it has faith in the mother. The mother points out to someone as its father, to another as its grandpa, to another as its sister or brother, and the child accepts these statements without question. The mother creates the faith in the father for the child. So, too, Mother Nature proclaims that there is a Father who has designed and who is energising and motivating these worlds, but man does not accept this, for he has lost the capacity of faith.

Faith is the basis of every act. You do not run away from the barber because he is armed with a sharp razor. You place faith in him and allow him to cut your hair, quietly submitting to his idiosyncrasies. You give away costly clothes to the dhobi (laundry man) since you have the faith that he will return them washed and ironed. You have faith in the driver of your car, in the engineer who built your house. So too, believe in the Inner Motivator, the Aathman within, the Voice of God.
 Believe in the experience of ancient sages People are going about now advising that one should believe only things that one has 'seen' and 'experienced.' Something happens somewhere and the news is published in the papers. It is believed without question. So, too, believe in, the experience of seers and sages who had no other purpose than discovering the Truth and sharing It with others who were unaware of It. In India we have had millions who believed in God and in the seekers after God, and who have themselves realised the truth of God. This has made their lives happy and contented.
 Of course the seeker has to encounter many obstacles both inner and outer. But each one of them is a challenge which must bring out his latent faith. Where there is no darkness, there can be no appreciation for light, Without the pangs of hunger no one will seek food. It is the possibility of death that makes the mother most carefully nurse her sick child.
 That is the reason why one saint advised his followers, "Do not ask God for anything. Let Him deal with you as He Wills." Did Jataayu ask that Raama should come to him and perform the last rites. Did Shabari plead with Raama? Earn the qualifications--- holiness, purity, faith, universal love; then He will approach you on foot to console, comfort and save!
 Purity of heart and mastery over the senses---if you have these two credentials, Grace is your right.
 Imagining that Bliss is available in the outer world, men stray away from the inner path and are caught up in misery. They seek it in the family---the wife and children---and to keep up a standard of living for them, take to evil ways. The fundamental flaw is their belief that the body is the be all and the end all of existence. They ignore the Indweller, who has to be recognised, revered and responded to.
 Become aware of the Unity of mankind The Avathaar (Divine Incarnation) is the Aath mashakthi (power of the Supreme Soul) that has put on the raiment of kriya shakthi and yoga shakthi (power of action ad power of divine communion). Generally, Avathaarana (the process of incarnation), is described as a 'coming down' from a higher status to a lower one. But, no! When the baby in the cradle weeps, wails and 'clamours for help, the mother stoops and takes it up in her arms. Her stoop is not to be described as a 'coming down.' If you earn the necessary credentials, the Incarnation will come and save you. If, on the other hand, you multiply your demerits and descend lower and lower, how can you be saved? 'Have love and aanandha (divine bliss) in your heart. Aanandha comes from pure sight, pure hearing, pure speech and pure actions. The day you establish yourselves in this aanandha, that day will be My Birthday for you. I must tell you another fact. Swaami's Birthday is being celebrated at Puttaparthi because so many thousands come here from far-off places, in spite of the expense and great difficulty during the journey. Do not be under the impression that because it is Swaami's Birthday, therefore you must come. I have no desire to have My Birthday celebrated; such trivial thoughts can never enter Me. My only desire is to share My aanandha with you, to encourage you to lead lives full of aanandha. My Birthday is when you get aanandha. My Mission is Lokaah samasthah sukhino bhavanthu--- "May all the worlds be happy and prosperous." Become aware of the Unity of mankind; promote by love and service the joy and contentment of every one on earth and fill your hearts with that yearning. Then it becomes, verily, the Sai Mandhir (temple). From that moment I am where you are. Since this morning many people have greeted Me 'Happy Birthday!' No one need wish for happiness for Me, since I am always happy, everywhere. For Aanandha swaruupa (Embodiment of Divine bliss), why talk of happy birthday? You, too, must ever be happy and not wait for the birthday to recur every year to accumulate aanandha. Prashanthi Nilayam, 2:3-11-1978 Know that Sai Love is the Love of a thousand mothers. Naturally you will find it impossible to gauge the intensity of My Love. And understand this. If you place yourselves outside that Love, you place yourselves outside the love of all mankind. Mine is Love that is pure, free, selfless and unconditional. It is a great good fortune to receive such love.

Sri Sathya Sai

15. The four blemishes

EDUCATION must provide illumination; the darkness of ignorance and the dusk of doubt have to flee before that splendour. Then it is easy to cultivate good thoughts, feelings and impulses in the brightness of heart. Or, as some perverted persons do, bad thoughts, bad feelings and bad impulses can be bred in the original darkness itself. The first is the Raama path, the second, the Raavana path. Education does not end with the accumulation of information; it must result in transformation of the habits, character and aspirations of the individual. Knowledge has to be tested in daily action. Now, man has no information on the most precious heritage that he has within him. He is interested in everyone except his own self. If only he becomes aware of his self, he can have vast strength, deep peace and great joy added unto himself. Now, he is like a man standing under a blazing sun wailing, "O! I am in the darkness, I am caught up in the night." He is like the man' standing on the bank of the Ganga, and crying that he is having unbearable thirst. He has in him the very embodiment of Peace, Bliss and Love. But, he has no knowledge of this. He lives out his days in fear, hatred and sorrow. Science has provided man with the radio, the television set and the film. They are each useful and productive of good, if each one is manipulated by persons with a pure social consciousness and with love in their hearts. But, they are now in the hands of people with no high moral standards, who find in them tools for amassing money and so, they have become enemies of human progress. The tender minds of growing children are polluted by these media of communication. Person endowed with shraddha gains wisdom Man has to cleanse his mind of four blemishes before he can overcome the disaster that is fast overtaking him. They are Ashraddha, Krodha, Avishwaasam and Chintha---(want of steady application in work, anger, faltering faith in oneself and a perpetual sense of worry). First' Shraddha (steady interest) and application in the discharge of one's duty. It is said that the person endowed with shraddha gains inaana (wisdom). How can inaana be won by half-hearted dedication? Youth today is very flighty; they are carried away by fantasies, whims and fancies.

They are reluctant to dive deep into the truth of themselves or the outer world, They run after the sheets of water they perceive in mirages; can glow-worms light, a lamp? Frivolities and fancies cannot grant peace and happiness; what is really worth while has to be discovered first; then, steady effort must follow to gain them.

Anger is injurious to the progress of youth

Krodha (anger) is deadly poison. It affects others by its fumes, manifested through the eye, the tongue and the hands. The seed of a poison tree sprouts into a poisonous plant and when it becomes a big tree, its leaves, flowers and fruits will be certainly poisonous. So too, the person addicted to anger can only emanate poison, through thought, word and deed. An angry thought is like a pebble thrown into the calm waters of the Maanasa-sarovar (Mind-lake), inside man. It creates a circular effect which spreads through the entire lake. Anger is very injurious to the progress of youth. Strive by all means to prevent the poison entering your mental make-up.

Cultivate love, kindness, the spirit of seva, and encourage all thoughts of co-operation with others See the Divinity in each one, as you must see it in your own selves.

The third handicap is Avishwasam (weak faith in oneself). Now, you have faith in the body and its appurtenances and not in the inner motivator, the charioteer. That is why, faith falters when some minor calamity happens. Contemplate on the impermanence of wealth, fame, worldly friendship, etc. Youth today have faith in unreal, transient, momentary pleasures and pastimes.

They have no knowledge of the-eternal, the changeless, the ever-blissful. Precious years of life are thus wasted in worthless pursuits. Cultivate faith in the value of seva; believe that love can overcome hatred. Have faith in righteousness and the moral life. This is called dharma (righteousness) since, dhara means that which is worn, that which envelops, that which proteus, etc. Do not stray into wrong paths, enticed by sensual desires and plans for self-aggrandizement.

The next attitude to overcome is 'chinttha' (the habit of sliding into worry and despot). Once this weed takes root in the mind of man, it assumes many forms to assert its hold. Every stage of life is fraught with anxiety; every step in the progress of man is a cause for worry. In fact, birth, death, old age, illness, every one of these multiply worries of their own. How to get sleep is a cause for worry; how to get up from the bed is another worry! Today admission to Colleges causes worry; admission to the hostel is another worry; the examination causes worry. But these are matters that are not essential. They need not cause so much heart-burning as the problem of removing the fundamental error in the thought process---the ignoring of the Divine that inspires and guides you always and for ever.

Science can give only incomplete information

Jnana (Knowledge) is usually associated with two ways of acquisition---the worldly or the material and the Spiritual or Brahman path. The worldly path is like a pair of scissors. It cuts knowledge into pieces. The Brahman path is like a needle---it makes the separate parts into One and indivisible. The saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) must be aware of both. When you declare a person to be a jnaani (liberated person, he has passed through these two stages.

Science or the study of observable sensory matter, of measurable and calculable items, can give only incomplete information. The sea has pearls in its depths; but, you have to dive into it to secure them. The waves throw out only shells. You are celebrating Swaami's Birthday today in this College. It is only when brotherliness, devotion, dedication and discipline are cultivated that Swaami can be installed in your hearts. Do everything to develop love and to share that love with all, especially with the villages from which you come and take up projects of bettering their moral and economic condition.

7-12-1978

When you cultivate the attitude that you are the body, the body will demand from you more food, more variety in food, more attention to appearance and physical comfort.

A large portion of the food now consumed is superfluous; man can live healthily on much less. A good deal of effort and expenditure now spent to cater to taste and to social pomp can be given up, and health too will improve thereby.

Mitha thindi, athi haayi---"Moderate food gives excellent health." Gourmets only reveal their Thamoguna (quality of inertia and indolence). Eat to live; do not believe that you live in order to eat.

Sri Sathya Sai

16. Isa

THE followers of every religion, in their own way and style, call upon the One God who is Omnipresent. It is the same God who confers upon all mankind, health, prosperity, peace and happiness. No religion has a separate God showering Grace upon those who profess to abide by that faith alone! It is the destiny of man to journey from humanity to Divinity. In this pilgrimage he is bound to encounter various obstacles and trials. In order to illumine the path and help him overcome these troubles, sages, seers, realised souls, Divine personalities and Incarnations of God take birth in human form. They move among the afflicted and the seekers who have lost their way or strayed into the desert, and lead them into confidence and courage. Certain personalities are born and live out their days for this very purpose. They can be called kaarana-janmas (born for a purpose), for they take on the janma (birth) for a kaarana (cause, purpose). Such guides, exemplars and leaders, appear among all peoples and in all lands. They inspire faith in higher ideals, and teach in the Voice of God, counselling from the heart. Of course there are many aspirants who by their devotion, dedication and disciplined lives, attain the vision of the Omnipresent, Omnipotent and Omniscient One. They are content with the Bliss they have won for themselves. There are others who go out to share this bliss with those beyond the pale; they guide and lead and are blessed thereby. They teach that multiplicity is a delusion and that Unity is the Reality. The three stages of Jesus' life Jesus was kaarana-janma, a Master born with a purpose, the mission of restoring love, charity and compassion in the heart of man. He had no attachment to the self, nor paid any heed to joy or sorrow, loss or gain. He had a heart that responded to the call of anguish, and he went about the land preaching the lesson of love. His life was a libation for the upliftment of humanity. Like most seekers, he first searched for the Divine in the objective world. But he soon realised that the world is a kaleidoscopic picture created by one's own imagination, and sought to find God within himself. His stay in the Himaalayan monasteries in Kashmir and in other centres of eastern asceticism and philosophical inquiry, gave him greater awareness. From the attitude of being a Messenger of God, he could now call himself the Son of Clod. The bond of relationship increased: the 'I' was no more some distant light or entity; the light became a part of the "I." With the body-consciousness predominant, he was a messenger. With the heart-consciousness in the ascendant, he felt a greater nearness and dearness, and so the son-father bond seems natural at this stage. Later as the Aathman-consciousness was established, Jesus could declare, "I and 'My Father are One." The three stages may be described as: "I was in the Light," "the Light was in me," and "I am the light," and may be compared to the Dhwaitha (dualism), Visishtaadhwaitha (qualified non-dualism) and Adhwaitha (non-dualism) stages as described in Vedhic philosophy. The final stage is the one when all duality has been shed. This is the essence of all religious disciplines and teachings. Jesus' original name was Isa Jesus was honoured by the populace as Christ, for they found in his thoughts, words and deeds, no trace of ego. He had no envy or hatred, and was full of love and charity, humility and sympathy. Jesus' original name was Isa which, when repeated, is Sai. Isa and Sai, both mean Ishwara (God), the Eternal Absolute, the Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being-Awareness-Bliss). In the Tibetan manuscript, at the monastery where Isa spent some years, his name is written as Isha, which means the Lord of all living beings. When Jesus proclaimed that he was the Messenger of God, he wanted to emphasise that every one is a messenger of God and has to speak, act and think like one. This is the true Karma-Kaanda (branch dealing with action and its reaction) of the Vedhas: saadhana (discipline) of karma (work), japa (prayer), seva (service) and dhyaana (meditation). When progress is furthered, Jesus asserted, each one can recognise all as Sons of God, Children of God, brothers and sisters of oneself, and so, deserving of worship. The Upaasana Kaanda (branch of Vedhas dealing with contemplation) is the scripture in Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion) for this stage. Finally, knowledge ripens into wisdom and the goal of Inaana Kaanda (branch of Vedhas dealing with spiritual wisdom) is reached, when each one realises, "I and my Father are One." Do not confine Jesus to one community The Birthday of Jesus must be celebrated by all mankind, for such kaarana-janmas belong to the whole human race. They should not be confined to a single country or community. Jesus found that scholars and ritualists had befogged the true religion, He engaged himself in teaching both spirituality and morality, for education is the very light of life. Jesus found that people were running after glass beads, imagining them to be diamonds and attaching great value to them. He went round the holy shrines and discovered that they had become bazaars where Grace was being bargained and commercialised. He condemned the priesthood which tolerated and encouraged these practises. So he drew upon himself the anger of the heads of temples and monasteries. They tempted one of his disciples with 30 silver pieces, to betray him into their hands.

The Roman rulers were told that Jesus was attempting to assert himself as King and so could be punished for treason. Their insistence made the Governor order his crucifixion. When the nails were being driven into him to fix him on the Cross, Jesus heard the Voice of the Father saying, "All life is one, My dear Son. Be alike to every one," and he pleaded that those who were crucifying him may be pardoned for they knew not what they did. Jesus sacrificed himself for the sake of mankind.

Carols and candles, readings from the Bible and acting out the incidents that surrounded His Birth, are not enough to celebrate the Birth of Jesus. Jesus said that the bread taken in the 'last supper' was His Flesh, and the wine, His Blood. He meant that all beings alive with flesh and blood are to be treated as He Himself and that no distinction should be made. of friend or foe, we or they. Every body is His Body, sustained by the bread; every drop of blood flowing in the veins of every living being is His, animated by the activity that the wine imparted to it. That is to say, every man is Divine and has to be revered as such.

Man forgets or ignores the goal of life
You work as a messenger or servant; later, you worship, as a son does his father, and finally, you achieve the wisdom that You and He are One. That is the spiritual journey of which Jesus has shown the way in clear terms. He announced very early in life that he had come to illumine the spiritual path. Even as a bud, he emitted fragrance. He had the light in him, or else how can the tiny glow-worm light a lamp?

To elevate man, to raise the level of his consciousness, He has to incarnate as man. He has to speak to them in their own style and language, He has to teach them the methods that they can adopt and practise. Birds and beasts need no Divine Incarnation to guide them, for they have no inclination to stray away from their dharma. Man alone forgets or ignores the goal of life.

Christmas day, Prashanthi Nilayam, 25-12-1978

17. Why this ashaanthi?

LIFE as a human being is granted to living beings as the crown of their achievement during many lives. But that life is very unsteady; Death is always stalking a living being and nobody knows when it will snatch a man away. Therefore there should be no delay in fixing upon the goal of life and deciding on the best means of reaching it. One has to turn from the outer environment and its attractions to the inner levels of consciousness. This journey will be rewarded very well because there are precious treasures of ecstasy available. The sea shatters on the shore only shells and foam. But if one dares to dive into the depths he will be rewarded by coral and pearls. This is the real mission of man. If he misses it he is born and dies as an animal which has no knowledge of its inner springs of joy. He who has discovered this inner spring will be Aathmaa Raama, happy and content, peaceful and loving.

All the fear, anxiety, cruelty and injustice that is injuring the world today is caused by the wrong type of material education which lays emphasis more on the many than on the One. Even those who promise to cure the disease of the body treat it as if its different parts are fit subjects for a separate study and treatment. All nature is the body of God and must be looked upon as One.

Spiritual education draws attention to the One behind all these apparent multiplicity.

Uttharaayana teaches us great lessons
Today is the Pongal festival in Tamil Nadu. It is the day of Uttharaayana when the Sun turns daily more and more towards the north for a six-month period which is considered holier than the other six months. Pongal means bolling over, spilling over of milk, that is to say, the heart must spill over with delight at the great lessons that the Uttharaayana teaches us. The Sun is the presiding deity of the eye as well as the intellect and when the Sun turns north we must also decide to turn towards the holy path of God realisation. When Arjuna and Dhuryodhana were together with Sri Krishna to seek his help during the Kurukshethra war Arjuna chose the path of God while Dhuryodhana preferred the path of material power. If one has God on one side what can he not achieve.

The more riches you accumulate the more bound you become, the more worry, anxiety and fear you get into. There can be no peace of mind for a person burdened by riches. People seek this Ashaanthi (restlessness) since they do not know where Shaanthi (peace) can be acquired. An educated man must have as his first qualification the virtue, of Shaanthi, that is to say, not being affected by praise or blame, failure or success. It is the ego that makes one feel glad or sad.

Therefore control the ego by extending love to every living being. Self or ego is lovelessness. No person who is afflicted with ego can feel happy when others are happy and feel miserable when others are miserable or can take positive step to share the happiness and misery of others.

Without this deep love, a person however highly educated, is only a danger to the community.

Today you have dusted and cleaned your houses and their surroundings, painted and whitewashed the walls; you have drawn auspicious designs on the floor; you have tied up festoons and floral wreaths over your doors. All this is simply outer decoration. Decide to remove the evils of egotism, greed, hatred and jealousy and become aware in the new light that will dawn in the Aathma (Supreme soul) in all its glory.

Madras, 15-1-1979

Silence has to be started with oneself; that is to say, one must talk less, and think more deliberately, more discriminatingly. One must try to empty the mind of impulses, prejudices and preferences.

Thus, man must strive to reach down to his real nature or dharma, which is Divine, Dharma swaruupa (righteousness personified).

Sri Sathya Sai

18. Work for peace

CITIES have today become like turbulent seas, whose residents move in tossing boats surrounded by darkness. For these desperate people the spiritual ideal, shining bright, is the only guide to safety. The countryside is fast getting tinted by the culture of the cities and the distress is spreading everywhere. This is the spirit of the times. Entangled in this spirit, man accumulates all types of desires in his mind which, when not fulfilled, he becomes desperate and ends his life in unspeakable distress. Man forgets that his innermost desire, which he should cherish, is the' desire for good and for God. All other desires are mean and meaningless. Man has been endowed with the power of discrimination between the essentially good and the superficially pleasant, but he does not cultivate that faculty and benefit from it.

The Paandava brothers were highly fortunate. The eldest, Dharmaraaja, rose to be the Emperor.

The second was the indomitable Bheema, armed with the terrible mace. The third was Arjuna, son of the Lord of the Gods, Indhra. The Lord poured His Grace on Arjuna and deigned to serve him in battle as his charioteer! In spite of all these advantages, they were subjected to the severest tragedies in life. What is 'the lesson that their lives teach? No one can predict what calamity will overtake one and at what time. Everything depends on the Will of Providence; it all happens according to the Divine Plan.

Renunciation alone can grant immortality

Where exactly does God reside? He is everywhere, in all beings. He is termed Omniscient and Omnipresent. Really speaking, He is love, and love pervades everywhere. That is all we need to know. There is no being without a trace of love. Love leads to aanandha (Supreme bliss), pure and lasting. Many seek this aanandha through their relationships with other individuals, others try to attain it by amassing fame, power and riches and a few attempt to gain it by renunciation of material possessions and the desire for worldly pleasures.

Detachment alone can confer

Aanandha. The Upanishaths proclaim that thyaaga (sacrifice) alone can grant Atarithathwa (Bliss of Immortality). One has to ignore all bonds of kinship and comradeship, give up all attachment and affection and, in the heart thus liberated, install God in all His Glow. This is the only means to earn everlasting, undiminished aanandha.

The Yaadhavas of Dhwaarakaa were attached to Krishna by bonds of kinship and they were happy and proud of this relationship. But how did they fare in the end? They fought among themselves and were destroyed. The gopees (cowherd girls), however, installed Krishna in their hearts. They overcame their little selves and identified themselves with the Lord. So they realised the Goal. Surrender is the secret of spiritual triumph.

Share your joy with others less fortunate

People praise the late Naaraayana Bhat, the founder of the Lok Seva Vrindha complex of educational institutions, later taken over by the Sri Sathya Sai Loka Seva Trust. But praise is no substitute for love. Love must prompt enthusiastic fulfilment of the work to which Naaraayana Bhat dedicated his life.

Bhakthi (devotion) is usually taken to mean repetition of the Name, the recitation of psalms and hymns and rituals to propitiate God and win His Mercy. Even meditation on God and His compassion cannot be termed genuine bhakti. All these spiritual saadhanas (spiritual practices) have 'a shade of selfishness darkening them. Vyaasa has declared that service to man is the highest form of worship. Do not offend or harm anyone, that is true adoration of God; for, in truth, the other is you yourself. Awareness of this Truth is moksha (liberation). Share your joy, your wealth and your knowledge, with others less fortunate; that is the surest means of earning Divine Grace.

Perform all acts with as much love as you would offer God. In truth, you eat for the satisfaction of the 'I' in you and dress up to please the self-same 'I.' The husband loves his wife for the sake of the 'I' and the wife adores her husband for pleasing her 'I.' And who is this 'I' that is persistently inherent in everyone? It is God Himself "Ishwarah Sarva Bhuuthaanaam" (the Lord resides in the heart of every being), says the Geetha. He is the aathman (divinity) in every being. He is the Aathman in everyone, the Paramaathman (Supreme Soul). You, in your ignorance, have hidden It under the twin sheaths of mind and body, and you believe that the mind and body are the real 'you.' But there are three 'yous'---the one you think you are, the one others think you are and the one you really are. You think you are the body, others think you are the mind, while you really are the Aathman.

As all are Aathman, sparks of the One Paramaathman, do not think evil of anyone for that would mean inflicting evil upon yourself. You heard the statement, 'Sarva dheva namaskaarah Keshavam prathigachchathi' (Homage paid to any God reaches Keshava). I state now, 'Sarva jeeva thiraskaarah Keshavam prathigachchathi' (The insult you pay to any living being reaches Keshava), for Keshava is the Inner Reality of all. If you cannot serve others, leave them alone; do not deal dis-service. Feeding the hungry is the urgent seva. Now the cry for peace rings from every heart. From the prime minister down to the beggar, all ask for peace and aspire for peace. But peace cannot be purchased from the bazaar, nor can it be manufactured by industrial undertakings. It can be secured by acts and activities charged with love. Holding a cup of salt water in the hand you cannot, by mere slogans, make it potable and sweet. This is a holy place because you pay sincere attention to the proper development of the children under your care and devote your efforts to transmute them into sublime individuals and worthy sons and daughters of this sacred land. This is the only means by which we can ensure the welfare and prosperity of this country. Politics is powerless; it cannot save us. Machines and machinations cannot rescue us. Only by installing in our hearts the sacred ideals of Indian culture and marching forward towards those goals, can peace be attained. Naaraayana seva, which is feeding the hungry with reverence and humility, is the seva that is urgent today. The cry for food is being heard everywhere, though if each one worked hard, the problem would not arise at all. We talk of stomachs to be filled, but each stomach arrives in the world with two hands. Those hands, if they are kept idle or unskilled, cannot fulfil their assignment of finding the food for the stomach. Work hard---that is the message. And share the gain with others. The harder you work, the greater your gain, the more you can share. Work hard and, more important still, work together with others in loving kinship.

Alike, South Kaanara District, Karnaataka, 25-1-1979

Let God work through you, and there will be no more duty. Let God shine forth. Let God show Himself. Live God, Eat God, Drink God, Breathe God. Realise the Truth, and the other things will take care of themselves.

Sri Sathya Sai

19. Colour on canvas

THERE is only one God and He is Omnipresent. True, But to concentrate on the Omnipresent, some fixed point or preliminary form is needed. And to conceive of the Divine as present everywhere at all times, the mind of man is to be clarified and purified by means of certain psychological processes called saadhanas (spiritual efforts). This is the reason why not only among the followers of Hinduism but also among Christians and Buddhists, regular rituals are prescribed for the worship of idols of God. Cynics question the validity of this type of adoration and say that will only confirm faith in a superstition. "Can God be a stone or a piece of paper?" they ask. This attitude is not correct. By adhering to the traditionally laid down ritual worship, many aspirants have attained the vision of the Omnipresent and stayed in that Incommunicable Bliss.

In fact, puuja (formal worship, at regular hours, with the recitation of hymns and songs) is the very first step in the spiritual pilgrimage. Many seekers have undoubtedly achieved an awareness of God by years of asceticism among jungle caves. But, starting early with puuja and continuing with scrupulous care, the rites of archana, bhajana and aaradhana (offering of flowers with repetition of God's Name, singing His glory and adoring Him as a living presence) are more fruitful and satisfying. We realise that God is in the icon also Meerabai, Sakkubai, Suurdhaas, Kabeerdhaas, Shankaraachaarya and many other saints and realised souls have proved in their lives that the time, attention and energy spent, in these religious practices is well spent. By aaradhana only were they able to visualise the Divine in the specific form which they used as the instrument. The entire English literature is made up of permutations and combinations of the 26 letters of the alphabet. Puuj (ritual worship), ja (recitation of holy Names), archana (offering of flowers with God's Names) and aaradhana (Divine service) are the letters of the spiritual alphabet. The collection of the various items necessary for worship (lamps, camphor, flowers, plates, cups, a bell and the book) needs hours-long concentration on the Divine. The puuja itself may take another hour or two of concentrated and purificatory attention, and the performer rises up after the recitation and-meditation, a stronger and steadier pilgrim on the path. The Omnipresent is not absent in the icon or the picture. We do not reduce God and shut Him up in a stone image; we affirm and realise that He is in the icon also. We raise the image to the dimensions of the absolute; we expand the picture far beyond its frame and through the processes of saadhana we become aware that the picture, too, can be made a tool for the mind to escape from its limitations. Offer Puuj with a purified heart When the Mahaaraaja of Alwar (in Rajasthan) argued before Swaami Vivekaanandha that God can never be perceived in a picture drawn by an artist, Vivekaanandha called upon the prime minister who was standing reverently by, to get the Mahaaraaja's portrait down from the wall and asked him to spit on it! He said, "You need not hesitate. The Mahaaraaja says that it is just a blotch of colours on a bit of canvas and that it should not be confused with His Majesty." The sixteen modes of worship laid down in the Shaasthras (sciences of spirituality) to make the aspirant aware that he is in the very presence and that every gesture and movement of his has to be motivated by devotion and dedication, ensure the purification of the mind of man from ego and all its brood of blemishes. This is chiththa suddhi---the cleansing of all levels of one's consciousness. The basic chiththa (inner consciousness) has to be freed from down-pulling impulses. Of what good is it to cook a rare and costly dish in a vessel contaminated by dirt? Of what good is it to plant a precious seed in rocky soil? Puuj or archana offered without a purified heart is sheer waste of time. But even a short sincere session of puuj spent in Divine Awareness yields much fruit. Thiruththondar, a Thamil saint, confessed that he had engaged himself in worship of the Lord's idol in order to cleanse his mind. The material and the Form are inseparable, but the seeker must dwell on the Form which he desires to be manifested in all Its Glory, rather than on the material. He must dwell long and deep over the thought that Go is found through every particle in the universe, free from any limitations of space and time. Great devotees have no identity of their own Ceaseless effort is necessary to gain and possess chiththa suddhi. One has to be ever in sathsang (holy company) and in activities devoted to the service of God in all human forms. In the Geetha one can notice Krishna addressing Arjuna as 'Kurunandhana.' The usual meaning given by scholars to this appellation is, "the scion of the Kuru clan," though it has a much more profound lesson to teach mankind. Kuru, in Samskrith, means 'do,' and nandhana means, 'he who takes delight in.' Hence Krishna, by addressing Arjuna as Kuru nandhana, was appreciating the retrans-formation in him from inaction to action, for Arjuna was one who took delight in being active. For most of you Sunday is a holiday, a day in which you delight. But for Arjuna, the day which He could devote to God's work was indeed a 'Holy Day.' You must have heard the common people in India believe that when the thunder is threatening overhead, the simultaneous recitation of Arjuna's nine names keep a bolt from falling on them. This is proof of the power that not only the Names of God but also those of His devoted adherents---ever pure and ever in contact with the Absolute---have over the elements. That is the reason why aaraadhana (worship of the Presence) is offered even to great devotees like Thyaagaraaja and Kabeer. They have no identity of their own, having become one with the limitless through the worship of the limited.

Brindhaavan, 6-2-1979

It is running after vishaya vaasana---attachment to sense objects---that produces all this discontent. That vaasana, that type of desire, has no end.

Once you become a slave to the senses, they will not leave hold of you until your death. It is an unquenchable thirst. But I call you to Me and even grant worldly boons, so that you may turn Godward.

No Avathaara has done like this before, going among the people, the masses, the millions, and counselling them, guiding them, consoling them, uplifting them, directing them along the path of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (truth, Virtue, Peace and Love).

Sri Sathya Sai

20. The New Year pledge

TODAY is the holy Ugaadhi (Thelugu New Year) day. We bid farewell to the year gone by and welcome the new year. We hope that during this year called Siddhaarthi our time and activity will be meaningful. We pray that the new spring should confer on all beings longevity, health and goodness. Pleasant experiences and unpleasant memories of the previous year that linger in the mind contain many good lessons. When one reviews the past year within oneself, one can realise how much time was spent selfishly and how much in service.

Man has achieved some progress physically and scientifically but morality he has fallen. He is sliding down due to his egotism. What is the cause of this fall? Selfishness, ignorance and avidhya (absence of wisdom) are the only causes. It is selfishness that is now operating behind every thought, word and deed. Those who seek the joy of liberation should burn this selfishness in the fire of jnaana (spiritual wisdom). Otherwise there is no future. Do not misuse time which is precious. Time fleets fast. The span of life is like a porous pot. Not to realise this is the basic ignorance. Make good use of time by recognising what is permanent and true in human life.

Cultivate the spiritual feeling of oneness

There are 5,64,000 small villages in our country. Their condition is sad and pitiable. People like you living in the towns must involve themselves in social services programmes and help these fellowmen. It is because of your selfishness that you become useless to others. When can you recognise the good in others? You entertain all kinds of hopes and finally get deceived. People preach a million things but do not practise even one.

We say from platforms "Brothers and Sisters." We feel that we are all brothers. But, even real brothers wrangle over properties and go upto the Supreme Court in litigation. So, instead of thinking that we are brothers merely in words we should cultivate the higher spiritual feeling of 'Oneness.' The fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man become meaningful only then.

Today is the holy Ugaadhi day. It is not enough if we wear new clothes and partake in feasts.

Launch a new movement to mark the new year. People in the villages have no medical and educational facilities. They have no drinking water, no sanitary arrangements. They have no food to eat. Provide these facilities for them and thereby realise Divinity. The need of the hour is the man of action, not the one who only talks. Our Bhaarthabhumi (land of Bhaarath, India) is Karmabhumi (land of sacred action). Karma is exertion, effort. Bhaarathabhumi is also the land which is known for its love of God.

Put the money to use of people in distress

Today our lives are tainted by a desire for wealth. Wealth makes a man intoxicated and mad.

Money is necessary but it must have a limit. Excessive money can be harmful to the 'mind. It is more difficult to spend money than to earn it. It is even more difficult to take care of money.

This difficulty has an advantage---put the money to good use by spending it for the rural folk and people in distress. It is not 'Dhanamoolam idham jagath' (money is the basis of this mundane world) but 'Dharmamoolam idham jagath' (righteousness is the basis of this world). If money grows, unrest also grows. Money brings sorrow with it. A rich man is harassed from three sides--

-the Government, his relations and thieves. God alone knows the agony suffered by a rich man.

Those who amass wealth for the sake of their sons, themselves suffer privations, and ruin the very sons. So, give away your money in charity and make it purposeful. Members of Sathya Sai Organisations must tour every village and improve the lot of the rural folk. This is a new challenge for the members of the organisation.

I shall visit every village along with you, serve them without any discrimination of caste, creed, race and class. I wish that the Sathya Sai Organisations should, from this day onwards, undertake programmes of rural uplift, go to each village and provide educational and medical facilities.

Meditation and penance are useful to one's own self only but the good of the world at large is achieved through sacrifice. The Upanishaths refer to "sacrifice as the only means of salvation"---

Thyaagenaikena Amrithathwamaanasuh. So, I wish that from today onwards members of Sathya

Sai Organisations should develop the spirit of sacrifice and provide the basic necessities of life for the rural masses. It is in the villages that a certain amount of morality and honesty is still left.

