- Publisher's Note

"SATHYA SAI SPEAKS" Series is, according to late Prof. N. Kasturi, the original translator and compiler, "a fragrant boquet of flowers that never fade or falter". These discourses were delivered by Swaami out of profound compassion towards seekers of Truth during the last few decades.

The need for revised and enlarged editions of the Series was strongly felt and expressed by devotees, especially by foreigners. An attempt has therefore been made in these volumes to meet their needs. The discourses have been presented year-wise so that there is no overlapping of the discourses delivered in a year, in more than one volume pertaining to the same calendar year. This rearrangement has resulted in an increase in the number of volumes, from the previous twelve to the present fifteen volumes, covering the years 1953 to 1982. Further new volumes will also be added in due course, to cover the discourses delivered after 1982.

The retention of Sanskrit words on page after page, in the previous volumes, without their English equivalents in most cases, Was causing great confusion to readers, especially foreigners, who were not familiar with Sanskrit. In the present revised volumes, an attempt has been made to aid easy reading by replacing Sanskrit words with English equivalents wherever they do not affect Baaba's original expression. Sanskrit words have been retained wherever it was felt necessary to preserve the essence of the original expression of Baaba and where the English equivalents may not do full justice to the text in the particular context. However, in all such places the English equivalents have been given along with the Sanskrit words. Some very commonly understood Sanskrit words or Sanskrit words which are repeated too often are retained without English equivalents to retain the original flavour of Baaba's discourses. Further, in this revised volume, phonetic spellings have been adopted for all Sanskrit words uniformly to enable readers who are new to these words to pronounce them correctly and to remove any vagueness in the pronunciation of these words.

A Glossary has been added in these revised editions to provide comprehensive and detailed explanation of the more important Sanskrit words for the benefit of lay readers who may be interested in Vedhic religion and philosophy. It is hoped that this will be of great help to devotees to understand more clearly the topics of Baaba's discourses covering a wide spectrum of Vedhic philosophy. The revised series of volumes are being brought out in a larger format, Demy Octavo size, so that they can be companion books with other publications in private libraries. Computerised

using a larger size of type, a more readable type face and better line spacing have been adopted for more comfortable reading of the books, especially by elderly readers. Very long paragraphs have been split into shorter paragraphs and suitable sub-headings have been added in every page, to relieve the monotony on the eye and make reading a pleasure.

Better quality paper, improved binding, dust cover with new design and foil printing and plastic cover have been adopted for the revised volumes for better preservation and durable shelf-life of the volumes.

With these changes, it is hoped that the revised and enlarged volumes of "Sathya Sai Speaks" Series, will be of great benefit to earnest seekers in spiritual realm.

Sathya Sai Speaks

Have you heard our Baaba speak

At public meetings anywhere?

He never calls it speech;

Nor will you name it so!

He does not raise His voice, harangue,

Or rouse the mob or rail or flail;

He does not hesitate, He will not calculate,

Hum and haw and pause and ponder,

Making you wonder why you came!

He does not waver, wander,

Collecting thoughts, contriving notes;
 He does not waste a moment, decorating thoughts In showy lace and frills, clothing borrowed texts In shimmering gauze. He is no orator-pompous, proud, Clamouring for claps, publicity-mad!
 He will not circumambulate, declaim . or, even ..'speak'!
 He is the Rain-cloud, bringing Life To the parched ones here below!
 He 'talks' He 'talks', to you, and you, and every single you that has gathered there.
 To every single Arjuna, with heavy heart and empty hand, Afraid to fight the battle of Life on to Victory.
 You feel He has come for you, to you.
 You see Him, silently looking around!
 The searchlight eye full circle swings!
 How lucky, you are there!
 He smiles; He wins you by that smile!
 You scarce can take your eyes from off that Face, So alluring, so Divine!
 You scarce can pull your heart from off His grip;
 The clasp is cool comfort! The silence deepens Though thousands have been squatting, waiting, For hours and hours

Himaalayan stillness; twilight calm!

Premaswaruplaara!

The Golden Hour has come! Heaven's Gate ajar!

Thes voice is sweet as honey

Hived by Heavenly bees from Paarijatha trees!

His call is clarion clear!

O! 'Tis thrilling, 'tis filling rapture in the soul, Flowing like the Ganga, freeing the bound, Yielding rich reaping, for just ploughing and sowing Welling and swelling like Gersoppa Falls, Yielding vast power, for just wheeling and wiring!
 His talk is a cascade, so limpid and pure, Teaching, never preaching, unravelling all knots, Stilling the questionings ere they emerge in mind; Defining, refining, consoling the pining, Commanding, yea, demanding the bending of pride, Sparing no one, be he ruling or serving.
 Chiding, reprimanding the fool, and fanatic; Joking and coaxing, poking fun at all hoaxing; Quoting from what He said in the past ages, Detailing facts of His incarnating.
 Resplendent poetry, spontaneous, sublime, Painting pictures of transcendent Truth, Parable, proverb, scintillating bright, Tinkling, twinkling, tintinnabulating lilt, Every hour a minute, every minute a second;
 Every word a manthra, every phrase, Suuthra, A Gaayathri a sentence, Upanishath a speech!

For He is no well or tank or river!

His is the ocean of Wisdom Divine!

Oh! His words shower mercy, like morning dew On every heart-bud awakening from dreaming.
 He is feeding your roots and speeding the sap, Sprouting the buds, painting the petals, Perfuming them well, inviting the bees, Ripening the pods, with each word of His!
 There! The meaning of His word, a tiny seed Drops on your rock-like heart! And wonder of wonders!
 It germinates there!.., sprouts and puts forth leaves!
 The silken half-blind baby-roots do run about Tickling the stone, jabbing, pleading for suckling!
 Succeeding at last, it grows; and, growing into a tree, Your rock is broken into clay!
 His talk, you will find, is cooling, not freezing Warming, not burning; raining, not flooding; Healing the ailing and hearts bewailing; Soothing, not searing; no toxin, but tonic; Balming and calming; all fact and no fiction!
 Every sentence spreads joy and scorches gloom, Impelling attention, compelling assent, Dispelling dejection, repelling sloth, Attracting you nearer, detaching from bonds, Infusing courage, and fusing creeds, Imposing no doctrine, composing all feuds, Informing (so charming!), never harming, disarming!
 Sifting the responding, lifting the desponding.
 Stressing on 'Doing, Behaving and Living', Appealing for 'Feeling, Believing and Acting'.
 Calling all listening, to spurn imitating, Vsinly disputing, blind leading the blind, Knocking at Paradise through power and pelf, Or boasting of branches of family tree,
 And seeking for peace, in earning and spending And wanting and panting and hoarding and guarding.
 As you hear Him talking, you quietly resolve To take a step forward on the pilgrim road; Unfold your wings and soar into the sky!
 You feel you are a Lion, cheated into bleating!
 A diamond, set in dirty lead!
 Engaging in no fray, enraging no foe,
 He is welcoming all, who are thirsty or starving, Or limping, or blinking, or climbing and sliding, Raising the stooping, embracing the drooping Assuaging pain, assuring His Grace.
 He reminds us all of the road we have missed.
 He describes the joy of the journey's end.
 He opens our eyes; He strengthens our limbs;
 He heartens the struggling, groping his way, Awakening the sleeping, making the sitting stand,
 The standing to walk; the walking to reach!

Proclaiming, revealing, announcing to all Asserting His coming for our burden assuming, Redeeming the wayward, the downcast, diseased; Underlining the Truth, undermining the false;

Ah! What is this? What luck! What Grace!

Even as He talks, 'it' blossoms into song,

Oh! Captivating Song! He teaches us to pray

Tranquilising all the furious waves, Steeling the nerves and strengthening the will,

Attuning our soul to Dharma! Sathya! Prema!

And when it stops

And you open your eyes,

You find them full of tears!

Your neighbour weeps like child for mother,

But Why? Look up and see; He has left the dais!

Be proud you had the chance. From this moment,

I know You are bound to be an ascending, attempting, adventurous soul.

Arjuna, resuming arms for the fray

With Krishna leading the horses aright-

How lucky you heard Him talk!

N. KASTURI

(Poem read in the Holy Presence on 16-10-58)

1. Maanasa Bhajare

WHEN I was at Uravakonda studying in the High School, you know I came away one day and threw off my books and declared that I have My work waiting for Me. The Thelugu Pandith (scholar) described the incident of that evening to you all in his speech. Well, that day when I came out publicly as Sai Baaba, that first song I taught the gathering in the garden to which I went from the Thelugu Pandith's house was:

"Maanasa bhajare guru charanam Dhusthara bhava saagara tharanam"

I called on all those suffering in the endless round of birth and death to worship the Feet of the Guru (spiritual preceptor), the Guru that was announcing Himself, who had come again for taking upon Himself the burden of those who find refuge in Him. That was the very first Message of Mine to Humanity. "Maanasa bhajare."

"Worship in the mind!" I do not need your flower garlands and fruits, things that you get for an anna or two; they are not genuinely yours. Give Me something that is yours, something which is clean and fragrant with the perfume of virtue and innocence, and washed in the tears of repentance! Garlands and fruits you bring as items in the show, as an exhibition of your devotion; poorer devotees who cannot afford to bring them are humiliated and they feel sorry that they are helpless; they cannot demonstrate their devotion in the grand way in which you are doing it. Install the Lord in your heart and offer Him the fruits of your actions and the flowers of your inner thoughts and feelings. That is the worship I like most, the devotion I appreciate most.

In shops, things are kept in separate packets and each one specialises in some particular article or sets of articles. But in an Exhibition, hundreds of shops join to make all varieties of things available and there is a great deal of window-dressing, arrangement and display. I have been all these days generally giving individual advice, like the packets available in shops and giving answers to individual questions. This 'speech' today, is a new experience for you. I am addressing a gathering today; but even though it may be new to you, for Me it is not new. I have given advice to large gatherings before, though not in this Appearance. Whenever Niraakaara (formless) becomes Sakaara (one with form), it has to fulfil the Mission and it does so in various ways. But the one purpose, the re-education of Man persists, whatever the yuga (the era),

The first sixteen years of this Life have been, as I have often told you, the period when Baala leela (divine child sport) predominated and the next sixteen is being spent mostly in Mahimas (miracles) in order to give santhosha (joy) to this generation. Joy and contentment are short-lived sensations; you have to catch that mood and make it a permanent possession: Aanandha (bliss). After the thirty-second year, you will see Me active more and more in the task of Upadhesa (spiritual instruction)--teaching erring humanity and in directing the World along the path of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Love).

Not that I am determined to exclude leela and mahima from My activity after that. I only mean that re-establishing Dharma, correcting the crookedness of the human mind and guiding humanity back to Sanaathana Dharma (eternal universal religion) will be My task thereafter.

Do not be led away by doubt and vain argument; do not question how and whether I can do all this. The cowherds of Brindhaavan also doubted whether the little boy who grew in their midst could lift Govardhanagiri and hold it aloft! The thing needed is Faith, and yet more Faith.

Secret of Spiritual Success

Once Krishna and Arjuna were going together along the open road. Seeing a bird in the sky, Krishna asked Arjuna, "Is that a dove?" He replied, "Yes, it is a dove." He asked Arjuna, "Is it an eagle?" Arjuna replied promptly, "Yes, it is an eagle." "No, Arjuna, it looks like a crow to Me. Is it not a crow?" asked Krishna. Arjuna replied, "I am sorry, it is a crow beyond doubt."

Krishna laughed and chided him for his agreeing to whatever suggestion was given. But Arjuna said, "For me, your Words are far more weighty than the evidence of my eyes; you can make it a crow, a dove or an eagle and when you say it is a crow, it must be one." Implicit faith is the secret of spiritual success.

The Lord loves, not the Bhaktha (devotee) but his Bhakthi, remember. The Lord's Grace is like rain, pure water, falling equally everywhere; but its taste gets changed according to the soil through which it flows. So also the Lord's words are sweet to some, bitter to others. The Lord's ways are mysterious; He blessed Vidhura with the words, "Be destroyed" and Dhushshaasana with the words, "Live for a thousand years;" He meant that Vidhura's 'I' will be destroyed and that the wicked Dhushshaasana will have to suffer the ills and tribulations of this world for ten centuries. You do not know the real reasons behind the actions of the Lord. You cannot understand the motives of other men who are almost like you in everything, actuated by the same motives and having the same likes and dislikes! But yet, how easily you discover the motives of One who is far, far above the level of Man! How glibly you talk and judge of something that is as strange to you as atmosphere to a fish!

Pains indicate birth of new life

There are four types of persons; the 'dead,' who deny the Lord and declare that they alone exist, independent, free,

and self-directed; the 'sick,' who call upon the Lord when some calamity befalls them or when they feel temporarily deserted by the usual sources of succour; the 'dull,' who know that God is eternal companion and watchman, but who remember it only off and on when the idea is potent and powerful; and lastly, the 'healthy,' who have steady faith in the Lord and who live in His comforting creative presence always.

You proceed from 'death' to 'life' and from 'illness' to 'health' by the experience of the buffetings of the World. The World is a very essential part of the curriculum of man; through the agony of search is born the infant, wisdom. The pains are worthwhile; they indicate the birth of new life. From Ashaanthi (restlessness) you get Prashaanthi (absolute peace), from Prashaanthi to Prakaanthi (bright spiritual illumination); and from Prakaanthi, Paramjyothi (Supreme Divine radiance). It is like the alternating of night and day, this recurrence of joy and grief. Night and day are twin sisters, both are necessary to increase the fertility of the soil, to activate and refresh Life. They are like summer and winter. There are some who ask Me, 'Baaba! Make this summer less hot!' But in the heat of summer the Earth takes in the needed energy from the Sun, so that when the rains come, she may yield a plentiful harvest.

Shine forth in your real nature

'Cold' and 'heat' are both in the Plan of God and yours is only to know this and treat both as valuable. Thorny plants and thornless plants are both there in nature; the wise man knows the value of both; he plants the thornless one and surrounds it with the thorny ones, so that what he fosters is left unharmed. Activity can save, as well as kill; it is like the cat which bites; it bites the kitten in order to carry it in its mouth to a place of safety; it bites the rat in order to kill and eat. Become the kitten; and work will rescue you like a loving Mother. Become a rat; and you are lost.

God draws the Individual towards itself; it is the nature of both to have this affinity, for they are the same. They are like the iron and the magnet. But if the iron is rusty covered with layers of dirt, the magnet is unable to attract. Remove the impediment; that is all you have to do. Shine forth in your real nature and the Lord will draw you into His Bosom. Trials and tribulations are the means by which this cleansing is done. That is why Kunthi prayed to Krishna, "Give us always grief, so that we may never forget Thee."

They are like the dietary and other restrictions that the doctor prescribes to supplement the effect of the drug of Naamasmarana (remembrance of God).

Do not give up saadhana

Sai is Sarvajanaapriya (beloved to all people) and so any name which gives you joy, you can take up. Tastes differ according to temperament and the character one has earned by generations of activity as a living being in this world. The proprietor of a coffee house goes to the nearby druggist for a pill to ward off his headache, and the druggist when he gets a headache goes to the coffee house for a cup of coffee which he thinks will cure him. Men are like that; loko bhinna ruchih (tastes of people differ). The says, "Sarvam Brahma mayam." In God is All;" another, a yogi, says all is energy; a third, who is a bhaktha, says all is the play of Bhagavaan (the Lord). Each according to his taste and according to his progress in saadhana (spiritual practice). Do not hurry or ridicule them, for they are all pilgrims trudging along the same road.

Saadhana is most required to control the mind and the desires after which it runs. If you find that you are not able to succeed, do not give up the Saadhana but do it more vigorously, for it is the subject in which you did not get passing marks that requires special study, is it not? Saadhana means inner cleanliness as well as external cleanliness. You do not feel refreshed if you wear unwashed clothes after your bath, do you? Nor do you feel refreshed if you wear washed clothes, but skip the bath. Both are needed, the baahya and the bhaava (the external as well as the internal).

Children believe your words when you say that the policeman will catch them or the ghost will beat them. They are full of fear, fortitude and faith! But having grown old and stuffed your heads with all kinds of doctrines and dogmas and theories and arguments, you have now to use your viveka (discrimination) and discover God the hard way. This I will tell you, there is no escaping it; all creatures have to reach God some day or other, by the long route or by the short route.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, Vijayadhashami, 1953

One wish leads to another; one bond brings about ten others.

It is in the very nature of human desire; for, the joy one gets through its satisfaction is imperfect, limited, temporary, pregnant with grief.

You sow bitter seeds and pray for a harvest of sweetness. You wail over the soil, the plant, the rain. What can they do? The seeds themselves are diseased, defective.

Shri Sathya Sai

2. Sharanaagathi

I DO not give 'speeches'; My talks are more of the conversation type; I want that you should follow every word of what I say with reverent attention, for your Aanandham is My Aahaaram-

-your joy is My food. You can get Aanandham only by following the advice I give you and this is why I am particular that you should listen carefully and take to heart all that I say. This is not a mere lecture, wherefrom you do not seek new lessons for life.

The Lord is a Mountain of Prema (Love); any number of ants carrying away particles of sweetness cannot exhaust His Plenty. He is an Ocean of Mercy without a limiting shore. Bhakthi (devotion) is the easiest way to win His Grace and also to realise that He pervades everything; in fact, is everything!

Sharanaagathi (total surrender), leaving everything to His Will, is the highest form of Bhakthi. (devotion) Once a Brahmin was crossing a river bed near which some men were washing clothes. Finding a nice new silk shawl on his shoulder, they fell upon him in a group, shouting that it belonged to the Palace and had been given to them to be washed, but had been stolen and had not been traced. The poor Brahmin yelled 'Naaraayana, Naaraayana,' when the blows rained on him and so, Naaraayana rose from His Seat in Vaikunththa and proceeded forward; but in a moment, He walked back and resumed His Seat much to the surprise of His Consort who asked Him the reason for the strange behaviour. Naaraayana said, "I wanted to help that poor Brahmin who has fallen into a den of scoundrels, but he has started beating them, blow for blow; My Help is no longer needed."

Conquest of ego needed

When Bhakthi is just emerging as a sapling, a fence is needed to protect the tender plant; that fence is Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion) and its rules, regulations and restrictions, directions and commands. When the fruit is green, it will not fall even when the gale is furious; but when it is fully ripe, it drops to the ground even in the silence of the night. A small fire will go out in smoke even if a little green is placed on it, but the forest fire will reduce to ashes even the greenest tree which impedes its fierce march! What is needed is the conquest of the ego.

The bullock shouts 'ham hai' 'ham hal' (I am, I am), in its egoistic pride. And so, when it is just a few days old, you tie it to a post, apart from its mother; you work it to skin and bones; but yet, the animal does not learn the lesson of humility. Even its skin when drawn tightly across a drum resounds egoistically, 'Ham Ham Ham. And so, the skin has to be cut into slender strings and then when the strings are pulled, the bullock reveals that it has benefitted by all the punishment it has undergone; it murmurs thum thum thum, (you you you), and its ego is gone.

The Haridhaasa (mendicant) goes along the streets, singing the glories of the Lord. He has the sounding cymbals, two of them, the eternal duet of good-bad, joy-grief, pain-pleasure in his right hand and he twangs the thambura (stringed musical instrument) of samsaara with his left. Samsaara (worldly life) is the tune to which his songs have to be adjusted, it is the shruthi (musical note). But both the shruthi and thaala (marking of time) are for the purpose of heightening the effect of the song which issues from his mouth, the song of the glow of God.

Three types of devotion

I remember telling a questioner in Maharaashtra, while in the previous Body, that there are three types of devotion: the vihanga

method, where like a bird swooping down upon the ripe fruit on the tree, the devotee is too impatient and by the very impatience he exhibits, he loses the fruit, which falls from his hold; the markata method where like a monkey which pulls towards it one fruit after another and by sheer unsteadiness is not able to decide which fruit it wants, the bhaktha too hesitates and changes his aim much too often and thus loses all chances of success; and the pipeelika method, where like the ant which slowly but steadily proceeds towards the sweetness, the devotee also moves direct, with undivided attention towards the Lord and wins His Grace!

Bhakthi and shraddha (devotion and faith) are the two oars with which you can take the boat across the sea of samsaara. A child told its mother when it went to bed at night, "Mother! Wake me up when I get hungry." The mother answered, "There is no need, your hunger will itself wake you." So too, when the hunger for God comes, it will itself activise you and make you seek the food you need. God has endowed you with hunger and He supplies the food; He has endowed you with illness and He grows the specifics you need. Your duty is to see that you get the proper hunger and the right illness and use the appropriate food or drug!

Man must be yoked to samsaara and broken; that is the training which will teach that the world is unreal; no amount of lectures will make you believe it is a snake unless you actually experience it. Touch fire and get the sensation of burning; there is nothing like it to teach you that fire is to be avoided. Unless you touch it, you will be aware only of its light. It is light and heat both; just as this world is both true and false, that is to say, unreal.

Habit of judging others as atheists or theists

There is a widely prevalent habit now of judging others and labelling them as theists or atheists. What do you know, what can you know of the inner working of another's mind? There was once a queen who was a great devotee of Raama; she felt so sad that her husband, the Raaja, never even uttered the name of Raama and had no bhakthi. She had vowed that the first occasion on which she got evidence of his bhakthi or at least respect for Raamanaama, she would conduct puuja (ritualistic worship) in all the temples and feed the poor on a lavish scale. Then, one night, while fast asleep, the Raaja uttered the name of Raama thrice plaintively and prayerfully. She heard the Naamasmarana and was happy at the discovery of her husband's devotion to Raama; she ordered general rejoicing throughout the kingdom and the feeding of the poor. The Raaja did not know the reason for the celebration for he was only told that it was an order of the Raani, which the officers carried out. Similarly, a husband may not be aware of the excellence of a wife's spiritual attainments.

There is the case of a couple who were proceeding through a thick jungle on pilgrimage to an inaccessible shrine. The husband saw on the footpath a precious stone, shining brilliantly when the sun's rays fell upon it from between the leaves. He hastily threw some sand over it with a movement of his foot so that his wife may not be temped to pick it up and become a slave to the tinsel. The wife saw the gesture and chided the husband for still retaining in his mind a distinction between sand and diamond. For her, both were the same.

Keep the Name as constant as breathing

The Raaja who spoke in his sleep the sacred name of Raama felt very sorry, according to the story, that he let Raamanaama out of his mouth, for he believed that no one should know of his 'love' for Raama. There are many who will not shout about their Guru or their favourite Name and Form, but whether you declare them to others or not, keep them ever in your consciousness. Raamanaama or any other name must be as constant as breathing. For this, practice is essential.

A person once told Dr. Johnson, the famous English thinker, that he could seldom get time to recite the Name of God, what with the hundreds of things he had to do from morning till nightfall and even far into the night. Dr. Johnson replied with another question. He asked how millions of people found space to live upon the face of the earth, which is two-thirds water and the rest is too full of mountains, deserts, forests, icy regions, river beds, marshes and similar impossible areas. The questioner said that man somehow struggled to find living space. So too, said Dr. Johnson, man must somehow find a few minutes a day for prayer to the Lord.

Example of the highest type of detachment

Bhakthi and the attitude of surrender that is its final fruits will give you great courage to meet any emergency; such courage is what is called Renunciation. The story of Mohajith is a good example of this highest type of detachment.

Mohajith, the Prince, went to a Sage in the forest and sought guidance in the spiritual path. The sage asked him whether he had conquered attachment as his name indicated. The Prince said that not only he, but every one in his kingdom had! So the Sage started to test the truth of this claim.

The sage took the Prince's robes, soaked them in blood and hastened to the Palace Gate with the gruesome stow of the murder of the Prince by some ruffians in the jungle. The maid whom he met refused to hurry with the news to the Royal apartments because she said, "He was born, he died; what is the special urgency of this news that I should interrupt my regular routine and run to the King and Queen?"

When at last he got an audience and was able to communicate the sad news to the father, he sat unruffled, whispering to himself, "The bird flew off the tree on which it had alighted to take rest." The Raani too was unmoved. She told the sage that this Earth is a caravanaserai, where men come and stay for the night and when dawn breaks, one by one, they tramp their different ways. Kith and kin are the words we use for the attachment to the travellers cultivated in the caravanaserai during the short term of acquaintance.

The wife of the "dead" Prince was also unaffected; she said, "Husband and wife are like two pieces of wood drifting down a flooded river; they float near each other for some time and when some current comes between, they are parted: each must move on to the sea at its own rate and in its own time. There is no need to grieve over the parting of the two; it is in the very nature of Nature that it should be so."

Grow with self-respect and dignity

The sage was overjoyed to see this steady and sincere Vairagya (dispassion) in the rulers and the ruled. He came back to the forest and told the Prince that while he was away, a hostile army had invaded his Kingdom and slain the entire royal family and captured his Kingdom and enslaved his subjects. He took the news calmly and said, "All this is bubble, impermanent, flimsy. Let it go the way of the bubble. Guide me to reach the Infinite, the Imperishable."

Such courage comes out of the Grace of the Lord; it needs generations of learning and struggle. Meanwhile, you must start with the first step, the cleansing of the mind and the cultivation of virtue. Even if you do not start with that step, at least do not laugh at those who do, and discourage them. Do at least this much! Then, do not depend upon others for doing your work, like attending to your personal wants. Do them yourself; that is real freedom. Again, never accept anything 'free' from others, pay it back, in service or work.

That will make you self-respecting individuals. Receiving a favour means getting bound to the giver. Grow with self-respect and dignity. That is the best service you can do to yourself.

There is no seniority or juniority among devotees

'Uncle' Moon is 'uncle' to all the children of the world. So also, the Lord is every one's Father, in whose property every one can claim a share. But in order to get it, you must reach a certain age, a certain standard of intelligence and discrimination. The infirm and the idiotic, He will not consider fit to receive property. His property is Grace, Prema. But if you have Discrimination and Renunciation, you can claim your share, as of right.

Bring 'Bhakthi' and lay it here and take from here spiritual strength! The more such business is done, the more pleased am I. Bring what you have, namely, your sorrows and griefs, worries and anxieties, and take from Me joy and peace, courage and confidence. In My view, there is no seniority or juniority among devotees. The mother spends more time tending the sickly child; she just asks the older children to look after themselves; she feeds with her own hand the infant. That does not mean that she has no love towards the grown-ups. So too, do not think that because I do not ostensibly pay more attention to one person, he is beyond the ken of my Prema.

Note this also. In this Avathaar (Divine Incarnation), the wicked will not be destroyed; they will be corrected and reformed and educated and led back to the path from which they have strayed. The white-ant infested tree will not be cut; it will be saved. Again this Avathaar will not select some place other than the place where the Nativity took place for the centre of Its Leelas, Mahimas and Upadhesha (divine sport, miracle power and divine instruction). This tree shall not be transplanted; it will grow where it first rose from the earth. Another speciality is this: the Avathaar has no affinity or attachment in Its Career to members of the Family wherein it appeared. Unlike the appearances as Raama, Krishna, etc., where the Life was played out mostly among and for the family members, this Avathaar is for the Bhakthas, the Saadhus and the Saadhakas (devotees, noble souls and aspirants) only. It has no japa (recitation of holy name), dhyaana (meditation) or yoga (practising union with God). It knows no worship; It will not pray to anything, for It is the Highest. It only teaches you to worship and pray.

To a worldly man, a God-intoxicated person will appear mad and he will laugh at him for it. But to the God-intoxicated man, the worldly appear insane, foolish misled, blind. Of all the insanities that harass man, God-madness is the least harmful, the most beneficial. The world has suffered untold damage due to its "mad" rulers and "mad" guides; but nothing but harmony, peace, brotherliness and love have come out of the 'God-madness' of man!

Prashanthi Nilayam, Mahaashivaraathri, 1955

3. God as Guide

God is Mahaashakthi (Supreme Energy) and Ieeva (individual being) is Maayaashakthi (Deluding Power); He is the genuine, the ieeva is but the shadow, the appearance, the delusion. Even I have to put on Maayaashakthi to come into your midst, like the policeman who is compelled to wear the dress of the thief so that he can get entry into the gang of thieves to apprehend them and bring them to book! The Lord cannot come down with. His Mahaashakthi unimpaired; He has to come with diminished splendour and limited effulgence, so that He can become the object of Bhakthi and Dedicated Service.

In this world which is impermanent and ever transforming, the Immanent Power of the Lord is the only permanent and fixed entity. In order to realise the eternal and the true, one has perforce to attach oneself to that Source and Sustenance. There is no escape from this path. It is the destiny of one and all, irrespective of age or scholarship, clime or caste, sex or status.

While proceeding along the road, you can watch your shadow falling on mud or dirt, hollow or mound, thorn or sand, wet or dry patches of land. You are unaffected by the fate of your shadow, is it not? Nor is the shadow made dirty thereby. It does not worry in the least where it falls or what it wades through. We know that the shadow and its experiences are not eternal or true. Similarly, you must get convinced that 'you' are but the shadow of the Absolute and you are essentially not this 'you' but the absolute itself. That is the remedy for sorrow, travail and pain.

Of course, it is only at the end of a long and systematic process of Saadhana that you will get fixed in the truth; until then, you are apt to identify yourself with this body and forget that the body which casts a shadow is itself a shadow. The first step in Saadhana is the adherence to Dharma in every individual and social act. The Dharma (righteousness) which is followed in relation to Prakrithi (objective world) will automatically lead on to Dharma in the spiritual field also; only you must stick to it through thick and thin. When Aswathaama in the blindness of his fury slaughtered the children of the Paandavas, Arjuna who caught him prisoner threatened to cut off his head; but Dhroupadhi the bereaved mother interceded to save him! She said it was not Dharma to return murder for murder, to slay the son of one's own Guru. Such steadfastness is needed in the path of Dharma (virtue); that alone is the sign of true surrender: "Let the Will of the Lord prevail; one's duty is but to connect oneself with the current of His Grace." While in jail the prisoner cannot call even his clothes his own; so too, while in this jail serving your term, what can you call your own? He gives you food and clothing. He lets you go when the sentence ends, or perhaps sooner if He is pleased by your behaviour while in prison.

The greatest obstacle on the path of surrender is ahamkaara (egoism) and mamakaara (mineness or possessiveness). It is something that has been inhering to your personality since ages, sending its tentacles deeper and deeper with the experience of every succeeding life. It can be removed only by the twin detergents of discrimination and renunciation. Bhakthi is the water to wash away this dirt of ages and the soap of Japam, Dhyaanam and Yoga (repetition of God's name, meditation and communion) will help to remove it quicker and more effectively. The slow and the steady will surely win this race; walking is the safest method of travel, though it may be condemned as slow. Quicker means of travel mean disaster; the quicker the means, the greater the risk of disaster. You should eat only as much as you feel hunger, for, more will cause disorder. So proceed step by step in Saadhana (spiritual effort); making sure of one step before you take another. Do not slide back two paces when you go one pace forward. But even the first step will be unsteady, if you have no faith. So cultivate faith. Sathyabhaama once asked Krishna, "Why are you: doing things like ordinary men? Yudhishtira, the eldest of the Paandavas is the best of the brothers but you hobnob always with Arjuna, whose reputation is not above board." Her faith was not steady! What do people know of the motives that prompt the Lord and His actions? Some found fault with Naaradha for repeating the name of the Lord, always, without intermission. But until Saavyujyam (merging in the Absolute), the name has to be used; the idea of separation will end only with mergence, not before that. Do not waver or doubt when once you are convinced. Seek to understand and satisfy yourself. After that, do not be misled. When the Sun is over your head there will be no shadow; similarly when faith is steady in your head it should not cast any shadow of doubt. When man loses his way and strays into the wilderness, believing that he is the body or gunas (qualities) or the object, then the Avathaar comes to warn and guide. Keep the faith in the Lord undiminished; you can then safely move about in the world. No harm can come to you! Be like the village women with pots over their heads, one over the other, keeping balance even while talking and walking along the winding lane. They do not forget or ignore the burden or the goal. They are vigilant, conscious of the hardships on the way, the stones and the pits; it is the inner concentration

One should depart the world with a smile

Every one has to make his exit some day; that moment should not be a moment of anguish; one should depart gracefully, with a smile and a bow. In order to do that, a lot of preparation is necessary. To depart, leaving all that has been accumulated during a long lifetime, is a hard task; so prepare for it by discarding attachment to one thing after another from now on.

You see many things in dreams and many things are acquired by you during dreams: power, pelf, status, reputation. But when you awake, you do not weep over the loss, even though for the duration of the dream all that was very real and gave you real satisfaction and joy. That was a 'dream', you tell yourself; what prevents you from treating with similar nonchalance the possessions gathered during the waking stage of your life? Cultivate that attitude and you can depart with a smile whenever the curtain falls on this dreamland stage.

Pray to the Lord to show you the way

In order to bring conviction to you in all this, it is best you approach a Guru (spiritual preceptor) who knows the Truth by experience and whose daily activities, words and thoughts reflect this realisation. The Guru is called so because the letter GU signifies Gunaatheetha---one who has transcended the three gunas (qualities)---the Thaamasik, the Raajasik and even the Saathwik (ignorant passionate and virtuous); and the letter RU signifies one who is Roopa Varjitha (one who has grasped the formless aspect of God-head). Of course, he could come to that stage only through the sublimation of the lower into the higher qualities and the steady and conscious ignoring of the part played by mere name and form.

In the preliminary stages of spiritual Saadhana, name, form and quality all have their part to play in the moulding of the spirit. The Guru destroys the illusion and sheds light; his presence is cool and comforting. That is why this day, a Pournami (Full Moon day), is allotted for paying due honour to the Guru. Moreover, the Moon is the presiding deity of the mind and Pournami is the day on which the mind has become fully beneficent. Of course, you must know what you have lost, so that you may start on the search to recover it! The Guru has very often to tell you that you have forgotten your real name or that you have lost the most precious part of yourself and yet are unaware of the loss. The Guru is the physician for the illness which brings about the suffering of alternate birth and death. He is an adept at the treatment needed for the cure. If you do not get such a Guru, pray to the Lord Himself to show you the way and He will surely come to your rescue.

The mind must become the servant of the intellect, not the slave of the senses. It must discriminate and detach itself from the body. Like the ripe tamarind fruit, which becomes loose inside the shell, it must be unattached to this shell, this casement called body. Strike a green tamarind fruit with a stone and you cause harm to the pulp inside; but, strike the ripe fruit and see what happens. It is the dry rind that falls off; nothing affects the pulp or the seed.

The ripe aspirant does not feel the blows of fate or fortune; it is the unripe man who is wounded by every blow.

4. Divine Life

A CONVENTION of the Workers of the Divine Life Mission must include all humanity, for no one is outside its pale; all are plodding along the road to the realisation of the Divinity that is immanent in each. The mission on which every individual has come is to merge the individuality in the Universal. The life that each being is leading is saturated with the Divine; Existence or Sath is derived from the source of all Sath, Brahman (Supreme Reality) Itself; Consciousness or Chith is derived from the source of all Chith, Brahman Itself. Bliss or Aanandha is derived from the source of all. Aanandha, Brahman Itself.

You are all Sath-Chith-Aanandha swaruupa (embodiments of Existence - Consciousness-Bliss); only, you are unaware of it and imagine yourself to be this individual or that, and subjected to this limitation or that! This is the myth that must be exploded in order that Divine Life may start. It is the Divine that inspires, that activates, that leads and fulfils the life of each being, however simple or complex its physical structure may be. From the Anu (atom) to the Brihath (Universe) every single entity is moving towards the estuary where it merges in the sea of Bliss.

Divine Life is the very breath of all beings; it consists of Sathya, Prema and Ahimsa (Truth, Love and Non-injury). For, how can any one be false to another when there is no other at all? Falsehood comes out of fear. When there is no second, there is no fear at all. No one is loved more than the Self: so, when all is the self-same Self, all is loved as the Self is loved. As for himsa, who is to injure whom, when all are but one?

How to lead the Divine Life? There is no special membership that entitles you to it. Every struggle to realise the Unity behind all the multiplicity is a step on the path of Divine Life. You have to churn the milk if you wish to separate and identify the butter that is immanent in it. So too, you have to carry on certain processes of thought and action in order to get to the hard core of faith that this world is a funny mixture Of Sathyam and Asathyam (real & unreal), that it is mithya (false), in fact. The Divine Life does not admit of the slightest dross in character or delusion in intellect. So, people dedicated to it must emphasise this by precept and example.

Wipe out the root causes of anxiety and fear and ignorance.

Then only can the true personality of man shine forth. Anxiety is removed by faith in the Lord; the faith that tells you that whatever happens is for the best and that the Lord's Will be done. Quiet acceptance is the best armour against anxiety; not the acceptance of the heroic. Sorrow springs from egoism, the feeling that you do not deserve to be treated so badly, that you are left helpless. When egoism goes, sorrow disappears. Ignorance is just a mistake, mistaken identity of the body as the Self!

In fact, you must each one try to become ego-less and then the Lord will accept you as His Flute. Once, when a number of people were asked by Me what they would like to be in the hands of God, I got various answers: some said the Lotus, some the Shankha (Conch), some the Chakra (Discus) but no one mentioned the Murali (Flute). I would advise you to become the Murali, for then the Lord will come to you, pick you up, put you to His lips and breathe through you and, out of the hollowness of your heart due to the utter absence of egoism that you have developed, He will create captivating music for all Creation to enjoy. Be straight without any will of your own, merge your will in the Will of God. Inhale only the breath of God. That is Divine Life, that is what I want you all to achieve.

A mere five-minute inquiry will convince you that you are not the body, or the senses, the mind or the intelligence, the name or the form, but that you are the Aathma itself, the same aathma that appears as all this variety. Once you get a glimpse of this truth, hold on to it; do not allow it to slip. Make it your permanent possession.

5. Japasahitha Dhyaana

(Meditation on the Lord's Form and Fame)

The devotee who spoke first here now was, let me tell you, denying God for 25 years and it is only since five years, after seeing Me, that he has changed. Of course, many people have had no experience which could change them and so they are not to be blamed for their want of faith. So too, this Seshagiri Rao here was finding fault with his son and daughters for coming to Puttaparthi, and himself for long refusing to come! One day at Bangalore, there was a function in the house opposite his, for I had gone there. During Bhajana (group singing of devotional songs), this man hesitantly crossed the road and peeped into the hall and I went forward and called him and made him sit near Me. I asked him to come to Puttaparthi and invited him to 'examine' and 'experience'. He has been with Me ever since; it is now 18 years since he first came here. This is just the reason why I came to sow the seeds of faith, in religion and in God. You might have heard some people say that I became Sai Baba when a scorpion stung me! Well, I challenge any one of you to get stung by scorpions and transform yourself into Sai Baba. No, the scorpion had nothing to do with it! In fact, there was no scorpion at all! I came in response to the prayers of sages, saints and spiritual aspirants for the restoration of Dharma (Righteousness).

The root cause of all this restlessness

When there is a sign of a little unrest, the police constable appears on the scene; if the mob gets unruly, the Inspector rushes in; and if it becomes violent, the Superintendent of Police has to be personally present on the scene to quell it. If, however, the situation waxes hot, the Inspector-General has to make himself available, is it not? This is a situation in which the I-G. is taking over-all charge of the situation. The Mahaapurushas, the Mahaathmas, the Inaanis, the Yogis and the Dhevaamsa-sambhuuthas (sages, savants, saints, yogis & divine personalities) have had their try, and they will all be co-operating in the task of re-establishing righteousness and clearing the path for the world attaining Shaanthi (absolute peace). The greatest defect today is the absence of Aathma vichaara (the inquiry into the nature of the Self). That is the root cause of all this ashaanthi (restlessness). If you are eager to know the truth about yourself, then even if you do not believe in God, you will not go astray. The pots are all of mud, the ornaments are all of gold, the clothes are all of yarn. There is unity where one saw only diversity; the basic substance is one and indivisible. That is Brahman (Supreme Reality), that is the Aathma, which is your own basic substance too.

This Aathma vichaara is best found in the Upanishaths. Just as a river's flow is regulated by bunds and the flood waters are directed to the sea, so too the Upanishaths regulate and restrict the senses, the mind and the intellect and help one to reach the sea and merge individuality in the Absolute. Study the Upanishaths with a view to act accordingly, to put the advice into practice.

Scanning a map or turning over a guide-book will not give you the thrill of the actual visit, nor will it give you a fraction of the joy and knowledge of a journey through that land. The Upanishaths and the Geetha are only maps and guide-books, remember.

Call upon the Lord in your own heart

There is the story of a rustic who sat among a gathering of devotees and listened to the exposition of the Geetha by a great Pandith. All were wonder-struck by the scholarly commentary which the Pandith gave and his learned disquisition on each word and phrase and the rustic, though the exposition was very much over his head, seemed to attend very closely for he was all the time in tears! When at last the Pandith asked him why he was weeping, he surprised everybody by the sincerity of his Bhakthi. For he said that he wept at the predicament of the Lord, who had to sit at the head of the chariot and half turning his neck hold forth so long to convince the dull-witted Arjuna. "How much pain must He be suffering in His neck?" he asked and wept. That was real devotion, a sure passport to spiritual victory. He had identified himself with the participants in the episode and the whole setting had become alive for him.

You need not even read the Geetha or the Upanishaths. You will hear a Geetha specially designed for you if you call upon the Lord in your own heart. He is there, installed as your own charioteer. Ask Him and He will answer. Have the Form of the Lord before you when you sit quietly in a place for meditation and have His Name, that is, any Name when you dojapam (repetition of holy Name). If you do japam, without that Picture or Form before you, who is to give the answer? You cannot be talking all the time to yourself. The Ruupam (Form) will hear and the Ruupam will respond.

All agitations must cease one day, is it not? The Dhyaana of the Form and the japam of the Name---that is the only means for this task.

Stick to the Name and Form you like the most

The secret is: you should 'be', but not be as in sleep, when you are aware deep down within you, that you are. Only, sleep is enveloped in Maayaa (Delusion). Awake from that delusion, but immerse yourself in this sleep that is real Samaadhi state of Bliss). Japam and Dhyaanam are means by which you can compel even the concretisation of the Divine Grace, in the Form and with the Name you yearn for. The Lord has to assume the Form you choose, the Name you fancy; in fact, you shape Him so. Therefore, do not change these two, but stick to the ones that please you most, whatever the delay or the difficulty.

Do not get discouraged that you are not able to concentrate for long from the very beginning. When you learn to ride a bicycle, you do not get the skill of keeping the balance immediately. You push the cycle along to an open maidan and hop and skip, leaning now to one side and now to the other and even fall with the cycle upon you on many an attempt before you are able to ride with skill and never again to worry about the balance. Automatically, you are able to make the necessary adjustments to correct the balance, is it not? After getting this skill, you can ride through the narrow streets and lanes and you do not need an open maidan; you can negotiate your vehicle through the most crowded thoroughfares. So too practice will equip you with a concentration that will sustain you in the densest of surroundings and the most difficult situations.

Do not be under the impression that I will be angry with you if you do not accept Me as the Dhyaana ruupam (Form for meditation)! I am not concerned at all; you have perfect freedom to select the Name and Form that give you necessary encouragement. When you meditate, the mind often runs after something else, it takes another road. You have then to plug that outlet by means of the Name and the Form and see that the even flow of your thoughts towards the Lord is not interrupted; if it happens again, use the Name and the Form again, quickly. Do not allow the mind to go beyond the twin bunds, this side Naama and that side Ruupam! Then it will not stray into a third place.

First, when you sit for meditation, recite a few shlokas on the glow of God, so that the thoughts that are scattered could be collected. Then gradually, while doing japam, draw before the mind's eye the Form which that Name represents. When your mind wanders away from the recital of the Name, take it on to the picture of the Form. When it wanders away from the picture, lead it on to the Name. Let it dwell either on that sweetness or this. Treated thus it can be easily tamed. The imaginary picture you have drawn will get transmuted into the Bhaava chithram (emotional picture), dear to the heart and fixed in the memory; gradually it will become the Saakshaathkaara chitram---when the Lord assumes that Form in order to fulfil your desire.

Use the body as an instrument for spiritual practice

This saadhana (spiritual practice) is called japa sahitha dhyaana (meditation on the Lord's Name and Form) and I advise you all to take it up, for it is the best for beginners. Within a few days, you will fall in line and you will taste the joy of concentration. After about ten or fifteen minutes in the initial stages and longer after some time of this Dhyaana, have some manana (inward contemplation) on the shaanthi and the sowkhyam (peace and contentment) you had during the dhyaana; that is to say, bring back into your memory the joy you experienced. This will help your faith and earnestness. Then, do not get up suddenly and start moving about, resuming your avocations. Loosen the limbs slowly, deliberately and gradually, and then enter upon your usual duties. Taste the fruits of dhyaana and learn to relish them; that is what I mean by this process of manana (repeated reflection).

Be careful about your physical health also. Satisfy the demands of nature; the car must be given the petrol which it needs. Otherwise, your head might reel and your eyes might get blurred through sheer exhaustion; how can thoughts of the Lord be stabilised in a weak frame? Only, do not forget the purpose of this body when you are tending it. A road-roller is fed with oil and coal and other types of fuel. But why is it kept in good trim? In order to mend the road, is it not? Similarly, remember that you have come embodied, so that you might realise the end of this cycle of birth and death. For that sake, use the body as an instrument. Flying hither and thither, higher and higher, the bird has at last to perch on a tree for rest. So too, even the richest and the most powerful man seeks rest, shaanthi. Peace can be got only in one shop, in inner reality. The senses will drag you along into a mire, which submerges you deeper and deeper in alternate joy and grief, that is to say, prolonged discontent. Only the contemplation of unity can remove fear, rivalry, envy, greed, desire---all the feelings that prompt discontent. Every other avenue can give only a day will come when you will throw away all these play-things and toys and cry, "Lord! grant Me unruffled peace." The dacoit Vaalmeeki prayed so; the confirmed atheist too has one day to pray for peace and rest.

Engage yourself in good thoughts and deeds

People hug brass pots and take them to be gold, but they have to polish them so that they may appear bright. One day, they will get disgusted with this constant polishing and scrubbing; they will pray, "Release me from this scrubbing, this birth, this suffering and this agony." Life is short; time is fleeting; your saadhana is creeping at tortoise speed. When will you decide to proceed a little faster? Your saadhana is like the answers you write at the examination. If you get only 5 or 6 marks, then the examiner will strike out even that, saying, "What is the use of these few marks: it will take him neither here nor there." If you get somewhere near the passing marks, then Grace will give you just a little more so that you may pass, provided you have been a diligent well behaved student.

Engage yourselves in good deeds, good company and good thoughts. Fix your attention on the goal. You have not realised yet the secret of this Advent. You are indeed lucky, more fortunate than many others. It is only when Yasodha found every length of rope a little short to go round His belly that she discovered He was the Lord. So to, you will realise every description of My Mahima (Divine Glory) a little too short of the actuality; and then you will get convinced. Meanwhile if you study the Shaasthras and know the characteristics of the Avathaar of the Lord, you might get a glimpse of the Truth regarding Me.

You will know the truth when you experience

There is no use arguing and quarrelling among yourselves; examine, experience; then you will know the truth. Do not proclaim before you are convinced; be silent while you are still undecided or engaged in evaluating. Of course, you must discard all evil in you before you can attempt to evaluate the mystery. And, when faith dawns, fence it around with discipline and self-control, so that the tender shoot might be guarded against the goats and cattle, the motley crowd of cynics and unbelievers. When your faith grows into a big tree, those very cattle can lie down in the shade that it will spread.

Chithravathi River Bed, Puttaparthi, 23-2-1958

6. An attitude of challenge

WE heard the address of thanks which the sixth form boys gave to the teachers of the school and the advice they gave to the students of the lower forms. Their words were very sweet, full of gratitude to the teachers and full of encouragement to the students who continue to be under the care of those teachers. They also expressed their grief that they had to leave a fine school and a fine set of instructors and a fine company of fellow-students. But though the words were fine, I doubt whether the feelings were also such, for after all they knew they have to leave the school for higher studies. All these years, they knew that this day will come. Of course it is good to see that boys express gratefulness for the benefits they derived. They promised also to serve their country to the best of their ability. For they are the guardians of this land in the days to come. I am specially happy in the company of students, for they are like the buds in the garden; they are the young heroes who have to take up the difficult task of national and international reconstruction.

The present situation in the world is like a typhoon, causing unrest and confusion. No one has mental quiet; fear and anxiety stalk everywhere; panic reigns even while the conquest of space and the mapping of new planets is being hailed. Even in this country, it is a time of crisis and no time should be lost to set matters right so that men may enjoy shaanthi (peace) more than anything else; for, without Shaanthi, life is a nightmare.

Tolerate all kinds of persons and opinions

While studying other things, you should learn the secret of Shaanthi also. This opportunity should not be missed, for that is the wisdom that will save you. The present system of education aims at making you bread-winners and citizens, but it does not give you the secret of a happy life; namely, discrimination between the unreal and the real--which is the genuine training you need. Of course, it is not your fault, but of those who direct these affairs. They will have to do it, sooner rather than later. The cultivation of viveka (discrimination) is the chief aim of education; the promotion of virtuous habits, the strengthening of Dharma, these are to be attended to; not the acquisition of polish or gentlemanliness, or collection of general information and the practice of common skills. First, be fixed in the consciousness that yourself is the immortal Aathma, which is indestructible, which is holy, pure and divine. That will give you unshakable courage and strength. Then, you must develop mutual love and respect. Tolerate all kinds of persons and opinions, all attitudes and peculiarities. The school, the home and the society are all training grounds for tolerance. At school, the teachers and the pupils must be aware of their duties and rights. The relationship must be based on love, not fear. Only the atmosphere of love can guarantee happy co-operation and concord. Above all, be good, honest and well-behaved. That will make the university degrees more desirable and valuable. Do not attach undue value to the passing of examinations, for, if you do so, you are apt to get terribly depressed when you fail; we hear of too many young people committing suicide when the results of the examinations are announced. Dear children, do not do any such foolish thing. Take failure, if it comes, as a spur to further effort; analyse why you failed and profit by the experience. If you ruin yourself by such foolish actions, it will pain Me, remember. Refuse to become scapegoats of politicians. Learn when you are students how to succeed in the turmoil of life, how to live without causing pain to others and suffering pain yourself. Do not waste time taking part in electioneering and quarrelling over the factions and fancies of elders; they are setting you very bad examples and you must avoid imitating their low behaviour. Politics is a variety of 'ticks' which infest some individuals and worry their lives out. Do not catch that infection from them. Be clean and content. You are too young to understand the complications and confusions of politics and you can only be the tools and instruments of people who want to use you for their own purposes. Be bold; refuse to become the scapegoats of such men. Tell them you have better work to do. Proceed only as far as your own talents and experience can take you. Examine everything and believe only what appeals to you as correct. Do not simply say, Sai Baaba spoke well, or Sai Baaba writes well; respect Sai Baaba only if He does as well as He speaks and writes. Devotion and Activity---these two should go together. Shri B. Gopaala Reddi had come to inaugurate the Hospital at Puttaparthi and he said, "If only Government had planned this Hospital, even the basement would not have come up now." So also, this school has risen to this fame and height due to the care and love of the founders and supporters. All should co-operate in tending such institutions; difference of opinion must be like the two eyes, each giving a different picture of the same object; both of which, when co-ordinated, give a complete rounded picture. The donors of this school have done a very good thing: they have done it in a spirit of worship and humanity. Be grateful for their sacrifice and make the best use of the chance they have provided.

India is blessed with many saints and sages

The District Judge in his opening remarks said that Bhaarith has been blessed with many saints and sages and with many manifestations of Divinity in Human Form. A doubt may arise why such appearances take place in Bhaarith, more than in any other place, when the world is so big and we have humanity everywhere to be saved and guided. There is a reason for this, believe Me! Well, why should, in all India, Kolaar alone have gold? Where there is a gold mine, there is the need for mining engineers and chemists who will extract it, separate it, purify it and distribute it to the various places where gold is in demand, is it not?

So also, it is here in India that there is a mine of spiritual wisdom and spiritual treasure: the Dharshanas, Upanishaths (metaphysical sciences and revelatory scriptures), the Geetha and the Vedhas. This has to be distributed pure and unsullied, guaranteed in value and quality, to eager aspirants everywhere and so we have here a succession of sages and saints. On account of the teachings and the lives of these people, there is a vast field of spiritual virtue in this land, which needs only a little more care to yield a rich harvest.

People suffer because they have all kinds of unreasonable desires and they pine to fulfil them and they fail. They attach too much value to the objective world. It is only when attachment increases that you suffer pain and grief. If you look upon nature and all created objects with the insight derived from the Inner Vision, then attachment will slide away, though effort will remain; you will also see everything much clearer and with a glow suffused with Divinity and splendour. Close these eyes and open those inner eyes and what a grand picture of essential Unity you get! Attachment to nature has limits, but the attachment to the Lord that you develop when the inner eye opens has no limit. Enjoy that Reality, not this false picture.

The Lord is the Immanent Power in everything; those who refuse to believe that the image in the mirror is a picture of themselves, how can they believe in the Lord, when He is reflected in every object around them? The moon is reflected in a pot, provided it has water; so too, the Lord can be clearly seen in your heart, provided you have the water of Prema (Love) in it. When the Lord is not reflected in your heart, you cannot say that there is no Lord; it only means that there is no prema in you.

Students and even elders here have given up the study of Samskrith, dismissing it as a useless difficult language. They have neglected the ancient texts, bundling them up and taking them down only on festival days for worship! But Western aspirants who know their worth have taken them to their own lands and they have translated them into their own tongues and learnt their essence with devotion.

Reading is not enough; you may master all the commentaries and you may be able to argue and discuss with great scholars about these texts; but without attempting to practise what they teach, it is a waste of time. I never approve of book-learning; practice is what I evaluate. When you come out of the examination hall you know whether you will pass or not, is it not? For you can yourself judge whether you have answered well or not. So in saadhana (spiritual effort) or in conduct or in practice, each of you can judge and ascertain the success or failure that is in store. Saadhana is the essential thing even for you; for no age is too early for this. Just as you tend the body with food and drink at regular intervals, you must also tend to the needs of the inner Aathmic body by regular japam and dhyaanam and the cultivation of virtues. Sath-sanga, and Sath-chinthana (holy company, good attitude and sacred thoughts) are all essential for the growth and the health of the inner personality. The body is the Bhavanam (mansion) of the Bhuvaneshwara (Lord of the world), His Bhuvanam. In so far as you are particular about coffee or tea at regular intervals, be also particular about dhyaanam and japam at fixed times for the health and liveliness of the spirit.

Students must have challenging attitude towards things; they must honour physical labour. They should be eager to be of service to those who need it on account of their disabilities. Honour also your elders and do not miss any chance of serving, honouring or pleasing them. Whatever gives you health, joy, welcome it; but do not lower yourself by indulging in vulgar pastimes. Do not wander aimlessly in the streets or frequent cinema-halls and mix with undesirable company, or cultivate bad habits just for sake of fun. This country has to be raised to great heights through you, not through its present leaders, remember. Note also that whereas in other countries, people co-operate gladly with some one who is courageous, intelligent and good, here the national trait is to be jealous of one another, to pull down those who are rising high, and to refuse co-operation and help. You boys must say to yourselves, "These elders do such things though they know them to be wrong. What a pity! But we shall grow up differently. We shall not belie our words in our actions. We will act together in harmony and love." If you develop such virtues, the nation will prosper; if not, it will be ruined. Have this warning always ringing in your ears.

I bless all of you: citizens, parents, teachers and students.

This school, which was established by the generosity of the people, will certainly grow into higher status and shine as a great institution. I have no doubt of that.

Kannan High School, Chittoor, 2-2-1958

7. Courage

Tins talk was not previously planned, but it is a case of the prayer of devotees being fulfilled. I am not giving you any new advice today; it is the same advice that I have given to students in many places. For, places may be different, but students are the same; and their nature, character, ideals and problems are the same in all places.

The President of this meeting said just now that you are all busy preparing for the examinations, and that many of you have taken up your books only now. This has become quite usual now-

nine months of the year you read all kinds of trash and in the two or three months left you pore over the really essential ones. This is not correct! It is very harmful to stuff the brain with all kinds of unwanted and paltry things. When you have some free time, read and assimilate such books as will promote an intelligent appreciation of the world and its mystery. To live a happy, peaceful and contented life, good education is necessary; education which is based on Dharma (righteousness).

Do not develop a dread of examinations; there, in a fixed time, you have to write answers to a certain number of questions. Well, some students start answering the very first question and go on serially with the rest; but it is always better to pause a little and read the entire question paper and select the ones that you can tackle with confidence, and write the answers for these in the beginning. This will give you a good fillip to exercise your brains better for answering the more difficult questions later.

Cultivation of virtues is very important

Never lose courage in the examination hall or outside.

Courage is the fertilizer which will make the plant of scholarship grow. The field may be good, but manuring is also necessary. You must all become heroes, adventurous and bold; prepare for that role from now on. Man has inside him a whole set of animals: the dog, the fox, the ass, the wolf. But he must suppress the tendencies of all these animals and encourage the human qualities of love and friendship to shine forth. Friendship that is cultivated from childhood onwards is more lasting and so try to cultivate real friends now. Above all, begin the cultivation of virtues; that is more important and beneficial than mere book-learning. That gives real Aanandha; that is the essence of all knowledge, the culmination of all learning.

Treat every one as your own people and even if you cannot do them any good, desist from causing them any injury. Burn the lamp of love inside the niche of your heart and then the nocturnal birds of greed and envy will fly away, unable to bear the light. Prema makes you humble; it makes you bend and bow when you see greatness and glory. An unbending person is infected with egoism of the worst type; remember man is the only animal that can recognise and revere the great and the glorious. Use that capacity and derive the best advantage out of it.

Just as there are two wires, the positive and the negative, which are brought together to produce illumination, similarly, the Paramaathma (Supreme Self) and the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) have to come together in Yoga, to grant illumination. So, go to the holy men and holy places and keep company with pious men. A magnet attracts only iron; so a student attracts towards him only those who will help his study, only such things as will give him aanandha and dhairya (joy and daring).

Have faith that Truth will save you in the long run; stick to it, regardless of what might befall. For if you are true, the sense of guilt will not gnaw your insides and cause pain. It is cowardice that makes you hide the truth; it is hatred that sharpens the edge of falsehood. Be bold and there is no need for a lie. Be full of love and there is no need for subterfuge. The easiest habit is speaking the truth, honesty; for, if you start telling lies, you will have to keep count of them and remember how many you have told to whom and be always alert not to contradict one lie with another! Love a person and you need no longer deceive him with a lie; you will feel that he deserves the truth and nothing less than the truth. Love saves a good deal of bother.

Do not be led away by all this present-day talk of equality, either of men and women, or of all men. Each has a certain fund of intelligence and a peculiar bundle of instincts and impulses and vaasanas (past impressions). To the extent that you develop them or divert them or diminish their strength, to that extent there is bound to be difference in your equipment and achievement. Use all chances you get to develop your skills and your health and your character. That is your present duty. Make lasting friendships. Do not by any action of yours cause pain to another; nor suffer pain yourself, by foolishness or sheer bravado.

In your school, I find there are some girls too; treat them with great respect and do not speak slightly of them. They are your sisters and by honouring them, you bring honour to yourselves and your sisters. Respect for women is a sign of real culture.

So, I call upon you to read good books; revere your teachers and to love all. Do not dishonour your elders; cultivate the spirit of service and learn how to serve the sick and the needy and seize every chance to help others. Or at least, desist from causing sorrow to others.

B. Z. High School, Chittoor, 3-3-1958

In your daily affairs, do not create factions, or revel in hatred. See the good in others and the faults in yourselves. Revere others as having God installed in them; revere yourself also as the seat of God. Make your heart pure so He can reside therein.

8. Many roads

I HAVE not come to you to 'lecture' for I do not believe in the value of mere words, however scholarly or pompous or profuse. I have come only to share with you My Prema and partake in turn of your prema. It is that which I value most. That is the real gain. Today, the typhoon of hatred and falsehood is scattering the clouds of Dharma, Nyaaya and Sathya (Virtue, Justice and Truth) to the far corners of the sky and people feel that Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion) itself is in danger of extinction. But that can happen only if the Lord wills, and the Lord who has laid down the Dharma will not allow it to be destroyed.

Wherever sathya, dharma, shaanthi and prema are emphasised, in whatever religion or language, by whichever teacher wherever he may be, there we have Sanaathana Dharma. So long as man is capable of prema, dharma will exist, do not doubt it. When that prema is fixed on the Lord, your mental make-up will slowly and steadily undergo a revolutionary change; then, man will share in the sorrows and joys of his fellow-beings; thereafter, he contacts the very source of the bliss that is beyond the temporary gains and losses of this world. Prema (Divine Love) directed to the Lord is called bhakti (devotion) and it is the easiest of all the paths to realise the goal.

For treading the path of devotion, one needs only Love

Bhakti can be spoken of as having several stages.

Mukhyabhakti is the stage where the seva (service) of the Lord alone matters and it is its own reward; the devotee does not seek anything more than just the service of the highest, done to the utmost of capacity. This gradually becomes Paraabhakti, where nothing except the Name and Form of the Beloved is cognised.

Again, there is what is called Gounabhakti, which is coloured by the three Gunas (inner qualities): the attitude of the arthā (the afflicted), the arthārthi (the seeker of worldly comfort), the

(the sincere inquirer) and the īnāni (the wise man) who is silent and content with the realisation that all is He.