I hope that all rich people will strive to improve the condition of the villages.

Does a festival mean only wearing new clothes and eating sweets? Get rid of old ideas and plant new ones. The bitter-sweet mix served on the Ugaadhi day symbolizes that one should treat pleasure and pain equally.

Children and students must be trained to serve in rural areas. There are 2,55,00,000 children in our country today. Forty percent among them go about begging. It is not good to keep quiet when there are such hardship in the society around. We should give up japa and saadhana and uplift such people through service and sacrifice. We should feel that Jane Seva is Janaardhana Seva and Maanava Seva is Maadhava Seva (service to people is service to God).

All of you should take the pledge on this New Year Day that you will serve the rural people to the best of your ability. You must do this as a sacred duty which goes beyond differences of politics, caste and creed. Such a feeling is strengthened by self-confidence and equanimity in joy and sorrow. We say we are all children of Bhaarith but in what way are we sustaining the culture of Bhaarith? Our culture cannot be sustained without proper faith on our part. Faith and selfconfidence are essential for spiritual progress.

With the hope that you will regard service to villages as service to God, I offer my blessings to you.

Shivam, Hyderabad 28-3-1979

21. Security for society

TODAY man can, thanks to the advancement in science and technology, move about in space and underwater, land on the moon and listen to the stars, but the pity of it is, he has lost the secret of living on earth with peace in his heart and in harmony with his fellowmen. He can beat the bird in the sky and the fishes in the sea, but he is helpless as a man. The innate purpose for which he has earned this human birth is being neglected in frantic pursuit of the petty pleasures derivable from the outer world. Thus he is only laying waste the years given to him. There is a divinity, higher than humanity, that is behind and beneath all man's activities. But, man is not aware of it and he fails to benefit by that awareness. His first task is to cognise this source of joy and peace. That divinity is like the thread in which the flowers are strung; we see only the garland; we do not cognise that string that holds the flowers together and makes a garland out of a heap of blossoms.

Mankind is strung together by this inherent divinity. I see in this campus people from all the States and all the linguistic areas of our country. I look upon this gathering as a garden shining with multicoloured blossoms. But, in spite of these differences and as a result of the underlying unity, you have met here in this Academy with the same ideal, undergoing the same training and welcoming the same series of experiences.

Three Guidelines to be followed in life

I wish to emphasise three guidelines or Suuthras which have to be followed to ensure success in your endeavours. Your responsibilities and your duties require that you should pay attention to these three. They are: Duty, Discipline and Devotion.

For the Police, especially, discipline is essential. Your job involves many trying moments, many worries and much exertion. Really, you are the custodians of peace and guards of security.

Therefore, a disciplined mind that ever remains in equanimity is very necessary for you to lead peaceful happy lives. Equanimity can arise only from the spring of devotion in the heart.

These days, even those who are educated and those who benefit by training courses such as yours, are anxious about the future and full of fear lest the standard of life to which they are accustomed may fall. How and by what means can I increase comforts in my life?---that is the concern of everybody. No one worries about the happiness that he can contribute, the joy he can give, the duty he can discharge. Every one is calculating the happiness others can give him, the joy he can extract from society and the duty that society owes to him. The number of those who concentrate on their responsibilities rather than their wants is very small. How can I as an individual get the maximum benefit out of society?---that is the urge. But, people forget that it is their primary duty to safeguard the security and prosperity of the society of which they are the limbs.

Renounce selfish desires and have peace

It is only when the individual is prepared to sacrifice his selfish desires and toil for the welfare of society---that the nation will prosper. Then only will the world have peace. That is why the Vedhas proclaim that man can have peace only when he renounces selfish desires. The Vedhas condemn persons who accumulate wealth and who are ever immersed in activities that can add to their physical comfort. The man who gives, receives even while he gives, more than what he gives. Do not strive for your own happiness but strive for the happiness of all; then you can derive greater happiness, with additional joy of having added to the happiness to others.

When you joined this Department of Public Service, you dedicated yourself to the service of society and you decided to welcome all the incidental troubles and worries. You renounced an easy-going life in favour of the higher ideal of ensuring peace, safety and security in society.

Faith in an Omnipresent God will sustain you when you are overwhelmed by the ups and downs of life. Cultivate devotion and dedication and you can be ever at peace with yourself and the world. For, then, you can fulfil your duties with joy and with all your strength.

Promote devotion through duty & discipline

Nowadays, every person in authority talks of discipline and exhorts others to be disciplined, but we do not find in those persons even a trace of what they want others to have! You have come here, many of you, far from your own states, for the purpose of equipping yourselves better for the jobs you have entered into. Feel it as your duty to benefit to the utmost from the course of training given here. Otherwise, you will be doing great injury to your own careers, and, more serious than this, causing injury to your motherland.

Children of Bhaarith must live, not for the salary they get but for the chance of service they have secured. I advise you to develop faith in God and promote that devotion through duty and discipline. Earn fame as sincere servants of society and vigilant guardians of its safety.

Without an ever present faith in an all-knowing God, life is dry and drab, shadowed by despair and doom. Love for God and fear of sin, are the two primary needs for a happy life. Without these two, man becomes a monster. Man must be ever ready to sacrifice his selfish needs for the sake of the larger community. There is nothing so glorious as renunciation. Be honest, be proficient in detachment and with God installed in your hearts march forward to offer your talents and skills for the duties you have undertaken.

National Police Academy, Hyderabad, 29-3-1979

22. Transplantation of the heart

A TEMPLE is a reminder to the people around of the goal of life; it is a guide to greater spiritual endeavour; it is a step towards the Almighty; it is a warning against the vain pursuit after sensual pleasures. They reveal the path by which man can fulfil his destiny, realise the purpose for which he has been endowed with the human body with all its unique treasures of discrimination, imagination, intuition and capacity to keep aloof from material attractions. So, you must be appreciated for your efforts to have a temple in your village and inaugurate it today.

Embodiments of Love! Man is a bundle of bones clothed in muscle and fitted with communication nerves. As a base of this gross body, he has a subtle body too. It has its own hunger and thirst and life cannot be happy unless these too are fulfilled---the hunger to return to the Source, a thirst for the nectar that confers immortality. In the search for something to allay this hunger and this thirst, man meets with countless obstacles, for, he does not know the road and is easily misled by his own senses which profess to show him the road. It is only when some disaster or distress overpowers him that he becomes aware of the true path. The true path is the path that reveals the Aathma within.

Trust in God strengthens faith in fellowmen

Just as a branch is part of the tree and is able to exist as the part, so each one of you is a part of Brahman (Supreme Being), the Paramaathma (Universal Self). Each one is part of the One and shines because of the same Divine current that flows in and through. Villagers are leading lives and spending their days without the awareness of this unity of one with all. So, there are factions and groups in every village, which prevent welfare and prosperity, peace and harmony. Villagers must recapture and develop mutual cooperation; they must preserve unity and cultivate love and

joy. Spend some time each day together in bhajan (devotional songs sung in groups) and sathsang (good company) in this temple. Then, the day will be brighter, the conversation will be sweeter and life will be more full of harmony and happiness. Trusting in God strengthens your faith in your fellow men. You will love them more, suffer their faults and failings with greater sympathy and you will share in activities that serve the poor and the disabled. You will come to know-that God loves those who love His children and He will shower grace on those who serve the weak, the meek and the ignorant.

Not only is this building in which the image of God has been installed, but the body of living being is a temple, for, God has installed Himself therein and is waiting for recognition and reverential worship. That recognition will confer on us unbounded Bliss---far more than any worldly possession can give, far purer than any victory can confer. To recognise it, your minds have to be cleansed through good words, good thoughts and good deeds. Where can a fish find the greatest happiness---in water, in a full flooded river or the sea? Place it in a gem, set golden plate; can it derive any joy from that good fortune? No. So too, man can be happy only when he is merged in thoughts of the God from whom he has come, by whom he lives and into whom he merges.

A temple is essential for a living village From dawn to dusk you toil for eking out a livelihood; I am asking you to devote at least ten minutes a day to join in Sathsang, to meditate on the glory of God who watches over us and to decide, in consultation with our brothers, the best way to promote prosperity and unity.

This day, you have achieved a task; you have completed the construction of a temple. But, why should this achievement be appreciated? For, just as a heart is essential for a living body, a temple is essential for a living village. The heart purifies the blood and pumps strength to all parts of the body. The temple calls all to the Feet of God, corrects their faults, and purifies the minds, of every one who worships the God installed therein. I advise you to gather here in the evening, after the day's toil, sing some bhajan songs and enjoy yourselves in Naamasmarana.

That is the best and easiest saadhana in this age of anxiety and fear, this Kali Yuga (Iron Age) of wickedness and vice.

Ignore and destroy divisive tendencies Do not run to the officers of Government for every little petty problem. Try to be as self-reliant as possible; endeavour to stand on your own feet. Be industrious. Be efficient and enthusiastic in the work that has come to you as your share in life. God has provided two hands for every stomach. If those hands work assiduously and intelligently, they can, without doubt, fill that little stomach. The trouble is: we are loath to work. We welcome every chance to talk and teach. But, speech cannot fill the hungry stomach. Work, work, dedicated work, intelligent work---that is what is needed. Work unitedly. Our villagers are broken into factions and parties. They are not aware of the vast possibilities of unity. If you meditate every day on God as the inner core, the real flame of love, power and wisdom, in each inhabitant of the village---man, woman and child, high and low, rich and poor, learned and illiterate---then you will not emphasise the differences and quarrel. Then anger, envy and hatred cannot enter your broad heart. Love will be the only quality welcomed therein and emanating therefrom.

I advise you therefore to ignore and destroy any such divisive tendencies in your heart. The Name of God is the overhanging branch which a mankind failing down a precipice can hold on to in order to be saved. So, in each part of the village, have these Sathsangs and carry on Bhajan in this temple every day in the evening hours. This day should mark a new era in this village.

Welcome all improvements and facilities that may accrue to your village but more than all, develop mutual trust, mutual cooperation and joint effort based on love and reverence to all. Be assured that the more you cultivate these qualities, the greater the shower of grace that the Omnipresent God will bless you with.

Nagar-Kurnool, 30- 3-1979

If mathi (intellect) is reformed, that is to say, if one's impulses are transmuted, then one's matha (religion) is praise worthy. Otherwise, if one obeys the whims of an untutored mind, its religion is bound to be a source of evil.

We have to pay attention to the plans that intelligence dictates, not the external signs of orthodoxy. A person may appear strictly orthodox, but his heart may be filled with the poison of hatred and envy. Has he realised that God is the God of all, that He is present in every being?

God is the unseen, everpresent immanent energy in all things; this has to be realised by every aspirant, or else, his aspiration can never be fulfilled. Reasoning by itself will lead one to this conclusion of the unity of all matter and of all energy.

Sri Sathya Sai
 23. What is Vidhya?

STUDENTS ! Remember that it is only with the result of the merit which was accumulated by you during many lives that you have been able to join these Sathya Sai Loka Seva Educational Institutions. What does the word student mean? It means a person dedicated to study. He is called Vidhyarthi because he seeks Vidhya (knowledge). What does vidhya mean? Vid means Light and ya means that which gives light. Of course our eyes give us light because they are blessed by the Sun. They make things in nature clearer and clearer. Thus we have five senses which collect information about nature and place them at the disposal of the mind. The mind has got a master namely the intellect which discriminates between the good and the evil and encourages you to accept the good and reject the evil. But as the basis of the buddhi (intellect) there is the Aathma (soul) which gives you the experience of the Aanandha (Total Bliss), whenever you are aware of truth, goodness or beauty. Beauty is not to be mistaken for physical charm which is temporary. Vidhya means proceeding from darkness to light, that is to say, from ignorance of the Aathma (Divine Self) to the awareness of the Aathma. People do not seek the iyothi (light) that can lead them from thamas (inertia) into wisdom. The reason is they have no steadiness in their saadhana (spiritual effort). They pay more attention to material pleasure and the earning of money by any means to have what they hope will give happiness in the future. Steady effort in these directions is simply running after a mirage. All efforts must be directed towards the realisation of the truth, goodness and beauty which are latent in us as the Aathma. Anger is the worst exhibition of the ego. Now you are not able to understand the Aathma because your effort is not sincere and steady. You feel that there are more valuable things which can be got from the outside world by fair means or foul. But pure and lasting bliss which will not cause harm to anyone can be got only from the inner search. When you run after temporary pleasure any disappointment or obstacle will produce anger and hatred. The angry man is blind and temporarily mad. The saint Dhurvaasa who is the personification of anger is called so because he was full of dhur (bad) vaasanas (tendencies). Anger is the worst exhibition of the ego. In order to realize the Aathma you must have faith in your success and in the fact that the aathma exists and that it can be brought into consciousness all the time. Faith is essential for success in any undertaking. However little, you can progress in education only if you have faith in your abilities. Of course, the material education you are trying to get is necessary for material ends but it cannot give Shaanthi and Aanandha. When success comes your way, you become proud and uncontrollable; when defeat encounters you, you become dejected and desperate. It is only spiritual education that can tell you that both success and defeat are inevitable in life and both must be faced with an equal mind. Spiritual education leads to detachment. Material education leads to desires and attachments. Spiritual education leads to peace and detachment. Material education develops the ego. Spiritual education surrenders the ego at the feet of the Lord. The Yaadhavas had an egoistic attachment to Krishna. They thought of him as a kinsman belonging to them specially; as a result they had to end their days before the passing away of Krishna fighting among themselves. But the gopees (cowherd girls) had surrendered their ego and merged their individuality. So their Aanandha was not disturbed. Here in the Lokaseva schools you are introduced to this essential spiritual education as tender plants. You help to cultivate duty, discipline and devotion and grow into straight and steady promoters of the spiritual culture of India. The new born child asks the question "Koham" (Who am I?) That is the meaning of its first cry. Of what avail is human life if the answer to this question is not discovered by man? Of what avail is an electric bulb which has no current to illuminate? Man should not live like dogs and jackals. He must realise he has God in him in the form of prema (love) which draws him to every living thing. Then he will get the answer to the question with which he was born: "I am love, I am God." You must all be disciplined and devoted. Duty is God. So attend your classes and learn your lessons and be true Vidhyarthis, seeking vidhya (light). Have prayers to the Lord morning and evening. You have all taken great trouble to clean with extra love every square inch of this huge campus. I know how much time and energy you spent for this and I am sorry I cannot now stay longer with you. I wish I could come once again very soon and spend more time with you.

Bhagavaan's Discourse to students at Alike, April 1979

During the saguna (quality-oriented) worship, the basic nirguna (quality-less) aspect of God has to be sustaining the mind; no description can exhaust the Glory, no word can approximate the Majesty. During the nirguna meditation, the faith that God does not diminish His Glory of Majesty by being with Form, Attributes and Name must be the sustaining force. The final step, however, must be the right foot, considered auspicious, the nirguna step.

Sri Sathya Sai

24. Partial education

TERMITES appear insignificant and innocent in the beginning; they are named 'white ants,' as if they deserve admiration and attention, rather than extermination. For, they multiply fast and destroy in silence the entire structures of the houses of man. Bad habits, imitative tendencies like drink and drugs, gambling and gangsterism---they secure entry into individual and social behaviour noiselessly, in various disguises and then destroy the career of even the toughest and the most upright. The youth of India are succumbing to the siren calls of foreign cultural traits. They are discarding their own precious heritage of reverence towards elders, service of parents, compassion for all beings in distress, humility, simplicity, adherence to truth and attachment to self-respect. Science and technology have encouraged the material out-look, concentrated all effort towards comforts and exaggerated the ego. The same sad decline is happening, more or less, in every country today. Man is behaving mostly as animal, partly as man. The prime cause for this tragedy is the neglect of the spiritual and moral aspects of the human personality. Man feels no obligation towards family, society, nation or mankind. He worships his ego, more than any thing else. He is proud of his technological advance---the travel in space, the computers, the unravelling of the atom. But, look at the confusion and the conflicts in the political, economic spheres of life! Man has not been able to overcome greed, pride and hatred in the national and religious aspects. His narrow loyalties towards his caste, colour and creed persist to the detriment of higher ideals. Confusion in the sphere of education has grown into enormous proportions. He has not yet been successful in sublimating his animal impulses into human attitudes. He is therefore behaving in a ridiculous manner, mostly animal and partly man. Today, man is madly engaged in accumulating money for the sake of the comforts it can bring. He is wading in sorrow and joy from moment to moment, in the pursuit of sensual pleasure. Just as death follows life, anxiety follows wealth. The rich man is persecuted by troubles just as a crow with a piece of meat is pursued by dozens of hungry birds who follow the crow. Man's ambitions are increasing every day everywhere. Contemporary civilisation is piling fear upon fear on all parts of the world.

Instead of high thinking and simple living which was the ideal of ancient times, modern India is adopting the ideal of 'low thinking and high living. The system of education is to blame largely for this downfall. Mahaathma Gandhi realised the eternal values enshrined in Bhaaratheeya Culture. He attempted to promote these values through the primary schools he sponsored. When he was in prison, a British officer who visited him often asked him, "I find you sad and worried today. Tell me why?" and Gandhi replied, "I find that the educated person has a hardened heart, more hardened than the heart of an uneducated person. This is something that should not happen.

The system is fraught with danger." This made Gandhi try his experiments in imparting Indian ideals to the tender minds in primary schools. The same officer approached Baa! Gangadhar Thilak later and told him how Gandhi had accused Western education of hardening the heart. He asked Thilak, "But, I find you have not been spoiled at all by the Western system of education."

Thilak replied, "I asserted that I am what I am, inspite of the system of education through which I had to pass."

The Right and the Duty are both fundamental Men repeat the word 'duty' day after day and during all hours of the day, without any clear conception of what that word means. Duty arises when there are two people, you and another.

Education has lost its meaning when it does not instruct what an individual should render to society, how he has to control his ego for ensuring the common good.

One individual has the right to exercise freedom, only so long as he does not obstruct the freedom which is equally the right of another. Honouring the right of the other man to freedom is your duty. The right and the duty are both fundamental. Nevertheless, we find everyone fostering and insisting on his own rights and paying no consideration to the rights of others. We find in society, around us, millions of brothers and sisters subjected to harm by this callousness.

There are 500,000 villages in India where people live in poverty, ignorance and disease. Rulers forming the Government have drawn up various plans to raise their standard of living, but it is wrong to leave it all to them. It cannot be done by the efforts of government alone. The hearty co-operation, help and good-will of the villagers themselves are essential. A single flower cannot make a garland; a single individual cannot set right the wrong of ages.

Children have to learn the lesson of self-reliance

Crores of children live as beggars in the streets. It is the responsibility of the grownups to wean them away and enable them to become self-reliant, self-respecting citizens. Older people are like old trees; they cannot be bent in the direction which is good for them. But, these tender saplings can be trained to grow straight and strong. So, I wish to declare that the first duty of every adult, son and daughter of this country is to pay loving attention to the children.

I call-upon you to resolve to establish a primary school and arrange for medical care for every village. Wealth is intended not for adding luxury to life, for revelling in sensual joy. Through good sanitation and good education you can improve the condition of the children. If it is your intention to raise India, once again, into an example and ideal for the rest of the world, it can be achieved only by hard physical work and by systematic reduction of desires.

In the sacred land of Bhaarath where Annapoorna, the Goddess designated as food, is worshipped, there need be no shortage of food for the people.

Controlling population is not the right remedy. For, consider this: Every child is born not only with a stomach that has to be catered to, it is also endowed with two hands which can work and produce the food for the stomach. The hands have to be given the strength and skill; they have to learn the lesson of selfreliance.

They should never be lazy or slothful. Then, there can be no deficiency in food and no problem of underfeeding.

Today a Degree is only a begging bowl

We have to inspire and instruct the children to become Karma Veers (heroes of action), whose lives are dedicated to work as worship of the one God who resides in all. They must be trained to take part gladly and intelligently in "activity programmes" filled with the spirit of service.

In order to make the primary schools succeed in this endeavour, see that you run them with patience and love. Now after spending thousands of rupees and mortgaging or selling their lands and houses, the parents are happy that their sons and daughters have got a degree. But, they suffer great sorrow when the degree is discovered to be only a begging bowl with which their children go round from office to office. Instead of education for doing the work of society, we are having education for jobs which society has to create to give them work. The head is loaded with trivial information and the heart is hardened.

Degrees are conferred even if the candidate secures 30 marks out of 100. This means that a person is certified useful, even if he commits 70 mistakes in every hundred items of work assigned to him by the authorities. The parents and the teachers must be examples of lives led in the light of aathmic consciousness. Then we can have a balanced education. Then we can have a generation of students wedded to the service of society, for each student will see in every other person a replica of the Divine Itself.

University Convocation Hall, Bombay, 13-5-1979

There are many who have stacked libraries in their brains; who have visited and venerated all the holy places between the

Himaalayas and the Cape; who have sat at the feet of every one of the contemporary sages and saints; who have performed all the rites prescribed in the sacred texts, but, who do not know the answer to the simple question: "How to bring about the union between jeeva and Brahman, the individual and the Universal?"

Or rather, they do not set about the practice of what they have heard or learnt.

The erection of temples, the installation of images or idols, the pomp and show, fireworks and fanfare, processions and pedantries---these are helpless in the realm of inaana.

Sri Sathya Sai

25. Four in One

THE Vedhas speak of the four varnas (social groups), as directives for the exercise of the rights and responsibilities of individuals. They declare that the Braahmin group, the 'intellectuals and the spiritual seekers must serve as the face of society---the face that hears, sees, tastes and 'smells' the changing moods of the community. This group has the duty to warn the community of impending calamity, of oncoming distress and latent drawbacks. They have to guide, lead, counsel and comfort the rest of the people aright. They form the brain trust, on which the country relies for advice---timely, impartial and most conducive to the common good. They represent the Head of the Cosmic Person.

The Kshathriya group is the "arm" of the Cosmic Person. The group consists of the Raajasik individuals who equip themselves for guarding the country against internal and external danger.

They dedicate their all for the safety and security of the country.

The Vaisya group is the "thigh" of the Cosmic Person---the support and sustenance of the arms and the head. They gather and preserve the where-withal on which the community lives and prosper. They adhere to the limitations imposed on profit and exploitation.

One Divine Impulse activates all the limbs

The Shuudhra group is "the feet" of the Cosmic Person, bearing the burden of feeding and fostering the community.

The four varnas form one organic whole one indivisible unity. No one can do without the other.

On the harmonious cooperation of all the four depends the peace and prosperity of the community. The head is immediately aware of what happens to the feet; the slightest pain anywhere is cognised by the entire body. When a thorn pricks the sole, the eye reprimands itself for not noticing the thorn and warning the foot in time. It sheds tears of repentance. The eye has the responsibility of warning, leading,, guiding and saving the foot.: Every caste has to ensure the prosperity and strength of all the rest.

When you invite a person into your home, you cannot request him to bring in only his head. The feet too have to be welcomed with equal solicitude. The feet are important. In fact, homage is offered' at the feet of the Lord. The feet of the Lord are the objects of adoration and worship.

The limbs may be different, with distinct names, forms and functions. But, they function only because of the unceasing grace of one Heart which supplies each with a single stream of blood.

The qualities of each limb and its special activity may be different but the same Divine Impulse activates each one. There can be no question of inferior or superior, when all are cooperating in one common endeavour. They are all moved by the single urge of love towards the individual they constitute.

30-5-1979

For Naamasmarana (repeated remembrance of the Lord's Name), no expense is involved; no materials are needed; there is no special place or time to be provided. No qualification of scholarship or caste or sex has to be proved.

When a bit of iron is rubbed to and fro on a slab of stone, heat is generated; only, the rubbing has to be vigorous and continuous.

When you do so at intervals and with poor pressure, the iron will not get hot.

So, too, in order to get sufficient heat to melt the soft heart of the Lord, rub the name Raam Raam Raam Raam vigorously and unintermittently. Then, the Lord will shower His Grace.

If you devote but two minutes and a half in the morning and another two minutes and a half in the evening, the little heat will cool off twice a day and His heart will not melt.

Sri Sathya Sai

26. Out of the workshop

THE Universe is the best University for man; Nature is his best teacher. With an observant mind he can learn many lessons from rivers and hills, from birds and beasts, from stars and flowers and from trees. The trees offer cool shade to all who seek it; they do not deny it to anyone on the basis of caste, creed or colour. They offer their fruits to all, irrespective of their social or economic status. Of course, every state is now engaged in planning for prosperity. Prosperity is to be welcomed but that alone is not enough. Prosperity without the will to share it will only breed fear and anxiety.

Human nature is an amalgam of animal, human and divine characteristics. Love, compassion, humility, charity---these are all divine. One has to cultivate these, in order to be at peace, with oneself and others. These spiritual qualities are the real life-savers for man. It is for this reason that Bhaaratheeya culture places much emphasis on them. They elevate humans into the status of the Divine.

Scholarship does not confer "real education"

These qualities are not the products of scholarship. Mastery of various fields of knowledge about the objective world leads only to the greed for wealth, for luxury, for fame and for the accumulation of authority over others. It urges man to lead a life of uncontrolled licence.

Scholarship does not Confer "real education." Virtue and character---these alone reveal the educated person, eager to engage himself in self-less service. Morality has to be practised and not simply be talked about.

The Gurus (preceptors) of old taught only from experience; they loved their pupils and sought to correct their faults and failings, in order to make them happy and useful. When the pupils finally left his home the Guru exhorted them to follow two Suuthras (guidelines) which were as essential for life as the two nethras (eyes)---Sathyam radha, Dharmam chara (Speak the truth; Walk on the path of righteousness). The Guru had the faith that the shishya (pupil) would take the advice to heart, for, he himself was the living proof of their value and validity. The Guru usually takes great care to remove from the heart of the pupil the weeds of evil habits and tendencies, to implant therein the seeds of love, to insist on saadhana (spiritual discipline) for purifying his mind and to render him strong enough to overcome temptations of all kinds.

Sathya (truth) sustains the Cosmos, dharma (virtue) protects and promotes the peace of mankind.

All activities have to be infused with the ideals of sathya and dharma. Dharma never suffers decline; only the practice of dharma declines. So, Divine Incarnation takes place to restore faith in dharma, to revitalise the practice of dharma, and to demonstrate that the practice of dharma confers peace, joy and prosperity. If dharma is ignored, it amounts to sacrilege, for dharma is God and God is dharma.

People see God in a picture, an icon, or a plaster of Paris figurine but God is most manifest in dharma. Only those who believe in dharma can be called 'the faithful,' those who do not are the genuine atheists, though they indulge in profuse use of the word 'God.' They may spend enormous sums for pilgrimages and for rituals and ceremonies but that will not take them any nearer God. What profit can they earn in the spiritual field, if they adore God and at the same time, insult and injure their fellowmen?

Virtue is the wealth to be won

One has to visualise God in every living being and worship Him through love. Therein lies the supremacy of man. Ownership of enormous wealth is a dangerous burden; authority over many men is a dubious asset. Love is the most precious treasure to be sought after. Virtue is the wealth to be won. Raavana won the Grace of God but as boons from Him, he prayed for paltry, personal, fleeting pleasures, which ultimately led to his ruin and the destruction of the entire Raakshasa (demonic) clan which followed his footsteps. The Kauravas shaped themselves into embodiments of aggressive greed and so were exterminated on the field of battle by their cousins

- the Paandavas who were the embodiments of justice and humility.

Faith in the ideal develops, love; love develops peace-and serenity; they lead to God; God confers unshakeable aanandha (Supreme bliss). Man seeks, but his efforts reward him with pain, for they are directed towards the accumulation of riches, or of power or fame of any kind. Man must possess a source of detachment which will prevent him from getting entangled beyond escape in the coils of greed, envy and hatred.

Each one of you must be a hero in action

Once you are reinforced by love and compassion and charged with this sense of detachment, from the consequences of duties well done, you can plunge into activity that can defeat the forces of injustice, cruelty and untruth. You must, each one, be a Karma Veera (a hero in action). Stand on your own feet; do not imitate others. Do not be a slave to the fickle mind, pursuing the senses.

Follow the dictates of your intellect.

You have been in this workshop for one full month. Return to your homes now, full of reverence, humility and the eagerness to serve those who serve others but with no one to do them loving service.

You must have noticed three hands in the wall-clock. When the second hand which is the most active moves 60 paces, the minute hand performs a little jump and advances one bit. When the minute hand moves 60 paces, the hour hand has advanced a twelfth of the circumference. All the activity of the two other hands is to serve the hour hand which progresses silently and steadily.

The second hand represents the body which has to be active and alert. Its round of activity is for the purpose of serving the minute hand, the heart. When the heart fulfils its duty of purification and clarification, the hour hand reveals the time. That is to say, the Aathmic (divine) principle manifests itself.

Whatever you have imbibed here from the lectures of scholars and devotees, from contact with fellow-students of other States, and from these evening discourses, try to put them into practice. I direct you to practise at least one or two of the lessons instilled into you. (1) Do not keep in your memory the good you have done. to others and the evil others have done unto you. (2) Revere your mother and father; do not cause them grief; pay them grateful, homage. (3) Develop your contacts with the villagers and be engaged in improving their living conditions and in strengthening their faith in God. This is the reason why "Village Service" was a part of your daily programme in the Camp. (4) Join the Sathya Sai Seva Dhal Organisation nearest your home and try to learn from it the best way of channelising your skill and enthusiasm.

Always meditate on the Oneness that interpenetrates this apparent Diversity. "Brothers and Sisters" you repeat before every gathering. But, the brotherhood that existed between Raama and Lakshmana is absent now. That was the Supreme Stage. Now, brothers named Raama and Lakshmana fight for property and spend it all in litigation leading up to the Supreme Court The real ideal should be the higher one---the ideal of Oneness, the other being only you in another Form, with another Name.

Valedictory Discourse, Summer Camp, 21-6-1979

27. The Sadhguru speaks

THE Macrocosmos and the microcosmos---the Brahmaanda and the pindanda---the Universal and the individual---all arise from the One Truth. They are manifestations and emergents of that Truth, which is not affected by either. That Truth is known as Brahman. When this unmodifiable, transcendent and immanent Brahman, instead of just 'being,' decides on 'becoming,' It is best designated as 'God,' 'Ishwara' (Almighty). The Divine ground of everything is the spiritual Absolute, called Paramaathman (Supreme Absolute Self). It is also the ground, the base, the core, the reality of man.

But in spite of 'becoming,' which is only an illusion imposing multiplicity on the One Being, It remains One. So long as inquiry is postponed, only the multiplicity is cognised. The multiplicity is neither real nor unreal. It is relatively real, temporarily real, pragmatically real, mithya---not sathya---but an amalgam of sathya (truth) and asathya (untruth), apparently real but fundamentally unreal, real for most practical purposes (vyavahaara) but unreal when the basic nature is unravelled. Mithya is the mixture of sathya and asathya, the knowledge of the serpent which is negated when the knowledge of the rope is won.

Maaya makes us believe the world is real

The clouds appear to be stuck to the sky; so, too, maaya (the tendency to conclude that what the senses tell us is true or to project our preferences and prejudices on to the world around us) gives us an untrue picture of Brahman. It makes us believe that the world is real. Its impact warps our reasoning process, our sensory impressions and our views on God, on creation and on man. It spreads before us a diversity which tantalises and deceives.

The basic Truth upon which maaya (divine illusion) projects its kaleidoscope is described by seers as Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being-Awareness-Bliss Absolute).

This does not mean that Brahman has three attributes, namely: It exists beyond time and space; It knows and can be known; It is the source and acme of Bliss. They are not three distinct characteristics; they indicate the One, of which the three can be grasped by experience---not by words, for words can only recoil before that Godhead. We cannot assert that Brahman (Supreme Being) belongs to a class or genes, nor can it be defined by the three basic qualities. It cannot be described as performing any specific activity, for It is ever motionless. Nor can It be explained in terms of relationship with other entities for It is One, without a second.

Maaya is only the Divine Will that inaugurated the manifestation of the cosmos (Ekoham, Bahushyaam---I am one; I will be many). Maaya (apparent deluding reality) inheres in every being and every activity of that being; it has three aspects of achievement through the three modes and moods of that Will---the saathwik, the raajasik and the thaamasik (the calm, contented, equanimous mood; the potent, passionate mood; the inert, slothful, sluggish mood).

Maaya is the Will that causes the variety

When maaya prompts us into the saathwik mood of that Will, we become progressive seekers of inaana (spiritual wisdom) that reveals the Unity. When we are overwhelmed by the raajasik quality of that Will, we are deluded into the pursuit of worldly victories and ephemeral wealth and renown. The thaamasik nature of that Will seeks the quickest and easiest ways of happy living. These are the reflections in our minds of the basic modes of the Will that Brahman assumes when It is moved by the primal urge to express Itself. The facets of that Will are called Inaana shakthi, Ichhaa shakthi and Kriyaa shakthi.

The three modes affect beings and things in various proportions and permutations, and so we have all the variety and diversity of the objective world. Aathman (whether individualised or universalised), is One only. The jeevaathman (individual soul) and the Paramaathman (Supreme Soul) are one and indivisible.

The philosophers of all lands and all times have sought to discover the truth about God, the objective world and man, as well as their mutual relationship. Maaya is the Will that causes all three. It is a clear flawless mirror. When the saathwik nature is reflected in that mirror, God results; when the raajasik nature is reflected, the jeeva (individualised Self) results. It is everanxious to grow, to grab, to survive and to be secure. When thaamasik nature is reflected, matter (the objective world) is the result. All three are Paramaathman, but they derive their reality as Its reflections. When undergoing reflections, they attain different forms and combinations of characteristics. The One becomes many; every one of the many is Real only because of the One in it. Maaya too is a component of the One; by the emphasis on that component, the One transformed Itself into the many. The One comprehends all the images. We now know that maaya is like a mirror. The mirror reflects within itself all that is before it. The convexity or concavity of the mirror, or the covering of dust that might have settled on it, will certainly blur the reflected image, but it cannot distort the objects themselves. Ishwara, prakrithi and jeeva (the Almighty God, objective world and individualised self), all three are images of Paramaathman (Supreme soul) reflected in the mirror of maaya and warped by the gunas (qualities) that tarnish the surface of the mirror. It is the mirror that pictures the One as many. But the One is ever One. The One is comprehensive of all this. So It has no wants, no desires and no activity to realise anything. Shri Krishna tells Arjuna, "Na me Partha! asthi karthavyam, thrishu lokeshu kinchana" (There is nothing I have to do in any of the three worlds), He has willed the world as His Sport. He has laid down that every deed must have its consequence. He is the dispenser of the consequences, but He is not involved in the deeds. None can discover the beginning of maaya. Therefore it becomes plain that neither the personalised God, nor the individualised self, nor even the objective world can ever succeed in discovering the beginning of the maaya which brought them into existence and started the chain of 'act-consequence-act.' Nevertheless, one can succeed in knowing when maaya will end! When will it end? When the objective world is ignored, set aside, denied or discovered to be immanent in the Divine, the jeeva (individualized being) is no more. When the jeeva is no more, the Ishwara (Cosmic Being or personalized God) is also superfluous and disappears. And when the Ishwara has faded out, the Brahman (Absolute Reality) alone Is. Where there is no child, how can a mother exist? It is a word with no significance. When a personalised God, a personality separate from the rest, called jeeva, and the mental creation of that jeeva, called prakrithi (the objective world), are non-existent in the developed consciousness of man, maaya, the progenitor of all three, cannot persist. When space is enclosed in a pot, it appears limited and small. But once released from the upaadhi (container), it again merges in the infinite sky. The sky is not reduced or transformed in shape or quality by being held in the upaadhi. So, too, the One Aathman that is pervading the bodies and lives of billions of beings does not get affected by the upaadhis (living beings) to which it adheres for some time. Many are affected by the problem of what caused the Cosmos. How did it come into being? They advance various theories and lay down many opposing hypotheses. But there is no need for seekers to beat about the bush so much. Just as a dream results when one is cut off from reality in a state of sleep, the Cosmos is a result of being cut off from reality by maaya in a state of ignorance. The Cosmos is as ephemeral and as vagarious as a dream. It is difficult to discover laws that explain or govern its infinite mysteries. More profitable than inquiring into the mysteries is the inquiry into possible ways of benefitting by them and learning from them. It is mostly a waste of time to probe into the origin of the Cosmos or to determine how it will end. You are a part of creation, so try to understand yourself and keep your goal in view. The individual has three qualities in him. The jeeva (individual) has the emotional, passionate and active qualities in his composition. The quality that is inferior is the thaamasik and that which is superior is the saathwik. Ishwara is the saathwik reflection of Brahman. Therefore man must strive to rise higher into the saathwik realm. He must be ever vigilant not to slide down into the lower realm---the thaamasik realm of matter and material pursuits. The Guru has to hold this ideal before the pupil and guide him towards it. He must encourage him to become aware of the God within man. The word aadhyaathmik (spiritual) is used often by aspirants and preceptors. What exactly is implied by aadhyaathmik? Is bhajana (congregational prayer) aadhyaathmik? Or does it involve japa or dhyana? Or does it denote religious rituals and ceremonies? Or does it extend to pilgrimages to holy places? No. These are only beneficial acts.

Aadhyaathmik, in its real sense, relates to two progressive achievements or at least sincere attempts towards those two achievements: elimination of the animal traits still clinging to man and unification with the Divine.

Three different types of Gurus in the world Consider how far man has succeeded in overcoming the animal inheritance of lust, greed and hate, when he spends time, money and energy for these so called aadhyaathmik exercises. What progress does he make by listening to exponents of texts? Has man become any less bestial? This is the inquiry, this is the assessment for man to be engaged in, though this is the very task ignored by him at present.

The saadhanas (spiritual practices) now adopted promote only pride and prompous display, envy and egotism. They do not uproot them in the least. People proceed to the House of God as pilgrims, but pray to Him for more money, fame and power, for their thoughts, words and deeds centre only around these transitory and trivial tokens of worldly success. The world and all its trappings bespeak the thaamasik guna (quality of inertia). They can never raise man to the higher saathwik (pure level).

The Guru must exhort the individual self to realise the Universal Self.
On this Guru Poornima, we must revere with grateful hearts such Gurus who have consummated liberation for many.

They are the highest Gurus. There are in the world many other types also. There is the Guru who gives you a manthra (sacred formula), tells you its potentialities and directs you to repeat it sincerely and steadily. He is the dheeksha guru; the initiation into the manthra is called dheeksha in ritualistic parlance. He assumes that his duty ends with the gift of the manthra and the command to use it with conviction and care. He does not direct the pupil to master his senses or guide him to march forward and attain that victory. For the pupil the manthra is a formula to be repeated in a parrot-like way. He might not even know that it is a precious gift, but without the saadhana (spiritual discipline) of self-improvement, the gift has no value at all.

The maaya too is an aspect of Brahman A second type of Guru recommends the worship of one or another of the forms of God. Another set of gurus teach lessons destined to change your consciousness.

These are the teacher-gurus.

But all these types ignore the One and divert attention, adoration and devotion to the many, which are only relatively real. They do not lay down methods by which purity and clarity can be won. They are afraid to antagonise the animal urges in their pupils.
Their teachings fill the head but do not thrill the heart. All types of gurus assert that God, Nature and man are distinct, whereas they are all really based on the play of maaya on Brahman.
They deal with subsidiary not the Primary, the diversity not the Unity, the trivial not the true.
The primary is Brahman which, when reflected in maaya, seems to be broken into God, Nature and man. These three are only the unreal images of the One. And the maaya, too, is an aspect of Brahmam "Mama-maaya" (My maaya), says Krishna in the Geetha. Hence when we merge in Brahman or win the Grace of the Lord, His maaya cannot exist for us.

One can also be rid of maaya if one can discard the three gunas from one's make up. The Sathwa guna, too, has to be transcended. Why? The Geetha directs that even the eagerness to be liberated is a bond. One is fundamentally free; bondage is only an illusion. So the desire to unloosen the bond is the result of ignorance. Krishna says, "Arjuna!
Become free from the three gunaa." In truth, the word 'guna' means 'rope,' for all three gunas bind the jeeva with the rope of desire. Liberation means liberation from delusive moha (attachment). 'Mohakshaya' is decline in the desire caused by attachment to sensory pleasure.
The greatest of Gurus was Sage Vyaasa The Yadhavas were attached to Krishna through a sense of worldly belonging. He was their kinsmen, they felt, and this feeling did not save them from total destruction. The gopees felt they were His, not that He was theirs. So they were recipients of His Grace.
When the ideas of 'I' and 'mine' disappear, man's only thoughts are of 'Thee' and 'Thine.' He then finds only 'Thee' everywhere and thus achieves the Vision of Unity.

This day thousands of you have gathered here because it is Guru Poornima, the 'full Moon of the Guru.' The fully worth-while Guru must facilitate that Vision of Unity without the discords and divisions that 'mine' and 'thine' engender in the mind of man. Such a Guru was the sage Vyaasa.
This day is also called Vyaasa Poornima, a day when mankind offers him the gratitude he deserves. 'Vyaaso Naaraayano Harih': Vyaasa is the Lord

Naaraayana, Hari, Naaraayana, the Lord Himself, came as a man called Vyaasa, to collate the Vedhas and teach man the path towards God. He has made the path plain and easy to climb.

But the tragedy is that man has misinterpreted or missed the path. He has stuck to his out-moded beliefs in the efficacy of worldly, material and transitory rituals and rites, which weaken his mind through fear or pride. The true Guru should keep away from such weakening tactics and should impart the strengthening awareness of the Aathman. Only then can he be revered as a Guru. When there is the clear call from the higher regions of the saathwik, why should the Guru remain deaf to that call and grovel in the regions of thamas and rajas? Why must he be content to keep his pupils in those lower levels?

Goodness is natural to man, not evil

However, the trend among the guides and seekers in the spiritual field is to avoid the heights and wander in the valleys. Consider for a moment how long worldly triumphs last. They are but the play of scintillating name and form on the Divine, which is the core of every being and thing.

Earn the vision that sees the Divine inherent in all. We are not troubled when something is good, but only when it is bad. This is because goodness is natural and evil is an aberration. We are worried and alarmed when someone slides into wrong or is in pain or in sorrow. This is because nature plans us to be right, to be happy and ever in joy. It is a pity that man has lost his understanding of this truth.

Embodiments of the Divine Aathman! In truth, man is the encased Aathman. He is the repository of the infinite, ever-full, One, Indivisible Aathman. Man, at best, remains man, satisfied with the rajoguna dominant in him. Many are content with their dealings with the objective, thaamasik world. Their ideal is only to amass material wealth and satisfy material needs. Examine yourselves and discover at what level you are by analysing your desires and activities. In this way you can yourselves sublimate your thoughts and urges.

Your revised urges must have a beneficial impact on your activities, for it is through activity that gunas are given up or gained. Activity causes birth and death and fills up the years of one's life.

It supports good and evil, joy and grief.

However, man is willfully unaware of the activities that will lighten the burden of his life and also illumine the Aathman. It is the Aathman that illumines all, but man is in the dark about its existence. Just as everything sweet is sweet on account of the sugar it contains, all things and objects are cognized because the Aathman is behind the cognition. It is the Universal Witness. It is the Sun that activates all but never gets activated itself. You, too, must establish yourself in the position of a witness.

Methods to attain the status of a witness

The sages have laid down methods by which man can attain the status of a witness. Dhyaana

(meditation) is the most important of these. It is the penultimate of eight steps, the last one being

Samaadhi (super conscious state of communion), and grants the wisdom to be completely unaffected. The sixth stage is dharana (concentration). Dharana is the stage when japa, puuja and other practices are engaged in, in order to prepare the concentration of mind for dhyaana.

Dhyaana is not mere sitting erect and silent. Nor is it the absence of any movement. It is the merging of all your thoughts and feelings in God. Without the mind becoming dissolved in God, dhyaana cannot succeed. The Geetha describes genuine dhyaana as 'Ananyaaschinthanyatho maam ye janaah paryupaasathe' (Those persons who adore Me, without any other thought or feeling). Krishna has assured such persons that He would Himself carry their burden and be by their side, guiding and guarding. Persons adept in this dhyaana are very rare; most people go through the external exercises only. So they are unable to win Grace.

Bodies are expressions of the Aathman

Dhyaana is interrupted in most cases by worry and anxiety regarding one's kith and kin, and one's earning of riches. But since all are manifestations of the maaya which is natural to Brahman or Paramaathman, the Paramaathman (Supreme Self) in which you take refuge will certainly free you from fear. Why? You are, each one, the Aathman and nothing else. This is the reason why I began this discourse, addressing you as Dhivyaathma swaruupas! Your bodies, too, are expressions of the Aathman (divine self). Your personality, individuality, mind, intellect---all are manifestations of the Aathman which is the prime mover of your life.

This teaching is being propagated since ages by the sages of this land. The seers who saw the validity of this vision encouraged inquiry and experiment into the process of dhyaana and saadhana.

Sage Vyaasa sympathised with man who was caught in the coils of do's and don'ts, of success and failure, of desire and despair. He demarcated many a path which leads man along to fulfilment. The fulfilment consists in uprooting the animal that lurks in man and reaching out to the Divinity that is his essence.

We find individuals and groups trudging to Badhrinaath, Kedhaarnaath and Haridhwaar in search of peace and prosperity. They also go to Thirupathi and Kaashi. Have they jettisoned even a few of their animal propensities. That is the test; that is the justification for the money and time they have spent and the troubles they have undergone. When the animal is conquered and God head is felt within reach, man can assert that all these pilgrimages are within him. He has no need to travel from temple to temple. And without achieving this victory you have no right to claim that you are a devotee of Raama or Krishna, or of any other Incarnation of the Lord. This is real aadhyaathmikatha (spiritual progress). I bless you all that you may earn it.

Guru Poornima, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 9-7-1979

Man must demonstrate his superiority over the animal, by conquest over the senses. He must wriggle out of his animal shackles and assert his "humanity," which is essentially "divinity".

When Emperor Bharthruhari gave up his throne and went into a hermitage in the forest, the subordinate rulers who were his tributaries laughed at the stupid step and asked him how he got the idea and what he gained.

Bharthruhari replied, "I have now gained a vaster empire, a richer and more peaceful empire; I gave in exchange a poor barren torn empire; see what profit I have made."

Sri Sathya Sai

28. Why this College?

SATHYAM (Truth) is to be adored and adhered to. It is the highest goal to be won by saadhana.

So too is Shaantham (peace and equanimity). Truth, the Principle of Truth, is immanent in every being; knowing this, the seeker or the student has to be loving and friendly with every living being. This is the message of the scriptures of all lands.

When we examine the life and behaviour of animals, labelled as 'lower,' we can learn many lessons for our own betterment. The elephant, the cow and the deer do not harm or wound or eat other animals. They live on leaves or grass or grain. They lead Saathwik (pure) lives. Therefore, they receive reverence and worshipful homage of man. On the other hand, the tiger, the leopard and the wolf have cruel natures; they hurt other animals; they eat up the animals they kill. As a consequence, man is ever trying to keep these Raajasik animals at a distance.

Man prides himself as the crown of creation. It is a rare piece of good fortune to be born as a human animal. We all agree with this statement. His is really a holy, sublime, and beneficent role; how then can cruelty, hatred and violence pollute his heart which is the centre of compassion, love justice and equanimity? How has he fallen from the Saathwik heights of Divinity to the depths of Raajasik qualities like ungratefulness, vengefulness and vandalism?

Students are embodiments of unpolluted love.

Imagine the terror caused among the cattle when a tiger or leopard or wolf enters their shed!

They struggle in panic and undergo fearsome panic, until they are felled and eaten. So too, Raajasik traits of character relish destroying the Saathwik virtues in man.

Students! You are embodiments of unpolluted love. The heart of man has to be saturated with pure feelings, clean impulses, and selfless urges towards service of living beings. Do not, at this stage of your lives, soak it in hate, cruelty and other evil qualities. At present, boys and girls of your age live without awareness of the suffering of others. You are, it can be said, blind and deaf.

When a man in agony stands before a blind man and beats his breast, he remains unmoved, since he cannot grasp the tragedy. When some one in distress recites his story and appeals for help, the deaf man is not affected at all. When you see the sufferings of others or listen to their wailings and yet remain unsympathetic and unresponsive, you can be justifiably called blind and deaf Often, you yourselves cause injury or mental agony to others. You exult in the humiliation or exploitation you cause. You revel in mean tactics to insult others. Since your hearts are full of low desires they do not react when the hearts of others call out for comradeship. To set right this sorry state of affairs, you have to cleanse and polish the heart into a clear mirror. A mirror reflects all that is before it---the misery, the poverty, the helplessness. But if the mirror is overlaid thick with the dust of ego, it cannot reflect the sadness, yearning for relief. When the heart is clean and clear, it will receive correct impressions of the struggles of your parents, the problems of society and anxieties that pester the country.

Students are multiplying their problems

But, consider what students are contributing today. Instead of resolving problems they are multiplying them. Far from alleviating suffering, they are worsening it. They have themselves become sources of anxiety. They are becoming blind to the sacrifice their parents make to educate them and to the hopes they arouse in them as well as in Society and in the hearts of those who plan for the country's progress and prosperity. Many who have come to this College are blind to the purpose for which this College has been established, viz., to shape generations of students with holy ideals and pure hearts, filled with love.

In the name of education, you spend your time reading trivialities, writing trash and accepting experiences second hand. You do not seek to have elevating first hand experiences yourselves.

The physics, chemistry or mathematics that you learnt at college have no practical validity, so far as your daily activities are concerned. In the laboratory you learn that oxygen and hydrogen constitute water. But, when you are thirsty during lunch at home, you cannot put the two together and drink the result. You have to drink water, as prepared by natural forces. For living out your years in peace and harmony, you have to develop common sense and master general knowledge.

Poring over books or cramming formulae will not help. Education must teach what is life's goal

It is foolish to believe that you have to be 'educated,' since it leads to jobs. At present education is oriented to jobs, to secure a living, not to lead a life. Education must teach a person what life is, and what its goal. It must purify the heart and clarify the vision. It must prevent pollution of the hand, heart and head by habits injurious to the individual, society and the nation. It must promote virtues and raise the moral and spiritual standards of the educated.

In times gone by, universities were referred to as "homes of humility" since humility was the characteristic of an educated person. Pride is the root of aggressiveness; it is the nature of wild animals. But the mark of man is humility in the presence of elders, teachers and parents. There is an ancient axiom which says, "Education imparts humility; humility ensures credibility; credibility 'brings wealth; wealth induces charity; charity confers peace and joy, here and hereafter." Nowadays, all educational institutions emphasise the need for riches. "Become wealthy through the easiest and quickest methods;" that is the slogan.

No effort is spent to inculcate humility and reverence, for they are won through discipline alone. Without discipline and self-control man reduces himself to the level of the beast. The stomach is not the central core of man.

Youth do not want jobs requiring hardwork

Youth today longs for a type of work which involves no labour. They want jobs which they can do, sitting comfortably in an airconditioned room signing files at the places indicated. They revel in sensual pleasures and selfish display, in starched shirts and soft assignments. They shy away from jobs that require physical exertion. Only idlers will prefer such jobs; others will relish and derive delight from hard jobs that try their physical, mental and intellectual powers. The Gurukulas (hermitages) of old gave such educational opportunities in plenty to the pupils.

Man does not live for food alone. To concentrate on eating and drinking is foolish. Consider how many millions are struggling on a standard of living much more pathetic than yours. Accept them and involve yourselves in their uplift. Acquaint yourselves with the scriptures of the major faiths, so that you can transmit the lessons of peace, harmony and joy they contain to others who need them more urgently.

Students today have neglected the purpose of education. They feel that the passing of examinations is the be all and end all of the four or five years of College life. How to gain marks by foul means, if fair is beyond reach---that is the primary concern---copying from books or slips or entering the examination hall with mnemonic writings on the palms---these malpractices have become rampant. Even at this tender age, they follow crooked ways and pride themselves on their degradation.

You must recognise the distinctiveness of this college which distinguishes it from many others.

We had no desire to add one more to the list of colleges that are degrading youth. Here, the curricula laid down by the University are taught and you are trained to appear for and pass the examinations conducted by the University, entitling you to the degrees they confer. But, that is not considered the primary purpose of the college.

Sai college equips youth to be future leaders

The real aim of the college is to equip you for the role of future leaders of India, as embodiments of Truth, Justice, Peace and Love; you ought to blossom as true representatives of Indian culture, spreading tolerance, charity and brotherhood throughout the World.

Since you are encouraged and enabled to acquire the degrees, your parents send you here; but, we try to instil into you qualities that most other colleges ignore, namely, reverence for elders and parents, humility; we discourage the desire to display and hurt others, to humiliate others and to cater to low sensual pleasures.

You must have read in the Bhaagavatha that Yashodha was approached by the gopees (cowherd girls) with complaints involving Krishna; she planned to punish him; she offered Him butter with one hand, to persuade Him to go near her but she had also a rod held in the other hand hiding behind her back. Krishna goes near attracted by the butter but gets corrected by the threat of the rod. You have come attracted by the chance to earn a degree but you are exposed to disciplined life in the hostel. You are taught the scriptures of all faiths; you are persuaded to follow certain uplifting spiritual ideals.

When the patient is reluctant to take the medicine, the physician cannot leave him alone. The patient might even avoid the physician but since he is the well-wisher, the doctor has to be welcomed and the medicine taken. It is not merely for the good of the person who is ill; if he is cured, his parents and kith and kin will benefit; society will benefit; the nation will secure a disciplined, dutiful, devoted, dedicated subject. When other colleges deem their existence fulfilled when the curriculum is taught, this college considers the development of self-reliance, self-confidence, self-sacrifice and self-knowledge as the basic curriculum.

Medium language of Sai college is discipline There is much controversy 'going on about first language, second language and the third language and the medium language. In this college the medium is discipline. The first, second and third languages are love, service and saadhana (spiritual discipline). There is also much talk of progress---helping progress, measuring progress, achieving progress, etc. Do we really progress in securing peace of mind, in harmoniously living together, and in removing ignorance of higher values? No. We are only progressively declining from the human to the bestial level.

We value many-storeyed building as a sign of progress. Persons who spend their time in airconditioned rooms breathe their own breath over and over and are polluted thereby. Their feet never touch the ground. Sunlight seldom warms their skin. Boots for the feet, pants for the legs, coat for the chest and back, hat for the head and a tight tie round the neck! This is the pitiable plight.

The British rulers needed clerks and managers who can be trained to be docile and devoted. They devised a system of education which could produce people to do such jobs for them. Even today that job-oriented system holds sway, and therefore, we have in India 'educated' persons in thousands desperately in need of "jobs." Students should stand on their own feet Students of our college must not seek cushy job; they must not parade their degrees which are really "begging bowls" before office after office and pray for jobs.
They should stand on their own feet, exert independently, produce through their own effort enough and to spare for themselves and their parents and be useful to the poor, the illiterate, the diseased and the distressed. Only those who practise this ideal sincerely and to the best of their abilities can claim to honour the maxims: "Duty is God" or "Work is Worship." On the other hand, if, like highway men, you live on the earning of others or on salaries for which you do not offer adequate work in return, your education is a waste and your life itself is a sorry burden.
As soon as you finish your course here and pass the final examination, I would exhort you to go back home and offer grateful homage to your parents. Resolve to fulfil their hopes about you; give them joy. Revere them and pay due honour. Then, learn about the problems that trouble the village or the society and plan out the lines of your service. Engage yourselves in realising those plans. "The people around you must be glad enough to say 'Ah! How good, how useful, how intelligent, this young man has become after being in the Sathya Sai College.' How exemplary is his speech, manners and conduct!" That is the return I expect from you all that we do for you in this college; nothing else.
Do not wander about like ownerless street dogs, enjoying endless wrangles and quarrels. If you fall into that company, you commit the sin of sacrilege. I am confident you will all avoid that fatal path. You must equip yourself to be the guides, teachers and leaders of India and even of the world.

Do not waste time in idle talk and scandal During your years in this college, I desire two or three modes of behaviour which will help you to mould yourselves into these. Do not waste time in idle talk and empty scandal. Continuous conversation saps one's energy. Talk only on problems concerning subjects of study or projects of service. Youth starts conversation on subjects and end up with talk on 'objects,' they start talking sense and end up with 'senses.' I like silence and I would advise you to talk only when you must and only to the person with whom you have to talk.
Communicate with the minimum words and make them as sweet and pleasant as you can.

Second, when you move from the hostel to the college or from one place to another, go in line.

Don't form groups; be always open to constructive friendship. Let yours not be an exclusive association. Only cats roam from house to house; only dogs run through highroads and bylanes.

Do not reduce yourselves to those levels. Be human, try to raise yourselves up to Divinity. That is my message to you. I bless you that you succeed in this noble endeavour.

Sathya Sai College, Brindhaavan, 19- 7-1979

29. Krishna as Love

Repeat the name, Krishna, in your mind, every moment of your life.
You will find It sweeter than sugar or honey: indeed, It will taste more delicious than ambrosia. MEN whose intellect is narrow and unable to reach out to the vastness beyond, men who do not dive deep into the mysteries of existence, cannot achieve success in the task of promoting world peace and prosperity. These depend on establishment of peace and prosperity in society and since society consists of individuals, the individual has to attain peace and prosperity in order that the world may shine in their glory. And, for the individual to discharge this obligation, he has to derive the faith and fervour from the Divine that is his Reality.

Unless man marches on in the spiritual path, he cannot be at peace with himself and his fellowmen. That march will confer peace, and with peace, welfare.

Today, wherever we turn, people talk of peace but their actions belie their profession. They only increase the feelings of anxiety and fear. Each individual desires to outstrip the other in this game. As a consequence, the spirit is neglected and the mind is polluted. There is no genuine understanding and sincere goodwill among men. Life is a meaningless passage of time.

Ten highly intellectual pupils of a sage named Paramaanandha waded across a flooded river and reached the other bank safe. They wanted to be assured that all the ten had survived the feat. So, they stood in a line, to be counted. Since the one who counted did not include himself as the tenth, every one of them who did the counting by turns, found one man missing. They started bewailing for the tenth man "who was carried away by the raging waters!"

Man is in bondage, though unaware of it

Similarly, men who are proud of their attainments and achievements on earth and in space, bewail their lot because Peace has escaped their grasp. Man can now count the stars and walk on the Moon. But, he has no knowledge of his own self How then can he experience the delight of kinship with others? When can he claim to have reached the goal of fulfilment? The bliss of fulfilment is not available in the objective world. It must be won through turning the vision inwards. Man is now in bondage, though he is unaware of it. But he is so deeply sunk in this ignorance that he makes no effort to liberate himself.

Wife and children, kith and kin, house and land, properties and possessions are declared by some people as bonds. One can discard these and free oneself from them. It is a comparatively easy process, for these are not the things that bind you most. The tightest bondage is the "ignorance of one's own reality." Not to know who one is---this is the biggest handicap. Until this is overcome, grief is inevitable. For, man is involved by this ignorance with thamas, with the unreal and with death.

Urge to expand is the Principle of Aathma

Without self-knowledge, man is led into the belief that the objective world is true and lasting, and into the neglect of the really true and the really eternal. What is the self? Here too, man mistakenly entertains false beliefs. He holds on to the belief that the self is the body and revels in describing its components and characteristics. He ignores the Aathma, sublime, serene and everfresh, Divine Principle that he is. It is the ever-present urge to expand and to illumine. The urge to contract and limit is the feature of the animal. Denying the Aathma, disregarding its mandate, ignoring its existence---these are the roots of grief.

Now, about death. The Aathma has no birth, and so, no death. It is ever-existing never disappearing. It has no beginning and no finish. It does not die; nor does it kill, nor can it be pronounced inert. It is the witness in each and all. The moment one becomes aware of the Aathma, one is freed from the bondage to grief. Forget that the objective world is valid; it is at best a mental image that serves as a test. This is the reason why the prayer of the sages was:

Asatho maa Sath gamaya (Lead me from unreal to the Real);

Thamaso maa jyothir gamaya (Lead me from darkness to Light); Mrithyor Maa Amritham gamaya (Lead me from death to Immortality).

The true goal of human life is to visualise Brahman and merge in It. The ancients declared that there are three stages in the path towards the goal: Karma jiinaasa, Dharma jiinaasa and Brahma jiinaasa (seeking spiritual knowledge through activity, virtue and Divinity). These three steps have been demarcated, described, and analysed by scholars for centuries. Through karma

(activity) one becomes a moral individual (dharma) and one starts seeking the basis of morality

(Brahman). One discovers that virtue and morality add to one's Aanandha and that all Aanandha everywhere flows from Brahman Itself. One realises that activity devoid of this awareness is barren and binding.

Man is proving worse than animals

The Upanishathic declaration, "Kaarunyam paramam thapah" is based on this awareness. It means "Compassion towards all beings is real spiritual discipline."

Man is the crown of creation; he is the highest among living beings. Therefore, he bears great responsibility. He has to love other living beings, serve them and save them, for they are his kith and kin and they too have the Divine Principle as their core. But, man is proving himself worse than animals through the cultivation and practice of self-centredness, conceit, envy and anger. Though man is endowed with pity, charity, sympathy, fortitude and joy, he has given up these virtues and become inhuman in conduct and behaviour. Imagine a tiger gaining entry into the cattle shed! Vicious tendencies are like tigers; they destroy the Saathwik (pure) virtues. Once you recognise the extent of this calamity, you have to resolve to destroy these wild intruders.

Lord Krishna's life was His message

Now, man can be saved only through bhakthi and prapatthi (devotion and dedication). Bhakthi (devotion) does not end with japa, bhajan and dhyaana. It consists of devotion to the ideal, the ideal of getting rid of the beast and rising up to the Divine; give up the pashu (animal) and gain pashupathi (God)---that is the call only those who give ear to that call deserve to be labelled

Men. In order to hold forth before man this Supreme destiny, this divine destination, God himself (though free from birth) takes on the human form, for He is Gopaala. 'Go' denotes not only the cow, it denotes the jeevi (humans and other living beings). This day, Krishnaashtami, is the Day on which the Avathaarik (incarnational) career of Krishna began. Krishna gave man the call to rise from the beast to Brahman. By devotion and dedication to Him, man must earn the awareness that he is unrelated to all things that 'bind' him---body, riches, kith and kin, attributes and feelings.

For Krishna, the Avathaarhood was a leela (divine sport). His life was His Message. He was the embodiment of the noblest and the most fruitful Karmayoga (divine communion through selfless dedicated action). His actions had no trace of selfishness or pride or envy.

He took upon Himself the assignment of driving the war chariot of Arjuna. After the day's battle,

He washed the horses; He fed and tended them, applying balm on the wounds. However insignificant the task, He executed it with as much care and enthusiasm as must be given to the most important task.

Man has been equipped with icchaa shakthi (Will Power) for this very purpose---to will the good, the ennobling and the elevating. The two other shakthis gifted to him are jnaana shakthi

(the power to know) and kriyaa shakthi (the power to act). To make the interdependence of these three shakthis, here is an example: Your wish to drink a cup of coffee is so insistent that you will to have it fulfilled. But, mere icchaa (will) cannot produce coffee. Next, you use your jnaana (wisdom) and provide yourselves with a stove, a quantity of water, sugar, milk and coffee powder. But still, your original icchaa is unrealised. Next, you use kriyaa (action) and prepare the coffee you wanted and knew how to make."

Various saadhanas prescribed to attain God

Well. The icchaa shakthi wills to attain God, let us say. Mere wish is too weak to gain the goal.

Jnaana shakthi advises you not to despair. There are ways by which you can win. It lays before you various saadhanas. Kriyaa shakthi takes these up and inspires you to act, to persevere in practice, until you attain the objective. Unfortunately, 99 men out of 100 use only the iccha shakthi; they stop with the wish; they do not pursue and attain the bliss that waits. Their faith falters; they do not march on boldly. The iccha prompts you to earn a first class in the examination but the jnaana is ignored and the kriya is left undone. If a thousandth of that eagerness is shown in kriya, in the test, the first class can be secured easily.

Krishna has elaborated, in the Bhagavathgeetha, the methods in which these three powers can be cultivated and utilised by man. Above all, the evil desire to harm, injure and insult others must be uprooted from the mind. The saplings of devotion and dedication can grow only on minds that are soaked in karuna (compassion). How can even the best of seeds sprout on salty soil?

Compassion means reflecting in our minds the joys and sorrows of others, and responding with exhilaration and sympathy. For this to happen, the mind has to be cleansed and transformed into a fine mirror.

Practise equality to win Krishna's Grace

God will respond to your prayers for relief only when you respond sympathetically to the needs of others. Life should not be wasted in the selfish activities, blind to others' distress and deaf to others' groans. Suffer equally, rejoice equally---this according to Krishna is Samathwam (equanimity). Practise this equality and succeed in it---this according to Him is the way to win His Grace. You may not be rewarded materially by compassionate acts but the highest reward is the joy that you derive and the joy that you confer. The body with all the precious and unique qualities which are its equipment has been given to you in order that you may 'will' so, 'know' how and 'act' thus. A block of 'time' has been allotted to you so that you may benefit by using it profitably for these holy sanctifying purposes.

But, every one is overcome by egoism. He wants others to respect him but he is not willing to respect others. He strives to be happy but he is unwilling to make others happy. Most people are content if they are happy; many are content when they as well as others and around them are happy; a few do happily undergo misery themselves, so long as they render others happy. The first group can be compared to the bulb that sheds light only on the little room where it is lit; the second is like the Moon, whose light, though widespread, is not bright enough to give clear knowledge of things; the third is the Sun, shining on all things and revealing their nature and characteristics.

Avoiding Krishna's teaching is a sacrilege

Among devotional disciplines, installing a picture or idol of the Lord in the home and adoring it, is the least valuable. The celebration of Krishna Janmaashtami should not be confined to special puuja and extra dishes for lunch. This narrow schedule arises from the desire to attract the Grace of Krishna. But that Grace can be won only by the observance of the teachings of Krishna. They will not be conferred on pride and pompous display. Adoring Krishna and avoiding His teaching is a sacrilege. You can give up the adoration; nevertheless, you can earn Grace if you sincerely attempt to proceed on the path He has marked out.

Krishna was the embodiment of Love. Hence, Love is the virtue He appreciates most. Love has to turn into concrete acts of compassion. Cultivate compassion and develop sympathetic understanding, until you reach the goal, of merging in the embodiment of love, Krishna.