For treading the Bhakti maarga (path of devotion), one needs no scholarship, nor wealth nor riches, nor ascetic rigours. Tell Me what was the lineage of Vaalmeeki, the wealth of Kuchela, the scholarship of Sabari, the age of Prahlaadha, the status of Gajaraaja, the attainments of Vidhura? Prema---that was all they had and that was all they needed. The Grace of the Lord is as the Ocean: vast, limitless. By your saadhana, your japam, dhyaanam and systematic cultivation of virtue, this Grace is converted into clouds of truth; and they rain on humanity as prema showers, which collect and flow as the flood of aanandha, back again into the Ocean---the Ocean of the Lord's Grace. When prema embraces humanity, we call it dhaya (compassion), the quality not of pity but of sympathy; sympathy which makes one happy when others are happy, and miserable when others are unhappy.

You have seen beggars singing in the streets, is it not? They have each of them a pair of cymbals in one hand by which they mark time, and a single-stringed instrument in the other, to the twang of which they tune their singing. The song will be harsh if it is out of tune and it will be confusing medley if the timing is not kept up. The song of life has also to be similar; keep up the daily tasks and sing away in joy to the tune of prema. Then only is the music worthwhile.

Two main principles to follow in life

It is the mind which makes or mars man. If it is immersed in things of the world, it leads to bondage; if it treats the world as but temporary, then by that vairagya (detachment) it becomes free and light. Train the mind not to feel attached to things that change for better or for worse. Do not hold before it the tinsels of worldly fame and riches; attract it towards lasting joys derived from springs inside you. That will bring big rewards. The mind itself will then become the Guru, for it leads you on and on, once it has tasted the sweets of Shravana, Manana and Nidhidhyaasana (listening, recapitulating and repeated steady meditation). It is the mind that fills the image made by the potter with the Divinity which the devotee sees in it; it is the mind which fills the shrine-room with the fragrance of holiness.

It is the practice, one reads, that imparts strength, as food does when digested and as exercise does to promote health. Saint Thyaagaraaja sang that the Lord is the inner motive force within the ant as well as the Universe; but though you may intellectually agree, when an ant bites, you do not feel that you have come in contact with the Lord in that form, do you? Do not proclaim great truths aloud; show by your conduct that you attach value to them and that you are guided by them. Be careful of at least this; do not yourself commit those faults of which you accuse others. Do not ask others to reach a standard which you are loathe to climb up to! If you live according to these two principles, then even if you do not fall before an image or attend the temple ritual or worship as per schedule, you can secure the Lord's Grace.

It is possible to see the Lord dwell in every being

There are many roads through which you can reach Madras; so also there are many roads to Godhead; prema, sathya, seva, dhaya and Naamasmarana (Love, truth, service, compassion and remembrance of the Lord's Name). There is also the Adhwaithin who discovers himself as the basic substance of all creation, as Brahman itself. All paths are right; only some are easier, some more circuitous, some hard. The easiest way of grasping the basic reality is to see the Lord in every creature, the Lord sporting in all this multiplicity, as the underlying reality of all, the Sarvabhuutha antharaathma (Indweller in all Beings). You might wonder and even doubt how it is possible for the Lord to dwell in every being. But have you not seen one single mango seed grow into a tree which gives thousands of fruits, in each of which there is to be found a seed identical to the one which was first planted? So too, the one Lord can be found in every being created by His Will.

Remember your real nature is the same as the other man's; he is yourself known by another name. When you do a good deed, you are doing it to yourself; when you do a bad turn to some one, remember, you are injuring yourself; so, avoid doing evil to others. I am reminded of what Hussain, the son of Rabbia Malik of Persia, used to do. He rose early and went to the mosque for prayers with great diligence and devotion. When he came back, he found the servants of the house still sleeping on their mats and he grew wild at them; he swore and cursed them for neglect of religious duties. Then his father chastised him. He said; "Son, why do you get angry with those poor souls who are too tired to wake up early. Do not wipe off the good results of your adherence to the rule of God by falling foul of these innocent slaves. I wish you would much rather rise late and abstain from the mosque, for now you have grown proud that you are more religious than these others and you dare blame them for faults for which they are not themselves responsible."

You must pay attention to these small details also, for bhakti is not just a pose; it is a series of little acts, directed by the attitude of reverence for the divinity in all beings. Watch for the lie that lurks on the tongue, the violence that lurks behind the fist, the ego that lurks behind the deed. Restrain them before they grow into habits and settle down as character to warp your destiny.

Raamaswaami Reddy said that I work many miracles and that you are all lucky to have had this opportunity of hearing Me. Well, I am like a shop-keeper whose shop is stocked with all things man needs. But like the man behind the counter, I give you only what you ask for; if the customer asks for a towel, how can I give him a dhothi? But these material things are not important at all. Ask for bhakti (devotion) and for inaana (spiritual wisdom) and I shall be happy. Many do not crave for such things now; it is their misfortune. They are merely wasting their precious chance.

Perhaps, the elders are to be blamed for this situation. For it is the duty of the elders to show the rising generation by their lives that spiritual saadhana and study have made them more joyful and courageous in the adventure of life. Youths always imitate the elders; they quarrel if they find the elders deriving joy from quarrels; they cavil at holiness if the elders do not honour holy men and institutions. So, I will not blame the young men as much as I blame the elders.

Piety is not weakness but strength

Faith in God and in spiritual discipline has declined due to want of enthusiasm among the elders in these matters. It is the responsibility of all pious men to demonstrate in and through their lives that piety is not weakness but strength; that it opens up a vast spring of power and that a person with faith in God can overcome obstacles much more easily than one who has not.

I do not insist that a person should have faith in God. I refuse to call any person a naasthika (an atheist). Beings exist as a result of His Will, in accordance with His Plan; so no one is beyond His Grace. Besides, every one has Love towards some one thing or other, and that Love is a spark of the Divine; every one has ultimately to base his life on some one Truth; that Truth is God. No life can be lived out in complete defiance of Truth; one has to pay heed to truth and speak the truth to some one in order to make life worth living. Now, that moment is God's moment and at that moment when he utters the truth or loves, or serves or bends, he is a theist.

So, it is not even bhakti that is essential. It is Love, truth, virtue, the eagerness to progress, to serve, to expand one's heart, to take in the whole of humanity in one's Love, to see all as Forms of the Divine Consciousness.

Y.M. I. A., Mylapore, Madras, 24-3-1958

There is no living being without the spark of love; even a mad man loves something or somebody intensely. But, you must recognise this love as but a reflection of the Premaswaruupa (the embodiment of Love), that is your reality, of the God who is residing in your heart. Without that spring of Love that bubbles in your heart, you will not be prompted to love at all. Recognise that spring, rely on it more and more, develop its possibilities, try to irrigate the whole world with it, discard all touch of self from it, do not seek anything in return for it from those to whom you extend it.

9. Examine, experience

I HAVE come to comfort your life, not to describe Mine! So I did not like Raamanatha Reddy and Kas-thuri speaking about Me and the incidents of My life! Your lives are more important for Me, for My purpose is to see that you live more happily and with greater contentment. All beings have to do karma (sanctified activity); it is a universal inescapable obligation. Some feel that only punya and paapa---meritorious and sinful or virtuous and vicious deeds---are entitled to be called karma. But your very breathing is karma. There are certain karmas the fruits of which you cannot give up! There are physical, mental and spiritual karmas and doing each one of these for the good of the Self is called dedication.

Mention was made of Puttaparthi and you were advised to go there and draw inspiration from the bhajans there. Please do not incur the expense; for wherever you are, whenever you call on Me, your room can become Prashanthi Nilayam, your village can be made Puttaparthi. I am ever alert to respond, ever ready to listen and reply.

I want you to be active, fully engaged. For, if you have no activities, time will hang heavily on your hands. Do not waste a single moment of the allotted span of life, for time is the body of God. He is known as Kaalaswaruupa (of the Form of Time). It is a crime to misuse time or to waste it in idleness. So too, the physical and mental talents given to you by the Lord as capital for the business of living should not be frittered away.

Like the force of gravitation which drags everything down, the thamoshakthi (the pull of sloth) will drag you relentlessly down; so you must be ever on the watch, be ever active. Like the brass vessel which has to be scrubbed to a nice shine, the mind of man has also to be scrubbed by means of saadhana (spiritual discipline), that is to say, activity like japam or dhyaana. Karma which is natural and automatic like breathing becomes vikarma (an impious act) when it is done consciously, with a definite result in view.

A Hindhu and his British friend once happened to come to the bank of the Godhaavari. The Hindhu said, "I will bathe in this sacred water." He recited the name "Hari" as he plunged in and came out refreshed in mind as well as body. He felt great happiness that he got the rare chance of a bath in the holy river. The Britisher laughed and said, "This is mere H2O: how can you get unspeakable joy by dipping into it? It is all superstition. But the Hindhu replied, "Leave me to my superstition; you can stick to your superstition." The cynic got only physical cleanliness but the believer got mental purity also. When you prostrate before elders, the mind too must be humble; it is not the body alone that should bend. Now, there are many social workers in Madras who visit hospitals and do service to the patients there. Most of the work they do is mechanical, like fanning the patients, writing letters for them and singing bhajans, without paying heed to the actual requirements of the patients. Many do this work because it is the current mode of social service. But it must be karma, done with the full co-operation of the mind, gladly, intelligently, reverentially. The patient should not feel disgusted at the fussiness of the social worker; he should be looking forward to the arrival of the person, of some one who is very near and dear. If you do not like that type of work, you need not engage yourselves in it. Do not burden your mind by the unpleasantness of the task. Work done mechanically is like the flame of an oil-less wick; the oil is mental enthusiasm; pour it, and the lamp will burn clear and long.

Karma should not be done anticipating any result

In fact Karma becomes Yoga when it is done without any attachment; a sanyaasi (monk) should not even remember whatever he does, he should not do any karma anticipating any result. That is the Nishkaama (desireless action) ideal at its highest. The best karma is that which is done at the call of duty; because it has to be done, not because it is advantageous to do it. The sanyaasi should have no anger, anxiety, envy or greed; but your experience must be telling you that sanyaasis who are free from these are very rare today.

Do not even cast your glance at a sanyaasi who is so false to his vow that he craves for name and fame or indulges in calumny or competition. Do not be led away by such persons into disbelieving the Shaasthras and the Vedhas. He who is firmly fixed in the faith that this world is a mirage of the mind, he alone is the swaami; the others are mere Raamaswaamys or Krishnaswaamys entitled to have the epithet Swaami at the end of the name not at the beginning.

Prakrithi (Nature) is puraathana---a very ancient entity. The jeevi too is puraathana, having had many previous entries and exits. But now it has come in with a new dress; it is nuuthana (modern), come like a pilgrim to a holy place for going the rounds. The jeevi must have a guide who will show the sacred spots and help fulfil the pilgrimage. That Guide is the Lord Himself: the Guide books are Vedhas, the Upanishaths and the Shaasthras. The essence of the Scriptures lies in this one rule: Repeat the name of the Lord, keeping His Glow always before the mind.

Earn the right to approach God without fear

The Lord is as the Kalpatharu (the Divine wish-fulfill-ing Tree) that gives whatever is asked. But you have to go near the tree and wish for the thing you want. The atheist is the person who keeps far away from the tree; the theist is the one who has come near; that is the difference. The tree does not make any distinction; it grants boons to all. The Lord will not punish or take revenge if you do not recognise Him or revere Him. He has no special type of worship which alone can please him.

If you have the ear, you can hear 'Om' announcing the Lord's Presence in every sound. All the five elements produce this sound, 'Om.' The bell in the temple is intended to convey the Om as the symbol of the Omnipresent God. When the bell sounds Om, the Godhead within you will awaken and you will be aware of His Presence. That is the meaning of the bell which is rung in front of the inner shrine in the temple.

Earn the right to approach the Lord without fear and the right to ask for your heritage. You must become so free that praise will not emanate from you when you approach the Lord. Praise is a sign of distance and fear. You must have heard the Kaalidhaasa story. He said that he would get liberation "as soon as I go," that is to say, as soon as the ego disappears, for then he shines in his native splendour, as Brahman (as the indestructible Aathma). The T when crossed out becomes the symbol of cross; so, what is crucified is the ego, remember. Then, the Divine nature manifests itself unhampered.

The ego is most easily destroyed by bhakti, by dwelling on the magnificence of the Lord and by rendering service to others as children of the Lord. You can call on the Lord by any name, for all names are His; select the Name and Form that appeals to you most. That is why Sahasranaamas are composed for the various forms of God; you have the freedom and the right to select any one of the thousand. The Guru will give you the Name and Form suited to your temperament and samskaaras (meritorious acts). If the Guru commands you under a threat and orders you to adopt a line of saadhana declaring "This is my aajina (command)," then you can tell him that the main thing is your satisfaction, not his. You have to do the saadhana in an atmosphere of joy and contentment.

The Guru should not force the disciple to grow with a bent in the direction that he prefers; the disciple has the right to develop on his own lines, according to his samskaaras and bent of mind. The old relationship of Guru and sishyas has today become topsy-turvy; rich and influential sishyas now rule the Guru and dictate how he should behave; and the Gurus also, keen on accumulating fame and wealth, stoop to the tactics recommended by the sishyas and thus lower their status. So, examine the Guru and his credentials, his ideals and practice before accepting him.

Even in My case, do not be attracted simply by stories of what I "create" by a wave of the hand. Do not jump to conclusions with closed eyes; watch, study and weigh. Never yield to any one unless you feel the inner satisfaction that you are on the right path. Above all, do not talk ill of great men and sages. That is a sign of gross egoism and the childish impertinence born of that conceit.

My suggestion to you today is this: just as you attend to the needs of the body, feeding it three times a day, in order to keep it in good running condition, so too, spend some time regularly everyday to keep your Inner Consciousness also in good trim. Spend one hour in the morning, another at night and a third in the early hours of dawn, the Brahmamuhurtha as it is called, for japam and meditation on the Lord. You will find great peace descending on you and great new sources of strength welling up within you as you progress in this saadhana. After some time, the mind will dwell on the Name whatever you are and wherever you are engaged in; and then, peace and joy will be your inseparable companions.

Gokhale Hall, Madras, 25-3-1958

10. Viveka and vairaagya

YOU are all standing in the open, on the road and some are even perched on trees; it is really cruel for Me to speak to you for long. But inspite of all this inconvenience, I find you yearn to hear

My words and so I shall satisfy you. Well, Man is Divine, take it from Me; he is really here on a holy mission, for a divine purpose. To consider him as mean or weak or sinful is a great mistake. That is itself a great sin. Man must earn his birthright, namely, shaanthi (peace). Ashaanthi (restlessness) is for him an un-natural state. His real nature is shaanthi. To recover his heritage of shaanthi, man tries various methods: acculation of riches, maintenance of health, mastery of knowledge, cultivation of the arts. But these are not fundamental. Three basic wants still remain after all these methods have been tried: the need for reality, for light and for immortality. It is only when Sath, Iyothi and Amritham (Existence, Divine Light and Divine Nectar) are won that Shaanthi will be stabilised.

It is no use indulging in arguments and disputations; he who clamours aloud has not grasped the truth, believe Me. Silence is the only language of the realised. Practise moderation in speech. That will help you in many ways. It will develop Prema, for most misunderstandings and factions arise out of carelessly spoken words. When the foot slips, the wound can be healed; but when the tongue slips, the wound it causes in the heart of another will fester for life. The tongue is liable to four big errors; uttering falsehood, scandalising, finding fault with others and excessive articulation. These have to be avoided if there has to be shaanthi for the individual as well as for society. The bond of brotherhood will be tightened if people speak less and speak sweet. That is why mounam (silence) was prescribed as a vow for saadhakas by the Shaasthras. You are all saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) at various stages of the road and so this discipline is valuable for you also.

Prema must transform all relationships

Prema (Love) is what the individual and the nation must cultivate now for progress. Hindhusthan became great on account of the flood of Prema which swept over the land for centuries. Prema must again transform all relationship: social, economic, educational, professional, family, religious, legal and others. The father must love the child a little more intensely and intelligently; the mother must spread love to all who come within her influence; children must love the servants. The sense of equality that every one is the repository of the Divine Essence must transmute social and individual behaviour.

Vairagya saves you from too much attachment

You can call Me Premaswaruupa (Embodiment of Divine Love)! You will not be wrong! Prema is the wealth I have and which I scatter among the miserable and afflicted. I have no other riches. The Grace of the Lord is always flowing like the electric current through the wire. Fix a bulb, and the current, to the extent of the wattage, will illumine your home. The bulb is the saadhana you perform; the home is your heart. Come to Me gladly; dive into the sea and discover its depth; there is no use dipping near the shore and swearing that the sea is shallow and has no pearls. Dive deep and you will secure your desire.

Remember, the sword of Prema has to be kept in the sheath of viveka (wisdom). The indhriyas (senses) have to be rigorously controlled by viveka and vairagya (discrimination and detachment), the twin talents given exclusively to man. Viveka instructs you how to choose your avocations and your associates. It tells you the relative importance of objects and ideals. Vairagya saves you from too much of attachment and injects a sense of relief, at times of elation or despair. They are the two wings that lift the bird into the air. They hold before you the impermanence of the world and permanence of the Bliss of Reality. They prompt you to direct your lives towards spiritual saadhana and the never failing contemplation of the glory of the Lord.

11. Nara and Naaraayana

Everything in its own good time, they say; the fruit has to grow and ripen before the sourness is turned to sweetness. I have been coming to this town since ten years but it is only this evening that you, in this vast multitudinous gathering, have been able to derive this bliss of hearing Me discoursing! I am happy to meet all of you in one auspicious hour collected all in one place. All that I can tell you about the spiritual disciplines have been told often before; man's capacity, his nature, his talents are all ancient possessions and so the advice regarding how to use them is also very ancient. The only new thing is man's perverse behaviour---the directions in which he has been wasting his talents, misusing his capacity and playing false to his own nature. He has been forgetting the path prescribed in the scriptures for the cultivation of his nature, and hence all this suffering; hence also My advent.

Man is essentially a discriminating animal, endowed with viveka. He is not content with the satisfaction of mere animal needs; he feels some void, some deep discontent, some unslaked thirst, for he is a child of Immortality and he feels that death is not and should not be the end. This viveka urges man to discover answers to the problems that haunt him: "Where did I come from, whither am I journeying, which is the journey's end?" So, buddhi (intellect) has to be kept sharp and clear.

There are three types of buddhi, according to the predominance of one or other of the three gunas: the thamas, which confuses sathyam (truth) as the asathyam (untruth) and takes the asathyam as the sathyam; the rajas which like a pendulum swings from one to the other, hovering between the two, unable to distinguish between them; and the sathwa, which knows which is sathyam and which is asathyam.

Poised state is essential to reach the goal

The world today is suffering from Rajobuddhi (passionate intellect) rather than thamas (inertia); people have violent likes and dislikes; they have become fanatical and factious. They are carried away by pomp and noise, show and propaganda; that is why discrimination has become necessary. To reach the goal, Sathwabuddhi (equanimous intellect) is essential; it will seek the Truth calmly and stick to it whatever the consequence.

I have come to help all to acquire this Saathwik (serene) nature. You might have heard people talk about the miracles; of My 'making' this and 'giving' that, of my fulfilling all your wants, of My curing your illness. But they are not so important as the Saathwaguna (poised state) I appreciate, promote and instil. Of course, I confer on you these boons of health and prosperity but only so that you might, with greater enthusiasm and with less interruption, proceed with spiritual saadhana. Eat well, so that your physical faculties might grow and the good physique will in turn develop your intelligence more fully. Bhakti (devotion) leads to shakti (power) and Shakti will grant yukti (skill). The yukti will help you to fix your rakthi (attachment) on the proper objects and your bhakti thus promoted finally results in mukthi (liberation).

A certain amount of attention has to be paid to the body and its care, as well as to escape the overpowering handicaps of poverty; but you must ever be cautious that you are not caught in the coils and forget the transitoriness of all this. Bring your thoughts constantly back to the Aathma, which is the substance of all the objective world, the basic reality behind all this appearance.

Finding fault with others comes out of egoism

The first step in Aathma vichaara (enquiring about the Self) is the practice of the truth that whatever gives you pain gives pain to others and whatever gives you joy, gives joy to others. So do unto others as you would like them to do unto you; desist from any act in relation to others which if done by them will give you pain. Thus, a kind of reciprocal relationship will grow between you and others and gradually you reach the stage when your heart thrills with joy when others are joyful and shudders in pain when others are sad. This is not the kind of affection towards those who are dear to you or those who are your kith and kin. That is a sign of delusion; but this sharing of joy and grief is automatic, immediate, universal. It is a sign of great spiritual advance; then the wave knows that it is part of the ocean and that all waves are but temporary manifestations of the self-same sea having the same taste as the ocean itself.

The others are part of yourself; you need not worry about them; worry about yourself; that is enough; when you become all right, they too will be all right, for you will no longer be aware of them as separate from you. Criticising others, finding fault with them, all this comes out of egoism. Search for your own faults instead; the faults you see in others are your own faults instead; the faults you see in others are but reflections of your own personality traits; pay no heed to little worries; attach your mind to the Lord. Then you will be led on to the company of good men and your talents will be transmuted.

When you love, you will have no fear

Be a bee, drinking the nectar of every flower; not the mosquito drinking blood and distributing disease in return. First, consider all as children of the Lord, as your own brothers and sisters; develop the quality of love, seek always the welfare of humanity. Love and you will be loved in return, hate will never be your lot if you promote love and look upon all with love. That is the one lesson I teach always; that is my secret too. If you want to attain Me, cultivate Love, give up hatred, envy, anger, cynicism and falsehood. I do not ask that you should be a scholar or a recluse or an ascetic skilled in japa (recitation of holy Name) and dhyana (meditation). "Is your heart full of prema (love)?" that is all I examine.

Believe that Love is God, Truth is God. Love is Truth, Truth is Love; for it is only when you love that you have no fear, for fear is the mother of falsehood. If you have no fear, you will adhere to truth. The mirror of Prema reflects the Aathma in you and reveals to you that the Aathma is universal, immanent in every being.

Parents have to be respected and worshipped

I shall not tell you very complex matters; I shall give only simple remedies for the ills you are suffering from. I find here a large number of students. Well, what are they studying for? What is the goal? How are we to judge that they have studied well? By the salary they are able to get, or the cadre they are able to secure? No. Education must result in the development of viveka (wisdom) and vinaya (humility). The educated man must be able to distinguish between the momentary and the momentous, the lasting and the effervescent. He must not run after glitter and glamour but he must seek instead the good and golden.

He must know how to keep the body in good trim, the senses under strict control, the mind well within check, the intellect sharp and clear, unhampered by prejudices and hatreds, and the feelings untouched by egoism. He must know the Aathma too, for that is his very care; that is the effulgence which illumines his inner and outer selves. This knowledge will ensure joy and peace and courage for him throughout life. Students also must cultivate vinaya (the art of avoiding the infliction of pain on others).

I must also tell the students that they must be grateful to the parents who give them all the facilities they now enjoy at great sacrifice. In fact, the parents have to be worshipped as visible representatives of the God-head; they are responsible for your very existence and for all this joy and adventure in the physical and spiritual spheres. For this reason they have to be tended and respected and worshipped.

There was a boy who was begging in the streets for food so that he could keep his bedridden mother and two little sisters alive. One night when he clamoured in front of a rich man's house, the master got enraged at his piteous cries. The boy was very unlucky that day and he had collected only a few morsels; the hour was nearing nine. So he cried most pathetically and it aroused the ire of the rich man inside the mansion. He came out and kicked the boy into the gutter; he was already very weak, for he was starving himself to feed his mother and sisters; so when he fell, he breathed his last, wailing, "Mother! Here is a little food for you." His hand held the bowl firm, even when it had become lifeless!

Parents must set good examples to children

Such is the devotion that the mother invokes and which she deserves, for all the pain she endured and all the sacrifice she bore in order that the son might be healthy, happy and good. Show that gratitude, boys, to the parents; remember them and pay them the tribute of at least a tear on the anniversary of their passing away. Do it with shraddha (faith), that is why it is called shraardha (religious ceremonial offering to the dead); not that the offerings you make reach them or that they are waiting for them in some other world; it is a tribute that you should offer in gratitude for the great chance they gave you for this sojourn in this world with all the wonderful opportunities it offers for self-realisation.

Parents too must encourage children when they evince any interest in spiritual advance and study; they must also set them good examples. Among the children who are before Me here, there may be many a Vivekaanandha and many a Thyaagaraaja. Children must be given every facility to develop the divine talents that are in them. Parents must feel that they are servants appointed by the Lord to tend the little souls that are born in their households, as the gardener tends the trees in the garden of the Master. They must arouse the latent goodness in these tiny hearts by telling stories about the saints and sages of the past. They must see that children do not develop fear and become cowards afraid of walking straight. Give up the delusion you are this physical body

You are all the indestructible Aathma, believe Me; nothing need discourage you. In dreams you suffer so much; loss of money, fire, food, insult, etc., but you are not affected at all. When these things happen during the waking stage, you feel afflicted; really, it is not the real 'you' that suffers all that. Give up the delusion that you are this physical entity and you become really free.

And lastly, about Myself. No one can understand My Mystery.

The best you can do is to get immersed in it. It is no use your arguing about pros and cons; dive and know the depth; eat and know the taste! Then you can discuss Me to your heart's content. Develop Sathya (Truth) and Prema (Love) and then you need not even pray to Me to grant you this and that. Everything will be added unto you, unasked. Nara (man) and Naaraayana (God) are the two wires, the positive and the negative, which combine to bring electricity through. Nara will co-operate with Naaraayana and become the vehicle of Divine Power, if he has acquired the two qualities, sathya and prema.

Nellore, 25-7-1958

Individual reconstruction is much more important than the construction of temples.

Multiply virtues, not buildings; practise what you preach, that is the real pilgrimage; cleanse your minds of envy and malice, that is the real bath in holy waters.

Of what avail is the name of the Lord on the tongue, if the heart within is impure? Injustice and discontent are spreading everywhere due to this one fault in man: saying one thing and doing the opposite, the tongue and the hand going in different directions. Man has to set himself right and correct his food, his recreation, his method of spending his leisure as well as habits of thought.

12. Tolerance

I HAD no idea of speaking to you this evening, but of course, I need no 'preparation.' My Sankalpa (resolve) and its fulfilment are instantaneous. Shri Subbaraamaiah spoke just now of some important guiding principles of life, like the cultivation of virtues, the development of character, the control of hatred, etc. Advice such as this is being given from a hundred platforms every day, and people listen and depart; they do not practise what they have heard; and so things remain where they are. This is because those who give advice do not follow what they preach; they must themselves be the examples of the value of what they teach. Like the blind men who described the elephant, they describe the advantages of acquiring virtues and the benefits of controlling hatred, more out of hearsay than out of experience.

There is deep-rooted unrest today in every individual, because there is no harmony within. The Varnaashrama rules that have come down from ages prescribe one type of conduct; the books that one reads recommend another type; experience gives conflicting advice. But peace depends on the mind and its awareness of the secret of poise. The body is the caravanserai, the jeevi (individual) is the pilgrim and the mind is the watchman. The mind seeks sukha (happiness); it feels that happiness can be got in this world from fame, riches, land and property, from other individuals or relatives; further, it builds up pictures of heaven where there is more intense happiness for a longer time; at last, it discovers that eternal undiminished happiness can be got only by dwelling on the Reality of one's own Self, which is Bliss Itself.

The jeevathathwa (the life principle) is like the grain covered up in the husk of maayaa (delusion), as the rice is enveloped in the paddy. The maayaa has to be removed; thejeevathathwa has to be boiled and made soft and assimilated so that it might add to health and strength. The softened rice can be compared to Paramaathma (Supreme Soul). The mind has to be used for this process. It has to be fixed in the Sathyam (Truth) and the Nithyam (Everlasting). To remove the husk of delusion, viveka (discrimination) is an instrument.

Develop the power of discrimination and find out which is permanent and which is not, which is beneficial and which is not. Even in selecting a Guru, you should use your viveka. Not all clouds are rain-bearing. A real teacher will be able to attract seekers from afar merely by his personality. He need not be talked about in glowing terms; his presence will be felt and aspirants will hurry towards him, like bees towards a lotus in full bloom.

Seek the light always; be full of confidence and zest. Do not yield to despair, for it can never produce results. It only worsens the problem, for it darkens the intellect and plunges you in doubt. You must take up the path of saadhana (spiritual practice), very enthusiastically. Half-hearted halting steps will not yield fruit. It is like cleaning a slushy area by a stream of water. If the current of the stream is slow, the slush cannot be cleared. The stream must flow full and fast, driving everything before it, so that the slush might be scoured clean.

Liberation can be achieved by subtle means

I shall talk to you of these first steps only, for they are the most important for the saadhakas (spiritual aspirants); and you are all saadhakas or are bound to be saadhakas. "Moksha lies in the suukshma" they say---"Liberation can be achieved by subtle means." Treat the others in the same way as you would like them to treat you. Never brood over the past; when grief over-powers you, do not recollect similar incidents in your past experience and add to the sum of your grief; recollect, rather, incidents when grief did not knock at your door, but you were happy instead. Draw consolation and strength from such memories and raise yourself above the surging waters of sorrow. Women are called "weak" because they yield to anger and sorrow much more easily than men; so I would ask them to take extra pains to overcome these two.

Naamasmarana is the best antidote for this and if only men and women take up to it, the Lord will come to their rescue. That will instil the faith that everything is God's Will and teach that you have no right to exult or despair.

When you go to a doctor, you must take the medicine that he prescribes and follow his advice and instructions. There is no use blaming him if you default. How can he cure you if you do not drink the mixture or stick to the restrictions he has imposed or regulate your diet according to his advice? Do as I say, follow My advice and then watch the result.

It is a sign of foolishness to brood over mishaps and mistakes once committed and punish oneself for them by refusing to take food. It is a very childish way of correction. What is the good of the body for the sake of correcting the mind?

Even if you cannot love others, do not hate them or feel envy towards them. Do not misunderstand their motives and scandalise them; if you only knew, their motives might be as noble as yours or their action might be due to ignorance, rather than wickedness or mischief. Pardon the other man's faults but deal harshly with your own.

The holy culture of this ancient land has been spoilt by just one impurity; intolerance of another's success, prosperity or progress. If you cannot help another, at least avoid doing him harm or causing him pain. That itself is a great service. What right have you to find fault with another or to talk evil of him? When you say that nothing can ever happen on earth without His Will, why get annoyed or angry? Your duty is to cleanse yourself and engage in your own inner purification. That endeavour will bring you the cooperation of all good men and you will find strength and joy welling up within you.

Venkatagiri, 2-8-1958

13. Aanandha through dedication

TODAY is indeed a day of joy, since we have met here to share prema; the joy is marred to some extent by the want of accommodation in this Hall and the suffering all of you are put to. I too feel that it is not proper to keep you long in this physical torment while I am having comparative comfort on this less crowded platform. That explains partly why you are restless and agitated, an attitude quite different from what you should have on such occasions. The same group of people, you will have observed, differs in its reactions and behaviour when it is in a marriage pandhal, a cinema hall, an exhibition enclosure, a temple or seeing a football match. They are moved by totally different impulses in these various places. In a gathering devoted to the needs of the spirit, what is expected is eager attention, quiet calm and reverential, prayer-ful silence. Here, obviously, only the eye and the ear need function; the tongue has no business to wag. I have come to share with you the gift of prema (love) that I have brought, but you seem to be satisfied with the confusion that you already live in! The unhealthy are to be nursed back to health

Now, that is very much better. It is the silence that is wanted in all gatherings where deeper spiritual disciplines are talked about. Of course, everywhere and every time, it is best you curb your tongue; that is the very first exercise that I prescribe for spiritual progress. What I have to say now is not for those who are endowed with bhakti (devotion), for they know the path and they are already marching on: nor for those who have no spring of bhakti in them, for, speaking to them is sheer waste of time. It is for the wavering, the unsteady, the hesitant, who are conscious of the Higher Power and are feebly desirous of contacting it, for they are either ignorant of the technique or afraid of the consequences; it is for such half-apathetic bhaktas (devotees) that I talk. Medicine is useless for the dead as well as the sturdy. The unhealthy, hovering between death and survival, these are to be nursed back to strength.

I would like you first to learn the art of so living in the midst of people that you do not grieve nor make others grieve. Learn to make the best of life, this chance offered to you to sublimate your instincts, impulses and vaasanas (impressions left on the mind by past actions) and rise higher and higher in the moral and spiritual plane. Make the best out of opportunities like this and derive Aanandha from every hour, garnering all the profit you can. This town is holy and so, there are many Aadhyathmik (metaphysical) Institutions; many pious men visit it and give valuable advice. I am glad the Malayalaswaami of Yerpedu is now here for the Chaathurmaasya (four months of ascetic observance); it is a good chance for you to learn from him the teachings of the sages of ancient times. I am sure he will spread good thoughts and good impulses promoting your spiritual advance.

Become conscious of your kinship with God

This is not bhakti, this holding a garland in the hand and indulging in paltry conversation in holy places. I do not want nor do I appreciate any one bringing flowers and fruits into My presence. Bring Me the fragrant flower of a pure heart and the fruit of a saadhana-mellowed mind; that is what I like most, not these things available outside yourselves for so much of cash, without any effort that elevates the mind. To get a taste for that kind of effort, you must keep the company of great and good men and take delight in good thoughts. By whatever means available, increase the stock of your aanandha (bliss) and improve the quality of viveka (discrimination) and try to store as much of these two as possible, so that you can draw upon the stock whenever the need arises.

The chief source of aanandha is dedication to God; nothing else can give that genuine and lasting joy. Become conscious of your kinship with the Lord. That kinship is not a mere fancy or a faked theory. It has come down since ages, from the beginning of Time itself. It will persist till the very end of Time, or, in other words, till the end of Time so far as you are concerned. The Godhaavari is carrying all the waters of all the tributary streams relentlessly to the sea.

The rain falls on the mountains; as streams it flows in the plains and the full Godhaavari rushes through the delta. So too, the jeeva (individual) is born in Dharma maarga (path of righteousness), it journeys through Karma maarga (path of action), and it rushes through Saadhu maarga (path of sages) to reach Brahma maarga (path of Supreme Reality). The Karma maarga and the Saadhu maarga are discovered by the jnaanendhriyas (organs of perception). Keep them uncontaminated by Asuric (demonic) qualities and watch vigilantly lest they slip back. The (sensory organs) drag you into the tangle of Prakriti (Nature) itself.

The cow eats grass and drinks gruel, but out of these it creates sweet sustaining milk; so too, let the experiences which are gathered by your senses help in the production of the sweetness of kindness, the purity of devotion and the sustenance of Shaanthi.

Do not worry about others and their faults

There is in every one a spark of truth; no one can live without that spark. There is in every one a flame of love; life becomes a dark void without it. That spark, that flame is God, for He is the source of all Truth and all Love. Man seeks truth; he seeks to know the reality because his very nature is derived from God who is Truth. He seeks Love, to give it and share it, for his nature is of God and God is Love.

Like the paddy-seed which contains rice, the husk is the Maayaa which covers the seed within; the rice is the jeeva and the essence of the rice, the sustaining element, the anna (food), that is Paramaathma. So, develop the Inner Vision, do not worry about others and their faults. Do a little Aathma vichaara (examination of the Self), study the Upanishaths and the Shaasthras; they might help you a little. Remember, only a little help. They are but maps and signposts. You must put them into practice; act and experience. Meditate on the truth and you will find that you are but a sparkling bubble upon the waters; born on water, living for a brief moment on water and dying upon its breast, merging in it. You owe your birth to God: you subsist on God and you merge in God. Every living thing has to reach that consummation; why, every non-living thing too. So do it now; take the first step, purify the heart, sharpen the intellect or at least begin the recital of the name of the Lord.

That will give you all the rest in due time. When a man plants a mango seed, he is not sure whether he will live to eat the fruit; but that is beside the point. To plant, to nourish, to guard, to grow, that is the duty; the rest is His look out. That is the real karmaphala thyaaga (renunciation of the fruits of action).

Holy things can be cognised only by holy seekers

Above all, cultivate prema (love), towards all. That will destroy envy, anger and hatred. Raama (God) and kaama (desire) cannot co-exist in the same heart. Trust begets trust, love begets love. When I am talking to you with so much prema, you cannot develop any dwesha (hatred) towards Me! Prema makes the whole world kin. It is the greatest instrument of concord. The ryot plants the seedling and watches over it with great care; he removes the weeds, he destroys the pests, he lets in water as and when necessary, he spreads manure and awaits the day when he can reap the harvest and fill his granary. So too, you must nourish prema and pluck out the weeds of hatred and envy.

Wear the red glasses and all things appear red. Wear the glasses of prema and all will appear loveable and good. Reference was made here to Dharidhra-naaraayana-seva (Service of the poor); the eye of prema will see all as Naaraayana; not only the poor, but rich, also. The rich too have to be sympathised with. You must pity the rich, for they have so few chances of developing the attitude of renunciation! See all as Naaraayanaswaruupa (embodiments of Naaraayana) and worship all with the flower of prema.

Even My nature can be understood by you only when you wear the glasses of holiness; holy things can be cognised only by the holy seeker. You get what you search for; you see what your eyes crave for. The doctor is found where patients gather; the surgeon stays in the operation ward. So too, the Lord is ever with the suffering and the struggling. Whenever people cry out in agony: "Oh God," there, God will be.

To supplement saadhana, lead a regulated life

The credentials of one doctor can be examined and judged only by another doctor; the patient has to believe and carry out his instructions if he desires to improve. He can give his judgement on the doctor only after the course of treatment is finished. Unless he obeyed the orders of the doctor strictly and to the very letter, he has no authority to pronounce judgement. So what can you now speak about Me? Follow My prescription! Naturally, it will be a different one for every one of you; it will depend upon the nature, the age, the virulence of the disease and upon the treatment you have already undergone to alleviate it. Adhere also to the dietary and other regulations that the doctor recommends. That is to say, it is not merely saadhana like japam (repetition of holy Name or formula), dhyaanam (meditation), Naamasmarana (Remembering the Name of God), etc., that will have to be done, but in order to supplement the effect of these, you have to lead a regulated life, a life conducive to good thoughts, with Saathwik (virtuous) food and Saathwik (noble) pursuits. Until you try out My prescription fully

sincerely, it is best you keep quiet. You do not know even a pebble; how can you evaluate a peak?

You may be 'unafraid,' you may not fear anything else, but you have to fear Truth. There is nothing so awe-inspiring as Truth; your Truth, for example, for your Truth is the Truth of the Universe. This day, you may feel you have no need of the Lord, but when the pangs of hunger gnaw, you start pining for food. Therefore, wash your hearts with tears of joy so that the Lord might install Himself therein. A zamindar may own all of the fields up to the very horizon on all sides, but he will design to sit only on a patch that is clean! In the same way, when the Lord chooses the heart of a bhaktha (devotee), it does not mean that all other hearts are not His. They are not clean, that is all He means. He is everywhere, everything is His, His gaze is on all. If God was not all this how could they shine, or exist even as much as they do now? Therefore, have full faith in God and in yourselves, engage always in good deeds, beneficial activities; speak the truth, do not inflict pain by word or deed or even thought. That is the way to gain shaanthi; that is the highest gain which you can earn in this life.

Rajahmundry, 1-9-1958

14. The wise ryot

Today, I am really full of joy for I have before Me people who are engaged in hardy toil and who sacrifice their personal comforts in order to make others happy. What the world needs is work done in that spirit. Every man has divinity embedded in him, as well as Truth and sweetness. Only, he does not know how to manifest that Divinity, how to realise that Truth, how to taste that sweetness. So, he carries the twin burdens of joy and grief tied to the ends of a single pole slung across his shoulders. Courage is the tonic for getting both physical as well as mental health and strength. Give up doubt, hesitation and fear. Do not give any chance for these to strike root in your mind. Man, by means of the inner divine strength with which he is equipped, can achieve anything; he can even become Maadhava (God).

To help you to give up fear and doubt, keep the Name of the Lord always on your tongue and in your mind. Dwell on the endless forms of the Lord, His limitless Glow, while you repeat the Name. Attach yourself to Him; then your attachment for these temporary objects will fall off; or at least, you will start seeing them in their proper proportion as having only relative reality. When the tiny little ego assumes enormous importance, it causes all this bother! That is the root of all the travail.

Raama Naama endows you with spiritual power

In your heart, there is the Aathmaaraama, the Raama that confers eternal joy. So repeat the name Raama, the Sun which can make the lotus in the heart bloom. Raama is not the son of Emperor 'Dhasharatha' but of the ruler of the dhasha indhriyas (the ten senses). The recital of the Raamanaama must become as automatic as breathing, as frequent and as essential. Raama has in it the beeja-akshara (seed letters) of both the Shiva manthra as well as the Naaraayana manthra, for it is composed of the second letters of both; Naa-raa-yanaaya and Na-mah-Shivaaya. This name is acceptable, therefore, to all sects; it also endows you with power and all the spiritual capital you need.

Real Aanandha (Bliss) can be won only by means of the transformation of the impulses which agitate the mind. It is not to be found in wealth. You think that the rich man is happy; ask Me, and I shall reveal to you that they are full of grief, for they come to Me in large numbers for relief. They have no shaanthi (peace) at all. A strong physique does not by itself give shaanthi; nor does scholarship, or asceticism or rituals. Only constant dwelling with the Name of the Lord gives that unshakeable Peace, unaffected by the ups and downs of life. It makes man a dheera (a hero).

Sai Baaba was till today a formless Name to you, but now it has come with Form and you can keep the ruupa (form) in your mind. So too, the Name 'Raama' has a form and you should picture the form also when you repeat the Name; then the name becomes concrete and japam is easier. Live always in the presence of that Form-filled Naamam. Then life becomes one continuous worship of the Lord. Really speaking, you agriculturists are holy souls, for you bend under the weight of the service you do and with hands raised in prayer, you toil night and day converting dust and dirt into the nourishing harvest of grain for all men to feed upon.

Do your tasks as dedicated to the Lord

This task is holy and the product of your efforts is also sacred. Why cannot this task be made more fruitful by the cultivation of virtues also? That is the real harvest which pleases the Lord and sustains the world.

Worry and grief there will always be, of one type or other, in the past, present and future; while walking, dreaming and sleeping. But place faith in the Lord and do your tasks as dedicated to Him and they both will vanish. Naaradha one day boasted before Vishnu that no devotee could excel him; but this boast was against the very first qualification of a bhaktha---freedom from egoism. So, Vishnu spoke of a ryot who was tilling his little plot of land as a greater devotee and recommended that Naaradha should visit him and learn 'the art of devotion' from him]

Naaradha felt badly humiliated; but he proceeded to the village indicated, in great chagrin. He found the ryot engrossed in his round of duties on the field, in the cattle shed and at home; and in spite of the most vigilant watch, he could not hear him speak the name of the Lord more than thrice a day; once when he woke up from bed, another time when he took his midday meal and the last, when he retired for the night. Naaradha was naturally incensed that he was deemed inferior to this poor, pale specimen of a bhaktha. He was always singing melodiously the leelas (divine sport) of the Lord and spreading everywhere the message of Naama sankeerthana (devotional singing of the Lord's name) and here was a son of the soil who remembered the Lord only three times a day, whom Vishnu judged superior to him.

horny-handed

Do your duties with God's Name on your lips

Naaradha hurried to heaven, his face flushed with anger and ignominy; but Vishnu only laughed at his plight. He gave him a pot full to the brim with water and asked him to carry it on his head and go round a certain course without spilling even a drop. Naaradha did so, but when asked how often he had remembered the Name of the Lord, he admitted that in his anxiety to walk without shaking the pot and spilling the water, he had forgotten the Name completely! Then Vishnu told him that the ryot who was carrying on his head more precious and more spillable burdens than a pot of water and who had to be careful not to take any false step, must perforce be admired for remembering the Lord at least three times a day! Therefore, it will be a great gain if you remember the Lord with thankfulness at least thrice or even twice a day; that will give you great peace. Do not give up your worldly duties, but do them with the name of God on your lips, inviting the Grace of God on your heads. Do not involve yourselves in the affairs of your neighbours or others to the extent that you get so entangled you cannot extricate yourselves.

Spend your time in the contemplation of the beauties of nature that are spread out before you in earth and sky; green expanses of the crops you have raised, cool breezes that waft contentment and joy, the panorama of coloured clouds, the music of the birds. Sing the glories of God as you walk along the bunds of the fields and the banks of the canals. Do not talk hatefully in the midst of all this evidence of love; do not get angry, in these placid surroundings; do not disturb the sky with your shouts and curses. Do not pollute the air with vengeful boasts.

The seedling wants water and manure, to grow and yield rich harvest. The tiny sapling of spiritual yearning for liberation from bondage also needs these two. That is the real krishi (cultivation) you must undertake. That is the mark of the wise farmer..

More than all, set right your habits, purify your conduct, cleanse your behaviour. One bad habit that has taken deep root in this area is the smoking of tobacco, an evil that is fast becoming universal. It destroys aarogyam, aanandham, uthsaaham (health, happiness, energy) and even andham (charm). Smoke will not quench your thirst or fill the hungry stomach. It disfigures your face and denigrates your lungs. It debilitates you and makes you diseased. Control yourself and do not yield to the snares of friends or society or, what is miscalled social convention, and become a prey to this and other bad habits.

The body is the temple of the Lord; keep it in good and strong condition. It is damaged by food and drink of the Raajasik behaviour and Thaamasik types and also by Raajasik (like anger, hatred, greed, etc.), and Thaamasik behaviour (like sloth, sleep and inactivity). When you get violent and angry with any one, quietly repeat the name of the Lord to overcome it or drink a glass of cold water or spread your bed and lie down until the fit of fury passes. While angry, you abuse another and he does the same; and tempers rise, heat is generated and lasting injury is done. Five minutes of anger damages the relationship for five generations, remember.

This Asthipanjaram (skeletal cage or body) is the Hasthinapuram, where we have the blind king, Dhritharaashtra, symbol of ignorance as well as Yudhishtira, the symbol of Wisdom. Let the forces of Yudhishtira win, with the help of Shri Krishna; let the tongue, accustomed to the bitterness of the margosa fruit of worldly triumphs and disasters, taste the sweet honey of Naamasmarana (remembering of Lord's Name). Experiment this for a time and you will be surprised at the result. You can feel the vast improvement in peace and stability, in you and around you. Learn this easy lesson, get immersed in joy and let others also share that joy with you. This is Message I leave with you.

Mirthipadu, 2-9-1958

Remember always that it is easy to do what is pleasant; but it is difficult to be engaged in what is beneficial. Not all that is pleasant is profitable. Success comes to those who give up the path strewn with roses, and brave the hammer-blows and sword-thrusts of the path fraught with danger.

15. Be heroes, not zeros

I am happy that I could converse now with so many of you at the same time. Yesterday and the day before, I had the same happy experience and thousands partook the joy from the words that were spoken. Now the whole world is very agitated; it is full of discontent and anxiety, fear and petty faction and hatred. In order to calm and quieten it and remove the discontent and anxiety, you must have enthusiasm and courage. When defeat and disappointment stare you in the face, you must not give way to weakness or despondency. Never condemn yourselves as inferior or useless; analyse the defeat and find out the reasons in order to avoid it the next time. You should have muscles of iron and nerves of steel. Then your resolution will itself generate the necessary confidence; and that will win over opposition. For the crop of life, courage and confidence are the best manure; they are also the best insecticides. Be like lions in the spiritual field, rule over the forest of the senses and roam fearlessly with full faith in victory. Be heroes, not zeros; for Maanava (man) is of the nature of Maadhava (God); he is the imperishable eternal Aathma! Just as rain falling in various parts of the world flows through a thousand channels and reaches the ocean at last, so too, creeds, rituals, religions and theologies, all derived from man's yearning for the vast inscrutable beyond, flow in a thousand different forms, fertilising many fields, cooling many communities, refreshing tired people in many ways and at last reach the Ocean of Bliss.

Proper atmosphere is essential for saadhana

The Lord is all Love; so he can be seen only through Love; the moon has to be seen only through its own light, no other light can illumine the moon. In the night of Vyaamoha (utter delusion), the Lord can be seen only by the light that He himself is, namely, the light of pure prema (love). He is Sathyam and Nithyam (Truth and Eternal) and so He is beyond the categories of mithya or jagath (falsity and change).

Drop the delusion that you have become old or diseased, or that you have become weak and debilitated. Some people begin to count the years and grieve over advancing age and shudder like cowards afraid of Death. But remember, elation is Heaven, despondency is Hell. Have always some work to do and do it so well that you get joy.

Vyaamoha is the dust that settles upon the glass of the chimney of the lantern and dims the light. The attachment to sensual objects and to the pleasure they give is the soot that sticks to the inside of the chimney; that too dims the light. Clean the chimney by naamasmarana every day and the flame will shine for you and others. Also, have good activities and good companionship. That will help very much in spiritual saadhana; proper atmosphere

very essential for the aspirant. That is why saadhakas (spiritual seekers) used to move out and dwell in the aashrams (hermitages) maintained by sages in the past.

In the aashrams, the saadhakas had the unique chance of being immersed in good thoughts, good activities and good company. It is like keeping a pot of water immersed in water; the water in the pot will then not be lost through evaporation. But if the pot of water is kept in the open so that the wind plays upon it and the sun shines on it, very soon the pot becomes empty. Be careful, therefore, that the success you have won in the promotion of virtue, in the conquest of baneful habits and in the assumption of regular disciplines, are not frittered away by trite company, loose talk, cynical criticism or lackadaisical effort.

Draw upon God's Grace for all your needs

The Goddess of Victory smiles only on the heroic, those who make lions of themselves, hardy, brave and adventurous warriors. If you secure the Grace of Maadhava, you are reinforced with so much strength that you can carry out even the most difficult tasks. So get the Lord on your side and draw upon His Grace for all your needs.

The treasure that is unmistakably precious is the quality of shaantham, equanimity, unruffledness. Practise this and make it your natural reaction. Why be put out when you see wrong? Why be attracted when you see evil? Remember evil has in it the potentiality to become good; good has in it the liability to turn evil. There is no fire without a wisp of smoke; there is no smoke without a spark of fire. No one is fully wicked, or fully infallible. Take the world as it is, never expect it to conform to your needs or standards.

Maayaa (illusory quality) envelops the good with the blemish of the bad; it makes the evil glitter with the shine of the good. Discriminate to the best of your capacity, and develop your capacity to discriminate. Struggle to win, that is the best that you can do; few can say, 'I have won'. Your conscience knows the real source of joy; it will prod you towards the right path; your business is to take it as 'guide' and not disobey it every time it contradicts your whim or fancy.

India has a rich mine of spirituality

There were two parrots on a tree, twins to be more precise. A hunter trapped them and sold them, one to a low, cruel butcher and the other to a sage who was running an aashram to teach the Vedhas (revealed eternal truths). After a few years, he was surprised to find that one bird swore very foully, while the other recited the leelas (Divine plays) of the Lord in a sweet musical tone which captivated the listeners. Such is the effect of the environment; so, seek and secure sathsang (good company). If truth is given up and man slides down the path of falsehood, then, as Appa Rao said just now, kshaama (starvation and disease) will descend on the earth instead of kshema (wellbeing), famine will stalk the land instead of the plenty that characterised it formerly. Appa Rao said that in Hindhusthan, there have been many manifestations of the Lord. That is true; for teachers have to be present where schools are and where children eager to learn are found. You cannot have the teachers in one place, the school in another; the black board in one place and the bell in another.

There are mica mines near Gudur; you cannot ask why they are not found near Peddhapuram. It is so, that is all. So too, in India, there is a rich mine of spirituality and so engineers have to come here to operate it, extract it and prepare it for use. That is the reason why more manifestations of the Lord appear here. The atmosphere here is also conducive for the practical application of new modes and methods of extraction and use for the benefit of all humanity.

"I am you and you are all I"

Bhaa-ratha means the land of those who have rathi (attachment) towards bha or Bhagavaan, that is to say, the Lord. The Lord too has to come in haman form and move about among men, so that He could be listened to, contacted, loved, revered and obeyed. He has to speak the language of men and behave like human beings, as a member of the species. Otherwise, He would be either negated and neglected or feared and avoided.

The Avathaar (Divine Advent) has to lift humanity and put it into the crucible in order to remove the slag and inferior metals that have destroyed its sterling worth. When little boys turn the tap without knowing its mechanism, water badly drenches them by scattering on them circular showers, so is man drenched in grief because he does not know how to turn and get an even flow.

If the naayaka (hero) is good, the naataka (drama) will be grand; if the hero is a flop, the drama will be a disaster. The leaders of the people must have faith in their own Aathma and the confidence born of that; then they can lead others; then they will not lead them astray, for they will feel kinship with the basic Aathma in all. Appa Rao spoke of Me. My Mystery can be known only by traversing My paththat I have here laid down. Understand yourself and that will reveal Me to you, for I am you and you are all I.

There is no need to retire into a forest or a cave to know your inner Truth and to conquer your lower nature. As a matter of fact, you have no chance to exercise your anger there and so the victory achieved there may not be lasting or genuine. Win the battle of life; be in the world but yet be away from its tentacles. That is the victory for which you deserve congratulations.

Peddhaapuram, 3-9-1958

Spread joy at all times. Do not pour into others' ears your tales of woe and worry; carry a smile on your face so that every one who sees you can catch that exhilaration. When you tell others of your success, your purpose is to create envy in them. You must not only love others, but you must be so good that others too may love you. Try to console, encourage, strengthen, and enlighten those who are miserable, downhearted, weak or ill-informed. Get yourselves equipped for this role.

16. Shikshana

UNTIL about an hour ago, the organisers of this function were nervous that I may not come. They had reconciled themselves to the disappointment in store and they were feverishly engaged in making alternate arrangements, for they had heard that the Godhaavari was in high floods and that I was at Rajahmundry. So they feared that I may not be able to cross the floods and come south in time for this engagement. From the fact that I had permitted them to announce My arrival for the function, they could well have inferred that the floods would subside and that I would be in their midst, for, once My word goes forth, it must happen accordingly. Do not doubt it. The furious waves calmed before Raama; the floods went down in time for Me.

We left Chebrole last night at 11 p.m., and reached Nuzvid at about dawn. From there we motored throughout the day, without as much as a halt on the way, not slowing down even when the Kumaararaaja and others accosted Me near the bridge on the outskirts of this town, for I was determined to be here at 5 p.m., as promised. Let me reveal to you that the organisers were caught a little unawares; they were confused by rumour that I was held up and that I could not be reached by post or telegram or telephone. They asked Me for some time, about two hours they said, for hastening with the arrangements! Believe Me, nothing can hamper Me; My will must prevail. Those who spread stories that I was held up by the floods were ignorant of my Reality.

Nothing can hold Me up or agitate Me or cast a shadow on Me come in this Human Form; be certain of that. Not even a hair can be touched by forces of calumny or distrust or ignorance. My sankalpa (resolve) must prevail; My task must be accomplished. My mission will succeed. I have come to illumine the human heart with the Light Divine and to rid man of the delusion that drags him away from the path of shaanthi (peace), the perfect equanimity born of Realisation. This School is associated with the late brother of the Raaja Sahib, a person who dwelt on My name even in the last moments of his life, and that was why I agreed to inaugurate it. I find that his name which is a long compound of a number of fine appellations of God, each redolent with the Divine Glow, has been shortened into a string of single letters, which has no fragrance, flavour or significance. This is not proper. Why deprive a name of its halo, by amputating it or wiping out all its aura? This distorted list of letters that you have now substituted for his full name, probably for the sake of greater convenience, seems to Me even more complicated than the original name, which though long, reminded one of the magnificence and splendour of the Lord. That is the reason why such names were recommended for men in the Shaasthras (spiritual scriptures), so that whenever they are mentioned, some one picture of the Lord, sweet and splendid, might appear before the mind's eye.

It is indeed good that the girls of this town have now a High School; I appreciate the efforts of all of you to start it and I see that the building and the equipment are quite satisfactory. I bless that the girls studying here as well as everywhere else (for all schools are Mine, whether I inaugurate them personally or not) may cultivate faith in Dharma (righteousness) and have sympathy towards all.

Students must be trained in ancient disciplines also Bhaarith has to take up once again the role of the teacher for the whole of humanity and so every boy and girl of the land must attain unblemished character and lead a life of strict moral discipline. Bhaarith is a word derived from Bhagavaan and Rathah (the constant attachment to the Lord), and the word connotes a people who are dedicated to the service and uplift of the Divine in each. So, along with the schooling that you get under present conditions in such institutions, a schooling which helps some of you to earn a living and which gives all of you a certain 'polish' and 'glitter,' you must also undergo training in the ancient discipline which tames the instincts, controls the impulses and assures steadiness of character. But these things are necessary for your own sake, not to speak of the role Bhaaritha has to play.

Shikshana (training) is a process in which the teacher and the taught co-operate and it must be a pleasant experience for both, a useful and heartening endeavour. Kshana means "a second" and I want that you must learn a good lesson every second of your school life. For example, when the teacher enters the classroom, children should salute him; that is a lesson in humility, in respecting age and scholarship, in gratitude for service rendered. The teacher too should decide to deserve the salutation of the children entrusted to his care by sincere work and selfless service. The student should not respect the teacher through fear, but be moved more by love. The teacher should avoid all methods that frighten or terrorise. Education is a slow process like the unfolding of a flower, the fragrance becoming deeper and more perceptible with the silent blossoming, petal by petal, of the entire flower.

Example, not precept, is the best teaching aid

The unfolding will be helped if the teacher is a fine example of viveka, vinaya and vichakshana (discrimination, humility and clearsightedness), rather than a person engaged in the task of mere repetitive teaching and coaching for examinations. Example, not precept, is the best teaching aid.

The value of character has to be emphasised here, for this is a School for Girls and traits like modesty and devotion to God are the real jewels for womankind. Women preserve the traditional values of our culture and keep the nation on an even keel. If they fail, it would be famine, not prosperity, believe Me. So base all educational efforts on building up the character of the students and then you can confidently think of raising on it the super-structure of curricula, etc.

Pupils must know the secret of a happy life and of happy cooperation with other members of the community. There are duties to oneself, one's family and one's society which must be carried out intelligently and joyfully. Then only can life be harmonious and fruitful. I declare that this task of renovating and recasting education is a part of My Mission and before long you will find Me engaged in it and chastising those who simply talk loud and long, of reconstruction and the preservation of spiritual values.

Girls are the makers of the homes of this land and so this school is a very basic institution, essential for this town. Woman is honoured in this land as the Lakshmi of the Home, as the Dharmapathi or companion in the pilgrimage towards God and selfrealisation, and as the Mistress of the House.

Girls should dread of sliding into moral error

If the women of a country are happy, healthy and holy, the men of that country will be hardy, honest and happy. Thyaagaraaja has sung that even the strongest of heroes are Kaanthadhaasas (swayed by the wishes of women) and hence, every woman has a very crucial role to play in individual and social uplift. Therefore, I will not burden girls with the study of the geographical minutiae of America, Australia or Germany. I would rather they knew the technique of mental calm and social harmony and service and economic contented-ness. Let them develop a dread of falsehood, of sliding into moral error; that is more important than even the development of the dread of God.

Let the girls also know something of the joy that service to those in distress can give, service without a thought of the benefits that may follow from the sympathy shown. Let them learn to lay aside the egoism that poisons the Seva of even veterans in the field, who go about extolling themselves as founders and promoters, for the service of the poor and the maimed, of this institution and that. The joy of the seva is the act itself. The fruit of the seva is the removal of egoism, not its multiplication.

The students of this school will take up later the most glorious and the most responsible role of Motherhood and so the teachers in schools for girls have a great big task before them, the shaping of the future history of this country. The mother is the pillar of the Home, of Society, of the Nation and so of Humanity itself. Mothers should know the secret of mental peace, of inner silence, of spiritual courage, of contentment which is the greatest wealth, and of aadhyaathmic (spiritual) discipline which gives lasting joy. The mother should teach the children the value of Naamasmarana (remembering God), and of mental and physical cleanliness. She should be like the mother in the story told by Vivekaanandha, who advised her son to call upon Krishna in the woods, while going to school alone and helpless.

The father and the mother must supplement at home the training given by the teacher at school. They must acquaint themselves with the lesson the child receives at the school and see that their conduct and advice do not conflict with what the child learns from the teacher whom he adores.

Teachers and parents must see that children learn certain good habits and attitudes during these formative years. What is read from books must be contemplated upon, thought over in quietness, reflected upon in silence. This is a very good exercise in intellectual development and in the acquisition of mental peace. The instinct to quarrel and fight over all misunderstandings must be regulated and sublimated.

Children should not enjoy the infliction of pain or be allowed to suffer physical pain or mental anguish. They must have a sense of responsibility at least for the safe custody and proper upkeep of their books. They must not take delight in showing off their dress or ornaments or status or wealth before less fortunate children of the school. They have to be taught sensible habits of personal cleanliness and more important than all, the habit of prayer at regular hours.

Importance of prayer at home and school

They may be encouraged to go to bed regularly every day at 9 p.m. and wake up at 5 a.m. and after washing the face and cleaning the eyes and teeth, they may be induced to pray or even to meditate. Do not think that there is a time enough for prayer later on in life, during old age perhaps. The time to lay the foundation for the habit is now. At school too, the day's work should start with prayer for five minutes which should be taken seriously by one and all, and not reduced to the mere formality or farce that it has become in most schools. The slightest sign of neglect shown by the school while arranging the prayer sessions will react on the minds of the children and they will see through the humbug quickly. So treat the prayer as the very foundation of the entire edifice of schooling. When the last bell of the day is rung, make the pupils stand up in the class quietly and let them observe silence for a minute or two and then disperse. There is nothing like silence to still the waves of your heart. The teachers must tell the children inspiring tales of our saints and heroes and plant the love for spiritual literature. If this school grows up along these lines, then the money so generously offered and so gladly devoted to the establishment of the school, is well spent; and I am sure this school will develop into a very useful institution in a short time.