There are many among you who are engaged in saadhana. What is the basic purpose of Saadhana? Each exercise of the saadhak (spiritual aspirant) is a stream that moves on to the sea of Grace. Believe that the love that prompts you to serve and sympathise is a spark of the love of God.

Krishna Janmaashtami, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 14-8-1979

30. The Kerala Onam

IT is the bounden duty of bhakthas (devotees) to preserve and protect the rich culture and heritage of this country which has been the birth place of many great spiritual leaders, and whose past is resplendent with the glory of prowess in music, arts and science.

Alas, this glorious land of Bhaarath (Mother India) is now bedevilled with problems which are mostly the result of ego, jealousy, hatred and selfishness. Only by removing such traits can the glorious past of this great land again be brought back to life.

The story of the festival Onam, is that of Bali Chakravarthi, who was an embodiment of thyaaga (sacrifice), but who suffered from traces of ahamkaara (egoism). However due to the predominance of other virtues, Bali was even able to overcome the ill-effects of ahamkaara and bury it deep in hell through the grace of Lord Vishnu, who appeared before him in the form of a vatu (Brahmin ascetic) named Vaamana. Bali proved himself far superior to Indhra. Bali was dedicated to rule his subjects by the observance of and strict adherence to the principles of dharma. He was the son of Virochana and the grandson of Prahlaadha. So it is not surprising that Bali possessed rich traditional qualities of bhakthi. Once after obtaining the permission of his Guru Shukraachaarya, Bali wanted to perform a great yaaga (sacrifice) called Vishwajith. Vishwam means the totality of pancha bhuuthas (five elements), pancha indhriyas (five senses) and pancha koshas (five regions or sheaths) of the human body). It is the victory over such a vishwam which the word Vishwajith symbolizes. Indhra is so called because he is ruler of the indhriyaas (senses), and the ruler of the indhriyaas in man is the manas (mind). The nature of the interplay of indhriyaas is such that it is possible to gain as well as to lose through it. Indhra wanted to rule Heaven, but Bali wanted nothing of the sort. Indhra used to propitiate and beg Vishnu in order to achieve what he desired, but Vishnu Himself descended in the form of Vaamana to beg from Bali. Thus Bali proved himself to be far superior to Indhra. Vaamana belonged to the famous Sidhaashram which was founded by Kashyapa (representing purusha or man) and Adhithi (representing the feminine Prakrithi or Nature). It is through the union of this Purusha and Prakrithi that the progeny known as Siddhi (in the form of Vatu), the embodiment of Vishnu thathwa, was born. The Sidhaashram was located on the banks of a sacred river called Pavithra, which represents life. Siddhi will always be found on the banks of flowing life whenever the bhaava shuddhi (purity of mind) and chiththa shuddhi (purity of heart) predominate in man. It is due to the fact that all sankalpas (resolutions) could be realised at this sacred aashram that it has come to be known as Sidhaashram. Vishwaamithra, after the successful completion of his yaaga with the help of Raama and Lakshmana, brought them to reside at this aashram for some time. It was at this aashram, too, that Bali attained moksha (liberation). The spreading of Vishnu thathwam (nature of Vishnu) is known as Thrivikrama thathwam (nature of Vishnu expanding to the three worlds). The aspect of Trivikrama thathwam is represented by the Gaayathri manthra: 'Bhur Bhuvaha.' The Bhuuloka Bhuvorloka and Suvarloka constitute the Thrivikrama thathwam. It is wrong to conceive of these three lokas (worlds) as existing one on top of the other and thus capable of being reached by climbing a ladder, as it were. In fact the three lokas are intertwined with each other and one exists within the other. Real meaning of the 'three worlds' The real meaning of this kind of geometrical configuration of the three lokas is that the pancha indhriya, pancha bhuuthas and pancha koshas (five senses, elements and sheaths) aspects of man's dheha (body), is Bhuuloka; the aspect of praana shakthi or manas thathwam is Bhuvorloka; and the microscopic state of Aanandham (bliss) represents Suvarloka. So it can be said that the three worlds, Bhuuloka, Bhuvorloka and Suvarloka, are nothing but the dheha thathwa, manas thathwa and Aanandha thathwa (essential nature of body, mind and bliss) respectively and the totality of these three represents the Thrivikrama thathwa. Again, these three aspects of Thrivikrama thathwa can be understood in terms of the three states of an individual, viz, the one you think you are, the one others think you are and the one you really are. Hence only by proper saadhana can one transcend from Bhuuloka through Bhuvorloka to Suvarloka. The attainment of Suvarloka is known as moksha (liberation), and it represents the stage of complete mergence with the Lord. Since it is a state where the aspect of moha (attachment) is made to disintegrate, it is known as moksha (moha+kshyaam, mokshyam). Remember Bali by practising his ideals Bali was an embodiment of thyaaga (renunciation) and he personified the aspects of dhathru thathwam (principle of charity) and dharma thathwam (righteousness). Since Onam is a festival day to be celebrated in memory of the re-appearance of Bali in his suukshma ruupa (microscopic subtle form), it is imperative for everyone to remember and practise the ideals for which he stood when he was alive. It should be remembered that Bali, as portrayed above, should be visiting us every day and not just once a year. But we forget this because in our daily life we leave ample room for the cultivation of undesirable traits such as greediness, selfishness and egoism, which in present-day man are reaching gigantic proportions. It is precisely due to this kind of a situation that the world periodically gets plunged into wars. Bali's life-message is that the above mentioned traits in man should be eliminated at all costs, thus rendering the heart pure for the Lord to reside in it.

Another important aspect of Bali's life is his demonstration of the fact that the quality of thyaaga (selfless sacrifice) should be an integral part of one's karma (actions). All beings perform actions, but only man, if he so desires, can act, making sacrifice an integral component of his actions. Again, the existence of this trait in man is possible because of his ability to think and reflect. Unfortunately man uses these God-given faculties to enunciate theories and to preach, but never to practise what is preached.

Sacrifice everything and attain liberation

Thousands of Onams have come and gone and people have been preaching for years as to what Onam signifies. Yet the heart of man remains impure. Bali practised what he preached, whereas his revered Guru, Shukraachaarya, did not, as was evident when he intervened to stop Bali from giving away everything that he possessed to Vaamana. Preaching and practising are like the two eyes. Since Shukraachaarya only preached and did not practise, his one eye was symbolically made ineffective. A man with a dual mind is half blind. In our lives we must be Balls and not Shukraachaaryas. We should realise that in order to get one thing, something else must be sacrificed.

Bali demonstrated through his thyaaga swabhaava (sacrificing nature) that if one sacrifices everything, one will attain moksha (liberation). The real sacrifice involves two things: First, to realise the cause of our bondage in this life, and second, to sever this bondage. Man mistakenly thinks that wealth, a family etc., are his bondages, and that by severing connections with them he will be able to sacrifice everything and become eligible to attain Moksha. But these are not the real bondage of man. His real bondage is his ignorance in identifying himself with his body. He who cuts off this bondage as Bali did, will attain moksha. For cutting off this bondage a purification of the heart is very necessary. Purification of the body with soap and water and by applying perfume does not result in the purification of the mind.

In this Kaliyuga, naamasmarana (constant remembrance of God) is the easiest way to purify one's mind; and surrendering to God with a pure mind is the surest way to attain moksha. Bali offered two of his three aspects, namely, aadhi bhowthikam (his body) and aadhi dhaivikam (his life), for two feet of space demanded by Vaamana. As for the third foot of space required by

Vaamana, Bali offered his aadhyaathmika (soul) aspect to the Lord, thus surrendering to Him completely. That is why the Lord placed His third step on the heart of Bali and pushed him into Hell, thus completely pushing all trace of Bali's ego into the bottom-most layers of the Universe.

Bali was thus delivered from the bondage of birth and death.

The essence of the message of Onam

The word Bali has another meaning, which is, charge for service rendered, or tax. We pay money to the department which supplies water, knowing fully well that it is not responsible for the creation of the water. But what charges are we paying to the Creator of water? Nothing. Yet we wish to get His Grace. How is it possible to get His Grace without giving bali or sulkam (tax)?

The tax which the Lord expects is devotion and purity of heart. This is the essence of the message of Onam. Onam is not to be treated as a festival which comes once a year, but as an event, the message of which should become a way of life for everyone. The three events which

Onam symbolizes should always be kept clear in one's mind: (i) The Incarnation of Lord Vishnu as the Vatu (ii) The attainment of moksha by Bali and, (iii) The Anthardhanam (mergence) of Bali with the Lord.

Brindhaavan, 4-9-1979

Every man is engaged in searching for something lost. Life is the chance afforded to him to recover the peace and the joy that he had lost, when last he was here. If he recovers them now, he need not come again. But, he loses them through ignorance of their value and of the means of retaining them.

If only he would stay. in the consciousness of Shivoham--- "I am Shiva; I am immortal, I am the source and spring of Bliss"---he would be supremely content; but, instead of this correct evaluation of himself, this recognition of his innate reality, man goes about weeping at his helplessness, his inadequacy, his poverty, his evanescence.

This is the tragic fate from which man has to be rescued.

Sri Sathya Sai

31. Food and health

EVERY activity of man is dependent on the energy he derives from the intake of food. The spiritual saadhanas he ventures upon depend for their success on the quantity and quality of the food taken by the saadhak (spiritual aspirant), even during the preliminary preparations recommended by Pathanjali. The most external of the five sheaths that enclose the Aathmic core, namely the Annamaya kosha (physical sheath), has impact on all the remaining four---the Praanamaya, the Manomaya, the Vijnaanamaya and the Aanandhamaya (the vital, mental, wisdom and bliss sheaths or coverings). The Annamaya Kosha is the sheath, consisting of the material, flesh and bone, built by the food that is consumed by the individual.

Food is generally looked down upon by ascetically minded saadhaks and seekers and treated as some thing which does not deserve attention. But, since the body and the mind are mightily interdependent, no one can afford to neglect it. As the food, so the mind, as the mind so the thought; as the thought, so the act. Food is an important factor which determines the alertness and sloth, the worry and calm, the brightness and dullness. The scriptures classify food as Saathwik, Raajasik and Thaamasik and relate these types to the three mental modes (gunas) of the same names.

Avoid Raajasik and Thaamasik food

Man is the only living being which dislikes raw food found in the natural state. All other animals eat things as they are---grain, grass, leaves, shoots, fruits. Man boils, fries, melts, mixes and adopts various methods of cooking in order to satisfy the cravings of the tongue, the eye and the nose. As a consequence, the food value of these articles are either reduced or destroyed. When the seeds are fried, they do not sprout; that is clear proof that the 'life-force' is eliminated.

Therefore, uncooked raw pulses just sprouting, are to be preferred. Also nuts and fruits. The coconut, offered to the Gods, is a good Saathwik (pure) food, having good percentage of protein besides fat, starch and minerals. Food having too much salt or pepper is Raajasik (passionrousing) and should be avoided; so also too much fat and starch, which are Thaamasik (disposed to inactivity) in their effects on the body, should be avoided.

An intake of too much food is also harmful. Simply because tasty food is available and is being offered, one is tempted to overeat. We have air all around us but we do not breathe in more than we need. The lake is full but we drink only as much as the thirst craves for. But overeating has become a social evil, fashionable habit. The stomach cries out,

'Enough,' but the tongue insists on more, and man becomes the helpless target of disease. He suffers from corpulence, high blood pressure and diabetes. Moderate food is the best medicine to avoid bodily life. Do not rush to the hospital for every little upset. Too much drugging is also bad. Allow nature full scope to fight the disease and set you right. Adopt more and more the principles of naturopathy, and give up running around for doctors.

The type of food that you consume decides the degree of concentration you can command; its quality and quantity decide how much your self-control is lessened or heightened. Polluted air and water are full of maleficent viruses and germs and have to be avoided at all costs. There are four pollutions against which man has to be vigilant---of the body (removable by water); of the mind (removable by truthfulness), of reason (removable by correct knowledge) and of the self (removable by yearning for God). "Vaidhyo Naaraayano Harih", the Shruthis declare. God is the Doctor. Seek Him, rely on Him, you will be free from Disease.

Hospital day, Dhashara, 21-9-1979

Some say that since this is Kali Yuga, falsehood alone can succeed.

But, in spite of all appearances, honesty is still the best policy. One lie has to be buttressed by a hundred others; whereas truth is the easiest, simplest and safest line of behaviour. Be what you profess to be; speak what you intend to do; utter what you have experienced; no more, no less.

Sri Sathya Sai

32. The inner yajna

HINDHUISM, as a religious philosophy, has existed since the days of the Vedhas, but it has had to encounter and overcome many obstacles, periods of ups and downs and even a few inroads of distinct cultures. It has survived all these and is still unharmed and unwavering. Those who are experts in this field acclaim the excellence of the Hindhu religion, because it encourages the coexistence of many cultural traits and moulds them into one distinct way of life.

The word 'Hindhu' has been interpreted by scholars in various ways, but the real meaning is, him (himsa or violence) dhu (dhuur, far from): thus, a people who keep away from violence. The Hindhush have been praying since ages for the "peace and prosperity of all the worlds": Lokaas Samasthaas Sukhino bhavanthu. Their conception of the Immanence of God is strong and unshakeable. The rituals, ceremonies, vows and rites prescribed in,

Hinduism, are all directed to the promotion and well-being of "all the worlds." This is the reason why Hinduism is still alive and active.

Beneficiaries of yajnas are all living beings

Since several centuries and millennia, yajnas (Vedhic rite or sacrifice) like the Vedhapurusha sapthaaha jnaana yajna (Seven-day Vedhic Wisdom-sacrifice) which is being inaugurated here now, have been observed in India for the welfare of the world. These yajnas are not performed to benefit an individual, a family, a sect, a caste or those who follow a particular faith. The aim is universal and the beneficiaries are all living beings, for such yajnas calm the elements and propitiate the deities presiding over the earth, water, fire, wind and sky. The sages of old chose some place away from the habitations" of man, either on the bank of a river or in the recesses of a forest, for the celebration of yajnas. No one or no group of persons can claim any special attention being given to them.

The yajna is everybody's privilege; it becomes a success through everyone's effort. No one person can pride himself that he is indispensable. Handfuls of grain brought by those who had sincere desire to participate were heaped together and handfuls of ritual fuel sticks brought by the priests were stacked together. This was done as a symbol of the union of minds and hearts and as an assurance that each one can share in the blessings of the Gods invoked by the manthras (sacred formulae). When the ego of a few is given free play and fame is offered to one or many, as often happens in yajnas today, they are rendered unholy and infructuous. This is the reason why yajnas have become occasions for ridicule and adverse criticism.

Among yajnas, there are two types---the outer and the inner, the outer being a reflection of the inner. The inner yajna is the bird in the hand; the outer, the bird in the bush. But since the sanctified vision and urge are absent today, what is happening is the release of the bird in the hand with the attempt to catch the bird in the bush. The value and significance of the inner yajna have to be understood first. It involves awareness of the Divinity that is dormant but decisive in the very centre of our Reality. Worship It, propitiate It, please It, become It.

All animal traces of man must be sacrificed

The mind is the altar. Place the animal which is to be offered as oblation (the evil aspects of your character, behaviour, attitude etc.) and sacrifice it to the deity invoked. Though born as a human, man is burdened by animal instincts and impulses that have attached themselves to him during his previous lives as an animal. He has passed through many an animal existence and each has left its mark on his mental make-up, like a scar on the skin when a wound has healed. For example, man is afflicted with the disease of aggressive conceit, what is called madha in Samskrith. This is not a natural trait of man, but a relic of a former elephantine life.

Man is sometimes pitifully a moorkha (foolish), which is a relic of his past existence as a sheep.

Some have an inborn tendency to steal, which may be reminiscent of their past of creatures such as a cat, which is also a sly poacher. Some are endowed with profuse unsteadiness and waywardness, an inheritance of their monkey existence. Man is known in Samskrith as nara and the monkey as vaanara. When vaa (vaalam, tail) is subtracted, vaanara is reduced to nara. Man has lost the tail but he has still all the waywardness and unsteadiness of that animal. All such animal traces must be sacrificed on the altar of the mind as part of the inner yajna. The outer visible yajna is a means to convey this inner purpose and message.

When children are taught to read, the objects which they can see and identify are placed beside the written words which bespeak them. Under the picture of a chair, the word chair is printed and the child is taught to discover that c-h-a-i-r reads "chair." Later, the picture is discarded as superfluous. So, too, until the lesson is learnt, the external ritual of fuel sticks being offered to the sacrificial fire has to continue. The ritual is the casket, and the destruction of the animal impulses, the gem that it is designed to keep safe.

Significance of the activities at the yajna

Here we see rithviks (priests performing the rites) who are specialists in the different stages of Vedhic sacrifice. We hear the recitation of Vedhic hymns; we have Pandiths reading the Raamaayana (History of Raama), the Bhaagavatha (Legends of divine Advents) and the Dhevibhaagavatha (Exploits of Divine Universal Mother) from the original texts; we have the ceremonial worship of Dhevi on the lines of Shaasthric (ethical) injunctions; a Pandith is engaged in prayer of the thousand lingas (Symbolic Form of Divinity), while another priest propitiates the Sun God by means of ritual prostration to the accompaniment of manthras, praising His Glory. Godhead, in all Its Manifestations of elements and forces, is thus being adored for seven days as part of the Vedhapurusha yajna. The five senses and their impact, the five sheaths that enclose the Aathman, are all symbolised in these activities.

The outermost kosha (sheath) is the annamaya kosha, composed of the material body made of anna (food). Anna, the body built by anna, and the man, all are products of the self-same substance, bhuumi (soil, earth). To fill the material body with aanandha (felicity), the vital, mental and intellectual sheaths need to be sublimated. All the koshas have to be finally merged in the Illumination of Inaana (Beautific Wisdom). The homa (the oblation in the sanctified flame) is a symbol of this consummation.

The Vedhas are the embodiments of Truth

The fire you see is fed by fuel sticks and ghee, so that the flames of wisdom may burn out the last traces of ego, ignorance and desire. And what exactly is ghee, which feeds the flames? It is clarified butter---butter that is churned from curd which is in fact curdled milk. Milk is drawn from the four-legged cow which symbolises the four Vedhas. So symbolically, the Vedhas themselves help the Light of Wisdom to shine. The Vedhas are Embodiments of Truth.

Recitation of the Vedhas purifies the environment and strengthens the will to become Truth. This is symbolically conveyed by the various ceremonial rites which are part of this yajna (sacrifice).

Many who are unaware of this significance find fault with those who partake in such yajna; they criticise the loss of grain and ghee and bemoan the waste of precious materials resulting from the irrational behaviour of the priests. But the seers who declared the manthras and the Vedhas which prescribe the rituals, and those who faithfully celebrate the yajna, are not foolish at all.

Ignorant people lament the loss when the farmer scatters bags of grain on a ploughed field, for they do not know that when the harvest comes around, the farmer can collect from the field ten times more grain than was scattered by him.

A single tin of ghee offered with appropriate manthras in the holy fire will result in a million tins of ghee for mankind. The vibrations of the manthras and the effect of the oblations will ensure prosperity and welfare the world over. The sages and the seers of yore prescribed these yajnas, prompted by universal compassion, in order that they may result in the welfare of mankind. Thus all beings benefit from the persistence of the Hindhus in observing the teachings of the rishis.

The Mahaabhaaratha declares that 'what is not in Bhaarith does not deserve reverential consideration;' and in Bhaarith the message has always been: tolerance, respect for all faiths and the practice of the essential teachings of love and service with the giving up of hatred, envy and pride. This yajna will help you to understand this message and live in accordance with it.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 25-9-1979

Naamsmarana is the most effective saadhana. Remember with each Name the glory behind the Name. Escape from the clutches of anger, jealousy, hatred, malice and greed. Do not seek to discover others defects; do not gloat over them; when others point out your defects, be thankful; or keep quiet as Buddha did.

Sri Sathya Sai

33. The next step

WHATEVER originates does degenerate. All things seen as objects lose their identity in the bottomless pool of time. Man, however, wanders about in the objective world presented before him as form and name, seeking to extract therefrom permanent peace and unalloyed bliss. He is engaged in fallow pursuits and nefarious tactics, which fail to provide him the key to the Absolute and the Eternal. Does the key exist in the outer world or in the inner? So long as man embroils himself in the 'Seen,' he cannot see the 'See-er.' So long as your attention is caught by the flowers in this garland, you cannot cognise the string that holds them together. Inquiry is essential to discover the base which upholds the garland. So too, inquiry alone can bring into human experience the Aathmic (divine) base which upholds the objective sensory world.

The world can confer, at best, only momentary joy. Happiness, prosperity and power are but flashes amidst the dark clouds of misery, poverty and defeat. Kith and kin of whom we are proud and in whom we lay our trust succumb to death and depart without a word of farewell. But, we do not learn the lesson; we cling to the belief that the outer world is the treasure-chest of peace and joy.

There are only two roads before man

In all temples where idols of Shiva are installed, we find Nandhi and in temples of Vishnu we find Garuda idols; they too appear intent on adoration only and awaiting, with unwinking eyes the orders of their Masters. Their vision is one-pointed; their goal is eternal bliss; their strength is also revered; the journey to Mammon is worthy of only rebuke.

There are only two roads before man: the road to God and the road to Mammon. Few are those who choose the first and reach the Goal that lies within, where the Aathma shines in supreme glow. The multitudes trudge along the wilderness to which it leads. There, the beast in man asserts itself and suppresses the excellences with which he is endowed.

Almost always, man is anxious to ignore the faults and failings of the objects that draw his attention. If he only recognises these, he is certain to evaluate them correctly and behave more intelligently. When man becomes aware that the cobra is a poisonous snake and that the leopard is a cruel beast, he avoids them with constant vigilance. Similarly, when we become aware of the transitoriness and triviality of worldly triumphs and possessions, we can easily detach ourselves from them and concentrate on inner wealth and inner vision. All things in the outer world of objects are subject to change. Impermanent objects can confer only impermanent joy. How can it ever be otherwise? Only the spring of bliss can confer bliss. A fitful spring, a drying, decaying spring, can give happiness only in fits and even that will, before long, decay and dry.

The Aathmic energy motivates every Being. Aathma alone is the ever-full and ever-fresh spring of bliss. The Aathma is the motivator of the physical machine known as the Body. It can be inferred only through the performance of the machine. The Aathmic energy motivates every Being in the Universe--man, animal, bird, worm, tree and grass. Once man contacts It, he is blessed with Universal vision, absolute delight and eternal wisdom. Every one has the thirst to realise It and be with It; but, only very few take steps to reach It. Thousands proclaim the glory of the Aathma but only a handful strive to attain it.

Sage Shukraachaarya who was the preceptor of Emperor Bali is described in the Bhaagavatha as a great exponent of the doctrine of charity. He could expatiate on the merit that can be acquired by gifts offered to pious persons and to the needy. But when Bali was offering a gift to God Himself (in the role of Vaamana, a young Braahmin student) he advised the Emperor to desist.

His action belied his words. Profession is one eye and practice, the second. Therefore, according to the story, when Shukra attempted to prevent the gift, he became blind in one eye.

Those who hold forth ideals in profuse eloquence must demonstrate the value of those ideals in their daily lives. Otherwise, they become Shukras who can only speak; they have no honest faith in their own words. Since devotees stop halfway and start extolling the Guru and his teachings rather than experiencing their value and validity, the Aathma and the Infinite bliss It can confer, remain undiscovered by aspirants.

The Aathma cannot be grasped through metaphors and examples. No form can contain It; no name can denote It. How can the limited comprehend the Unlimited, the now measure the Ever, the wayward understand the Stable? The Kathopanishath described how God Yama parried the steady stream of questions, which the boy Nachiketas asked him in right earnest, about the Aathma. Yama tried His best to cool his ardour by promising to confer on him boons regarding wealth, power and long life. But Nachiketas spurned these trinkets. He replied, "All-powerful Yama! I know that the senses, which are eager to earn these gifts you offer, are polluted by them and are destroyed pretty soon by their contact. I am not seeking from you these evanescent joys.

Tell me of the Eternal and the True---the Aathma!" On hearing this, Yama said, "Son! you yearn for Wisdom; you are not attached to Wealth. Well. I shall fulfil your request."

Learn to visualise the Motivator, the Aathma Emperor Ianaka, too, on one occasion told himself, "My great-grandfathers, grandfathers and father commanded vast wealth and spent their lives in unstinted luxury. But they have all become the dust out of which they had emerged. Man cannot escape this fate. Then why should he hanker after these petty pleasures? Let me use this life, this physical machine, for realising the ultimate goal, the basic Truth, the fundamental Aathma." Consequent on this firm resolution, Ianaka was able to succeed in the arena of spiritual endeavour. The poet sings, "Ianaka had God ever in his thoughts, even while engaged in discharging his daily duties as an Emperor. And, by this Raja Yoga (Royal path of divine communion), he attained the supreme stage, liberation, from bondage to the individual self." The body is but an instrument to discover the indweller.

Withdraw from the outer to the inner and learn to visualise the Motivator, the Aathma, that is the lesson which the seers and scriptures teach. To engage ourselves in the purificatory exercises, to pursue the inquiry into the reality of God, Nature and Man, and to experience the ecstatic delight of that discovery, the body is very necessary. It has got to be kept healthy and alert, free from passion and sloth, balanced and expectant of victory.

Each cell in the body is motivated by Aathma

Of course, the Aathma is everywhere, at all times. It is like milk and its colour. It is white, everywhere, at all times, under all conditions, as milk or as butter, cream or ghee. So too, the Aathma, persists unchanged, however many changes the thing motivated by It might undergo.

The Aathma contacts the senses of perception and affects the mind; it awakens the intellect to discriminate and decide upon the lines of action.

The Aathma activates the instruments of thought, speech and action, of expression and communication. The eyes see; but, which is the force that prompts them? You may have ears but who endows them with the power of hearing? Words emanate from the mouth; but which is it that urges us and frames the manner and content of the speech? That force acts like the cells in a torch which provide the bulb with the current to illuminate it.

Doctors know that the body consists of cells, billions of them, alive and alert, busy and active.

Each cell is motivated by the Aathma; it is immanent, all over. The Aathma is in each of them, as well as in every spot of space. When we realise it as such, it is experienced as effulgent, total splendrous light; endless, incomparable, unique light.

Do not degrade your lives in low pursuits

The ancient seers ignored the world as irrelevant; and immersed themselves in inner inquiry until they contacted the Universal Aathma and filled themselves with Aanandha. They had to limit desires, control their cravings and live in the conviction that the destiny of Man is to divest himself of the animal heritage and to sublimate his innate humanity into Divinity.

Consider for a while the fate of the rulers of all realms, the leaders of armies and nations, the Presidents and Prime Ministers, emerging from oblivion and merging in the same---did any one of these carry with them when they passed away any portion of their wealth or possession. When one dies, another takes his place; when he dies, still another is ready to assume the role. And all are equally forgotten---except those who have heroically realised the Aathma and raised themselves to the Divine State. So, believe that the struggle for status, for power, of fame and for wealth is not commendable at all.

Having been blessed by this chance to live as human 'beings, have as the ideal, the Realisation of Reality. The Upanishaths exhort you to march on to this goal. They address you as "Amrthasya Puthraah!" ("Children of Immortality.") Try to deserve that honour, to achieve that height. Learn to use all your skills, all your intelligence, all your time for attaining that victory. You are Gods in human form, for only Gods can be immortal. You are embodiments of the Divine Aathma. Do not degrade your lives in low pursuits. Spend it in sacred thoughts, loving service, self-less acts and sweet words of solace.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 25-9-1979

A thing must have form and substance, both, in order to be genuine; an apple made out of plastic, however realistic and enticing by its correctness of form, cannot be valued as genuine, for it has no substance.

The swaruupa (form) must be saturated with the swabhaava (its own quality) too. Fire is no genuine fire, if it does not burn; nor can water be called so, if it does not wet.

It is a misnomer to name a person as man, if he does not evince the qualities of humanity. Such persons are cheats, for, by their appearance they induce others to believe that they are good, kind, honest and harmless; they draw others into their company and inflict untold injury, by their very nature.

Sri Sathya Sai

34. Discrimination and detachment

DISCRIMINATION and detachment are the first and the second steps that man has to take in order to reach the eternal Aathmic (spiritual) truth. The mind can be steadied only by the mastery of desire, the quality of unwavering detachment. Once the mind is still, peace reigns and bliss prevails. Detachment or the giving up of the tendency to pursue whatever attracts the mind, is often misconstrued as asceticism which renounces social and family life and escapes into the loneliness of the forest. But, it involves, more than anything else, awareness of the basic blemish in all material things. Without this inquiry and this discovery all claims for detachment or renunciation are slippery. No one can have real detachment in their absence. The sense of dislike that results from 'the recognition of the temporariness and triviality of pleasure is best called

'practical detachment.'

Detachment from the objective world that springs from the realisation of the Divine that is one's core can alone be the unshakable victory. Imagine the senses running after joy derivable from the outer world and the person giving up a few gains. This cannot be recognised as vairagya (detachment). The longing for the experience of sound, touch, sight, taste and smell for which the senses strive has to be turned inwards. Along with this, the innate fault inherent in every object has to be recognised and remembered. Pleasures that entice man are momentary. The giving up of external struggle is not enough, nor is it a great achievement. The real struggle is internal---the withdrawal of the extrovert senses into the mind and making them ineffective through the exercise of the intellect or discrimination. Investigate each material object that entices the senses by beauty, fragrance, sweetness and softness. Realise that these are all momentary, depending on your mental condition, physical health and emotional balance. Man is enamoured of flitting phenomena; he accepts them as valid and valuable. He is entangled in these unrealities and he strays far away from the path of liberation. Really this is not man's goal. When we are drawn towards some source of pleasure, we have to examine it carefully and analyse the pleasure that it promises to give. Imagine that you have longed to eat a particular sweet dish. You have cooked and served on your plate. You are anticipating all the while the relish it can confer. But while about to place it on the tongue, the cook rushes in and informs you that a lizard had fallen into the vessel in which it was cooked, and so, your favourite dish was fouled and poisoned. This creates disgust and your attachment disappears. Every source of pleasure has its limitations. So too, when you examine the quality of the pleasure you hope to derive or the fame you toil to earn, you will certainly blame-yourselves for being so serious about them. It may be asked: We build a house for us to live in; is that not a source of joy? We listen to fine music; is that not a source of joy? Does it not fill the heart with tenderness? In the same manner, are not these worldly pleasures real? Consider for a moment, whether even fine music will give uniform joy, if listened to, continuously, for hours! Even the heavenly musicians, Naaradha and Thumburu, will tire a listener if they hold forth for too long, however mellifluous their voice. Sweetness too is bound to be disgusting after some mouthfuls. After the limit is reached, every additional mouthful gives less and less pleasure, until disgust intervenes.

The classical poet-philosopher Bharthrihari asks, "How can medicine, resorted to for the sake of curing an illness, be deemed a luxury, a desirable pleasure?" Hunger is a disease. Food is the medicine that cures the disease. That is the plain fact but no one recognises it and behaves accordingly! They have made it a costly ritual, 'a futile feast, a fertile source of further diseases! For, they cater to the whims and fancies of the tongue and behave like slaves of the senses. The king was hunting in the depths of a forest from dawn until early afternoon. He was afflicted by intense thirst. At last, he found a hermitage where he took refuge. The inmates gave him cool clear water to drink. That was the medicine which he needed most. It made him fresh and fine. If the drink intoxicates him, robs him of reason and degrades his personality it causes many other diseases. Discrimination will reveal the dangers lurking in becoming a bond-slave of the senses. Born as humans, men grow as beasts. Born as humans, bred among humans and by humans, men grow as wild beasts. Talking of peace among men and nations, they prepare for war and revel in battles. Though human in outer form, they relish demonic hatred in their hearts. Such hypocrites do not deserve your trust. Their speech is sweet, but their hearts are bitter. They declare something as their goal, but they persist in proceeding in the opposite direction. God has endowed man with intelligence and the faculty of discrimination, so that he can save himself from this falsehood, and visualise the Divine. But instead of dheva (God) being the target of activity, dheha (the body) has monopolised the attention of man. Instead of understanding oneself through the proper use of this endowment, each one is engrossed in misunderstanding others through the perverted use of intelligence and discriminative skills. The mirror gifted to you with the injunction, 'Son! Use this to see thyself' is being held only before others. Buddhi (intellect) is best used as an instrument for self-realisation. It is nearest to the Aathma in man, but when it is ever busy seeking faults in others, it gets polluted in the process and loses the power of reflecting the majesty, the splendour and the glory of the Aathman which can illumine it. Now, the advantage of the adjacence is lost and Buddhi strays far into the world in search of objective pleasure, and sensory satisfactions.

If the summum bonum of living is the satisfaction of the senses, the birds and beasts with far less intelligence and much poorer discrimination are equally successful as man, if not more. No!

Human intelligence has a nobler and higher purpose---the realisation of the eternal truth, behind all these apparent formations and transformations. The saintly guides of mankind have stressed the special excellence of man's buddhi. They have said that along with humans, all other living beings have the need for food, the yearning for sleep, the protective impulse of fear and the instinctive urge of sex. But, they point out to the unique gift that man treasures, Inaana (integral wisdom). They declare that the person who does not seek inaana but live as the senses direct, is, in truth a veritable beast.

Avoiding duty to Aathma is sheer cowardice

When man is entangled until the moment of death in stilling the clamour of the senses and catering to the needs of this illusory world, how can he thrill with ecstasy of the awareness of his own Aathmic core? From the monarch in the palace to the beggar in the streets, all are caught up in the game of extracting pleasure from the outer world. The illiterate man and the scholar are equally busy in the pursuit of this mirage. So, what are we to say of the superior capacities of scholarship? Earning money, guarding the earned money, increasing it by the surest and the safest methods--thus the struggle goes on---plus, plus, plus! The bondage to worldly things tightens faster and faster. No one pauses to enquire how deep and how real is the joy that these earnings can give. And what of the 'fashions' that he enslaves himself to? They justify these aberrations as 'social obligation' and 'duty.'

But, have people no duty towards the Aathma? Have they no obligation to recognise the Aathma? Should they not bind themselves fast to the Aathma which is the Reality? It is sheer cowardice to avoid this duty, to ignore this obligation, and to escape from this bondage. Of course, you have to live on the earth and understand it. You have to study the Universe and derive joy therefrom. But, to believe that it is the be-all and end-all of life is a sign of insanity.

Avoid evil thoughts and evil habits

You have been attending such discourses since years and undergoing these journeys to Swaami's Presence often and often. And you have listened to the lessons I am giving. Let Me ask you--- what is the gain you have garnered? How near are you to the goal? Which obstacle have you overcome? If you have not reached the higher stage, what have you profited from the saadhana?

How can you justify the label, 'devotee' which you have adopted for yourselves?

No. You must progress towards the goal step by step; you have to uproot evil thoughts, evil habits and evil designs from within you. Repeating 'God' 'God' 'God,' you are now only straying away into ungodly realms.

Analyse every object and discover the cheapness and hollowness of each. Then, genuine vairaagya (detachment) will be planted in your heart. So, utilise the priceless weapon, the perfect mirror, that God has given you---the buddhi (intellect), for the journey to God. An old adage announces that "Buddhi is shaped by one's actions"---Buddhih karma anusaarinee. But this is not quite correct. The mind prompts the sense for action. It has the buddhi on one side and the senses on the other and is drawn by both into action. When the manas (mind) leans towards the senses, and activates them, bondage results; if it leans towards the intelligence (which is illumined by the Aathma), liberation results. Sometimes, the buddhi is enticed by the fake delight that the mind revels in, through the senses. Saadhana has to be used at this moment to turn it away from serfdom to the mind. It must be restored to its status of regulator and controller of the vagaries of the mind.

Man is riding two horses, World and God

This flower is beautiful; it gives exciting, enchanting fragrance, declare the eye and the nose. The wise man will not be content with the sense-impression. He resorts to buddhi and wants it discover---how long? how much? The answer is---until nightfall, till the new day dawns.

Therefore he concludes true beauty, true fragrance can be derived only from God, not from created things and components, not from the moving and changing, the emerging and merging, the appearing, attracting and disappearing entities of the world.

What, then, is Truth---the witness of all these processes and changes, the See-er of all that is seen, the ONE that has no second, unaffected by time and space. Man is now riding two horses--

-the world and God, the Universal and the Particular, the Absolute and the Relative, the Eternal and the Time-bound, the Reality and the Appearance. He is therefore riding for a fall.

Saadhana alone can help man to choose the right path and pursue it relentlessly. Every religion in every era and clime emphasises the ONE and marks out the path to reach it. They warn us against too much attachment to the world, which is basically poisonous.

You may drink it with delight but that will not mitigate its evil effects. You may drink the Aathmic Ambrosia weeping and wailing but it will confer immortality nevertheless! So keep away from worldly enticements and turn your eye inwards to visualise the Aathma.

Detachment alone can make the path clean

The Anthah-karana (inner consciousness) has four instruments that prompt man. Of these, buddhi is two-faced; it draws light from the Aathma to which it is closest; it illumines with that light, the mind and the senses. It regulates the passions and emotions, the impulses and instinctive reactions. Some perverse minds confront with questions, like, "Is it not ensuring the safety and happiness of our wives and children our duty? How can you declare that it is not desirable? Yes. But remember the prime purpose of the education, you earn in this life, is to concentrate on your Aathmic Truth. Do not be diverted from this fundamental duty. Other activities must smoothen and straighten this path. They must be contributory saadhanas (spiritual disciplines) for this basic purpose of man.

Saadhakas (Spiritual aspirants)! Embodiments of Love! Yearn always to be as close to your Divine Core as possible. You need not desert your family and run away into loneliness. You have only to keep in mind the comparative triviality of the world. Death stalks every living being; disintegration waits on all created things. From a world so transient, so uncertain and unstable, one has to win the goal of eternal peace and eternal bliss.

The eternal Aathma is associated with the ephemeral body! Discrimination alone can make this plain. Detachment alone can make the road clear.

Dhashara Discourse, 26-9-1979

Dharma guards those that guard dharma. Dharma means certain obligations and duties and regulations over actions, words and behaviour."

Elders have certain obligations towards younger people as young men have towards elders; neighbours have mutual duties and rights. Even war has to be carried on, under some rules of decency and humanity.

The mighty should not grab the possessions of the weak; the pledged word has to be honoured. If India sticks to these principles of dharma, that dharma alone will serve as effective armour against all the foes.

Sri Sathya Sai

35. Mine and thine

MAN has demarcated two distinct goals before himself---material and spiritual. But such distinction is wrong and ruinous. It may be congenial and convenient on the surface; but if it is acted upon great harm will be caused to the blossoming of the soul.

For they are both the same, one continuous pilgrimage towards the Divinisation of man. One of the incorrect assertions propounded today is "The physical frame is composed of the five elements. Its components finally merge with those five. Casting away this frame, the soul puts on another frame composed of the same five and, undergoing some more terms of schooling, slides out of that venture also.

The soul is ever in search of new experiences; It is a highly peripatetic entity."

The body is the instrument needed to realise the Aathman. The Aathman resides in the body and has to be discovered in and through it Here is a silver cup; can we separate the silver from the cup or the cup from the silver? The silver is the basic truth; the cup is the form which has been given to it. We can make out of this silver a plate, an urn or a box.

Through all these transformations, the silver will persist as silver. Similarly the Divinity, the Aathman, persists, though the five elements form themselves into body after body.

The ego free mind is the altar in the yajna

Is the Aathman with or without form? Has It certain attributes, or is It attributeless? Is It unfeeling or feeling bound? These doubts are certain to trouble the thinker. The forms are merely artificial and temporary, not inherent. The formless Aathman is Immanent in the body-form.

How, then, can man separate them and deal with them differently? It can only lead to disaster.

You are performing a yajna (sacrifice) here for seven days. It does not consist of the erected altar, the sacrificial pit or any other material means. These are but external symbols of the inner purpose. The ego-free mind is the altar; offer your activities (with all trace of desire removed) to the fire of renunciation. To celebrate this genuine yajna one need not collect money, gather provisions or assemble priests.

Acts done between dawn and dusk are offerings into the sacred fire of wisdom. Of such acts those that are prompted by instinct and impulse are material; they do not arise from a mind moulded by the intellect. When the mind is crossed and the outer shore reached, all acts become pure and holy. When deep sleep overpowers the senses, the mind, the intellect and even the sense of ego disappear. The entire Cosmos disappears from awareness. That is the time when the Aathman is alone with Itself, and bondage is naught.

Man flounders in hatred and greed

The Aathman keeps warning each individual of its existence with its 'I'. The same 'I' insists on being recognised in our childhood, youth, middle age and old age.

Through all these changes of the panchabhootha-constituted body, the 'I' remains as Existence-Consciousness-Bliss, as the unaffected Witness. Ignoring this reminder of the Unity of all life, man flounders in hatred and greed. When there is only the One Aathman in all, how can hatred arise? Who is to hide from whom? Ekam sath: All that exists is One.

Man, in his ignorance, finds contentment in separating himself from the rest for the search of his own happiness, forgetting that he cannot be happy unless all are happy. He pollutes himself through the cultivation of pride. He uses time for degrading himself to the bestial level. Time is an invaluable gift which has to be reverentially treated. People usually measure time as from sunrise to sunset and sunset to sunrise. But that is only similar to the illusion which makes us infer that the moon is moving when we see passing clouds.

God or the Supreme Self or Paramaathman, is praised by man when his desires are fulfilled.

When they are not realised, God is blamed. But God has no prejudice or partiality. If He has Love, He must also have anger. Any manifestation of these feelings is only superficial, and does not rise from the core. God is a witness of the act-consequence chain. You can avoid the consequence by dedicating the act to God and abstaining from attachment. Only you have to be sincere in your surrender and in your detachment. For this you have to cleanse your heart and feelings through japa, smarana and dhyaana (recitation of God's Names, remembering God, and meditation on God). Without a pure heart and virtuous life, even though you may recite the Vedhas during the yajna you will benefit little from that.

One's actions decide one's destiny

The Rishis (sages) were sincerely selfless and earnest and so the yajnas purified the atmosphere, pleased the elements and propitiated God. One's actions, therefore, decide one's destiny. There is no use blaming others for our misfortune and misery. Nor is it right to blame God as being partial or cruelly unconcerned. When you plant a bitter seed, how can the fruit be sweet? It has become the fashion to claim all good as being one's own achievement and to ascribe all the despair and disappointment to an irresponsible attitude of Divinity.

Some professors of Benaras University once ridiculed another of the same seat of learning for wasting ten minutes in the morning and ten in the evening in meditating on a non-existent God.

He replied "Brothers, if God is, as you say, non-existent, I agree I am wasting twenty minutes every day. But if God exists, as many believe, I am sorry you are wasting your entire lives!"

As a matter of fact, God alone Is; the changing world is what we have superimposed on the Divine Entity. Turn your vision away from the superimposition onto the base upon which it has happened through your ignorance. Pashu is the Samskrith word for beast, and has pashyathi as its root. Pashyathi means, "that which sees only the outer world."

When man is content to use his senses merely to enjoy the outer world, to what little extent he can, he is not living up to his real destiny. Even spiritual efforts, saadhanas have been reduced to external rituals by man in all lands. Morning and evening, and on days set aside as holy, they do puuja (ritualistic worship) with special pomp, heaps of flowers, rows of lamps and strings of loud sthothras (hymns). The impact of these rites is mostly thin and superficial.

Rituals are needed only in the early stages

There are many who spend all their time in preparation for the ritualistic acts or in their actual practice. But what do they gain? They are still afflicted by envy, pride and greed and have no loyalty to truth. They have succeeded only in polluting their years and casting away the ideals laid down in the Vedhas. Most people who proclaim themselves as saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) do not dare turn their attention inwards to the Aathmic Reality.

Of course rituals and prayer are necessary in the early stages. They are the kindergarten of spiritual education. One has to march on from this childhood into the adult journey towards the Aathman. This yajna and these rules and regulations regarding rites, have to be transcended and sublimated into thought, word and deed which promote universal reverence, egolessness and equanimity.

I am telling you in every discourse that. Divinity resides in every being. But you must have noticed that I am inflicting rather hard punishment on those who have done some wrong or strayed into wrong paths. The Divinity has to shine in every activity and we should see that it is not befogged by human failing or 'animalities.' For this purpose, such correctives and remedial measures are imperative. Copper, as an alloy, lessens the value of gold, so it has to be removed by melting the alloy in a crucible. So, too, when the pure, holy and progressive human being is associated with certain impure, unholy and degrading tendencies, Swaami has to intervene to correct them and restore their value of original gold. Or else why should I indulge in correction and punishment? Understanding My actions in their true light is the surest means of earning My Grace.

Practise the saadhana of Unity

The world today is suffering as a result of the reign of 'I'-ness and 'my'-ness in the human heart.

Fear, anxiety, sorrow, pride, greed---each of these is fed in dangerous proportions by such 'I' and

'my' feelings. When calamity affects someone within the circle of 'my', undue grief overwhelms you; when it happens to someone outside the circle, you are untouched and dismiss it with gross indifference. So long as these antics of the ego are considered valid and proper, man cannot grasp the Universal Aathman that is in him as the core of his personality. In order to recognise the Aathman and earn strength therefrom, man must practise the saadhana (spiritual discipline) of Unity. He must give up the distinction of those within and without the 'circle.'

There is no difference between 'my' and 'thy.' When others are punished for their wrongs, you rejoice; when you are punished for the same fault, you protest and bewail your lot. Through saadhana, samachiththa (mental equanimity) has to be attained---that is to say, egoless, equal mindedness which ensures a pure mind.

The criterion of purity is love. The tree may fill your heart today with joy by its grandeur and beauty. It may have a lovely crown of green and attractive gifts of sweetness, fragrance and colour. But the very next day it might shed everything, become dry and die! What is the reason?

The roots are damaged by pests which were working underground.

They ruin the tree and cause it to fall.

You can observe the pitiful fate of many devoted and dedicated persons nowadays, who are besieged by various types of calamities. For what reason? People ask cynically why such good persons should suffer so much. The reason is that they have not attained purity of heart, not realised the Unity of the Aathman and are still possessed by feelings of 'I' and 'my.' The saadhaka must take the calamity as a warning and tell himself, "I am beaten by this incident. It grieves me and deprives me of balance because I still have some defects in me."

When saambaar (lentil soup) is cooked in a copper vessel, however fresh and fine the ingredients, the result is a highly poisonous stuff. Similarly, though saadhana may be done with the most meticulous attention and care, if the intentions and attitudes are impure, no progress can be achieved. I wish to emphasise that purity of the heart, the mind and the consciousness is more important for progress than even meditation and prayer. Purity alone can convince you of the Divine within you, of the Kshethrajina (indweller) immanent in this kshethra (body). Love all, adore all, serve all. That is the saadhana of worship to win purity and earn Grace.

Dhashara, 27-9-1979

36. The three Aakaashas

Is the Universe real? Is it relatively unreal? This problem has been agitating man since ages in all lands. The realists and the idealists have argued on their explanations for centuries. The scientists or realists believe that the Universe is a conglomeration of atoms in varying patterns which have assumed manifold forms and names. But this is only partially true.

The vijnaana vaadhins (the spiritually oriented) point out to the bhowthik vaadhins (the materially oriented), that a firm base is essential for all these transformations to happen. The Universe must have a basic force or energy or phenomenon; as basic as clay is to the pot. That fundamental principle is, according to them, the Aathman (divine spirit).

However, the attempt in which man is engaged today is to deny the clay and build faith in the pot! This process is doomed to fail. The cognisable universe which is dismissed as untrue, must have truth as its base, as the 'rope' on which the 'snake' is superimposed. That Basic Truth is the Aathman (soul).

Of course the Universe in which we exist is cognised by our senses and we take it as true and real. But it cannot be accepted as Truth, for anything that changes does not deserve to be so called. Also, it appears differently to different living beings at different levels of consciousness.

Animals, birds and insects are aware of it in different ways and forms. It is shaped and moulded according to the desires and perceptions of each. How are these created?

The Aathman awakens man's thoughts

The Aathman enters the body as the Inner Motivator and awakens the thoughts and feelings. In the absence of the Aathman, the body is inert; in the absence of the body, thoughts do not arise and in the absence of thought, the universe is not apparent; it is non-existent to the individual.

The three are inextricably interdependent---the body (with all the powers of consciousness enclosed in it), the universe and the Aathman, either individualised or universally immanent.

Both materialism and spiritualism seek the fundamental Universal base; one discovers it in matter, the other in the Spirit. The Aathman (Spirit) takes on a form and body to experience and cognise the Jagath (Universe), just as cotton takes on the form of yarn to be cognised and experienced as cloth. The cloth is both, the yarn and the cotton. Cotton is the fundamental base, the Aathman. It assumes name and form and becomes yarn (the body), and is finally known as cloth, (the Jagath), the product of the thoughts emanating from the body.

Five characteristics of the Universe

There is another way of understanding and interpreting this process. In the Upanishaths and the Vedhaantha (Vedhic philosophy), five characteristics of the Universe are mentioned---Asthi (Being), bhaathi (awareness), priyam (bliss), naama (name) and ruupa (form). Of these, the last two are temporary, and therefore, trivial. The first three are the three facets of the everlasting truth, the Aathman. The categories of Sath-Chith-Aanandha are also co-related in Vedhaantha with bhootha aakaasha, chiththa aakaasha and chith aakaasha respectively. Aakaasha is the name for sphere of consciousness. Bhootha aakaasha is outer Cosmic consciousness; chiththa aakaasha is the inner consciousness of the chiththa (seat of intellect), the centre of discrimination in living beings, while chith aakaasha is the pure, unalloyed consciousness that flows from the Aathman. The bhootha aakaasha is the vast limitless space in which the Sun and planets are but tiny knots of energy. It is so extensive that the light from some of its stars, millions of light years away, has not yet reached the earth. Light travels, they say, at 1,86,000 miles per second (in fact the speed is 1,88,000 miles per second). So you can imagine the enormous size of the bhootha aakaasha which includes all these stars and much more.

The chiththa aakaasha subsumes such an immeasurable bhootha aakaasha, for the consciousness illumines and becomes aware of all that exists. The chiththa aakaasha is prompted into activity by the chith aakaasha, the chith of Sath-Chith-Aanandha (different from the inner instrument of discrimination named chiththa). An infinitesimal fraction of the Aathman is enough to activate the chiththa so that it can draw into Itself the cosmos, the entire objective Universe.

Therefore, every one must be firm in the belief that he is the Aathman and not the body with its senses of perception and action, its inner equipment of mind, intellect, reasoning faculty and the ego. He must know that he undergoes no change, that he cannot die or be destroyed. Being immersed in bhootha aakaasha, man feels it wrong to understand himself as the perishable body with its appurtenances. He often brings up to his memory this truth. That is to say, he is aware of the Sath, his existence that is Eternal. Soil-food-man completes the cycle

While the chiththa aakaasha is contemplated, he is aware that he is the vehicle of consciousness, the Chith. While he is saturated with the awareness of the chith aakaasha---the effulgence of the Aathman---he is the embodiment of Aanandha, the third facet of the Aathman. When the consciousness is turned inwards, the ultimate state of Aathma aanandha (Soulful Bliss) is attained.

The human body is composed of cells which draw strength and life from food; food draws its value from the soil. Soil- food- man---when that cycle is completed, man returns to the soil. The soil is bhootha aakaasha---the food grown out of the soil becomes consciousness, the chiththa aakaasha---and the chiththa merges into the Aathman consciousness or chith aakaasha. A seed germinates within the soil and rises above ground as a sapling. It then puts forth leaves and branches and blossoms. The flowers give place to fruits which ripen and contain seeds which can repeat the process of germination and growth.

The soil is the basis of all transformations and developments; if you keep the seeds on your palm and water them, they will not grow. Soil and seed bring about the third entity, the plant. The cells in both have an affinity that is strange. The cells in the soil are its Aathman; the cells in the seeds are its Aathman. Soil is the substance of the food out of which man is born, through which man is sustained and nourished. But the body is the temple of the Aathman (divinity). Therefore one should not desecrate the body with any evil thought, word or deed.

The splendour of the Aathman reveals all things, illumines all things. The Aathman, however, is Self-Revealing, Self-illuminating. It shines everywhere, in all things. In spite of any number of changes, the individual persists. Within the child, which unfolds into the boy, the youth and the middle-aged man, old age is ever dormant. So, too, it is the chith aakaasha which unfolds into the chiththa aakaasha and finally into bhootha aakaasha (the objective Universe).

For example, when some one photographs Me, I appear as a very small Sai Baba in the negative.

But we can enlarge it to the size we desire to have. The Sai Baba in the big photo and the Sai Baba in the small one are the same. Can you assert that this five-foot three inches body, alone, is Sai Baba and that the figure in that tiny picture is not? The anu (lightest) and ghana (heaviest) are both true. They are the same, but looked at from different angles.

Therefore, O Embodiments of Prema, turn your vision from the outer universe into the Inner Glow, the Aathmic Splendour, which you really are.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 28-9-1979

37. My joy, My sustenance

THAT which is the central subject of the Vedhas, that which confers aanandha (divine bliss) on all life, that which is the object of unceasing search in the world in various ways and along various disciplines---That is Brahman. It is everywhere; it is the basis of creation. It is indivisible, indestructible, changeless and absolute. The bhootha-akaasha (the Cosmos), which includes the stars, the Sun and the earth, is but a flake of froth on the surface of the Aathman.

The chiththa-akaasha (consciousness that cognizes), is only a wave on that sea. The sea itself is the Chith- aakaasha (Aathman-consciousness). The Aathman alone is real; the rest is all appearance. The play of name and form, both are temporary and transient.

Since the Aathman (the Reality), is befogged by name and form, we are led to believe that man suffers from the three types of sorrow---the aadhibhowthika (external objects), the aadhidhaivika (supernatural) and the aadhyaathmika (individual self).

Aadhibhow-thika is the result of attachment to kith and kin, treated as separate but still one's own. It is the egoist bond that pains man the most, often also leading him into evil ways. Its companion, anger, lays hold of us like 'a ghost and persuades us to join the devil dance with its gang, of which envy and greed are the chiefs. Aadhidhaivika is the sorrow caused by what are called Acts of God (natural calamities and the like). By earning a balanced mind, unaffected by the whims of fortune, this sorrow can be conquered. Then one achieves a state of samaadhi (super conscious state of Bliss) which is cognisable by a sense of equal mindedness, equanimity and equipoise. This adventure and attainment belong to the realm of chiththa-aakaasha.

Aadhyaathmika sorrow is caused by physical and mental illness or disease. Yoga (Divine Communion) can overcome this sorrow easily, for it controls and sublimates the agitations of the mind and thereby ensures calmness and peace.

Reasons for man not getting contentment

To be rid of sin, one must direct all activity towards good thoughts, good words and good deeds.

So, too, to earn the Aathman or chith-aakaasha, one must realise how the bhootha-aakaasha is cognized by the chiththa (inner consciousness) and how both are expressions of that chiththa.

When one knows the Aathman, the Eternal Witness, one attains the nirvikalpa (undifferentiated consciousness) stage---free from do's and don'ts, ups and downs, joys and sorrows. Conquer thamas (inertia) through rajas (activism) and rajas through sathwa (goodness), and finally free yourself even from the sathwa-guna. Only then can you reach nirvikalpa. Guna means a rope, so sathwa-guna, too, binds. Nirvikalpa is the stage when man is fully free, fully awake, fully wise.

Raamakrishna once brought a house-holder devotee and Vivekaanandha, the ascetic devotee, together. He asked Vivekaanandha, "Son, What exactly is your goal of securing inaana (wisdom)?" In-reply Vivekaanandha elaborated on Kapila's saankhya system of philosophy. He said that everything, big or small, every cell and star, undergoes change every instant. Food consumed becomes fertiliser to feed plants which provide further food.

There is nothing which is stable or true

The air which one man exhales is inhaled by another and the minute particles of one's system enter the system of the other person. Sea water becomes the moisture in the air and gathered together as rain-clouds which feed the fields and gardens, is transformed into edible sweetness.

Matter is but the perpetual communion and separation of particles. The human body has all its component cells replaced by 'new' ones during every seven-year period of time. Therefore, how can we pronounce anything as stable, as permanent, as true? This is the reason man does not get contentment or peace. This is the reason man does not get joy, however wealthy or famous he may become. So long as he revels in the trivial and the temporary, he cannot be happy. It is only when he has discovered the Aathman and is always deep in the ecstasy of that discovery that he can be in unblemished happiness. In that stage he is aware that he is eternal and all knowing, absolute and omniscient.

Whatever Swaami does or gets done, whatever He says or directs others to say, remember, it is to emphasise or make clear or exemplify this message of the Aathmic Reality of man. I am prompting these students to speak or recite, sing or act, so that this message may be installed in their hearts. They are the media through whom I am reviving the ancient culture of this land. I am encouraging them to be examples of the strength and equanimity that can be gained by the practice of that message.

Students are Swaami's source of delight

In a few moments the students will be enacting a play on Raamakrishna Paramahansa in which the secret of his Supreme Spiritual achievement is laid bare, and he himself is held forth as the ideal for man in spiritual saadhana and fearless enquiry into spiritual problems. You will see a boy named Mehtha, a student of our Bangalore Sathya Sai College, dance as a gopee and in other female roles. The whole Cosmos and the gyrations it performs to the music of the spheres, is a huge dance-drama. This is the symbolic representation of that Truth. There is no vidhya (subject of study) which our students are not proficient in. They develop all the virtues and they saturate every act of theirs, including their skills and studies, with those high and pure qualities. To demonstrate that this process will yield joy, peace and prosperity, I have these students as My instruments. They mould themselves as ideals. They are the source of My delight and they sustain My hopes. (They are My aashaya, My aanandha and My aahaara).

These students, and those of the same stamp, are the pioneers in My task of mending the present world and ushering in a new world. I am determined to transform the students of all colleges into such instruments for the rebuilding of the world on the foundation of dharma (Right action).

Before long, all students in this land of Bhaarith will follow the ancient ideals laid down by our culture, and earn happiness for themselves and others. This is My hope. I bless them so that they may strive towards this goal and succeed.

Dhashara, 29-9-1979

Bhakthi (devotion) to God is not to be judged or measured by rosaries or candles, daubings on the forehead or matted hair or jingles on the ankles. Purity of motives and intentions is essential, so that prema (love) which is the one component of bhakthi does not leak out of the heart.

The genuine outer signs of bhakthi are three: faith, humility and apprehension.

Faith in the ultimate victory of truth and love; humility before elders and the wise; apprehension in the presence of evil, fear to mix with bad company, to enter into evil designs, to act counter to the whisperings of conscience.

Sri Sathya Sai

38. Devalued Man

To whom does the body belong? To the mother who brought it forth, or the father who promoted its growth? Or, does it belong to the grandmother who delivered the mother? No. It belongs to none of these. It is a mere material container. You are not the body; you are the resident of the body; the Kshethrajna in the Kshethra---the Knower of the Field presiding over the Field of action. Ignoring this, man is misusing the holy container for unholy purposes and complaining when the effort brings only suffering. The car is not intended to be as such; it has to serve as a vehicle for the one who owns it. The body too is just a vehicle, to be used by the Aathma, for promoting the welfare of the world, for proving the validity of Dharma, for probing into Truth and for experiencing the omnipresence of the Divine Principle. This is the pre-eminent purpose of the incarnation of the individual and of his sojourn in this body. Every activity performed with this end in view is thereby sublimated into a Yajna (holy sacrificial ceremony), for it is devoid of egoistic desire. Just now, Vedhapurusha Sapthaaha Inaana Yajna (the Seven-day Vedhic Wisdom related sacrifice) is coming to a close; today's ritual is the Valedictory Oblation. It marks the 'Samaapathi' (the end). Samaapathi means, the attainment of Brahman (the Universal Absolute). That is the final goal of all ceremonies and activities, all rites and rituals. Indhra overlords the senses and the mind. You might have noticed that the Vedhic deity, Indhra, was invoked every morning and evening during the week and offered sacramental food. Along with Indhra, many other gods too were welcomed and propitiated. Indhra is not conceived as a distinct person residing in Heaven. He is the monarch of the senses of man; He is the God in charge of the mind which operates the senses, and can also control the senses. Indhra's controller aspect is known as Rudhra. Indhra is delineated as armed with a wheel, with ten spokes---the ten being the five senses of perception and the five of action. The Rudhras are eleven, for in their case, the mind is added as the eleventh. Indhra is known in the Vedhas as Puruhotha, an appellation that means, "He who is called upon, often." We have to call upon this Indhra often to control the senses and keep the mind on an even keel. We must be always aware of the Divine Principle, Indhra, that overlords the senses and the mind. Indhra holds the mind back from the senses which pursue every whim and fancy that they encounter. The reins of Indhriyas (senses) are in the hands of Indhra. The mind is also subject to gusts of hatred, anger and greed. These have to be sacrificed on the altar of the mind in the name of the presiding Deity. This is the real yajna on which man has to spend his skills and energy. This Valedictory oblation will ensure the destruction of the beast in man and enable him to shine in his own glow as man. The seed attains its full glory when it sprouts, breaking through the soil, grows into a tree clothed in green and decked with loveliness. Man too has to break through his earthy, earth-bound crust and become a full free fruitful human, filled with humanity. Every attempt in this direction is a saadhana (discipline) worth practising. Do not endeavour to be exhibitionists

Therefore, strengthen the inner vision and seek to establish your self in perfect equanimity, unaffected by the clamour raised by the senses. In Prashanthi Nilayam, steps are being taken stage by stage to help saadhakas to succeed in gaining the inner vision. Puuja, bhajan, japa and thapas (worship, congregational devotional singing, recitation of holy words and austerity) must not be allowed to draw your awareness away from the high level of consciousness you have reached or are striving to reach. You must diminish more and more the outer rituals; you must withdraw your attention more and more from external activity. You should endeavour to be exemplars, not exhibitionists. Singing aloud bhajans or blatant dhyaana sessions or attention-drawing rotation of rosaries---these are helpful for the time, only to avoid gossip or scandal-mongering or argumentative conversation. They cannot take you forward or inward; they may even drag you backward! Pompous and extravagant ceremonies that are designed to attract the attention of others have ruined the fair name of Indian spirituality. Even the recitation of Vedhic hymns have suffered from exhibitionist inclinations of Pandiths. Words are cut into absurd syllables in order to yield gymnastic pronunciations which jar the ear but impress the unlearned. The meaning of the text is ignored whenever such effects are sought to be produced and great harm is done to the Vedhas we adore. Guard your health by disobeying your tongue. That sense of adoration must be fostered by thought, word and deed. No injury should be caused, no pain inflicted, through the words one utters or the deeds one is engaged in. Nor should even a harmful thought pollute the purity of the mind. Resolve to reform thought, word and deed on these lines and be assured that you have entered upon a more sacred yajna (sacrificial ceremony) than this one. Be specially warned of the vagaries of the tongue. Guard your health by disobeying it wisely; guard your reputation by enforcing silence on it. The tongue revels in five ungodly games: uttering falsehood, indulging in slander, maligning others, gossiping endlessly, and justifying one's faults. These Yajnas teach us to hold the senses in check. The tongue is verily a dangerous instrument; it has to be used with caution. Succeed in the struggle against the persuasive pulls of the senses;

then, you deserve to be called the Vajamaanaa (the Master who has victoriously accomplished a Divine Task). Yearn to be the Master, not the servant who is denied access to the treasure-chest in the house. Do not be satisfied with the role of pashu (the bound animal). Strive to be a man and become God, the Pashu-pathi (the Lord of all Life). The Vedhas exhort man to speak the Truth and to march along the path of Justice. But, he has become deaf to this call. No wonder, man has become despicably devalued today, that he is cheated at every turn and decimated on the roads. Earth, sea, water, air---mind, senses, reason, body all are polluted and poisoned.

Mankind is adrift with no apparent goal

To save man from degradation and destruction, the system of values has to be overhauled.

Character, straight-forwardness, humility, detachment, simplicity---these must be restored to the position of man's highest ideal. Even the bodies in which we dwell have to be given up one day; they decay and disintegrate. Wealth, fame, authority---all these are but temporary tinsel. How long can a person stick to the chair from which he wields power over others? It is the ego that prompts him and deludes him into the belief that it will last. Mankind is adrift, with no apparent goal. The holy task of fulfilment is forgotten. The sacredness of life is ignored. Unless these are rediscovered, goodness and godliness cannot thrive in this country and elsewhere.

Embodiments of Love! The demonic forces of egoism, envy and greed have to be exorcised soon. Then alone can man blossom into this truth, goodness and beauty. Then alone can the tongue utter sweet words of self-less love; then alone can the heart urge the hands to engage in loving service; then alone can man justify himself before mankind and attain the Divine.

Divine Discourse, Vijayadhashami, 1-10-1979

39. Serve the child

MEN are proficient in various skills. They manufacture and operate diverse machines and master many fields of knowledge. However they have not acquired the peace that is their due. They are carried along by the torrential flood of worldly life. Though endowed with human capabilities exercisable through a human body, men do not choose the straight path of Truth. They wander about in false and fleeting pleasures and fritter their years, forgetting their innate, Divine Reality.

This is far from the fulfilment they should aspire for. Mere skill, mere designing and.

manipulation of machines, hollow pomp, boast and assertions about being a jnaani (liberated person)---these do not reveal the secret of human nature. Has man solved this mystery which includes all mysteries? Has he found the answer which is the key to all problems? Has he earned the knowledge which can make him know all that he has to know?

The solution, the answer, the knowledge is one, and only one. Why pluck the leaves, break the branches and hew the trunk in order to destroy the tree? Cut the root and it is done! The Vedhic seers and the sages who followed, concentrated on the discovery of this key knowledge, the Aathma vidhya (the science of spirituality). Seekers from overseas also became aware of this vidhya and the modes of saadhana (spiritual discipline) it lays down, and have acclaimed it enthusiastically the world over.

Our forefathers revered the sacred texts

But though this vidhya permeated its native home and illumined it for ages, Indians were huddled within the dark circle of the lamp's shadow. This has been their miserable fate. Our greatgrandfathers and even fathers, perused the pages of books depicting the sacred culture of our land, assimilated their message, practised the saadhanas and taught and remembered their teachings with gratitude. And, as a result, they enjoyed unruffled peace. They studied the great classics---the Mahaabhaaratha, the Raamaayana, the Bhagavathgeetha---and their hearts had the moral maxims propounded therein, imprinted indelibly on them.