Venkatagiri Town, 9-9-1958

Man can be happy with much less equipment than he seems to think essential.

When some article is with you for some little time, you feel it is indispensable and you do not know how to live without it. Like the silkworm, you weave a cocoon for yourself, out of your fancy. Do not allow costly habits to grow, costly from the monetary as well as the spiritual point of the view.

Watch your likes and dislikes with vigilant eye and discard anything that threatens to encumber your path.

17. Gunas and Money

I FIND that you have simply mentioned that Sathya Sai Baaba will be present at the Conference; you have not assigned Me any speech and so I can as well be silent. But so far as I am concerned, there is no need for formality or announcement. I am yours; you are mine. I do not await even an invitation; our relationship is not external; it goes deeper into the realms of the spirit. I am with you and in you; so I need no welcome nor previous request. The Divine Life Society endeavours to remind man of the Divine that is his basic reality; Divinity is inherent, immanent in every jeevi and the process of reminding man of that fact began with the very dawn of human history. What has to be done to lead the Divine Life is just the removal of the fog which hides the Truth and makes man imagine he is something else; something inferior, evanescent, material, momentary. All are holy, pure, part of eternity. But these things shine in each in proportion to the saadhana, just as bulbs spread illumination according to the wattage. There is no body which is not sustained by the Absolute; there is no name that does not indicate the Universal. All objects are suffused by that Principle; all names are attributes of its Glory. Turn to the path of inner content and joy

Every one must join this sangha (association) which harps on this fundamental fact and feeds the craving for immortality

in man. We were told by the Secretary who read the Report that the membership of the organisation is open to all who pay "four annas" (former Indian coin equal to a quarter of a rupee) a month. I would suggest that membership should be thrown open to all who can contribute not four annas, but four gunas, instead! Those who have Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (Truth, Righteousness, Peace and Love) are eminently fitted for membership. Insist on gunas (qualities) and do not look for annas (money).

Man always seeks happiness by trying to satisfy his desires and if a desire is fulfilled, he feels joy and when it is not, he feels grief. But the trouble is, desire is a bonfire that burns with greater fury, asking for more fuel. One desire leads to ten; and man exhausts himself in trying to exhaust the demands of desire. He has to be turned back from this path of never-ending desire to the path of inner content and joy. That is the task of the Divine Life Society. Man grieves because he has developed attachment towards the unreal. He cultivates an unreasonable affection for wealth; but he is prepared to sacrifice the riches in order to save the lives of his children, for attachment to children is stronger than to the wealth he has earned! He stoops so low as to neglect his children when the choice is between his survival and the children's welfare! But the Bliss that one gets when he dwells on the Aathma, the source and spring of all joy, is unbounded and imperishable. That is the real joy.

The orange has a rind which is not very tasty, but it protects the fruit and preserves it. To get the sweetness of the orange, you must peel and throw off the rind. Such is the fruit of the tree of life; it is protected by a bitter rind, of course, but the wise man does not try to eat the rind; he gives it the consideration due to it and proceeds to throw it off; he then tastes the sweetness.

Every Indian has to live the life taught by sages

In order that this wisdom may dawn on persons most in need of it, the elders must set an example of viveka and vairaagya (discrimination and detachment). If they run after sensory pleasures with feverish excitement, how can the younger generation be blamed for their selfishness and greed? The elders must practise what they preach, show how Divine life can confer joy, mental poise, contentment and real happiness. They must spend at least some time every day in the recital of the Lord's Name or in meditation on the Lord and then the children too will imbibe that atmosphere and acquire the sure means of gaining shaanthy for themselves.

You say that there is nothing as sweet as the name of the Lord but you do not repeat it at all. You have spoilt the road by neglect and wanton destruction, but you advise the children to walk along it. They will discover the hoax; they will ask you to travel on the road yourself and give them the lead. So the responsibility of the members of the Divine Life Society here is very great.

As a matter of fact, the responsibility of any person who holds forth an ideal is great, for he has to attempt to reach it himself while advising others to adopt it. That is why the responsibility of an Indian is so great, for in this land have been born saints and sages who have taught the world the highest truths of spiritual uplift; and any one claiming to be an Indian has to live the life taught by them, in order to deserve that ancestry and the admiration of aspirants all over the world.

Physical hunger must first be appeased

Divine Life is based on Sathwa guna (quality of calm serenity), which must be cultivated. This Guna can be built only upon Saathwik (natural) food, which promotes health, strength, lightness of spirit and earnestness of endeavour. There is no use distributing Adhyaathma rasa (juice of spirituality) to underfed and weak people; give Anna rasa (rice juice) first; make them strong enough to entertain strong beliefs and contain strong ideals; physical hunger must first be appeased by simple Saathwik food.

Then, try to repeat the name of the Lord, the name that appeals to you most. Do not treat the Name lightly; respect it even if you hear it from the lips of a beggar who uses it to procure aims. Though the person who utters it is bad or though his motive in uttering it is bad, do not illtreat the Name; for its purity can never be harmed. Thank them for reminding you of the Lord and go your way. Above all, do not laugh at and discourage those who call on the Lord. What right have you to substitute misery where there was joy and doubt where there was faith?

Prema (love): practise that; develop that; spread that; and all the hatreds and jealousies of today will disappear. That is the duty of the Divine Life Society, here as well as elsewhere.

Arkonam, 14-12-1958

No one can liberate you, for no one has bound you. You hold on to the nettle of worldly pleasure and you weep for pain. The kite is pursued by crows so long as it carries the fish in its beak; it twists and turns in the sky trying to dodge the crows who seek to snatch the fish; tired at last, it drops the fish. That moment it is free.

So give up the attachment to the senses, then grief and worry can harass you no more.

The kite sits on a tree, preening its wings, enjoying its happiness. You too can be so happy, provided you drop the fish you have in your beak.

18. Education and Peace

THE Governor, Dr. Raamakrishna Rao, spoke now so feelingly about the urgent need to cultivate spiritual values. When economic progress is made without modifying the spiritual background, then egoism, competition and greed bring the community to grief. Here in Thiruvananthapuram, there is no forgetting the spiritual background. The temple of Padhmanaabha dominates the town as well as the daily life of the people, not only of this place but of the entire State. Kerala is itself a holy land, and its holiness has increased by the advent of Shankaraachaarya and his teachings. The land is very beautiful, as I saw when I came from Coimbatore all the way to this capital city. The scenery formed by the backwaters and the coconut groves stretching from one end of the State to the other was like a vast painting by a great artist on a huge canvas. The Lord enjoys these things as a painter; He appreciates His own handiwork, standing before His own painting or sculpture. To see the Lord's own loveliness in the lovely scenery around you requires not the outer eye but the inward eye. If you develop that, walking over the land or voyaging over the waters is itself a pilgrimage through holy land, giving you glimpses of God in every speck of cloud or patch of green. But all this Sundharam (Divine Beauty) must lead man to Sathyam (Truth) and all this Sathyam to Mangalam (Goodness). That is the natural path. The beauty of the Lord's handiwork leads man on to the glow of the Lord; the picture makes you curious about the Painter. The Lord, when His Truth is grasped, confers Bliss which is auspiciousness itself.

Kerala is ancient repository of spiritual wisdom

I found also that the people here are very hardworking and industrious. From one end of the State to the other, people were busy on the roadside, in the shops and fields, in the gardens and the canals. Another thing that attracted the attention of all those who were with Me was the stream of children hastening to the schools, with cadjan leaves or slates or bags of books slung on their shoulders, boys as well as girls. The percentage of literacy here is, I know, the highest in India. Besides every family has a number of highly educated men and women. Thiruvananthapuram is the centre of many great educational and cultural institutions.

In spite of all the ancient traditions of spiritual victory, all the granary of spiritual lore, all the activity and all the industry, all the passion to get educated and all the opportunities that are so gladly grasped, I find here a great deal of Ashaanthi (unrest). There is no 'inner peace' prevalent here, where one would expect to find it in large measure. Of course, as the saying goes, "An aged tiger still has the stripes." Let Me tell you that the breath is still there but strength has gone from this ancient repository of spiritual wisdom, which once taught the secret of Equanimity and Shaanthi to all. Gramophone records are all made of the same material. So too are all hearts, of the same Chaithanya (Supreme Consciousness). The grooves carved in them appear the same in all the plates. The grooves carved upon the hearts by grief and joy are also more or less the same. It is the needle which runs over the groove that produces through the sound box and the amplifier good music or bad. The needle is the manas (the mind), the mind that runs over the happiness and the misery and translates or exaggerates the response and makes you feel elated or dejected. If the needle is sharp, the music is a pleasure to the ear. If it is blunt or broken, then the sound becomes a screeching torture.

The education man must first secure

The mind is the wind that brings to us the smell, foul or fragrant, of the world. When the mind turns to the foul, it makes you disgusted; when it turns towards the fragrant, you are made happy. The wind gathers the clouds from the four quarters; similarly the mind brings into your consciousness the disappointments of many hopes. Again, it is the mind that, like the wind, scatters the clouds that darken it or make it feel lost in the night of doubt. Control the mind and you remain unruffled. That is the secret of Shaanthi; that is the education that man must first claim and secure. We find today that, the man who is most highly educated is the very person who is most discontented and unhappy. Then, what is the gain from all the study he has made of books and of men and things?

To gain this equanimity, you have to do not reading, but systematic saadhana (spiritual effort). Then, you can be happy whether you are rich or poor, appreciated or rejected, prosperous or unlucky. That is an armour without which it is foolish to enter the arena of life. If the arena is entered just for getting sensory joy, you are in for all kinds of trouble. It is like sailing in a tiny boat on a storm-tossed sea, without a rudder. So, enter upon the path of spiritual discipline now itself.

You have each one of you a great deal of concentration; you know the art, for every task requires it and everyone benefits by it. The carpenter, the weaver, the clerk, the boatman, all have it in a greater or lesser degree. Use it for this task also; direct the mind towards its own working, examine it and train it to restrict itself to good company, good thoughts and good deeds. Practise meditation on any Form of the Lord and repeat, with the awareness of the sweetness, any Name of the Lord. That will teach the mind to be sharp and produce good music out of the joys as well as the griefs that are incidental to life.

Like underground water, the Divine is there, in every one, remember. The Lord is Sarvabhootha antharaathma (Indweller in all beings), Sarvavyaapi (All-pervading). He is the Aathma (Soul) of every being. He is in you as much as in every one else. He is not more in a rich being or bigger in a fat being; His spark illumines the cave of the heart of every one. The Sun shines equally on all; His Grace is falling equally on all. It is only you that erect obstacles that prevent the rays of His Grace from warming you. Do not blame the Lord for your ignorance or foolishness or perversity. Just as underground water wells up in a gushy spring when a bore is sunk down to that depth, by constant Raam Raam Raam Raam Raam, touch the spring of Divinity and one day it will gush out in cool plenty and bring unending joy.

Life is a pilgrimage to God; the holy spot is there, afar! The road lies before you; but unless you take the first step forward and follow that step with others, how can you reach it? Start with courage, faith, joy and steadiness. You are bound to succeed. The mind and the intellect are two bullocks tied to a cart, "the inner man." The bullocks are not used to the road of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema and so they drag the cart along the road familiar to them, namely, falsehood, injustice, worry and hatred. You have to train them to take the better road so that they may not bring disaster to themselves, the cart they are yoked to and the men inside it.

Your child gives you great joy by its play and prattle but when it interferes with your work or teases you when you are otherwise engaged, you get very angry with it. It is a source of joy as well as grief. There is nothing which can give unmixed joy; even if there is, when it is lost, it brings about sorrow. This is in the very nature of things; so try to correct the very source of joy and sorrow, the mind; control it and train it to see the real nature of the objective world, which attracts and repels you by turns. That is the real fruit of education.

19. The Moon and the Mind

THERE are manydifferent stories given in the Shaasthras to explain the origin of the Shivaraathri (The Night of the Emergence of Linga form of Shiva) Festival. Some of them were related now by the persons who spoke to you. Another story is that this is the day on which Shiva danced the Thaandava (cosmic dance) in His Ecstasy, with all the Gods and Sages taking part in the Cosmic Event. When He consumed the Haalahaala (death-dealing) poison that emanated from the ocean of Milk, in response to the prayers of the Worlds, which it threatened to destroy, the heat of the fumes was well nigh unbearable, even for Him. So, it is said, Ganga was poured uninterruptedly on His matted locks---this is the explanation for the Ab-hisheka (ceremony of pouring consecrated water, oil, milk, etc., on the idol) which is offered in all Shiva temples for hours on end, and in some places, uninter-ruptedly---but Shiva was only partly relieved. So the cool Moon was placed on the head; that gave some relief. Then, Ganga was placed on the matted locks. That was of great help. After this, Shiva danced with all the Gods, the Thaandava dance. That is the story but all this did not happen on a particular day and so Shivaraathri cannot be said to commemorate that day.

Some say that Shiva was born on this day, as if Shiva has birth and death like any mortal! The story that a hunter sat on a bilva tree on the look-out for animals to kill and without intending any worship, unknowingly, dropped the leaves of that tree, which happened to be a bilva, upon a Lingam beneath, and so attained salvation, explains only the importance of this day; it does not explain the origin! Besides we have not only Mahaashivaraathri. We have every month a Shivaraathri, dedicated to Shiva worship. Again, what is the significance of the Raathri (the Night)?

Well, the night is dominated by the Moon. The moon has 16 kalas or fractions; and each day when it wanes a fraction is reduced, until it is annihilated on New Moon night. After that, each day a fraction is added, until it completes itself on Full Moon night. The Moon is the presiding deity of the Mind; Chandramaa manaso jaathah---"Out of the mind of the Purusha (Godhead), the Moon was born." There is a close affinity between the manas and the Moon; both are subject to decline and progress. The waning of the Moon is the symbol for the waning of the mind; for the mind has to be controlled, reduced and finally destroyed. All Saadhana is directed towards this end. Manohara---the mind has to be killed---so that Maayaa may be rent asunder and the reality revealed.

Every day during the dark half of the month, the Moon, and symbolically its counterpart in man, the manas, wane, and a fraction is diminished; its power declines---and finally, on the fourteenth night, Chathurdashi, there is just a wee bit left, that is all. If a little extra effort is made that day by the Saadhaka, even that bit can be wiped off and Manonigraha (mastery of the mind) completed. The Chathurdhashi of the dark half is therefore called Shivaraathri, for that night should be spent in the japa and dhyana of Shiva, without any other thought either of food or sleep. Then success is assured. And, once a year, on Mahaashivaraathri Night, a special spurt of spiritual activity is recommended, so that what is shavam (corpse) can become Shivam (God) by the removal of this dross called manas.

Symbolic meaning of words used in scriptures

This is the purpose of Shivaraathri and so it is foolish and even harmful deceit to imagine that "keeping awake" is the essential thing in its observance. People try to escape sleep on this night by playing cards, attending non-stop cinema shows or watching plays or dramas. That is not the saadhana which should be intensified on Shivaraathri. That is a travesty of the vow of 'sleeplessness.' It vulgarises you and encourages evil and sloth, wickedness and hypocrisy.

On Shivaraathri, the mind must become laya (reduced into nothing). Lingam means that in which this lagath attains laya---leeyathe; that into which this lagath goes---gamyathe. Examine the Linga; the three gunas (primordial qualities) are represented by the three-tiered Peetha (platform); the Lingam above symbolises the goal of life. Lingam means "a symbol", the symbol of creation, the result of the activity of the three gunas and of the Brahman (Supreme Reality) which permeates and gives it meaning and value. When you worship the Lingam, you should do so with faith in this symbolic significance.

Every word, every Form used in the Shaasthras has a symbolic meaning, which gives it value. The word "prapancha" which you use so freely to indicate this "created world" means, "that which is composed of the panchabhoothaas---the five elements of earth, fire, water, wind and ether." Take the word 'hrudhayam' used for "the heart". It means hrudhi (in the heart) ayam (He). That is to say, it means not the organ that pumps blood to all parts of the body, but the seat of God, the altar where Shiva is installed, the niche where the lamp ofinaana is lit. Again, Shiva does not ride on an animal called in human language, a "bull!" The bull is only a symbol of Dharma standing on the four legs of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema.

The three eyes of Shiva are the eyes which reveal the Past, Present and the Future. Shiva alone has all three. The elephant skin which forms His cloak is just a symbol for the elemental bestial primitive traits which His Grace destroys; He makes them powerless and harmless; in fact, he tears them to pieces, skins them so to say, and makes them ineffective. His four Faces symbolise Shaantham, Roudhram, Mangalam and Uthsaham (Peace, Fierceness, Auspiciousness, Determination). In this way, realise while worshipping the Lingam, the inner sense of the many attributes of Shiva. Meditate thus on Shiva this day, so that you may get rid of the last lingering vestiges of delusion.

Just as Om is the verbal symbol of God, the Lingam is the symbolic form of the Godhead. It is just a form. Everything is maayaa (delusion) and to grasp it, you must deal with maayaa. Otherwise you cannot realise the Maayaa Shakthi (Deluding Power). God is as immanent in the Universe as life is immanent in the egg. The chicken is in every part of the egg; so too, God is in every part of the world. I prefer the description Sarvaantharyaami (inner ruler of all) to the description, Sarvabhootha antharaathma (Inmost soul of all beings). All are in this Hall, each one has no Hall in him, is it not? In the same way, all are in Him; which is better than saying, He is in all.

It is Maayaa which binds and limits man; all saadhana is to conquer maayaa. A bit of iron will sink in water but if beaten and made hollow, it will float. So beat the mind and make it hollow. Then it will float on the sea of samsaara (worldly life). Above all, have viveka and do not be led into taking any false step.

Grow not only physically but also spiritually

You need not waste time in trying to discover Me and My Nature. Understand what I teach, not 'who is the teacher, for I am beyond your intellect and your shakthi. You will understand Me only through My work. That is why sometimes in order to reveal who I am, I myself show you my 'visiting card,' something that you call a miracle. Know the marma (the mystery) and carry out the karma (the duty) I assign you.

In the next fifteen years, a number of young people now growing up will shine as devoted aspirants in the spiritual field; they know that each of them is nithyam, sathyam and pavithram (eternal, truth and pure) and that they are amritha-puthraas (children of Immortality). They are growing in viveka and vairaagya and they are purifying themselves by Naamasmarana. But the elders are laughing at such boys because they have taken to the godly path. Perhaps they will be happy if their children loiter in the streets in groups, smoking and swearing, and staring at posters.

The elders should be elated that their children are on the royal road to real joy and contentment and that they will be serving themselves and the world much better. You do not know how to make an ornament out of gold; so you give it to a gold smith. Why worry if he melts it and beats it and pierces it and pulls it into wire and twists it and cuts it? Let Him who knows the art shape the child into an ornament of society; do not worry.

You must grow day to day, not only physically but in the spiritual life also. How long are you staying on in the primary school, writing down the letters of the alphabet? Get up, demand an examination, pass, and move forward to the higher class!

The leevi must master the inner world first

You are now sitting on the floor of the Hall; seek the means to see the top floors too. Progress! Come forward! Then Shivaraathri becomes a Mangala-raathri (auspicious night) for you. Otherwise it is just another raathri wasted.

Many might discourage you and say that meditation and worship can be taken up after you reach a ripe old age, as if they are the prerogatives of or special punishments for the aged. Enjoy the world while you can and then think of the next---that seems to be their attitude. The child takes its first few steps in the comparative safety of the home: it toddles about inside, until its steps become firm, until its balance is perfected, and until it can run about unaccompanied and without fear. Then only does it venture out into the streets and the wide world beyond.

So too, the leevi (living being) must master the inner world first; become impervious to temptations, it should learn not to fall when the senses trip its steps; it should learn the balance of mind which will not make it lean more to one side than to the other; and then, after mastering this viveka (discriminatory wisdom), it can confidently move out into the outer world, without fear of accidents to its personality. That is why there is this insistence on 'sleeplessness' or vigilance.

You cannot claim to be educated or grown-up unless you have mastered the science of self-control and destroyed the root cause of delusion. It is not this night alone that you should spend in the thought of Shiva; your whole life should be lived in the constant presence of the Lord.

Man's basic nature seeks inward contentment

Do not tell me that you do not care for that Bliss, that you are satisfied with the delusion and are not willing to undergo the rigours of sleeplessness. Your basic nature, believe Me, abhors this dull, dreary routine of eating, drinking, and sleeping. It seeks something which it knows it has lost---shaanthi (inward contentment). It seeks liberation from bondage to the trivial and the temporary. Every one craves for it in his heart of hearts. And it is available only in one shop---Contemplation of the Highest Self, the basis of all this appearance.

However high a bird may soar, it has sooner or later to perch on a tree top, to enjoy quiet. So too, a day will come when even the most haughty, the most wilful, the most unbelieving and even those who assert that there is no joy or peace in the Contemplation of the Highest Self will have to pray, "God, grant me peace, grant me consolation, strength and joy."

The ills of the country are due to under-nourishment; not so much under-nourishment of the body, but under-nourishment of the spirit, want of spiritual exercise, neglect of spiritual regimen.

Allowing the malady the fullest scope, people are engaged in reciting the names of the drugs in the pharmacopoeia! They do not make any attempt to take the drug in.

The means of conveying into every home and village the lifegiving waters of the spirit have all dried up or got choked up.

That is the reason why under-nourishment, with all its attendant symptoms of debility, nervous disorder and mania is so rampant today.

20. Neither Scriptures nor Logic

VAARANAASI Subrahmanya Shaasthry spoke for long on two types of inquirers at the present time and the conflict between the two, namely, the Shaasthravaadhins (expounders of scriptures) and Buddhivaadhins (expounders of intellectual reasoning). He said the former accepted the wisdom of the ancients as recorded in the Shaasthras, as authentic and authoritative, and the latter preferred to follow the path of reason, and take as authoritative only such things as will satisfy their logic. Of course, he showed the defects of the latter group of people by taking a number of examples and exposing the fallacies of the Buddhivaadhins. He quoted profusely from the scriptural texts and made his discourse abstruse and scholarly. I feel that most of what he said went above your heads and so you have missed the crux of what he wanted to communicate.

Buddhi (intellect) revels in discussion and disputation; once you yield to the temptation of dialectics, it takes a long time for you to escape from its shackles and efface it and enjoy the bliss which comes from its nullification. You must all the while be aware of the limitation of reason. Logic must give way to Logos and Deduction must yield place to Devotion. Buddhi can help you only some distance along the Godward path; the rest is illuminated by intuition. Your feelings and emotions warp even your thought processes; and reason is made by them into an untamed bull. Very often, egoism tends to encourage and justify the wildness, for a person is led along the wrong path by his very reason, if that is the path he likes! You very often come to the conclusion you want to reach!

Scriptures are only road maps or guide books

Unless you are extra careful to examine the very process of reasoning, even while the process is going on, there is the danger that you may be following only the trail you yourself have laid down. Reason can be tamed only by discipline, by systematic application of the yoke, the nose-string, the whip, etc. That is to say, by means of dhaya, shaantham, kshama, sahana (compassion, calmness, forbearance, endurance), etc. Train it to walk quietly along small stretches of road at first and then, after you have become sure of its docility, you can take it along the tortuous road of the sixfold temptations: the road of lust, anger, greed, delusion, pride and jealousy.

Bhasmaasura got vast power through the Grace of God, even the power to burn into ash any one on whose head he placed his hand; but his instincts had not been tamed, his reason had not been purified, and so, in his greed and egoism, he tried to reduce the very Giver of the Gift into ashes!

The Shaasthras are only road maps; they are guide books at best, describing the road and giving the directions for the journey. It is the actual journey that will reveal the hardships, the delays, the landslips and the pot-holes, as well as the beauty of the scenery encountered and the magnificence of the final goal. No second-hand account can equal the first-hand experience. Moreover, the Shaasthras might speak about a thing in many different ways, just to elaborate it for better understanding; even the Vedhas extol a thing in ten different poetic forms, from different angles and standpoints; but some scholars try to treat each such statement as distinct and as having a different connotation; and so they add to the confusion, rather than reduce it.

Both have good points as well as limitations

The symbols on the map are interpreted differently by different scholars according to their pre-conceived notions, predilections and pet theories. So the Shaasthravaadhins too are not always right; they can be led astray by the desire to score a point over their adversary; they belong to certain schools of thought and this too acts as a brake on their freedom to seek and know the real meaning of the Shaasthras.

I am neither a Shaasthravaadhin nor a Buddhivaadhin. I am a Premavaadhin (expounder of love). So, I have no conflict with either the scholar who adheres to texts or the devotee of reason. Both have their good points as well as their limitations. If you acquire prema, then you can dispense with the Shaasthras, for the purpose of all the Shaasthras is just that: to create the feeling of Sarvajana samaana prema (equal love for all); and to negate egoism which stands in the way. Reason too, if it comes in the way of this love, is to be discarded as 'perverted'.

All the time and energy spent in pursuing the Shaasthras are a sheer waste, if study and reflection do not help you to recognise that the mind is worse than a drunken monkey. Pilgrimage too are for elevating the heart, sublimating the impulses and leading the lower self to higher levels of thought and action. Reason serves the same purpose, or at least, it ought to. Reason seeks to know the unity of the universe, the origin and goal of it all, the laws that govern the anu (microcosm) and bruhath (macrocosm); and it peeps behind the ever-receding curtain to get a glimpse of the Suuthradhaara (puppeteer), who pulls the strings.

Do not engage yourself in Ichchaa krishi (the cultivation of or the promotion of wants and desires). That is never-ending process of sowing and reaping; you will never reach contentment; one desire when satisfied will fan the thirst for ten more. This year is named Vikaari (crooked)! So, be warned! Do not run after devious desires or crooked satisfactions. All roads leading to the realm of the senses are tortuous and blind; only the road that leads to God is straight. Cultivate neethi (the path of straightforwardness) in everything. That will reveal the Aathma. Neethi will enable you to overcome the three gunas. The treatment you have to give these gunas is to grind them to a paste so that a new taste of Aanandha might emerge; just as you grind salt, chillies and tamarind together to get a tasty chutney for your meal. No single guna should dominate; all must be tamed and diverted to fill the lake of Aanandha.

It is the internal aanandha that matters, not the external, the sensory, the objective, the worldly. If the inner poise or inner equilibrium is undisturbed by external ups and downs, that is real success. Every day is the same as another, the rising and the setting of the Sun, the waxing and waning of the Moon, the seasons, etc., but when 365 days are over, we call it a New Year and give it a new number; but the Sun and the Moon are unaffected by it. Be like the Sun and Moon. Do not care whether they ring out the old year or ring in the new.

No one need do anything positive to discover the Aathma; when the 'cover' of illusion is denied and destroyed, it will reveal itself in all its glory. What is needed is the removal of the fog, the cloud, the miasma, and the casting off of all the clinging curtains that limit the self into the body and its adjuncts. How to remove the fog? How to clean the mirror so that the Aathma may be reflected clearly and without distortion? The mind that makes you believe in Shaasthras as the ultimate authority and Buddhi which makes you believe that reason is the supreme authority---both have to be scrubbed and polished; they get tarnished pretty quick! They require constant attention. Like a brass vessel that has to be scrubbed with tamarind and washed and dried so that it may shine like new, the mind too has to be treated ever with goodness and service, repetition of the Name of the Lord, execution of beneficial plans, taking up good deeds and contemplation of the welfare of all. The Sun is up here in the sky; it is the passing cloud that hides him from your vision. The sensory world is the cloud that hides the Aathma, ever shining in the firmament of your heart. The same mind that gathers the clouds can also disperse them in an instant; for it is as the wind which collects them from all the quarters and renders the sky dark; and the next moment, changing direction, sends them in a scurry to wherever they came from! Train the mind to disperse the clouds, not to gather them. Every aspirant has to do this by following a systematic discipline.

You cannot reach the peak in one Jump; it is a hard job to negate the evidence of the senses; one has to overcome the tendencies that have grown through hundreds of births. The world is an illusion and all is Brahman only for one who has reached the ultimate goal; but until Realisation dawns, one has to wait patiently, hoping and preparing. The growing baby cannot be fed on adult food; you have to adjust the food to the needs and capabilities of the child. You should not overdo or avoid doing anything. Both lead to disease and ruin health.

I do not consider Shaasthra Vaadha (Intellectual Scholarship) as very essential for the spiritual aspirant. I advise you to develop Aanandha (Bliss), not through these difficult and even doubtful means, but through the cultivation of prema (love), which begins in the home and family and spreads to all creatures. Put down the sharp-edged weapon that seeks to analyse and chop the arguments of the opponent, to cut his point of view to pieces. Take up the laddu (sweet pudding) of love which spreads joy and wins over recalcitrant hearts.

That is My path, the path of prema along which I shall take you. That is why I offer My visiting card to every one of you when you come to Me. I know your name, your degrees, your profession, your status and your history. But you do not know mine. I have no need to know all about you from a perusal of your cards; but I want you to know something of My Glory; and so I give you a glimpse of it, as a Mahima (Divine Miracle). But I also give you enough of My prema so that you can mix a little of it with whatever you do or feel or think and make it sweet and palatable.

Venkatagiri, Adhyaathmik Conference, 12-4-1959

Each has his allotted task, according to the status, taste, tendenow and earned merit. Do it, with the fear of God and of sin, deep in your heart.

Welcome pain and grief so that you take both success and failure as hammer strokes to shape you into a sturdy saadhaka. Inner content is more important than outer prosperity.

21. Jada and Chaithanya

YOU have all tasted the sweetness of the Name of the Lord for twenty-four hours, as Akhanda bhajana. Akhanda means uninterrupted, without any gap. I am glad you sang without any gap and also that you selected the Naamaavails of the manifold Forms of God, instead of singing one particular Naamam throughout, as if God had only one facet of personality. The same man is father of his children, uncle to his nephews, brother to some, cousin to many others and son to his parents. So, God too has many aspects and when you conduct bhajana, you must try to satisfy all who take part by reminding them of the manifold manifestations of the Lord, not simply Raama or Krishna or Sairaam.

Again, Akhanda bhajana means that it should not be just a twenty-four hour affair or even a seven-day affair; it must go on, from birth to death, this contemplation of the Source and Goal of things. The procession to the cremation ground starts immediately on birth and the beating of the heart is the drum-beat for the march towards that place. Some take a longer route, some reach quickly, but all are on the way. Therefore, bhajana has to start in childhood and has to continue. It must be the constant companion of man, his solace and strength. Do not postpone it to old age, for it is the essential food for the mind.

You have all been thrilled by this bhajana here and you are glad that you got the chance to join. But this is just a temporary feeling. You who shared in this glorification of the Lord will tomorrow as enthusiastically join in some other gathering where falsehood and injustice are honoured! There is no consistency in your behaviour. What you feel as correct and what you do are poles apart. That is not the mark of a bhaktha. If there is no shraddha (faith), how can you have shaanthi and santhosha (peace and happiness)?

People seek frantically for peace and happiness in a thousand ways along a thousand roads. Dr. Bhagavantham was telling Me just prior to My coming here, at the Tata Institute of Science, that there is something beyond all this objective world, some mystery which becomes deeper and more mysterious with every advance of science. When one door is opened, ten doors which are closed reveal themselves to the surprised scientist. So real shaanthi is to be got only in the depths of the spirit, in the discipline of the mind, in faith in the One Base of all this seeming multiplicity. When that is secured, it is like having gold, you can have any variety of jewels made from it.

It is all a matter of one's own experience. And the joy of that experience, the profound exhilaration which accompanies it cannot be communicated in words. All shravanam and keerthanam and singing God's Names) is to take you nearer that experience.

Shravanam is the medicine that you take internally and keerthanam is the balm you apply externally. Both are needed. So also dharma (virtue) as well as karma (sanctified activity) are necessary; karma is the very foundation of bhakthi (devotion to God). It is the basement on which devotion is built. Dharma is the attitude in which action is done, the truth, prema and equanimity with which the mind is activated, when it seeks to do things.

Karma has to be done in and through dharma. Those dominated by thamas (ignorance) do karma solely for the sake of the fruits thereof and they resort to all subterfuges in order to gain from it; for them, the end justifies the means. Those dominated by rajas (passion) are proud and pompous and boast that they are the doers, the benefactors and the experiencers. Those dominated by Sathwa guna (quality of calm serenity) will do karma, regardless of the fruits thereof, leaving the result to the Lord, not worrying whether it leads to success or failure, conscious of their duties and never of their rights.

As a matter of fact, there is more joy in the actual doing than in the result that accrues. This must be your experience. All the elaborate arrangements that the master of the house makes for a wedding in the family; the reception, the feeding, the illumination, the music, these are thrilling while they are being planned and executed; but they do not give so much pleasure, once the thing is done. In the end, when the bills come, they might even cause disgust and grief! So it must be easy to discard the fruits of action, provided you spend some thought upon the process of karma, and the worth of the fruit.

Thejeevi (individual soul) has come to this birth in order to reveal the splendour of the spark of Godhead which It is. The body is the wick of the lamp, yearning for God, is the ghee which feeds the flame. But like the rat which, attracted by the strong smelling cheap stuff inside the trap, neglects all other articles of food in the granary and falls a prey to its foolishness, man too neglects his real sustenance and wastes his life in pursuits of mortal riches.

Various types of Bhakthi

You should see and wonder at the nithyam (eternal) in all this anithyam (temporary). This drama has only two actors jada and Chaithanya (the insentient and the Supreme Consciousness), who play a million roles. Just as Violinist Chowdiah here who played ten ragas (musical tunes) now and can play 400 ragas on the four strings, jada and Chaithanya together play all these roles. Out of a mere 26 letters of the alphabet all the words in the dictionary are formed and millions of books get written, read and understood. But you should see through this drama and discover the Director who is none else than God.

This can be done through bhakthi, based on nishkaama karma (desireless action). Bhakthi is of various types, according to the samskaara (purificatory acts) of the devotee and the state of his mind and the stage of his development. There is the shaantha bhakthi (peaceful devotion) of Bheeshma, the Vaathsalya bhakthi (parental devotion) of Yashodha, the Madhura bhakthi (sweet devotion) of Gouranga and Meera and the Anuraaga bhakthi (deep attachment) of the gopees. Of these, the dhaasya (devoted servant) attitude is the easiest and the best for the majority of aspirants at this time. It means Sharanaagathi or Prapatthi (total surrender). It grows out of Shaantha bhakthi.

Bhakthi has to be developed by several means or indeed by all means. The mind and the intellect have to be trained and controlled, that is the aim. They can take you as far as the Visishtadhwaitha (qualified dualism); later, adhwaithic (nondualistic) experience depends upon His Grace; the Saayujyam (merging in the Absolute) is in His Hands. The chief means are sravanam, keerthanam, smaranam, paadha sevenam, vandhanam, dhaasyam, sneham and Aathma nivedhanam (hearing, singing and remembering Lord's Name, prostration, salutation, servitude, friendship and self-offering). Sneham (friendship) is placed just before Aathma nivedhanam (offering of the Self), because between friends, there is no fear, no doubt or disbelief or hesitation. Mission on which the Lord comes on this Earth

It is to clear the path of spiritual progress of Man that the Avathaar (Divine Incarnation) has come. The ashaanthi (restlessness) in which man is immersed has to be curbed. That is what is meant by, parithraanaaya saadhoonam---"the saving of saadhus," the saving of all good jeevis (individual beings) from the tentacles of ashaanti (grief) caused by want of knowledge of the relative unimportance of worldly things. All jeevis must get shaanthi and santhosha; that is the mission on which the Lord comes again and again on this earth. He selects a place full of pavithrathwam (holiness) and Dhivyathwam (divinity) and takes on the human form, so that you may meet Him and talk, understand and appreciate, listen and follow, experience and benefit.

The tragedy is that when Godhead is invisible, formless, you concretise it as you like and pray to it and get consolation and strength out of it; but when it is before you, concretised in human form, you doubt and discuss and deny! People fall before the stone Naaga (snake) and pour milk on it and wash it lovingly with sacred waters; when it materialises into an actual cobra, they flee in fear! But a true bhaktha has no fear or disbelief.

Prahlaadha was shivering at the Narasimha (Man-Lion) Form when it appeared from the pillar and when the Lord asked him why, he replied that it was due not to fear at the form of God, for as he said, all forms of His are lovely as they are Divine; it was due to fear that the Form might soon disappear and he might lose the splendid Vision of the Lord. The father was so full of rajoguna (quality of passion) that he saw the terrible Narasimha Form; but Prahlaadha did not see It so. To Him, the Lord appeared beautiful and full of grace, for he was saturated with bhakthi.

You must dive deep into the sea to get the pearls. What good is it to dabble among the waves near the shore and swear that the sea has no pearls in it and that all tales of its existence are false. So also if you must realise the full fruit of this Avathaar, dive deep and get immersed in Sai Baaba. Half-heartedness, hesitation, doubt, cynicism, listening to tales, all are of no avail. Concentrated complete faith---that alone can bring victory. This is true to any worldly activity, is it not? How much more true must it be, therefore in the spiritual field? But if you have already attached yourselves to some one Name and Form, do not change it, do not choose another in place of the prema swaruupam (embodiment of Love).

A hundred people might come to your house and even treat you with affection, but you do not address them as Pappa or Daddy. Have your mind fixed on One; do not now and then allow clouds of doubt, like "Is He Great?" "Is He God?" to dim your faith. Be bold. Acknowledge the glory that you have witnessed; proclaim the joy that you have experienced; confess to the Grace that you have earned. When people ask you whether you too are going to Puttaparthi, for example, and whether you too are doing bhajana, say "Yes" proudly, for there is no shame in walking on the right path!

Shaanthi cannot be won by study of books

There are some Gurus who insist on implicit obedience, who advise their disciples even to beat any one who cavil at their master! I have contempt for all such and I have come to give them proper advice. The Guru can never usurp the position of Shiva; it is better that you have Shiva Himself as your Guru, rather than have these power-mad and egoistic teachers, who revel in hatred and aggrandizement. Leave all those who cavil, severely alone, with their karma and their thamasic aanandha, not merely those who are ignorant of Me, but even those who deride all forms of God and the very idea of God.

Develop faith in yourselves, so that you can stand like a rock braving the rushing waters of the flood of negation. That faith will make you forget the changing circumstances of the outer world.

Raamadhaas, when he was put in jail, thanked Raama for the great blessing for he felt that he could now carry on his naamasmarana undisturbed by the world, which was mercifully shut off by the high prison walls!

The first steps are the most hard in the pilgrimage

It all depends on the point of view whether you are happy or unhappy, that colours all attitudes and options. Raamadhaas sang the exploits of Aanjaneya in Lanka and, while doing so, he mentioned the white lilies of the island. Aanjaneya heard him sing it and immediately took exception to the description. He said that he had never seen a single white flower there; the lilies of Lanka were red, he declared. Raamadhaas, however, insisted that they were white. Aanjaneya got annoyed at the impudence of poets who tried to pit their imagination against a first-hand expert witness and appealed to Raama for intercession. Raama agreed with Raamadhaas! He said that Aanjaneya saw them red because his eyes were affected by Raajasik anger at the entire Raakshasa (demonic brood)!

So, if you have shaanthi, the world will appear a quite peaceful place; if you have ashaanthi (restlessness), the world will be full of ashaanthi. Shaanthi is to be won by saadhana, not by study of books. One judge reads huge big volumes and writes one judgement for a suit; another judge reads the same huge big books and writes quite an opposite judgement for the same suit! Books are just guides for some bit of the road. Afterwards, you have to find the way yourselves and it gets easier as you go. One naya paisa and another make two, four more make an anna and a hundred make a rupee. The first steps are the most hard; the pilgrimage to Kaashi is to begin with the first step.

Keep the flame of vairagya (detachment) with tiny sticks until it grows into a big bonfire; welcome all chances to develop viveka. If you are good for the world, then the Lord of worlds will shower Love on you. Become a blossom, exude the fragrance of seva (selfless service) and prema (love); then I shall gladly wear the garland composed of all of you.

Take the name of the Lord and repeat it always. I was listening to the bhajana you did here yesterday and today. Your voices were low; they could scarce be heard outside this Hall. I know that in a certain institution where they decided to do akhanda bhajana, they had to hire a few persons at so much per hour so that their plan could succeed. Do bhajana with faith and enthusiasm. Let the whole city shake with devotion you put into every Name that you sing. The Name promotes comradeship and establishes concord; it stills all storms and grants peace.

All the joy you crave for, is in you; but, like a man who has vast riches in the iron chest, but, who has no idea where the key is, you suffer. With proper directions, dwelling upon them in the silence of meditation, it is possible to secure the key, open the chest and be rich in joy.

22. The screen within

IT has become a convention to address such a gathering as "Brothers and Sisters" though no speaker is prepared to live up to the ideal that such a form of address implies. Many such empty formalities have entered into daily conduct. For example, it was mentioned now, that today is a 'red letter day' in the history of Thirupathi. Red letter days or days which have to be recorded in letters of gold are becoming quite cheap nowadays. Only four days, remember, deserve that honour: the day on which Bhakthas (devotees) gather to sing the glow of God; the day when the hungry are fed; the day when one meets a great sage; and the day on which viveka dawns on the individual. This day certainly falls in the category and so the secretary's description is, for once, right. I like the work on which this Committee is engaged in; and so, I hurried to this place from Bangalore, where yesterday there was an Akhanda bhajana (uninterrupted singing of devotional songs) by many devotees. I like Saint Thyaagaraaja. My affection for him is not a matter of today. It is centuries old. And Thyaagaraaja and Thirupathi are also attached to each other. He prayed here that the screen hiding the Light that was inside him might be moved aside by the Lord's Grace. This Committee has been trying heroically to erect a place of worship for the Saint and a hall to celebrate the Thyaagaraaja Festival and to encourage the study and practice of his songs. I was sorry when I heard their report and listened to the journeys these people have made to distant places and the dribbles of donations they have received so far.

The means for collecting donations must be pure. Though the report is evidence of their devotion and sacrifice, it reveals the false sense of values which people are developing nowadays. 'Dabbu' (money) must also circulate like 'blooddu' (blood)! Otherwise, that too will cause ill-health. There is no better method of using 'dabbu' than for promoting Bhakthi, for then the entire system, individual and social, will benefit by it. If money is stored and not circulated, it will cause social swellings and the swellings may become boils and burst.

I learn that the Secretaries in their despair have thought of running a lottery for completing this structure. I am very much against this plan. A lottery attracts money from persons who are moved by greed; it holds out the attraction of quick riches and tempts men from a wrong angle. It will be tainted money to sell lottery tickets and distribute prizes and use the balance. Though it is for a good purpose, the means must be pure. Every one who gives even a paisa must give it out of real devotion and knowing that the paisa will be used for the building which he wants to get built. Do not receive money given half-heartedly or with some other motive than devotion. Then only will the building be worthy of Thyaagaraaja, who spurned the nidhi (wealth) offered by the

of Tanjore and preferred the 'Sannidhi' (proximity) of the Lord to the favours bestowed by human donors.

It is when diseases are rampant that doctors are needed more; and now, when the standard of moral conduct has fallen very much, people must turn to doctors like Thyaagaraaja who dispense the drug of Raamanaama in their own sweet palatable versions. All have equal right to share in the health-giving properties of that drug. In every linguistic group we have great vaidhyas (doctors) who treat this bhavaroga (disease of worldly existence) successfully: Suurdhas in Hindhi, Raamalingaswaamy in Tamil, and Purandharadhaasa in Kannada---to give just one example in each language.

Thyaagaraaja's songs impart Aanandha

Thyaagaraaja is in a class by himself, not because he sang in Thelugu, but because his songs are marked by the rare excellences of sincerity of devotion, poetical beauty and musical melody. The raaga (tune) suited to the emotional tempo of the idea elucidated in the song; the thaala (marking of time) quite appropriate to the movement of the meaning; the words which automatically dictate the thaala and guide the musician along the notes and the entire structure of the song helping the arousal of the yogic urge in the singer---such spontaneous mastery of the science and art of both music and saadhana is seldom found in the history of any language or country. He sang unaware, out of the fullness of his realisation, and so the songs have that strange communicative force imparting aanandha to the singer as well as the listener.

Devaki gave birth to Krishna but the child was brought up by Yashodha in Brindhaavana. Yashodha had all the delight which the child could give. So too, the Thamil devotees of music have adopted Thyaagaraaja and have practised his songs more than the Thelugu speaking people. They are the Yashodha of Thyaagaraaja. The Thamils specialise in Raaga and Thaala and they sing with scrupulous adherence to these. However, since they do not grasp the full meaning of the text, distortions painful to the Thelugu ear often occur. More and more Thelugu devotees have to learn to sing Thyaagaraaja krithis so that the nuances of the Thelugu language the songs may not be missed. After all, the raaga, thaala and the notations are to help in the more easy assimilation of the message contained in the song and in the transmission to the singer and the listener of the live emotion out of which the song arose in the first instance. This can happen only if the meaning is clear.

Bhakthi is the reservoir for all the temples

Music as a vehicle of peace is universally popular; men, women and children of all lands are amenable to its subtle influence. Even animals and plants are susceptible to music. The Lord has said: madbhakthaah yathra gaayanthe, thathra thishthaami, Naaradha--

"Where My devotees sing, there I seat Myself." So, the songs of Thyaagaraaja sung well and with the full realisation of the context and the meaning are excellent media for the spread of Bhakthi. That is why I came today, to encourage and bless this Committee which is celebrating Thyaagaraaja Uthsavam (festival). Three things combined to bring Me here: iccha, shraddha and anukoolam---their yearning, faith and conjunction of convenience! The Thirumalai Thirupathi Devasthanam must foster the nurseries of Bhakthi wherever they are found. For, it is through Bhakthi that pilgrims flock to the Hill and pray before Venkateshwara; if the springs of Bhakthi dry up, with what are the minds of men to be watered? That is the reservoir for all the temples of this land. So, the Devasthanam can well come to the rescue of this Committee. It is doing the work of the Devasthanam by promoting the krithis (musical compositions) of Thyaagaraaja, which develop the spirit of devotion. He was Vaalmeeki himself come to the south of India to sing the glow of Raama and spread the Raama thaaraka manthra. He had always the welfare of the individual as well as the world in view. He had the experience of the constant presence of the Lord, so that Raama had to give him dharshan (audience) and come to his help a number of times. His Bhakthi made him ever at peace and joyful.

Prayer and contrition are the two disciplines by which the mind can be cleansed of egoism and hatred; Thyaagaraaja is a fine example of how this can be done. He was ever engaged in the process of examining his words and deeds and evaluating them on the touchstone of Bhakthi. As the bee in search of honey wanders in search of the flowers, as the creeper clings fast and fondly to the tree lest it fall, as the rill runs to the river and the river rushes to the sea, Thyaagaraaja pined for Raama; his songs are pure fragrant blossoms of Bhakthi and therefore, immortal.

Every man seeks rest, but the dust of sense-craving accumulates on the mind, producing rust and threatening to 'burst' it; so he has to test it, off and on, keep it in perfect trim. To remove that rust, the music of Thyaagaraaja's krithis will be useful. Lay aside your cynicism for a while and listen to the captivating tunes and imbibe the sense. The science of spiritual culture and of the control of the mind has been developed and practised in this country for thousands of years; and that is why Indian civilisation has stood the shock of ages and the fury of typhoons that swept whole peoples off their feet. India is still green and fresh, on the threshold of a new era, under the leadership of her own ancient ideals.

The taste for good music has also gone nowadays with the coming of catchy lilts and croonings from the cinemas and the craze has spread for imitating them even in bhajanas! Sing the krithis of Thyaagaraaja in the classical raagas and I am sure they will have great appeal. They are not mere paatalu (songs), they are mootalu (bundles) of precious stones; they take you along the baatalu (roads) to God. If Thyaagaraaja gets neglected, this Holy Hill will lose height, for the Hill stands so high because it rests on the pedestal of Bhakthi. Neglect of Thyaagaraaja can happen only when the people of this land become desperately worldly, deaf to the whisper of the God within.

23. The temple

I ALWAYS take delight in going to villages and meeting villagers. The villager has a pure unsullied mind and the atmosphere of the village is sincere and untouched by artificiality. Today is a great day in the history of your village, because you are getting a Hospital and a Health Centre under the Community Development Scheme. I am glad you are aware of its importance. You have made arrangements to celebrate the event in a grand manner, all of you joining together joyfully to carry out the various tasks allotted by the organisers. It is this spirit of co-operation and this joyful comradeship which your village has shown that has brought Me here today. I am Prema and I want to see Prema progress in all places and affairs.

Man suffers from two types of ills, physical and mental; the one caused by the dis-equilibrium of the three tempers of Vaatha, Pittha and Sleshma (wind, bile and phlegm) and the other caused by the dis-equilibrium of the three Gunas: Sathwa, Rajas and Thamas (qualities of serenity, passion and inertia). One peculiar fact about these two types of illnesses is that the cultivation of virtue cures both. Physical health is a pre-requisite for mental health and mental health ensures physical health! An attitude of generosity, of fortitude in the presence of sorrow and loss, a spirit of enthusiasm to do good, to be of service to the best of one's capacity--these build up the mind as well as the body. The very joy derived from service reacts on the body and makes you free from disease. The body and the mind are closely interrelated.

You are mostly agriculturists and so I need not tell you that hope is what you feed on, most months of the year. Hope sustains you, while you plough, sow, plant and manure the crops that you raise. That hope you must make a mental habit even in things distinct from agriculture. That will sustain you in all walks of life. Do not give any chance for that vile thing, despair, to eat into the vitals of activity and effort. Despair is a sin against God; when He is in you, why do you lose hope? That is why the Lord says when I am here, why do you fear? Be always joyful, optimistic and courageous. You said that river Chithravathi that flows near Puttaparthi flows by the side of your village too, and that it is a link between us both. But it is a very feeble link, if at all. For, it is full only for a few days in the year; the rest of the year it is a sandy waste! If the waters of courage flow in your heart of hearts, then that Chithravathi is more precious than this dry stream; it is a truer link between you and Me.

The village is the backbone of the whole country. The child becomes man, the village grows into a town; only, we should see that the innocent, simple, sincere child does not grow into a cruel, hard-hearted man. Similarly, we have to see that the quiet, simple village does not grow into a noisy negative town.

Tomorrow's leaders are being bred in this and other villages all over the land. If you have virtue, the towns will have virtue tomorrow. If you have strength, towns will be strong. If you are quarrelsome, the towns will be affected by it. Learn to live and work in amity. Make the joyful experience of today a permanent feature of your life.

Do not depend on government for all your wants

Factions and parties in villages are the bane of our community life. All the profit of hard toil is wasted in litigation engendered by hatred arising from them. You grow the food and the material for clothing for the people. You set the example of industry to the indolent. You rise with the cock-crow and you go to bed when the fowls go to sleep. You sweat and toil and watch the sky prayerfully with hands folded in devotion; and you live humbly and thankfully. There is an intimate relationship between the 'rithu' and the 'rythu' (the Season and the farmer). Your life runs on an even keel, following the regularity of the seasons. You do not hurry ahead of nature, as townsmen do.

I want you to be grateful to the persons who made this hospital possible and to the Government who are running it for you. The Government collects money from you and arranges these amenities. But you should not depend on the Government to satisfy all your wants. Even the officers are not all powerful. They are only servants, who have to obey others. The Government is the chauffeur of the car, which is the State. You own the car and you are the passengers too. Select proper chauffeurs and be vigilant to see that the driver at the wheel does not harm the passengers or the car. That is the duty of the owner, is it not?

The greatest instrument by which success can be ensured for all your efforts is Bhakthi. That will give health, wealth and prosperity too, for it will eliminate hatred and faction and give more power to your elbow when you plough the land. A man with bhakthi will do every act as worship of the Lord and so the act will be done better and more efficiently, without any malingering or insincerity. It will also win the Grace of the Lord, and so, a bhaktha (devotee) will be able to raise more crops and enjoy greater health and mental happiness.

Do some inner cultivation

If all the thousand persons in a village sing the glow of the Lord together, that will produce greater harmony and social cohesion than the thousand clamouring and shouting one against the other. Prema will flood the village and fertilise all your efforts if you take the Lord's name and sing together. Do it for some time and you will yourself bear witness to the changed atmosphere.

Sometimes, the cloud of envy and hatred comes to darken relationship. This is due primarily to fear, fear that causes anger. All that will disappear with the emergence of Bhakthi and the humility and wisdom which come in its wake. Anger wastes time, health and character. Do not allow it free play. Do some inner "cultivation" too, as you are now doing external cultivation in these fields. That has to be done in the field of 'feelings, motives, desires and promptings.'

I saw your temple while coming in procession on that bullockcart.

I found it dilapidated and not in a good clean condition. The heart of the village is the temple; the lamp burning there is the life of the entire village. Keep it burning bright and clear. Some one has placed a broken bandy cart on the narrow verandah of the temple; that is as bad as dishonouring the abode of the Lord. It will not inspire devotion in the people. Keep the temple, however simple and small it may be, clean and free from encumbrances. Do not treat it as some villagers do as a refuge for idlers, who loiter around and play cards or gamble. Get together a Bhajana group in this village. I know you have one; but it must be more active; it must attend the daily Puuja in this temple and make it a fountain of devotion. That will demonstrate that you have gratitude to the Lord for all the blessings He has showered on you.

Develop the spirit of mutual help

The doctor in charge of the Hospital now appealed to you for co-operation. He meant that you should not neglect the bodily ills and damage the tabernacle of God. It is an instrument which has to be well cared for. The doctor is an expert in that subject, having studied medicine for long and being moved by a spirit of service. Honour him for his skill; have faith in him and his medicines and do not, by neglect or resort to quacks, worsen the diseases you may have.

I say this specially to you, people of Budill! Develop the spirit of mutual help. Villagers have been ruined because one person cannot tolerate the prosperity of another. This is the bane of the Indian character. Every one is bent on pulling down his neighbour; whereas in the West, they encourage the slightest sign of superior intelligence and industry and show no rivalry. Jealousy is the cause of ruin. It is born of the undue importance attached to the body, the senses and the accumulation of objects that cater to the senses. See things in their proper perspective, give them their worth but no more. There are greater things that grant joy and peace. Try to get hold of them; every one of you has a right to possess them. None can keep them away from your grasp.

You spoke of the Brahmeshwara Temple that was once here but that has since gone under the sands of the river. Let not the temple of the Lord that is in your innermost heart be similarly overwhelmed by the sands of kaama and krodha (lust and anger). You talked of many Rishis and Yogis who have done thapas (penance) here, according to tradition. Well, those Rishis and Yogis knew which is real and which is unreal. They controlled the vagaries of the mind and dwelt in shaanthi. Fix your attention on these eternal values; then you will not be swept off your feet by gusts of passion or fits of fury. Then this village, filled with love and mutual helpfulness, will become the ideal for miles around.

Budili Village, 9-9-1959

24. Bahumathi and ekamathi

THOUGH this area and this town are not new to Me, this is the first time that most of you are seeing Me. When a few more dishes are prepared, it become a festival day. So, when the District Athletic Competitions are held here, it is a festival for the boys and students as well as for parents and others interested in the welfare of the country. You have all put on a glad face forgetting the daily drudgery. You have witnessed the competitions and the games and enjoyed the keenness and enthusiasm of the participants. The students sitting before us are the instruments with which the India of tomorrow is to be shaped. Their teachers, who are also here, are indeed lucky; for destiny has allotted them the noble task, the golden chance, to serve the interests of the people in the pleasant manner, spending their time in the company of innocent fresh children.

The father, the mother and teacher are the three primarily responsible for moulding the future of the country. Of these, the teacher plays the most important role for he is specially trained and selected for the job; he voluntarily takes it up and therefore must carry it out to the best of his ability without demur; he is implicitly trusted by the child, the parents and the public alike and the trust must be repaid by honest service. He is honoured and respected by the children and the public as the Guru, with all the hallowed associations of that word. He may be poor, uncared for by the men at the top, but the satisfaction he gets by his quiet creative work is enough compensation.

Teacher should himself follow the advice he gives

The teacher should never curse his pupils whatever the provocation; he must always bless them. If he swears like a boor he reduces himself to the level of a boor. He should watch his behaviour rigorously and find out whether there is some habit or trait which if imitated by the pupil will be harmful. He should himself follow the advice that he gives. Otherwise, he will be teaching hypocrisy to the little children and encouraging them to acquire the cleverness not to be found out. It is sheer mental weakness and cowardice that allows hypocrisy to develop. If you have the courage to face the consequences, you will never utter falsehood. The teacher should not try to rule through the easier means of fear, for that is full a dangerous consequences to the pupils. Try rather the path of Love.

Teachers should themselves take to the discipline of japam and dhyaanam (repetition of the Lord's Name and meditation); this will give them the inner quiet they sorely need. They should create an atmosphere of plain living and high thinking, for pupils unconsciously accept them as heros and begin imitating them. They should hand over to the rising generation the riches that past generations have amassed, viz., the spiritual disciplines and the discoveries. Learn them yourselves and teach them to the pupils under your care. This will enable you to discharge the debt due from you to the rishis (sages) of old. I know that when you sow bitter seeds you cannot grow sweet grain. Yet, there are certain things possible even under the limitations of the present curricula and courses of study.

Be grateful to the village where you were born

The unmistakeable sign of rain is the wetness of the ground; so too, the sign of a person who has had some years of schooling is good manners; he must have humility and know that the field of knowledge is so vast that he has been unable even to touch its fringe; he must be aware of his kinship with all mankind and he must show a keenness to do service to others, at all times, gladly, and without desire for publicity. The educated boy must move with others in a free and friendly way. God is the moving force in every one. He is behind all good impulses and useful attitudes, you are all separate beads strung together on that one thread, God. So hatred is ugly, unnatural and inhuman; it is against the very core of love that is in every one.

Always respect another's opinion and another's point of view.

Do not start a quarrel at the slightest difference of opinion. He may be right and you may be wrong. Ponder over his argument; he might have had the advantage of knowing more about the subject or you may be prejudiced either for or against; or he may not know as much as you. All differences of opinion are not due to personal hatred, remember.

Above all, I must tell you one thing. Honour your parents and the villagers among whom you grow up. Be grateful to the parents for all the care and sacrifice they undergo for your sake. Be grateful also to the village where you first saw the light. What good is it if after being born in one place and bred in the cradle of its love, you run away somewhere and make that new place better? Always turn your attention to your village and think of ways and means of bettering its lot. That is the gratitude you must show.

By all means, master the subjects prescribed in your curriculum of studies; but along with them, study also the principles of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Universal Religion). Do not give it up as sanaathana (old), coming down from very ancient times. It has stood the test of centuries and is capable of giving you joy and peace even today. It is like a very loving grandmother, anxious and capable of feeding you with nice good dishes. You will not allow such a grandmother to die of neglect, will you?

There was once a miser who lived in a leaky house; the rainwater poured into the house through the roof but he sat through it all. Neighbours laughed at him and warned him to get the roof repaired. But in the rainy season he replied, "Let the rains subside, how can I repair it now?" And when the rains stopped, he replied, "Why should I worry about leaks now the rains have stopped?" Do not suffer the leaks when the rains come, as they are sure to do; repair the roof now itself. That is to say, acquaint yourselves with the spiritual primers and text-books now itself; begin the first lessons of silence, prayer and chanting the Name of the Lord. It is never too soon in the spiritual pilgrimage.

Now when you wear bush-coats and strut about in pants, causing envy among the little children who cannot afford these, you feel elated. But you can be legitimately proud only when you are able to control the vagaries of the mind and direct your emotions and desires along honourable healthy channels, braving even the ridicule of your so-called friends. That is real freedom, real success. If you reach thatstage, then you become a seasoned driver and can be trusted with the wheel on any road and with any cargo, however precious. Then you will not cause harm either to yourself or to others. Then you deserve to become a leader.

Only men with ideals are remembered by posterity Be eager and earnest to know more and more about the art of joyful living, happy unperturbed living. One can advance only step by step and there is the danger of slipping down two steps when you climb one. What matters is the determination to climb, the resistance with which the sliding tendency is met, the yearning to rise to progress, to conquer the lower impulses and instincts. If you have that, the hidden spring of power will surge up within you; the Grace of the Lord will smooth your path. Keep the ideal before you; march on. The student of today becomes the teacher of tomorrow and Headmaster later. How? By study, by the development of a reliable character. Only those with ideals are respected and remembered in gratitude by posterity. Raama is honoured and worshipped while Raavana is execrated. Why? Because of the character they evinced.

Have the progress of your country, your Sanaathana Dharma and your own Self always before your mind's eye. Let the hunger for serving these three grow more and more. Then your studies will serve a purpose and give you a sense of mission. Then you will acquire fear of sin, fear of the God within, fear of the mean, respect for elders and faith in your own self.

One thing more: Do not do anything which brings tears into the eyes of your parents. Honour them and obey them. Do not condemn them as old-fashioned. "Old is Gold." They speak out of a longer experience of the world and its tricks.

Winners must be thankful to the losers

Well, I am asked to distribute bahumathis (prizes) to you by Anjanappa and others. They meant that I should distribute the prizes, but "bahumathi" means "multi-mindedness". Now, I never give that type of mind! I always insist on ekaagratha (singlemindedness).