They were guided throughout their lives by these sacred texts which they placed in their shrines, offering them reverential adoration. Their hearts were purified and sanctified by these acts of worship and work, and they were prompted to render service to society as a consequence.

By some stroke of evil fortune, times changed. The 'modern age' dawned and our people bowed slavishly before it. These holy books were neglected and even cast aside as containing 'primitive' ideals. Western scholars and seekers, on the other hand, retrieved them, studied them scrupulously, analysed their propoundings on subjects as diverse as medicine, armaments, mathematics and astronomy, and spoke of them to the very people who had pioneered in those fields! We welcome them with glee, as a man prefers stale food in another's house to fresh dishes in his own!

Cultivate virtue in the hearts of pupils In blind admiration of Western ways of life, students in India belittle virtue and extol dry scholarship. They forget they are human beings engaged in the pilgrimage to God. Instead they engross themselves in attempts to squeeze joy out of the material world. Therefore the first task of teachers is the cultivation of virtue in the hearts of the pupils. This is much more vital than the promotion of learning. The education system today does not recognise or encourage moral or spiritual values. Therefore the student community has degenerated into a socially dangerous element. The students do not pay the least attention to promotion of the welfare of society, nor do they have any understanding of their social obligations. Unless the desire to do service is earnest and the skill to do service is cultivated, students will remain a burden on the community, behaving as parasites and exploiters. A generous heart helps spread peace and joy. Little knowledge narrows the mind and limits one's concern for others. It bloats the ego and feeds selfishness. It makes man forget the delight derivable from virtue. Such students are unable to develop the prosperity of the nation or the progress of society. The thick veil of egoism blinds their sight and renders them callous to their own dignity and destiny. Students should try their best to realise their heritage. A mind free from either extreme attachment or detachment, a speech uncontaminated by falsehood and a body unpolluted by sin---these are what every student must strive to possess. Teachers must be vigilant to help and encourage them, and to avoid any trace of dishonesty in their actions and statements. Gurus must practise what they preach. Selfishness, envy and egoistic pride are the three tendencies and attitudes that should not take root in tender hearts. Therefore prompt the children in your care to engage themselves in acts of service to others. What a shame it is for man to behave selfishly, while his life itself depends on the unselfish behaviour of the rest of creation. Whatever information, instruction or inspiration man has gained, or whatever wealth, riches or material possessions he has earned, he should share them with others in an unselfish manner. This is his primary duty. Teachers must be on the watch for chances to instil this ideal in the hearts of their pupils. India has no shortage of rich persons, nor a shortage of great philosophers, academicians and scholars. In spite of this the land has no peace and the people are afflicted by anxiety and fear. What is the reason? The chief reason is the greed for self-aggrandisement and the absence of virtues like service and renunciation. The rich, the great, the learned and even the monastic heads of religious sects are caught in the coils of selfishness, and are unable to manifest the Divine virtues latent in them. The hearts of the young pupils have to be filled by you with noble yearning, so that they may be shaped into strong and sturdy instruments for raising the India of the future to the glory which is her right. Gurus (teachers/preceptors) have to be examples which can inspire the pupils. They must practise what they preach. As the teacher, so the pupil. When the tap is turned, water flows down from the overhead tank. The quality of the tap water is the same as that of the water in the tank. When the heart of the Guru is full of goodness, selflessness, and love, the pupils will express these virtues in every act of theirs. Teachers should not form rival groups. There are, it is said, more than 5000 Bala Vikas Gurus in the land. If each one corrects and improves a hundred children, the nation would indeed be transformed. You must examine what exactly has been attained during the four years that have elapsed since the Bala Vikas came into being. This analytical study has to be made constantly. When the Guru cultivates a saathwic (pure) nature, students too will grow into embodiments of that nature. The Guru should be alert so that the weeds of hatred, envy and similar vices do not take root in her own heart. These weeds are rampant in the political field and they creep into other fields too. Teachers should not form rival groups---some proud of their achievements, some envious of the praise others earn---which engage themselves in recrimination. See others as your own brothers and sisters, for all are One when viewed as Aathman. Somehow, somewhere, at intervals, you may be confronted by wrong traits. But remember that you have entered the circle of Sathya Sai Bala Vikaas gurus. It may not be serious if these traits enslave teachers in others circles, but your mission is much more fundamental and the hope that you arouse, much more heartening. These traits will hamper and pollute your efforts. Be conscious of the sacred significance of the name, Guru, by which you are known. 'Gu' means 'darkness,' 'ru' means 'removal.' So the Guru has to illumine the intelligence of the child and remove the ignorance that is obstructing its full development. Diving deeper, we find that Guru also has another meaning. 'Gu' means, 'not limited by attributes' and 'ru' means, 'not affected by appearances.' That is to say, the Guru must be free from prejudice and must treat all pupils with equal love.

Remove the primeval ignorance Pour out all your love on the children around you and instruct them gladly and sincerely. This attitude alone can justify association with the Sathya Sai Bala Vikas. Of course Sai is not unaware that the Bala Vikas Gurus are now heartily engaged in their sacred task and are contributing their best to the progress of the movement. But just as a battery has to be charged occasionally, I am now pointing out certain defects and dangers that might tarnish. It is imperative that you should discover the right path and pursue it steadily with faith. Take, for example, the petromax lamp. It requires some quantity of kerosene and also a pumping now and then. A pin has to be used sometimes to clear obstructions. The kerosene is faith, the pin, love that urges you to do your duty, and pumping, the will that sustains you in your task. Besides these, the lamp needs a wick. The name of the Lord which is your constant inspiration, is the wick. Endeavour, in the light of the Aathmic Unity of all, to remove the primeval ignorance from yourselves and from your pupils.

A bad teacher can ruin thousands of lives Discuss and discover during this conference how far you have succeeded in this holy mission, and as a result of that discovery, lay down before yourselves the ways and means by which greater success can be achieved. Communicate your experience to others, and also your ideas on improving the curriculum, the method of teaching and the means of assessing the progress made.

I would advise you to pay special attention to the activities and methods by which you can contribute, through the Bala Vikas, to the blossoming of talents latent in the children, the expansion of prosperity of the nation and the security and welfare of society. A bad pupil causes harm only to himself, but a bad teacher can ruin thousands of lives. Be steady and stable in your efforts. A guide-post which changes direction with every gust of wind only adds confusion for the confounded traveller. You have also to cultivate prema and expand your desire to do seva.

More than all, fill your mind with God and transmit God to the children. Look forward to no remuneration or reward, except the joy on the faces of the children. Nowadays teachers are more attached to their salaries than to their duties. They are centred more on their own lives than on their sacred task. Give up the mad rush in pursuit of degrees. Pursue, rather, chances to serve others and to promote the prosperity of the nation. Indian culture has declined so far and so much because teachers, who are its guardians and promoters, are content merely to feed themselves and their families and to cultivate their own fame and fortune. The Vedhas tell us: Na karmanaa, (not by acts), na prajayaa (not by progeny), na dhanena (nor by riches), thyaagena ekena (only by renunciation) amrithathwam anasuh (can Immortal bliss be achieved). So renounce, renounce! Serve and give your knowledge, your delight and your love gladly to the children.

Serve thus the society and the people.
 The Sathya Sai Bala Vikas Gurus are doing this service wholeheartedly. I believe they will continue their efforts even more sincerely and gladly. The resolutions you will arrive at in this Conference should not be inscribed on paper only, but must be followed and practised in actual day-to-day teaching in the classes. I am sure each one of you is determined to do your best in the service of the children, the society and the precious heritage of Indian Culture.

Fourth All India Conference of Bala Vikas Gurus, Prashanthi Nilayam, 20-11-1979

Devotion and faith ensure the gift of knowledge of the Spirit---the great prize for the great adventure of birth, life and death. When the mind weds pravritthi (worldly activity), the progeny is bondage; when it weds nivritthi (spiritual renunciation), the progeny is freedom.

Sri Sathya Sai
 40. The holiest task
 WHETHER one is a renowned scholar with expert knowledge of the deeper levels of religious lore, or a monarch revelling in the brilliance of palatial luxury, or a hero of many battles, or a miserable victim of poverty---if one has no devotion to the Lord one does not deserve homage, honour or attention.

The physical body, the senses, the mind, the intellect---these are all to be considered as the clothes we wear. We are advised to control our senses but this can be done only when their true nature is analysed and known. When that is not known, various obstacles present themselves.

The body is known as dheha, which means 'that which is consumed by fire.' It is burnt on the pyre when life departs and consumed by the flames of desire when life persists. It burns on 'the pyre of anxiety and fear, even when alive! There is another word, shareera, meaning 'that which wastes away,' which also means body. While living, it is afflicted by wants and wishes which rob it of peace. When dead, it becomes dust. Starting its career as a ball of flesh, it soon appears as a tender charming baby and an active child; it transforms itself into a straight, strong, attractive youth and is reduced later to the pathetic shape of old age. Hence it is named shareera; and person, who lives in it, is known as shareeri.

It is our duty to keep the body in good trim

The body is a house taken on rent by man. We know how the owner of the house persecutes the tenant in order to compel him to vacate it when the rent is not paid, or when payment is delayed, or when the tenant does not maintain the house with care and when he damages it through negligence or sheer wantonness. Therefore it is our duty to keep the body in good trim and avoid the wrath of the owner. The owner will certainly appreciate a considerate, courteous and cooperative tenant. The tenant can win the owner's love and respect by means of his own goodness. This will help your faith and earnestness. Then do not get up suddenly and start moving about, resuming your avocations. Loosen the limbs, slowly, deliberately and gradually, before you enter upon your usual duties.

Do not get discouraged that you are not able to concentrate long from the very beginning. When you learn to ride a bicycle, you do not learn the art of balancing immediately. You push the cycle along to an open field and hop and skip, leaning now to one side and now to the other, and even fall with the cycle upon you on many an attempt before you are able to ride with skill and to never more worry about the balance. Then automatically you are able to make the necessary adjustments to correct the balance. After getting thus skilled you can ride through the narrow streets and lanes and do not need an open field. You can negotiate your vehicle through the most crowded thoroughfares. So, too, practice will equip you with a concentration that will sustain you in the densest of surroundings and the most difficult situations.

The most effective form of meditation

As regards the technique of dhyaana (meditation), different teachers and trainers give different forms of advice. But I shall give you now the most universal and the most effective form. This is the very first step in spiritual discipline. Set aside for this at first a few minutes everyday and later go on extending the time as and when you feel the bliss that you shall get. Let it be in the hours before dawn. This is preferable, because the body is refreshed after sleep and the peregrinations of daytime will not yet have impinged on you.

Have a lamp or a candle with an open flame, steady and straight, before you. Sit in the padhmaasana (lotus posture) or any other comfortable posture in front of the candle. Look on the flame steadily for some time and, closing your eyes, try to feel the flame inside you, between your eyebrows. Let it slide down into the lotus of your heart, illumining the path. When it enters the heart, imagine that the petals of the lotus open out one by one, bathing every thought, feeling and emotion in the Light, and so removing darkness from them. There is no space for darkness to hide. The light of the flame becomes wider and brighter. Let it pervade your limbs. Now those limbs can never more deal in dark, suspicious and wicked activities; they have become instruments of light and love. As the light reaches up to the tongue, falsehood vanishes from it.

Let it rise up to the eyes and the ears and destroy all the dark desires that infest them, leading you to perverse sights and puerile conversation.

Visualise God in the all-pervasive Light

Let your head be surcharged with light and all wicked thoughts flee therefrom. Imagine that the light is in you more and more intensely. Let it shine all around you and let it spread from you, in ever widening circles, taking in your loved ones, your kith and kin, your friends and companions, your enemies and rivals, strangers, all living beings, the entire world.

Since the light illumines all the senses everyday, so deeply and so systematically, a time will soon come when you can no more relish dark and evil sights, yearn for dark and sinister tales, crave for base, harmful, deadening toxic food and drink, handle dirty demeaning things, approach places of ill-fame and injury, or frame evil designs against anyone at any time. Stay on in that thrill of witnessing the light everywhere. If you are adoring

God in any form now, try to visualise that form in the all-pervasive Light. For Light is God; God is Light.

Practise this meditation as I have advised regularly, everyday. At other times repeat the Name of God (any Name fragrant with any of His many Majesties), always taking care to be conscious of His Might, Mercy and Munificence.

Advanced Meditation on Soham

Resolve on this holy Shivaraathri to visualise the Shiva who is the Inner Power of all. With each breath you are averring, 'Soham.' (I am He). Not only you, every being avers it. It is a fact which you have ignored so long. Believe it now. When you watch your breath and meditate on that Grand Truth, slowly the 'I' and the 'He' will merge, Soham will become transformed into Om, the Primal Sound (Pranava) which the Vedhas proclaim as the symbol of the Niraakaara Parabrahman (Formless Supreme Reality). That Om is the Swaswaruupa (own natural state)--- the Reality behind all this 'relative un-reality.'

This is the genuine saadhana, the final lap in the progress of the seeker. But there are many preliminary laps, each one of which requires much stamina and steadfastness. For example, I would advise you to dwell always on one Name of God, one personification of one of His innumerable Attributes of. Glory. 'Then there is the expansion of your love, the removal of hate and envy from your mental composition, seeing the God whom you adore in every other person as. intently as you see Him in yourself. Then you become the embodiment of love, peace and joy.

All India Bala Vikas Gurus Conference, 21-11-1979

When you say, Thath thwam asi (Thou art That), you must have the traits of That which you claim to be. You say, "that and this" are the same; then, reviling 'that' or revering 'that' is the same as reviling 'this' or revering 'this'.

Sri Sathya Sai

41. Meditation

To get at the core of God at His greatest, one must first get into the core of himself at his least, for no one can know God who has not known himself.

After seating oneself in a comfortable and stable posture, steadying the breath, prathyaahaara (withdrawing of the senses from the sense objects) and anga nyasa (purification of all the organs of the body) is to be done. Light is the greatest purifier, for it dispels all darkness. Light is made to traverse throughout the body, purifying all the limbs and senses, and is installed in the lotus of the heart in which is to be enshrined the bhaavachithra (mental thought picture) of the Form of the Lord for the purpose of dharana (concentration) which would lead to dhyaana (meditation) and ultimately to Samaadhi (the state of super conscious bliss).

First, when you sit for meditation, recite a few shlokas on the Glory of God so that the agitated mind may be calmed. Then gradually, while doing japam, draw before the mind's eye the Form which that Name represents. When your mind wanders away from the recital of the Name, lead it onto the picture of the Form. When it wanders from the form, lead it onto the Name. Let it dwell either on that sweetness or this. Treated thus it can be easily tamed. The imaginary picture you have drawn will get transmuted into the bhaava chithra (thought visualisation), dear to the heart and fixed in the memory. Gradually it will become the saakshaathkaara chithra (Vision of the actual Form) when the Lord assumes that Form in order to fulfil your desire. This saadhana is called japa sahitha dhyaana (meditation-cum-recitation of Name), and I advise you all to take it up, for it is best form of dhyaana for beginners.

Body is a temple where God is installed

Within a few days you will fall in line and you will taste the joy of concentration. After about ten or fifteen minutes of this dhyaana in the initial stages, and longer after some time, have some manana (contemplation) on the shaanthi (peace) and the sowkhya (happiness) you had during the dhyaana (meditation).

The human body has been secured as a reward for many lives of meritorious activity. Being valued as a boat which can help us cross the ocean of samsaara (constant change), it has to be tended with grateful reverence. The Bhagavathgeetha calls the body 'kshethra,' which means, a field. One can sow holiness or sin, and gather a harvest commensurate with the particular quality.

Choose the crop you need before you sow the seed. Kshethra also means 'the entire earth.'

Another significant meaning of the word is 'a holy place.' We say, "Kaashi-kshethra," "Pravagakshethra," etc., to indicate that those places are sacred. The body is also a kshethra since it is a temple wherein God is installed and worshipped through thoughts, words and deeds. The temple has to be cleansed and kept healthy and pure.

Use every sense organ within its limits

Purity is to be preserved and promoted not by multiple baths or by avoiding contact with others condemned as 'untouchables.' You cannot be pure by the observance of the superficial taboo, 'Don't touch.' The body can be clean if washed with water; speech can be cleansed if it is saturated in truth; life can be purified if it is sanctified by thapas (religious austerity), and the intellect can be cleared of blemish through inaana (spiritual wisdom). Above all, the conviction that you are not the body but only a resident of the body, has to grow in you. If you identify yourselves with the body you carry about with you, you are inviting sorrow and suffering to overwhelm you, instead of the joy and peace which are awaiting to bless you.

Now about the indhriyaas (senses). They are known as maathras, which means 'measures,' for each sense has the capacity to cognise a certain measure of experience, A dish of dhal (lentils) must have some salt to make it tasty. The tongue tastes it and pronounces judgment whether the quantity of salt is more or less or just right. "This face is pretty but the nose is a little awry," pronounces the eye. "This song is sweet, but that one was atrocious," declares the ear. Maathra also means 'limit.'

Every sense organ has to be used with the consciousness of the limit inherent in it. Beyond the limit it becomes misuse, sacrilege of a God given instrument. For example, the nose is to be used legitimately to help in breathing and for the selective enjoyment of fragrance, but many stuff it with snuff and degrade its real purpose. The tongue is polluted by using it to eat raajasik and thaamasik (passion-rousing and inactivity-inducing) food and to swallow intoxicants which demean man. All sense organs are thus spoiled by man through improper, unauthorised or illegitimate use. The consequences for man are mental distress and physical disease.

The body is an inert composite of matter. But it grows, it gets weak and it declines, all on account of a consciousness that operates from within. Otherwise an inert heap of matter can undergo changes only by addition or subtraction through external agencies.

Gurus must meditate at least once a day Next, the mind. Mananam manah---"The mind is that which remembers, recollects and reflects." This mental activity results in the formulation of resolutions or in their dissolution--- sankalpa or vikalpa. The mind has, as warp and woof, assertion and negation, do's and don'ts, sankalpa and vikalpa. It has no existence apart from these. It is ever engaged in them until sleep stops its activity. Sometimes when the resolution or the determination behind the resolution becomes too strong, the mind overleaps its limits and man is rendered insane.

In order to calm the mind and keep it on an even keel, dhyana is prescribed as a saadhana.

Dhyana is the process by which the positive and negative aspects of the mind are regulated out of existence. Man enjoys unlimited bliss when the stage of nirvikalpa samaadhi (hightest stage of superconscious state of bliss) is reached. A taste of this is offered to man during his deep, dreamless sleep, when no wish or want, no desire or denial can disturb him. How much more satisfying should be the Bliss when we attain the nirvikalpa stage through dhyana! The Aanandha (bliss) that fills us then is characterised as bhaavaatheetham, thriguna rahitham---

"beyond the range of imagination, without any trace of the three types of attributes."

You, who have dedicated yourselves as Gurus to lead the children into light, must practise the discipline of dhyana at least one session a day in order to earn this bliss and equanimity. Those who have earned the gift of aanandha alone, can confer aanandha on others. How can a mendicant support another mendicant? No beggar can make another beggar rich. A person rich in aanandha can share aanandha with those around him. Therefore your duty as Gurus is firstly to earn and secondly to offer aanandha. A life of saadhana is a must to every Guru.

The role of Guru is a blessing of God

There are three groups of saadhanas which you have to take up--- personal, social and universal (vyakthi samaaja and vishwa). A single flower cannot constitute a garland, nor a single tree a forest, nor a single individual a society. The individual's spiritual success, his beneficient nature and his virtues, when pooled with those of many others, become the wealth of society, the common property of all. Each one has to revere and serve all. The Divine in each is pooled into the concept of the Infinite Divine.

The Guru should not give room to conceit in his heart. As the indispensable teacher of innocent, illiterate and half-blind children, the Guru should not occupy a chair of authority. Egoism is the throne which is proudly appropriated by authority. Be humble before the children and renounce the tone of power. This is the saadhana for you. Revere the role of a Guru as a blessing of God.

This attitude alone can ensure the success of the journey for the individual, the society and the world.
Calamities happen when buddhi is not alert Be aware of the transitoriness and the inter-relationship of the body, the senses and the mind.
What of the buddhi (intellect)? It is the source of man's decision-making capacity, and is known as the anthah-karana (inner consciousness). It reduces confusion, calms conflict and determines doubt. When we say, my inner voice has resolved thus, it is buddhi that is referred to. Buddhi is also referred to as the antharaathman (inner self). On the lowest plane of existence is the body, the physical sheath. On a higher plane is the sense complex---the five senses of perception and the five of action. The mind is on a still higher plane and the buddhi on an even higher one so that it is nearest to the core, the Aathman.
When a chauffeur is sought for, the owner of the car will select a person who is an expert in the art of driving, a man of character and a person who will be obedient to his employer. In all respects he must be a good and useful employee. When the chauffeur of the material car is expected to be so skilled and virtuous, how much more so must the buddhi, the chauffeur of the Aathman, be! Buddhi has no right to give a ride to anyone without the knowledge and permission of the Aathman.
Buddhi should subject to scrutiny all the wishes of the mind. It is only when buddhi is lit by the splendour of the Aathman that it can recommend the course of action to the senses, through the mind. Calamities happen only when the buddhi is not alert or is circumvented by the mind. Let buddhi take all the time it needs to sort out the pros and cons. Haste makes waste; waste results in worry; so do not be in a hurry.
Haste leads to confusions and blunders which cause disappointment and anger. Anger has to be overcome by guiding the mind on to peace and equanimity, "Shaanthih! Shaanthih! Shaanthih!" --that manthra (sacred peace chant) will quieten the waves of anger.
Not doing one's best is treason to oneself Man can have no fear when he negates his objective composition, declaring, "I am not the body, the sense, the mind or the intellect." There is no benefit if a man flees to the forest to escape attachment to the non-real. Renunciation can be cultivated without such an extreme measure.

Doubts, too, will haunt a person until he cognises the Truth. When doubt enters through the front door, faith departs through the back one! Doubt comes upon people like a heart attack; it overwhelms a man all of a sudden. The Geetha says, "Samshayaathmaa Vinashyathi" (the doubter is destroyed). So Gurus must enter upon their task with full faith.
The ideals of the Bala Vikas (child development) movement are the highest. The task of fulfilling them is the holiest of tasks. Knowing this and yet not doing one's best, is indeed treason to oneself. Mere talk cannot go far. Man is concerned with the Moon that is hundreds of thousands of miles away, but he is not concerned with his nearest neighbour. Do not instruct or instil in children magnificent ideas and colossal thoughts. Teach them small, practical ideas and simple modes of behaviour through your own example and loving exposition.
Only the teacher of teachers can direct the Bala Vikas Gurus. That is to say, only he who has mastered the process and problems, the significance and secrets of education, can so direct. He must be able to correct the Gurus and convince them. It might happen that State Presidents may not all have these abilities, though their abilities might well be great in other aspects of organisation. They might have specialised in other fields of service. So my suggestion is that the State President should not be related in any way with the Bala Vikas. He has to organise, supervise and give guidance to the Bhajana Mandali, the Seva Samithi, the Seva Dhal and other service units. The Bala Vikas Gurus will benefit more through the very apex of the organisation.
Gurus should not indulge in jealousy Women in charge of the Bala Vikas are easily moved by excitement or dejection, so it is better they do not immediately carry their problems to the State President; by the time they communicate with the central authority, the emotion would have cooled down. They can be directed more firmly by the centre and they will follow the directions more willingly, if they emanate from the centre. So they have, hereafter, to write to "The Convenor, Bala Vikas Gurus, Prashaanthi Nilayam," for advice, direction and redress, and send a copy of the letter to Indulal Shah, Secretary, World Council. I shall look into all these letters myself.

Of course our Bala Vikas Gurus should not indulge in jealousy or fault-finding. They can undertake the task of teaching only after they rid themselves of such traits. If Gurus talk ill of other Gurus and promote misunderstanding and factionalism, the children can never improve. So resolve now to adhere to the right path. If two Gurus quarrel or become unfriendly, both will be removed. No inquiry is necessary; we condemn both for having been involved. One poisonous insect can destroy an entire crop. Since we have not been very strict all these years, we find the number of Bala Vikas pupils is very low even with such a large number of Gurus. Teach children equal validity of all Faiths. Each Guru must serve at least a hundred pupils in one year, only then can we have at least a hundred thousand or more getting the benefit. There are nine crores and twenty-six thousand children in our country, boys and girls, aged below ten. Those below sixteen are twenty-two crores and six hundred thousand in number. At the rate at which we are training the children, when can we teach the crores? The present tortoise speed will not help. The aspirations and ambitions of youth are being inflamed at great speed, and you have to canalise them at equal speed. Only then can a balance be secured. The rains fall profusely; the water seeps in and is stored underground. But man pumps the underground water faster and in greater quantity than it is collected below the soil, and so drought intervenes. Therefore go fast, but be steady and sure about your work. Another point: You have to teach the equal validity of all faiths. Teach them through quotations from the Bible, the ideals of Christianity. So, too, use the sacred texts of Zoroastrianism, Buddhism, Islam, etc., to acquaint them with the ideals held aloft by those faiths. Also tell them the stories contained in the scriptures of all religions. Do not belittle any one religion or give predominance to another. There was a suggestion that children must be taught the entire Geetha. That is a mistaken view. Of course if they desire to do so through their own ardour and enthusiasm, do not stand in their way. But what we have to do is to place before them in sweet, simple style, the teachings of all faiths. The Sai religion is the harmonious blending, through love, of all religions. Though some followers of other faiths feel that the Sai religion is contrary to theirs, we should not entertain similar feelings. Ours is the totality, the Sun. So we should not limit or restrict our vision. Lead the children along the joyous path of truth. Let your faces ever shower smiles, springing from the bliss you earn from seeing the happy faces of children. Do not fall into the traps of anger, jealousy and pride. You can avoid this through steady and sincere attention to the task you have undertaken. May the children you serve become heroes in the revival of the ancient glory of their motherland. All India Bala Vikaas Gurus Conference, 21-11-1979 All good things have to be done the hard way. Ease and elevation cannot go together. Sri Sathya Sai 42. The Kingdom STUDENTS, Embodiments of the Divine Aathman and supporters and promoters of education! This Kaliyuga offers more facilities for liberation than any previous one, for education is much more widespread now. There are educational institutions in the farthest corners of every land, but it is a pity that peace of mind has become very rare. Why has peace remained out of reach in spite of the plethora of gadgets and contrivances that offer man comfort and pleasure? The fault lies in human conduct, which runs along evil lines. When man thinks, speaks and acts along virtuous lines, his conscience will be clean and he will have inner peace. Knowledge is power, it is said; but virtue is peace. The world reveres, even today, great men and women who have lived exemplary lives of virtue. Jesus, Muhammad, Zoroaster, Buddha, Shankaraachaarya, Madhavaachaarya, Raamanujaa-chaarya and others were able to command the loyalty and adoration of people solely on account of the purity of their conduct and actions. They have become immortal residents in the heart of mankind. Scholarship cannot confer this high historic ascendancy. Mastery of books may help you to expound or exhibit dialectical skill, but what really is the width and depth of your experience? And just examine how conceited you have become! Man must saturate his daily life in truthful speech, virtuous acts and holy thoughts. Never pollute your speech with falsehood Education must equip you with a discrimination sharp enough to discover these virtues. You must know what truth is and develop love and loyalty to it. And remember, acts of virtue grow out of overcoming of selfish desire or thyaaga (selfless sacrifice). You must keep high ideals before you and be prepared to sacrifice even your lives to achieve them. Never pollute your speech with falsehood; never poison your thoughts with hatred and greed; never degrade your body with violence in any form.

 It is tragic that not even a small fraction of the student community values these ideals and endeavours to realise them. We have in this country plenty of scientists, scholars, spiritual teachers and seasoned politicians. But of what avail? They work at cross-purposes, each one unconcerned with the rest. One scientist is the rival of another; one scholar is at logger-heads with another expert in the same field. And of politicians, the less said the better. When this vice of disunity rules, peace and prosperity can never be established in the country in spite of all the progress in technology, scholarship and spiritual exposition. They can be developed only when mutual cooperation, friendly feelings, love and compassion grow in man's heart. The world can shine fresh and fair, green and grand with festoons and flags on every doorstep, only when these qualities are fostered by man.
 Mainspring of all faults of man is egoism Today there is a great need for every one to dwell upon the axioms that Dharmaraaja, the eldest of the Paandava brothers, kept before himself. When Krishna asked him one day where his brothers were, he replied, "Some of them are in Hashtinaapura city and the others in the forest." Krishna was visibly surprised, He said, "Dharmaraaja! What has happened to your brains? All of you, the five brothers, are here in the forest as you know. None is in the city of Hashtinaapura!" Dharmaraaja replied, "Pardon me, Lord! We are 105 brothers in all." Krishna pretended that the statement was wrong. He recounted the names of the five and queried the reason why he added a hundred more. "My father's sons are five; his brother, the blind Dhritharaashtra has a hundred sons. When we fight with them, we are five and they hundred. But when we don't, we are a hundred and five."
 Thus when hatred and greed end in fighting, brotherhood is broken and hearts drift apart. Today this fractionalisation is evident in every field, including even our samithis (organisational units)!
 As a natural result, anger, envy, faction and friction are fast increasing.

 This is the reason why students have to uproot these evil tendencies from their minds. The mainspring of all these faults is egoism, the belief that the little self has to be satisfied at all costs. I derive much aanandha watching wild animals in their own habitat. Their movements, their relations with others of their kind and their free uninhibited lives are very attractive to behold. They do not bewail at the health and happiness of other animals. They do not grieve, lamenting their misfortune, comparing their fate with that of other denizens of the forest. They do not clamour for fame. They do not plan and prepare to earn positions of power and authority over other animals. They are not eager to accumulate possessions that are superfluous. When we consider these traits, we are led to conclude that they are leading lives of a higher grade than man.
 Greed is the seed-bed of grief Man has the extra qualifications of education, moral sense, and the capacity to judge and discriminate. But he is still caught in the coils of greed, and greed is the seed-bed of grief.
 Education today promotes greed instead of paralysing it. The aim is to earn more monetary income. So the struggle is directed to the acquisition of degrees which bring higher salaries. The learned man is anxious to exploit society, to pilfer from society by means fair or foul. He is not eager to give to society, to benefit society. He is concerned with what he can get from society, not with what he can give to it.
 Boys from the villages are ungrateful to their parents who have bartered their own wealth and comfort to give them an education. As soon as they secure a degree (which is at best a convenient beggar's bowl), they flee to the cities and accept a job there for a pittance. They settle in the cities, neglecting their parents and treating their hereditary professions with contempt. But their lives in cities are not any smoother; they are led into wasteful and damaging habits until they pine for peace and joy. Instead they should remain in the villages where they first saw the light of day and dedicate the skills they have acquired to the service of its inhabitants. This is their real task.
 They are weaklings who revel in imitation I know that is very difficult for students to overcome the banal influence of society and of the elders; they do not come across inspiring examples to follow. But old students of the Sathya Sai

Colleges must enter the world fully equipped with courage, compassion and inner peace and render selfless service to the people. Be vigilant always that you do not deviate from the ideals marked out by Me. Participate in all activities, armed with humility, a sense of honour and the skills needed to triumph. Distinguish yourselves in the moral, ethical, spiritual and material fields. Do not extinguish yourselves as soon as you proceed out of the Brindhaavan campus. So long as you are within the area, your style of dress and your manners, your character and conduct are different from what they become when you pass out. This relapse into the old baser levels, reveals a fundamental flaw in character. Such persons can be written off, for they are of no help to anyone. Instead they are a burden on society. They are weaklings who revel in imitation.

Heroes are those who rely on their eyes and ears and value their own national heritage.

You have resided in Brindhaavan for five, seven or nine years, and experienced maternal love more intense than what a thousand mothers can offer you. If you go out of Brindhaavan and adopt the behaviour patterns and life-styles considered fashionable by the outside world, how can you be considered an 'old student' of this college? "He who chops the nose of his mother, can pluck the nose of his aunt as a flower from its stalk," says the proverb. When you commit treason against God so freely, how can you be expected to honour human rules of conduct? I desire that, at least from now, you steadily develop noble thoughts, holy feelings and selfless actions, and maintain the fair name of your college.

Whoever hurts the society is a traitor. Students occupy the role of the heart in the physiology of the social organisation. Whoever hurts the society in which he dwells or brings disrepute to it, is a traitor.

Whichever position you occupy and wherever you reside, you must draw on yourself the admiration of others by your humility, discipline and manners, and by the simplicity of your dress and sweet speech. If you parade your transformation by the style of your tie and pants, by your long hair and moustache, how can you claim to be an old student of a Sathya Sai College? Your dress itself will proclaim that you are not. Prove that you are true heroes, true servants of the poor and the distressed and recipients of true education.

Of course I am warning you against falling into wrong ways of living. One day Pandith Madhan

Mohan Maalaviya shaved off his thick overhanging moustache and, with a clean face, went to an old friend and shocked him into the question, "Sir, why this transformation today?" The reply was, "I cultivated the impressive moustache out of pride that I was a man, but I realised that I could not relieve the misery of a single fellow-being. So I felt I could not justify the moustache any longer." The manifestation of manliness comes about by involving ourselves in social service and reducing the pain and poverty of human beings like ourselves. Allow yourselves to be judged not by your dress or the growth of beard, but by your motives and actions and your progress along the path of practising the ideals implanted in you by Sai.

Be vigilant that you do not slide into wrong. Do not seek to secure jobs in order to earn a high income. Wherever you are, be vigilant that you do not slide into wrong. Money comes and goes; morality comes and grows! Amassing money is easy; no one is to be appreciated for that. It can be accumulated through cruel or unjust means, through falsehood and blackmail. Only beggars are prompted by the urge, to gather riches. Study and earn knowledge in order to rescue the world from decadence, to develop peace and joy throughout all levels of society and to add your mite to the prosperity of the state. The members of the kingdom of Sathya Sai must follow those ideals and spread them throughout the world So, as you claim to belong to the Kingdom of Sathya Sai, you have the special task of propagating the ideals of Sai by your precept and example. Direct your lives as citizens of the Kingdom of Sathya Sai Let the Name be your guide and your goal. Thyaagaraaja lived up to his name. When the ruler offered him gifts of precious gemstones, houses and land, he spurned them, declaring, "My heart is laid at the Feet of Raama. You cannot secure it in exchange for this trash." Raamaraajya has become a word charged with sanctity because Raama's Kingdom was the home of righteousness, justice and peace. You have a great responsibility because you have named your association the 'Kingdom of Sathya Sai.' Some old students of the college are worried because when they come to Brindhaavan later I do not speak to them or cast even a glance at them. The reason is they are not even identifiable as students who were in this college for five or seven years. Good thoughts, words and deeds have not taken root in them. Your action produces the reaction. Sai only reflects your mind. He has no prejudice or preference. He is a mirror wherein you can see yourselves as you really are. In order to correct their mistakes and remove your faults, I have sometimes to use harsh words; but you may rest assured that My sole aim is to turn you to better ways. I have no anger in Me. It is the inner compassion which takes the outer form of anger. I have caused these colleges and hostels to be constructed and lakhs of rupees to be spent every year in the hope that at least a few among the students who join them will follow the ideals I set before them.

 Listen to that call and let it reverberate in your hearts every moment of your lives.
 Annual Day of Kingdom of Sathya Sai Prashanthi Nilayam, 22-11-1979

Nivriti (detachment) confers fearlessness, even while you accept a little of it. It gives strength and courage, for, it is desire that weakens man and makes him cringe before those in authority and with influence. Detachment endows you with self-respect, and the capacity to stand up to slander and calumny.

Sri Sathya Sai

43. The task will triumph

When the Dharma of the Age is laid aside, To establish it anew through loving means;
 When the world is polluted by conflict and confusion,
 To restore the path of virtue and peace;
 When good men caught in cruel coils wail,
 To save them from pain and shame;
 When sacred texts are not grasped aright,
 To proclaim the message they teach mankind;
 To relieve the earth of the burden of vice,
 To fulfil the promise made in Thretha Age,

Achyutha has incarnated on this earth, Vaasudheva, Shrihari, has come into the world.

Baba

IN every human heart there resides a gnawing desire to achieve unwavering and lasting aanandha. Day and night, throughout his life, man is endeavouring without a moment's rest to attain this stage. And yet he finds it beyond his reach.
 What is the reason? The root cause of his failure is his identification of himself with his body and senses, and his belief that physical and sensual pleasure can give him the aanandha which will appease his hunger. Man is not aware that he is the aanandha he seeks. The Upanishaths clear all doubts on this point. They assert: "Flour is rendered sweet by jaggery." Flour, be it of rice or wheat or gram, is not inherently sweet, but when jaggery or sugar is mixed in it, the sweetness permeates all of it. The lesson the Upanishaths convey is: The created Cosmos is the flour and the Divine Principle is the sugar. As a consequence, nature charms us and is attractive. Wherever we hear melody, or see harmony, or experience the sublime, it is Divinity that impinges on us and not nature.

 Authentic means of acquiring knowledge God is described as Aprameya (not measurable). It means that God cannot be measured like any limited phenomenon. Only the Vedhas can give a satisfying glimpse of the Glory. To indicate this, God is designated as Vedhavith (known through the Vedhas).
 There are three authentic means of acquiring knowledge as mentioned in the sacred texts. They are (i) Prathyaksha (direct perception) (ii) Anumaana (inference), and (iii) Shabdha (authoritative voice). When milk becomes curd after being treated with yeast, one can see it happening. The phenomenon is therefore accepted as true, as proved by prathyaksha. When clouds of smoke rise from mountain range, one infers that the forest is on fire. When someone who has been at Prashanthi Nilayam describes the place to one who has not, the latter, too, is able to picture for himself the Nilayam and its environs. This is an example of 'authoritative voice' being a means of knowledge.
Shabdha becomes authoritative and acceptable when it emanates from experience and from honest communication of that experience.
 Fixed and fundamental attributes of, God Among the many thousands sitting in this auditorium, there is one who has come from America, a member of Sathya Sai Council for America. His name is Dick Book.
 No one, let us say, has seen him so far. Even if he is described as tall or short, old or young, or as having specific physical characteristics people will find it difficult to identify him and spot him. But when I pronounce the sound, "Dick Book," he will stand up for all to see. God, too, does not easily respond with His Presence when you describe Him and glorify Him.
 You had no name when you were born, but have since been responding whenever you are called by a 'given' name. Similarly, God is Nameless, but He responds when His Name, any one of the many, is pronounced by the seeker. The shabdha (verbal testimony), as a means of proof, has two aspects---the thatastha

(apparent features) and the swaruupa (fundamental nature)---to the permanent unchanging features.

To identify a house which a visitor is searching for we tell him, "That one on which the crow is sitting," and he understands. This is a temporary feature of the house. God, the Eternal Absolute, is pictured, praised and adored as temporarily apparent and is adored in limited regions as Raama, Krishna, Vishnu, Ishwara, etc. These are not basic, fundamental expressions of His Nature. These are only Forms assumed for certain vital purposes like conferring peace on earth, reestablishing the norms of justice and strengthening the ideal of faith in the Supreme.

The fixed and fundamental Attributes are Sathyam, Inaanam, Anantham (Truth, Knowledge, infinite) This is the swaruupa (Natural state) of Brahman. These attributes do not change with time, space and the nature of the observer. They penetrate time, space and matter and we perceive them in five aspects; asthi, bhaathi, priyam, naama and ruupa. Three of these---asthi

(existence), bhaathi (consciousness) and priyam (bliss) are basic, while the other two---naama

(name) and ruupa (form), are transitional and superficial. It is indisputable that all these features need a Creator who is Immanent, who is their Author and Contributor.

Nature moves but the Divine does not

The Sun, the Stars, the Moon, the oceans, the earth---all these point to the maker whom we have to accept. There are two causes which together produce any thing: the shaper and the substance.

This silver cup must have had a smith who shaped it and silver which he shaped. When you go deep into this process of creation, you will realise that both causes merge into One, the Embodiment of Being, Awareness and Bliss. Since that One is all this, recognising It in all this confers full Bliss.

Every man yearns for only two boons escape from sorrow and attainment of joy. When both are achieved, man is truly free; he has gained mukthi (liberation). Not knowing the genuine implications of the stage of mukthi, persons who pride themselves as atheists or rationalists declare that they are not interested in it. Mukthi is the fulfilment of these two universal cravings of man. Texts and arguments have led man astray and blinded him to Reality. Do we reach mukthi along the path of activity, or of inquiry, or of worship? The arguments shall only fog the issue. These paths merely cleanse the mind, clarify the intellect and purify the emotions.

If the Aathmic (divine) core of all things and beings is recognised, Aanandha will be ever-present and full. The Divine Principle is the reality, the base, the essence, the ocean on which the waves rise and fall. Discard the name and form (which rise and fall) and contemplate on the asthibhaathi- priya content in each cell and particle. Then you can immerse yourselves in Nithyaanandha (Eternal bliss). Aanandha is Omnipresent. One has only to realise its Universality.

Aathman is the bestower of highest bliss

Embodiments of Prema (Love)! Things that move must need have a stationary base. Nature moves but the Divine does not. Buses and cars speed along the road while the road itself lies still without movement. Pictures flit and fly along the screen in a cinema, but the screen does not flit or fly. The body grows or declines, the senses seek one pleasure after another and the mind skips from this thought to that only because the Aathman is Immovable and unmoved.

Now, by what trait can we recognise the Aathman? By bliss, which is Its very nature. This is the reason why It is described as Nithyaanandham (Eternal Bliss Absolute) Parama-sukhadham (bestower of highest bliss), kevalam (alone) inaanamoorthis (embodiment of pure wisdom), dhwandhwaa-theetham (beyond all dualities), gaganasadrisham (vast as sky), thatwamasyaadhilakshyam

(denoted by Vedhic axioms such as Thou are That), ekam (the One), nithyam (the eternal), vimalam (blemishless), achalam (unaffected), sarvadheeh (all-conscious), saakshi-bhootham (all seeing witness), bhaavatheetham (un-reachable even by the imagination), thrigunararitham (attributeless), etc.

Generally speaking, the materials in the world will be sought by some, neglected by others and disliked by still others. The reason lies in the mind, not in the matter. One's own likes and dislikes are moulded by one's own activities, thoughts and feelings. If your reaction is good, you will pronounce Me good. If your feelings are bad, I may appear bad. The transformation from one attitude to the other happens in you, not in Me. I am ever the same. Since a form has been assumed, wavering reactions are inevitable. They are human; they do not affect the Divine.

Envious mind will be ever engaged in wrong Changes in the nature of the reactions and the lines of approach are brought about by the whims of the moment, the turns and twists of desire and the pressure exercised by the environment, the region and the times. Last night you witnessed a play about Jesus enacted by the students. The disciple who was most loved, Judas by name, decided to work against the Master, yielding to the low temptation of a few pieces of silver. Greed for money is a demon that gets hold of the weak.
 When one is overcome by it, one loses all trace of discrimination and accepts with ease, wrongful ways of satisfying it.
 Since the uniquely powerful impact of Sathya Sai has become world-wide, many ignorant persons afflicted with envy and monetary greed are attempting to spin malicious tales to belittle and defame the culture of Bhaarith. The envious mind will be ever engaged in wrong. This has been so in every age when the Divine has come among mankind. But despite such tactics, the task will not falter, the Triumph will not be delayed.
 All the acts of Jesus were pure and holy You have to pay special attention to this truth; there exists no such person who can point out any kind of blemish in Sai. Individuals who can probe into the significance of the principle of prema (pure love) of which Sathya Sai is the embodiment, are, of course, very few. This principle is fully selfless, fully pure and fully holy. This principle, with Sathya Sai as its embodiment and exponent, is spreading from continent to continent. Envious persons watch the march of this transforming love and try to obstruct it with falsehood. Since the attention of seekers and aspirants is now being increasingly devoted to the heritage and culture of Bhaarith, attempts are made by many narrow and crooked minds to cast aspersions on them.
 The success of the task for which I have come will very soon reverberate throughout the world.
 The truth that all faiths are facets of the One and that all roads lead to the same Goal, is provoking to some persons. You witnessed in the play on Jesus how his emphasis on the basic truths of good and godly life was misinterpreted by even the leaders of religion, who sought to hide their own failings by slander and falsehood. They even plotted to inflict torture on Jesus. All the acts of Jesus were pure and holy, and filled with selfless love. One can have adoration for one's religion, but it should not be defiled by hatred towards other religions. Be engaged, rather, in tasting the sanctifying, sustaining stream of Divine love. That will confer lasting Aanandha.

Sai is the ever-effulgent Aathman In truth, this Kali era is the most beneficent of the four, for you have now amidst you the Eternal Embodiment of Aanandha in a form which you can approach, adore and learn from. You are singing with Me, conversing with Me and filling your eyes, ears and hearts with My utterances and activities. This is not a mere physical body composed of the five elements, nor this day My Birthday, though you may call it thus. This body might have a birthday, but I have no birth. You say I am fifty-four years old, but I have no age which can be counted. The Eternal, with neither entrance nor exit;
 The One who neither Was nor Is nor Will be;
 The Immortal Person free from birth and death That Ever-effulgent Aathman is Sai for ever.
 Adoration is rising on one side of Me like the Himaalayas; denigration is accumulating on the other side as another Himaalayan range. I am, however, unaffected by both. As Gokak said a few minutes ago, upon both these peaks I place My hands, showering My Blessings equally on the opposing responses. Where there is day there must also be night; but it is the same Sun that causes them both. Be equanimous yourselves. Endeavour to benefit most from the good fortune accessible to you.
 Engage yourselves in the spiritual discipline of seva, which is the most productive of good. Of all the methods of seva (service), to the long-neglected rural population is the best. Dedicate your skill and energies to the betterment of your brothers and sisters dwelling in the villages. Service is God. Why has God endowed man with a body, a mind and an intellect? Feel with the mind, plan with the intelligence and use the body to serve those who are in need of service. Offer that act of service to God; worship Him with that flower. Put into daily practice the ideals that Sathya Sai has been propagating, and make them known all over the world by standing forth as living examples of their greatness.
 Birthday Message, 23-11-1979 Modern Civilisation is based on competition in which the interests of the individual precede the interest of society. Therefore, fear haunts men wherever they turn---fear of poverty, fear of loss, fear of death and destruction of property.
 The mind urges the senses to seek and secure softness, sweetness, fragrance, melody and beauty, not in God whose heart is soft as butter, whose story is sweet as nectar, whose renown is fragrant as the jasmine, whose praise is melodious to the ear, whose Form is the embodiment of perfect beauty, but, in the shoddy contraptions of material things.

So, the mind has to die, so that it may be recast as an instrument for Liberation, through Fulfilment.

Sri Sathya Sai

44. The Truth

THERE is God everywhere and there is no second entity anywhere. God is the truth, the only truth. In every article or thing, God is, as the basis, as understanding and understandability, as the source of Divine light, as' Aathma. Know that All exists, has awareness and bliss because of the Aathma which All is. Truth is a word that is frequently used on platforms but the concept is still very hazy and often mistakenly interpreted. In reality, man is afraid of probing into his own truth, lest his pet opinions and attitudes be proved hollow and dangerous. As a result, his actions and thoughts pursue disturbing and discordant paths. What exactly is truth? Is it the description of a 'thing seen' as one has seen it, without exaggeration or under-statement? No. Or, the narration of an incident in the same word as one has heard it narrated? No. Truth elevates; it holds forth ideals; it inspires the individual and society. It is the Light that illumines Man's path to God. A life inspired by Truth will enable man to live as man---not degrade himself to the status of a lower species. From dawn to dusk, from the moment of wakefulness to the moment of sleep, if he devotes himself to his own deeds, is that a life inspired by the Truth? No. By his good thoughts translated into good words and manifested as good deeds, man must promote Truth in society and prove its usefulness. He is the image of God. He must be aware of the image of God that shines in society also.

People are fascinated by the false. The thought that arises in the mind, the word that sprouts from the tongue and the deed that engages the hand must all three be fully co-ordinated. Each one must be in conformity with the other two. They must be in unison with each other. If you have one plan in your mind and talk of a different one and execute something else, it is a false life, not a true one. The ancient texts condemn such a person as a Dhuraathma (evil person) and extol the person whose thought, Word and deed are all in line as a Mahaathma (greatest soul).

Nowadays, people are fascinated by the false and keep away from the true. They ignore the true and pursue the false. They are not eager to know the Truth, the eternal and the Absolute. Truth is the One Awareness, the One Divine Energy that activates every living being, nay, every particle of matter. The tiny seed of a banyan tree does not reveal to the human eye or to the microscope, the gigantic tree which it contains. The Divine Energy within it prompts it to expand and become the banyan. Every cell, every spot, every atom is Divine, full of vast destiny. The recognition of this Omnipresence of God is the mark of the theist. The atheist may proclaim that God is not, but, deep inside him one can find the awareness of the Omnipresence. That is his truth.

Now, about my Truth. It is impossible for anyone to discover and declare the truth that is Sathya

Sai. To ensure peace and prosperity is the task on which Sathya Sai has come amidst you.

"Lokaah samasthaah sukhino bhavanthu" (Let all the worlds be happy). All mankind have to be happy; all must rest; in peace; all must be gladly engaged in fulfilling their duties. I long to shower aanandha on all. It is not an easy achievement to recognise and identify Divinity.

Yet, when the time is ripe and the fortune is imminent, that is to say, pretty soon, even that can be won by you.

8-12-1979

Protect your mother-tongue and Motherland with all your energy. Make yourselves fit for this, by making the best use of the opportunities in the school. Progress as much as you can, without hesitation. Develop character as well as intelligence and health. The most reliable source of strength is in you, not in money, or kinsmen, or physical acumen, but, in yourself, the Aathman (divinity). Know it; delve into it; draw sustenance from it; see it in all; serve it in all.

Sri Sathya Sai

45. The way of Jesus

THERE are four types of persons---those who see only right everywhere, those who are less spiritual in their vision and so see right as right and wrong as wrong, those who shut their eyes to right and see only wrong and lastly, the worst of all, those who judge even the right to be wrong.

No one brings wealth when he is born or takes it with him when he dies. Whatever riches one has accumulated have to be freely shared with others. Flowers scatter fragrance; trees offer fruits in plenty. Instead of learning the lessons they teach, man pursues his own sense-cravings, and his urge for fame and authority over others. Contentment is the most precious wealth; greed brings misery in its train. Contentment alone can lead man to the goal of life viz., the attainment of Divinity.

A tender heart is more valuable than all material possessions. When moral and spiritual excellence is gained, the divinity in man becomes patent.

Vishwaamithra was a powerful king, proud of his might and the vastness of his kingdom. He wished to defeat the Sage Vasishtha but could not succeed. Thus he learnt the lesson that material, physical or mental powers are too weak to win over Divine Power. So, he entered upon spiritual saadhana (effort) to rid his mind of anger, greed and envy. As a result, he himself became a sage.

The Kaurava brothers, a hundred of them, were intoxicated by greed for more, though they had riches in plenty and kingdoms vast in area; so, they contended with their cousins, the Godfearing and God-led Paandava brothers, who were only five in number. In the end, the Kauravas destroyed themselves to the last man and the Paandavas were blessed with victory.

Every man in the world is a messenger of God

The brothers, Hiranyaksha and Hiranyakashipu, succeeded in securing as boons from God mastery over the elements but they misused this power and spread havoc over all the worlds.

Man has to acquire mastery over the foul urges in his own mind---lust, anger, hatred, jealousy.

Then only can he enjoy the Divine Peace that is his birth-right.

Every living being is on a pilgrimage---whether it is aware of it or not.

The Bhaagavatha Puraana (Story of Glory of Divinity), says that the destiny of all beings is to return to their origin. Lord Krishna has declared in the Geetha that all beings have emerged from Him and have to merge in Him. The Sun causes clouds in the sky raising water from the sea as vapour; the waters of the sea fall as rain, the rain water accumulates and flows as streams and rivers, until it merges with the source, the sea. It is faithful to its destiny; it confronts bravely all the hurdles and obstacles on the pilgrim path. Every man has come into this world as a Messenger of God.

Jesus announced himself as a Messenger of God. He spent many years in austerities so that he could shower compassion and love on all humanity. Later, he asked himself, "Am I just a messenger, or am I more closely related to God, a part of God with the Divine as my essence?"

Jesus spent twelve long years, wandering alone in deserts engaged in this inquiry. At the end of this period, he returned to the society of men and announced "I am the Son of God."

In Kali Age Judases have multiplied

At that time, the priests of the holy temples of Jerusalem had become corrupt and commercialised. They had deteriorated into proud and selfish men. Jesus condemned them and tried to root out the evil practises. For, all forms were in the eyes of Jesus, Divine Forms and he could not tolerate any action which belied this status. So, when asked by people who he was, he could reply, "I and my Father are One." Jesus tried to teach everyone the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

Tradition-minded and egoistic men considered Jesus a false prophet and they tried by every means to thwart his mission. Jesus, however, did not waver. Faced with opposition, he continued to be an example of living Truth, and to purify society. Many disciples, followed Jesus but throughout history, it has been the experience of Raama, Krishna, Jesus and Muhammad that disciples however close are seldom fully dedicated. Most are only part-time devotees. Jesus had 12 disciples, most of whom had faith in him and lived his teachings. But, Judas yielded to greed.

He betrayed his Master for a mere 30 coins. He could not find joy in life after this treachery. His mind gave him no peace. He had to seek refuge in suicide.

Betrayal by people who pretend to adore is happening since ages. Corrupt, greedy and selfish people spread falsehoods about their own Masters. We hear of a Judas, 2000 years ago. But in the Kali Age, people are obsessed with money and Judases have multiplied. They seek to amass paltry riches whereas good character, good conduct and knowledge of God are the three real treasures to be gathered. Land and buildings, silver and gold, dollars and other currencies are temporary and trivial. They are possessions only until life lasts. But those three treasures will stay on, sustain and strengthen you until you attain union with the Infinite.

The three real treasures to be gathered

Man has mastered astronomy; he knows all about the earth. He is conversant with all that is happening in America, Russia and England. But he does not know who he is, and so, all other knowledge does not make him wise. He is eager to collect information about everything else but he never asks the question "Who am I?" though he uses the expression 'I' and 'my' freely almost always. You are the farmer; the body is the field. Sow the seeds of goodness, you can get the harvest of happiness; sow the seeds of evil, you reap the harvest of grief. You are the cause of either of these. Do not blame others or impute partiality to God. Above all, do not rely on this impermanent objective world; it is full of sorrow and change; cultivate detachment, equanimity and self-control and love. This life is a temporary rest place. Develop knowledge about the higher levels of consciousness and the higher planes of existence. Knowledge leads to skill. From skill in using such knowledge, one acquires balance. You must recognise that this life is a stage in the long pilgrimage and that we are now at a hotel, a temporary resting place which has also a watchman. The mind is the watchman. So, do not feel permanently attached to the mind or the body. This 'negative' body has the 'positive' Divinity within it. When you become all-embracing infinite Love, the Divine will manifest in and through you. Try to be like Jesus. Jesus was a person whose only joy was in spreading Divine Love, offering Divine Love, receiving Divine Love and living on Divine Love. There are various theories about the birth date of Jesus based on the 'bright star that appeared at his birth.' It is visible once in 800 years, it is said. Some say he was born on the fifteenth day of September. But, he was born at 3-15 a.m. (early morning) on December 28, 1980 years ago. It was Sunday. The Star that appeared that day appears only once in 800 years. Its appearance had nothing to do with the birth of Jesus. There is no rule that, when Divine Energy or Divine Incarnation descends on Earth, a star has to appear. That is the opinion of devotees only. But, Jesus was himself a 'Star' of infinite value, spreading brilliance of infinite dimension. Why posit another less brilliant glow? Today is the Birth Day of Jesus, celebrated amidst December snow-falls with lights and Christmas Trees, and prayers. But it is useless to pray just one day and forget God, the rest of the year. That is an empty show; it does not emanate from the heart. We are true Christians only when we live according to the teachings of Christ and practise them in daily life. Even if we follow two teachings of his, that would be enough. Christ said, "All life is one, my dear Son! Be alike to every one." Be engaged in doing God's work. If we truly follow this, it would be enough to fulfil our destiny. When he was on the Cross and overcome with agony, an unseen Voice said from Heaven, "Death is the Dress of Life." The body is the dress which the Divine Spirit puts on. Therefore, we should not weep when the body is worn out or falls or is injured. Death is an event, that is the very nature of the body. Men seek the cause for death but no one seeks the Divine Source of Life. Be engaged during the brief span of life in glorifying God and in doing God's Work. God has incarnated in human form, in order to inspire man to follow higher ideals not only in India but foreign countries also. Men may have different languages and life styles but God is One and He is present everywhere. All religions speak of Him as Love and as attainable through love. Forms of Worshipping God differ, for they are shaped by time and place but love is the basic content of all the forms. The language of love is understood and spoken by all hearts. There is only one race really, and that is the race of mankind. We now consider petty distinctions of nationality, race, religion and language as vital and hold back love which must flow to every one from the heart. That was the life and message of Jesus. Nurture it in your hearts. Experience Jesus as your Messenger sent from God. Become what you truly are. Love alone can reveal the Divinity latent in all. Love is God. Live in Love. Love lives by giving and forgiving; Self lives by getting and forgetting. Love is selflessness; Selfishness is Lovelessness. Do not waste your life pursuing the narrow interests of the self. Love! Love! Become what you truly are---the embodiments of love. No matter how others treat you or what they think of you, do not worry. Follow Jesus Christ. Love for your own evolution and not for what others say. Do not imitate others. Cultivate your own life. You have your own heart, your own opinion, your ideas, your own will. Why then imitate? Imitation is human, they say; but creation is Divine. Follow your chosen path. Let your own experience of God be your guide and master. Do not go into the grave, weakly copying others. You won't find God if you search in the outside world. Your own heart shining with Love is God's Love. Follow the Master. Face the Devil.

Fight to the end and finish the game. You are God. The true you is God.

You are not one person but three---the one, you think you are, the one others think you are and the one you really are. You think of yourself as your body and its sense cravings, others think of you as a personality. You are truly infinite spirit Divine. You should constantly remind yourself,

"I am God" "I am God." "I am God." The day you see yourself as God, you become God.

If you think I am only human, you will be led astray. Do not allow your body and the sense to dictate your moves. Develop the inner vision. The body is the cart, the Spirit is the horse. Do not put the cart before the horse. Spiritual practice is the only means of acquiring mental peace. If all the cars in America are placed end to end, they would reach the moon; but there is no true happiness there, no peace of mind. Cultivate not riches, not comfort and luxuries, but Divine virtues. Then you become fit to receive God's Grace. Why trade permanent peace of mind for impermanent physical luxuries?

Speak sweetly; shed comfort with every glance of yours. Do not be slaves to your sensual desires. Prahlaadha told his father who had conquered the three worlds that he had failed to conquer lust and desire. You should conquer lust and vanquish anger. Exile from your mind greed, hate and jealousy. Dedicate your hand to the service of mankind. Jesus teaches infinite love and compassion. To resurrect love and compassion, you must kill jealousy and selfishness, purify your hearts. Earn the true mercy of Jesus. Follow the path shown by him and reach the position he holds.

From Discourse on 25-12-1979

Rules of behaviour must be observed by politicians, rulers, subjects, monks, who are leaders of the community and heads of monasteries, scholars and others, for they are exemplars and guides and their responsibilities are greater than ordinary persons.

Sri Sathya Sai

46. Be human

YOU can master all knowledge and win loud applause;

You can be hailed as a king and rule over the realm;

You can pile vast wealth, donate gold and land;

You can count all the stars that shine at night;

You can name without doubt each living thing on earth;

You can teach the eight-fold skill to all who aspire;

You can reach the distant moon and proudly walk thereon.

But you cannot be the master of the five senses in your body;

You cannot turn your face inward and still your wayward mind.

We consider a combination of body, mind, intellect and senses as a human. This is not correct.

Mind is something we possess; body is something which we carry about; the intellect, too, is ours and the senses are dealt with by us. We are not the body, mind, intellect or senses. They are ours; we possess them. They are manipulated by us, we are distinct from all these. The day we recognise this differentiation and live on that knowledge, that day from we become aware of our Reality and our Goal.

Education is the gaining of illumination

Is this body inert or conscious? Of course it grows, declines, acts and undergoes destruction, just as the sweepings of your home, if daily thrown into a heap at one spot, grow into a mound. So, too, when food is daily provided, the body grows, and when food is stopped, it declines. So the body is basically inert matter. The body is consumed by fire when life leaves it and it becomes a corpse. It is also consumed by the flames of worry, fear and anxiety every day of its existence, from the moment of awakening at dawn to the moment of sleep at night. The body is also called shareera, which means, that which undergoes destruction. It is also praised as a temple where God is installed. And the word kshethra, usually applied to holy spots, is also used to indicate the body. Therefore the body must be used to further Divine purposes and to demonstrate the Glow of the Divine that is installed therein.

The body is cleansed, by soap and water, but true cleanliness can be achieved only from within.

The cleansing of the body may keep physical illness away, but the a-shaanthi (disease) of the mind requires inner cleanliness. A perfume applied to the body might please the company around, but good thoughts and sweet conversation will please them more and for a longer time.

As soap is for the body, truth is for speech; both have a high cleansing effect. The mind has to be cleansed by proper education in the crucible of renunciation. The intellect has to be purified by Universal vision conferred by wisdom. Education does not merely mean the study of books, nor the capacity to write books.

Education is the gaining of illumination; it is the light that dispels ignorance and doubt. It scatters the fog of ego. It confers humility and discipline. The manas (mind) must also be subjected to the process of thapas (rigorous discipline). The highest discipline is to bring about a unity in one's thought, word and deed. Thapas does not mean escaping into the forest and meditating in the loneliness on God.

God is not an alien living in far-off lands

God is close to each, in the heart He shines;

Sin is not an act or fact in far-off lands

Sin is in your mind, polluting word and deed.

Each sense organ has a legitimate purpose

God and the devil, good and bad, are denizens of one's own heart.

Where God is, there the devil cannot be. It is like a game of 'musical chairs,' and only one person can occupy the chair. Seat

God for ever in the heart, after ridding it of other occupants. Let this inert body be activated by Divine consciousness. The secular curriculum that you master in this college is important so that you may be self-reliant. But this education cannot be the final goal; the Resident of the heart should be given due reverence and homage.

Next, the senses. They serve to provide awareness of sound, tactile feeling, form, taste and smell.

They should not be allowed to contribute to ill-health of the body and mind. Each of them has a legitimate purpose, a limited area of operation which should be respected. The tongue knows the measure of salt that can make a dish tasty. In the Upanishaths, the senses are called maathra (measures). Each one is a measure that can operate only upto a limit. The tongue has to speak softly and sweetly; the eye has to seek and see symmetry, harmony and beauty, the glow of Divine Ecstasy and the splendour of Divine Charm. The uncontrolled tongue indulges in four sins- lying, scandalising, vain gossip and wanton fault-finding. God resides in every one. The Lord has declared, "Maamaivaamsho jeevaloke jeevabhoothaah sanaathanah" (all living beings are a part of Me). They are all a part of His Sanaathana (Eternal) Self. So every one is an embodiment of the Divine.

Be engaged in developing the good in you

When any person is ill-treated or harmed, it is God who is the target of that sacrilege. We declare that Truth is God and in the same breath, adore falsehood. Resorting to falsehood is a demon that possesses and over-powers the weak. Indulging in unnecessary talk, talk for its own sake, is a morbid habit. It is also a waste of energy. It disperses company, for no one likes to listen to a bore. If he is tolerated for a minute, he will stick to you for days.

There are others who spread rumours and gossip and spoil your peace of mind by poisoning the springs of love. You must be engaged in developing the good in you, weeding out the bad and heightening your purity and holiness.

How can knowledge of the good and bad in others help you in this task? Talkative persons easily slip into scandal-mongering. Too much talk and a tongue addicted to scandal are twins; they work together and in unison. A poet addressed his tongue thus, "Q tongue, knower of taste, relisher of sweetness, always prefer the Truth and God." Even when speaking the truth, one should not inflame passion, diminish enthusiasm or inflict injury:

"Sathyam brooyaath, priyam brooyaath" (Speak the truth, speak pleasantly). "Na brooyath sathyam apriyam" (If unpleasant, do not speak the Truth). "Priyam cha na anritham brooyaath" (though it may be pleasant, do not speak falsehood).

Practise speech that does not offend

The Lord has said in the Geetha: "Anudhvega karam vaakyam sathyam priya hitham cha yath" (Speech that does not offend, that is truthful, pleasant and beneficial, has to be practised). Such speech sanctifies the tongue. It knows and respects the limits. The ear cannot tolerate a false or discordant note. Every one of the senses responds within its own limits of tolerance and protests when that limit is exceeded or disregarded. You must be vigilant that they are put to use with proper attention to those limits. When they stray from the path or overlap their boundaries, reason hides its head and makes you inhuman.

You can master all knowledge and win loud applause

The crowds that gather may praise and proclaim, "Ah, what a wonderful lecture he gave!"

You can be hailed as a king and rule over the realm You can pile vast wealth and donate gold and land.

But what is the benefit gained?

Karna gave away the earrings he wore and even sliced off his Divine suit of armour and gave it away in charity. Wherein lies the key to greatness? Whereto does renunciation lead? The question is, does it purify the heart? Does it help the Divinity within to manifest Itself?.

Three kinds of thapas man should practise

The manas (mind) is known as anthah-karana (inner sense organ).

The manas is always engaged in manana (recapturing, remembering, recalling, reflecting). As a result it receives and rejects wishes. Even when you are alone and silent, the mind may be on a spree---wishing, desiring, planning to do or not to do. And it keeps the tongue busy until sleep silences it. There are no standards which are kept in mind while looking, talking or acting.

Since these are done as soon as the thought arises or the Will commands, the power of discrimination becomes weak. One must try to stay a while in order to examine and judge. Develop the quality of fortitude, the strength not to yield to the opinions of others unless you find them to be right and the courage to bear criticism and face slander.