Anjanappa wished that I give you Prasaadham (propitiatory offering); My prasaadham is always Aanandha prasaadham (Gift of Bliss)! It can be got through ekamathi only. I do not like this competition and strife, this cultivation of egoism through prizes and ranking. I am sure none of you here will be spoilt either by pride or by dejection.

Take failure coolly and take victory also coolly. The second is a very difficult mental exercise. The winners must be thankful to the losers for their victory, for if only the losers had put in a little more effort, they would have carried away the prizes instead. The losers by running neck to neck with you also prompted you to run faster and thus encouraged you to win. They gave you the grit to put in that extra pace, which brought the prize into your hands.

And the losers! I ask you not to lose self-confidence. Do not attach too much value to victory or too much importance to defeat. Even in examinations, when you fail, do not be overcome by despair and do silly things like attempting to take your own life. Life is much more precious than that. You are born for much greater things than the passing of examinations. Be brave and patient. All is not lost if you do not pass an examination which tests just one aspect of your intelligence! Your destiny does not depend upon examination marks; it depends more on character, will-power and the Grace of God.

The Headmaster hoped that this School would become a Higher Secondary School. I bless that it may be raised to that status soon and become a source of light and culture for this part of the country.

Madakasira, 25-11-1959

Love is God, God is Love. Where there is Love, there God is certainly evident. Love more and more people, love them more and more intensely; transform the love into service, transform the service into worship; that is the highest saadhana.

25. Manushya and manas

DR. Bhagavantham asked Me now to 'speak' to you but I do not make speeches. I only 'converse' with you. I do not make public speeches or address meetings, as so many of the persons who spoke now do. They made 'speeches' which were regular feasts to the ear; My conversation will be, on the other hand, 'medicine for the mind.' Theirs were lectures; Mine are mixtures. So, you must take my talk into your mind very attentively and without wasting or spilling even a word.

Usually, when you are asked where God is, you point to the sky or some such distant place and say He is there, as if He is just a Person and has a definite place of Residence. But nara (man) himself is Naaraayana (God), each one of them; Maadhava is maanava, each one of the species. So the number of Gods is crores, as given in the Shaasthras or, as can be calculated today, much more. It is delusion that has induced Naaraayanawaswarupa (embodiment of God) to imagine and behave as if he is just a nara (man). To remove that delusion, there are various means suited to the needs of each sufferer. But all the treatment and all the struggle is to achieve the experience of being Naaraayana and discard the limited, bound, relative entity, nara. That is the one harvest yielded by all the various processes. Until one understands oneself, the delusion and the resultant grief cannot be ended.

India is the birth place of spiritual science

Let me tell you that you cannot understand Me and My Secret without first understanding yourselves. For, if you are too weak to grasp your own Reality, how can you hope to fathom the much grander Reality of My advent? To grasp My meaning, you have to tear into tatters the doubts and theories you now have and cultivate Prema, for the embodiment of Prema can be understood only through Prema. The "miracles and wonders" which cannot be explained by the categories of science, are so natural to Me that I am amused when you label them as miracles. The Lord had announced that He would come down for the restoration of Dharma (righteousness) and that He would assume human Form so that all might gather round Him and feel the thrill of His companionship and conversation. And the Lord has come, as announced.

For those who are drawn by the pulls of the mind, the intellect and the ego, things beyond the ken of these three are inscrutable; there is a limit beyond which the mind and the intellect cannot traverse. That is why the Mahaashakthi (Supreme Power) has to envelop Itself with Maayaa (delusion) and come down to the level of human comprehension.

This Bhaarathavarsha (India) is the birth place of spiritual science. Here, every man, woman and child is a student of that science. Each one here is entitled to the study of that supreme subject. The ancient heritage must be handed down to each boy and girl in the land, not merely to the students of institutions like this.

In this spiritual science, some one method or other has been emphasised during the various periods of history. It was manthra (mystic formula) once, yaaga (ceremonial sacrifice) another time, yoga (Divine communion) a little later and after the rise of Buddhism and its spread to all parts of India and even her neighbours, it has been Thanthra (magical and mystical formularies). Shankara gave great encouragement to Thanthra and Poet Kaalidhaasa also considered it important. It flourished due to the encouragement which Shivaaji gave to the thaanthric scholars and it dominated the spiritual life of the country for many centuries.

Thanthra means only "that which saves well" and so there is no reason to feel apologetic about it. It is just a means to achieve the aim of the merging of the Jeewa with Brahman (individual soul with Supreme Soul). Sir John Woodroffe has shown in his books that Thanthra is a systematic discipline which employs symbolism and sublimation to purify the instincts and control the mind. He removed to a great extent the prejudice which had kept people away from Thanthra. It is spiritual science based on the Shakthi (Feminine aspect of Energy) that plays a central part in the spiritual progress of man.

Examine, each of you, your own mental make-up and see whether you have used your viveka and vijnaana (discrimination and worldly knowledge) to clothe yourself in vairaagya (detachment), so that you do not suffer from attachment to things that will fade away. There is no dearth of books telling you how to be free from grief. The Geetha is available in all languages and at a very low cost, say, four annas a copy. The Bhaagavatha and the Raamayaana and all other books are sold at the rate of thousands of copies per day; but there is nothing to indicate that they have been read and assimilated. The breath of the mouth must give an inkling of the food partaken, is it not? But the habits, the conduct, the character of the readers of these books have not undergone any change for the better. Egoism and greed are still rampant; hatred has not abated and envy eats into the vitals of society.

Similarly, do not treat My words too lightly; do not say, "We saw Sai Baaba and heard his talk and it was all very fine." Decide at least to carry out some one piece of advice for your spiritual advance. It is very wrong to tarnish the body making it perform a single bad deed or making it move in bad company. Sanctify the body, sanctify each activity by devoting it to a high purpose, I am not commanding you today on the basis of my authority; I am telling you out of the fullness of Prema, on the basis of the right I have to chastise you and direct you along the path.

I know that the elders, while themselves neglecting the cultivation of higher virtues and themselves discarding the discipline of Japam and Dhyaanam, commit the additional crime of laughing at their children who feel the sweetness of the Name of the Lord and who frequent the places where they can get good company, noble thoughts and spiritual teaching. They call such young persons demented and try to cure them by their own special course of punishment. Their children's insanity is certainly preferable to the madness for luxury, for gambling, for drink and for loose morals that have become the only property the elders leave behind for their children.

Your study here must develop your powers of discrimination, not your egoism. Do not argue for argument's sake, for it will lead only to dry scholarship and intellectual pride. Such craving for criticism is a disease of the intellect and it has to be nipped in the bud. Examine the thing which you do not like very closely and with great care. Do not jump to conclusions, favourable or unfavourable. That would be abdicating your precious status of 'thinker' and your responsibility to yourself. Even the Sun which is millions of miles afar can set fire to some object if by means of a magnifying glass its rays are focussed at one point. So also, focus all your powers of observation and judgement on one topic and it will surely stand revealed.

Man can and should be the Master of his mind

The world itself is subject to constant agitation; how can your plan to lead a quiet contented peaceful life upon it succeed? It is like trying to float without any heaving or falling while being tossed about on the waves of the sea. Under such conditions, the best thing is to recognise the fact and not to worry about the unavoidable.

Manushya, the word meaning "man", implies that man is the Master of his mind or manas. When people come to Me and complain that they cannot concentrate, I laugh at their weakness, for even the driver of a car is a master of the art of concentration. He does not pay heed to the chatter from the seat behind him or to the chatter of the person on his left. He is watching the road in front of him with single-pointed attention.

Learn to listen with one-pointed attention

If you have shraddha (faith), more than half the battle is won.

That is why in the Geetha, Krishna asks Arjuna, "Have you listened to what I have said with one-pointed attention?" And Arjuna, good student that he is, says in reply that even in the midst of the opposing armies ranged on the battle-field, he has listened to the words of the Lord with keen concentration. Learn that concentration and your learning will stand you in good stead.

I have been asked to inaugurate the Library of this College by the token act of giving over these books to the Principal to be placed on the shelves along with the books already there. Come and read the books in the Library and enjoy the teachings that are given by great saadhakas and siddhas (spiritual aspirants and divine seers). Let children too come and handle the books and turn over the pages; the library must be useful for all persons of this town from the age of 2 to 60 or 70. It is not like a hospital, which is unnecessary for some. It benefits all and so all must make the best use of it. The wisdom that these books contain should percolate to every home in Aukiripalli.

Sanskrit learning has to advance by your efforts and your enthusiasm; the whole world will benefit if you keep it burning bright. Fulfil that responsibility of yours to the best of your ability and the Lord will shower His Grace on you. Do not mistake the technique for the goal; do not lose your way in the tangle of scholarship. Scholarship and learning are only the means for the mastery of the Mind. Turn from the Creation to the Creator.

If only men knew the path to permanent joy and peace, they will not wander distracted among the bye-lanes of sensual pleasure. Just:as the joy felt in dreams disappears when you wake, the joy felt in the waking stage disappears when you wake into the higher awareness, called inaana.

Use the moment while it is available, for the best of uses, the awareness of the Divine in all.

When you die, you must die not like a tree or a beast or a worm, but, like a Man who has realised that he is Maadhava (God). That is the consummation of all the years you spend in the human frame.

26. The world, My mansion

THIS gathering reminds Me of the sea, for here we have in this Hall streams of people coming from various directions towards God; people who follow various paths to attain shaanthi and santhosha (peace and happiness). My Mission is to give you Aanandha and I am ever ready to do so. My language may give some of you a little trouble for you may not follow Thehugu, but in this gathering there will be some who will not be able to follow whatever language I speak in; so I shall speak in Thehugu itself. There are four things in which every man must interest himself. "Who am I? Wherefrom have I come? Whither am I going? How long shall I be here?" The four Vedhas give the answers to these four questions. All spiritual inquiry begins with these questions and attempts to find out the answers. Suppose there is a letter put into the post box without the address to which it should go or the address from which it has come. It will not reach anywhere. It is a waste to have written it. So too, it is a waste to have come into this world, if it is not known wherefrom you came and whereto you go. The letter will go to the dead letter office! The jeevi (individual soul) will be caught in the cycle of birth and death and can never find itself. For this, Aathma vichaara (enquiry about the Self) and for the successful arrival at the correct answers, saadhana (spiritual discipline) is essential. The answers must become part of your experience.

Saadhana must be done in a disciplined, systematic manner, in an atmosphere of virtue. Just as we have fans here in this Hall to cool the atmosphere and make it possible for such a large gathering to sit packed in this Hall, so too the fans of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema are necessary to reduce the sweltering heat of ajnaana, asathya, anyaaya and akrama (ignorance, falsehood, injustice and indiscipline). In a world where Dharma is being insulted and denied at every turn, peace and tolerance are the roads through which man can save himself.

This is the sum and substance of what I have to tell you and what you have to cultivate. In every act, have tolerance, patience, mutual help. In the family, cultivate patience and mutual respect; in the community, have dharma and justice; in the community of peoples, have the ideal of peace. The body is said to be the tabernacle of God; the world is the body of God. A pinprick on the toe is immediately recognised as an injury to the self because the toe is part of the self-same body. So too, suffering in one corner of the world is as much the concern of the Lord as suffering in any other. When the Andhra State was formed some one told Me that I had been taken out of the Madras State and made an Andhra! I told him that the whole world was My Mansion and that Madras and Andhra were rooms in that Mansion! The world is a temple, the temple of the Lord, His body where He resides.

When I was coming by car to this place I passed through several streets and I found several pandhals and halls decorated, because they were having religious discourses there and readings and expositions of sacred texts and scriptures. Crowds of listeners had gathered in each place; there was no lack of enthusiasm for sabhas and bhajans (associations and group singing). Yet, atheism is rampant and the number of people who deny God and decry Godward-bound aspirants is increasing. Why? Because eating the food does not by itself guarantee digestion. Practice of even a thousandth part of what one has read or heard can alone help in giving peace and joy.

What is wanted now is uthsaaha, dhairya and vishwaasa (effort, courage and faith). In effort, you must follow a regulated routine learnt from some adept in the field. For courage, you must feel your own importance for your uplift; never call yourself a sinner born in sin, bred in sin and engaged in sin. No; that kind of selfcondemnation ill becomes a child of God, an Amrithaputhra.

In every one of you, God is the moving spirit, the very Soul; how then can you be evil, when you are here for fulfilling God's purpose, according to his Will, His plan, His law? He has endowed you with many faculties so that you may seek Him and reach Him. You are not therefore a helpless neglected individual undergoing a sentence of death. You are Aanandhaswaruupa (embodiment of Bliss), born to a rich heritage, which is yours for the asking. Only you do not ask. Have faith in your destiny and work gladly and steadily to attain it.

Bhakti (devotion) is simply the rakthi (attachment) towards Bhagavaan (God), affection towards the Supreme; one need not fly away from hearth and home to cultivate it. If the seed is planted far away from the parent tree, does it become any different? Boil it and then of course it will not grow again and burden the world.

Similarly, boil your instincts and impulses and scorch the sensory cravings that enslave you. That brings you nearer to God, wherever you may be.

Both good and bad emanate from the same mind

From the Ocean of milk when it was churned by the dhevas and asuras (celestial beings and demons), there emanated the Kaamadhenu (Cow of Plenty), Kalpatharu (the Tree that grants all wishes), the Goddess of Wealth, the four-tusked elephant of Indhra and also Haalahaala (the deadliest of poisons). Similarly, the mind of man is churned by the forces of good and evil every day and there emanates from the same mind both good and bad. The bad comes because the mind flows towards sensory pleasures and is lost in the swamps of greed and envy, of lust and pride.

When the lion awakes from sleep and roars, all the tiny animals that held sway till then, take to their heels. So too, when you awake and repeat the Pranavamanthra (Om), all the paltry animal instincts that strutted about in the darkness will flee. In your own heart you have the entity which is beyond time and space; and if you go on contacting it by the Pranava or by any other symbol, the wild thoughts and impulses will not dare to approach you. If you have the Grace of God, no graha (planet) can harm you; maleficent influences even from the most powerful combination of planets with which the astrologers terrify you will disappear in a trice. In order to get that Grace, there are two prescriptions: priyam vadha (speak lovingly) so far as the world is concerned; and sathyam vadha (speak the truth) so far as the next world is concerned. Prema (Love) is the weapon: vichaara (enquiry) is the wheel which must be revolved perpetually to get the light of prema. Until prema emerges, you have to be in the darkness of hatred, where even the slightest movement creates fear and suspicion. Charge the battery of your saadhana continuously. Never yield to indolence or despair. Suffer loss and grief gladly; they help to toughen your personality. The diamond is found amidst rocks; you will have to blast through the vein to get gold. Follow the strict regimen that the doctor enforces in order to make the medicine yield the best result. The battery of your "car" is charged when you come to Puttaparthi or when you go to some other holy place. Or at least that should be the aim of pilgrimage. Charge the battery of your Saadhana (spiritual effort) and then, after you return home, do not keep the car idle. If you do, the battery will run down; take the car around and keep it going; then the battery will charge itself. So also, if you do not continue the sathsanga (holy company), the sathpravarthana (good attitude) and bhajana (devotional singing) and Naamasmarana (Remembering God's Name), then all this charging becomes a waste.

I have not come for propaganda or publicity or gaining disciples or devotees. I am yours and you are Mine. Where then is the need for publicity? I give not lectures but mixtures for your mental health and moral re-invigoration. So take My words as medicine necessary for your health.

Man did not come here to sleep and eat; he has come to manifest, by disciplined processes, the divine in him. That is why he is called vyakthi (individual), he who makes vyaktha (clear) the shakthi (power) that is in him---the Divine energy that motivates him.

For this purpose he has come endowed with this body and the intelligence needed to control it and divert it to useful channels of activity. You must achieve this by Dharma-nishtha and steady pursuit of morality and good deeds.

27. The underlying truths

Tins life which begins with a wail must end with a smile. When you were a little baby, all round you smiled though you kept on wailing. But when you die all around you must weep at the loss and you should smile in peace and quiet resignation. The 'bhogaanandham' (pleasures from sensual enjoyment) must finally be converted into 'yogaanandham' (happiness from divine union); the pleasures of the senses must gradually be left behind and you must develop a taste for the higher and more lasting pleasure derivable from the springs of your own personality. For Yoga (divine union), Bhakti (devotion to God) is the main thing, the head and the crown; shaanthi and santhosham (peace and happiness) are the other essentials.

The fire of sorrow and joy burns when the fuel of vaasanas (impressions left on the mind by actions of past lives) is fed into the furnace of the mind. Take away the fuel and the fire dies out. Take away the vaasanas, the force of the impulses, promptings and urges and you become your own master. This is done in Yoga by various physiological and psychological exercises. But Bhakti is the easier means for this end. Naamasmarana (remembering God's Name) is enough; it is said that the name Seetharaama sufficed in the Threthayuga, the name Raadhesyaama sufficed in the Dhwaaparayuga, and in the present Kaliyuga, I tell you, all divine Names have that capacity.

De-individualisation is Moksha

When you recite Radheshyaama, you should dwell on the significance of the Name; the deeper mysteries of the word must be present before the mind's eye: then, Naamasmarana will yield quicker results. Raadha is not an individual. It symbolises Dha-raa meaning Earth or Prakrithi, the Jada (creation). Krishna or Shyaama is the Creator, the Active Principle: the Chith (awareness), the Purusha (Supreme Being). Shakthi (Supreme Energy) is Paramaathma; the Vyakthi (individual) is the Jeevaathma soul); the Ocean is Shakthi and the Wave is the Jeeva. All the taste and all the forces and roar of the Wave are derived from the Ocean and they disappear into the Ocean itself. The disappearance of the wave form and the wave-name is called Moksha (Liberation): that is, merging of the wave in the ocean from which it seemed to differ.

De-individualisation is in other words, Moksha.

When you do Bhajana (group singing) and sing the Names of God, you should contemplate on such underlying truths. The Naamaavali, 'Hare Raama, Hare Raama, Raama Raama Hare Hare; Hare Krishna, Hare Krishna, Krishna Krishna Hare Hare,' has sixteen words and each of the sixteen signifies a virtue which has to be cultivated along with that Bhajana. (Here Baaba recited a Thelugu song compused by Him on the spot which indicated the sixteen qualities to be developed by a spiritual person).

Sixteen qualities to be developed

He must be a (1) Bhaktha, (2) a Thapoyuktha, (3) a Samsaara Muktha, (4) a Paadasaktha of the Lord, (5) a Vihitha, (6) a Dhaanasahitha, (7) Yaso-mahitha, (8) a Kalmasha rahitha, (9) a Poorna, (10) a Gunagana, (11) an Uththeerana, (12) a

Vidhyaavikeerna

(13) a Inaana vistheerana (14) Swaantha, (15) a Sacihguna kraantha, (16) a Vinaya vishraantha, and finally, a Paadhaswaantha of the Lord or afteast he must pray, with verbal repetition of each word, for the growth in him of each of these attainments which will take him nearer the goal.

Baaba meant that a spiritual seeker should be (1) full of devotion, (2) prepared to enjoy suffering, (3) free from the attachment to the transitory, (4) eager to serve the Lord, (5) of correct conduct, (6) charitable, (7) having an unsullied reputation, (8) with no blemish on his character, (9) fully content, (10) endowed with good qualities, (11) equipped with all the virtues, (12) equipped with the fruits of learning, (13) ripe in wisdom, (14) self-controlled, (15) adorned with commendable social traits, (16) full of humility and fully surrendered to God. If he has these virtues, (here Baaba quoted the last line of the song he had just composed, "vaade nenoudhu, nene vaadoudu"---"He is I, I am He".

Yes, you must struggle. You cannot go to the top without an effort. Have faith in ultimate victory, gather courage and faith from wherever you can get them; do not have contact with persons who sow the seeds of fear or doubt. Treasure all the confidence that you get here, foster it and guard it carefully. Do not let it slip from your grasp the moment you get beyond this gate. The seedlings should be well cared for, watered, manured and protected from insect pests. Can you pass an examination without studying the texts? But that is what you hope to do! You must liberate yourself from attachment to fleeting things and grow strong and be above temptation.

Never discuss spiritual standards of others

The fish are happy because they are immersed in water; when thrown out of the water, they struggle and suffer mortal pain. So too, man is happy when he is immersed in Prema, Shaanthi and Sathyam (Love, Peace and Truth); those are the components of the water that gives him life; when he is thrown out of the water, he also suffers and feels terribly miserable. Life is 'being' thrown out of the water; Saadhana (spiritual discipline) is the struggle to leap back into the life-giving element. For success in this struggle, do not depend upon another; depend upon yourself and on the Grace of God. Remember that Raama (Divinity) and Kaama (worldly desire) cannot be together; where Raama is, kaama cannot thrive; where kaama is, how can Raama enter? Every person must have, as a single dhaara (stream), Aaraadh (worship) as the Aa-dhaara that is the easiest means of winning Shyaama.

When you carry on such effort unbroken, the Lord Himself will come as your Guide. When Madhurakavi was doing thapas (penance), he saw a big pillar of Light in front of him reaching up to the sky and he saw Dakshinaamurthy in that Light. Then the pillar moved on and on so that he could follow it and at last, the Light led him on to Nammaalwaar who agreed to be his Guru (spiritual preceptor)! The Guru later made him realise the Reality. Vemana and Thyaagaraaja reached the heights of spiritual experience through the Grace of the Lord and the encouragement they derived from His Appearance. Pray to Him and He reveals Himself. He is the yarn in the cloth, the gold in this seeming variety of jewellery; he is the mud in all this pottery; he is that water that sustains all these waves. Once you have realised this, you will be filled with love and respect for all, for all are the same Form as the Lord Himself.

Do not cynically talk about the Saadhakas. What do you know of the mood of the Bhaktha that you so easily pass judgement thereon and label him as insane or out of his mind? Never discuss the spiritual standards reached by others; persevere in your own path. "Be moderate in talk, in sleep, in food"---"Yukthaahaara vihaarasya."

Smarana is the best antidote for all ills

Never be ashamed to sing the name of God or to do Bhajana.

Be proud that you get the chance, be glad that your tongue is put to the best use. When the artist sees a stone, he sees immediately the form of beauty hidden in that stone imprisoned in it; and he will not get peace of mind until he releases that form from the clutches of the stone. Do not see the stone as stone, see the God in it, the basic reality underlying it.

Vemana did not visit any temple for years; for years he was laughing at those who considered that the image was a symbol of Divinity. But when his daughter died, he was one day holding her picture in his hand weeping over the loss. Then the idea suddenly struck him that if the picture could cause sorrow in him and bring tears, the image too can evoke joy and bring tears to those who know the beauty and the glory of the Lord. The image was just a reminder of the Presence of the Lord everywhere and in everything. The Lord is the Sun and when His rays fall upon your heart, unimpeded by the clouds of egoism, the lotus bud blooms and the petals unfold. Remember, only the buds that are ready will bloom; the rest have to wait, patiently. Meanwhile, carry on with the companionship of the Name of the Lord; Smarana (remembering) is the best antidote for all ills.

Akhanda Bhajana, Bangalore 10-7-1959

In order to promote harmony, the first rule you must follow is control of the tongue. Do not give all your thoughts immediate expression, 'select, ponder, and then, speak out. Speak softly, sweetly, without malice in your heart; speak as if you are addressing the Sai who resides in every one. Use the tongue to recite the Name of the Lord; use the feet to go on pure and holy errands; use the heart to contain pure thoughts and feelings.

Shri Sathya Sai

28. The best tonic

The greatest disease (or absence of ease) is the absence of Shaanthi; when the mind gets peace, the body also will have health. So, every one who craves for good health must pay attention to the emotions, feelings and motives that animate the individual. Just as you give clothes for a wash, you have to wash the mind free from dirt again and again; otherwise, if dirt accumulates and you form a 'habit', it is difficult for the dhobi as well as harmful to the clothes. It should be a daily process; you should see that no dirt settles upon the mind; that is to say, you should move about in such company that dirt is avoided. Falsehood, injustice, indiscipline, cruelty, hate---these form the dirt; Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi, Prema (Truth, Righteousness, Peace, Love)---these form the clean elements. If you inhale the pure air of these latter, your mind will be free from evil bacilli and you will be mentally sturdy and physically strong. As Vivekaanandha used to say, you should have nerves of steel and muscles of iron. That is to say, you should have hope and joy and elation as an unshakeable resolution, not despair and dejection. What is studied is not put into practice Your heart should be like glass, with the spiritual light inside illuminating the world outside; the world outside reacting on the inner urges and making them lean towards service, sympathy and mutual help. Now, people read and study all kinds of unintelligible Vedhaanthic texts and struggle with commentaries and notes and translations to grasp their sense. It is being poured down their throats; but the portion does not get down to soften the heart. It is not translated into practice. The truths of the Vedhaantha are put on for public exhibition, as in a drama, where appropriate dresses are worn on the stage but taken off when the actor moves off the stage. They do not adhere to them all the time to derive the Aathmaanandha (Bliss of the Soul) which they can give.

It is chiefly a matter of careful well-timed regulated discipline; it cannot be got by spurts and skips; it has to be climbed step by step, each step being used as a foot-hold for the next. There is no systematic living according to any known principle, now; this is true of the student, the householder, the mistress or the master of the house. The virtues have to be cultivated in the home; each member sharing in the joy with the rest, each one seeking for opportunities for helping others. This attitude has to be stuck to, so that it may stay as character. How can a vessel kept with the mouth downwards get filled with water? It has to open up and receive the good impulses. You have to learn each lesson by systematic study; application and effort alone will give success.

Have faith in the Lord and His Grace

In all effort, if you trust in a Higher Power which is ready to come to your help, work is made easy. This comes out of Bhakthi, reliance on the Lord, the source of all Power. When you travel by train, you have only to purchase the ticket, enter the proper train and take a seat, leaving the rest to the engine. Why should you carry the bed and trunk on your head? So too, put your trust in the Lord and carry on to the best of your ability. Have faith in the Lord and his Grace. Try to earn it by using the intelligence and the conscience with which He has endowed you.

You have all gathered here to celebrate the completion of four years in the life of this Sathya Sai Hospital. So I want to tell you that the best and the wisest thing is to see that you do not fall ill. The doctor read out in the report that this year the number of

as well as the number of operations was greater than last year, as if that is a sign of progress! But I do not think that speaks well of the people around and their sense of values. The Hospital should radiate preventive measures also and try to educate the villagers in methods of avoiding illness. Develop self-reliance; that is the best tonic. You have been born because you did not pass in certain subjects; there is some balance of experience which you must acquire to complete the course. If you get convinced that your true nature is the Aathma, then you have finished, the course and 'passed'.

Cultivate Prema towards all beings

For reaching that stage, you should start with the cultivation of the "feeling of kinship with all beings",---Sarvasamaanabhaava---as it is called. It is very difficult to get it; but that is the only way to see the Aathma that is in all. For example, a person with that bhaava (sincerity of feeling) will not be happy at the killing of animals for food or even hunting them. Why should you go seeking the animal to its den, lie in wait for it and lay traps for it, so that you may derive pleasure by killing it? Prema should be cultivated towards all beings, in order that you may see the Sarvabhootha antharaathma (Inmost Self in all beings). The Aathma is Omnipresent; do not think it is found only in persons belonging to certain castes or colours or creeds; or that it is of a big size in fat people or of a brilliant nature in rich people. It is consistently Sath, Chith and Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss Absolute) in every being. Saadhana has to go a long way to win this outlook. But you can begin with little things; you can avoid causing annoyance to others, is it not? Even if you are unable or unwilling to do service to others, at least, if you desist from causing harm, that is meritorious service indeed! For example, take your vaak---the words you speak. I always say Vaak shuddhi (purification of words) leads to Mano Shuddhi (cleansing of the mind). That is why I insist on quiet talk, sweet talk and little talk; the saathwik talk; no anger, no heat, no hate. Such talk will cause no quarrel, no blood-pressure and no factions. It will promote mutual respect and love. Then again, do not cynically laugh at the good that others do or at the Saadhana of others. Inquire; but do not insult. Respect the sincerity of the other man; respect also elders and men with more experience than you. In company, behave in a well-mannered way, showering brotherhood and joy on all around you.

Moderation in food is always to be welcomed

Strive for the happiness of the community and of the human race. Pray that all men everywhere may have peace and plenty. Be eager to do good and be good. Being a function connected with the Hospital, I must tell you about certain other things also. By regulating your diet and avoiding certain bad habits, you can preserve health. Moderate food, and food of the Saathwik type, will promote mental poise and also physical happiness. Mitha-ahaara (moderation in food) is always to be welcomed. Many people consume more than the necessary quantity of rich food and such have to practise moderation. So too, if you do not smoke, you escape a number of illnesses that follow that Raajasik (passionate) practice. Any intoxicant or stimulant, because it disturbs nature's even trend, is harmful. Moderation in food, moderation in talk, and in desires and pursuits; contentment with what little can be got by honest labour, eagerness to serve others and to impart joy to all---these are the most powerful of all the tonics and health-preserves known to the science of health, the Sanaathana Aayur-Vedha, the Vedha of the full life.

Sathya Sai Hospital, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 21-9-1960

29. Sathya Sai Geetha (i)

IN the Sathya Sai Geetha, which Thirumalachar read and explained just now, he has given My name to the 'Sathya' that he has experienced. Persons who have seen Me are many, but those who have understood My significance are few; so too, those who have 'seen' the Geetha, that is to say, read it and learned it by rote, are legion; but those who have grasped the sense are few. Geetha must be "thaagi" (which is the reverse form of Geetha), that is to say, in Thelugu, "drunk" or imbibed! Then, you become a "thaagi", full of vairagya---free from senseless attachment to the sensory world. Giving up raaga---that is, things that please and bind, that ensnare and enslave---that is what is meant by Vairagya (dispassion).

Another thing about the Geetha is that it does not speak of grihastha (the householder) stage of Life. It deals with the fundamentals of living; not living in this compartment or that, but living as such, and the deepest problems of life. It was repeated by one householder to another and so it does not prescribe the recluse's 'escape'. That is the lesson, both in that Geetha and this.

Many read the Geetha but few benefit

Geetha means 'song'; Krishna sings at Brindhaavan with the Flute. He sings on the battlefield too; in both places the call is for the Particular to merge with the Infinite, the Universal. For Him, the Rudhrabhuumi (place of cremation) as well as the Bhadhrabhuumi (sanctified ground) are the same; they are equally placed for imparting Upadhesha (spiritual instruction) in the form in which the Bhaktha most likes it, namely, Song. And imagine with what concentration Arjuna heard it? His concentration was steady as that of the Gopees (Cowherd girls) who listened to the Message of the Flute in Brindhaavan. He forgot the opposing armies, his own hatreds and enthusiasm for war and he became immersed in the teaching he secured. If you develop that ekaagratha

in the Kurukshethra of your own particular

'battlefields', you can assuredly also listen to the Geetha---the Bhagavathgeetha or the Sai Geetha or the Sathya Sai Geetha, intended for you.

The Geetha was spoken to remove the ajnaana sammoha (the delusion caused by ignorance), and it succeeded in removing it so far as Arjuna was concerned; others like Sanjaya and Dhritharaashtra who also heard it did not benefit, because they were still bound by their own particular brand of ajnaana.

Dhritharaashtra was all the while worried that the battle had not started yet and that his sons' enemies had not been destroyed! So he was not benefitted. Therefore, many read the Geetha but few benefit. You must have Arjuna's Vairagya and Arjuna's Ekaagratha to derive profit from the Geetha. Nirmala hridhaya heart) and Nischala bhaava (firm disposition of mind) are essential. Feeling of 'I' and 'mine' should go

The sammoha (confusion) of Arjuna was the feeling of 'I' and 'Mine.' All of a sudden he began to feel that he was the killer, that he would be responsible and that they were his teachers and elders and relations. This Mamakaara (feeling of mine) has to go, the 'I' has to be crossed and all words, deeds and thoughts have to be dedicated to the Lord. The baby weeps as soon as it is born because the Jeivi (individual being) has no desire to get entangled in Prakrithi (objective world) once again. It is unwilling to come into Maayaa (veil of delusion). Science describes it as the process of breathing for the first time and the clearing of the air passage; but why should it weep? The process can be started some other way, say, snaking or shivering, is it not?

The weeping child must later leave this world laughing, the worth of life is to be judged by the end. Prema is the seed, Bhakthi is the seedling, the sapling. Faith is the manure, Sathsanga (holy company) is the rain, Aathma-arpana (offering of the Self) is the flower and Aikyam (merging together) the fruit. With that, one must throw off this coil and become free.

that is to say, Karma without attachment to the fruit thereof. There are karmas which have to be done as duties, related to the status in Samsaara (worldly life), and if these are done in the proper spirit, they will not bind at all. Do all karma as actors in a play, keeping your identity separate and not attaching yourself too much to your role. Remember that the whole thing is just a play and the Lord has assigned to you a part; act well your part, there all your duty ends. He has designed the play and He enjoys it.

Take refuge in the innermost recesses of the heart

Aathma is the ocean, Prakrithi (Nature) is just a wave of that vast ageless, boundless ocean and the deevi is just a drop of that wave. You cannot give up the wave or the sea. You can only merge the name and form of the drop. Once you enter the depths of the sea, it is all calm, it is all peace; agitation, noise, confusion---all are only on the outer layers. So also in the innermost recesses of the heart, there is a reservoir of Shaanthi where you must take refuge. There are three types of people: The Thaamasik who are like iron balls, impervious to any softening influence; the Raajasik who are like cotton, absorbent but not changing their own nature; and the Saathwik, who melt as butter melts at the joy or grief of others or at the mention of the leelas (divine plays) of the Lord. They dive deep into the source and spring of sympathy. Anger, envy, greed and intolerance are all so many holes in the pot; the waters of shaanathi, soukhya and san-thosha (peace, contentment, happiness) leak through the holes and the pot becomes empty. The pot has to be repaired and all leaks stopped so that it may be useful.

It is when you are in a desperate situation that you call upon the Lord, forgetting your pride and your egoism. The Paandavas were so full of misery in a worldly sense that they always had an attitude of prayer. If I had given you all the comforts and opportunities, you would not have come to Puttaparthi. Trouble is the bait with which the fish is hauled out of the water. Kunthi asked that Krishna should continue giving her and her sons all kinds of misery so that He may grant them His Grace continuously.

Thirumalaachar called this attitude Aathma-arpana (offering of the Self), but the Aathma is He Himself; and so, what do you mean by offering Him to Himself?. What you would offer at His Feet is your egoism, your aham-kaara! Offer all the pride, all the separateness, all the delusion, all the attachment that the egoism has proliferated into! That is the worship you have to do. Bring to Me all the evil in you, and leaving it here take from Me what I have, viz., Prema; learn Sarva sama bhaavana---the capacity to see all as 'moved and motivated by the One Paramaathma (Supreme Reality or Self)'.
Examine every day what you do and with what motive; then you can yourself pronounce judgement on your progress. Select only pure motives, pure deeds. You forgot that you are the Aathma and now you remember that you are the Aathma] That is all the progress you have to achieve; it all looks so easy, but it is one of the hardest of assignments. The ear is so near to the eye; but it can never see it direct!

There was a clown in a palace who always asked questions and was therefore held to be a big nuisance. The King had to put up a board. "No questions" just to escape him] But when the King was on his death bed, he called him near and whispered, "I am going." The clown asked him hurriedly, "Shall I order the royal chariot? The elephant with the howdah? The royal horse full caparisoned? The palanquin? How far are you going? Which is the exact place? How long will you camp there?" The clown was very wise. He knew the questions, though he did not know the answers, nor did the King know. But you can pass examinations only if you know the answers! The Geetha helps to control agitations of the mind

The Geetha prompts you to seek the answers and directs you to experience them. It helps you to control the chiththa (thoughts) and the agitations of the mind; it destroys delusion; it develops true knowledge; it makes you glimpse the splendour of the Lord and confirms your faith. You say one moment, "Baaba does everything, I am but the instrument" and the next moment the same tongue talks, "I did this; I did that. Swaami did not do this for me." If you never slip into wrong, you can be ever certain of His Grace.

All hearts are His Property, it is all His Domain. But just as the Zamindhaar sits only on a clean spot though the entire area may be his, the Lord will install Himself only if the heart is cleansed. The Lord has said that, "madh baktthaah yathra gaayanthe thathra thishthaami, Naaradha"---"Where my devotees sing of Me, there I install Myself, Naaradha." I must tell you that you are luckier than men of previous generations. The accumulated merit of many previous births must have granted you this luck. You have got Me and it is your duty now to develop this relationship that you have achieved by sheer good fortune.

In four or five years time, you will see Yogis and Maharishis and Munis (ascetics and sages) crowding here and you may not have such chances of asking Me questions and getting the answers, of approaching Me and directly speaking to Me. So do not be like frogs around the lotus; be like the bees. Plantains and mangoes are kept, while yet green, in straw or dried grass or in a closed room so that the heat may make them ripe and tasty. The meditation on God gives you too the right temperature to ripen yourselves and become sweet and tasty.

Seven things to be fostered for world welfare

There are seven things that have to be fostered for the welfare of the world: the cow, the Brahman-ward or spiritual aspirant or the Brahmana, the Vedhas, chastity, truth, and Dharma (righteousness). All these are now fast declining and I have come to restore them to their pristine purity and strength. Do not think that this Sathya Sai Geetha was composed by some Bhaktha (devotee) and that he reads it and explains it here. As he said, I am the inspirer and it is for your benefit that he has summarised My Teachings in this way. It is said "Ekam Sathyam, vimalam, achalam"---"the One Truth is pure and unshakable." Thirumalaachar has collected it in his vessel and he is giving it to you.

Of course, no one can unravel the Mystery of the Lord. Even Vishwaamithra who came to Dhasaratha asking for the two boys, extolling them as Divine Incarnations, later forgot that fact and he dared teach them Manthras (sacred formulas), as if they were just ordinary disciples! He was even proud that the Lord who transformed Ahalya and released her from the curse was his disciple. Pride is one of the worst sins in the spiritual field. If you feel conceited that you are a Bhaktha of Hari, He will "hari" (destroy, in Thelugu) you remember. Sharanaagathi (absolute surrender) should be like the attitude of Lakshmana. Raama said, "Take Seetha and leave her in the forest." Implicit obedience! There is no why! That is Lakshmana. That is Sharanaagathi; the rest are deserving only of Sharagathi (the arrow of Raama). That is the genuine Geetha, this lesson of Sharanaagathi. Increase faith, walk in the path of a Dharma, get rid of Vyaamoha and Ajnaana (delusion and ignorance), cleanse the chiththa vrithhi (agitations of the mind), and know that He is the Aathma and that you too are the Aathma.

Have a time-table for spiritual sustenance, just as you have now for physical sustenance.

A breakfast of pious repetition of Lord's name (japa) and meditation (dhyaana), a lunch hour of ritual worship of the Lord (puuja), 'tea and snacks' of reading scriptures or sacred books (pravachana) in the afternoon and a light dinner of devotional music (bhajana) in the early hours of the night.

If you follow this regimen, you can sleep soundly and wake up refreshed.

30. Sathya Sai Geetha (ii)

If you take Krishna to be a Gopaala (cowherd), a man of the world like others, then for you he will be just a cowherd! You too climb only up to that stage. You have to take it in the yogic sense that "Go" in Gopaala means 'jeevi' (living being) and therefore, Gopaala means "He who protects, guides, feeds and fosters the jeevis"; that is to say, "He who is the protector and preserver of beings." You will have noticed that Uddhava, who looked upon Krishna as his Guru, benefitted more than Arjuna who looked upon Him as a sakha (a friend). If you have faith that He is God, He will be God to you; if you dismiss Him as mere man, He takes on that role and becomes useless for you. Search for Him with the heart, not with the eye for externals. The superpower has to be sought in the super-state itself, not in the lower states. Then, if you have the eyes that are fit to see and the wisdom to understand, you will find Him.

Various people have various methods of worship as well as objects of worship. Vishnu, Shambhu, Shaaradha, Allah are all different degrees of human understanding of the One Unsolved Mystery, the Fathomless Infinite and Absolute. You should not seek variety, seek unity. Do not enter into quarrels about higher and lower; when the same person is honoured by different titles, why should you quarrel over the superiority or inferiority of the title.

They all fall short of His Total Glow.

Karma is needed to realise the Truth

Your attempt should be to attain and become the Nithyam and Sathyam (Eternal and Truth). Sathyam is that which is the same in the past, present and future; the same in the waking, dreaming and deep sleep stages: and which is unaffected by Thamoguna, Rajoguna and Sathwaguna (qualities of sloth, passion and serenity). Again, the Name is greater than even the Named, for the Named may disappear, but the Name will continue and will evoke the Form of the Named.

There is no need to exhaust yourselves in the search for the Lord; He is there like butter in milk, like the chicken in the egg, immanent in every atom of creation. He does not come from somewhere or go somewhere else. He is there, here, everywhere. From the anu (atom) to the ghana (great), from the microcosm to the macrocosm, He is everything.

To realise this grand Truth, saadhana or karma is needed.

That is Karmayoga, karma performed with this end: 'karmasu kousalam' "the karma done in an intelligent manner." A millionaire may have various vehicles: cars, coaches, etc., in plenty; but for his health's sake the doctor advises him to walk a few miles every morning. Otherwise he will fall ill, the doctor says. So also, for removal of Ajnaana (the disease of ignorance), one has to do karma, Dharma-directed karma (virtuous action). The oil in the lamp is the fat derived from the actions of previous 'lives'. The stronger the flame, the brighter the light and sooner the oil is used up. Do vigorous karma and exhaust the effects of the past and be free from the weight hanging round your neck. There is more joy in the doing of karma than in the fruit it may give; the pilgrimage is often more pleasurable than the actual experience of the temple to which the pilgrim went.

Make spiritual effort as natural as breathing

It was mentioned in the Geetha that you should not care for the fruit of your action; but I say now that you may value the result of your actions to a limited extent. That advice was given according to the conditions prevalent then and the delusion Arjuna suffered. Since it will increase your Aanandha (Bliss) and give greater strength to your Saadhana, I say now that so far as saadhana is concerned, you can do it with a keen eye on the Aanandha that you will ultimately derive.

It was mentioned now by the Principal of the Maarkandeya Sanskrit College that I was born like Janaka, as the result of some Karmasesha! I have no sesha (balance) of karma to work out! I am unaffected by Karma, as already mentioned in the Geetha. The Mahaa Shakthi (Supreme Power) puts on the cloak of Maayaashakthi (deluding power) in order to fulfil the purpose of contacting and protecting mankind. I have no desire and so, no binding karma. It is only you have the desire, aim and wish that drag you along various paths. For Me, your Aanandha is My Food, your elation is the swing on which I sit, your activity is My Playground.

There are three kinds of Karma: the Sahajakarma (natural action) like breathing which has to be done; the Vikarma (action done with intent) like the combination of wick and oil in the burning lamp; and the Akarma (action done without intention to gain the fruit of consequences), where there is neither oil nor wick and so no burning at all. Praanaayaama (breath control) and Yoga (Divine communion) must become as natural as breathing and so automatic; that is the sumum bonum of spiritual discipline, the state of Sahaja-Saadhana.

"I make people mad about God"

Learn from childhood the recitation of the Name and prayer and the practice of silence. Let children contemplate the beauties and the magnificence of God's handiwork and be filled with mystery and awe. Do not count and calculate what the Puttaparthi Sai Baaba gives. I do not give in order to attract you to Me; I give only to fill you with Aanandha. Showering Aanandha, that is My task. I do not want you to extol Me; I shall be satisfied if you rely on Me. The mysterious indescribable Super-power has come within reach. It will never engage Itself in any task without fruit.

I bring tears and I wipe tears, some one has sung. Yes, I bring tears of joy into your eyes and I wipe the tears of grief. I am said to make people mad and also to cure madness. Yes, I make them mad about God and about the 'Saadhana needed for that. I cure the madness which makes people run frantically after fleeting pleasures and fall into fits of joy and grief.

Some persons have said in their ignorance that I am divine sometimes and that I become human after that! They say I alternate between Dhaivathwam and Maanavathwam (Divinity and human). Do not believe this. I am always of one thwam (reality) only. The Lord will never undergo a fundamental change; only the external form may change, the essence will be the same. There will not be any decline in value, like becoming human for some time, etc. The Lord will be characterised by unbounded Prema (Love) and unsullied sweetness.

There are two duties to be done by man; the one along the Dharmamaarga (path of righteousness) for this world and the one along the Brahmamaarga (path of Supreme Reality) for eternal liberation. The Dharmamaarga is the left hand, and so it can be left. Why, it will leave of itself after the fruit becomes ripe. That is why it is called 'left'! Leave it and do not grieve over it. But hold on to the right, the Brahmamaarga; for it is 'right' that you should do so. Never hate others or wish evil to them

Finally, you must know how to use the chance that you have got in this life to come in contact with the Lord. The lamp sheds illumination but it can be used for various purposes, good and bad; the Ganga is holy but its waters are used for good as well as bad purposes. How you use this chance depends upon your destiny and luck and the amount of Grace that you are able to win. Develop faith; strengthen devotion; and everything will follow. Raama was the representative of Sathyam, Krishna of Prema, Buddha of Dharma. Now it is, of all the four, Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema. Sathya is the Dharma, Prema gives Shaanthi. I command you: never hate others, or wish evil to them or talk ill of them. Then only can you attain the Shaanthaswarupam (natural form of peace).

The Lord alone is aware of the Plan, for His is the Plan! You see only a part of the play on the stage and so it is all very confused. When the entire stow is unfolded, then you will appreciate His Plan, not until then; for that, you have to get behind the screen of Maayaa (deluding power) and contact the Director Himself. While you are an actor on the stage reciting your role, you cannot grasp the inner meaning of the entire play which has the 'world' as the stage and 'ages' as the duration.

If by acting your role well you develop Love towards fellowactors, that is more important than getting devotion for God. If you acquire Shaanthi (Peace), that is a more valuable success than acquiring inaana (spiritual wisdom). For Bhakthi is the seed of Prema and Inaana is the seed of Shaanthi. At least, bhakthas (devotees) should behave as if they are all of one family. Take hold of the chance so luckily available for mutual co-operation in worship and saadhana.

"All the powers I have are for you"

You are My treasure, even if you deny Me. I am your treasure, even if you say No. I shall be affectionate to you and attach Myself to you; I shall take all the trouble to keep My property safe in My custody! That is to say, in the custody of the Lord, by whichever name you may be calling upon Him. All the powers I have are for you: I am just the store, keeping them ready to be given to you, whenever you ask for them. I shall give Prema even if you do not ask, for it is your right to share in it.

Some complain that I did not give them this or that, but that is because their vision is limited to the immediate future or the present; whereas I know what is in store and so I have to safeguard them from greater grief. They even blame Me and heap abuses but I will not give them up. I am not influenced by anybody, remember. There is no one who can change My course or affect My conduct to the slightest extent. I am the Master over all.

But let Me tell you this. I speak harsh words and 'punish' some persons because I have Prema towards them and I am eager to correct them and make them better instruments. If they were not Mine, I would have given them up and not cared to take any notice of their lapses. I have a right to chastise those who I feel are Mine. I also know that they still value My Word and that they will feel sad at My being displeased with them. It is due to your wayward mind that you are easily wafted away from Me by some silly persons' irresponsible words.

Peace can be won only the hard way

I sometimes act as if I keep you at a distance; that is done to reform you quicker. When a stretch of road is being repaired, I go by another detour and I do not use that bit of road for some time. The purpose is to let the repair works proceed more quickly so that I may use that road again.

I have come to set the world right and so I have to collect all those who are ill and treat them in My "Hospital" and restore them to sanity, strength and wisdom and send them back to their stations in life. I must intensify your bhakthi, reinforce your faith and rebuild the foundations of your moral nature, so that you can counter temptations with greater confidence. I have come across people who recite a prayer and believe that they are bringing the world nearer to Peace with every occasion on which they pray. But peace can be won only the hard way, by eliminating violence and greed from the hearts of individuals.

There are cases when the villager in Puttaparthi on getting fever tries all kinds of quackery till it becomes too serious; and then he runs madly for doctors and drugs to Bukkapatnam and Ananthapur and Chikkaballpur and Veilore---until he is forced to sell his land to pay off the loan! If only he had taken resort first to a qualified doctor all this could have been avoided. So too, do not run after Gurus who are themselves suffering from faulty vision and householder's troubles: do not beg from people who are themselves beggars. Avoid all pride and competition between one another in the spiritual life. Let each one march at his own pace; only the direction and the road have to be God-wards.

The sages of ancient times divided karma into vikarma (that is intentionally done) and akarma (that is done without any intention to gain the consequence). Follow the latter and you will save yourselves from suffering. All other activities like the earning of wealth, of reputation, of fame and publicity result in suffering..

31. Sathya Sai Geetha (iii)

VIDHURA once asked Krishna, "How did you take part in the killing of lakhs of soldiers in the Kurukshethra battle? You could have avoided all that massacre and saved yourselves a lot of bother by simply changing the mental attitudes of the chief participants on the Kaurava side, Dhuryodhana, Dhus-sasana, Shakuni and

Krishna answered: "My dear man, I have given every one a sum of qualities and powers. I have also awarded each a certain amount of freedom to utilise them as they feel best. It is by functioning in this manner that each one can learn better. By toddling a few steps the child's step becomes more certain and firm. Experience is the best, though the hardest, school. However much you may say that fire burns, unless you actually burn your fingers, you will not believe or know what a burn is."

Prema that thrills and fills the mind with joy and hope.

Pothana, Nandhanaar, Jayadheva, Gouranga, Thukaaraam, Meera,

Purandharadhaasa, Thyaaga-raaja and others were thrilled so much at the very thought of the Lord, because they had the Prema in such a pure and overpowering form.

Some people may laugh at all this Bhajana and call it mere show and exhibition and recommend instead quiet meditation in the silent recess of the shrine room. But coming out in company and doing Bhajana like this helps in removing egoism; one is not afraid of jeering nor ashamed to call out the Name of the Lord. One gets inspired by the devotion of others; the company of men with kindred sentiments helps to foster the tiny seedling from being scorched by the heat of derision. A person will sweep the floor of his room with a broom when nobody is looking on; but to do the same act, considered infra dig, when people are looking on, requires some mastery over the ego.

Do acts which are full of Prema towards all Prema is filial piety when directed towards the parents, companionship when it flows towards friends, love when it is felt towards the partner, respect when it moves one towards elders and affection when you are drawn towards children. Bhakthi affects your acts in three forms: you do some acts consciously in order to demonstrate your love or give vent to the Prema that animates you; you do acts as dedicated offerings to enhance the glory of the Lord, in a spirit of worshipful humility, as if you are laying at His feet all that you are and all that you are capable of, and you do acts which are full of Prema towards all as part of your mere existence, automatically, without any tinge of self or whiff of violence upsetting the perfume of the act. The dedicated act leads on to all activity being dedication; the Aanandha makes you feel that your effort has been worthwhile. That is the end, the aim, the inspiration.

How do you give Me Aanandha? By taking to heart what I say and putting it into daily practice. Deciding to move high but attracted by the low, you betray yourself. Improve your character and conduct; when your feelings become cleansed and your impulses pure, then you can see My Form in its Reality. I shall tell you the thing in a nutshell: Make the intelligence that has to understand Me free from crookedness; let it become straight and sharp.

I have now fallen into your grasp, the very Treasure that you have been searching for, because our relationship is Aathmic, not secular or trained. In all other places, you are fleeced; for the relationship is based on the purse. In some places, it is based on caste or scholarship or some other incidental trait; here, it is the attachment that the Naaraayana has for Nara, the Ocean for the stream, the Universal for the Particular. Here, every one must become unlimited, escaping from bonds that limit him.

All can become He; no one is outside the Love of the Lord.

The eighteen-year old boy is asked by the mother to go into the kitchen and place a plate before himself, serve himself rice and curry and eat. The mother is not callous or unkind; she knows the capacity of the boy and treats him as he ought to be treated.

Another son she accompanies to the kitchen and she sits by his side and serves food to him. A third son she seats on her lap and feeds with many a song in order to make the process pleasant for the child. Do not think that the mother is partial; no, she is only making use of her knowledge of the capacity of her children to make them progress. That is the nature of maternal love.

There are some gurus who have so much love, even towards their sishyas. When aspirants go to them asking for guidance, they praise them to the skies, exaggerate their attainments and grant them titles(!) which are paraded by the unfortunate victims. In this way, the disciples are burdened by additional handicaps to spiritual advance. The Gurus want money for various purposes and so they always have an eye on the purses of the disciples. They try to draw out the money by the grant of titles or by public praise or by promise of public recognition---all worldly baits which are derogatory to the principle of non-attachment that they teach and stand for.

Let the Gurus condemn the accumulation of wealth and blame them for the misuse they are making of it; let them be unsparing in their condemnation; that is the sign of the Guru who knows his mission. On the other hand such Gurus ignore and tolerate evil in the would-be donors, because they are afraid any condemnation will dry up their source of income. Thus, they ruin the disciples by desisting from giving them the drastic drug they need, urgently, for their spiritual health. It has become a tragi-comedy this hunt for moneyed disciples who can be fleeced. It has been developed by some sanyaasis (ascetics) into a fine art. The time has come to expose and punish such saadhus (noble souls) and that will be one task in the Dharmasthaapana (establishment of righteousness) for which I have come. The brokers that these Gurus have scattered over the country have also to be broken.

Books, pamphlets, meetings, speeches, talks---all these are no good; every one desirous to know Me has to be asked to approach Me and experience Me. In order to get an idea of a mountain it is not enough if you show a stone and say, "The mountain is a million times the size of this." You will have to see an actual mountain, at least from a distance. The "beyond" is very incomprehensible. Science is like the letter C, always with a gap in the middle, with a gap that is unfilled. Religion alone has filled that gap, for it knows the Reality that persists in the three stages, in the three tenses and in the three worlds. So, religion is the three O'sh a full circle, which may enlarge as you know more and more of the glory of the Lord, but which is ever Full and complete. At the end of it all, we are at the beginning again.

That is why I favour you with the experience now and then, so that you may get a glimpse of the Glow. I will be in this mortal human form for 59 years more and I shall certainly achieve the purpose of this avathaar; do not doubt it. I will take My own time to carry out My Plan so far as you are concerned. I cannot hurry because you are hurrying.

I may sometimes wait until I can achieve ten things at one stroke; just as an engine is not used to haul one coach, but awaits until sufficient haulage in proportion to its capacity is ready. But My Word will never fail; it must happen as I will.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 29-9-1960

32. Sathya Sai Geetha (iv)

TODAY, Thirumalaachar read and explained the section on Inaanayoga (divine communion through spiritual knowledge) in the Sathya Sai Geetha he has composed. No one can say what the real nature of creation is, or of Brahman for that matter. Faced with a Universe which is fundamentally mysterious, which he feels must be endless and beginningless, which he feels must be infinite and the scientist has to accept it, though he cannot form a real picture of that kind of Universe. He too works on faith, that is to say, believing in something which he cannot fully grasp or clearly infer or really calculate. That Reality can be demarcated only by the criterion of "Not this." Brahman is posited and described by a process of negation or elimination, 'nethi, nethi' ('not this, not this'). In this artificial world, all is an artificial mixture of name and form, which are both artificial too. To get the conviction that this created world is mithya (a mixture of truth and falsehood) is very difficult indeed. When your head knocks against a wall, it is difficult to believe that the wall is half false, that its name and form are a fiction of the deluded imagination and that its real truth is the basic Brahma! Seven chief characteristics of Bhagavaan

But this Inaana (spiritual wisdom) every one has to achieve some day or the other. It can be got through Bhakthi or Karma or Raajayoga. These three are only different names for the process of churning the milk for getting the butter which is immanent in it.

butter has been got and rolled into a ball, it can be kept separate and un-impaired in the liquid where it was all the time. Similarly, the Inaani (liberated person) can continue in the world free from attachment, once he has realised that he is of the same substance as the Immanent Brahman. When that Brahman is seen through Maayaa, it appears as Saguna (endowed with qualities) and is referred to as Lord or Bhagavaan.

Bhagavaan has seven chief characteristics: Aishvarya, Keerthi, Inaana, Vairaagya, Srishti, Sthithi and Laya (prosperity, glow, wisdom, non-attachment, creation, preservation and dissolution). Whoever has these seven, you can consider as having Divinity in Him. These seven are the unfailing characteristics of Avathaars, of the Mahaashakthi (Supreme Power) which persists fully when it has apparently modified itself with Maayaashakthi (deluding power). Wherever these are found, you can identify Godhead.

You are also of the same nature as the Aathma with Mahaashakthi, but like the Prince who has fallen into a den of robbers and is growing up there, the Aathma has not recognised its true identity, that is all. Though he does not know, he is nevertheless a Prince, whether he is in the palace or in a forest or in the robber's cave. Very often, the Prince will have got intimations of his real status, a craving for the Aanandha that was his heritage, a call from his inner consciousness to escape and become himself. That is the hunger of the soul; the thirst for lasting joy. You are all like the man who has forgotten his name. The hunger of the mind can be appeased only by the acquisition of Inaana.

Give your mind strength-giving ideas and courage

The mind is like a Gurkha watchman; it has to be kept fully under control by the master. Besides, the Gurkha will let into the mansion only those who are friendly to the master, is it not? So, only such thoughts and feelings as are conducive to the welfare of the master should be tolerated by the mind. Manas (mind) is the chief thing for 'manush' (man) but its role has to be slowly reduced and it should not be allowed to take full charge. Feed the mind, not on wicked desires and unworthy plans; but give it strength---giving ideas and courage. When the mind is eliminated, then Inaana shines forth in its full glow.

After the experience of Sarvam Brahmaath-makam, that is to say, after the realisation that everything is basically and completely Brahman, life cannot be sustained for more than 21 days. Such a person is no longer in Mithyaloka (this deluding world); so he cannot have any desire or activity. Even food and drink become meaningless. How can Brahman need Brahman and Brahman recognise Brahman as food and Brahman as drink? All the nuts and bolts will fall away; the heart will dry up and the body will collapse. Saadhana is just holding the mirror before the self; the mirror, if it is clean and polished, reveals the Self and that is Aathma saakshaatkaara (Realisation of the Self). All have Aathmic uniformity, the truth of every one is the same.

The company of good men leads you on to the Lord while the company of evil men leads you on to the mire of Prakrithi (objective world). How to judge good men from bad? Those engaged in Japam, Dhyaanam, Yoga and Archana (penance, meditation, communion and worship) are Sajjanas (good persons); those who do not like these are to be avoided by aspirants who seek Inaana and want joy that comes when the small becomes the big, when the momentary joy becomes momentarily important, when the destitute person inherits vast riches. The good man is soft; he bends easily before elders, sages, and Saadhakas. 'Na ma' (not mine) is the attitude of 'namaskaara' (prostration); it is really namamaakaara, the declaration that "all that I am and have is due to your Grace."

Eliminate all limiting factors by systematic process Spend your time in such Sathsanga (company of good people). Brush up your brains by the brush of Viveka. I will not ask you to give up your critical faculty; evaluate, discriminate, experience and analyse your experience; and then, if convinced, accept. Bhakthi, Yoga, Inaana---these are three doors to the same Hall; some come this way, some that way, but all enter the same Hall. The Inaani sees everything as the Divine substance, the Bhaktha sees everything as the Leela of God, the Karmayogi sees everything as the service of the Lord. It is all a question of aptitude and taste and the stage of development of reason and emotion. As a result of Inaana, Thirumalaachaar said, Maayaa goes, but Maayaa does not 'come' and Maayaa does not 'go.' When a light is brought into this hall, you say that light has come and darkness has gone, but where has it gone? Put out the light, it is dark! The darkness does not come from where it had gone, suddenly, through the doors and fill the hall. It is there all the time. It did not go. Only the hall was lit and light prevailed. So also, when the Grace of the Lord is won, Inaana will prevail and the delusion of separateness is powerless.

How can that Inaana be earned? By a slow, systematic process, eliminating all limiting factors: greed, lust, pride, envy, hate and all the snaky brood of possessive instincts and impulses; by the educative influence of Dharma, the body of rules laid down by the experience of generations for the regulation of living; by study, rumination and practice; by analysis of the experiences of the waking, dreaming and sleeping stages; by learning to be a witness of all this passing show without getting involved in its tangles; by overcoming all trends that divide and differentiate.

Vision of Oneness is the highest reward

Prahlaadha never called upon his father or mother, as children do, when he was tortured; he did not appeal to the torturers to save him; he saw in those cruel henchmen the Naaraayana he adored. Everything, everybody, was Naaraayana for him. How then could he feel pain or suffer injury? Adhwaitha (non-dualism) in practice, the culmination of Bhakthi, Sampuurna Inaana (fully realised spiritual knowledge), liberated him. The vision of this Ekathwa (oneness) is the highest reward the Adhwaithin (the non-dualist) seeks.

All this is a dream and you are all actors. Once in Puttaparthi, in a village play, the role of Vaali was assigned to a rich man's son and that of Sugreeva to a poor man's son. Then Vaali protested that he would not die in the fight with the poor man's son and insisted that Raama should befriend and kill Sugreeva instead! The stow cannot be changed to suit your whims. When the play says Vaali should die and when he has been given that role, he should die correctly just as He has decided. Who knows whether praise and blame are not part of the play?

The faults you find in others are in you

Ignorance of this truth is a serious fault, which has to be attended to in the early stages alone. The doctor who cures that bhavaroga (worldly disease) prescribed remedies which have to be strictly taken; not the entire quantity in one gulp, nor neglect for months or years; but the drug as well as the regimen. Some people say they have come to Puttaparthi ten or even fifteen times, as if walking up to the hospital a dozen times is enough to cure them. Every time they may also get a bottle of the necessary mixture, but if they do not drink it as directed, what improvement can they register?