As regards thapas (penance), there are three kinds---the thapas of the mind, of the body and of the speech. Let me remind you that the thapas of the body involves a few disciplines, The first is the process by which you revere and adore elders, teachers and God, serve them and honour their commands, put those commands into practice and earn their Grace.

The second discipline is cleanliness, inner and outer. Outer cleanliness includes the cleanliness of the area surrounding you. The third is Brahmaachaarya. This does not mean merely desisting from marriage. It means becoming soaked in Holy Love for the Divine, through transparent sincerity, unselfish Will, pure conscious-ness and holy thoughts.

The true meaning of Brahmacharya

You all know that Hanumaan is described as the Eternal Brahmachari (bachelor). He was married to Sri Vathsala, yet he earned that description. How?

Brahmaachaari means 'He who moves in Brahman.' Hanumaan had no other thought than Raama (who is Brahman) and so was ever moving in Brahman, living in Brahman. Your thoughts, feelings, desires and activities must all move in Brahman (the Universal Absolute). That is to say, whatever is spoken, whatever is seen, must be congnised as Brahman. That is the real Brahmacharya stage, not merely observing certain disciplines to control the senses and the mind.

The next discipline is ahimsa (absence of violence). It does not mean merely not injuring a living being. You should not cause hurt even by a word, a look or a gesture.

Tolerance, fortitude, equanimity---these help you to be steady in ahimsa. They will remove all chance of your causing pain to others. This is called sahana (forbearance) or kshama (forgiving). Assess the worth of whatever others do to you or say about you, and cultivate fortitude and the understanding to appreciate their behaviour and pardon their faults. This capacity is as invaluable as truth, righteousness, wisdom, non-violence, renunciation, delight and compassion. It is all that one need possess for spiritual advancement.

Living becomes a glorious experience only when it is sweetened by tolerance and love.

Willingness to compromise with others' ways of living and cooperation in common tasks, these make living happy and fruitful. Certain modes of behaviour have been laid down and proved beneficial by centuries of practice. These have to be observed with modifications to suit the conditions of today. We are developing in each department of life, but pity it is that we are not developing the unique qualities of human beings. Develop the Aathmic awareness, the consciousness of the Divine, the acquisition of Divine attributes.

Expand love and understanding.

When students consciously and steadily strive to develop these distinct human qualities, education will give them valuable experience, and they shall be equipped to transform society.

The nation and all mankind will derive benefit therefrom.

Sri Sathya Sai College for Women, Ananthapur, 17-2-1980

Practising meditation in silence and solitude, one can in due course establish silence and solitude in the heart, even in the busiest thoroughfares.

Now, the puujia room or domestic shrines are invariably found next to the kitchen,' there, the smells of cooking attack the nostrils, the sounds of frying and boiling attack the ear; the mind is distracted by voices and noises. How can concentration grow in such an atmosphere?

Sri Sathya Sai

47. Education in the Sai era

EDUCATION must enable a person to discriminate between light and darkness. It must foster and promote the precious wealth of moral strength and spiritual victory and purify the inner impulses of man. Mere mastery of books does not entitle a man to be called 'educated.' Without mastery over the inner instruments of emotions, no man can be deemed to be educated. The latent has to be cleansed so that the patent can flourish. Experience is essential for the confirmation and consolidation of what is learnt from books. We do not see any sign of this in the present educational system. There is no attempt to awaken the Divine in Man, no awareness of the possibility of rising to the psychic plane.

The ideal that is held before the student in our educational institutions is different. They are engaged in a mechanical process of turning out young men and women who detest work that soils the hand or disturbs the fold of their dresses. They instil the passion for profit in their hearts, and ignore the urge to sympathise and serve. Education must produce wisdom and moral character. It can be acquired only by hard living and spending days of toil, with no respite for even sleep. But present-day education makes those who undergo it, mere bonded-slaves to their senses. They do not know how to avoid this bondage, so they revel in envy, greed and egoism.

What the country expects and demands from the educated person is, however, that he should set an example of honest labour, lighting the lamp of knowledge in every home.

Atharva Vedha embodies many secrets

When you really analyse it, you will discover confusion, uncertainty and indecision in every section of the educational system. The remedy for this unhappy situation lies in the revival of ancient ideals and practices with slight adaptations to suit the changed times and circumstances.

For these ideals and practices enshrine values that are eternal and essential.

For example, though the Russians and Americans boast that they have advanced far ahead in the fields of science and technology, one has to admit that this country had made vast progress in them even in the Vedhic age. The Atharva vedha embodies many technological secrets and scientific laws which were directly utilised by Westerners. Western scholars are investigating the possibilities of the exploratory laws mentioned in this Vedhic text. Mention is made of aerial vehicles, of gravitation and of various other scientific principles and appliances. They have inspired many inventors and technicians in other lands through the ages.

Indians have developed a fascination for foreign lands. They admire the achievements of other people but ignore those of their own. The faculty of initiation is subdued by this faculty of imitation. As the proverb says, "they prefer the stale, insipid dish available at the neighbour's home to the well-cooked, tasty dish available at their own." As a result they are unable to identify and promote the knowledge and skill that they have mastered in their own country.

Give up the mad pursuit after Diplomas

The Wright Brothers are declared to be the pioneers, the very first to fly a heavier-than-air plane in the sky. Their powered flight took place on December 17, 1903. But a German had actually forestalled them by his flight on September 13, 1896. We must note that even earlier than this

German, on August 14, 1895, an Indian belonging to Bombay, Shivaraam Baapuji Kadalekar, had succeeded in a similar feat. His name failed to draw public admiration and his feat was not acclaimed because of the envy, selfishness and the quarrelsome nature of our people.

Unity of minds, mutual love and cooperation are the qualities we have to develop today.

Education is not for securing university degrees. Give up this mad pursuit after diplomas which cater to the ego and increase the distance between you and others.

Develop the desire to serve others and equip yourselves through education with the skill needed to serve others better.

Education must enthuse youth to understand the precious heritage of Indian culture and spirituality, and to evoke the higher powers they possess. Though there are perennial sources and springs of strength within them, they behave like weaklings and ignoramuses. Patience, tolerance, tranquility and calmness have to be implanted in the heart.

Education is not mere book-knowledge

Education has to cultivate humility and discipline, but today it is yielding a harvest of pride and envy. Vidhya means-vidh (light) and ya (that which gives). So vidhya (education) has to shed light and illumine the darkness in the mind and intellect. It does not indicate mere bookknowledge.

It has to clarify the kinship of man with man and his intimate relationship with nature. It must harmonise one's earlier experiences with one's present one, and guide one to profitable and beneficial experiences in the future. It must validate the knowledge gained from books by these experiences and, by that process, make man more and more human, until he becomes Divine.

Riches beyond reasonable limit will result only in disaster. So, too, mere scholarship beyond limit will only bring about pride and competitive struggle. Of course information of a certain quality is desirable in a certain quantity, but without a parallel and simultaneous cultivation of morals and self-awareness, scholarship will only be a burden and a danger. The cultivation of a social consciousness is also very important. One must not learn to live like a drop of oil on a pond spreading all over the surface and refusing to merge with the water. One must join others in common tasks and contribute one's strength and skill to the common pool. A single thin string cannot bend even an ant, but hundreds of them twisted into a rope can hold back an elephant. This is the effect of united effort. It is a desirable trait to work for a common cause with others in cooperation; but today people unfortunately only believe in operation. Study the best means of bringing peace What can gatherings, meeting and sessions of learned bodies achieve? The conclusions arrived at after extensive discussions are not put into practice at all. Large sums of money as well as countless reams of paper are wasted. The recommendations and resolutions must be tasted on the touchstone of practice. The money can be better spent on raising the standard of life of the village folk. You have formed a study circle. Study the best means of bringing peace and apply those means in a few villages to prove their validity. They can then be taught to people in other lands also. Members of the circle can help students who are handicapped or defective and who have not been able to keep abreast of the rest, by giving them extra attention and special guidance. The clouds gathered thick in the sky have, in their midst, streaks of lightning. So, too, there has to be wisdom illumining the clouds of knowledge. The learned man's life itself must shine as his message to mankind. Every particle of strength, every moment of life, every expression of virtue and every manifestation -of intelligence, must be directed to the fulfilment of this high purpose. When the name of the drug is repeated, can the disease be cured? Can poverty be overcome by reciting the word, 'Dollar' or 'Rupee'? Can the reading of the menu-card remove the pang of hunger? A pass in the examination does not make a person more useful or more wise. Lecturers and professors of the teaching faculty are like an 'overhead tank' and the students are the 'taps.' When the tank is filled with potable water, the taps too, will yield water with which people can slake their thirst. The duty of teachers is to correct and counsel the students, charging them with enthusiasm and courage and removing their sloth and vacillation. This is the underlying object of all the curricula and classes---to eliminate narrowness of outlook and to promote wide, inclusive modes of thought, word and deed. Faith in the Oneness of all must be rooted and strong. The Upanishath declares, "All this is enveloped by God," and the Geetha declares, "All this is the Lord," and "The Lord is in all beings." Consider every student who is eager to learn as your own child. Consider every subject you teach as a means for instilling faith in God. When you teach physics, also lead the students into the magnificent mystery of philosophy. While teaching botany, guide them into the sublime secrets of the tree, and of the Creator who has blessed them with it. Life is a tree. The mutual relationship we cultivate and cherish is symbolised by the branches, twigs and leaves; the thoughts arising in the mind are the flowers; aanandha (bliss) is the fruit, and dharma (virtue) is the sweet juice it contains. The tree is held firm by the very roots which feed it---roots that symbolise faith and self-confidence. At present, discipline has almost disappeared from the educational field. Professing one thing and doing another has become a Universal vice. The nation can prosper and be happy only when education develops in an atmosphere of Truth, Love and Reverence. Sathya Sai Study Circle, Bangalore, 18-2-1980

48. The vibhuuthi ANORANIYAAN Mahatho Maheevyaan (More minute than the minutest and more vast than the vastest), is how the Vedhaantha refers to the Absolute, the Brahman. The Vedhaantha (Vedhic philosophy) tries by such descriptions to picture the Highest Overself, but no description can help in indentifying it or experiencing it. At best, the description can only be like what the five blind men inferred about the elephant when each laid hold of a particular limb of that animal. Even those who have experienced, cannot communicate the ecstasy, the peace, the light and the love fully to others. The prophets, sages and seers to whom the establishment of 'religions' is ascribed, have proclaimed their awareness of the Brahman principle. Though the Charvaka School of Philosophy denied God and the Jain and Buddhist Schools declined to posit

God, Shankara asserted that God is formless and attributeless and is best described as Jyothi (Supreme effulgence). He also said that the individual is not different from the Universal, that jeeva (individual being) is Brahman (Omni Self) itself, that the manifold nature is also Brahman seen through a strange veil as a mixture of truth and falsehood, a peculair make believe called maaya (illusion) or avidhya (ignorance).

The four characteristics of the world

Brahman is the cause and prakrithi (Nature) the effect. Nature is the deluding manifestation of Brahman. It is what can be called leela vibhuuthi or expression of glow done as mere leela

(sport). When the leela is perceived as apart from Brahman, it is a false and incomplete perception. 'The leela is manifold; Brahman is One. To discover the One in the many is the purpose of human existence. Brahman is eternal. It is the nithya vibhuuthi (everlasting splendour). It is named Kingdom of God. Leela vibhuuthi is prakrithi or maaya or avidhya

(nature or illusory energy or ignorance), with the deluding, deceptive diversities.

The objective world (leela vibhuuthi) is the super-imposition on Brahman that deceives and distorts the Reality. Ignorant persons assume it to be real. Buddha described the world as having four characteristics: (i) Sarvam dhukkham: All is sorrow. It is called mruthyaloka (the world of death), afflicted by pain, hunger, disease and worry. (ii) Sarvam kshanikam: Everything is momentary, everything changes. The bud blooms and fades, lightning flashes and dies. Every individual, thing or quality grows and declines. (iii) Sarvam svalakshanam: Every person or thing is unique; even identical twins have both some special quality or attitude that differentiates them. No two leaves, even of the same tree, are the same in all respects. The many are divided into many more by these differences. Hence Buddha declared (iv)

Sarvam shoonyam: All is invalid, worthless. Where are the fathers and grandfathers who have died? How many empires have been buried in the sands of time?

The Cosmos emanated through God's sport

The Nithya vibhuuthi, upon which the manifold structure exists, is described as having six characteristics: (i) Nithya (Eternal) (ii) Avarnaneeya

(indescribable) (iii) Nissankhya

(immeasurable) (iv) Nirupaadhi (uncontaminated by association or impact) (v) Nirdhoshi

(unaffected by limitation or diminution) (vi) Samaana-rahitha (unapproached by anything other, incomparable, equal only to itself). This Nithya vibhuuthi (miraculous play) is the Aathmic principle that is the Reality of every being. It manifests as Leela-vibhuuthi, projecting Itself as the many individuals and particulars by the interplay of the three gunas (modes or qualities).

The saathwik guna (pure qualities) promotes peace, harmony and love. The raajasik (quality of passion) is related to desire: it prods man into constant activity. The thaamasik (quality of inaction) has the peculiar property of twisting Reality out of shape and of making, the truth appear as false, the false as truth. Thus the transient and the trivial appears as ever-lasting and desirable. The subject and the object are both unreal, only the Aathman or Brahman, the Truth of both, is real. That is why both are classed as Leela vibhuuthi, the magnificence of God's sport.

Through that sport, this entire Cosmos has emanated.

This day is Yugaadhi, the New Year day, the day when we take leave of the year 'Siddhartha' and welcome the year 'Roudhra.' In the leela, such goings and comings, arrivals and departures are to be expected. The Moon (Chandhra) is declared to be the king, and Sun (Suurya), the Prime Minister during this year. Saturn (Shani) is the Commander-in-chief. Among the nine planets, four are in favourable positions of authority and five hold harmful positions. The year is named Roudhra, which means 'terrible.' This indicates that the year will witness some agitations and face a few anxieties. But the king and the minister are powerful; they will keep things in check.

The favourable planets will ensure early and timely rains. So peace and security have a good chance of spreading if the mind (whose presiding deity is Chandhra) and the intellect (whose presiding deity is Suurya), work in unison.

Remember the Basic Unity of all mankind

People must take the warning and not allow themselves, to be 'horrible' to one another like hordes of drunken monkeys. They must remember the Basic Unity of all mankind : Ekoham bahushyaam. Ekoham is the Nithya vibhuuthi and Bahushyaam, the Leela vibhuuthi.

Demonstrate that you are Divine to the very core. Your conduct and behaviour must declare.

your faith in your Divinity. The New Year day is celebrated in the home after sweeping and washing it clean and hanging green festoons over the doors. The people themselves take elaborate baths, wear new clothes and partake of feasts and share in merriment.

When so much care is taken to fulfil the needs of the body, imagine how much more care should be devoted to adore the Divine Resident in that body. Cultivate tolerance and compassion and engage yourselves in your work in a spirit of love and service, thus enabling yourselves to visualise the Divinity inherent in every living being.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 7-3-1980

Service is best built on the strong foundation of Thath-thwam-asi-- -That and This are the same; That is This; This is That. There is no Other; there is only One.

Kites fly high; but all are lifted and kept high by the same air, the same wind. The kites have no separate wills.

The pots of water in which the Sun is reflected may be many, but the Sun is One and unaffected, when the pots break or the water is dried up.

All help you give is therefore help given to yourself; all service is to the Self alone.

When another is poor, you cannot be rich; when another is in distress, you cannot have joy. The same current runs through and activates all.

Sri Sathya Sai

49. The four brothers

RAAMA is a Name sweeter than all the sweet things in Nature, when imbibed alone or together.

It can never cloy on the tongue or the mind. It has mysterious mystic potentialities to elevate man. So, one must endeavour, to keep the mind ever dwelling on it.

The story of Raama---The Raamaayana---is but another version of the Vedhas (ancient sacred revealed scriptures). In fact, it is said that the Vedhas incarnated as the Raamaayana, in order to help the destruction of evil and the revival of righteous living, tasks which the Lord took upon Himself during His career as Raama. Why! Raama and his three brothers are, from one point of view, the four Vedhas in human form. The Yajur Vedha lays down the rights and duties of man, the Dharma (righteousness) which ensures peace and prosperity for him, both here and hereafter. So, it is represented by Raama Himself. He put on the vesture of manhood in order to establish and exemplify Dharma. "Raamah Vighrahavaan Dharmah" is how the Raamaayana describes Him---

Raama, the embodied Dharma.

Mankind should follow Raama's life

Rig Vedha enshrines manthras (potent sacred formulae). It elucidates them and elaborates their meanings, with the manthra "Raama" as their crown. Brother Lakshmana, who repeated it, recited it and relied on it, for everything in life and beyond, is indeed the embodiment of the Rig Vedha. He teaches mankind that the Raama manthra confers on man the Constant Presence of the Lord. The same Vedha contains songs in praise of Creation and the Creator and through adoration sublimated into song, the Lord yields Grace. Bharatha whose every thought, word and deed was an act of thanksgiving, a paen of praise dedicated to Raama, was the Saama Vedha itself.

Then, we have the Atharvana Vedha which is a collection of medical and ritual details, of charms and protective amulets to overcome internal and external foes.

Shathrugghna, whose very name means 'the destroyer of foes is therefore appropriately the avathaar (incarnation) of the Atharvana Vedha. This Vedha enables man to conquer evil habits, attitudes and tendencies, so that he can listen to the Voice of God and gladly translate the words into daily life. Shathrugghna demonstrated by his humility, loyalty and devotion the victory he had won over his ego, greed and anger.

Very often the mistake is committed, of forgetting that Raama came, in order to lay down the norms of life and that His life has to be observed and followed by mankind. He is the ideal Man, with qualities and virtues which every man can earn to elevate himself. Mere worship, empty adoration is not what the Avathaar expects.

Raama underwent trouble, disappointment and distress like any man, in order to show that joy was but an interval between two griefs, that grief was but a challenge, a rest, a lesson. He held forth the ideal relationship between son and father, husband and wife, brother and brother, friend and friend, ally and enemy and even man and beast. The Raamaayana teaches also that, as a consequence of the individual's accumulated karma-consequence, children of the same mother may have opposite characters and careers. The waters of a pond breed leeches, as well as lotuses.

Vaali and Sugreeva were brothers! So were Raavana and Vibheeshana!

Four brothers represent four Purusharthas

From another point of view, Raama and the brothers can be understood as models of the four primal goals of Man, the Purusharthas. Of these Raama was Dharma (Righteousness); Lakshmana was Artha (prosperity); Bharatha was Kaama (fulfilment of desires) and Shathrughna was moksha (liberation). These four are the progeny of every human being.

Dhasharatha (Ten-chariot leader) is Man, having five sense organs of perception and five senses of action, ruling over Ayodhya, the city that is impregnable (the heart wherein God resides).

These four goals have to be reduced to two pairs --- dharma-artha and kaama-moksha. Man must struggle to attain prosperity only through righteous ways. The prosperity should be used to achieve and maintain dharma. This is the reason why Lakshmana follows in the footsteps of Raama and when Kabandha held Lakshmana in his deadly clasp, Lakshmana offered to stay in those arms, advising Raama to escape and live. This is the reason why when Lakshmana fell unconscious on the battlefield and could not be revived. Raama lamented, "Perhaps I may get another Seetha, if this Seetha passes away; but O Lakshmana, nowhere can I get another brother like you.

Raama's expression of His fraternal love Raama also shared with Bharatha the love that Lakshmana poured on him so profusely. He told Bharatha who prayed to him, with tears in his eyes, to return to Ayodhya as its ruler, "No, Father has ordered Me to rule over the forests, helping and saving/he anchorites and hermits from the inroads of demonic hordes. He has willed that you should rule over the Kingdom of Ayodhya. Let us both be loyal to him." That was the expression of His fraternal love.

The second pair of Purusharthas is Kaama and Moksha; the only desire worth entertaining and pursuing is the desire for liberation. Bharatha had it and Shathrughna shared it.

After the long pilgrimage to the shrines and holy spots of Bharatha, Raama had a few years, until he was aged fourteen, of apparent introspection and solitude. He disliked food and regal apparel. He was not interested in materials and men. He waved his fingers and palms for no clear reason; he wrote on the air only He knew what. He laughed without reason. In short, His actions and movements were exactly the same as when I was in my early teens. Vashishtha attempted to bring His mind back to normalcy, but that was only a stage which all Avathars are in, before they enter upon the task for which they have come down. Those years, the Avathar was designing His Master Plan. At the end of that period, the sage Vishwaamithra arrived at the palace, asking Dhasharatha to send Raama (and the inseparable Lakshmana) with him, to save the hermits from the demonic gang who desecrated Vedhic rites. The plan started unfolding.

From Discourse on Raamanavami day, Brindhaavan 25-3-1980 The Vedhas say, Maathru devo bhava. Revere your Mother as God. This applies to the country which gave birth to you, also. So, you must revere the country and follow its culture. You must also revere your mother, who has brought you up with love, care and sacrifice. However famous a man may be, if he does not revere his mother, he does not deserve respect. A person whose heart is so hard that it does not melt at the pleadings of the mother deserves nothing but ridicule.

Sri Sathya Sai
50. Teaching in ancient India
WHO is the genuine Guru (preceptor)? He who teaches by precept and example, good conduct, right thinking, loyalty to Truth, mental discipline and sense of duty. Who is the genuine student? He who learns these. These are the qualities that will guarantee happiness here and bliss hereafter. These virtues will effectively countermand the evils that degrade man into a monster.

The educational system that brings both teacher and student together, has two aspects' first, the provision of skills and information so that man can live in health and happiness and the second, the understanding of one's inner urges and their sublimation in order to attain lasting peace, equanimity and bliss. The two aspects are not opposed; they are bound irrevocably together.

Both teachers and students have to recognise this truth. Man is not a machine, contrived by a clever combination of legs and hands, head and heart, mind and matter. In these and over these, there is an immanent yet transcendent entity which is called the Aathma (the Overself or divine). The physical eye cannot see It; the other senses too cannot comprehend it; It is beyond the realm of the "Seen." All that is sensed, all that is comprehensible by the five senses, is "the Universe," the Jagath (evermoving, everchanging Cosmos). The 'seen' exists on the basis of the 'unseen;' 'the tree' is seen but the root that sustains it and bears it, is invisible. The bungalow is seen; the foundation structure on which it stands is beyond sight. The self and the Cosmos created by the Self are both having the Aathma as their sustenance and support. This was the great lesson that was imparted to every generation by the elders in this country since ages.

Valuable contribution of ancient Universities Three or four centuries ago, before the West secured a foot-hold in India, there were only a few Universities; they had no huge campuses and buildings; the home of the learned scholar was itself the college. He had four or five pupils only. There was no timetable for the classes. It all depended on the compassion of the teacher and the yearning of the pupil. He might instruct him in the silent hours of the night or during the day, under a spreading tree or in the temple corridor. Men and women who came to the temple or who walked through the grove might listen awhile and learn a thing or two. Besides giving instruction on basic subjects, each University attracted to itself and maintained a number of specialists in one special branch of study. The favourite subject, on which the University at Kaashi paid special attention to was Grammar; the University of Kashmir had specialists in Rhetoric and of Thakshashila (modern Taxila) in Medicine (Aayur-Vedha), the knowledge relating to healthy and happy living. The Navadweep University chose to pursue (Logic of truth) more than other subjects of study. Amaraavathi, the capital city, where Bharatha, the brother of Raama ruled long ago, had a University where also the system of Medicine propounded by Charaka and Sushruta was taught for generations by expert teacher practioners. Rise to Divinity was the main aim of pupils. Of course, these Universities were not mere purveyors of learning. They inspired their alumni to lead simple spiritual lives, speak soft and sweet, and cultivate compassion, reverence and equanimity. The rise to Divinity was the only aim of the pupil; to elevate him to the level they themselves had reached was the only purpose the teachers had before them. Universities and other educational centres were in those days beyond the hold of the rulers. They honoured and loved the ideals and aspirations of lovers of knowledge and persons who had dedicated themselves to the cause. Among the primary and secondary schools, the colleges and centres of higher learning, most attention was paid by society and its leaders to primary education. Their endeavour was to plant pure, ennobling and strengthening thoughts and beliefs in the tender minds of children. The educationists of those days paid attention to problems, like who are the most equipped and the most efficient to teach; which are the subjects which must be taught and when and where are they to be taught and to whom. They tried to adjust the curricula and the syllabi in accordance with the needs, aspirations and attainments of the learners. For, there was no room then in the learning teaching process for compulsion or force. Bhaarath welcomes and respects all faiths. Since the classes had only six, seven or ten pupils, the teacher could discover whether the pupil had assimilated the subject and clarify immediately any doubt that disturbed his understanding. The teachers had an overwhelming sense of duty; the pupil had an equally overwhelming yearning to learn. So, instruction on topics useful for happy living and for discovering the spring of wisdom, power and bliss, that lay in one's inner core, were both available to the pupil. Most of the learning was by listening to the preceptor. Not only in the seats of higher learning, but even the smith, the artisan, the artist, the carpenter, the farmer, the potter, the writer, the musician, the sculptor---all learnt from the elders by the silent process of lovingly listening and reverentially watching; not through the process of poring over books. Those days can be revived, if only you love and revere the heritage which is yours. Bhaarath is a garden of multicoloured flowers---the flowers of the spirit known as Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion), Bhuddhism, Jainism, Zoroastrianism, Christianity and Islam. The truths they practise, the hymns they sing, the prayers they voice forth, are filling the atmosphere here with Divine fragrance. Bhaarath has, throughout the ages, welcomed and respected all faiths, with equal ardour. In spite of this, the wrong impression that people here worship hundreds of gods in place of the One, is spread by ignorant persons. God is One; people call on Him in several languages---this discovery was made in India millennia ago. This was the first country in the world to proclaim it. Of course, the various qualities of this one God---His compassion, His wisdom, His inexhaustible riches, His inscrutability, His might---have been given names and forms, but each worshipper of these is aware that they are only phases of the One Indivisible Eternal Absolute. Each trade, each profession, has a guardian deity, a facet of the Guardian of the Cosmos. Teachers were after spiritual treasures

People here are aware of God in everything---the truck driver folds his palms before the steering wheel and utters a prayer, the potter bows his head before the wheel, the poet worships the pen, the musician invokes the deity in the harmonium before he starts playing on it. No one enters upon a task without prayer and making a sign of submission. This means that the spiritual attitude precedes the secular attitude of self-praise.

The inner meaning of the Indian attitude is beyond the experience of people of other cultures.

They ridicule Indians adoring trees and stones, birds and beasts, mountains and rivers, believing them to be gods. But, the Hindhu adores the God whom he believes is manifest in the stone and not the stone itself as wholly and fully God. Ishaavaasyam Idham Sarvam, the Upanishaths declare to man. "All this is God"---even the bird, the beast, the snake, the eagle, the peepul trees, the thulsi (basic) plant. The Omnipresence of God implies the Oneness of God.

The ancient Universities emphasised this Immanence and Transcendence of God. Teachers did not calculate and clamour for wages. Their needs were fulfilled by society. They never worried about material comfort or discomfort. They were after spiritual treasures. Pupils too insisted that they should be shown the way to liberation from the shackles of material desires. Teachers were more affectionate towards their pupils than to their own children. They were renunciants, willing and eager to undergo trials and tribulations, ever contented, happy and joyful.

He who is content is the richest

The pupils too were not learning with cushy jobs in view. They sought each subject of study as a step towards self-realisation. They valued the instruction, for it purified the mind and clarified the intellect and sanctified the vision. They had before them the ideal of becoming useful for their parents, the society which fostered them, the country which hoped for the best out of them and mankind to which they belong. He who is the slave of desires is the poorest; he who is content, is the richest.

So cultivate the traits that students of past ages sought to cultivate. Become useful to your parents. Do not belittle them as illiterate or ignorant. They are far more knowledgeable than you.

Do not cause tears to fill their eyes. Love them, revere them, serve them. Be humble and loving, wherever you are, in whatever company. Remember the Names of the Lord, indicating His Glory, His Mercy, His Love. Then, all egoistic feelings will flee from you.

Life is a game of football. You are the ball, and you are bound to be thrown and kicked about, this side and that. How long have you to bear this treatment? Until the air is full in the ball; deflate it, no one will kick it again. The air that inflates it is the Ego! When the Ego is out, Bliss comes in. When you are students, study without participating in other adventures like politics.

They will only increase tension and anxiety and harm your studies. Let discipline, devotion and duty be subjects in your compulsory curriculum. Master these and you will win glory.

Sri Sathya Sai College, Brindhaavan, 10- 7-1980

Man has to become Divine, the Divine from which he has come.

So, he has to lessen his attachment to the world, not by cutting himself off, but, by being in it as an instrument in His hands; by subduing all tendencies towards egoism that raise their heads in him; by single-minded attention to the dictates of God called Dharma (Righteousness).

Edison the scientist concentrated so much on the solution of the problems that worried him that he left untouched/'or days together the food and drink that was pushed in through the doors of his laboratory. You must have the same concentration and shraddha (steady dedication) while engaged in saadhana (spiritual discipline).

Sri Sathya Sai

51. The three sorrows

MAN has to encounter sorrow from three sources while here on earth. The scriptures mention these and warn men against them. They refer to them as Aadhyaathmic (individual personal), Aadhibhowthic (external elements) and Aadhidhaivic (super natural). Here Aathma means the corporeal self and so, the first group of sorrows afflicts man through physical and mental illnesses. The second is derived from bhuutha, which means 'that which is created' and that group of sorrows is derived from living beings like snakes, wild animals, worms, insects, etc. The third word is Aadhidhaivic, where dhaiva means a deity presiding over a force or phenomenon in Nature. So the third group of sorrows trouble man through calamities like floods, drought and storm.

Aadhyaathmic sorrow is caused by the human body, the home of countless microbes, and other parasitic beings. No one can be free from these disease-inducing causes. But, one can easily overcome this sorrow by developing feelings of compassion towards all beings and thoughts which thrive on Love and spread love. Illness, both physical and mental, is a reaction on the body caused by poisons in the mind. An uncontaminated mind alone can ensure continuous health. Vice breeds disease. Bad thoughts and habits, bad company and bad food are fertile grounds where disease thrives. Aarogya (good health) and Aanandha (bliss) go hand in hand.

 Virtue alone will bring the Grace of God A sense of elation and exultation keeps the body free from ill-health. Evil habits in which men indulge are the chief cause of disease, physical as well as mental. Greed affects the mind; disappointment makes man depressed. Man can justify his existence as man only by the cultivation of virtues. Then, he becomes a worthy candidate for Godhood. It is progress in virtue that announces the progress of man towards Divinity. Virtue also confers freshness, skill, and long years of youthfulness. The years you spend in College are the crucial ones when you have to start cultivating the virtues which are divine. That is the reason why I am emphasising before you the relationship between virtue, health and happiness. Once you slide into evil, there is no escape; you will be caught in the wheel of despair. Virtue alone will bring to you the Grace of God. Remember that nothing is so precious as Divine Grace.
Thyaagaraaja dismissed the gifts of heaps of precious gems because he valued the Presence of God as more than all the wealth of the world. A healthy heart is the temple of God. Its health is proportionate to the purity of the food taken and the purity of one's thoughts, words and deeds.
 Moderate food and moderate speech are the twin boons one should win by one's own exertion.
Aadhibhowthic sorrow is caused by lower living beings, like flies, ants, mosquitoes, bugs, etc. It may be difficult to get rid of these, but one can practise mental restraint through yoga (divine communion). Yoga is explained as the prevention of the agitations of the mind. When the mind is withdrawn from contacting the outer world through the sense-media, no anxiety or agitation can affect the persons. The mind has to be withdrawn from both praise and blame, for they make you either proud or angry. Pride is deplorable and anger is disastrous. Be always the same and watch with a balanced mind the ups and downs of life.
Samaadhi is a characteristic of the mind Think of the transience of life and the triviality of wealth, power and fame. The body is a compound of elements; they have to fall apart. I am now directing that you be taught some Aasanas in Yoga. They will help you to maintain health of body and mind. You can acquire equanimity thereby, and earn genuine Aanandha.

Aadhidhaivic sorrow is the result of natural calamities. In order not to be affected by these, one must practise Samaadhi. Dhee means 'the intellect.' Sama means 'equal.' Attaining Samaadhi does not involve falling flat, shaking the limbs or losing consciousness. It is not a dramatic trance. It is a characteristic of the mind, an outlook one has developed, to observe all events and persons without any attachment or aversion. This stage of the consciousness of man is also called Nirvikalpa, that is to say, devoid of vikalpa (reaction, response). The person who has mastered vikalpa is free from wish, want and desire. So, he has consciously trained his mind not to respond to attraction and or react to repulsion. When the mind reacts, favourably or otherwise, to external or internal urges, it undergoes slight vikaaraas (distortions). Therefore, it cannot achieve transformation into divinity.
 The unseen is the base of the seen Aathma (divinity) is deep in the core of the consciousness of man. We do not keep gold, jewels and valuables in the verandahs and quadrangles of our homes. We keep only pots and baskets there. We keep the jewels in an iron safe in an inner room, away from public gaze. The body is liable to fall, rot and get burnt. When age increases, we say that he is declining year by year, and nearing his end faster and faster. In the box called the body is treasured the Aathma. The sea