The inaani will not look upon Me as wearing this dress, yellow gown today or pink gown tomorrow; he will penetrate to the Thathwa (real nature) behind this Form and know that this Body is but a dress worn for a purpose. The coming Avathaar of this Thathwa will have another dress. You get full Inaana by the analysis of the knowledge of the Self Unless you know yourself, you cannot know Me.

What you are now doing here is Karmamaarga (path of action); what you are uttering is Bhakthimaarga (path of devotion) and what you are revolving in your mind is Inaanamaarga (path of spiritual knowledge). What you are experiencing at this particular moment is Heaven. For you are now immersed in the joy of listening to My words. You have no thought now of the several reasons which have brought you here. If I finish My talk and go, you slide into the Marthya loka---the world of passing things and fleeting desires, vacillating minds and doubting brains.

Above all, examine your own conduct and faith. See whether it is sincere and steady. When you sit in the moving train, you find that the trees are moving fast, along the line; do not worry about the trees; see yourself, examine yourself and then you will find that it is you that is moving fast. So also, do not blame others and point out their faults. The faults you will find are in you, and when you correct yourself, the world too becomes correct! Inaana is the discrimination between what promotes one's progress and what retards. Be your own Guru, your own teacher; you have the lamp with you, light it and march on without fear.

God's Grace can destroy effects of past karma

To reach the stage when even "Sarvam Brahma Mayam" (All is Brahmam) is realised as an understatement (because that statement postulates two entities: Sarvam and Brahman, and the experience of Brahman alone, IS), you have got to go a long way. But do not be down-hearted; the entire encyclopaedia is composed of the twenty-six letters of the alphabet and all scholarship begins with the mastery of A and B and C and D. I am here ready to help you from the first lesson to the last. Do not be weighed down by sorrow that your Praarabdha karma is against your progress. The accumulation of the effects of your past karma is Sanchitha and out of that store what you have selected for present consumption is Praarabdha; if wisely used and cooked, the Praarabdha can be made sweet, palatable and health-giving. Moreover, God's Grace can destroy the effects of past karma or modify its rigour. Never doubt that.

If the law of Karma is so unbreakable, then why recommend Saadhana, good living and cultivation of virtue? Praarabdha will like mist before the Sun if you win the Grace of the Lord! The Grace of the Lord is needed for the dawn of Inaana also.

The consequence of karma can be wiped out only through karma, as a thorn can be removed only by means of another. Do good karma to assuage the pain of the bad karma which you have done and from which you suffer now.

The best and the simplest karma is the repetition of the Name of the Lord; be ever engaged in it. It will keep out evil tendencies and wicked thoughts. It will help you radiate love all round you.

33. Foundation for vidhya

INTO this tiny hamlet ringed round by 'pigmy hillocks,' there has come from the far-off Himaalayan region, the Governor of Uttar Pradesh, Dr. Burgula Raamakrishna Rao, to lay the

Foundationstone

of your School Building! Really, this should make at least one thing clear to you that if sincere Saadhana is done, even the most difficult thing can be accomplished. I find the whole village of

and even the surrounding villages are immersed in joy today. I too am very happy, for it is not simply a building which will rise up on this spot. It is a new era of prosperity and of progress. He lays the foundation not merely for a Vidhyaalaya (educational institution) but for vidhya (education) as well. He has not only sacrificed much for the freedom of his country and earned the respect and affection of the leaders of the land, but he is also a great scholar in many languages and he is an ardent believer in Sanaathana Dharma (eternal religion). To have the village school begun by him is indeed a very auspicious event.

You can be proud that Puttaparthi is a village that has become famous from the Himaalayas to Kanyaakumari, as the Governor said now; but as he himself added, it is a great responsibility as well.

This function is, I consider, the crown and glow of this year's Birthday Festival, for I see the faces of the ryots before Me beaming with a new hope and a new joy. The elders of this village have at last realised what they have missed all these years due to their own defects.

Puttaparthi is revered with gratitude by millions

To secure pearls, one has to go far out into the sea and dive deep; simply wading in the shallows and declaring that the

is a myth is a sign of foolishness. So too, the elders here wondered so long at all stories of My Mahimaas (miracle powers) and could not make use of the splendid chances that lay at their very doors. They saw only the Light, but did not feel the warmth. That itself proves that though they were physically so near, they were very distant for all practical purposes. They could see the Splendour, the Glory, the Effulgence but they did not come near and share the Warmth of my Heart.

Entangled in the false and the fleeting, men lose the golden chance of grasping the true and the lasting. They refuse to recognise the fruits that grow on the branches of the tree in their own garden; they pluck it before it becomes ripe and they go about decrying it as sour. Such is the fate of man; he has always ignored God and pursued the paltry joys of pride and greed.

As a matter of fact, Puttaparthi is a name revered and remembered with gratitude by millions today and it will be treasured in history as an immortal name. No other village has such fortune, but you have been slow to recognise this. For twenty years now, efforts have been made to calm the waves of faction in this village, years during which many other villages sought and won My Grace and Blessings. There have been many occasions on which bhakthas (devotees) have pleaded with Me to move out of this miasma and settle down in Bangalore or Madras or some such town, or if I preferred, some other quiet rural spot. But let Me tell you here and now; this tree has to grow at the very spot where it sprouted; it will not be transplanted; I shall not give up this place, no, not I. This place will be transformed into Thirupathi and those who are little boys and girls today will surely see it in all its magnificence.

Three requisites essential for all advancement

It is not only this village but every village is sick with animosities and petty quarrels and vendettas. As the Governor said, many attempts have been made during the last fifteen years to better the lot of the ryot but the result has been far below expectations and expense. For there is an absence of three requisites essential for all advancement: Dhairyam, Uthsaaaham and Aanandham (courage, enthusiasm and joy). The very Nature around is enough to instill awe and wonder, to impart courage, to inspire enthusiasm and to fill you with joy! It is a type of false vairaagyam (non-attachment) to close the eye to all the beauty, all the plenty, all the mercy that you receive from Mother Nature, and to mope in sorrow, bewailing your lot.

You should be thankful to the Lord for the chance given to you to serve others and yourselves, to observe His Glory and His Grace and you should look upon all as brothers and sisters. If instead, you poison your hearts with hate and revel in quarrels; well, what is the great profit you have earned thereby? Have you at least derived peace and content, following that course? You have reaped only further hate and further waste.

The villages surrounding this place have gainfully made use of the help given by Government and advanced in some ways; but here, you need not stretch your hands before Government; you have a Kalpavriksha (wish-fulfilling tree) ready to give you all that you want! You have the Lord, who protects and promotes all. The virtues of the people are the treasures of the State; the smarana (remembering) of the Name of the Lord is the root of all virtues. The royal road to ensure joy and peace

Naaradha, who was afflicted with conceit that there was no other who had dedicated his very breath to the recital of the Name, was once humiliated to find that a ryot, who managed to repeat the Name three times(!) in the course of his over-whelming multitude of distressing preoccupations from cock-crow to dusk, was judged a greater devotee! Joy is your birthright; Peace is your inmost nature. The Lord is your staff and support. Do not discard It; do not be led away from the path of faith by stories invented by malice and

by spite.

Take up the Name of God, any of his innumerable ones, any that appeals to you most and the Form appropriate to that Name and start repeating it from now on; that is the royal road to ensure Joy and Peace.

That will train you in the feeling of brotherhood and remove enmity towards fellowmen.

Many seeds are sown in the field by you; some are eaten away by ants; some are washed off by rains; some are picked by the birds; some are destroyed by pests; but some sprout strong and sturdy. This little school will grow into a sturdy High School, believe Me. You, on your part, must do everything to uphold the honour and reputation of this village.

When I went to Nainital, right in the midst of the Himaalayas, thousands of miles from here, they welcomed Me with an Address written and printed in Hindhi and therein they mentioned this village of Puttaparthi which they called a Punyakshethra (Sacred Piano)! Well, when people actually come here from the various quarters of the world, let them see a virtuous community of God-fearing men and women, living in peace and content.

The journey of every man is towards the cemetery; every day brings you nearer to the moment of death. So, do not delay the duty you must carry out for your own lasting good. Recognise that you are Shiva (God), before you become a shava (corpse); that will save you from further deaths.

34. The click of the camera

WHAT Kuppa Bairaagi Shaasthri told you now about Brahma Ijnaasa (desire of getting knowledge of the Supreme Soul) and Aathma (soul) was very learned and very useful, especially for Saadhakas who have reached a certain stage of discipline and study, but I know that most of it was beyond you. My task is to give you the stuff that you need now, in a form that is both sweet and digestible. It is difficult to grasp the idea of the Aathma, about which Kuppa Bairaagi Shasthri spoke, in spite of all the quotations he gave from all the commentaries on the Upanishaths.

It is just the gold in all the jewels, the base and the substance, however many forms and whatever shapes the jewels may have. To become a particular jewel is to lose the Universal nature or rather to limit it. To lose the name and form of gold and become a jewel is to feel separate, to forget the One. The Aathma does not change, no one can transform it. Its nature is hidden by various veils of ignorance, such as those which Thyaagaraaja prayed Lord Venkatesha to pull apart, in the famous song---"Thera theeyaga raadha."

The veils are known as mind, intellect, etc. The jewel must know it is not, it was not, it will not be oval or square or fiat or round, or anklet or necklace or ring or bangle. It must yearn to know its real nature and become aware of the basic truth, apart from the unreal appearance. When it becomes gold again or rather when it ceases to think of itself as anything but gold, it can be said to have attained Bliss.

Love has to begin with a great yearning for Light

Because you have taken residence in this body, you cannot call the body, 'T'. When you sit here in this Hall, you do not call the Hall 'I'; you know you are separate and that you are here only temporarily. When you move about in a tonga (horse-cart), you do not say that the tonga is you, do you? You do not take the tonga inside when you step down from it on reaching home. So also, you have to drop this body when you reach "home".

The 'T' in you is Paramaathma (Supreme Being) Himself. 'T' is the tiny wavelet that plays with the wind for a moment, over the deep waters of the sea. The wave gives you the impression that it is separate from the azure and timeless ocean below. But it is just an appearance, a creation of the two ideas---Name and Form. Get rid of the two ideas and the wave disappears in the sea; its reality flashes upon you and you know.

Paramaathma reveals Its Glory as Prema (Love) in man; Prema appears in various forms: attaching itself to riches or parents or children or one's a life-mate or friends. All these are sparks of the same flame and the Love of the Universal is its highest expression.

This Prema cannot be cultivated by reading guide-books and madeeasies and learning the steps by rote. It has to begin with a great yearning for the Light, an unbearable agony to escape from the Darkness and see Light, as in the prayer, "Thamaso maa jyothir gamaya." The yearning itself will draw down the Light. The Love will grow of itself and by its slow and inevitable alchemy turn you into Gold. Prahlaadha was a Raakshasa (demon) but Prema (Love) liberated him nevertheless; Jataayu was a bird, Dhruva but a toddler, the cowherds of Brindhaavan were unlettered folk; yet, through that alchemy, they all shone in the splendour of Prema and knew the Source.

Samskaara will have its say at the time of death. Once you take on the Name of the Lord which is sweetness itself, it will awaken all the sweetness latent in you; when you have tasted the joy, you can never for a moment exist without that sustenance. It becomes as essential as air for the lungs. You may say, listening to some Puraanic (mythological) tales, that it is quite enough if the name of the Lord is remembered, however casually, at the very last moment of life! But it is a hard task to recall that name, if you have not practised it for years. In the surge of emotions and thoughts that will invade you at the last moment, the Name of God will be submerged unless you learn from now on to bring that Name to the top of the consciousness, whenever you want it.

There was a shop-keeper once who was inspired by that tale of Ajaamila. He decided to remember the Name with his last breath, by a short cut; he named his sons after the various Avathaars (divine incarnations), for he knew that he has bound to call them when he was about to die. The moment came at last and as expected, he called on all his sons by name, one by one. There were six of them and so he called the Lord by proxy six times in all. The boys came and stood round his cot and as he surveyed the group, the thought that came to the dying man's mind, just when he was about to die was, "Alas! they have all come away; who will look after the shop now?" You see, his shop was his very breath all through life and he could not switch it on to God at short notice. The Samskara (merit of actions) will have its say, whatever you may wish.

Without faith, no progress is possible

It is no mean achievement to get the Name of the Lord on one's tongue at the last moment. It needs the practice of many years, based on a deep-seated Faith. It needs a strong character, without hatred or malice; for the thought of God cannot survive in a climate of pride and greed. And how do you know which moment is the last? Yama, the God of Death, does not give notice of his arrival to take hold of you. He is like the man with the camera taking snapshots; he does not warn, "Ready? I am clicking." If you wish your portrait to hang on the walls of Heaven, it must be attractive; your stance, your pose, your smile must all be nice, is it not? So it is best to be ready for the click, night and day, with the name ever tripping on the tongue and the glory always radiant in the mind. Then, whenever shot, your photo will be fine.

What is most needed is the cultivation of virtue, and fear of sin and the fear of wrong. How do you decide that an act or a thought is sinful or wrong? It has to be done on the basis of the Shaasthras and of the Voice within. Without faith, no progress is possible, even in the material world. Science considers the prathyaksha (the seen), as the final proof; but how far can you trust the prathyaksha? You respect a person not on the basis of his dress or hairstyle which are prathyaksha, but on the basis of his character and attainments, which are paroksha (invisible).

You suffer now because all your attachment is towards Prakrithi (Nature), and all your Vairaagya (non-attachment) is towards Purusha or God! This has to be reversed! You must cultivate non-attachment towards Nature and attachment to the Lord.

All joy is derived from the form-full aspect of God. I am reminded now of the story of Shankara Bhatta. He was a great saadhaka intent on japa and dhyana to such an extent that he was reduced to skin and bone. He worshipped Goddess Saraswathi (Goddess of Learning) which is the key to open the doors of Mukthi (Liberation). Goddess Lakshmi (Goddess of Wealth) saw his sad plight and was moved with great pity. She chided Saraswathi for denying Her votary even the common joys of life and Herself hid in his leaky hut to pour on him Her Grace. She offered him plenty and prosperity, fame and fortune. She derided Saraswathi for neglecting to award comfort and joy on Her hapless servant. But Shankara Bhatta turned a deaf ear to Her allurements; he said, politely but firmly, "No, Saraswathi has blessed me with the most precious wealth, the gift of knowledge that liberates me. I do not crave Your Grace. Please remove yourself from my presence." There is nothing so grand and so sublime as the Lord in whom you find refuge. Call on Him by any Name or speak of Him as the Nameless one. It is both Sa-aakaara and Nir-aakaara (with Form and Formless). The ocean takes the form of the vessel which contains a part of it. When that is done, the Formless takes Form; the Absolute is reduced to the Particular. You will find out, however, that all the joy is derived from the Form-full aspect of God; the Formless causes no joy or grief; it is beyond all duality.

Jewels give joy, not gold. You can experience the Name, you can imbibe the Form; you can take them to heart and dwell upon them and fill yourself with the joy that they evoke. That is why Jayadheva, Gouranga, Raamakrishna and others wished to remain ants, tasting Sugar rather than becoming Sugar itself. The Name is like the seed, implanted in your heart; when the shower of His Grace falls upon it, it sprouts into a lovely tree. All trees that sprout from the Names of the Lord are equally lovely and shady. If you have Krishna-naama, the vision that you win and the form that you evoke is that of Krishna; if you have Raama-naama, it is the

that sprouts.

Do not allow your mind to waver due to doubts Leelaashukha had the Name of Krishna embedded in the field of his heart and so, the Lord appeared before him with a peacock feather, a flute and a charming mischievous smile! He fulfills your innermost aspiration in a flash, if it is compelling enough. Only you should not allow your mind to waver due to doubt or disappointment. Leave all to Him and be at ease; it is the man with no faith that is tossed about on the sea, like a ship caught in a storm with neither rudder nor anchor. The Bhaktha bears the ups and downs of life, keeping the balance of his mind even.

You sometimes talk as if the devotee leads a life beset with hardships and sorrows and that the man who does not bend before a Higher Power is care-free and prosperous; but this is a totally wrong idea. The Bhaktha sails on an even keel; he has inner peace, a spring of joy which sustains him and keeps him together.

Bairaagi Shaastri said that this is an auspicious day for you because this is My Birthday; but let Me tell you, I have many Birthdays like this. The Auspicious Day for you is the day on which your mind is cleansed and not the day on which I took this human form. I am ever new and ever ancient, ever noothana (modern) and ever sanaathana (ancient). I come always for the sake of reviving Dharma, for tending the virtuous and ensuring them conditions congenial for progress. Some doubters might ask, "Can Paramaathma assume human form?" Well, man can derive aanandha only through the human form; we can receive instruction, inspiration, illumination only through human language and human communication.

God bows to your will and carries your burden

I will never force you to take up a particular Name or Form of the Lord as your ishtam (wish). The Lord has a million Names and a million Forms, and He wants that faith and attachment should be evoked in you by any one of them, as you recite the Names or contemplate the Forms. That is why they have a string of 1008 Names for use to worship; the devotee might be drawn closer to the Lord while any one Name is being repeated, however distracted or inattentive he might be during the rest of the list. Like the coldness of the atmosphere which freezes the water, the compelling agony of the Bhaktha's heart solidifies the Niraakaar (Formless Absolute) into the shape and the attitude that are yearned for. "Yadh bhaavare, thath bhavathi" --- "as felt, so fashioned." He bows to your will, He carries your burden, provided you trust Him with it. Therefore, so act and feel and speak that you get "iha soukhyam, para soukhyam and kaivalya soukhyam" ("joy here, joy hereafter, joy everlasting" all three). I bless you all that you get more success in the struggle.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, Birthday Festival, 23-11-1960

You must tread the spiritual path with an uncontrollable urge to reach the Goal; you must cultivate the yearning for liberation from all this encumbrance.

Remember that you have to dwell in a house built on four stout pillars: dharma, artha, kaama and moksha (righteousness, wealth, desire and liberation); Dharma supporting artha, and moksha being the only kaama or desire.

However much you may earn either wealth or strength, unless you tap the springs of aanandha (bliss) you cannot have peace and lasting content.

Shri Sathya Sai

35. The dangers of doubt

Kasthuri now spoke to you about the Puraanic stow of the Amrithamanthana (churning of the ocean for gaining the nectar of immortality). He said that when the Dhevas (demi-Gods) were overcome by conceit, delusion and Thamas (ignorance), the sages cursed them with age, greyness and senility; they became easy victims for the Raakshasas (demons); and so, to restore to them the lost splendour, the Lord suggested the churning of the Ocean and the winning of Amritha (nectar of immortality).

You have to take this story in its symbolic sense. The Puraanas (mythological stories) always deal in parables. Each tale has a deeper meaning, something that is more valuable and useful than what appears on the surface. This meaning is to be practised in daily life; they are not stories told to while away the time.

Indhra insulted Dhurvaasa because he was blinded by the power of office; the curse of the sage forced him to re-think about his Reality, to discover his innate status. Then, he found that he was Amritham, of the same nature as Parabrahman (Supreme Reality). Itself. In fact, he came to know that he was Parabrahman, moving about in the delusion that he was Indhra! The churning is the symbol of the Saadhana needed to remove the veil of delusion, more specifically, the Raajayoga Saadhana (royal path of integral spirituality).

When the Dhaivi Shakthi (Power of Divinity) declines and evil impulses predominate, even the Dhevas fall; they lose their special privileges and rights. Once anritha (falsehood) enters into the character, you lose contact with Amritha. He dies many deaths, he who is false, afraid of truth, blind to his own glorious heritage of immortality.

In their inner impulse, men are sub-human

Sathya (Truth) is that which is Nithya (eternal). Falsehood is poison; truth is nectar. Truth alone confers splendour or Dhivvyathawarn (divinity). So, when the Dhevas fell a prey to pride and attachment to unreality, they had to churn their thoughts and impulses, their feelings and emotions, their instincts and inspirations and bring out the cream of Truth. The two groups who pulled the churning rope are the "forward leading influences and the backward pulling influences," ---the Dhaivi and the Asuri (divine and demonic) urges.

As I said, Indhra insulted Dhuurvasa and invited upon himself the anger of that sage because of the ignorance of his fundamental reality, his ajnaana ignorance), which plunged him in pride. What should be done to restore him to sanity is to re-teach him the Aathmic (universal spiritual) basis of all the pomp and pageantry of office, the evanescence that is immanent in all created things. Today, though in outward appearance people are human, in inner impulse they are sub-human or Raakshasa; he who has no dhaana (charity or sacrifice) in him is called a Dhaanava. Dheva and Dhaanava are mixed in the human make-up and now the Dhaanava rules the roost. Therefore, man has lost his glow and his power and his splendour; he must win them again by Saadhana. So, make yourselves pure by incessant striving.

Man is but a flame of the Eternal Fire

The partaking of the Amritha created by Me is only the first step in this process for you: it does not mean much if you do not take the second step and the third and march on towards selfrealisation.

You must have faith in the discipline laid down in Sanaathana Dharma and in the ultimate Divine basis of all creation. Get convinced that the world can give you only fleeting joy and grief is but the obverse of joy. Strive now, from this very moment; for time is rushing like a swift torrent. Develop the joy that will not decline, the joy that will ever be full. Be true to yourself. Be bold, be sincere. The only reality is the twin-bird on the tree, the Jeewaathma (individual soul) that tastes the fruits and suffers and the Paramaathma (Supreme Soul) that sits unmoved and merely looks on.

Mention was made now of the Mohini-ruupa (form of fascinating woman) and the way in which the Asuras were misled by the enticing charm of outward form. Now, all this talk of the Consorts of the Lord, of Lakshmi, Saraswathi and Paarvathi being the wives of the Trinity, are absolutely silly. They reveal only the samsaaric (worldly living) glasses that you wear, the projection of your worldly fancies on the 'Heavenly families,' the weaving of stories on the human model for the satisfaction of human cravings. These names are only convenient expressions for the Shakthi (Divine Power) that is immanent in Godhead. For example, Lakshmi is the personification of Dhaya or the Grace of Vishnu; that is why she is said to dwell on His breast! So too, Paarvathi is half the body of Shiva, inseparably incorporated in Him! The powers of Creation, Conservation and Dissolution are co-existent and continuous in Godhead. You may ask how the three can co-exist. Well, look at electricity! The current can create, conserve as well as dissolve, all at the same time, and to the same extent. These Shakthis (divine energies) are similarly pictured as inseparably associated with the three aspects of the Absolute. Man's duty is to achieve unity with the Shiva-Shakthi for he is but a spark that has emanated from it; he is but a flame of the Eternal Fire.

Bakthi must confer patience and fortitude

Enter upon that task of Saadhana from now on; that is the lesson you must learn here. Otherwise, yaathra (pilgrimage) leads only to the accumulation of paathra (vessel)---you buy vessels from wherever you go: from Raameshwaram, Thirupathi, Kaashi, Haridhwar, Madhura, Kumbhakonam. That is the merit you get pilgrimage, a store-room full of vessels. You come from long distances, incur heavy expenses, suffer in the cold, in the open or lie in the shade of trees and wait for days expecting the longed for interview with Me; but in the end, you return and dissipate the shaanthi and the santhosha (peace and happiness) you derive from this place.

Bhakthi is something sweet, soothing, refreshing and restoring. It must confer patience and fortitude. The Bhaktha will not be perturbed if another gets the interview first or if another is given greater consideration. He is humble and bides his time: he knows that there is a higher power that knows more and that it is just and impartial. In the light of that knowledge, the Bhaktha will communicate his troubles and problems only to his Lord; he will not humiliate himself by talking about them to all and sundry, for what can a man, who is as helpless as himself, do to relieve him? It is only those who have that implicit faith in God, who will deign to communicate only with the Lord and none else, who deserve Amritha (nectar of immortality).

Make Naamasmarana as part of yourself

The sthula dheha (gross body) should be ever immersed in Sathsanga; (holy company) the Suukshrna dheha (subtle body), is, the thoughts and feelings, should be ever immersed in the contemplation of the Glory of the Lord. That is the sign of the bhaktha. He who shouts and swears and advertises his worries to every one he meets and craves for sympathy, such a one can never be a bhaktha. Such men are miscalled bhakthas. They make earnest men lose faith in Godly ways; earnest men feel they are superior to these pseudo-devotees. And this is a fact. It is a great responsibility to tread the Godward path. There is no sliding back, no halfway stop, no tardy pace, no side lane on such a pilgrimage. It is always up and up, right to the crest of the mountain.

Though your responsibility is greater, take it from Me, you are luckier than others. Do not deny with the tongue what you have relished in the heart; do not bear false witness to your own felt experience. Do not carp and talk cynically of the very thing you have revered and adored when the company into which you fall start retailing such raillery. It is said that the bhaktha can get the Lord everywhere easily but the Lord cannot get a bhaktha so easily. Yes, it is difficult to secure a bhaktha who has that unshaken faith, that attitude of complete self-surrender. Such an attitude can come only by Naamasmarana (remembering God's Name), constant, sincere and continuous, as continuous as the act of breathing and felt to be as essential for life. That is the japam, the thapas and the dhyaanam (silent recital of Lord's name, penance & meditation) you all. Naamasmarana like this will immerse you ever in Amritha, not just a drop on your tongue.

Saadhana has to be followed from a tender age

Do you know how much I feel when I find that in spite of My arrival and Bodha and Upadhesam (teaching and spiritual instruction), you have not yet started this Saadhana? You simply praise Me and strew compliments; that I am the Treasure-house of Grace, the Ocean of Aanandha, etc. Take up the Name and dwell upon Its sweetness; imbibe It and roll It on your tongue, taste Its essence, contemplate on Its magnificence and make it a part of yourself and grow strong in spiritual joy. That is what pleases Me. Do not wait until you are past middle age to practise this Saadhana; I know of some parents who drag away their sons who come to Me when still young; they tell them that they can take up religious practices in their old age. These parents do not know the extent of the loss. By some stroke of good luck, their children get the chance of knowing about the right path for shaanthi and santhosha (peace and contentment), but the parents are angry that the sons do not find pleasure in the articles that gave them pleasure! They feel there must be something wrong in the make-up of their sons; they tempt them to drink, to gamble, to exploit, to hate---to imitate them, in short--and take them along with them to perdition. But a straight plant means a straight tree; a bent plant can never grow into a straight tree. Rotten, over-ripe, worm-eaten fruits are not fit to be offered to God. Years of sin would have warped the character of a person beyond repair. So the saadhana has to be followed from a tender age.

Doubt is a component of the demonic nature

Faith can grow only by long cultivation and careful attention.

The old are haunted by the demon of doubt. I know there are many here who are afflicted by doubt. They think that I have hidden a vessel of Amritha in a spot in the sands previously fixed and known to Me only. That is why I now asked some from among those people themselves, to decide where we sit on these sands.

Kastuuri suggested this morning that since the thousands who have come to see the Amrithodhbhava (materialisation of nectar) cannot get a close view on this flat riverbed, a mound of sand be raised, whereon I can sit.

I did not agree because I knew these doubters would immediately infer that the Amritha was hidden previously under the mound that was heaped up on purpose! This doubt is truly a component of the Raakshasa (demonic) nature, for it eats into the vitals of Bhakthi. It clips the wings of joy, it dampens enthusiasm, it tarnishes hope. Such men cannot attain the goal even at the end of a thousand births.

When doubt assails you, welcome the chance to see and experience and clear the doubt. But do not later deny the very truth of which you were once convinced and listen again to the voice of hate or foolishness. Do not put faith in the words of men into whose hands you will not entrust your purse; as a matter of fact, it is the words of such men that are now leading many astray. Really, this is a pitiable state of things, is it not?

Come to Me, eager to learn, to progress, to see Yourself in Me, and I shall certainly welcome you and show you the way. You will indeed be blessed. All scriptures, all texts, the Geetha which is the milk of all the Upanishadhic Cows, are intended to instill this thirst into you.

Do not vacillate and change Name and Form

The thirst has to be like that of the creeper for the tree-trunk, of the magnet for the iron, of the bee for the flower, of the waters for a fall, of the river for the sea. The pangs of separation must gnaw the heart; the entire being must yearn for union. Do not vacillate or change or try a series of Naama and Ruupa (Name and Form). That will only fritter away time and energy. Ceaseless contemplation of the Lord will give ceaseless taste of Amritha to you.

If you do not follow this path, you are doubly to blame; for you have contacted Me. The Form usually creates doubts, for when only the Name is there, you can build around it all your fancies, all that you want, to complete the picture. Do not be misled by such doubts when the Form has come before you; make the moment useful, the life worthwhile.

(Finding that the vast gathering would not be able to see the materialisation of the Amritha if He did it while seated on the sands, Baaba first created a Shankha (conch), the vessel from which the Amritha will now emanate," as He announced. Then He stood up in the centre of the crowd and "poured" from that empty Sankha into a silver vessel a sparkling stream of sweet and fragrant Amritha, which he later distributed to every person who had come.)

What you have heard and seen must be spoken out, without exaggeration or abridgement; that is Sathya (truth-speaking). Of course, when the mind is controlled, the intelligence is sharpened and purified; you see only the One everywhere, in everything, at all times; then that One becomes the only truth, which you see, hear and speak of---for, there is nothing else to see or hear.

The Raamaayana has played a very important role in influencing and shaping the Hindu ethos over the centuries.

Rajas/Rajo Guna - One of the three gunas (qualities or dispositions) of Maayaa or Prakrithi. Rajas is the quality of passion, energy, restlessness, attachment and extroversion. It results in pain.

Thaapam - Pain, misery; distress caused by the three types of agencies (thaapathrayam). The agencies are aadhyaadmika (diseases and disturbances of body and mind); aadhi bhowthika (other beings); and aadhi deivikam (supernatural agencies like storm, floods, earthquakes, planets, etc).

Thamas - One of the gunas (qualities and dispositions) of Maayaa or Prakrithi. It is the quality of dullness, inertia, darkness and tendency to evil. It results in ignorance.

Saadhana - Spiritual discipline or effort aimed at God realisation. The saadhaka (aspirant) uses the spiritual discipline to attain the goal of realisation.

Samaadhi - It is the super-conscious state transcending the body, mind and intellect, attained through rigorous and protracted Saadhana. In that state of consciousness, the objective world and the ego vanish and the Reality is perceived or communed with, in utter peace and bliss. When in this state, the aspirant realises his oneness with God, it is called Nirvikalpa Samaadhi.

Samsaara - Wordly life; life of the jeeva through repeated births and deaths. Liberation means getting freed from this cycle.

Sanaathana Dharma - Eternal religion. A descriptive term for what has come to be called Hinduism. It has no single founder or text of its own. It is more a commonwealth of religious faiths and a way of life.

Saamanyaa Dharma - Code of conduct common to all persons in any one social group.

Shaasthras - The Hindhu scriptures containing the teachings of the rishis. The Vedhas, the Upanishads, the Itihasas (epics), the Puraanas and the Smrithis (codes of conduct), etc., form the Shaasthras of the Hindhus. They teach us how to live wisely and well with all the tenderness and concern of the Mother.

Sathwa - One of the three gunas (qualities and dispositions) of Maayaa or Prakrithi. It is the quality of purity, brightness, peace and harmony. It leads to knowledge. Man is exhorted to overcome thamas by rajas, and rajas by sathwa and finally to go beyond sathwa itself to attain liberation.

Sthitha prajna - A man of realisation with a steady, tranquil and cheerful mind ever dwelling on God. He is a man of self-control, even-minded in all circumstances and totally free from all selfish desires. After death he attains freedom from Samsaara.

Swadharma - One's dharma or duty that accords with one's nature. This is an important concept in the Geetha.

Upaasana - Worship or contemplation of God.

Upanishadh - The very sacred portions of the Vedhas that deal with God, man and universe, their nature and interrelationships. Spiritual knowledge (jnaana) is their content. So they form the Inaana Kaanda of the Vedhas.

Vairagya - Detachment; desire and ability to give up all transitory enjoyments.

Varna dharma - The Hindhu community is divided into four varnas (social groups), based on gunas and vocations. Braahmana (the Custodian of spiritual and moral role), Kshathriya (the warrior class which rules and defends the land), Vaishya (the group dealing with commerce, business and trade) Shuudhra (the group devoted to labour and service to the community). Each varna has its own dharma (varna dharma) restrictions and regulations that strive to canalise his impulses and instinct into fields that are special to his place in society, controls pertaining to the duties cast upon Vedhas - The oldest and the holiest of the Hindhu scriptures, the primary source of authority in Hindhu religion and philosophy. They are four in number --- the Rig Vedha, Saama Vedha, Yajur Vedha and Atharva Vedha.

Vedhaantha - Means "the end of the Vedhas". It is the essence of the Vedhas enshrined in the Upanishads. The philosophy of non-dualism, or qualified non-dualism, or dualism based on the Upanishadic teachings, is denoted by this term.

Vishesha Dharma - Code of conduct to be observed in special situations; obligations to be discharged on special occasions, or when faced with special situations.

Vijnaanamaya kosha - One of the five koshas (sheaths) of the soul. It consists of intellect and the five subtle sense organs. It is endowed with the power to know. The "I" or subject of experience or action is seated here.

Viveka - Discrimination; the reasoning by which one realises what is real and permanent and what is non-real and impermanent.

Vriththi Dharma - The moral code that regulates and enriches a person's profession.

Yagna - A Vedhic rite or sacrifice. Any self-denying act of service in the name of God.

Yoga - Means union with God, as also the path by which this union of the soul with God is achieved. The four important paths of Yoga are those of knowledge, action, meditation and devotion.

Sathya Sai Speaks

"I ve come", He says, "to wake you all

Who sleep the sleep of ages--

While one by one the pages

Of account book of paltry deeds and thoughts

Accumulate in defiling piles---and keep you from

The happy land

The Realm of Restful Peace."

"I ve come," He says, "to save you all

Who stray away in silly pride

Hunting fantasies in bush and briar

With bandaged eyes, in pitch-dark gloom

And fall into birth-and-death,

Failure, fracture, faction, fanatic fire."

"I ve come," He says, "to cure you all

From petty selfish inanities !

Trivial tinsel temporalities!

Your tweedledums and tweedledees,

The little loves and hates,
 Peevish Paisa rivalries,
 Across dividing line of 'mine' and 'thine' !
 Brother gouging brother's eye,
 Sister crushing sister's babe --
 For the sin of wall between !"
 "I've come," He says, "to show you all
 The Path; a Form, a Name; a Way of life,
 That cools and calms the fevered Mind
 That stills the waves,
 That fills, fulfils;
 That leads you into He (whom you forgot),
 That flows you into It, from which you came.
 Here you find on every page
 The Words He spoke for You
 A few which I dared translate Into uncouth English tongue
 The few I gathered from His Lips
 As I sat at the Feet to catch His voice
 So Sweet, so charged with Grace !
 The solar rays, they open wide
 The buds of Lotus, waiting for the Warmth !
 May Baaba's Words, their warming touch Unfurl the petals of your Lotus heart !

1. Mahaashakthi

OUR Venkateshwarlu just now spoke of the Lord as the Suuthradhaara of a Maayanaataka--- the Director of a Drama of Delusion. But, the Delusion is in you not in the Lord, who is possessed of only Mahaashakthi. Unable to grasp that Mahaashakthi (Supreme Power), and to understand its manifestations, man envelopes himself in doubt and delusion, that is all. He also said that I am by birth an Andhra, etc., but, the whole World is my birth place. I am not to be identified with this or that Province or State. Dakshinaamurthi does not belong to Dakshinaapatha alone. Again, Venkateshwarlu mentioned the various points spoken about Me, by those who have neither seen or experienced Me. These are all unnecessary and useless diversions, which distract. The sculptor should see before him only the Form of his Ishtadevatha (personal deity) and he should strive to remove quickly with his chisel the stone that envelopes that Form. So too all discussion whether this Sai is that Sai or that Sai is this Sai, is irrelevant.
 The same sugar is poured into different moulds to prepare, several types of sweets. So also, Raama, Sai, Sathya Sai all are the same sugar; that is enough for the aspirant; he will realise the truth in good time. Do not worry your mind with such problems; do not mix with people who talk loosely of holy subjects. One thing I may tell you now: There is no one in this world who does not belong to Me; all are Mine. They may not call out My Name or any Name, but, still they are Mine."

You are seeing for yourself how the thirsty souls are gathering in numbers every day at Puttaparthi. I have told you often that in a matter of a year or two the multitude will be so large that you may not get much chance to approach Me with your spiritual problems and difficulties.

So, hurry to Me with them, even now. While in other places, I speak generally on the need for bhakti (devotion) etc., here at Puttaparthi, I emphasise the practical discipline of everyday life, because this is the HQ of an army under training. So, you should cultivate Truth and Love and make yourselves examples for all who might contact you.

Make Soham the japam of the mind and you will be saved. "I" will merge in the Universal Continuously recite Soham, Soham, Soham, with every breath, inhaling and exhaling.

Sathya Sai Baaba

2. Sai as Hrudhayasthaayi

THE Chairman of your Mandhir Committee said just now that I have come a great distance, after an arduous journey, and so he thanked Me for what he called My kindness. Let Me tell you that it is your thapas (penance) that has brought Me here today. I have come and stayed in this town four or five times before, but this is the first occasion on which I am directly conferring aanandham on so many thousands of people. This is the consequence of the years of bhajan (devotional singing) done at this place by sincere devotees, the months of toil and exertion undergone by Chari and others to construct this Mandhir (hall of worship), get this idol ready and make all arrangements for this function.

He also said that the reign of Sai had been established and that this unprecedentedly vast audience of persons from this City and the surrounding areas is proof of that fact.

Well, you are seeing signs of widespread Godliness, no doubt. More and more lectures, more and more books, more and more spiritual groups are evident; more people go on pilgrimage; more and more temples are being renovated; all types of yagnas (sacrificial rites) are arranged and gone through; thousands gather and disperse. In all countries and in all languages, men are praying more and more, turning towards the Lord for the blessing of courage and equanimity.

These are days of doubt, anxiety, fear, division and distress; and so, people need consolation and support. Even scientists who were all along proud that they could explain the Universe and put it into a formula are getting humble on seeing the vaster and vaster vistas spreading before them at every step.

Lesson that all thinking men are learning

Dr. Bhagavantham was telling Me how scientists are baffled; they open one door after another with tremendous effort, only to enter a corridor which has a dozen closed doors challenging them to further effort! It is a never-ending process, this pursuit of Prakrithi (objective world), this attempt to unravel the mysteries of maaya (illusion). If you yearn for Joy and Peace, turn rather to the Lord who lays down the Law; that is the lesson that all thinking men are learning now.

But attending such meetings sitting quietly like this and listening to Me is not enough. When a person claims to have gone to the shore of the sea and played with the waves, he must produce as evidence at least a pair of wet feet, is it not? So too, when you come to this sea of Sathsanga (company of the pious) and share the waves of bliss, the proof is in the eye becoming wet when another, weeps; in the heart that exults when another is happy. Even when you listen, gather the honey as the bee does when it visits the flowers.

The Chairman said the world is becoming Saimayam (full of Sai), that Sainaamam (name of Sai) is on every one's lips. I want that it should go deeper. And I do not insist that it should be the Name, Sai. The world must become Paramaathma-mayam; that is all, however many Names and Forms that Paramaathma (Supreme Soul) may have on the lips of people and before their mental eyes. It is the same substance poured into different moulds. Like sugar dolls which children seek, cats and dogs, cows and horses, they are all of the self-same sweetness; this child prefers this shape and this name; the other one weeps for another doll. The same Divine substance appears in different times and places, assuming different Names. When the forces of evil and hatred overwhelm them, the Good accept the Lord as their Charioteer and He enables them to overpower foes.

"Establishment of Righteousness is My task"

This day deserves to be recorded in letters of gold because of this reason. Moreover, this day is unique because it is rare that an Avathaar installs the idol of another. I Myself find it rather amusing. Of course, Raama installed the Shivalinga at Raameshwaram before He started out for Lanka for the extermination of the evil-doers. Now, there is no question of extermination. My task is Dharma Samsthaapanam (establishment of righteousness). And now that I am entering on that Avatharakaarya (task of the Incarnation), I too am installing this idol prior to that task.

It is now over 18 years since the Manifestation of Sai as Naaga took place on this spot; but it has taken you all these years to complete the erection of the Mandhir and the installation of the Image. Well, the years accumulated to 18 not without reason. It is all in the Plan. Eighteen is a mystic number, having a profound meaning. I find 18 persons in the Mantapa (podium) here; they represent the 18 officiators of the Yajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice): 6 for the Jagath (world), 6 for Kaala (Time), 3 for Manas, Chitha and Buddhi (mind, thought and intellect), the pair that perform the Yajna as the initiated couple, and lastly, Aathma, the Witness.

I am installing the Naagasaayi in the temple, but that is just a symbolic act. I require that at that very moment, chosen because it is very auspicious, you should instal Him in your heart; make Him your Hrudhaya-sthaayi!

Have a correct scale of values

What exactly is the meaning of Sai Baaba? Sai means Sahasrapadhma, (thousand lotuses) Saakshaathkaara (Realisation), etc. Ayi means Mother and Baaba means Father; it means He who is both Father and Mother, and the Goal of all Yogic endeavour--- the ever-merciful Mother, the All-wise Father and the Goal of spiritual efforts. When you are groping in a dark room, you must seize the chance when some one brings a lamp into the room. Hurriedly collect your belongings scattered there, or discover where they are located, or do whatever else you need.

Similarly, make the best of this chance when the Lord has come in human form to your very door and get ready to save yourself from disaster.

The undue importance now attached to the satisfaction of sensual desires must diminish as the result of your association with sacred books and saintly personages. You know that the dream world is a fantasic world of nonsense, where fifty years are compressed into five minutes and where weird incidents and things are taken as actually present and experienced. But let Me tell you that from the stage of Realisation, even the waking stage, when you analyse the dreams and declare them as invalid, is equally without validity. Therefore, have a sense of values, a scale of values rather; give everything, everyone, its worth or his worth, not a whit more.

Five sheaths encase the Aathma and hide its splendour from revealing itself. Make all these pure and shining. The Annamaya Kosha (physical sheath) must be purified by good, clean, pure food; the Praanamaya Kosha (vital sheath) by calm, steady breathing and an equanimous temper; the senses or unaffected by joy or grief; the Vijnaanamaya Kosha (wisdom sheath) purified by contemplation of the reality and the Aanandhamaya Kosha (bliss sheath) by getting immersed in the ecstasy of God-realisation.

Manomaya Kosha (mental sheath) by holy thoughts and emotions, untouched by attachment to

Do not run after all and sundry Stick to your faith; do not change your loyalty as soon as something happens or some one whispers. Do not pull down Sai Baba's picture from the wall and hang some other picture there at the first disappointment. Leave all to Him; let His Will be carried out---that should be your attitude. Unless you go through the rough and the smooth, how can you be hardened? Welcome the light and the shade, the sun and the rain. Do not think that only those who worship a picture or image with pompous paraphernalia are devotees. Whoever walks straight along the moral path, whoever acts as he speaks and speaks as he has seen, whoever melts at another's woe and exults at another's joy---is a devotee, perhaps a greater devotee.

Baaba is beyond the keenest intellect, the sharpest brain. Why, even the Saptha Rishis failed to grasp the Sublimity of Godhead. Mahlaspathi, Daas Gaanu, Mudholkar, Kaakaa Saaheb saw but the fringe; Daadha had just a glimpse. So, do not try to delve into Me; develop shraddha (faith) and derive aanandha (bliss) through prema (love). That is the utmost you can do; do that and benefit. Do not run after all and sundry who blabber text-book stuff and wear the cloak of fakirhood (mendicancy). Examine, judge and admire. Examine the daily conduct, the motive, the outlook, the trend of the advice, the co-ordination between what is said and what is done.

When you join the congregational music of divine Names, as you did some time ago, you had to sing in tune with the rest, is it not? Otherwise, your voice becomes harsh to the ear; it grates. So too, unless your life is in tune with the plan that the Lord has laid down, it spoils the melody; it grates; it is felt to be a disturbance. Hence, follow the Divine Plan.

That is to say, have one hand on Brahmamaarga (path of Supreme Reality), and the other on Dharmamaarga (path of Righteousness. These two will take you across and over the sea of birth and death.

Naaga Sai Mandhir, Coimbatore 26-2-1961

Bhakthi, Inaana and Vairaagya are the three stages of spiritual progress. Bhakthi (devotion) is the Primary School stage; it leads one on to Inaana (sacred knowledge), the High School stage; by means of Inaana, everything is cognised as Brahmam (Supreme Realty) and the attitude of Vairaagya (non-attachment) is established. That is the College stage of the Education of the Self.

Sathya Sai Baba

3. Believe in yourself

I HAVE been seeing your devotion and enthusiasm ever since I entered your town this morning; and during the procession through the streets, I could see the ardour of your bhakthi (devotion).

Even now, I feel that I could give you joy by merely sitting here and giving darshan (audience), for I can listen to your silent prayers and you can sense My prema (Love). That is enough. That gives aanandham. You are born, you grow, you live and you merge, all in aanandham (Bliss); that is the Truth, though very few know it. That is why I reminded you of it by addressing you as Aanandha-swaruupulaara (embodiments of Biiss). Your swaruupa (natural state) is aanandham (bliss), however much you might have ignored it.

Bhaarith has proclaimed this for ages; the Vedhas declare it; the Shaasthras elaborate it; the Geetha and other sacred texts describe how to experience this truth. Develop faith in the Aathma and in the Shaasthras---they are the two eyes which will help you to gain the Vision. Do not let this chance go to waste by clamouring for sitting space, causing confusion and disturbing those who are engaged in listening. This is tragic: when good things are spoken, you find it difficult to pay attention; but when demeaning, distracting things are spoken, the ears are on the alert. Well, listen quietly now and maintain this calm.

Plant the seedling of devotion in the mind

Man should be the master of his behaviour; he should not be led away by the impulse of the moment; he must be conscious always of what is good for him. He should so carry on his daily tasks that he does not make others suffer or suffer himself. That is the sign of intelligent living.

You should not give way to fits of anger or grief or elation or despair. The confusion you exhibited now was the result of Thaamasik (dark and dull) and Raajasik (emotional) qualities. Be Saathwik, calm and unruffled and collected. The more you develop charity for all beings, contrition at your own faults, fear of wrong and fear of God---the more firmly established you are in Shaanthi (peace).

The very name Bhaarith is derived from the two words, Bhagavaan and Rathi, the attachment to God; that is why India has the role of the "Teacher of the World." She is also known as the "Heart" of Humanity and revered as such by seekers. But how can those who are starving feed others? It is your duty to sow and grow and store and feed the world this great spiritual sustenance laid down in the Vedhas and the Shaasthras.

In this spiritual sphere of mental peace and inner joy, the responsibility for success or failure is entirely one's own. You have no right to shift it on to others. The fire will go out if the fuel is over; so stop feeding it with fuel. Do not add fuel to the fire of the senses. Detach the mind from the temporary and attach it to the eternal. The negative Shakthi (power) and the positive Shakthi both together will give the Light. Plant the seedling of Bhakthi (devotion), namely, the preliminary exercise of Naamasmarana (remembering the Lord's name), in the mind. That will grow into a tree with the branches of virtue, service, sacrifice, love, equanimity, fortitude and courage. You swallow food, but you are not aware how that food is transformed into energy, intelligence, emotion and health. In the same way, just swallow this food for the spirit, this Naamasmarana, and watch how it gets transmuted as virtue and the rest without your being aware of it.

The real test of theism Raavana discovered that Raama and Kaama cannot coexist in the mind. Develop steadiness in the recitation of the Name of God and in the worth of that Name. Then, even if the whole world says, "Do evil," you will refuse to obey; your system itself will revolt against it. And even if the whole world asks you to desist, you will insist on doing the right. You have to cultivate four types of strength: Strength of body, intellect, wisdom and conduct.

Then you become unshakable; you are on the path of spiritual victory.

Once a person came to Me and argued that there was no God and he was not prepared to believe in one. Well, I asked him, "Have you faith at least in yourself?. Which is your self?. Your self is God. You have faith in your judgement, your intelligence, your ability, because God within you tells you not to falter or fear. That assurance wells from within, from your basic truth, which is otherwise called God. It does not matter if you do not call it God; it is enough if you believe in Yourself; that is the real test of theism," I told him.

I say the same thing to you also. The body is the temple of God; in every body, God is installed, whether the owner of the body recognises it or not. It is God that inspires you to good acts, that warns you against the bad. Listen to that Voice. Obey that Voice and you will not come to any harm. A lady wept that her necklace was lost or stolen; she searched everywhere and became inconsolably sad. Then, when she passed across a mirror, she found the lost necklace around her neck. It was there all the time. Similarly, God is there, as the Inner Dweller whether you know it or not.

Two ways of remembering the Lord's Name Love is of three kinds: Swaartha or self-centred, which like a bulb, illumines just a small room; Anyonya or mutual, which like the moonlight spreads wider but is not clearer; and Paraartha or other-centred, which like the sunlight is all pervasive and clear. Cultivate the third type of love; that will save you. For all the service that you do to others through that love is in fact service done to yourself. It is not the others that you help, it is yourself that is helped, remember.

You might have heard Me speak about Naamasmarana and its fruits; how it slowly changes character and modifies conduct and mellows you and takes you nearer the Goal. Well, there are two ways of doing this: with a japamaala (rosary), turning the beads automatically around, just as mechanically and as punctually and as carefully as any other routine act of daily life; or, as it ought to be done---repeating the Name, irrespective of the target number, dwelling deep on the Form it represents and on the Divine attributes connoted by it, tasting It, revelling in It, enjoying the contexts and associations of the Name, relishing Its sweetness, lost in Its Music. Of course, you will be hankering after the taste of the Name only when you are gnawed by the pangs of hunger. When you suffer from constipation as a consequence of over-indulgence in worldly affairs, you cannot relish the Name or the Form.

The mind is the mischief-maker; it jumps from doubt to doubt; it puts obstacles in the way. It weaves a net and gets entangled in it. It is ever discontented; it runs after a hundred things and away from another hundred. It is like a driver who drives the car with the master in it, wherever his fancy takes him. So take up the task of training it into an obedient secant; it is educable, if only you know how to do it. Place before it things more tasty and it will hanker only for those.

Once it realises the value of Naamasmarana, it will adhere to that method of 'getting peace and joy. So start it now. That is My Aajna (command) to you to-day.

Udumalpet, 27-2-1961

A bar of iron sinks in water; but, beat it into a hollow vessel, and it will easily float and even carry some weight of things. So, too man's mind, as it is, sinks easily in the sea of life; but beat it hollow, hammering it with the Name of the Lord, and it floats, unaffected by worry and sorrow; it can even help some others to see Light!

4 The real Panchaangam

KASTHURI has just now read from the Panchaangam (almanac) for the New Year, Plava, the predictions of the astrologers about rainfall, the condition of the crops, the prices of articles in the markets, the rise and fall in the rates of gold and silver, the prospects of internal and external peace, the occurrence of natural calamities like floods, droughts, earthquakes, etc. But reading all this only increases your worries, your restlessness. Take things as and when they come. Do not try to peep too far into the future with the help of astrologers. They are mostly wrong, and the data you supply them are mostly unreliable.

Take care of the Panchaangams (the five-limbed almanacs) within you; that is more vital. The Panchaangams within you are the five senses; educate the mind to hold them in check--then you can have peace of mind, whatever the rise in the market rates or the quantity of rain. Do not get panicky over what the almanac says about the combination of many planets, the Ashtagraha koota. They exaggerate the consequences; nothing much will happen; the pralaya (destruction of the Universe) is more in the frightened mind than in external nature.

If you earn the anugraha

(blessing) of the Lord, no graha (planet) or combination of grahas can harm you. If you learn how to secure that anugraha, you need not worry about the Panchaangam.

Today, you are celebrating the arrival of a New Year with a new name, a name that you will use for the twelve coming months. But remember, it is not the year alone that is new once in 365 days. Every day is new, every hour and minute, every second is new.

Do not celebrate only the New Year Day in joy; celebrate every second in joy.

Every step towards Godhead is to be cherished Start from today, not that today is a New Year---there are so many New Years celebrated as such by one or the other community that every day is a new year to some one set of people---but because it is today and the matter brooks no delay, start from today a new chapter in your life, the chapter of Japam (recitation of holy name) and Dhyaanam (meditation), Japa-sahitha dhyaanam (recitation-oriented meditation) or Dhyaana-sahitha japam (meditation-oriented recitation). In the Thretha Yuga, the Name was Seethaaraama; in the Dwaapara Yuga, it was Raadheshyaama; in this Kali Yuga, it is Sarvanaama, that is to say, all Names of the Lord; you can select any one that appeals to you.

Life is like a flight of steps towards the Godhead. You have your foot on the first step when you are born; each day is a step that must be climbed; so be steady, watchful and earnest. Do not count the steps ahead or exult over the steps behind. One step at a time and that well climbed, that is enough success to be satisfied with and to give you encouragement for the next one. Do not slide from the step you have got up on. Every step is a victory to be cherished; every day wasted is a defeat to be ashamed of.

Slow and steady---let that be your maxim! Adhere to a regular routine, a time-robie. Just as the doctor prescribes a certain fixed measure or weight of the drug and warns you that anything less is ineffective and anything more is harmful, so too, have some limit for your spiritual exercises.

Do not overdo them or do them casually and without care. The doctors tell you also about the hour of the day and the number of times the drug has to be repeated, for, the action of the quantity taken must be reinforced before it becomes weak. So also, you have to repeat the japam and dhyaanam at regular intervals.

Do not move very fast with the world Millionaires who always go about in cars and aeroplanes and people of sedentary habits are advised by doctors to take a long walk every morning. The walk is called a 'constitutional', because it helps to build up the constitution. Similarly, to get over the mental ills consequent on too-long brooding over worldly affairs, the guru will advise you to have a long spell of dhyaanam and japam. Do not move so fast with the world; the cure for moving fast is to sit quiet. Do not get entangled in the vain hubbub of the world; the treatment for those who suffer from the after- effects of that is silence and meditation.

You will have observed that when your train is stationary, another train moving along another line gives you the feeling that it is your train that moves. If you watch your coach, fix your attention on your train, you know the truth. Similarly, as long as your attention is turned on "the other" "the outer" your knowledge is based on illusion. Once you divert the attention to yourself, you can discover the truth, viz., though the world moves, you are still.

In the Panchaangam, as Kasthuri quoted now, it is also predicted that in the year that is born today, the number of people who deride God and who laugh at Him and hate Him will increase.

Let Me ask, how can that happen, for that number has reached the maximum already! The cynical spirit of derision and ridicule is the bane of this Age; but there is no reason for the godly to be down-hearted. At least the coming Ashtagrahakoota (conjunction of eight planets) will put some fear into people's minds and they will call on God to save them and they will do various acts to propitiate the Divine Beneficence in order to overcome the maleficence of the planets.

Therefore, the prediction might prove incorrect, after all. Be assured that the Lord has come to save the world from calamity. Your duty is to keep calm, to pray for the happiness and prosperity of all. Do not pray for your own exclusive happiness and say, "Let the rest of the world go to pieces." You cannot be happy when the rest of mankind is unhappy. You are an organic part of the human community. Share your prosperity with others; strive to alleviate the sufferings of others. That is your duty.

The New Year is called, Plava or Boat. Make it a boat to cross the Sea of Samsaara (worldly life). That is My Blessing to you this day.

The ocean drops rose as vapour, joined the congregation called cloud, fell on the earth, flowed along the ravines, and at last reached the ocean. Reach like-wise the ocean you have lost. Start on that journey and travel quick and light.

5. Experience

IN spiritual matters, it is experience alone that is the deciding factor.

Reason is rendered dumb before the testimony of actual experience. All the arguments of logic, all the tricks of dialectics are powerless to nullify the direct effect of that inner evidence. For example, take the question of image worship. Many people laugh at those who practise it and condemn it as superstition. But, those who do worship idols have the faith that the Omnipresent Almighty is present in the symbol before them. For them, it is not a mere external adjunct or apparatus or object. It is a part of the inner mechanism of devotion and faith. Of course, all the 'Worship' carried out with the idea that the idol is life-less wood or stone or bronze, is so much waste of time. But if it is done in the full confidence that the image or idol is alive, saturated with consciousness and power, then, image worship can bestow the Realisation of God-head itself.

Saadhaka should see the power inherent in the idol

There was once a saadhaka (spiritual seeker) who approached a guru for guidance. The guru gave him an idol of Vishnu and also necessary instructions for daily worship. But the saadhaka found that, even after some months of meticulous puuja, he did not get any spiritual reward or elation. So, he reported his dissatisfaction and the guru gave him another idol, this time of Shiva and asked him to have another try. The disciple came after another six months demanding another idol, because even Shiva had failed him.

This time, he got a Durga idol, which he duly installed in his domestic shrine. The two previous idols were standing, dust-ridden and neglected, on the window sill.

One day, while Durga-puja

(ritual worship of Goddess Durga) was going on, the disciple found that the perfumed smoke from the incense-stick was being wafted by the breeze towards the idol of Shiva on the window sill. He got wild that the ungrateful stone-hearted God who was deaf to his powerful entreaties should get the perfume intended for his latest idol! So, he took a piece of cloth and tied it round the face of Shiva, closing up the nostrils that were inhaling the perfume.

Just at that moment, to his immense surprise Shiva appeared in His splendour and Glory before the saadhaka! The man was dumb-founded. He did not know how the ill-treatment had induced Shiva to give him darshan. But, what had really happened? The saadhaka for the first time believed that the Shiva idol was alive, conscious, chaitanya-full (full of life) and it was that belief which forced him to tie the bandage to the nose. The moment he realised that the idol was full of Chith (consciousness), he got the Realisation he was struggling for.

Therefore, the saadhaka should see, not the stone which is the material stuff of the idol, but the Power that is inherent in it, that is symbolised by it, the same Power that is inherent in his own heart and that pervades and transcends all creation.

Discourse at Thirupathi, 6-4-1961

When Dharmaraaja, the eldest of the Paandavas, had to make the difficult choice of whom to save, when the Yaksha said he could select one among his four brokers, who lay dead on the ground, he struck to the Highest Principle, Dharma. He did not select Bheema or Arjuna, though war was imminent and they were indispensable. He selected Nakul, because he was the son of his stepmother and he did not want her to feel that she had no son left. That is the way in which people in the past upheld Dharma.

Sathya Sai Baaba

6. Steps in Saadhana

THE Governor of Uttar Pradesh said just now that he does not see signs of moral revival, though much is being talked about achievements in the field of economic revival. Let Me assure him that the moral revival is already there and it is gaining volume every moment. Indeed the reconstruction of humanity on moral foundations is today a world problem, not merely an Indian problem. In all countries the emphasis is on the standard of life, not on the way of living. Once you turn towards the path of worldly happiness, you will be led on and on to greater and greater discontent, competition, pride and jealousy. Just stop for a moment and examine your own experience; whether you are happier when you grow richer and whether you get more peace as and when your wants are satisfied. Then you will bear witness to the truth that an improved standard, of living is no guarantee of happiness. Nor is education or the mastery of information and the acquisition of skills any guarantee of mental equanimity. As a matter of fact, you find the educated man everywhere more discontented and more competitive than the uneducated. So the reestablishment of Dharma, which is the task of the Avathaar, is as urgent in other parts of the world as, according to the Governor, it is in this country.

The motive force for that revival has to come from this country itself; for India has been proclaiming the Truth fearlessly and without intermission. It is on account of that breath that this land is still alive, in spite of typhoons and earthquakes in the cultural sphere. Indians have a greater responsibility than people of other countries to live in such a way that others may get inspiration for spiritual saadhana from them.

Duties have to be done as worship

Yours is a splendid chance to become the guides-of mankind. You who belong to the Sathya Sai

Samaajam have this responsibility in an even greater measure, since you must lead model lives of sincere striving. Having taken the Name, you are bound to act according to My Aajna (command) and to shed the light of bhakthi on all who come near you. I am really moved by prema seeing such a vast gathering and hearing the Governor praising your orderliness and discipline.

The root of all trouble is the uncontrolled ill-directed mind. Like the Godaavari in floods, it rolls along, causing slips and slides, and devastating vast areas on both banks. Viveka and Vairaagya (discriminatory wisdom) and non-attachment) are the two bunds which tame the mad energy of the flood and lead the raging waters into the sea, which is, after all, the destination they seek.

"Athaatho Brahma Ijinaasa"---"After this the discussion on the nature of Brahmam"---says the Brahmasuuthra (aphorisms on the Supreme Reality). After what? After the cultivation of Viveka and Vairaagya, naturally. How can they be implanted? By the first three Purusharthas (primary goals of life)---dharma, artha and kaama (righteousness, wealth and desire - fulfillment)---the practice of dharma is the Art of Living. That is why in the Geetha, Krishna taught Arjuna Karmasanyasa (giving up the fruits of action), not Dehasanyasa (giving up the body).

No attempt need be made to run away from the duties of one's station and status. Remember, those duties have to be done as worship, as offerings of one's intelligence and skill, qualities and thoughts and feelings to the Feet of the Lord in a spirit of thankfulness for the chance given, without a trace of egoism or a sense of attachment to the fruits of the actions. The Nithyakrithya (obligatory actions) have to be carried out, wherever you are, with care and sincerity. They award the needed viveka and vairaagya.

Steady effort alone will bring success

Shankaraachaarya got that viveka and vairagya without passing through the experience of the world. Others do not get it even after going through endless travail. That is the difference. You see death snatching away persons from all around you, but you do not train yourself to meet it calmly, bravely and gladly when it comes to you. Shankaraachaarya said that an alligator had grasped his legs, meaning that the world or samsaara had caught him in its coils; he told his mother that the alligator would release its hold only if she agreed to his becoming a monk! Strange alligator, that! It only meant: if he renounced all bonds, he would be free to proceed to the Truth. To take the vow of sanyaasa (asceticism), the consent of the mother has to be got; so by this symbolic incident, Shankara persuaded her to say, "Take, take the vow of sanyaasa, you have my permission, it is enough for me that you live unharmed." Of course, the majority of persons get glimpses of discrimination and detachment off and on; but they soon forget the call and ignore it and cover it up by excess or excuses. One step forward and one step back---the journey does not take them far. Even if some do take up saadhana, steadiness is absent. Like a ball of thread which slips out of the hand on to the floor, it all comes off because the grasp is not firm. Steady effort alone will bring success here, as in every other case. How can you expect quick success in the control of the mind? It is very difficult to overcome its vagaries, for it is many-faced and very adamant. The first step in the spiritual effort You are unable to understand Prakrithi (Nature), which is a reflection, a shadow of God; how then can you understand God himself? No. Steady perseverance alone will tame your mind; and it is only through a tamed mind that you can experience God. In this case, you must become your own tutor; train yourself by using the spark of wisdom that has been implanted in you. Once you try with all your might, the Lord's Grace will be there to help you forward. The first step in the spiritual discipline is the cleansing of the speech. Talk sweet without anger. Do not boast of your scholarship or attainments. Be humble, eager to serve; conserve your speech. Practise silence. That will save you from squabbles, idle thoughts and factions. Again, practise the attitude of joy when others are joyful and of grief when others around you are grieved. Let your heart move in sympathy. But the joy and grief have to be translated into service; they should not be mere emotions. It is not by your wearing the 'bush coat' which all others wear that you should demonstrate the principle of equality; that is very easy. That is external uniformity. How are all equal? Because they have all the same Divine Chaithanya within them. When the sun rises, not all lotuses in the lake bloom; only the grown buds open their petals. The others await their time. It is the same with men. Differences do exist because of unripeness, though all fruits have to ripen and fall some day. Every being has to reach the Goal, however slow they walk or however circuitous their road. Elders are not providing good examples To reach the Goal quickly, without passing through the ordeals of the long journey and stopping at one caravanserai after another, passing from birth to birth, learn saadhana---especially, the easiest and the quickest, Naamasmarana. This mike can work and bring My voice even to those people sitting far in the distance only when the connection is correctly made. So, attach yourself to Me and the current will flow through you and get things done for your good. The light you get from the current that flows always along the copper wire depends on the power of the bulb you fix; increase the candle power and you get stronger light. It rests with you how you make use of Me. The rain falls of its own accord uniformly on the land; the lands bring forth the fruit according to the quality of soil and seed. Why blame the boys and girls that they do not respect the elders or obey their parents or believe in God or adhere to high principles of character? The elders are not providing them examples to show that those traits of character are useful or valuable or essential. They themselves do not know the secret of happiness; they offer to guide the children in the darkness, but their torches have no cells! Teachers, Gurus, leaders of youth---all are in the same predicament. Very few have solid faith in the Scriptures or in God; very few have the steadiness to stick to Dharma and brave the temptation to stray from the straight path. Prema (love) too is a very difficult virtue to cultivate, though it is a very valuable asset. Shaanthi (peace) is the one thing that makes life worth while. Therefore, I bless the Sathya Sai Samaai of Perambur, that it may grow in these virtues more and more with every passing day. You will have your building ready next year. I shall come every year to you and shower on you the Aanandha which is my property, the Prema which is my gift.

Perambur, Madras, 23-4-1961
You need not escape into a forest to gain silence and the chance of uninterrupted spiritual practice.
You can make the place where you are, a citadel of silence; shut off the senses, let them not run after objects.
Your home becomes a hermitage; your saadhana will then move on, without any obstacle.
Sathya Sai Baaba
7. Raamaayana in your heart
THE vehicle of human life is drawn on two wheels by the senses which are driven by buddhi (intellect), with viveka and vairaagya (discrimination and detachment) as the reins, the two wheels being the Kaala Chakra and the Karma Chakra (the wheels of Time and Action). The spokes of the wheel are the rules of dharma, bound by the rim of Prema. The Self is the Rider and he will not come to harm if the axle is Sathya and the goal is Shaanthi.
Raama, whose birthday, Raamanavami, you are celebrating today was the exponent of the means of saving the Self in this perilous journey from birth to birthlessness.
Raama is the embodiment of Dharma; that is why. He was able to re-establish Dharma. Today is a sacred day because you get the chance to recapitulate the Glory of God and His relationship with Man. As a matter of fact, if you go deeper into the Raamaayana, you will find that Raama is the universal Aathma, the Aathma in every being. He did not come down to kill the Raakshasa ruler, Raavana; he is not the son of Dasaratha or of Kausalya; nor is He the husband of Seetha, weeping for her loss and gladdened by re-union.
On the day when Raama was crowned Emperor at Ayodhya, every personage got some present or other before leaving the city. Hanumaan alone refused any material gift. He asked Raama to explain to him the mystery of His Life, which he had failed to understand inspite of the length and loyalty of his service. Raama then asked Seetha to slake the thirst of Hanumaan and reveal to him the secret of their careers. Seetha announced that she was the Muula Prakrithi (the Primal Nature), the Maayaa Shakthi (the Energy which agitates in all Matter), which transforms and transmutes it into all this variety that binds and blinds; the Raamaayana, she said, was nothing but the play she designed.
Sweetness of Raamaayana cannot be described Raama is the eternal, unchanging Purusha (Spirit). The Aathma in every being is Raama; hence the name Aathmaaraama. Raama is eternal and so the Raamamanthram is said to have been taken by Shiva Himself. Raama means that which showers Aanandha (bliss), that is all. Now, what can give greater Aanandha than the Aathma? Raama is Aanandham and He is Aathmaaraama, the Aanandham in your Inner Consciousness. You can understand the Raamaayana only if you keep this aspect in view. Orange has a form and a name; when you squeeze it and take the juice, the form is gone and the name, orange, too is gone. The taste alone remains. The sweetness, the flavour, the essence, these alone are experienced. It cannot be exactly described. It is beyond any vocabulary. Hanumaan understood from Seetha the formless, nameless, sweetness of Raama.

Raama, the Purusha, accepts Prakrithi, Seetha, and enacts the play, Raamaayana. Seetha is Brahma-chaithanya, (Consciousness) for Prakrithi or Maaya activates the Pure Existence of Brahman. Now see what happens! Brahmajnaana (knowledge of Supreme Reality) is lost and Raama wanders about in the jungle, waiting for Her. Of course, Lakshmana or manas (mind) is always with Him, for Manas is the instrument with which Liberation has to be achieved. Vaali is the spirit of despair and he has to be overcome with the help of discriminatory wisdom or viveka, viz., Sugreeva.
Raamaayana is gone through in every one's life. You see, it is viveka that sends emissaries to the various corners to discover where Brahmajnaana is available. Hanumaan is Courage. Courage won through unflinching faith, that alone can penetrate the darkness and bring the good news of the Dawn. Then Raama crosses the sea of illusion; He destroys the Demon of Thamoguna (quality of inertia), namely, Kumbhakarna; the Demon of Rajoguna, (emotional quality) namely Raavana; and He installs on the throne, the Sathwaguna (quality of goodness), Vibheeshana. After this, Raama meets and receives Seetha, who has become now Anubhavajnaana (knowledge derived from experience), not merely Brahmajnaana. That is represented by the Pattabhisheka (Coronation).
The Raamaayana is therefore not a story that had an end. In each one's life there is a Raamaayana being gone through: in the Gunas, the Indhriyaas (the senses), the Search and the Saadhana.

Raama is the son of Dasharatha---he of the ten chariots. What do you think are these ten chariots? They are the senses, the five Karmendhriyaas (sense organs of action) and the five Inaanendhriyaas (organs of perception). Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema are the four sons; of which Raama is Sathya; Bharatha is Dharma; Lakshmana is Prema and Sathrugna is Shaanthi. Take as your ideals these great characters depicted in the Raamaayana. You will see how your life is filled with peace and joy if only you dwell with these ideals. The Raamaayana in the heart is to be experienced; not investigated as a mental phenomenon. As you go on reading and ruminating the inner meaning will flash on you when the mind is cleansed by the elevating ideas therein. Do not exaggerate the importance of things that have but material utility, they fade, even while you grasp them by the hand. Search for the Sath---that which suffers no change.

Search for the Chith---the state of consciousness, which is unaffected by gusts of passion, which is pure, which is free from egoism or the desire to possess. Then alone can you experience the Light, and illumine the Path for others. Search for Aanandha, the Aanandha that emanates from Prema, Love with no blemish of attachment. Be like bees hovering on the flower of the Glory of the Lord, sucking the sweet nectar of Grace, silently and joyfully.

Shaanthi Kuteer, Madras, Raama Navami, 25-4-1961

You do not wait with folded hands for the cup of coffee to cool down to the required warmth; you ask for an extra cup and you start pouring the coffee from one cup to the other, is it not? The same anxiety, the same saadhana has to be shown in spiritual matters also, to take in the beverage of Divine Grace.

8. Start Sathsangha

THIS gathering makes Me very happy, as people from Andhra, Mysore, Tamil Nadu and Kerala have joined together to arrange this meeting. It is rather hard for all of you to join in one place for one function. But-remember that you have in all Panchapraanaas, (five vital breaths, and you here represent only four. The fifth 'vital breath' is Uttar Pradesh and unless the Sangha (Association) representing it also joins you, you are not complete, fully alive! All of you are here to serve this land and its people and so you should not feel separate from them.

What has the Andhra Association, the Thamil Sangham, the Kerala Association and the Mysore Association been doing all these years? Each group has some Festival which it celebrates once a year and probably honours any distinguished person from the region to which it belongs, when he comes to Lucknow. Perhaps, you thought I was an Andhra or a South Indian! The whole world is My Mansion; it has many rooms, each State being just one room in that Mansion of Mine. I came here to tell you this truth about Me.

The language that really matters

And also to tell you that you should not attach so much importance to the language you speak. It is the meaning that is important, the feelings you express, the behaviour you adopt. The language of the heart is expressed through sympathy, kindness, service, love, brotherliness. That is the language that really matters; that language can be understood by every one; the language of anger, hatred, love, trust---it is patent and clear, though the speaker is dumb and the listener deaf!

That Aathmabhaasha (language of the heart) comes from Aathmasambandha (relationship of the hearts) only.

The duty of Associations like yours is not to lay stress on the distinction between one language and another and start quarrelling over or boasting about the superior excellence of your language, but to overcome the handicap of many languages 'by learning and using the common, easily spoken, easily understood language of the heart. Religions are many but the mad is the same; flowers are many but worship is the same; professions are many, but living is the same.

Therefore, you must all live in concord and brotherliness, helping each other and loving each other. The basic needs of man are those mentioned in the prayer of the ancients: Asatho maa sath gamaya, Thamaso maa jyothir gamaya, mrithyor maa amritham gamaya (Lead me from unreal to real, from darkness to light, from death to immortality). Man wants the Truth, he gets disgusted with falsehood; he wants Light, he gets defeated by darkness; he wants no Death, he gets tom by birth and death. This prayer rises from every man, whether he is an Andhra or a Malayaali or a Mysorean. This yearning has no connection with the land of your birth or the language spoken or the form of Divinity revered. It is the cry of humanity everywhere, at all times.

Make the best use of the time you have These three can be got only by spiritual saadhana, by following the path of Love and Truth.

Discovering that path and describing it has been the distinct-contribution of Bhaarithavarsha

(Indian Nation), and it is a disgrace if you, who are all children of Bhaarithavarsha, whatever the name of the state from which you come may be, do not adhere to that path and show by your way of life that the Indian way is the way to real joy.

Hence, I want to ask you this---why can you not meet every day or on some days a week for meditation on the Lord, for listening to the description of His Glory, for studying the techniques of japam and dhyaanam from the Shaasthras (scriptures)? Consider that the allotted span of life is being spent away every moment. In fact, life is an oblation poured in the Fire of Time. The Sun when it rises and sets is stealing fractions of your life day by day, relentlessly, steadily, uninterruptedly:--So make the best use of the time you have. The Lord is Kaalaswaruupa (embodiment of Time), remember. If even the minutest fraction of time is wasted or misused, it is treason to God. Make every moment holy, do pious deeds, think good thoughts, and keep the Lord's Name and Form ever in your mind.

All of you join in a Sathsangha---a sangha of all people who are sincere, simple and pious. Meet every day at about 5 p.m. and carry on shravanam or keerthanam or dhyaanam or japam

(listening to or singing Lord's names or meditation or repetition of Lord's names), until about eight. That will give you so much of shaanthi (peace) and promote mutual love and brotherliness. Let the various streams of Thelugu, Malayaalam, Kannada, Tamil and Hindi merge in the ocean of aanandha (bliss). That is the real aananda. Today, you taste the first glimpse of that joy; make this a frequent feature.

Cultivate the broadest love towards all

Every country is a limb in the Body of God; He is conscious of the slightest pain or sensation in the most distant part of creation, for that too is His Body. He is Lokesha (Lord of the Universe).

He is the secret spring within all activity. Have faith in this and cultivate samarasa (broadest Love), towards all. See that you do not give up Love, or deviate from dharma (virtue). Earn artha (prosperity) adhering to dharma and have always only one wish: to get liberated; that is the way to realise the four Purusharthas (goals of life). Let dharma dominate artha and moksha (liberation) dominate kaama (carnal desire); then, your life will be a success. I have told this so often but just as one has to take food every day, this too has to be spoken again and again. You wash your face again and again, is it not? So too, this advice has to be given again and again.

The Vedhas too repeat the essential teachings often so that they may sink into the minds of men.

By means of bhukthi (eating), the Body is maintained in a good condition; this helps the cultivation of yukthi (skill), for sharpening the buddhi (intellect) into an instrument for viveka and vichakshana (wisdom and discrimination); then bhukthi develops in wholesome things and attitudes; this type of attachment to edifying things and feelings induces gradually the virakthi

(spirit of renunciation). The next step is bhakti (devotion), the overpowering desire to see the Lord and serve Him; Bhakti brings about the Inaana (spiritual wisdom) that there is nothing besides the Lord and that one is oneself, Brahman, and so, one is liberated. i.e., gets Mukthi.

Every step in this chain is important and so I will not ask you to give up even bhukthi. I always speak of Brahmamaargam and Dharmamaargam (path of Divine Reality and path of Righteousness); they are the two wheels of the bicycle that you have to ride. Living was not so hard in the past ages; but now, since it is riding a two-wheeled vehicle, skill and vigilance are needed to keep the balance and avoid falling.

Knowing how to get inner peace is good fortune

The Governor, in his introductory speech, spoke of India's dharidhrya (poverty) and deplored this plight. But why deplore the plight of a land where the Lord Himself is moving as an Avathaar? In what way are you deficient? This land is fully equipped with all the resources needed for a happy life. People can get all the light they want by just switching 'on'! But they do not know how to do it or where the switch is, that is all. Nature is bountiful; the Lord is showing His Grace. What more is necessary? I feel hurt when any one calls this land deficient or poor. It may be that some do not know the methods of getting rich or may not care to adopt them. But they all know the means of getting Inner Peace. This is great good fortune, indeed.

India has the treasure that will make her the Guru of all Humanity. People born here are indeed luckier than the rest but their responsibility is also greater. They should not be downcast and depressed at their poverty or 'low' standard of living. They should demonstrate by their lives that spiritual discipline makes man happier and more courageous to fight the battle of life.

The world is surfing today from too much knowledge; virtue has not increased in proportion to the advance of knowledge. That is the root cause of the misery in human society. Of the two tyres of the vehicle that man is riding, the tyre of the Brahman wheel is flat; it has to be filled by pumping the Lord's Name into it. You cannot go far on a flat tyre.

Therefore, start a sathsangha (holy association), cultivate sathpravarthana (good activities); and derive joy therefrom. That is My suggestion to you today.

Triloknath Hall, Lucknow, 30-4-1961

When you go for a bath in any holy river, the priest asks you to take three dips; do not think that it is simply conventional.

They are for cleansing the Sthuula, Suukhsma and Kaarana

Sariras---goss, subtle and causal body.

They are for cleansing the Baahya the Bhaava and the Chiththa---the outer, the inner and the innermost.

They are for consecrating Karma, Upaasana and Inaana---action, contemplation and sacred knowledge.

9. The Name of Naaraayana

YOU are all lucky indeed to be the residents, at least for some months every year, in this Holy Place, which is known from very ancient times as Badharikaashram. Many great sages have performed thapas here and realised the Goal of Human Life. These snowy peaks teach man to be as pure and unblemished as their whiteness. The silence of these valleys is very inspiring; when the heart is free from agitation, the tongue is dumb and the ear has rest. That is why in olden times, and even today, saadhakas (spiritual' aspirants) came to these solitary places and did thapas (penance). But it is, no use searching for silence with a noisy storm raging inside you.

You are where your mind is, not where your body rests.

This morning, I took out from its resting place the Nethralinga (egg shaped stone, representation of Shiva, with the eye of wisdom in it) which Shankaraacharya had installed as the chief source of spiritual sustenance in this Shrine, and after abhisheka (consecrating by sprinkling holy water and puuja (ritual worship), it was sent back to the original place from where it will continue to scatter even more Grace on the pilgrims who come here.

Shankaraacharya, when he first came here---he must have known this place and journeyed up by means of yogic powers---had with him five Lingas, which he brought from Kailaasa; the other four he installed, in strict conformity with the Shaastras (scriptures), at Sringeri, Dwaaraka, Puri and Chidambaram. Just as the mountains Nara Parvatha and Naaraayana Parvatha which form the back-ground of this temple have the Neelakanteshwara Parvatha shining on the horizon between them both, this Naaraayana Shrine has a Linga from Kailaasa as the core of its spiritual halo. The Ganga is born from the Foot of Vishnu and it is sanctified by contact with the head of Shiva. Such stories are formed to teach that there is no difference between one aspect of God and another.

The four limbs of the Cosmic Purusha

There is no room for higher and lower among the aspects of Godhead; there is no room for inferior or superior in status among the various sections of mankind.

The Purushasuuktha speaks of the Brahmin being the face, the Kshathriya the hands, the Vaishya the thighs, and the Shuudhra, the feet of the Cosmic Purusha. Apart from the figurative meaning that the passage obviously carries, when God is one uniform sweetness and wisdom and grace, any part is as sweet, as effulgent, as graceful as every other. A sugar doll is sweet all through; the limbs are as much sugar as the head. The trouble comes and the quarrel starts only as a result of the want of Prema towards sugar.

Once you are established in Prema, you will not notice these differences any more; they will appear silly, stupid and meaningless. When there is no Prema, egoism has the upper hand; quarrels about your being superior and others being inferior raise up their heads. You are in the holy presence of Premaswaruupa (Divine Love personified) Himself, Badhri Naaraayana; so you too must be full of Prema (love). Do not entertain any hatred or anger in your hearts. Most of you have come here on pilgrimage, fulfilling the dream of a life-time. I know how much sacrifice you have made to put together the money needed for this arduous yaathra (pilgrimage).

I know the long time you spent in planning for this; I know the joy with which you started on this pilgrimage and the courage which has brought you here. You have braved illness, accident, poverty and hunger during the long trek from your villages, wherever they may be, in Assam or Kerala or Rajasthan or Kashmir.

Proceed towards the goal gladly over rock & boulder

Carry back with you the silence of these hills, the cool comfort of the Alakanandha, the warm affection of the hot springs that gurgle from the earth here, the spirit of sacrifice which brought sages and saints to this spot. Become better spiritual aspirants on your return, carry on that other pilgrimage towards the goal more resolutely hereafter. Like the Ganga rushing towards the sea from where its waters are derived, the Jeervi (individual soul) must hurry towards Brahman (Supreme Spirit) from which it has separated. The Ganga does not allow any obstacle to stop its course. You too should proceed, as this Alakanandha proceeds, laughing, roiling, tripping gladly over rock and boulder towards the goal.

I would ask the residents of this place who are mostly merchants, shopkeepers and priests to take from the stream of pilgrims that comes here every day, a pari of their Faith in Badhri Naaraayana. Just try for a moment to understand what it is that brings these people, poor, old, decrepit, from far off places through this tortuous mountain road, to this Temple? There is a faith that heartens them to the last step across the threshold of 'this Temple. Plant that faith in your heart too; you will then find that your whole life changes for the better. Take the Name of Naaraayana on your tongue and become aware of its sweetness; you will find a new meaning in every act of yours. This temple will then become for you the House of God and not a source of livelihood. Livelihood---any one can eke out anywhere, by any one of a thousand means. But to be in this place, a place considered holy by millions, for thousands of years, a place at the very mention of whose name millions stand up and bow their heads in reverence, is indeed a great privilege, a great opportunity. Use that opportunity. Use that opportunity well.

Do not exploit the ignorance of pilgrims

I must tell you one thing more. I would ask you to appreciate the ordeals, trials and tribulations of the pilgrims who come here. Treat them kindly; do not speak harsh words and add to their troubles. When after weeks of blistering walk and hungry vigil they reach this Heaven, treat them gently. Do not exploit their ignorance and try to get maximum advantage out of it for yourself. There is a dharma (Code of morality) for even business; do not overstep that limit.

Then Badhri Naaraayana will bless you; not that He will give you up, if you act otherwise. Only it will take a longer time! For, every living being has some day or other to tread the right path and get merged in the Grace of God.

Badhrinath Temple 17-6-1961

10. The ideal disciple

SWAAMI Vidyaanandha, in the Hindi Address which he read just now, welcomed Me to this Naini Tal, describing its beautiful scenery and praising its climate. Well, that is taking Me to be an outsider, who has to be formally invited and welcomed. I am in your Sathsang, for wherever the Geetha is studied, I am, and will be present. I do not care for the external beauty of nature as much as the beauty of 'character and of conduct' which you are seeking to acquire by the constant study of the Geetha. I came to the Geetha Sathsang to see all of you, because I bless all efforts by man to raise himself by study and saadhana. "Madhbhakthaah yathra gaayanthe, thathra thishtaami Naaradha" is the declaration--- "Wherever My Bhakthas sing of Me, there I install Myself." Why, the Lord is always there and everywhere whether you sing of Him or not. The singing only makes, Him manifest, like the radio receiver which catches the tune from the-ether when it is switched to the correct wavelength. The current is flowing ever; when you fix the bulb, you will get the light.

The Bhagavadgeetha is a text book for all mankind, giving the secrets of spiritual science in clear and simple terms. But it will be useful only when the reader has as much detachment as Arjuna had when Krishna started the discourse. If you have as much vishaadha (despair) as Arjuna had, you have the adhikaara (competence) to get the Teaching which removed the grief.

Only a patient ailing from a disease is entitled to the specific which will cure it. What business have others with it? What profit can they draw from it? The Geetha will act on the mental system only when the symptoms of vishaadha (grief) are strong.

Spiritual surrender will get God's response

Arjuna, the greatest Bowman of those days, anxious. since years to destroy the wicked Kauravas who had angered him by merciless and systematic vendetta, suddenly gets disinterested in everything that he thought precious until that moment! "Of what avail is victory in the field of battle?" asks this hero of a thousand encounters! "Nor do I see any good from killing kinsmen in battle," says the warrior who had vowed to wipe out the Kuru clan! "I do not wish to kill them, though they may wish to kill me; I shall lay down my arms; I shall die unresisting" wails this foremost Kshathriya (warrior); "I would rather beg from door to door and live on alms," says this scion of an imperial line. In short, his mind had become ripe for the illumination. He has the Lord Himself as Guru by his side and he knows it. He asks Him: "I am struggling in ignorance; I am confused; I do not know which is dharma and which is adharmā.' He seeks disciple-hood and lays himself at the Feet of Krishna in self-surrender!

Anyone anywhere who reaches that stage of spiritual surrender will get the response from Krishna and He will teach the Geetha from the chariot which is driven by Him, that is his own heart.

End delusion and gain recognition of the Self

The purpose of the Geetha is to remove the moha (delusion) which overwhelmed Arjuna and made him feel that he was the doer, whereas the truth is, he was but an instrument. So Krishna asks him at the very end of the discourse, "Has the delusion born out of ajnaana (ignorance) been fully destroyed in you?" For, like a good teacher, Krishna is evidently quite willing to resort to some other means or to discourse a little longer, in order to make the pupil understand the teaching. But Arjuna is a good student; he declares, "Destroyed is the delusion (Nashto Mohah).

I have gained recognition." Now what is the recognition he has gained? The recognition of the Self or Aathma. He has seen himself as basically Aathma, and he has seen the world and all objects as superimpositions on the Aathma, due to ignorance or Maaya.

An emperor, while sleeping, dreams that he is a beggar; he wears tattered clothes and cries piteously before other people's doors for a morsel of food; no one listens to his clamour; he can no longer contain his sorrow. He weeps aloud and wakes up his mother. She comes and wakes him up from that dream. Now, the mother need not tell him, "Listen to me, you are the emperor.

You are not a beggar." He knows it as soon as he awakes. The recognition of the Self happens as soon as the delusion goes, the delusion that this dream-world is real!

A prince who falls into the hands of a forest tribe while yet a child, and behaves like one of them, does not thereby lose his prince-hood. Rescue him and he knows he is a prince. So too, Arjuna says, "Smrithir labdhvā"-"I got back my memory, I have gained recognition.' I know Myself; I am Thyself!"

Geetha is the greatest harmoniser of all yogas

The study of the Geetha must end in this result; your Sathsang must have this consummation as your goal. Do not be enamoured of the skill exhibited by some Pandith who can recite the Geetha in record time, or write the whole of it on a post card, or repeat it upside down or reel off commentaries. A man walked on the beach played with the waves, and had a dip in the water; his feet are wet! No, there is no miracle in this. This is what happens to many a scholar who wades in the sea of the Geetha. In the Durbar Hall, when the Mahaarana is arriving to seat himself on the throne, the couriers call out his polysyllabic titles---but in daily conversation his short name is used; his principality is but a tiny state. Similarly, the Pandith may have great pomp before others but to himself, in the secrecy of his own conscience, he is a small man indeed. Greatness depends upon the saadhana (spiritual discipline) and the success achieved in it, in anushtaana (practice of religious austerities) and in nishtha (firm adherence to it).

"Awake, arise and stop not till the goal is reached," it is said---

"Uththishtatha, Jaagratha, Praapyavaraan nibodhatha." But one need not march towards the goal. It is not some place where you have to go. It is jura the opening of the eye, the removal of the veil, the waking from the dream, the lighting of the inaana dheepa (light of spiritual wisdom).

To get this fruit of Geetha-paaraayana (discourse on Geetha), ekaagratha (one pointed concentration) is essential. Krishna asks Arjuna, "Has this been heard by you with an attentive mind? Have you heard it without distraction?" For, the battlefield where they were, had plenty of distractions to disturb the concentration of Arjuna's mind from the invaluable lesson he was receiving from Krishna. It is really admirable that Arjuna seated in the chariot between the two armies manages to master his mind and rid it of all the passions with which it was filled when he rode in for the fray! Truly, he is an ideal disciple. You should thank him for eliciting the Bhagavadgeetha for humanity.

There are people who argue that the Geetha teaches this yoga more than any other; that shows only their partisan nature. Once you begin to practise the Geetha, such ideas as trying to exhibit your superior scholarship, by propounding a new theory or meaning will vanish. The Geetha is the greatest harmoniser of all yogas. As a matter of fact, once the Geetha is made the guiding star of your life, the way you act will be Karma Yoga, the way you feel will be Bhakthi Yoga, the way you reason will be Inaana Yoga. It will become automatically so. What you do must be in line with dharma; what you feel must foster prema; what you think must reveal Sathyam. Then this Sathsang will be blessed with Shaanthi, with even Prashaanthi. Geetha Sathsang: Nainital, 24-6-1961

Success comes when your effort and His Grace both complement each other. How can Grace enter when you do not seek it? Open the door of endeavour; the Merciful Lord will then come in, with the Crown of Success.

11. With prathyaksha to paroksha

YOU are all waiting to hear from Me about the journey to Badhri and what happened there.

These people went to Badhri and returned bhadram (safe)! That is the story in a nutshell.

For danger lurked all the time from fire, water, wind, sky and earth---all the five elements in fact.

Every moment these people felt the Lord's Grace; for about 150 persons, mostly old and in indifferent health, to accomplish this yaathra (pilgrimage) without a single moment of even headache was due to Swaami. Swaami also went to Badhri because the Nethralingam which is the central source of Holiness there had to be revived with spiritual efficacy. Shankaraachaarya brought five lingams from Kailaas and installed one each at Dwaaraka, Sringeri, Badhri and Puri and the fifth he placed at Chidambaram. Of these, the one at Badhri has the Naaraayana amsam (orientation) and that had to be consecrated afresh. That was My task and these people who came with Me saw Me doing it.

Atheism is not rampant in this land

I had to accomplish it this year itself, for this is the 35th year after this Avathaar took birth and this is also the year when the 35th successor to the Shankaraachaarya Peeta is at Sringeri. This year is therefore important for charging the battery of spiritual wealth, known as Badharikaashrama. The Nethra Lingam, laid by Shankaraachaarya underneath the idol there, was "taken" out by Me and abhisheka (consecration by pouring holy water) was done with Gangothri water which I fetched by a wave of the hand. It was worshipped with golden Bilva leaves and Thumme flowers, both created by Me on the spot, and sent back to its original place. The Lingam was placed on a Golden Lotus, with three layers of petals, each having two smaller layers of 16 smaller petals---the entire Kamala (lotus) representing the Hridhaya (heart) where the Lingam has to be installed for worship.

When you see the enthusiasm of the pilgrims who trudged along the Badhri Road in thousands, you will be silenced with wonder; you will no more lament that atheism has become rampant in this land. With faith as their only support, people from all parts of India, men, women and children, old and young, stalwarts and decrepits, rich and poor, move on towards. Badhri. There are many things which you can learn from their steady march towards the goal; that is the advantage in going on pilgrimage. You can develop your bhakthi (devotion), your shraddha (faith) and your saadhana (spiritual discipline) when you are surrounded by kindred aspirants.

That is the greatness of that Naaraayana Muurthi at Badhri.

Yes; the spiritual change must come about. That is the reason for the belief, "a mere sight of the pilgrim who has returned from Badhri gives much merit." Of course, for undergoing that change you need not go so far; you have Badhrinaaraayana here itself!

Badhri is the place where the Nara-Naaraayana bond is established and commemorated. That you can establish here itself. If you get rid of delusion, you become Naaraayana (God); if you are sunk in delusion, you continue to be Nara (human); that is all. There is no place to which I have not gone; there is no place without Me therein. So, the Bhakthas who came with Me were journeying to the Abstract with the Concrete, with the Prathyaksha to the Paroksha! That was their good fortune.

Pilgrims, should maintain silence during yaathra

Those of you who were here and could not join need not feel sorry, for all these days you werethinking of Swaami and Swaami alone and so your saadhana was greater.

After all, pilgrimage is for softening the heart, widening the outlook, expanding the circle of sympathy; not for collecting curios or pictures or prasaadham packets or idols and images. It is more a matter for the nethra (eye) than for the paathra (vessel). Pilgrimages should be as silent as the eye-lids dropping on the eye. Why should people wag their tongues and shout and wrangle when they are God-ward bound? Truly, all Kshethras (places of pilgrimage) and all Yaathras (pilgrimages) are in yourself. You are ever on a pilgrimage, though you might not have taken a step forward towards Badhri or Kaashi. Do not feel sad that you did not get the Abhisheka Theertha (holy water used for consecrating the idol) from Gangothri which was used for the Nethra Lingam. I can see that all of you are desirous of getting it ever since you heard from others about the event at Badri. I shall get you the Gangothri Theertham here itself and give you, do not worry.

People may say that pilgrimages are a waste of time and money; but let Me tell you that it is the best way of spending time and money, provided one has real devotion. Bhakthi is no sign of weakness; it is a sign of courage, of wisdom, of discrimination; it alone can give soukhyam and shaanthi (happiness and peace). Every one has one day or other to fall in line with you, for every one is terribly anxious to get these two. They try, in their ignorance or excitement, various other remedies, but this remedy alone can cure them.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 4-7-1961

Your consciousness is a lamp. Pour into it the oil of Grace; trim the wick of self-control. Keep in position the chimney of Naamasmarana, so that the gusts of Joy and Grief may not put out the flame.

Light the lamp with a Mahaa-vaakya (Vedhic dictum) like "Aham Brahmaasmi" (I am the Absolute Reality). Then you will see Light and you will shed Light.

12. Light the anthahkarana

WHEN I see this gathering. I am reminded of a similar gathering at this place as well as the surrounding villages. twelve years ago when the High School was started. Then too it was in this temple that you all met but, since then, I have been passing through this village or coming to gatherings on the outskirts of the village; that is all. It is only today that I am here again, at the old place. I am happy at this; more so because the reason for this event is one connected with this temple itself. Twelve years ago it was the temple of learning; this temple of Lakshminarasimha.

Please do not be under the delusion that God needs light and that he requires illumination. He is Iyothiswaruupa (Divine Light personified) with the splendour of a thousand suns; He is the Force which makes light shine; and He is above and beyond the thejas (lustre) that Nature can supply. It is not so much this stone structure that needs illumination, when you come to think of it. It is the temple that you are carrying about with you, the body, that must be fitted with lights.

"Deho devaalayah prokthah"---the body is said to be the temple, "jeevo devah sanaathanah"--- and in that temple is installed the jeevi (indweller) who is the "timeless" God. The inner motive Force is God, and when He is dwelling in the heart of man, He is called jeevi. The jeevi is not recognised as God because of the darkness of delusion. You mistake a stump for a man in the darkness; in the same way, the jeevi is mistaken to be a separate, changing individual. The Jeevathathwam (principle of the individual) is given more importance and the Devathathwam (divine principle) or Aathmathathwam (principle of infinite consciousness is ignored on account of the darkness. So, the lights have to be switched on in the anthahkarana (inner consciousness) of man, rather than in the house where the image of the Lord is installed and worshipped.

A temple is the centre of culture for the town

At the present time, there is a great deal of anxiety and agitation due to there being a great advance in material comforts and conveniences, but no corresponding advance in character, virtue and sense of justice. The 'material world' is the stick which helps man to walk; but of what use is it to the person who cannot walk? If the legs do not function properly, the stick is but an extra burden. The stick is like material comfort; the primary need is the strength of limbs, the power to walk, namely, character, virtue.

For the development of that strength of limb, spiritual discipline is essential; any form of discipline suited to the taste and capacity of the individual. Men struggle for the evanescent and the unreal; but they shy away from any effort to attain the eternal and the real; that is the tragedy.

In the report that was read, the Young Men's Association thanked a very large number of persons who had given money for the lights! I feel that instead of making the boys go from door to door for small sums, any one donor could have undertaken the entire work; for the temple is really the centre of culture for the town. In the old days, when a man arrived at a village, the first question he would ask was, "Have you a temple here?" and he would sleep in the village only if there was one. The idea evidently was that the temple would have educated the people into soft-hearted hosts and well-behaved citizens and also that the God installed in the temple would guard over the inhabitants and prevent disease and disaster. (Now, perhaps, the question of the new-comer would be, "Is there a hotel here?" or, "Is there a cinema theatre here?") So remember, any improvement done to the temple is an investment in the progress of the entire town.

Himaalayas are very near to spiritual aspirants Do not give up the treasure that has come down to you from the generations that went before.

Last month, I had been in Uttar Pradesh near the snow-capped Himaalayas and had gone as far as Badharikshethram. Though they are so far, the Himaalayas are very near to spiritual aspirants. If you see only the splendour of the light and if you do not feel the warming effect, it only proves that you are far; this is true of your relation with Me also. All these years, you who are so near have been seeing the light only; you did not benefit by the warmth; that only shows that you are yet far, though so near. Well, we went to the Himaalayan regions and saw thousands of old decripit men and women, besides others who were stronger and more prosperous; men, women and children braving the rigours of the climate, the dangers of the road, the cold and hunger, the cost and the distance, and trudging along to get a glimpse of Naaraayana installed there. I am often asked where dharma can take refuge in this iron age. Well, dharma is still flourishing in the hearts of those thousands, I can say.

When in Ayodhya, I could see and sense the constant recitation of Raamanaam by almost all the people there. In a bag of rice there may be a handful of stones, but do not condemn the entire bag for that defect. The pilgrims were repeating the name of Badhri Naaraayana and that gave them an extra dose of strength and inspiration to trudge forward. Yes, you will find by experience, if you practise it, it gives you joy and peace. The Divine Power is there in you; it need not come from somewhere outside you. Only, you have to prepare the ground, so that it may manifest itself.

You must be sincere in the spiritual field Remove the mots of the weed of egoism from the field of your heart; that is enough. But this is very difficult; the lightest shower will induce the weeds to sprout again. Similarly, when the circumstances turn favourable, egoism throws up its shoots and grows as thick as in the past.

You will have to remove the roots too; this can be done by insisting "Not I, but the Lord."

In the spiritual field, you must be sincere. Do not pretend, and deceive yourself and others. There was once a mendicant who sought a place where he could get a meal as he was very hungry. A pious old lady called him into her house and asked him to take his bath and partake of the noon meal. He said, "Oh, why should I take a bath? Govindethi sadhaa snaanam---I have now repeated the name of Govinda, that is as good as a bath." Hearing this, the lady said, "In that case, Raama naamaamritham, sadhaa bhojanam---Name of Raama is food for ever, I shall also feed you with a quotation. Get out of here pretty quick." Do not use the study of the Shaasthras and scriptures for increasing your egoism; let it make you humble, though at the same time, more resistant to temptation. Your nature is divine; what has happened is that delusion has covered it with dirt. The washerman does not make your clothes white; they are white already; what he does is to manifest the whiteness by removing the dirt that has hidden the genuine native colour, white. The washerman must have two good things to bring out the basic whiteness; soap and water. Both have to be good; you cannot manage with only one of the two. In the case of the mind and removal of the dirt therein, the soap is neethi and the water is nishtha (Ethics and its Practice).

Heritage of the past is lost through neglect
It is the ignorant person who argues loudly and angrily and talks cynically. The wise man will pause before judging; he will see all sides of the problem, relate it to his own experience and hesitate to accept it or condemn it. He will hear less and taste more. The plight of Indians is like a person who with butter in hand is running about for ghee. Here you have the technique of attaining shaanthi developed as nowhere else; yet you are running after all kinds of amateurs! Of course, even the spiritual leaders are taking to competition and conflict, and the acquisition of wealth and fame; so the heritage of the past is lost through neglect. Though the soap is good, the water of Practice is dirty and so the clothes do not get their genuine whiteness. Even for a householder, Lakshya (Objective) and Lakshmi (Goddess of Wealth) are both equally important. He too has a lakshya, which he forgets at his peril. Lakshmi should not hamper that goal or hide it from the eyes. For an ascetic, Lakshmi is taboo; only lakshya is to be pursued.

Well, now that the lights have been switched on, those who come to this temple will see the shrine more clearly; I bless them that they may also see their own selves more clearly. Light is the source of Joy and Knowledge. Do not insult the Light by misusing it, playing cards or talking about or planning actions of hate or greed. Utilise it for increasing your devotion, for developing your knowledge of the Glory of God and for serving others in a spirit of true brotherliness.

Lakshmi-Narasimha Temple Bukkapatnam, 18-7-1961

Do you like to measure the vastness of the Grace of the Lord? Then look at the crops in the fields thirsting for rain. Poor things, they cannot reach up to the clouds bearing the delicious water they can only pine and pray plaintively. But the clouds pour the rain they have brought from the far distant sea and make the crops green and gay.

The Lord answers the prayers and refreshes all drooping lives.

13. The inner temple

TWELVE years ago, I remember, we had a gathering of the people of Bukkapatnam here in this temple, in connection with the starting of a High School for this town. The school was started and, thereafter, I have come often but, every time, since the school is outside the town, I have been coming to the outskirts only! I am glad I have again come into the town today, to this very temple in order to light another lamp, for the benefit of this place. The group of young men who collected the funds needed for the illumination of this ancient Temple of Lakshminaarayan struggled hard indeed, as their Report indicates. After all, a single devoted donor could have finished the job. The temple is the repository of Sanaathana Dharma (eternal universal religion); it is the heart and soul of a village. In former days, a newcomer would ask, "Have you a temple in this village?" and, if the answer is "No," he will move on to some other village which has one. Today, however, the question has become, "Have you a cinema hall in this village?" The conservation and promotion of all the traditional institutions and customs and habits have become imperative and I am glad that in this place, the young men have taken the lead and are proving good examples to the elders. Knowledge is growing, but wisdom lags. I shall switch on the electric lights, in a few moments but, remember, it is not the Lord within Temple that need illumination, it is the worshipper. This material temple of stone and mortar might be lit up by means of a few bulbs, but really speaking, every one is a moving temple with the Lord installed in the shrine of the heart. That shrine has to shine bright and clear; now it is plunged in the darkness of Falsehood, Injustice, Cruelty and Pride; it is infested by poisonous nocturnal birds of prey. The lighting up of this structure is but the symbol of the illumination of the heart, the destruction of the darkness of ahamkaara and ajnaana (egoism and ignorance) so that the Lord might be revealed in all His Glory. Latterly, there has been everywhere progress in the material field, schemes and plans to increase prosperity and comforts. Schools, hospitals and factories are multiplying everywhere. But, there is no peace in the heart of man or of society. This is because, there has been no corresponding increase in the moral conduct of man. ^ stick will help a man to walk up an incline, but of what use is it to a person whose legs have become defunct? Material prosperity is the stick and virtue the strength of the feet. The trouble is that knowledge is growing but wisdom lags. There is an infection of envy, cynicism and conceit everywhere. Man has become the slave of passion and pride. He lets his mind drag him wherever it listeth, though the word Man means "He who has control over manas." The control of the mind can be achieved through spiritual discipline and training. To remove dirt from a white cloth, the dhobi soaks it in water, puts in soap flakes, warms the water and beats it on a stone. He does not make it white; it is white. He only removes the nonwhiteness by a certain process. So too, the jeeva (individual soul) is pure; but, it has got soiled. It has to be soaked in Good Conduct and Pure Character; soaped with the Meditation on Godhead; warmed in discriminatory wisdom helped by reason; and beaten on the slab of renunciation. Use the temple and the worship of the Lord done here as per traditional rites for this end. Light is holy, sacred. Do not misuse it for lower ends, but, give it its proper value and engage yourselves in holy pursuit. Take cheerfully all that comes to you. I was away in Uttar Pradesh from the 5th of last month to the 28th and I found people there, full of devotion and faith. Thousands every day go on pilgrimage to the shrine of Badhri Naaraayana, in spite of the expense and the dangers and difficulties, animated by the bhakthi which gives them strength and courage. When you see them, you feel that the country is still green, that the path of God and Dharma is not given up and 'that India is alive and

Moreover, the people there, though they are far away from Puttaparthi do feel the warmth, showing thereby that they are really near, while you here see only the light and are unaware of the warmth. Devotion and faith are the result of culture and not mere physical contiguity. But, I must tell you one thing. The names Puttaparthi and Bukkapatnam, surrounded by these little hills are resounding even in the Himalayas, and it is up to you to justify that fame and that respect. A life lived in Love and Humility will gain the respect of all and will also be full of Peace. Do not ask of life only joy and happiness, but, take cheerfully all that comes to you. You cannot insist that the doctor gives you only sweet medicines. Have the hardihood to bear sorrow as resignedly as you bear joy. Remember that death is inescapable, that life is but an interlude, that the world is but a caravansarai and, you will get the strength to pass through the pilgrimage of this birth.

Discourse at Bukkapatnam, 18-7-1961

Consider first things first. Then only can the true culture of India be restored to its old vitality.

Bhaarith has known how to exploit the mine of Divine Bliss which lies in the heart of man. The seers had said that if the Bhoomaatha, Gomaatha, Nijamaatha and Vedhamaatha---mother-land sacred cow, real mother and Vedhas---are revered and used as best as one can, then one would have happiness here and liberation from the cycle of birth and death.

It is because the people of the country followed this path that India has remained India.

14. Be grateful to the doctors

THOUGH I have been coming to this City for over twenty years now, this is the first time I am speaking to a gathering of the people living here. The time, the need and the deed have to coincide; and today they have. The Guru Poornima has provided all three and collected together in this sea of humanity the waters of many areas through many channels and tributaries. Mysore

City has earned fame by its devotion to music, sculpture and other fine arts. But there is an all finer than all these: the Art of Living. Many a person skilled in other fields is a failure in so far as this art is concerned. He lives miserably, without a trace of joy or contentment or peace. He knows only pain and he gives others only pain.

Mysore is also famous for the fragrance of its sandalwood. So far so good. But I would like the fragrance to emanate from your feelings and thoughts and deeds, not so much from the trees that grow in the forests. Then only is the fame fully deserved. If the sense of beauty and the sense of harmony are not translated into the daily life of men and women and children, then that life is a waste, a burden, a hoax.

Man has to lift himself from the animal level through his own saadhana. There are three types of men: the Paashavi or the Animal type, the Sahaja or the Human type and the Divya or the Divine type. Man has evolved from the stone through plant and tree, worm and insect, bird and mammal; but some are still grovelling in the early stages though they have achieved the human form.

Everyone has some illness or other

Chief Minister Jatti said that you are all like boulders, rough and hard, and that bhakthi has the power to make you soft and smooth. Now, what does a sculptor do when he sees a good boulder?

He pictures in his mind the lovely idol of God that is sleeping inside it. He becomes possessed with idea of liberating the idol from the hard clasp of the stone. He takes up his chisel and removes the extra stone that lies around the beautiful figure; at last, he liberates the image. The boulder has to suffer all that hard chiselling in order to become the Image of God; so too, you should cast off all the impediments, all the encumbrances that drag you down and make you a boulder instead of a Bhaktha (devotee) and a Paramahansa (ascetic of the highest order), or even Paramaathma (the Supreme Being).

The world is a huge hospital and humanity is bedridden. Some are writhing in the pain of envy, some are bloated with pride, some are losing sleep through hate, some have become blind through miserliness, some are struck down by selfishness; every one has some illness or other.

On this Guru Poornima Day, you have to render gratitude to the doctors who diagnose your diseases and prescribe remedies, and the nurses who tend you back to health. You should also resolve today to follow the treatment recommended and the regimen ordered; it is not enough if you learn the prescription by heart or read the label on the bottle three times a day; or visit the hospital every day. Praising the doctor or worshipping him might induce him to take pity on you, but your illness can be cured only by your taking the drug and obeying the restrictions on food and drink and on your habit.

While talking of doctors, I must also say that doctors who fight for the patient's purse or who try to grab a patient before a rival appropriates him, are a danger to society. The doctor who despises other doctor, or sticks to his own patent cures irrespective of the experience of failure, or who is guided more by his whims, fancies and prejudices, or who considers the patient's caste rather than his disease as more important; such men are also dangerous. Today, we find doctors and gurus who have deteriorated to the level of wrangling for patients and their purses, and for the sale of their own or other people's patent remedies.

Vyaasa is the greatest of spiritual doctors
This day is a day when mankind pays homage to the greatest of spiritual doctors, Sage Vyaasa.
Vyaasa is the greatest of such doctor; for he put together the Vedhas and composed the Puraanas and the Mahaabhaaratha and gave humanity the Bhaagavatha. He is the primal Guru for all who walk in the Path of God. He planted the seed of theism and nurtured it, through Sruthi, Smrithi, Shaasthra and the Mahaabhaaratha. He gave the world the Geetha and the Brahma Suuthras, the idea of the immanent Aathma, the story of the Divine Leela, the secret of this changeful Creation. He belonged to about 3800 B.C.; he was the great-grandson of the sage Vasishta, the son of Paraasara and the father of that celebrated gem among rishis, Suka. His life-story is a series of miracles, a Divine saga. He came from Vaasudeva, announced the Leela of Vaasudeva to all and finally, got merged in Vaasudeva. He established the era of Naamapaaraayana (repeating and discoursing, on Lord's Name) and made all aware of the sweetness of the Name of the Lord, which evokes His Form and His Grace. The prayers to be offered daily Vyaasa first revealed to man the secret of making the mind as clear and as full of cool rays as the moon on a full moon night; that is why this Pournami is associated with him and with all Gurus. Today every Aasthika (who believer in God) must refuse to be content with a feast and a lecture. He should try to plant today the Naamabija (seed of Lord's Name) in his well-prepared heart, devoid of the thorns of egoism; and water it with prema (love), fence the sprout with shraddha (faith), feed it with the fertiliser, smarana (remembering the Name); and from the grown-up tree of the manthra (holy letters), pluck the fruit of aanandha (bliss) and relish the sweetness.

A person may boast of the vast treasures in the vaults of his bank, but he will get credit only for that which he has actually earned and deposited therein. Do not fritter away the time allotted to you; offer it to Keshava, who is Kaalaswaruupa (Time personified). Know that waking from sleep is but birth and going into sleep is death. On waking, pray every morning of your life, "Oh Lord, I am born now from the womb of sleep. I am determined to carry out all tasks this day as offerings to Thee, with Thee ever present before my mind's eye. Make my words, thoughts and deeds sacred and pure; let me not inflict pain on any one; let no one inflict pain on me; direct me, guide me, this day." And when you enter the portals of sleep at night, pray, "Oh Lord! the tasks of this day, whose burden I placed on you this morning, are over. It was You who made me walk and talk and think and act; I therefore place at Thy Feet all my words, thoughts and deeds. My task is done. Receive me, I am coming back to you." Adopt these as your daily prayers. The best thing is to have your own Self as the source of Light, as the Guru. The Inner Intelligence, the Inner Guru will reveal the Truth. This prayerful attitude will so educate your impulses that the Inner intelligence will be fully revealed. Do everything with a spirit of dedication Begin with the cultivation of Prema. I have found that the people of Karnaataka have great faith and devotion; they are simple in their habits and thoughts. Do not allow these to decline; cultivate them with care. The Chief Minister said that all are children of the Lord. It is better to say that all are actors in the drama designed by Him; dolls dancing and acting as He pulls the strings. The role you have might be that of an officer, a soldier, a ryot, a beggar or a clerk. Act well your part so that the drama might be a success. Do everything in a spirit of dedication, as if in each moment you act, speak and even feel in response to a command received. To get that mood of dedication, the Bhakthi Suuthras (aphorisms on devotion) prescribe nine paths but the easiest and the most practicable is Smarana---a life lived in the constant remembrance of the Lord. A bar of iron sinks in water; but beat it into a hollow vessel and it will float merrily and even carry some weight. So too, man's mind sinks easily in the sea of sense; beat it hollow, hammering it with the Name of the Lord. It will float safely, on a sea of troubles. Do not be like gramophone records singing some one else's song, ignorant of the genuine thrill of music. Sing from your own experience of the Glory and Grace of the Lord.

If you win the Grace of the Lord, even the decrees of destiny can be overcome. There are certain drugs which come in bottles on which the manufacturer has given an ultimate date beyond which the ding loses its efficacy. Of coupe, the ding will be in the bottle, but would no longer be effective. Similarly, Lord's Grace can make it inoperative.

The Guru is one who shows you the Path for getting that Grace and to such a one this day is dedicated.

Guru Poornima Mysore; 27-7-1961

Prayer is a very forceful weapon, much more effective than any bomb. The word is an effective instrument: it can move mountains.

In these critical times, every one of you should pray deeply and sincerely, for the peace and prosperity of Bhaaritha Maatha (Mother India).

15. Mithi and Gathi

IONNALAGADDA Sathyanaraayanamurthy thrilled you so much, since he spoke soft and sweet in his charming style. He has returned from Russia where there is too much rush, to this quiet place this Nilayam of Prashanthi. This is a function connected with physical ills and their cure and prevention and so I must also confine My remarks to them.

Man has two varieties of troubles: the physical, due to the imbalance between the three humours Vaatha, Pittha and Sleshma (wind, bile and phlegm), and the spiritual, due to the imbalance of the three gunas, Sathwa, Rajas and Thamas (qualities of purity, passion and inertia).

Sathyanaraayanamurthy gave some pathetic instances of the sufferings caused by resorting to indifferent and ignorant doctor. I also agree that it is wise to adjust one's living so intelligently that there is no need to approach any doctor. Illness is due to the neglect of some simple rules of healthy eating and drinking and due to the damage caused to the system by evil habits and stupid cravings. Man rains himself by greed and lust worry and fear; he falls an easy prey to his insatiable thirst for a happy life. He does not know the source and spring of happiness which lies within himself; he believes he can get it in plenty and in quick time by running after the mirage of fashion or fancy, excitement or entertainment. He thinks that floating on the roaring, raging torrent of the world will help; but that only gives him unbearable tossing and nausea.

Joy is a subjective feeling; it is not inherent in the objective world. You are the witness, separate from the scene; you are the seer not the seen--dhraashta not the dhrik or the dhriashya.

Purified inner vision gives unfailing health

The Screen is the sathya (truth) and the images that flit across it are mithya (false); when you see the film you do not see the screen as screen; you forget its existence and you think that there is just the picture and nothing else as its base. But the screen is there all the time and it is only the screen that makes you experience the picture. Naaraayana is the screen and Prakrithi (objective world) is the film; when the play is on, the screen is the Aadhaara (base) and Prakrithi (objective world) becomes Naaraayanamayam (God all-prevading). The Screen is Sathyam; the story is samsaaram (worldly life), for it has only some saaram (essence).

Suurdas, the blind singer, had as his ardent listener when he sang Krishna Himself sitting in front of him as a cowherd boy humming in appreciation; Suurdas took Him to be a cowherd from the villages around, though he sang that all beings are His Forms. One day, Krishna revealed to him that He was the Hero of his heart. He touched his eyes with His Divine Fingers and He could be seen! From His Lips, he could hear the selfsame strains of the Flute which he was hearing all along, whenever he started meditating on the Lord; as a matter of fact, he was only trying all along to put that music into verse. He then declared that he did not care to see other things with the sight vouchsafed to him; he said the inner eyes were enough. The purified inner vision gives lasting joy and therefore, unfailing health.

To purify the Anthahkarana (inner psychosomatic equipment), Vedhas and Shaasthras prescribe the proper processes; some people dismiss the Vedhas and Shaasthras as so many shackles on thought and action, but they are "bunds" which regulate the flow of feelings, emotions and instincts along safe channels.

Saadhaka should be careful about food

Coming to the more direct topic of physical ills, I must tell you that you must practise moderation in food, drink, sleep and exercise. Good food taken in moderate quantities, at regular intervals; that is the prescription. Saathwik (pure, wholesome) food promotes self-control and intelligence more than Raajasik (passion-producing) and Thaamasik (impure food). So for spiritual aspirants, Saathwik food is very necessary.

In one of the jails of this State, there was once a very pure soul devoted to spiritual ideals, carefully practising saadhana (spiritual discipline); he had advanced very far in dhyaana (meditation) and dharana (holding on to it). One day, however, when he sat for dhyaana, he felt very savage emotions surging up in him and was shocked to find that he could not, in spite of tremendous straggle, suppress the hateful and murderous thoughts that took hold of him. He was rocked in agony and his Guru too was upset at the turn of events. The Guru probed into the history of the disciple rather deeply but could not find any valid reason for the tragedy. At last, he found that a certain fanatic murderer had acted as the cook in the jail kitchen the day previous to the calamity and his hateful homicidal thoughts had pervaded the food cooked by him which the saadhaka had consumed. There are subtle invisible thought-forms that can pass from one person to another by such means. Here, one has to be very careful about food, especially where one is proceeding Godward, through the steep path of Yoga. Sleep too should be regulated and moderate; it is as important as work and food. Remember also that dress is primarily for protection against heat and cold, not for vain display even at the cost of health. Virtuous conduct also ensures mental peace and that in turn saves you from many a physical and mental illness. If you overstep mithi (bounds), you miss your gathi (progress). The habit that rehabilitates the fallen Above all, do every act as an offering to the Lord, without being elated by success or dejected by defeat; this gives the poise and equanimity needed for sailing through the waters of the ocean of life. It is the mind that builds up the body, strong and shiny or wastes it to skin and bone. For manushya (human) to be strong the manas (mind) has to be strong. Live always as the servant of the Lord within you, then you will not be tempted into sin or fall into evil. Get into the habit of living in the light of God. It is the habit that rehabilitates the fallen. Have the attitude of Sharanaagathi (seeking refuge at the feet of the Lord), or else your destiny will be Shara-gathi (movement of an arrow). That is why Krishna said, "Manmanaabhaava."--- "Let your mind be absorbed in Me." You may ride in a smart car of your own; but you are entrusting daily, without a second thought, the car and yourself and your family to the skill and presence of mind' of your chauffeur.

However, when advised to entrust your affairs to the Lord, Maayaashakthi (power of worldillusion) hesitates and declines! It refuses to surrender to Mahaashakthi (Divine Power). What are we to say about such absurd conceit! If you have sharanaagathi, you will be ever content and ever so happy and healthy. Then this hospital can be closed for want of patients; it can well be used for accommodating devotees and giving them lodging! You are all certain to win All that you eat, all that you see, all that you hear, all that you take in through the senses, make a dent on your health. There are three types of reactions you usually have from the outer world and three types of men in whom one or the other predominates: the cotton, which gets soaked in whatever it gets immersed; the stone, which escapes from getting affected; and the butter, which is changed by whatever it comes across, even a little warmth. The "butter" men are moved by instant sympathy, either at another's joy or at his grief. Do not, like some mental patients, be always worrying about some little ailment or another. Have courage, that is the best tonic; do not give up, before you have to. It is not long life that counts; if you live on and on, a time may come when you have to pray to the Lord to take you away, to release you. from travail. You may even start blaming Him for ignoring you and blessing other luckier people with death! By all means, worry about success or failure in achieving the real purpose of life. And then you will get as many years as are needed to fulfill that desire. Yearn, yearn, yearn hard; and success is yours. Remember, you am all certain to win; that is why you have been called and you have responded to the call to come to Me. What other task have I than the showering of Grace? By darshana, sparshana and sambhaashana (seeing, touching and conversing, you share in that Grace. When that melts and this melts, the two can merge. Treat Me not as one afar, but as very close to you. Insist, demand, claim Grace from Me; do not praise, extol and cringe. Bring your hearts to Me and win My Heart. Not one of you is a stranger to Me. Bring your promises to me and I shall give you My Promise. But first see that your promise is genuine, sincere; see that your heart is pure; that is enough.

You say, "I have got fever" But where did you get it from ? Kaali?
Gaya ? It came from within you, not from anywhere outside you.

When you have developed jaundice, everything appears yellow.

Egoism too is a jaundice, which warps your vision and makes you see things wrong .It is due to inner impurity, inner defects. Get rid of that egoism and all will be Love, Peace, Unity, One.

16. Shiva sankalpa

IONNALAGADDA Sathyaanaaraayanamurthy spoke on fine topics in a fine language, but however nicely a person may talk and however great his skill in the use of language, he who can clarify the truth of God has never yet been born; nor will he be ever born. One can only relate what one has felt or experienced through His Grace. He who has touched the very base will not come again to this base world.

Of course, they show the Lord in books, illustrations, films and pictures, as well as on the stage.

But who among the writers or painters or actors has seen Him? The epics and Puraanas relate only an infinitesimal fraction of His Glory; they set limits to the limitless, for words have a limit.

It is only the one endowed with Inaanadhrishti or Yogadhrishti or Bhakthidhrishti (vision of sacred knowledge, of union with God or of selfless devotion for God) that can have a glimpse of that Effulgence. The rest only mislead by their claims of authenticity. Those who know will not speak; those who speak do not know, cannot know.

You all recite the sloka in the Geetha which says that the Lord will create a Form for Himself and come into human affairs whenever Dharma is in grave peril. You have repeated it so often that it has become meaningless jargon; it has been quoted so often and by so many that it has lost all significance. Only those that are proficient in the Shaasthras can recognise an Avathaar and test the credentials; only they can taste the joy showered by the Incarnation. The Puraanas and the Ithihaasas (ancient legends and history) describe the Lord in manifold ways according to the vyakthi (individual) who is devoted and the Shakthi (power) that is described; but the Vedhas and the Shaasthras do not indulge in such changing moods; they deal with fundamentals. Sometimes, in the confusion of interpretation and re-telling, people miss the road. When the blind lead the blind, both are likely to fall into the well. Then the wise intervene and demarcate the Road along safe lines.

God is beyond understanding Sathyaanaaraayanamurthy referred to Dr. Bhagavantham and the soaring claims of science. But religion begins where science ends. In science, when one door is opened, and a passage is revealed, ten doors are discovered in that very passage, and each one of them has to be opened in turn. Science transforms things, re-arranges them, studies their composition, re-groups their parts and releases the energy that lies latent in them. But I create the things themselves! And they are as lasting as any that is found in Nature! That is this, but this is not that. Nature is Brahman, mistaken to be Nature, on account of the delusion of Name and Form. But Brahman is not Nature; it is only the rope which was mistaken to be the snake. When Wisdom dawns, when Light illumines, the snake disappears and the rope alone remains. The Lord is sweetness, you are sugar; He is fire, you are fuel; He has no heart; every heart where He is installed is His.

Naaradha who moves always by and with the Lord feels that God is beyond his understanding;

Balaraama who came as His own brother could not fathom His personality. How then can you grasp My Mystery? How can those who strut about in well-ironed bush coats fathom Truth? Yet,

I know some here who sold away their faith to hollow men and started talking about My dress and My hair! If you dare seek My Truth, come, surrender unto Me. Do not teach treason to your friends and to other seekers. Dress and manners have become polished now but the inner man has deteriorated in virtue and faith!

Yearning of the heart only pleases the Lord Raavana and Hiranyaaksha were experts in japayajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice with pious repetition of sacred manthras) but they never surrendered their ego to God. They did not pluck the weeds .of sensory impulses from the fields of their hearts and so they harvested a crop of thorns. It is not the grandeur of the yaaga (ceremonial sacrifice) or the pomp of puuja (ritual worship) that pleases the Lord; it is the yearning of the heart; not the sum of all the miles covered by you in pilgrimage or the cost of all the articles you have given in charity. You need not even pray aloud, unless of course you picture Him as living far away in Dhwaraka or Kailaasa. If you have installed Him in your heart, He will Himself emerge when you yearn for Him. Prahlaadha felt so and since no fire could burn Him or no fall could break His bones, Prahlaadha too suffered no harm!

Ambareesha performed a yaaga, but at the crucial moment the animal intended for the sacrifice escaped! Now the priests ordained that to make amends for this sinful neglect, a human being had to be offered as substitute to the Gods! The King promised 1000 cows in exchange for a son, but which father will send a son to death, even when 1000 cows are given in exchange? There were also other conditions: the King's messengers should not ask any one for the son; they should not commit the sin of equating 1000 cows as equal to human being; the father too should not break the sad offer to the son; the offer to immolate himself must come unasked from the son, without any prompting or persuasion; it is only such a son that will be accepted by the Gods.

An end which even saints would envy

Now, Sunashepha heard the news by himself and approaching his father, he said he would go, and gladly too. For, what greater good fortune can a mortal expect than ascending to heaven through the sacrificial flame? (I am reminded of a strange answer that a little girl, aged nine, gave Me when I asked her, "Well, what do you want from Me?" She said, "Baaba, let me merge in You" and in a few weeks, she passed away and her wish was fulfilled. The child breathed her last asking that her face be turned to the wall so that she might look on Baaba's picture when she died. She had a wonderful end, an end which could be envied by saints).

God likes such pure souls who come gladly to merge in Him. Some people say, "Oh, it is the Dashara Festival and lakhs and lakhs of people throng there. And they pour lakhs and lakhs of rupees there." Well, what they give is alakshyam (disregard), not Laksham (lakhs)! My hand stretches out for receiving, only when a pure heart full of Prema (Love) is offered; on all other occasions, it gives, never takes. People with poison in their hearts, barren of love and service, let them feel shame and resolve to cleanse themselves from now on.

The Lord will never disown a devotee Sunashepha persuaded his father that his wish to proceed to the yajna and offer himself was legitimate and approvable, and he left for the capital. On the way, he went to his maternal uncle, Vishwaamithra, who tried to keep away the boy from the sacrifice. "This is all just foolish superstition; can anyone substitute a man for a cow?"

Vishwaamithra asked. Sunashepha replied that all men are cattle, for until viveka and vairaagya (discrimination and detachment) dawn, they are but animals. So, in spite of his uncle's arguments, arguments like the ones used by some to dissuade persons from coming to Puttaparthi, Sunashepha managed to reach the Yaagashaala

(the place of sacrifice). In the same way as the lights before us are lit when a switch is moved up at Penukonda, when the Lord decides on something, it has to happen so. Well, the Lord is not a rock or a stone; His Heart melted at the plight of the boy. Indhra appeared in the sacrificial fire and departed showering blessings on his head. It was Indhra who had carried away the original cow and elaborated all this plot, to bring Sunashepha and his greatness to light and to bless him.

The Lord is Premaswarupam (Divine Love personified), believe Me. The earthly father or mother will show love only so long as you obey them; start going against their wishes and they will go to the extent of even disowning you! The Lord will never disown, for He is your very core, your very basic Reality. You derive from Him the fruit of your labour, of your dhyaanam, japam and puuja; faith will grow into thyaga (sacrifice); you will feel that you are instruments with no individuality save as prompted by Him.

The one Namaskaaram (respectful obeisance) you do, do it with devotion. That is enough. You do not do even that; you do it so callously, so indifferently, so automatically. When you fold both your hands and bring them together, feel that you are offering at the Feet all the actions of the five Karmendhriyas (organs of action) and the five Inaanendhriyas (organs of perception) as indicated by the ten fingers. Again, the purpose of Namaskaaram is to touch the Feet (sparsan) of the Lord. The negative pole, Maayaashakthi (power of illusion), and the positive pole Mahaashakthi (Supreme divine power) have to meet in order to produce a spiritual current that will flow through you.

Do not allow your faith to falter

Come, I am the repairer of broken hearts of damaged Anthahkaranas. I am like the smith, who welds, mends and sets right. Ten years ago, a devotee prayed to Me in song, "My heart has gone

'dry, my lamp has gone out, my path is dark, my brain is confused.

Lord, make me fit again for life's arduous journey." The Lord will be waiting outside the door of the puuja room of the bhaktha, anxious to fulfil his wish! Verily, he who has the Lord as His Servant, he is the real Prabhu (Lord)!

Only, do not allow your faith to falter. Do not become a slave to others; no, not even to God.

Test. Test, examine, experience and then, when you find God, demand as of right. But' before you get that right, you should appear for the examination and pass, is it' not? I set tests not as a punishment or because I enjoy putting you into trouble, but just to give you the joy of passing!

Bhadhram here was asked by his gum, Deekshithadaas, to go along the streets for some years and beg for food. He had enough to eat but he had to do it as the customary, and the legitimate, duty of dhaasas; and Bhadhram did it quite gladly. It is a training in the control and conquest of the ego; you have to take it as such and not give up the fruit, afraid of the exertion that the cultivation of the plant requires.

You should not also yield to despair or become dejected. It is My sankalpa (resolve) that you progress in spiritual development. I have collected all of you and I shall lay the concrete foundation and build the walls and erect the roof and complete the mansion. My sankalpa never proves ineffective.

The story of a Divine Plan

I shall tell you the story of Ishwara Sankalpa (Will of the Supreme Lord) and how nothing could stop its realisation. Shiva was every day discoursing on Kailaasa to sages and saints and Dhevas in the evening hours. One day, Paarvathi suggested that a Hall be constructed for accommodating them all, so that they could all listen without being affected by the constant fog and mist and cold winds. Shiva did not have the Sankalpa to put it up; still, Paarvathi insisted that her idea must be implemented. The astrologer who was consulted before the foundations were dug said that "The stars forecast that the Hall will be consumed by fire, since Shani (Saturn) is not propitious from the very beginning." The Hall was completed, nevertheless.

Now, that set a problem for the Couple. Shiva proposed to ask Shani for the favour of saving the Hall from his anger, though He doubted whether the Planet, reputed for his inevitable ire, would ever agree. Paarvathi felt deeply hurt and she resolved not to give the tiny tyrant, Shani, the credit for destroying the Hall that She had got built. She swore that instead of giving him the chance to declare arrogantly that he had set fire to the Hall, she would herself set fire to it. But Shiva asked her to first await the outcome of His appeal to Shani, for He was Himself proceeding to his headquarters! He told Her, "If Shani agrees to exempt the Hall from his anger,

I shall come back and report the good news to you; but if he is adamant, I shall raise My Hand and twirl this Dhakka (double drum). On hearing that signal, you may set fire to the Hall and rob Shani of the credit for doing so."

The role of a tool in the Divine Plan

Paarvathi was ready with a burning torch in anticipation of the signal, so that there may not be a moment's chance for the wicked Planet to execute his nefarious plan of revenge. Shani, however, agreed to the request made by Shiva; he said that he would not bum down the Hall in Kailaasa and Shiva was happy at his reply. So, when Shani prayed that he may be granted one small boon, Shiva agreed and asked him what it was. It seems Shani had never before seen the famous Dance of Shiva which all the stellar divinities were extolling and Shani craved that Shiva may show him a step-or two. Shiva readily assented and started the Thaandava (frantic dance of Shiva), raising

His hand and sounding the Dhakka! Listening to the signal, Paarvathi applied the torch and the Hall was, as per the Sankalpa of Shiva, burnt to ashes! Divine Sankalpa must be fulfilled! Shani was just a tool in the Divine Plan.

About the Ashtagrahakoota (conjunction of eight planets) that is scaring you all now, if you have Anugraha (Divine Blessings), what can the Grahas (planets) do? If you have gold, that is enough; you can get made all varieties of jewels Ask for and secure gold--that is all that you need. The astronomical junction of planets between Feb. 2 and 5 next year is being made much of by the astrologers and calendar minded Brahmins and they are reaping a rich harvest by creating panic and suggesting various counter measures. Of coupe, it is good to give things in charity, to pray to the Gods and to perform yaagas; but do it for its own sake, not with a view to escape the Eight Planets! Do it, as you should, at all times, not because of this temporary fear.

Do not give way to panic. Nothing will happen between Feb. 2 and 5. You will all be coming happily and full of joy for Shivaraathri to Puttaparthi, let Me assure you. All talk of Pralayam (annihilation) is just a scare; do not lose courage.

Dharma (Righteousness) is the root of the world says Shruti (sacred text); so, as Krishna said, when Dharma declines, the Lord incarnates as Man. Well. The Vedha is the root of Dharma, says Shruti. Dharma is the fruit of Vedha which is the Tree. Now, Vedha itself is getting dried up! So, fostering Vedha is one of the tasks of the Avathaar.

17. Experience Ekathwam

YESTERDAY and the day before, I spoke about the disciplinary life. that you should lead. I was a harsh taskmaster then. But, today, I shall be soft and My words will be like the Himaalayan breeze, cool and invigorating. That harshness had a reason, for there can be no effect without a cause. This coolness and that warmth are both parts of the same Person and you cannot accept the one and reject the other. Good and bad, right and wrong, are two sides of the same coin.

As for Me, My nature is distinct; I do not identify with anything. Those who have neither authority nor adeptness have to hear, study, analyse and judge.

Authority is the right of the Aathma alone. It is the Aathma that can command. For Me, the purity of your feeling is important, not the depth of your scholarship. That is why I was harsh yesterday and the day before to compel you to examine your feelings and remove the blemishes. Today, I assure you, I shall not be so harsh. In fact, you may have noticed, I used the word, Premaswaruupulaara

(Embodiments of Divine Love), in the beginning when I began to speak!

Usually, in human calculations, value is attached only to sharpness of intellect; but that is incomplete. Emotional clarity is also important. You purchase an article from a shop, not merely because it serves a useful purpose but also because it is beautiful and attractive; that is to say, it appeals to the intellect and the emotions. Bhaava (innate disposition) gives beauty or as they say in Thelugu, Andham. That is why I often say, Andham is Aanandham (beauty is Bliss); you cannot have one without the other.

Earn the experience of Unity the hard way

Andham and Aanandham, beauty and truth, harmony and ecstasy are found in Ekathwam (Oneness), the discovery and experience of Unity. Unity must be as symbolised by the experience of the unity of mud and gold; the sight, the seen and. the seer, that is, the search and the success. Raamakrishna prompted this yearning, promoted this agony in Vivekaananda and the others who came to him. Try with all your strength; test with all your doubt, earn it the hard way and enjoy the fruit of your exertions: that was the teaching he gave.

The music of all the transmitters of the world is everywhere; if you care to listen, strive to procure a radio receiver, learn the wave-length of the station you need to hear and switch on and tune in. The key to liberation has to be cast and forged and filed and fitted by each aspirant. It cannot be gibed in one moment by one word. Raamakrishna himself sought for it through years of inexplicable anguish; how-then can we short-circuit the process for another? No one can just pass it on, saying, "Take!" The flower has to yield the fruit and the fruit has to grow, ripen and fall.

Jealousy and anger are the twins born of the Mother Ahamkaara (self-conceit). Destroy the twins, and take the kaaram (meaning in Thelugu, "the hot taste") of the Ahamkaaram and keep it simply as Aham (1), so that you can get the thrill of 'Aham Brahmaasmi' (I am Brahman) with that instrument. That is the stage to be reached, the height to be scaled. The kaaram in the Aham is like the single seed which if allowed to sprout, multiplies a ' thousand-fold and produces many bags of seed. It has to be crushed in the very first instance. Then the analysis of the Aham starts and ends in the conclusion: "'Ayam Aathma-Brahma,"---this Aham is the Aathma, which is Brahma. The two: That and This, Thath and Thwam, are identified and This is found to be only

That, when Thath thwam asi (Thou art That) is realised. Well. What is the thing called Thath, the

That? What is Brahmam in other words? The fourth Mahaavaakyas declares: Prajnaanam---the Highest Wisdom---Unity, One.

Truths revealed by the four Mahaavaakyas

All these Mahaavaakyas (Sacred statements of Supreme Truth) relate to the Glory of the One, which is a veritable Ocean of Grace. The vapour rising from It is "Prajnaanam Brahma", the cloud is "'Ayam Aathma Brahma;" the shower of rain, "Thath thwam asi," the river is "Aham Brahmaasmi."

Prajnaanam Brahma is symbolised by Andapinda Lingam---the vision of the one entity in all the manifold entities, the expansion of the individual into the universal, the enlargement of the I into the vastness of the "He and We." "When you knock at another's door and a voice from inside accosts you with the question, "Who is it?" you automatically answer, "It is I." That does not satisfy the questioner. So, another question eliciting further information follows. Then only will the door open. The door of Liberation can also open only to those who can explain who the "I" truly is.

This reveals to the jeevi (individual soul), "I am in the Light." The second Mahaavaakya, Ayam Aathma Brahma, tells him, "The Light is in Me." Slowly the truth dawns on the mind ! The Light which I imagined as enveloping me, the Prajnaanam which I identified as the basis of all this appearance, that illumination is in me, too. My innermost-truth is also that Prajnaanam, that Light. This is represented by Sadhaashiva Lingam (the vision of the Eternal Shiva).

Personal experience is the best teacher

The saadhaka sees in his saadhana that Light which dispels the darkness of ages. He is told that He is that Light and nothing else, "Thath thwam asi", "Thou art that." He then becomes immune to spasms of ignorance which make him forget his nature. Just as a beginner learning the violin lapses easily into grinding out distressing sounds from the strings, the saadhaka also grinds out discordant notes, of discontent and grief. When pain becomes unbearable, a person faints and loses consciousness; that is a consolation. Beyond a certain limit, you are not to suffer pain.

Similarly, when this identity feeling is established, no more activity is possible. One becomes "unconscious" of the world, or rather, one passes beyond the realms of consciousness--un-, suband even super-; the river has reached the sea. Thath-thwam-asi is symbolised by the Inaana

Lingam (the vision of enlightenment).

Aham Brahmaasmi, the last of the Mahaavaakyas, is associated with the Aathma-Lingam. The fourteen higher worlds and the fourteen lower worlds cannot be shown and demonstrated in models; they are symbolic of the levels of consciousness in the geography of the spirit and in the journey of the mind towards the Goal. There are no books that can teach you the topography; the journey is the best teacher, each step making the next one easier.

Raadha, Meera, Sakku,

Suurdas, Raamakrishna---all followed the guidance of their own inner call.

The angam (body) is the Sangam (meeting point) where spirit and matter meet; the jangam, the moving phantasmagoria where spirit and matter meet, is in Sangam.

From this Sangam, one has to evoke the Lingam (Divinity in its aforesaid four forms, one after the other. The Lingam is just a sign: a sign of endeavour, a sign of success. For example, the Andapinda Lingam signifies the egg-shaped universe, which is how it is, even according to experts in science. The outer cover is the anda and the inner rasa or matter is the pinda. They are both dependent, one on the other.

You are all basically the Andapinda, with the outer shell of materialism and the inner core of Divinity. The body is a vessel to contain the Chaithanya or effulgence of Divinity.

Aathmalingam is the ultimate phase

The sentiment, "Aham Brahmaasmi" explicit in the Mahaavaakya, gives a sense of kinship; as when this Linga, confronted by that Linga proceeds to aalingana (embracing). That sense of belonging has great psychological value: when you hear a child cry and find on enquiry that it is your child, you get far more anxious than when you are told it is another's child. The attachment will lead to merging (for the Andapinda Lingam is this body, this nature which we see) and imbibing and building into our consciousness. Even God, when He comes with human body or as materialised from, is Andapindam, whether it is Mahaa Vishnu, Shiva, Raama, Krishna or

Sathya Sai Baba.

Inaanaalingam symbolises the inaana that you are Sarvabhuutha (the totality of all beings) and the Sarvabhuutha is in you. The inaanam (divine wisdom) itself is Brahmam; Inaana, is not a quality of Brahmam---it is Brahmam itself, for Brahmam has no quality. The Inaani (the liberated person), though in the world, has the Inner Vision which makes him fall away from the twig as the dried leaf which has no more need of attachment.

Aathmalingam (the vision of form of the Self), the ultimate phase, is the stage of gold, when the names and forms of gold jewels have been subsumed. Water freezes into ice; Aathma freezes into the individual. The Aathmalingam is just the pot that contains sea-water, immersed in the self-same sea.

"I shall cure you slowly and patiently"

Both are identical, only the name and the form are different. You can realise your truth by following the path which will lead to that knowledge. Only, you must be prepared for the discipline and the travail. When I give you a drug, you must take it in the prescribed dosage and adhere strictly to the regimen of food, sleep and exercise I recommend. Of course, the anxiety to get cured quickly is commendable; but there is a time-table for all this. Moderation is productive of better results than excess.

Women know that when they add water in order to reduce the taste of excess salt, they have to add to the cooked dish necessary quantities of other ingredients too in order to make it tasty. In the same way, I have to reduce the excessive attachment you have for the things of the world and when I do that, I have to correct by various other methods also. I shall cure you, slowly and patiently; the more slowly I do it, the more lasting it will be. I shall reveal to you the Aathmalingam without fail. Yes, great days are coming; let not your sloth stand across and deprive you of the chance. When you listen to My story, you forget the story of the world and live only in My story, until there is no separate story for you to relate or live. Well, to make you story-less is the scheme of My story.

Sadhaashivalingam indicates the person who is ever of the Swaruupa (form) of Shiva. Here and everywhere, night and day, in joy and grief, he is Shivam: happy, auspicious, graceful;

Aanandham is his breath, his motive force, his demeanour, his inner and outer expression;

Sadhaa always and for ever, Shivam---auspicious. There is no room here for controversy or intellectual rivalry and competition, like the ones indulged in by Pandiths, and scholars, misusing the valuable paper manufactured by the mills of this country. Instal Sadhaashivalingam in the consciousness and all things will be revealed to you, step by step, by the Grace of the Divine Indweller.

Do you know the real significance of the story of Anasuya, the story of how she humbled the Gods, Brahma, Shiva and Vishnu? (An-asuya means, "Envy-less". It is that if you have no end, you get such unshakable peace, that no Power can overwhelm you.

18. Sarvathah paani paadhah

BHADHRAM has by his kathaakaalakshepam (musical discourse on mythological stories) pleased you all; he was worried that he was in indifferent health but enthusiasm overcame physical weakness; devotion gave the required energy. His emotions were riding the clouds of exultation; his voice, however, was creeping along the marshland of convalescence. You also went through the ordeal of squatting on the floor for over two hours. That is the true spirit, not to attach undue importance to the temporary complaints of the body.

The long and short of the katha (story) which Bhadhram recited and commented upon is this: the Lord is Natanasuuthradhaari---He who pulls the strings in the play of puppetry. It looks as if the dolls dance of their own accord and play out a plot of their own, that there is no one behind the drama to direct it, that the dolls are alive and full of activity. The strings are invisible to you. It is the mind that deceives you thus.

(Baaba here sang a song: "One man's mind prefers Krishna, another's likes Shiva, another prefers the Formless Allah." He said, "My Voice, you have noted, gets lost exactly here because in the song the next line is about some preferring the name of Sai; I never call upon people to worship Me, giving up the Forms they already revere. I have come to establish Dharma and so I do not and will not demand or require your homage. Give it to your Lord or Guru, whoever He is; I am the Witness, come to set right the vision.")

Cleanse your mind by moral conduct

In the katha, Bhadhram referred to Krishna and His deeds; how He killed His maternal uncle, etc.

But all that was in His Plan, part of the Divine task. When the truth demands fulfilment no flimsy physical bond can stand in the way. The Lord cares only for those whose heart is mortgaged to Him. He cares for Bhakthi, not Bhakthas. He will not be partial to His kinsmen or swayed by such cheap affiliations. These reciters and exponents have lowered the Leelas (divine plays) of the Lord, trying to please the common folk. They make Naaradha a crook of low intrigue, Vishwaamithra a fool, Hanumaan a monkey, and Raama a mere man. They create the impression that God is jealous, greedy, vengeful, and subject to gusts of passion. They seldom unravel the meanings and symbolisms of the stories and incidents and names and forms of the Puraanic personalities. They should interpret the incidents with reference to the contexts of spiritual progress; they should judge actions with reference to the standards of the age in which they happened; not by placing them against the background of modern times. People should be transformed by the recitals and the effect should be like the thrill of a bath in holy Ganga. The reciter himself must strive for that spiritual experience, by sincere saadhana. That alone can give genuine satisfaction to the listeners and joy to the reciter.

Of course, until the mind is cleared of doubt, you have to cleanse it by moral conduct and spiritual discipline. Then the Truth will be reflected in it, clearer and clearer as the process is continued. The appetite for worldly goods must be blunted; it must fade and fall, as the petals of a flower grown old. They should not be plucked and cast aside. The noise of the market place should give place to the silence of the altar; then only can the secret whisper of the conscience be heard, the warning signal of the Shaasthras be recognised. Nothing can happen without the Lord's Will Aathmashakthi (power of the Soul) can function only when prompted by Maayashakthi (power of Illusion). That is why Maaya was born just previous to Krishna. If Maaya is absent, how can the drama be put on? As a matter of fact, Maaya has to announce the arrival and the identity. Ashaanthi (lack of peace) of some kind or the other brings you to this place, naturally; but having come, do not concentrate on objective gifts only; gather also the valuable advice given for inner development. You should pray: Asatho maa sath gamaya---From the unreal lead me to the Real.
Is there any end to the list of worldly goods' that you crave for? When you secure one, another starts tantalising you. If you do not get that, very often, your hold on the Lord too loosens. If something is lost or stolen from you, you lose faith in Me. I have not come to guard your jewels and your 'valuables.' I have come to guard your virtue and holiness and guide you to the Goal.
If your goodness is in danger, come to Me. I shall tell you how to cultivate it and reap the fruit. If some one is snatched away by death while on pilgrimage to Khaasi or Badhrinath, you console yourself that it was an enviable way of quitting. But if you get even a mild attack of headache at Puttaparthi, you start blaming Me. According to you, those who have entered this compound once should not die. If they do, your faith wavers and dwindles. Well, not even an eyelid can open without the Lord's Will. So try to get the Lord's Grace and leave all questions to be answered by Him according to His Fancy.
"My feet are within your reach at all times" When the sun rises, all the buds of lotus in the lake will not open out in full bloom. Only those which are full grown can blossom so; the rest have to bide their time and grow. His Grace is the right of all, but it can be won by saadhana only. I have no hate or anger in My composition; My Life blood is prema, I am the repository of dhaya (compassion). Understand Me and My Nature right. The shadow of the Moon in the depth of the lake seems to quiver and shake because of the waves; but look up and you see the Moon, steady as ever. I am always steady, My Grace is ever there. To the outward eye, My action is magic, miracle; to the inner eye, it is all Leela. Well, the Hand that creates is the Hand that gives--there is no keeping back. It is always for you and you alone. That is My Truth; know it and be happy.

I have started the work for which I have come down. I have collected the metal, the steel, the stones, the bricks. I have dug the foundation trenches---and the superstructure will rise soon.
There can be no interruption. You will see thousands pressing along this road, hundreds on every rock on these hills. The Bhakthas who are at the Nilayam are sad that they have had no chance of even a Namaskaaram (respectful obeisance) for three months. They feel that those who come from afar and leave in a few days are luckier.
To them I say this: You are deluded by a false sense of values. Why worry so much at not being able to touch these Feet? My Feet are within your reach, at all times, wherever you are.
"Sarvathah Paani Paadhah"---"Hands and feet everywhere." If you wail in agony, "Don't you hear me?" My Ears are there to listen; if you pray from the depths of your heart, "Don't you see my plight?" My Eyes are there shedding Grace on you. Get out of Maaya and become Prema; then you get prema only from Me.
Puttaparthi will become Madhura Nagara Raama and Krishna and Sai Baaba appear different because of the dress each has donned, but it is the Self-same Entity, believe Me. Do not be misled into error and loss. The time will soon come when this huge building or even vaster ones will be too small for the gatherings of those who are called to this place. The sky itself will have to be the roof of the Auditorium of the future; I will have to forego the car and even the aeroplane when I move from place to place, for the crowds pressing around them will be too huge; I will have to move across the sky; yes, that too will happen, believe Me.
You will witness that Puttaparthi becoming Madhura Nagara (birth place of Krishna). No one can stop this development or delay it. I will not give you up, nor can any one of you give Me up.

Even if you lose faith, you will repent and come to this refuge very soon, clamouring for admission. I shall be in this body for 58 years more; I have assured you of this already. Your lives are intertwined with My earthly career. Act always in accordance with that great privilege.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 21-10-1961

19. Vision of the Purusha

You are, I know, rather bored by these evening gatherings taking place every day, without break, for it is hard listening, this, the discussion of spiritual subjects and the detailing of disciplinary rules. Some of you are saying that you came to Prashanthi Nilayam for peace and quiet; but you are being subjected to the ordeal of speeches and long sittings. Let me tell you that discourses by these great scholars are very valuable. The speakers here are blessed; the listeners too are blessed. Why, the listeners are even more blessed; for they can very often follow the lessons which these speakers teach, while the teachers themselves might not be able to carry them out.

There was a Pandith who led a disciplined life, sticking to a pre-arranged time-table; he woke up from sleep in the early hours of the morning, recited the Pranava (OM) and later, after ablutions, drank his cup of milk at 7 a.m. exactly. Some days the milkmaid arrived late, for she lived on the other bank of the river and had to catch a ferry to cross over with the milk. The ferry boat either started a little too soon or at times reached her bank too late, when she brought the milk late, greatly to the annoyance of the Pandith. One day, he lost patience and chided her for upsetting his time-table. "Why do you depend on that horrid boat to take you across? Do you not know that if you only repeat the name of Raama that you can walk across without coming to harm? Raama will see that you do not get drowned." Next day, the maid repeated Raama-naama and just walked across. Yes, her faith gave her the strength. She did not tarry for the ferry. The Pandith was flabbergasted, for he did not believe that it could ever be possible for Raama-naama to work this miracle. The Bhaktha must ignore his identity and separateness and merge with the ideal; what individually has the servant got? He has nothing; no, not even a trace. The Master is All.

Dealing with both Sath and Chith Divine Bliss

If you stare at the sun for a second and then turn your eye to other things around, you will find that there is a dark patch over them and you cannot recognise them. Similarly, once you get a vision of the Purusha (God), who is more effulgent than a thousand suns, you can no longer recognise the multiplicity called Prakrithi (Nature). The world is black, it is blocked; indeed, you can no longer recognise or deal with variety once you have had a vision of the basic Unity.

Take the screen in the cinema theatre. When the film is on, you do not see the screen, you see only the play; when the show is over, you see just a screen, a screen that has no message--- neither voice nor name nor form nor colour nor creed. That is Brahman. The entire rope gives the appearance of a snake in the dark; here, the entire screen was lost in this picture. Brahman is Sathyam, Jagath (Universe) is Brahman. That is Sath (Being), this is Chith (awareness).

Knowing this and dealing with both is Aanandham. I was asked once how any one can accept the two seemingly opposite statements: "Brahma Sathyam Jaganmithya" and "Sarvam Vishnumayam Jagath"---Brahman is Truth, World is false" and "World is full of Vishnu."

This was My reply: The powers of man are limited by his experience and his knowledge. He is just a Pinda (part), while the Lord is Anda (whole), the Force pervading the entire Universe. The Anda-Pinda Lingam symbolises this Body-Limb relationship, the Part-Whole aspect of Maadhava and Man.

The Sadhaa-Shivalingam represents the ever-auspicious Aathma, which is beyond all dual aspects and concepts, immanent in all beings and everywhere. It is not negated by time; it is Sadhaa (always) Shivam (beneficial and auspicious).

A real Guru must be full of Bliss

The Jnaanalingam is the sign of the attainment of Jnaana (spiritual wisdom), when the last vestige of the delusion of "I" is wiped off; even the feeling 'I know' is gone; then you are the Aathma, pure and whole, entire and enduring---then your condition is best represented by the symbol of the Aathmalinga.

You have, each one, the tremendous Shakthi (Power) of the Aathma (Infinite consciousness) in you. Some are able to draw upon it; others just know it is there; others are unaware of the methods of tapping it or even of its existence. It all comes in time, through steady saadhana. The child, in time, grows into the father; the father becomes the grand-father and he in turn ages into a great grand-father. The saadhaka rises step by step towards the highest Bliss by adhering to the instructions of the Guru.

You should tell the Guru, "If you can help me, do so. If you cannot, do not give false hopes and mislead me. Confess your immaturity. I can then seek some other guide. Do not pretend to be a teacher when you are not even a good student." Ply him with questions, examine his daily conduct, clear your doubts; then cultivate Faith in the Guru you have won. There are many Gurus who are guided by their students and followers and warned by their disciples not to state certain views in public. These Gurus act according to the dictates of men in power or men with money. A real Guru must be like Sadhaa-Shivalingam, full of Aanandha welling up from the consciousness of the Divinity. Do not harm your inner nature. So long as you are in Avidhya (ignorance), so long as you are untrained and lacking in knowledge, you cannot taste the Bliss; you cannot attain it. You are still bound by the threecorded rope---the black cord of Thamas (inertia), the red cord of Rajas (passion) and the white cord of Sathwa (equanimity). Deny that you are bound; the rope falls away. Hence, regulate your life in such a way that you do not harm your inner nature. That is to say, live in the constant contemplation of your kinship with others and with the Universe. Do good to others, treat all nature kindly, speak soft and sweet, become a child devoid of envy, hate and greed; when your ego crosses the threshold of your family or group and takes kindly to those beyond, you have taken the first step to cross the threshold of Maaya.

Whoever has tasted that Joy will thenceforward crave for that only. How can the leevi (individual being) stoop to something less? How can the Truth be grasped when you are steeped in, Falsehood? How can a fish experience the sky? How can Nectar and Poison, Day and Night, God and the Devil, be together?

Uddhava, when he came among the gopees, discovered that Krishna was roaming in "their hearts without a moment's respite. They were seen-scanning the dust' on the roads to discover a footprint of Krishna, so that they could fall down and worship it! Raadha was the greatest devotee of all; she saw all foot-prints as Krishna's own, including even hers! Really, is there any one who is not He? Any Form that is not His? Any Name that does not connote

Him? Uddhava exclaimed,

"I have no need of Naaraayana; I am content with this Vision of the Glory of the Bhaktha." For the sorrow and fear of today, the same prescription also holds: See Him of the Shiva-swaruupa

(Form of Shiva) in all; then all will yield joy and peace. That is the truth. The rest is false. Yama comes with delusion; Shiva is seen; then Light dawns.

Prema will destroy the roots of ego Ahamkaara or egotism is the Maaya. 'How can you get rid of it?' The field looks a dry waste, with no sign of green; and you feel proud that you have pulled up all the grass by the roots.

When the showers come down, they sprout again. Prema will destroy the roots of the ego. Plant it, protect it, foster it and enjoy its fruits. Remove envy, hate and greed from your heart; they will smother the seedlings of Prema.

Have faith; faith will grant you all that you need. How can you build your faith on a mound of sand? The deeper you dig the sandy soil, the greater the risk of the sides slipping down and burying your faith in doubt and denial. Listen to the call from within; believe that it is the call' from Mathura.

The Lord too condescends to grant you the chance to develop faith. Why did Krishna raise the Govardhana Hill and keep it aloft? It was to announce His Truth and His Nature, to instil Faith and to implant courage. It is just a sign, as is each one of My Acts. There is no task which I cannot accomplish, remember; no weight I cannot lift. You have faith in Raama and Krishna because of the books which describe a part of their achievements and the experience of the saadhakas who attempted to delve into their Mystery. You have not demanded direct proofs of Divinity from either Raama or Krishna, have you? Have faith first and then you will get proof enough. Take up the discipline of the recital of the Name.

Why drag out your existence as a mere consumer of food, as a .moving burden encumbering the earth? Eat, but transform food into good deeds, good thoughts and sweet speech; move, but do not cause pain to others' or add to their misery. Do not condemn yourselves as weak, sinful, conceited, wicked, outlawed, mean, etc. When you so condemn yourself, remember you are actually condemning Me, who is your Inner Self. Live, so that with every breath and step, you come nearer and nearer to Me.

Upavaasa means that all your thoughts and deeds and words on those holy days must be about God, that you should spend the day 'near' Him, 'in' Him, for Him. It means that eating, sleeping and other bodily avocations have to take to secondary role, and the meditation and japam have to take the main role.

Sathya Sai Baba

20. Aathma calling Paramaathma

THERE is no paucity of books promising to help man to discover himself; there is no dearth of discourses to guide his steps to the goal. Bhadhram is only one among a thousand whom you will have heard already. You have read much and listened to many more discourses. The body grows and even starts declining but the mind gets more complex and difficult to control; it waxes in restlessness; in spite of this, saadhana is either not taken up or even when started, remains stationary and fitful. Vedhana (suffering) can be overcome only by the Aa-vedhana (Yearning for the Lord). You must yearn to be free, to be rid of the chains that are binding you now; the iron chain of poverty or the golden chain of riches. Yearn as helplessly as a baby which cries for its mother, as desperately as a calf mooing for the cow, as pitifully as a starving beggar prays for a morsel of food. Let the cry come from the depth of the heart, a heart that cannot bear the chain of attachments any longer. The Lord will not be drawn by noisy pomp or empty show. He will yield only to the claim of kinship, the call of Aathma to Paramaathma (the individual soul to the Supreme Soul).

In South India, in the Thamil country, there was a certain Adigal or Dhaasa (servant of God), in a village, Thangalur by name. He had heard of the spiritual grandeur of Saint Appar and developed great admiration for him. So he built rest-houses in his name; named his children after him so that they might grow up in the halo of his glory; he donated lands and houses all in the name of the Saint he had not seen. See how faith preceded experience here. There are others who require experience before they fix their faith. The first path is more thrilling and lasting.

Seek a Guru who will see that you do not sink

Have faith in the doctor and the drug, then the medicine will cure; do not wait till the medicine cures the illness to develop faith in the drug and the doctor. If you Wait until you learn swimming to get into water, how can you get the thrill of a hearty swim? Plunge boldly and start beating around with the arms and legs---or have a dry gourd or inflated tyre to buoy you up. That is to say, seek a Guru who will see that you do not sink.

Well, one day by chance Appar himself walked into Thangalur, for he had missed his way and had to deviate. He noticed everywhere in the town Appar Rest-houses and Appar Charities and wondered how his name had preceded him. Then Adigal ran forward to his Guru and took him home and prepared a grand feast for him. When his eldest son went to his garden to cut a few plantain leaves for the dinner, a snake bit him and he died on the spot. Adigal, however, was not affected in the least; he covered up the corpse, heaping dry leaves upon it, and proceeded with the formalities of hospitality for the long-sought Guru. The Guru, however insisted on all the children of Adigal sitting around him during the meal, and he ordered the father, "Go call every one here." Adigal did as he was commanded. He called and the dead son rose. He too came and sat for dinner with the rest. When he knew what had happened, Appar said, "Your faith is greater than my Shakthi."

When a house is to be certified as habitable, the engineer tests the foundations. The Lord too tests the foundations whether Faith is true and deep. Shiruthondar, a devotee of Shiva was also similarly tested by Shiva who came as a jangama (ascetic). When Shiruthondar showed that he had no attachment to the world, Shiva revealed Himself and said, "Worship Me as your own Self." Then Shiruthondar demands, "Reveal to me your Immanence in all Creation and then I shall worship Me, for then I can know that I am really You." Shiva blessed him and he saw all as Light. The vision was the finale of his career in maaya. He merged as light merges in Light, without noise and without announcement. Even his body became a streak of light which rose up into the depths of space.

The limited cannot know the depth of the Unlimited

You clamour for further experience of My Divine Nature and ask that your faith might be strengthened thereby. To know the taste of sea-water, putting a drop on the tongue should be enough; there is no need to drink the whole lot. It is your waywardness, your egoism, your pride that make you doubt and deny what you have once tasted, Is not one experience enough? Well, let Me ask: how can the limited know the depth of the Unlimited? How can the ant delve into the mountain? It is beyond you to know how or why I create things in My Hand. Or consider this:

you have no patience even to put up with the problems of a single family, though the responsibility is obviously yours. Imagine then what My patience must be, to listen to, tackle and solve the problems of tens of thousands of families, with a prema (love) that is rare even among parents. No. You are incapable of gauging Me. You can never grasp the strength of this superworldly bond that ties you to Me.

The experience of that bond will come to you unawares. Your duty is to await the moment.

Believe and be Blessed. You are now worshipping Shiva or Naaraayana or Raama or Krishna, is it not? Tell Me how you got started. What experience did you have, before you began, of Raama's dhaya or shaantham or prema? Or of Krishna's karuna or prema?

"Your faith is not steady yet"

When this Mahaashakthi decided to leave the previous body in 1918, Kaaka Saheb Dikshit was told that in 8 years time this will take birth again. Abdul Baaba was also informed that in 7 years this will appear in Madras State. Three months after the samaadhi, (burial) appearing before a house at Kirkee, the declaration was made in answer to a query that the body had passed away, "The body has gone, but will appear again. It was said 6 months after the samaadhi, when there was an appearance at Dwaarakaamaayi with familiar tin can. Word was sent to Das Ganu and Mahlaspathi. The statement made to Kaaka Saheb was that the Manifestation will take place after 8 years, not "as an eight-year-old-body." It was recorded so, because Kaaka Saheb relied on his memory and wrote it down only much later. The figure 7 came true; for this body incarnated in 1926 after spending ten months' in the womb. So even the statement of 8 years made to Kaaka Saheb is true.

Your faith in what you have seen and are seeing is not steady yet; you allow your ears to listen to all and sundry and they tempt you to deny the evidence of your eyes.- What a pitiable state this is! While painting a picture of a thing you have not seen, you have every freedom to draw it as the whim directs you; but try to draw a picture of a peacock, a bird you have seen; then you will realise that it is a very hard job; so too, it is difficult to get a true idea of Me, whom you see, although you are adepts at imagining Raama and Krishna to be of this form or that.

There are hundreds of images and idols and pictures of the precious shareeram (body) that are abhorrent caricatures, for you have no correct picture in your minds. Even while faith has sprouted as a tender sapling, some one whispers a story and doubt attacks the plant like a deadly pest; for the mean and the small see everything as mean and small. They relish only the small and the mean! Search for the good, the noble, the elevating---and you will see only those things around you. Do not seek like the crow for carrion and offal. If you have faith, the Lord who is the core of your being will manifest Himself; He is within your grasp, prodded you extend your hand. Do not try to cover up your faults or hide your vices under a cloak of religiosity. Be sincere yourself. Be aware of Him, who is the eternal Witness; He sees and knows all.

Examine each act of yours and see that you execute it with minimum noise. Transact all dealing with minimum speech. Do not shout to a person standing afar; go near him or beckon to him to approach you. Loud noise is sacrilege on the sky, just as there are sacriligious uses of earth and of water.

21. Aadhaara and aadheya

OF course, you all like this daily programme of speeches and discourse, for you feel that it is this and not the wearing of new clothes or the eating of extra dishes that really makes a festival; this is a spiritual banquet that you are relishing. But you must listen carefully; and later, you should dwell upon what you have heard in the silence of your own heart and try sincerely to act upon at least a few of the precepts that you have gathered. That is the wise man's way of benefitting by pilgrimage to a holy place; his way of making himself holier.

Bhadhram, in his speech, quoted some slokas (hymns or verses) where some types of men were laughed at as "asses and dogs." I do not like such slokas; for they are cruel and wrong. It is wrong to call the children of immorality, the embodiments of divinity, in such degrading terms.

Do not develop this kind of habit; do not descend to such sacrilege. A person may have obstinacy or humility or patience but that does not make him an ass. He may have a sweet voice but that does not give him wings. Poetic fancies make things more confused; they make everything glitter and cause doubt; sometimes, they even spread a curtain of fog!

Impressions of many past lives warp the mind

Man can reach the height of Maadhava only by trampling down the mind and making it ineffective. The nature of mind is Nirmala (pure); the sensory impressions colour it and soil it with likes and dislikes. The mind of the animal is unaffected by the many attachments and attractions, the aversions and dislikes that hamper and haunt man's mind. These vaasanas (latent impressions) warp the mind, already bent by blows and buffetings suffered in birth after birth. It is no use laying all the blame on the mind. It is like a Guurkha watchman. Impress upon the watchman that the Lord is the paymaster and then he will obey not only the Lord who is his master but even the friends and companions of the Lord. Join the group divine and see whether the mind continues to be intransigent. It will not disobey you then. It is all a question of proper training; if the Guurkha comes to know that you are unrelated to the Lord, he will disobey you and take to his own misadventures! If the Prabhu (Lord) is on your side, the watchman too is your man. Then you can tell the Lord that His servant is exceeding his limits and draw upon His Grace to bend him to your side.

Bhadhram tried to give the meaning of the name, Naaraayana, in a very round about manner, saying Na meant this and Ra meant that and so on; it all sounded very learned and is really very clever; but one can go on endlessly in this way, saying Na means either this or that according to the fancy of the moment or the taste of the other. Naaram means "water" and Nayanam means "eye," and the implication is that only tears can win God for you. That is the inner purpose and meaning of the Naaraayana manthra. Other manthras (sacred formulae) too have their own latent meaning, like this one. Just as a G and an O and a D add up, not to the sound Geeodee, but to God, so also A U and M, meaning Bhuur Bhuvah and Suvah, the three planes of existence and consciousness, add up to the Pranava, OM. So too, Naaraayana is the Lord of the Naaram in the Nayana, who is won by tears of repentance and who rewards you with tears of joy. Win Him and then He becomes as visible as all this; in fact, He is all this, only you do not see it so.

Only tears can win God for you He is the Aadhaara (the base). You are generally carried away by the Aadheya (the burden), not the bearer. Samartha Raamdaas says that when Shri Raama returned to Ayodhya, every one acclaimed with unbearable joy the sight of the Flag on the horizon, for that was the signal for the arrival of the Lord back to His City. But Raamdaas says that the populace in their exultation forgot how thankful they had to be for the Flagstaff; for if Raama was the flag, certainly Lakshmana was the staff that held it aloft against the fiercest storm. You cannot have a flag without a staff, an Aadheya without an Aadhaara; a thing contained without a container. Grief is the container and what is the thing contained. It is joy, remember. A smile is the rose that grows on the thorn of a sigh. Shed tears, but' only for joy; joy that you are released from the chain of desire. Durvaasa was a formidable ascetic, no doubt; but he was afflicted with pride and envy. He tried to pull Ambareesha down from the pedestal of glory, only to have his anger recoil on himself with serious results. Desire leads you to doom. External insignia are not essential for aspirants. Of what avail is the shaving of the scalp while leaving inside it a multitude of desires clamouring for satisfaction? This kind of sanyaasa (asceticism) is a fraud on the person entering it and on society. No Avathaar, you will note, has granted 'sanyaasa to any aspirant. These external insignia are not essential or even necessary. Non-attachment born out of wisdom and fostered by the Grace of the Lord, that is the precious capital for spiritual advance. There are some gurus who take pride in the number of sanyaasis (monks) they have launched on society, as if that is an achievement to be congratulated upon! If sanyaasa is heaped upon a head which has not received the qualification of vairaagya (non-attachment), it is a burden on the recipient and a blot on the giver. The guru and the sisya (disciple) are both prisoners of their incompetence; when both are prisoners of their desires, who is to release whom? He who put them in alone can grant reprieve or pardon.

The sanyaasi (monk) has to declare his death and perform obsequies for himself and bury his past. He destroys all that binds him to the rest and to his past: his name, his history and his fame. He avoids any reminder of his erstwhile adventures in pursuit of sensory joy. He flees from his friends and foes, his habits and habiliments, his hobbies and prejudices. But we find men who have taken the vow of sanyaasa still clinging to their long-established practices and habits. Instead, they must completely break with the past. That is why in the Geetha, Karma Sanyaasa (renunciation of action) and not the other types of sanyaasa is prescribed. Karma Sanyaasa leads to Mano-Sanyaasa (mental renunciation). To teach persons, then as now, the assurance is "Yogakshemam vahaamyaham"---"I shall look after the well being of all who renounce the ego and take refuge in Me." Remember this is not a partnership, it is either you or I. If the dancer trips, he blames the drummer, as the saying goes.

That is not right in the spiritual field. You have to climb the peak alone. The I comes up at the first provocation; "I am blamed," "I am neglected;" the ego is up in arms against the world. To put it down, you must see Krishna in every one, every one who is blaming, praising, neglecting or honouring you. Some of you quote the Thelugu stanza of the Sumathi Shathakam which advises you to give up "relatives who do not come to your help, horses which do not gallop as soon as you are in the saddle, and Gods who do not shower blessings when you fall at their Feet." But remember the person to whom the poem is addressed! Who is to do as advised?

Sumathi, is it not? Now, Sumathi means "a person whose intelligence is mellowed by wisdom."

Such a person will certainly be helped by relatives, and will certainly be blessed by the Gods. So, the advice is unnecessary for Sumathi. The contingencies contemplated will never arise for a

The 'furnitures' that are left in charge of man

Wait for that Grace, in readiness. That is to say, do not cling too fast to things that please the senses or get caught in the coils of the attractive and the pleasant.

Bhadhram spoke of the Headmaster of a school. Yes. He is a good example of the attitude you should develop. He knows all the time that the chairs, tables and benches are not his but, nevertheless, he knows that it is his duty to see that no item of furniture or equipment is lost or damaged; that it is all handed over intact when he leaves.

Therefore, he keeps villain watch, though unattached The senses, the intelligence, the heart, the mind---these are the furnitures put in your charge; look after them with care; if any is damaged by oversight, make the appropriate entry in the list and explain the circumstances and crave for Grace.

Reference was made by Bhadhram to women having bhakthi, jnaanam and vairaagyam equal to men. Still, I know there are many who are worried when they hear women reciting the Pranava

They forget that shabdha (sound) itself is fundamentally Pranava, that all breath has Pranava immanent in it; now can women, avoid or keep away from OM which is ever-present in the Aakaasha (ether) and which their breath is reciting every moment?

Make your life a mountain of auspiciousness

As a matter of fact, Prakrithi, the Feminine Principle, comes First and the Purusha (Masculine Principle) is second. You say Seetharaama, Lakshminaraayana and Gowrishankara, not putting Prakrithi in the second place. Women have equal chances and equal rights to attain God-head.

Just as every breath reminds you of OM, every little act is an act of worship, remember. Every tiny thought, every faint whisper has to be so directed that it may curb the vagaries of the 'mind and help in guiding it Godward. A hundred little naye paise add up to a round rupee. Distill divinity into every moment. Like the uninterrupted line of Ganga water that flows in Rudhraabhisheka (consecrating with Rudhra japam) on the Shivalinga, let every moment be hallowed by the thought of Shiva. Perform that Rudhram (Vedhic hymn in praise of Shiva) and make your life bhadhram (safe); why, let it become a Bhadhraachalam, an unshakeable Mountain of Safety.

I find you reading and appreciating the prema of the Rishis (sages) and the gopees (milk-maids of Dhwaaraka) and the vaanaras (monkeys) of past ages; but you ignore your present responsibility. For example, examine, each one of you, how far you have put into practice what you have heard from Me. How far have you profited by coming to Puttaparthi now or so often in previous years? How far have you shown prema to others, the prema that you find to be My all.

Naamasmarana (remembering the Lord's name). I have told you often, is the best exercise to acquire prema towards God and all that is great. But have you tried that recipe? Has it become as essential for you as the very breath? That is the test of your sincerity and of the success of your pilgrimage to Puttaparthi this Dashara.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 24-10-1961

To find out what is Dharma and what is Adharma, apply this one test: If it goes counter to Truth and Love, it is Adharma (unrighteous). If it promotes Truth and Love or is full of both, it is Dharma.

22. Madhura nagara

IT is festival, every day here; at the Prashaanthi Nilayam, it is year-round Dashara. But, yet, to show that it is desirable to value tradition and observe ancient and well-established rites, this festival is celebrated at this place. When the fruit grows it is filled with sweetness. Even the margosa fruit loses its bitterness and turns sweet, when it ripens. So, too, the ultimate destiny of man, however hard or bitter he may be now, is to ripen and turn sweet. Every one will shed bitterness and turn sweet; there is no doubt. The Madhura taste will then win for them the Lord of Madhura (Krishna). I am not very happy when I hoist this Prashaanthi Flag on this Building; I will be happy only when each one of you hoists it and keep it flying, on the mansion of your heart. Then only can you enjoy peace, content and purity. Grow the twin wings of Love and Faith; then you can soar freely 'in the sky of the Lord's Grace. You can see the Lord only through His wonders. His laws are unique and mysterious; them is no use arguing about them, for experience is the only proof of their reality. You taste them, therefore they are real. Do not spend your intelligence in devising crooked queries. The mystery of Avathaar is beyond the reach of intelligence. It can be grasped only by means of genuine faith. It cannot be reached by logic; the karmendhriyas and the inaanendhriyas (sense organs of action and perception) are useless instruments; for the body, mind, intelligence all are of the category, "Seen," but not of the category, "Sere." To see the Seer, the inner vision has to be cultivated. So long as you feel you are separate, you cannot see the whole. Vyakthi (individual) can never see the Shakthi (Supreme Power). Attachment to any body is not desirable. When the Lord appears in person, even then, doubt assails. It is of the very nature of things! I utter no meaningless word, I do no purposeless deed. I plan no significancelless action, I never engage in unholy activities. I have nothing that I need. My joy consists in fulfilling your aims, in making you reach the goal. The one thing that I ask for is the Love filled Heart. Believe; hold fast, without entangling yourselves in a mesh of empty explanations and imaginary arguments; that is the way to profit. Do not develop attachment to this body. Why, attachment to any body is not desirable. This hand gives you things, but, My Hand is that which creates all this. That is My Body. My coupe is unique, different from all that you know. I do not identify Myself with anything. Ice is water, water is ice. Saguna is Nirguna, Nirguna is this Saguna. You may fall into the quagmire of doubt: "Raama came, Krishna came, Sai Baaba came, this Puttaparthi Sai Baaba comes and challengingly declares that He is all These! How can this be?" You can never understand this phenomenon. That is the understanding you need. I am incomprehensible. You will see the world coming here in about a year or two. Remember that, in no previous Yuga did the people get so many clear intimations of the nature of Avathaar as now; you are indeed fortunate. The Lord's Form can be perceived only by means of the eye of prema or the eye of inaana or the eye of yoga, not the eye of sensual activity, the Karmanethra. The Lord is interested in your keeping the heart pure. The Kaliyuga is, in reality, very holy; you too are very fortunate. You have the chance to see, touch and converse with, the Avathaar of the Lord. The Avathaars are not ten; there are very many in number. You must distinguish between those who are born as parts of Divinity, as imbued with the Divine Essence, as messengers of Divine Mission, as instruments of Divine Will and Purpose, and Avathaars. Parashuraama is not an Avathaar in the real sense. The Avathaars that have come and gone have all cut down trees because they are white-ant infested: but, this Avathaar is different and unique. Now, the white-ants are removed, the tree is saved, protected, fostered and encouraged to grow. I am not inclined to punish; I am the goldsmith who repairs and re-shapes broken ornaments. Raama came as the embodiment of Sathya, Dharma and Shaanthi (truth, virtue and peace); Krishna came as the personification of Prema (Love); now, the Embodiment of all the Four is needed, for, at the present time, knowledge has increased beyond the capacity of character. You cannot realise how much the Lord feels for your sake. His concern is over your wanton-ness and wilful disregard of His words, for He is interested in your keeping your hearts pure and unblemished. I am very anxious to make you all reach the goal. My task is to purify your hearts. If you engage yourself in the constant meditation of the Name of the Lord, with devotion, humility and faith, the Lord will stun, d at the door of your Puuj room, awaiting your wish.

Only, you should not allow your mind to waver. Genuine yearning will make your heart pure.

What is important for you is your own experience. What is your basis for understanding the Divine? It is your own Aanandha (bliss), felt and tasted by you. You say, He saved one Dhroupadhi from ignominy, one Ahalya from petrification, one Prahlaadha from torture, one Gajendra from death; but, do you know how many more such have been blessed similarly, through Grace? The stream of Grace is ever flowing fast and full; that Grace has no limit. But, you see it as limited only.

The three activities of the Lord

I have come now with the limitations that you need. The Lord's activities are three: Creation, Preservation and Dissolution. They are the characteristic attributes of the Lord. His aims are all Saathwik (pious) for the protection of the World, the welfare of the World. My exultation is Mine, My prompting is Mine. I will never abide by another's likes or dislikes. I do not pay heed to such. I am that which is the Witness of everyone and everything. All are in my Control; then, who can tell Me what to do? In a few years, years that can be counted on one's fingers, all of you will realise, that I am the embodiment of all Shakthis (powers). The wise, the inquiring and the suffering will gather here from all parts of. the world. Have the fixity of hold; say, "Whether I succeed in getting from you the external fruit or not, I shall never give up." Do not get dejected when suffering comes and estrange yourself from the Lord, blaming Him for it. The loss will be yours and the repentance will be agonising.

You have no hunger. If you have genuine hunger I will not keep you suffering from it. Churn the mind and collect the butter and melt it in the yearning of the heart. When the butter has not melted, the reason is, the warmth of the yearning is insufficient.

I do not appreciate your extolling Me, describing My glory. State the facts. That produces joy. It is sacrilege to state more or less. Demand from Me as of fight, the removal of your sufferings.

Give me your heart and ask for My Heart; if you give Me only your word, you will get only a word in return. I give you just what you ask for, remember!

Sweetness cannot arise without suffering.

When sufferings come, why do you estrange yourselves from the Lord? He gives you suffering, for your good, for the advancement of your devotion. If suffering is granted, you seek Shaanthi; you search for the knowledge of the mystery; you go to ten persons and they each tell you some aspect of the truth. Without suffering, sweetness cannot arise! When you suffer, if you feel, "The Lord is no longer mine" and stray away, the Lord too will declare, "He is no longer Mine!"

Beware.

Wherever you are, when you wholeheartedly seek to do namaskaaram (obeisance) to Me, My Feet are there, before you! Sarvathah paani paadhah--- "Hands and feet everywhere," it has been announced. "Lord, do you not hear My prayer?" if you feel poignantly, My Ears are there! "Don't you see, O Lord?" if you cry out, My eyes are there that instant.

Raama, Krishna, Shirdi Sai, This

Sathya Sai Baaba; that Form is so, this Form is thus--why all such misgivings and doubts? The body is the same, only the dress worn is different. Do not be led away into the morass, by others.

The Lord will never deviate from the word; it may be that you take Me to mean something else.

It is My will that happens always; it is My Sankalpa that is being worked out at all times.

Sankalpas are of three different types: ' Yochana sankalpas, the decision arrived at after long deliberation; Manana sankalpa, the decision taken after the desire to do arises; and Swasankalpa, where the wish and the fulfilment are like the sound of' the shot and the hitting the target, both happening at the same instant.

Naamasmarana should become automatic as breathing

Do not slander or abuse others or your own selves, as weak, sinful wicked or low; when you do so, you are slandering or abusing Me, who resides in them and you. All are of the Divine Nature of the Aathma; all are pure and holy. Some might have erred in using the intelligence and discrimination which the Lord has given and so might have been guilty of "mistakes"; they are not therefore, "sinful." To condemn oneself as "Paapoham paapasambhavah," (I am a sinner born of sin) is' itself the direst paapa (sin)! Use your intelligence and march on, putting one milestone after another behind you! Practise Naamasmarana (remembrance of Lord's name) steadily so that it becomes as automatic and as necessary as breathing. Of what benefit is it to be in the same stage of saadhana for ever? Take the Form you like, the Name you love and do japam and dhyaanam and no evil thought will arise; wicked thoughts will flee. When they have fled, what remains is the Aathmaswaruupa. You must lead your lives, according to My words, without the slightest modification. First have faith, then the experience is granted. Even in the case of the previous Avathaars, that is the order of events, is it not? You worship with faith and you experience Grace. Faith results in Grace, without your being aware of it. You must take in the medicine I give and also follow the diet I prescribe and avoid the things I prohibit. I always act, calmly. I never hurry. I do say, "Let it be so" to every request of yours. You have come into this world to reach the Lord. Ignorant of that purpose, you have hoisted on your head the weight of Illusion and you are struggling to unload it, suffering under its weight. What is the use of running after external pleasures and temporary joy? So long as you are caught in this Avidhya (ignorance) you can never taste the Bliss of Realisation; you cannot even recognise it much less attain it. But if you are patient and calm, I shall grant you joy without fail. Do not yield to despair. Even the infant lotus buds will bloom, in their own good time. By the cumulative effect of the good done in many previous births, you have secured this fortune; you do not know how much you have gone through, but, I know! And, whether you know or not, I shall certainly give you your need. Do not treat the body with contempt. You get the 'body' through the karma of the past; you get the 'type of character' according to the vaasanas (tendencies) cultivated in the past. The body is the result of Praarabdha karma (to be exhausted in the present life); the guna is the product of Sanchitha karma (which is stored to experienced in future lives). Do not delude yourself that you are the body, or be fascinated into an attachment for it. But, it is your task to guard it from harm and keep it in good trim. For, is it not with it that you are imbibing the exhilaration of the Bliss of the Lord, the Majesty of the Lord? Therefore, do not deride the body or treat it with contempt. That equipment is intended for your journey towards the Lord; it is the chariot of the Lord; do not neglect or keep it in disrepair. "Oh, this is my fate, my own past punishing me, I must go through it and suffer it, I cannot escape it," thug people get disheartened. If it is so inescapable, what is the use of prayer, of japam, of meditation, or of the ritual of worship? Win the Grace of the Lord---and all the accumulated burden will be burnt into ashes in a moment! Why blame the Lord for the "writing on your forehead?" It is you who write there and it is you who must wipe out the script. The evil you do, writes; the good you do, wipes! Let your mind dwell on the Lord, and the mist of the past births will melt before the rays of that sunrise; if you do not project those rays, the mist will thicken into darkness. Never deprive yourself of the joy in store. While in the previous body, I had said, "I will come again after eight years." Dikshith has written it down, as if I said, I will appear as an eight-year-old! That is a mistake. Having cast off that body on the Vijayadhashami Day, 1918, I granted actual concrete darshan off and on to various bhaktas during about six years. Once, I appeared before Abdul Baaba and told him, "The body has been disposed off; but, who can dispose Me off?" I had revealed to Abdul Baaba the news of My coming Advent. But, do not waste your time in arguments about the identity, whether This is He or He could be This! Believe only as much as you have known; never deny the joy you have derived or deprive yourselves of the joy in store. Worship, offerings, incense, waving of lights--these are all preliminary steps, the first few rungs in the ladder. If you are ever on the alphabet, when are you to learn to spell and read words and sentences? Does the Lord need the things you :offer? Does He require articles of comfort or luxury? No, it is you who need them! Does He live upon the food you place before Him? Remember, it is the person who goes beyond the externals, that wins the victory. The Lord is not pleased with externals; He searches for the feelings, the internal urges. I do not want the flowers and fruits and the miscellaneous packets that you bring in your hands when you come to Me. Come with your hands empty, saying "What can I give You which has not come from You Yourself? When You gave me this heart, it was clean and pure; now, after preparing in that vessel the food for life so far lived, I am offering it to You, as clean and as pure as when You gave it to me, after removing all traces of the vaasanas or smells of the things cooked in it." Say that, and offer that heart. Cultivate kinship of the heart through devotion. How long are you to stagnate in the same primary class of pathram, pushpam, phalam, and thoyam (leaf flower, fruit and water)? Keep in the pathram of the body the fruit, viz., the heart, and the flower viz., the mind and the thoyam, water, welling from the eyes; then, Grace will descend on you, without fail. Let the hands be empty but the heart be full. Cultivate the kinship of the heart through devotion and faith. Reduce these external attachments and demonstrations.

What I seek is your joy, your happiness, your mental peace, and your unfailing courage and resolution.

You are indeed more fortunate than the Rishis, the vaanaras and the gopees Your chances are greater; you get darshan, sparshan and sambhaashana (seeing, touching and conversing), all three. Therefore, do not ask, for the fulfilment of paltry desires; ask, "Make me eternal, absolute, Nithyam and Sathyam."

I have started the work for which I have come. Till now, I was engaged in collecting materials--- iron cement, brick, lime and the rein. Now the foundation has been firmly concreted and the bulding has to rise. That structure of Mine will cover the entire Universe. No longer can this Prayer Hall or the Auditorium now being erected hold the people who will gather. The sky alone can be the big enough shed. Hereafter, there are no stops! Within a short period, you will witness many miraculous events. Even while you are wondering, this Puttaparthi will be transformed into Madhura.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, Dhashara discourses, October 1961

Life is a game football; you can kick the ball of Samsaara, with as much gusto as you can command provided you remember that if it crosses the lines of Brahma maarga and Dharma maarga, you are out and the ball has to be brought in again. They set the limits within which you can play the game, remember!

23. Primers of spiritual education

THESE discourses have now become a daily event and so, perhaps, you may be developing a headache. A feast should come only rarely; it should not be frequent. If it is a daily affair, it loses its charm, its savour. If I speak to you every evening, at the end of the speeches by others, even though you may all like it, still I am afraid it may add up to a big burden. Mitha (moderation) is desirable in food and. drinks and in exercise, both physical and spiritual; that is the best Hitha (cure); then only can you advance in Gathi (position). However, as regards God, there is no question of overdose or underdose; any dose should be welcomed. But I do not recommend such mixtures as Thirumalaachaar administered to you now!

His speech was full of the family affairs of Gods, their family quarrels and family problems.

When even the bhaktha (devotee) should get over the likes and dislikes of kith and kin in order to deserve the Grace of God, how can any one talk of the Gods themselves being entangled in these low knots? These only drag Divinity down to the dirt of you sensory minds. The only kith and kin the Lord has are the devotees who have dedicated themselves to Him; those who have attuned their heart-strings to His Melody. To ascribe the material relationships of the human family to Godhead is sheer nonsense. The Lord who is beyond Time and Space prior to the Beginning and subsequent to the end can never be described in terms of the mushroom memories of man, the temporary phenomena of human family and human society. Such descriptions cannot make any sense to those who have experienced the Glory that is God.

Do not make God modem to suit your fancy. He is neither ancient nor modern; His countenance never changes, nor His Glory. Present Him if you must in a modem manner, in a modem style, so that He might be understood today. If a child is reluctant to swallow a pill, insert it in a plantain and offer him the fruit; he will swallow both fruit and pill. But do not change the pill itself to suit the whims and fancies of the child's taste. Then the illness cannot be cured!

Come with empty hands to carry away my Love

Take the Lord to be your father or mother, but only as a first step to your overstepping that relationship and merging in the absolute. Do not stop on the steps; enter the Mansion to which they lead. The Aathmasambandha (connection with the Soul) is the everlasting unchanging sambandha (association). As a first step, you use the flower, the lamp, the incense, etc., to worship the Saguna (attributeful) form. Soon, your bhakthi moves on to newer forms of dedication, newer offerings, purer and more valuable and worthier of your Lord. No one sticks to the slate for long; you feel that you should place before the Lord something more lasting than mere flowers; and something more yours than incense. You feel like purifying yourselves and making your entire life one fragrant flame. That is real worship, real bhakthi. Do not come to Me with your hands full of trash, for how can I fill them with Grace when they are already full?

Come with empty hands and carry away My treasure, My prema.
 Human impulses and emotions have to be guided Those who get their feet worshipped by their devotees and those who think that it is a great boon so to worship them are both lacking in sense. Paadhapuujia (ritual worship of Guru's feet) has an atmosphere of publicity, both for the Guru and the sishya; besides, why worship the body which is decaying every moment? It is also very wrong to offer cash or gold or other articles, whether they are from surplus wealth or from hard-earned property. For, after all, even these are trinkets that have no intrinsic value. Obey the Guru, follow his instructions, progress along the spiritual road, these are the best means of Paadhapuujia; when you achieve some success in these, the craving for Paadhapuujia itself will disappear, must disappear. Nowadays, the puuja is done by people who feel it is a cheap substitute for sincere devotion that the guru too welcomes and prefers! Offer the heart, clean and pure, broadened by saadhana to include all living beings in its grasp. Offer this to the guru and seek only such gurus as do not indulge in declamations about themselves or in derisive attacks on their rivals.
 Worship is just a means of educating the emotions. Human impulses and emotions have to be guided and controlled. Just as the raging waters of the Godhaavari have to be curbed by bunds, halted by dams, tamed by canals and led quietly to the ocean, which can swallow all floods without a trace, so too the age long instincts of man have to be trained and transmuted by contact with higher ideals and powers.
 When the fruit is ripe, it will fall off the branch of its own accord. Similarly, when vairagya (renunciation) saturates your heart, you lose contact with the world and slip into the lap of the Lord.
 Three types of appeases towards the Lord There are three types of approaches towards the Lord: the Eagle type, which swaps down on the target whith a greedy swiftness and suddenness which, by its very impact, fails to secure the object coveted; the Monkey type, which flits hither and thither, from one fruit to another, unable to decide which is tasty; and the Ant type, which moves steadily, though slowly, towards the object which it has decided is desirable. The ant does not hit the fruit hard and make it fall away; it does not pluck all the fruits it sees; it appropriates just as much as it can assimilate and no more. Do not fritter away the time allotted to you for sojourning on each in foolish foppery and fanciful foibles which always keep you outdid. When are you to walk indoors into the warmth and quiet of your own interior? Retire into solitude and silence now and then; experience the joy derivable only from them.

 Since you cannot swim across the flooded stream, you board a raft. So also, since you cannot master the Nirguna (Formless), you resort to the Saguna (Form with attributes) and struggle to swim across to the Nirguna through Araadhana and Upaasana (worship and contemplation). But it is not advisable to remain ever on the raft, amidst the currents and whirlpools, is it not? You must die this conventional Araadhana some day and reach higher. Pathram, pushpam, phalam, thoyam (leaf, flower, fruit, water)---are all primers for the initial stages when children join schools. Clean the mind of all the animal and primitive impulses which has shaped it from birth to birth. Otherwise, just as milk poured into a pot used for keeping buttermilk curdles quickly, all the finer experiences of truth, beauty and goodness will get tarnished beyond recognition. Do not postpone this duty to yourself, especially now when you have the chance of contacting Me. I do not find you offering Me the thing I look for; you bring things which are unworthy and impure. I feel very much when I find you so agitated and troubled with the cure so near at hand.
 Reduce your wants; minimise your desires. All these material knick-knacks are short-lived.
 When death deprives you of resistance, your kith and kin take off the nose-stud and in their haste they may even cut the nose to retrieve it! If you go on heaping desire upon desire, it will be impossible to depart gladly when the call comes. Become rich rather in virtue, in the spirit of service, in devotion to the Higher Power. That is what pleases Me and saves you.
 Pleasure is the Head; pain is the Fool You cannot welcome pleasure without at the same time inviting Pain. They are both always together, in separable. Understanding this live always in peace.
Sathya Sai Baba
 24. Thirty-six Gems for you SPEAKING at Prashaanthi Nilayam on 21 October 1961, announcement was made by Baba to the World that He has entered upon the Divine Minion. He has come down for as Man, in this Yuga, to revive Dharma, establish Peace and fill the whole world with Love so that all may now reach the goal anxiously striven for by them in the aeons that have gone by!

The following were offered by Baaba as the Thirty-sixth Birthday Message:

1. Rectitude is the Royal Road to the Seat of God.
2. He who conquers the world is a hero; but the hero of heroes is he who conquers himself; he is mighty; he has prowess beyond compare.
3. Faith is the first step to the Grace of God.
4. Truth will lead you to the Deity untruth will lead you to the devil.
5. The aspirant must bear with patience all circumstances; that is the most beneficial path.
6. Fill every deed of yours with the vision of the Spirit, the outlook of the Super-self.
7. To grasp the significance of the Omnipresence of the Lord, believe that there is no name which is not His; no body or thing which is not His.
8. He who is steady in Wisdom stands closest in the company of the Lord.
9. Release from bondage to inborn impulses is the Real Liberation.
10. When a person has renounced the fruit, whatever activity he engages in, that is Samaadhi (the last stage of yoga) itself.
11. When you try something above your capacity, that is conceit.
12. When you do something less than your capacity, remember, that is theft.
13. Full happiness consists of auspicious conversation, auspicious thoughts, auspicious deeds.
14. Recognise and accept your own faults and errors; do not attempt to unveil others' faults and errors; this discipline helps the aspirant a great deal.
15. Cool comforting conversation, that is most congenial to the aspirant, is the habit that will take him to the goal.
16. Whose property did the crow steal? Whom did the kokil (cuckoo) crown? Understand this: if your tongue is sweet, your name gets honoured.
17. Achieve mastery over your tonic, you achieve thereby mastery over the world.
18. He who obeys the dictates of the Lord is indeed at ease, he is a Yogi; he who disobeys the dictates of the Lord, he is the diseased, the Rogi.
19. When heart is bound to heart, heat of argument finds no place.
20. Impure food makes the mind also, impure; the Sun of the inner glory of dharma can never dawn within the impure Mind.
21. If you give up the contemplation of the Lord who is the treasure of undiminishing Bliss and spend yourselves in the contemplation of the means of achieving the victory of the promptings of your heart, you can never get released.

22. If you drop the weight of argument, and unfold the twin wings of faith and action, you can float and fly happily in the deep blue sky of the Almighty Presence.
23. The craving for fruit will render all spiritual discipline fruitless.
24. Let the mind die, let buddhi (intellect) be destroyed, let the body disintegrate, remember nothing can harm you, the indestructible Aathma.
25. Use a little common sense and you will know that the body is not your own Self; it is liable to decline and death; that is the first step for Nara (man) to become Naaraayana (God). The 'I' to which reference is made is not the body, it is the Paramaathma (Supreme Self); trying to realise this is thapas (penance).
26. Where the singing of the Name of the Lord fills the air with its splendour and fragrance, that place indeed is Vaikuntha (the abode of Vishnu).
27. While the skin of cattle is useful for making footwear, the human skin is not worth a speck of dust. But yet, that very man can ascend to the height of dignity if only he carries out his holy rusk.
28. The world must be made the abode of love; first, cultivate love for yourself; then, fill the village, where you are with love; later, spread the love to the district and thug let it cover the entire world.
29. Whatever you feel is good if done by others to you, however you feel they should honour you; do unto those others also and honour them likewise yourselves.
30. When you do not know, confess that you do not know; if you pretend to know and to cover up ignorance, it is very dangerous, especially to the spiritual aspirant.
31. The idea of Brahman is beyond the capacity of those who have no control over the agitations of the mind; the natural afflictions of the causative world will cease only when the idea of Brahman is well established in the mind; the delusion of the causative world must disappear if one must get the Joy, Aathmic Bliss.
32. However great a hero you might be, whatever your prowess and intellect, devoid of the Grace of God, you degenerate into a slave.
33. Whoever loves and serves all, him, the Lord loves and honours.
34. The birds taking shelter for the night awake and fly away to the four quarters at sunrise; so too, the wife and children, the fortune and wealth, all fly away without as much as even a farewell notice. Establish yourselves firmly in this fact; make immediate efforts to achieve the eternal, the permanent, the unchanging.
35. Of what use is all the poring over tomes throughout the day and night, of what use is all the fame achieved by means of scholarship? What you have put into practice, that is the measure of your learning, your education. Without that, you are but a learned titled fool.

36. Strive for the happiness, the joy of all others, as earnestly as you strive for your own; strive for the peace of the world, as diligently as you strive for your own.

That is true divinity, that is true humanity.

If there are two or more kings or states, there is bound to be greed, envy, jealously, hatred and anger on one side, and fear, ambition and vengeance on the other. No one can then know the joy or perfect peace. Similarly, so long as you feel the reality of the 'many,' so long as you take them to be outside you, separate from you, you have fear, hatred, greed and all the rest of the pests.

When you know that the many is a figment superimposed on the One, by your own ignorance, you become Master, sole Monarch, and all fear vanishes. That stage is Mukti: Liberation from the thralldom of Samsaara---worldly life.

25. Birthday sparks

THIS day, the 23rd November 1961 is significant in more senses than one; it is not only the day which marks the date of birth of this Avathaar; the previous Sai Avathaar was also inaugurated on a Thursday, and on the day after the Karthika Deepam or Karthika Pournami (the fullmoon day of the month of Karthika). Today also it is the day after the Karthika Deepam and a

Thursday!

You are all lucky that you could come to Prashanthi Nilayam from great distances and have dharshan (audience), on this auspicious day. But, the joy you get today is only a reminder of the eternal full joy that is in store for you, in fact, for all mankind. That joy is your birthright; this momentary bliss is but a drop of that ocean; to get that, you must dedicate yourself to saadhana, continuous and conscious saadhana (spiritual practice). The symbol on the Prashanthi Flag, the symbol that is put up in concrete form in front of the Nilayam, has therefore to be clearly understood by every one of you. Conquer lug, anger and hatred, roam in the expanse of equal and impartial Love to all created things and then, you are fit for yoga (inner communion with Divinity), which will open the petals of your heart. Then, from the fragrance and beauty of that

Lotus will emerge the Flame of inaana (spiritual wisdom), illumining maaya (world illusion) into destruction until you and the Jyothi (Flame) become One.

It is when you approach near that it appears in all its majesty, in all its overwhelming size.

Suppose you see it small, what does that indicate? Not that it is small, but that you are afar!

Remember. The Sun and the Moon appear huge, huger by far than the stars, for they are near and the stars are far. Approach the Lord and realise Him as Big; do not stand afar, and prate that He is small!

You are all entitled to joy that is eternal

Incarnation is for the sake of fostering, dharma, for demarcating and directing it and to show mankind the true path of desireless activity. That is the one task I am engaged in, through various channels. Instead of reforming you without your knowledge, it is better to reform you with your own co-operation and knowledge. So, I reveal to you my Glory, off and on, to a little extent, through what you call miracles. I do not engage in them for name and fame; I am miraculous by My very Nature! Every moment of Mine is a Mahaathmya, a Miracle! They are beyond your understanding your art and skill and intelligence. I must save every one of you; even if you say, nay, and move away, I shall do it. Those who have strayed away from Me have to return to the fold, sooner or later, for I will not allow them to be distant for long I shall drag them towards

Me. That is My basic Nature, Love and Mercy.

Today, at this meeting, as members of this gathering you are all overwhelmed with joy, I can see that But, this is momentary, this will not last. You are all entitled to broader realms of joy, deeper springs of joy and joy that is eternal. Your real dharma, the purpose for which you have taken human birth, is to earn and enjoy that Bliss, which no external contact can change or diminish.

To earn it, is quite easy; it can be done by every one, who just sits calmly and examines himself and his mind, unaffected by likes and dislikes. Then he discovers that life is a dream, and that he has a calm refuge of peace inside his own heart. He learns to dive into its cool depths forgetting and ignoring the buffets of luck, both good and ill.

If time is well used a paamara can become Paramahamsa

The doctor first diagnoses the disease and then, he prescribes the course of treatment. So too, you must submit yourself to the diagnosis of your illness, viz, misery, travail and pain. Investigate fearlessly and with care; and you will find that while your basic nature is Bliss (aanandha), you have falsely identified yourself with the temporary, the frivolous and the paltry and so, that attachment brings about all the sorrow. You have to realise that both joy and sorrow are passing phases, like white or dark clouds across the blue sky, and you have to learn to treat both prosperity and adversity with equanimity.

If only time is well used, the paamara (the ignorant) can become the Paramahamsa (ascetic of the highest order) and the Paramahamsa can also be transfused into Paramaathma (the Universal Substance and Substratum.).

Just as fish which can live only when it is immersed in water, when it feels the element all around it, so too man is an animal that can live only when immersed in aanandha: (bliss) he must have aanandha not only at home, in society and in the world but, more than all, in the heart. As a matter of fact, the aanandha in the heart produces aanandha everywhere; the heart is the spring of joy. That spring has to be touched by constant meditation, recitation and the intermittent dwelling on the glory, the grace and the inexhaustible manifestations of the Lord:

smarana, chethana and manana. Hold fast to the goal; the Bhaktha (devotee) should never turn back. Never give way to doubt or despair.

Pray, as the performance of a duty

A person driving a car concentrates on the road, for he is anxious to save himself and others from accident. Fear is what induces single-mindedness in his case. Love is a greater force for giving concentration. If you have steady and resolute love, the concentration becomes intense and unshakeable. Faith develops into love and love results in concentration. Prayer is possible and begins to yield fruit, under such conditions. Pray, using the Name as a symbol of the Lord; pray keeping all the waves of the mind stilled. Pray, as the performance of a duty for your very real existence, as the only justification for your coming into the world, as man.

"Mine" and "yours:" these attitudes are only for identification; they are not real; they are temporary. "His"---that is the truth, the eternal. It is like the headmaster of a school being in temporary charge of the furniture of the school. He has to hand over the items when he is transferred or retired. Treat all things with which you are endowed, as the headmaster treats the furniture. Be always aware that the final checking-up is imminent. Wait for that moment with joy. Be ready for that event. Have your accounts up to date and the balance ready calculated to be handed over. Treat all things entrusted to you with care and diligence.

Naaraayana is the Lord of the Water; (naaram means water). But, what is the water of which He is the Lord? He resides in the heart, and His presence when recognised melts even the stoniest heart and the water emanates from the eye as tears of joy, gratitude and fullness! His Presence is said to have been recognised by man, when he is suffused by sympathy, making him sad while another is sad and joyful when another is filled with joy. Naaraayana is He who brings tears of joy to the eyes! That is the function of your tear glands: to express internal joy; not to weep like a fool or a coward.

The person devoid to God knows to failure. The Name of the Lord, if taken sincerely, overcomes all obstacles. It is saturated with sweetness; it has to iota of the bitterness of defeat in it. When the Saviour is by your side, why doubt whether you will be saved?

Sathya Sai Baba

26. Destiny is no iron cage

VELURY Shivaraama Shaasthry is not only a great scholar, he is a Saadhaka too. Today, he gave you the gist of his scholarship and experience in the speech on Avathaara rahasya (Secret of Incarnation). In spite of all this, let Me tell you, the Mystery of Avathaars is beyond your understanding, beyond any one's understanding. How can those in maaya grasp something that is beyond it? The body, buddhi, chiththa, manas, hrudhaya (intellect, thought, mind, heart)---all are in maaya (illusion) and operate only through maaya. But the disappearance of maaya is a fact, not a delusion. In algebra the symbol X is used for the unknown quantity. When its identity is discovered, as it eventually is, the symbol X disappears from the equation. In the same way, God is X, the entity you have to discover.

To say that God is the prime cause of everything is true to a certain extent; but you are not thrust by Him into an iron cage of destiny from which there is no escape. He has endowed you with viveka and vairagya (discrimination and detachment) and, with a sense of awe and wonder, you have to use these for attaining Him. Though bound, you are not entirely incapacitated. A cow that is tethered to a post by means of a rope can walk around it and graze on all the area which the rope can traverse; when all the grass therein has been eaten, perhaps the master might loosen the knot and tether it to another post a little farther off. Graze freely as far as the rope allows, but do not stray far from the post and pull at the rope and inflict pain on your neck.

Do not blame Fate for your condition

On the land that belongs to you, you can grow the food you need or you can sit idle and allow it to lie fallow. You are the cause of your ruin or uplift. The tools are in your hands; you can learn the skills; you can break the shackles and escape; but if you grovel in slavery and bondage, who can save you? Do not blame Fate or siro-likhitham (writing on the head), for your condition. The likhitham (writing) has been done by you yourself. You fail or pass and you are detained or promoted on the basis of your performance in the previous class, is it not? So also, the status in the present life is decided on the basis of the activities in previous lives.

When the Headmaster gives a character certificate on the basis of which you apply for a job, he flames the sentences with reference to your conduct in previous years when you were in previous classes. You are responsible for the nature of the certificate; if your conduct was good, you get a good certificate and a good job; if it had been bad, you get a bad one and a poor job. It is you who write, you who wipe the writing on the head, or "destiny."

There was a great saint in Kerala some 500 years ago, Bilvamangala by name. He would call on Krishna and Krishna would appear. Such was his bhakti and his saadhana. One man who suffered from chronic stomach-ache heard about this and he pestered Bilvamangala to find out from Krishna whether it would end or not. Bilvamangala agreed and when Krishna appeared next, he asked him the question. Krishna replied, "When the rolling stops, it will cease." The unfortunate man interpreted it to mean "when he stopped rolling in pain" and he got desperate, because he had perforce to roll in the agony of that ache. So he left Kerala and wanted to go to some holy place to meet some holier person who would procure for him a more satisfying answer. Bilvamangala told him that he had to suffer this trouble due to his Praarabdha---the result of his activities in previous births. He took rolling to mean, "rolling from birth to birth."

Praarabdha will melt when Naamasmarana is done

On the road to Kaashi which he took, he came to a free feeding 'place' run by a pious lady, Kururamma by name. When she saw his agony, she spoke to him kindly. He told her that he had decided to drown himself in the Ganga for he was told there was no escaping the consequence of past sins. Kururamma called him a fool. She gave him the holy manthra "Gopeejana Vallabhaaya namah," and asked him to repeat it. She said the Name would cure him completely.

The poor man uttered it when the attack occurred next and he was surprised to find that the pain had gone! Yes, gone; even though he pounded his stomach, it did not return.

He finished his pilgrimage to Khaasi and returned to Kerala and fell at the feet of Bilvamangala, who enquired about his ache; the ache with which he had to live for it was earned in past lives.

When he was told that it had disappeared, he called on Krishna and asked what he had meant by "rolling." Bilvamangala thought it to mean rolling from one birth to another and acquiring good and evil; the sick man took it to mean 'rolling in pain' when the ache came on. But Krishna had meant rolling in this objective world, this prakrithi, and its changing phenomena. When the man lived in the name of God and had no other thought, the rolling had ceased; the Name and the chain of destiny cannot exist together. Praarabdha (result of past bad action) will melt away like fog before the Sun when Naamasmarana is done. This was a revelation even for Bilvamangala.

You become that which you feel

Just reflect on this for a minute: How did man forget his Divinity? How did he fall into this delusion of littleness? Then you will know that it must be as a result of the mind running after momentary pleasures. What then is the remedy? The answer is just one word---"Worship." Do everything as worship. Yath bhaavam thath bhavathi---"You become that which you feel." You can get the feeling for the Divine only if you have a taste of the prema of the Divine. That is why the Avathaar has come to give you a taste of that prema, so that the yearning for the Lord will be planted in your heart. Mastery over mountains of information has been attained by man now; but wisdom has lagged behind. Hence, man's capacity to probe and progress into the realm of the Universal and the Absolute has to be developed.

Vivekaanandha had gone once to a town during his wanderings. Lots of important persons, painters, scholars, philosophers, poets and artists gathered around him and plied him with an endless array of questions. Vivekaanandha was engaged the whole day in answering them. A Harijan who was standing in a corner at last got the chance of falling at his feet and the monk asked him why he had come. He asked, "Swaami, you must be very hungry; shall I bring you some milk? Or, if I get some flour, you can prepare chapaathis (leavened bread) yourself if you will not eat those prepared by me; no one seems to have thought of your food." That man had prema, which is a divine gift. That is more fruitful than all the knowledge packed in a library of ancient texts.

There are three types of men: the Naasthikas (non-believers), who consider Padhaartha (worldly objects) as Yatharththa (as real in themselves); Aasthikas, who believe in a will behind all that they see and experience and bow to that will and try to explore that Will so that they may adhere to it and not run counter to it; and the Aasthikas, who have realised that the objective world has only relative value, not an absolute value. The latter two will not blame any one, even the Lord, for their ills. As long as the son is a minor, he will not be entitled to the share of parental property; similarly, so long as you are a minor in saadhana, not fully grown up and able to look after your own destiny, so long, you will have to be suffering and struggling. Again, if you say,

"I" "I" "I", then you are left alone and you stumble and fall. But if you say, "Not I, but You," then all things will be added unto you.

Object of performing miracles

What exactly has been won by people who have struggled for a hundred years? They have hungered and eaten, slept and awakened, laughed and wept---but what is the result of it all on the personality or on the world? Nil. When humanity flows purposeless and meaningless into the sands, the Avathaar comes to warn and show the way, The one task has to be fulfilled in various ways; that is the Mission of the Avathaar. The Avathara thathwam (principle of Incarnation), as mentioned in the scriptures, was explained by Velury Shivaragama Shaasthry now. Let me tell you, it is only those who know the scriptures, that can understand Me. I am determined to correct you only after informing you of my credentials. That is why I am now and then announcing My Nature by means of miracles---that is, acts which are beyond human capacity and human understanding. Not that I am anxious to show off My Powers. The object is to draw you closer to Me, to cement your hearts to Me.

Getting to know Me is also a part of your destiny. The other day, on Vaikuntha Ekaadasi, when amritha (nectar) was being given by Me a few who had come weeks ago, who had witnessed the creation of amritha on the river-bed and who had taken their seats in the long line of devotees, had to get up and go just when I was approaching their line and thus, miss the chance of perhaps a lifetime. It is all earned opportunity. As a matter of fact, each one of you has to be saved: you have to escape from this net, when the opportunity comes. I shall not give you up, even if you forsake Me; for it is not in Me to forsake those who deny Me. I have come for all. Those who stray away will come again to Me, do not doubt this. I shall beckon them back to Me. I bless you that you earn the Vision of the Divine in this life itself, with this body itself.

When Raama enters the mind, kaama (desire) has no place therein.

Desire ceases, when God seizes the mind. In fact, since desire is the very stuff of which the mind is made, it becomes non-existent and you are free. This stage is called, manonigraha, mano-laya or mano-naashana ---the death of the mind, the merging of the mind or the killing of the mind.

27. Spiritual academy of man

THE study of sacred books and listening to religious discourses are meant to develop self-control and peace; but, from the confusion here which you seem to enjoy. I find that your study and listening have all been a waste, You cannot put forward as excuse the hugeness of the gathering, because if each one of you stops talking or clamouring or complaining, silence can be established that very second. Again, you cannot say that you have been waiting since early morning and therefore you have become restless. Well, what is to be said of the earnestness that melts away just when the event for which you were waiting so long has started? If each one keeps silent, though there are lakhs of people here, it would appear as if there is none. Try to keep silent.

Remember why you have come and why you have waited, whom you have come to listen.

Now it is better. That is good. That is why I always say that man's real nature is Shaantham (peace, equanimity); that, if only he tries, he can re-discover his nature inn moment. He has' only to pull himself up, to recollect his origins from Brahman, his identity with the changeless Aathma. Man may err in an uproar or be fight in quiet-calm, as you are now. Your own enthusiasm has mused this delay; for the road to the Mandhir (hall of worship) is as the organisers say, completely packed and even there, in the Mandhir there is not a square inch of vacant space! So, it was suggested that the idol could be brought to this bungalow for consecration, it could be taken later and placed in position at the Mandhir.

Do not dishonour the heritage of India Remember, Sai does not live in structures of stone or brick and mortar! He lives in soft hearts, warm with sympathy and fragrant with universal Love. Temples and image-worship have some value in stimulating the higher impulses of man, of diverting his instincts along more socially useful channels. That is why in India no chance was lost to lead man Godward. All arts were utilised to that end. Even a drunkard sways to the tune of a faintly remembered keerthana (music composition), proclaiming the Glory of God or the joy of self-realisation. Every one, 'whatever the stage of spiritual advance he may have attained, is prompted, gently nudged, to move forward. This has made India the Spiritual academy of humanity. You are privileged to live out this life in the lap of India; that is, in the lap of Vedhaantha. Remember this heritage and live in such a way that you do not dishonour it.

Do not envy the countries that are attempting to reach the Moon and Mars and to explore the reaches of outer space. Of what avail is it to master those regions while remaining slaves of every gust of malice or fear? Of what avail is it to travel at ten thousand miles per hour with a mind weighed down by dark impulses of the savage past? Inquire into the causes of the ashaanthi (lack of peace) that prevails even in the most advanced communities of the West and you will find the reason to be the wild growth of pride and greed, vice and sin. There is no fear of God or respect for age or dread of sin. They attach meaning and value only to the external symbols of riches or power; the container, not the thing contained. For example this marble image is only a container. The thing contained is Sai thathwa (essential nature). Just as a cup is the aadhaara (base support) and the milk in it is the aadheya (supported), you pour Sai thathwa in this Form and you call it Sai Baaba; you pour it in another vessel of a different form and call it Shrinivaasa, or Shiva or Krishna or Raama.

Idol worship is just the beginning of saadhana
For those in the Kindergarten of saadhana, an idol is as necessary as pictures in a spelling book.

Until you are able to recall instantly the image of a horse as soon as you see the letters h, o, r, s and e, one after another, the drawing of a picture must be held before you with those letters underneath it. So also, you must have a Form like the idol, called Sai, prominently before you in order to give shape to your loose and indefinite conception of the Divine thathwa (true state).

Once you can conceive the Sai thathwa independently without any form, or as all Forms and Names, the idol is superfluous; it can be dispensed with.

Installing this marble image in the Mandhir yonder does not mean the end of all effort for you. In fact, it is just the beginning. There are a large number of temples all over this country in various stages of ruin; not only here, but in other countries also, the same thing holds true. Why make all this noise and build another temple to be added to the list? New temples rise and old temples fade from memory and fall into decay. This is because you do not realise that the substance is the same, though it is presented in different forms and under different names. One chapter of your thapas (penance) is over; you have got this idol and you have got up this function but the next chapter is to pour your bhakthi into this idol and make it ever alive; to shape your own lives, so that you are fit to stand before Sai with folded hands. Only the pure and the holy can offer themselves fully to God.

Do your best first and seek God's help
I do not like people wasting the precious moments of their limited years of life in idle talk of vain pursuits Nor do I like cowardly hesitation. Act; act with all your might and with all your mind; make full use of the skill, capacity courage and-confidence that you are endowed with.

Then God will bless you. You must have heard of a Raamabhaktha (devotee of Raama) who sat on the road side by his upturned cart, wailing his bad luck and calling on Raama to lift the cart into position. Raama did not appear to raise the cart and fix the wheel. He therefore began chiding his faith itself and to doubt the experience of the sages who describe Him as the Ocean of Mercy. Raama came into his presence then; but only to tell him. "You fool, I have entrusted you with some intelligence and strength. Use them. Put your shoulder to the task now before you. When you have done your best and that best is found not enough, then call on Me; I am ever ready to reinforce your exertions with My Grace." The Bhaktas of Raama, with His Name on their lips and His Form before their eyes, lifted mountains and bridged the sea. You who call yourselves Aatmabhaktas are too weak even to carry about your bodies, not to speak of the burden of your kith and kin.

 Having installed Sai in your village, you must grow in prema (love), for Sai is Premaswarupam (love personified). Sa---means Sarvashakthi (All-powerful), Sarvasaakshi (the Witness in All); Avi means mother; Baaba means father. The Prema of Sai is the prema characteristic of the Father and the Mother; not the earthly Father and Mother but of the Father and Mother who are the Witness of every thought, word and deed in every being. Respect the Father and Mother who are concrete and then you transfer that type of respect to the Abstract Father or Mother or Guardian---God. Learn to instal the unseen Lord in your heart by installing the see-able image in the Mandhir. Proceed from the sthoola (gross) to the sookshma (subtle).
 Discover Truth by exercise of discrimination Just as patients require a doctor, bhaktas require some Name and Form to which they can run for consolation and courage and advice. So it is for your sake, as a great step in your saadhana, in your progress towards internal peace and harmony, that this installation is made by Me now.
 "Wherever My name is sung, there I instal Myself" it has been said.
 The Divinity you have as the core of your being, you ignore; at the same time, you seek it in others. That is the tragedy. You insult yourself by feeling helpless, weak and inferior. Cowardice and self-condemnation - these do not become a spark of the Divine Flame. Your Sathya can be discovered by you by a little exercise of viveka (discrimination). Born in delusion, breathing in delusion, grovelling in delusion man is unaware of his heritage and feels incapable of attaining it.
 He is desperate, seeing no means of escape; every effort to achieve shaanthi (peace) entangles him further and tighter in the coils and of a shaanthi. Like flowers of variegated hue, each redolent with fragrance, men are all basically of the same genus of Brahmam. The fragrance arises from the Divine Essence which is the real reason for existence; for every one has to realise that Essence and thus end the series of births and deaths. Like a student leaving college once the degree is awarded, once the Truth is realised, man has liberation. He can leave his college and his study and all that bother.

 You have to rely on your own resources But you must get the Degree. Why are you averse to making the effort needed to pass? Instead of that, you run after this teacher or that. You extol him to the sky and call yourselves his followers.
 Of what avail is his victory to you? He has achieved; well what about you? His achievement is entered in his account at the bank as his deposit and he can draw cheques upon it. But can you draw from it?
 There are even today great sages in the Himaalayas, I know, who are Witnesses of everything and whose prema embraces the whole of Humanity but that does not help you; you have to trek the path alone and rely on your own resources. They can provide only guide maps and encouragement. You have come to Repalle today from the hundred distant villages and you know that you have to go back to the places from where you came. So too, it is inevitable that you have to return to the place from where this journey through birth and death started, namely, Brahman.
 There is only one Sun, but he is reflected in a million tanks and wells and pots. Paramaatma (God) is One and His reflections, are the Jevis (individuals, each with the Aathma (soul) apparent therein. There are lakhs of people here now and in each one of you now, Swaami is shining in the heart. That is the real Aathmaanandham (Soul full bliss). Keep it fresh for ever and foster it carefully. That is the secret of Shaanthi.
 Installation of Shri Sai Baaba idol in the Mandhir, Repalle, 2- 12-

 28. The search for quiet THE name "Sanaathana" that you have adopted for your Workers Co-operative Industrial Institute is strange, even for the Department over which the Minister who is here presides. But it is that name which has brought Me here. You are all Sanaathana (eternal), though you appear noothana (new), on account of this new dress you are wearing. This you can discover only through vidhya (learning) that instils discrimination and emphasises basic values.
 Your Chief Minister said this morning when this Society was formally inaugurated in

Shriraamapuram, that all our troubles arise out of ignorance and that the spread of education will automatically remove them. I had to correct him and say that all our troubles are due to the fact that the educated are not educated at all in the subjects that really matter. They have neither viveka (discrimination), nor vinaya (humility), nor vishwaasa (trust). They do not honour or render gratitude to parents. They laugh at those who turn towards God and those who give the world a minor place in the scheme of things. They do not appreciate the simple pleasures of meditation, of the recital of the Name of the Lord, of silence and service. Still, they are burdened with heavy degrees and titles which proclaim that they are 'educated.' That is the tragedy. The educated have no iota of the peace that the uneducated have! They live in greater discontent and misery and are tossed about without a rudder in a sea of troubles. They do not know anything about the source of Peace and Aanandha that they carry about within themselves; they allow the inner consciousness to go dry by neglect; they are not aware of the means to irrigate it with the waters of prema and grow therein the fruits of prashanthi (tranquillity). Without faith in God, man is blind. They read books but do not correct their modes of thinking and living. The shelves of the dispensary are full of drugs; but how can your illness be cured if you simply learn the catalogue by heart, or even the pharmacopoeia? You have to select the drug you need, drink it, imbibe it, assimilate it and counteract the cause of illness. For example; I have now been moving around this Bangalore and other places for more than 22 years; but though lakhs of people have seen Me, those who have understood My Nature are very few. This is because the simple exercises of sravana, manana and nididhyaasana (listening, reflection and concentration) are not practised by people; they do not know how to recognise Divinity in themselves or others. They simply prod and exhort each other to serve all as God's own Forms. This has become mere conventional talk devoid of inspiration or meaning. In India, from very ancient times, the Glory, the Divinity, the sanctity of man has been proclaimed and the way of recognising it has been taught. Only those who have learnt them deserve to be the sons and daughters of this land. Others are like the kokil birds, the cuckoos that are born in the nests of crows; their place of birth is India, no doubt, but they are basically aliens, of a different species altogether. Guru Naanak said that without faith in God, man is blind; without it, you are moving corpses. Your life might be as grand, as beautiful, as rich as the Taj Mahaal---but remember the Taj is but a tomb! Whatever the method of worship, whichever the Name or Form, it is Faith that matters; it is that which gives life and energy for higher things. Do ritual worship for the sake of humanity. There is this panicky talk about the Ashta-grahakoota---of the calamities that the conjunction of these 8 planets will rain upon mankind. Like the tail of Hanumaan with the flame at its tip, which lengthened on and on, setting all Lanka on fire, this panic is increasing every moment and setting every one on edge. Believe Me, nothing will happen; no, there is no danger at all. Of course, in this terror, people are everywhere doing vajinas and puujas, which are by themselves good. They give you some courage and peace of mind. So far, so good. Even among these, I like the puuja that is done not for the sake of the individual but for the sake of humanity. By all means, do puuja in order to promote the happiness and peace of living beings. Develop that love for men everywhere. That is My mission too, My resolution, My sankalpa (Will), My deeksha (vow)---the planting of love in every human heart. The Lord is prema; prema is paramaathma. If you fill your heart with prema, hatred, envy, greed and egoism cannot enter it. There will be no pralaya (devastation) for a prema-filled earth. The only chaos that may happen in February next is the chaos of failure for many candidates in the General Elections! No one else need worry over the conjunction. Chaos or no chaos your duty is to pray for the welfare of the world and to work for it as far as lies in your power. Pray for Prashanthi for all; do your bit for it by not adding to the Ashaanthi (disturbance) that exists. Every one is basically God; that is to say, basically, you. He is the Inner Motive in all. Every Indian knows this in the depths of his heart; he has imbibed it with the mother's milk; that knowledge, and action according to that knowledge, are the hall-marks of the Indian. That should make the genuine Indian fearless; for the Aathma, which he really is, cannot be affected by pain or death or joy or accident or calamity. What is the use of searching for quiet, available only in the silence of the Inner Awareness, in the jungle of Prakrithi (world)? It is like searching for something you have lost in your room under the street lamp. Your "self" you have lost; search for it in you that is the path of wisdom.

25-12-1961

Your mind too is like the jinn; it will destroy you if left idle; so, order it to move up and down the pillar of Soham--- "He-I," "I am He" "I am that."

Sathya Sai Baba

29. Nayana, not ayana

SHAASTRY spoke in detail of the importance of the Uttharaayana Day. The day has an outer and an inner significance, the inner having greater value for aspirants for spiritual progress. I do not attach much value to the outer meaning: the Sun taking a northward direction from today; the six months from now on being holier than the six that ended today and therefore, as Shaastry said, the Uttharaayana better suited for saadhana. Man's life must be a perpetual saadhana; any day is a good day for starting saadhana, whether it falls in the Dakshinaayana or Uttharaayana

(southward or northward movements of Sun). One need not wait for the Sun to turn North. The months and the ayanas (Sun's passage towards north and south of equator) are all related to Prakrithi (subjective world), and so they have only relative value.

Uttharaayana is a quality of the Nayana (the eye); it is matter of dhrishti--attitude, point of view.

It is not an Ayana (half year term). When your dhrishti (sight) is on Brahman, it is Uttharaayana; when it is on Prakrithi, it is Dakshinaayana. When you have developed

Utthamaguna (excellent quality), every day is Uttharaayana whatever the Panchaanga (almanac) may say. When you have fever, the tongue will be bitter; when you are healthy, you know all tastes. The bitter tongue is the Dakshinaayana, the sweet tongue is the Uttharaayana.

To associate it with the Tropics of Cancer and Capricorn is just a convention.

Avathaar comes for the protection of all with good virtues

The astronomical Uttharaayana comes to you whether you strive for it or not; it is part of the law of nature. But for the real Uttharaayana, you must make efforts, tremendous efforts. Know that there are only two entities: the substance and the shadow, (or rather, only One, and its appearance, produced by ignorance), the Aatma and the An-aathma-- the seer and the seen the rope and the snake. When this knowledge becomes part of the mental make-up, it liberates you from maaya and you see Kailaasha at the straight and hard but the Goal is glorious; it is nothing less than Illumination. It is when people forget this Goal that the Avathaar comes to save them.

The Avathaar comes when there is yet a remnant of good men, yet a trace of Dharma; for what is the use of doctor when the patient has collapsed? When a large number of good men are afflicted with the fear for the survival of goodness, then the Lord incarnates to feed their drooping spirits and revive faith and courage. "Parithraanaaya Saadhoonaam" in the Geetha does not mean the "protection of saadhus or ascetics;" it means the "protection of all who have saadhu virtues;"

'saadhu' means 'good.' Good virtues might be found even in animals and insects and worms. He will guard and guide even such. He comes to promote Dharma; and virtue is the foundation of

The worldly outlook will deceive you and land you in grief. You do not know which articles will satisfy your inner cravings; you try to possess whatever attracts your eye. When you crave for the thought of the Lord and the company of the Godly, then you are in Uttharaayana. Bheeshma too was in that mood. He prayed "Asatho maa sath gamaya"---From this transient world of decay, lead me to the everlasting world of Bliss; "Thamaso maa iyothir gamaya"---Give me the effulgence of Thy Grace and illumine my soul with truth; "Mruthyor maa amritham gamaya"---

Save me from the torture of birth and death, destroy the cravings of the mind which produce the seeds of birth and lead me to Immortality. That prayer and that yearning of Bheeshma gave him the vision of Krishna when he passed away. That was the real Uttharaayana for him.

Use the body well for the purpose given Jeewa (individual) and Deva (Divine) are the two rails along which the engine manas is dragging the coaches of Vishaya Vaasana (attachment to sense objects) along.

Each coach contains the items of luggage each one has, viz., buddhi, antahkarana (intellect, inner senses), etc. Aathma is the driver of the engine; if the coupling with the engine is not well connected, the coaches will be left loose on the line. Faith and shraddha (trust) are the couplings; see that they are fixed tight.

They do not fix themselves, remember. You have to use the strength and the intellect awarded to you. Grace will be granted only then. Spend the Shakthi (energy) you are endowed with; then pray for Raamashakthi. Raama or the Lord will then bless you; if you ask for one, He will grant you a hundred. This is the Karmadeha (the working body) given to you; use it well for the purpose given.

I see many people here who have come in the special buses which take them round to many holy places. I shall tell them mine words: When you reach a holy place you should entertain only holy thought. On seeing a doctor, you remember your illness; when you see a lawyer, you wish to consult him on some problem of property or personal spite; when you see a temple, you are reminded of the Force that animates the universe. Your tour should not be a Vinodha-prayaana (travel for amusement) but a Viveka-prayaana (travel for using discrimination) for you. Do not use such pilgrim buses for going on picnics; do not seek to purchase vessels and clothes and rarities in the shops of the towns you visit; pay attention more to the need for filling your minds with holy experiences over which you can ruminate after returning to the quiet of your home.

When you are in the Kshethra (holy place), think of the Kshethrajina (divine dweller of the place).

Move in the midst of the sacred and sanctifying

Load your bus with thoughts of the Glory of God, not with tinsel and tin cans. Again, do not get involved with the bad traits that may be found in the places to which you go. Seek the company of the good, move in the midst of the sacred and the sanctifying. That is what you go so far for.

The shelves of the hospital are full of all types of medicines: pills, poisons, powders, emulsions, lotions, mixtures, etc. You should ask not for the sweetest or the most attractively packed drug, but the drug that you need for the illness you suffer from. So too, let the holy place have a thousand other attractions; do not run after them. Concentrate on the thing you have come for.

The bhogi (enjoyer) and the rogi (the sickly) should be transformed into the yogi (contemplative saint); take the drug from the dispensary which will make you that.

Become also fit for the Vision of God that you seek in the temples. Go humbly, with prema in your heart for all creation; take the Hrudhayapushpa (heart-flower), full of the fragrance of prema, the Mano-phala (mind-fruit) uncontaminated by the pests of greed and egoism; become sweet in word, deed and thought so that you can dedicate yourself to the service of God's Plan.

A person with faith in God will not be moved by panic, as some people are, at the approaching Ashtagrahakoota (conjunction of eight planets). I assure you there will be no extra danger to the world as a result of that conjunction. No additional calamity will happen; why, the A-shaanthi that now exists will even become a little less! When the Avathaar has come, why fear like this?

Why dread imaginary dangers?

One more thing: you will have seen the announcement that you should not bring to Me fruits, flowers, etc. Some of you, I know, are sad that I have announced so.

But let Me tell you: Come to. Me with empty hands; I shall fill your hands with gifts and Grace. If your hands are full, what am I to fill them with?

Any balance of karma-consequence will involve some years of imprisonment in the body. The Shaasthras advise man to wipe off the balances by four steps: by scotching all sparks from the fire; by getting rid of all signs, symptoms and causes of fever; by paying off all balance of debt; and by suffering off all consequences of karma.

Sathya Sai Baaba

30. Immanent in you

You have heard four people speaking now on the magazine,

'Sanaathana Saarathi' and the value derived from it by readers. I know that you have been squatting for an hour or so and you will come again for longer sessions lair in the day which will continue the whole night. Let Me tell you that far from sympathising with you, I commend your endurance, for such hardships make your lives worthwhile. To call it a hardship is a sign of delusion and ignorance of values. Just now the entire country is under the shadow of a fear, the fear of Ashtagrahakoota---the conjoint effect of eight planets that converge in one line for some short time.

In order to ward off the evil, persons who have so far never spent a pie on charity are spending lavishly for yajnas, puujas and the propitiation of planetary powers. So far, so good; let some money flow from one pocket to another which is more needy. Let money circulate.

Let the spirit of charity grow, even out of panic. But calamity, danger, death cannot be avoided for all time; they are inevitable factors of life; you have to learn to live bravely with them. This can be accomplished only by uninterrupted prayer, not by spurts of worship actuated by sudden fear. Purify your hearts, your thoughts, feelings, emotions, speech;

strengthen your nobler impulses; then, no panic can un-nerve you; nothing can shake your stability, your prashaanthi (inner peace). Lord's leela to reveal the nature of bhakthi. Your prayers will be heard and answered; the Lord has no distinction of big or small, of high or low. There was in Bengal a bhaktha named Maadhavadhaasa, who realised when his wife died, that he had lost his griha (home), for his grihalakshmi (wife) had passed away; so he gave all his riches to the poor, donned a gerua (yellow) robe and wandered alone as a pilgrim to the Jagannaatha Shrine. There he did such deep penance that the concrete image soon became the Abstract Reality and the Abstract Reality became a Perpetual Vision. He lost all sense of time and space, of Chith and A chith (awareness and ignorance). Then the Lord, with Subhadra, His Shakthi-aspect, moved towards him and placed before him the gold plate used by the priests to keep food in front of Jagannaatha in the sanctum sanctorum. When Maadhavadhaasa awoke to his gross surroundings, he saw the gold plate with the pile of delicious food upon it; he ate his fill and returned to his inner paradise which he had left for a while. Meanwhile, the plate was reported lost, assumed to be stolen, and discovered by the seashore near Maadhavadhaasa, who was promptly arrested and led to the lock-up by some very efficient policemen. He was beaten mercilessly but did not seem to mind it a bit. The chief priest that night had a dream in which Jagannaatha asked him not to bring food for the Lord again into the shrine, for: "You bring food for Me, and when I eat it, you start beating Me!" Then he realised that it was all the Lord's Leela to demonstrate the devotion of Maadhavadhaasa and teach others the real nature of bhakthi. Some scholars and Pandiths of Puri did not feel happy at this sudden rise to fame of a stranger from Bengal; so they called Maadhavadhaasa into their midst and challenged him to an intellectual duel. Maadhavadhaasa was not a Pandith of that type: he had learnt the Shaasthras only as a staff to help him walk, as a guide to action; not as a stick to beat others with. So he accepted defeat even before the bout began and signed a statement to that effect, which the leading Pandith was only too glad to accept because Maadhavadhaasa had a reputation for scholarship which was really frightening.

The Lord will not allow a devotee to be harmed. The Pandith hurried to Khaasi with that token of victory; he waved it before a gathering of scholars and demanded that they should all pay him homage as superior even to Maadhavadhaasa. But the Lord will not allow His bhaktha to be humiliated. When the signed statement was opened and read, they were all amazed to find that it was a statement declaring that it was Maadhavadhaasa who had achieved victory and it was the Pandith who had signed underneath acknowledging his own defeat! The Lord will not be silent when the bhaktha is insulted or harmed. But, remember, the word is bhaktha. Well, who is a bhaktha and how can you claim the privileges of that position? Unless you have unshakable faith, you do not deserve that name. If you are rooted in that faith, success is yours, without a doubt But do not think that I am angry or displeased with you on that account. This evening, the Lingodhbhava (emergence of egg-shaped stone of Shiva) is My Duty, My responsibility, rather My Nature which must reveal itself on this holy day. I gave Kasthuri and Thirumalachar shawls and blessed them at the beginning of this meeting since they wrote My Life in English and Thelugu: the book called "Sathyam Shivam Sundaram." Some of you might have wondered why I liked the publication of this book on My Life. Well, I like the production of all kinds of things and so, why should I not like this? I responded to the prayers of devotees and allowed them to write it. "Ramayathi ithi Raama"---He who pleases is Raama. The joy of the bhaktha satisfies the Lord; the joy of the Lord is the reward of the bhaktha. Truth is the basic reality of you all. The title, "Sathyam Shivam Sundaram" is full of meaning. It speaks of Me as immanent in every one of you, remember. Sathyam (Truth) is the basic reality of you all; that is why you resent being called a liar. The real "you" is innocent; he will not accept an imputation that is false. The real "you" is Shivam--joy, happiness, auspiciousness---but not shavam (corpse). It is Shubham (beautiful), Nithyam (permanent), Aanandham (bliss). How then can you bear being called otherwise? The real "you" is Beauty, and so you resent being called ugly. The aathma has got entangled in the body which it does not like; it is weighed down by shame when you identify it with the body and attribute to it the weaknesses and deficiencies of that physical vehicle.

The 'Sanaathana Saarathi' is the result of My Sankalpa (resolve).

My Uthsaha (venture), My Aanandha (bliss). Nothing can stand in the way once I have decided on any step. When the Paramaathma thathwa (principle of Supreme Soul) assumes human form and appears, not with Mahaa-shakthi and Mahaa-swaruupa (Supreme Power and Form of the Supreme), but with Maaya-shakthi and Maaya-swaruupa (Power of illusion and Form of illusion), it is difficult to comprehend it, especially when you are in an uncertain vacillating mood. Once you understand the purpose and the procedure, all doubts will cease.

Prema is the characteristic of the Lord; the love that you bear to yourself is itself the love that is the nature of the Aathma, which is the Lord. That is why I place all emphasis on Prema, in its various forms of affection, filial piety brotherhood, fraternalism, philanthropy, etc My Message, My Mission is Prema, Prema, Prema; nothing else. That is the substance, remember, of the Vedhas and of Dharma. When that fills the heart, all fear and all vice will vanish.

31. Spend your days with Shiva

LOOKING at this vast sea of faces, I do not feel like speaking to you; I wish to derive Aanandha by just looking at you from here; looking at your devotion and your faith. Your looking at Me, Me looking at you; what else is needed for aanandha (bliss) to well up?

You yearn to hear my words and listen to My Voice also. That is the measure of your Love. You are so accustomed to hear people speak, that if you do not hear, your ears ache! If they do not speak, their tongues become restless and even restive. They are both so used to activity that it has now become difficult for you to sit quietly for a few minutes, communing with the silence within you!

Man is called so because he has the capacity to enjoy manana or inward contemplation of the meaning and significance of what he has heard: not only this capacity, but also the urge to the inner life. But you have not yet emerged out of the stage of shravana, (listening); the teachers too have not progressed beyond the stage of pravachana (talks); and so you crave for My sambhaashana (discourse) today.

Raama Sharma recited some fine stanzas composed by him on Shiva and on the means of winning His Grace, evidently because the day is Shivaraathri. The poems are so full of sweetness that you should not discard even the rind. He described the Lord as the indwelling spirit of every living thing and called upon you to practise the unremitting chanting of the Name of the Lord.

Judge your own saadhana unaided

However, some of you might question, why. Some have come to Me and asked this very question: "We have been engaged in this saadhana (spiritual practice) for years now; we have written the Name lakhs of times, we have repeated it ceaselessly for many years, but we have not succeeded! Why have we not reached the goal?" I want each one of you to search within yourself for the answer; examine your own effort and achievement and judge your own saadhana, unaided by Me. Have you yearned, have you pined, have you wept for the Lord as Thyaagaraaja did, for example? Have you shed tears of contrition tears of exultation, while repeating His Name so full of sweetness and beauty; while visualising His Form so full of loveliness and charm? You might have wept; but who knows for what; who knows the impulse that swept you into that sadness? Were they tears shed out of fear or greed or pride, or because the Lord was not near?

A little child sits with a book of the Upanishadhs on its lap and turns over the pages, intent on the printed lines and watching the curious types, deliberately, slowly and with great care; a saadhu (monk) too does the same. Can you equate the two and say they are both engaged in the same act? The boy is unaware of the treasure he holds in his hand; the saadhu gets into immediate contact with the spiritual power the lines convey. Find out for yourself whether your saadhana too has been purposeful and sincere, wakeful and worthwhile.

Raama Sharma in his poem sang of Saaveesha, the Saayi as Isha or Ishwara or Shiva Saayi as he is fond of addressing Me; he spoke of the great, well-nigh immeasurable, indescribable joy of merging with Shiva-Saayi and of the bhakti and prema necessary for that consummation. When he was describing it all, I could see that you were thrilled. The exhilaration out of which that song was born and the joy he himself experienced while reading, it before Me and you, is a sure means of attaining that goal, let Me assure you. Whoever has the enthusiasm, the steadfastness, the determination to reach the goal will certainly succeed. Cultivate that faith in ultimate success; never despair or cavil or doubt. That is My advice to one and all. Success is your birthright and you must get it, sooner rather than later. Be concerned about your goal and your ideal. Above all, do not give room for the cancer of doubt. Why argue over Me, over this point or that concerning Me? Who exactly is the Baaba, you discuss and debate! What does it matter to you who I happen to be? You are concerned about your goal, your ideal, your experience, your effort is it not? Why then worry about My Origin, My Nature, My Mystery, My Miracle? The basic thing is the hand, the cup it holds is secondary. The Aadheya (supported) is less in importance than the Aadhaara (support), the Basic Reality, the Pure Existence. When you cannot reach down to your own Basic Reality, why waste time in exploring the essence of Godhead? As a matter of fact, you can understand Me only when you have understood yourself, your own Basic Truth. The gross can grasp only the gross; its categories of knowledge can proceed only as far as that. Fish die when they have to breathe the air above the water. Children can learn the alphabet only with the help of boards, slates, pencils and pieces of chalk. Saadhakas (spiritual aspirants), going through the primers of spirituality, need symbols, images and rituals. You cannot discard Name and Form until you transmute yourself into the Nameless and Formless; just as the fish needed water and could not come up into the atmosphere, so long as they did not transmute themselves into land animals, giving up their aquatic nature. That is the reason why the Nameless and Formless has often to assume Name and Form, and come before humanity with limitations imposed by its own Will, so that it may be loved, respected, worshipped, listened to and followed; so that the purpose of humanity may be fulfilled. "I give only one thing, Bliss through Love" A wooden elephant, however artistically perfect and lifelike, is but a toy; it cannot create the awareness of the genuine elephant. A library stacked with books is incapable of impaling the authentic touch of the living guru; you may trek to ten temples and then, at last, arrive here, believing this to be the eleventh. That is as fruitless as wandering from the tenth library to an eleventh. You must see, hear, study, observe, experience, reflect; then only can you understand Me. You will learn then that I am prema itself; that I give only one thing, Aanandha, through the prema. My task is to distribute solace, courage and shaanthi. That is to say, My characteristics are the ancient authentic ones; only the Manifested Form is new. My desire---if I can put it in so many words---is this: More and more should yearn for Me. The desire could be realised only if I assume this Form and come among you. Those among you who have been following the unfolding of My story will have discovered this by now; though even to the best of you only a fraction of the mystery is revealed. You are like a Thelugu audience sitting through a Thamil picture, or vice versa. The nuances, the subtler significances, the deeper meanings are all beyond the grasp. My language, My role, My career, My purpose can be understood in a general way only by sitting through the entire film, watching earnestly and vigilantly and trying to get at the meaning of every word and act with patient attention. Attaining good character is very important. As a matter of fact, language is an impediment in dealing with Me. All languages have a place in the concourse of men, bringing out their feelings, hiding their weaknesses, shaping their thoughts etc., but I speak and listen to the language of the soul. The words uttered by the tongues of men confuse and confound; they breed factions and sects; they erect walls; the words that emanate from the soul radiate love and concord. Saadhana has to be done after attaining a good character; that is very important. In the midst of impurity, wickedness and evil, spiritual effort will be fruitless. It is as the jewel in the head of the cobra, in the centre of poison and cruelty. There are some who come here and earn peace and joy, but after years of sharing and serving, they fall a prey to waywardness and fall back into the old morass, declining to such an extent that they deny their very experience and play false to their own conscience! Not that I am anxious that they should worship Me or adhere to Me; far from it. I only ask that Truth must be proclaimed, regardless of the company you have fallen into; there must be courage of conviction, which will help you to overcome the temptation to deny your cherished joys.

The Lord is like the diamond
There are again some others who are swept off their feet by hysterical demonstrations by certain weak minded individuals, which are described as My speaking through them or acting through them! Take it from Me, I am not given to such absurdities! I do not use others as My media; I have no need to. I do not swing from side to side and prattle! Why, even those who torture their bodies and suffer the pains of asceticism for years, until ant hills overwhelm them and they become as stiff as tree-stumps, find it difficult to realise the Lord. How then can these idlers, who eat their fill and wander about as slaves of their senses, cam that status so cheap? Their gestures, words and actions are hollow and vain; those who bum incense before them and revere them are turning away from Me and running after falsehood. For, how can the Full ever dally with the paltry and wear the habiliment of the trifling? When God has come assuming Form, take it from Me, it will not fill inferior vessels or embellish tawdry stuff or enter impure bodies. So, do not extol these falsities and rain those unfortunates. Deal with them severely and they will be cured. Those who have seen the brilliance of the diamond will not be misled by glass trinkets. The Lord is like the diamond, call it by any name. But a trinket cannot be turned into a diamond, however loud the praise and however adamant the claim. Uddhalaka, a contemporary of Chaithanya, chose to worship the Lord as the Manifested, as Prakrithi (Nature). The Creator he chose to worship through his creation; he adored the container for the thing contained. In short, he adored Raadha, or Dhara (mother earth) in reverse, the Prakrithi aspect, the feminine principle of Krishna, the Purusha, the inseparable other! His yearning was so moving, his thapas (penance) was so compelling that one day, while a bangleseller was trudging along the bank of the Saraswathi River by the side of the village, he found a damsel washing clothes in the bathing ghat. The Lord is anxious to assuage your pain The Lord is as anxious to assuage your pain as you are anxious to secure his Grace to get rid of it. You may not know this but I know, for I feel it. She called him near and selecting many pairs of bangles, she wore them all. At last, when he asked for the cash, she said, "Oh, I forgot all about the money that is due to you; please go to the house of Uddhalaka in the village; any one will point it out to you. Ask him; tell him that his daughter purchased them and he will surely pay. Or, wait, you may tell him that he will find the cash behind the picture of Raadha in his shrine room." The man took her at her word and hurried to the village and the house of her parents. Uddalaka was amazed at the tale for he had no children. In fact, he had not even married. But the bangleseller insisted on his looking behind the picture of Radha because he said the girl was incapable of deceit. Uddalaka denied having ever placed any cash there. How could he use that space of all places for keeping cash! But just to satisfy the bangle-seller, he peeped there and, lo! he got a knotted piece of cloth containing just the cash needed to pay for the bangles. Then, in a flash, he realised that it must be Raadha herself who had sent the man and he fell at the feet of the pedlar and ran with him to the bathing ghat, overcome with joy and thankfulness. For an instant he saw a glorious vision above the waters: the right arm of Raadha, with the bangles scintillating in the morning sun. He knew the arm was raised to bless him; he felt it was calling him; he flew out of the mortal coil into her Lap. You can worship even Prakrithi (Nature); there is no harm, provided you realise that the Lord is immanent in it, giving it name and form and value; that the cloth is just yarn, the pot is just mud, the jewel is just gold. Why, you can worship your parents and realise the Lord through that saadhana. They are your creators and guides and teachers and protectors and by idealising them, you can grasp the Truth of the Lord, the Primeval Parent. God is all Love at all times Even if you are not able to conceive the idea of a Lord or a God, you must be able to know what Love is by experience, is it not? You have experienced the love of your parents, of a friend, of a partner or of a brother or sister, or towards your own children. That love is itself a spark of God, who is all Love, who is all the Love in all the worlds at all times. Call upon your mother and the love she bears towards you and even if your physical mother cannot come to your rescue, some Mother or the Supreme Mother herself will certainly hurry towards you. There is a fine story to illustrate this: One dark night when Shiva and Paarvathi were journeying through the sky, they saw a man perched on the branch of a tree, about to fall on the ground through, sheer exhaustion of limbs. Paarvathi pleaded on his behalf and wanted that Shiva should save him; and Shiva preferred that She should save him, instead! Meanwhile, the fall became imminent and so they decided that if while falling the man shouted "Amma (mother) ," Paarvathi should hasten to arrest his fall and if he shouted, "Appa (father)," Shiva should help and see that no bones are broken. The man fell, but he shouted neither Amma nor Appa, but Ayyo (sigh of misery)! And so he had to be left severely alone! "Do not be false to yourself or to Me" Of coupe, it is all a question of deep-rooted taints or traits or attitudes. You draw from the bank only according to what you have put in; you have to study your pass-book before you write out a cheque or calculate your assets. Go on, pile up your assets; do not feverishly exhaust them by recklessness. People, unfortunately, take greater pleasure in liquidating their assets than in building them up. It is the bane of the times that they revel in destruction and recoil from construction.

When a Committee is engaged in some constructive work, members find the work uninteresting and they stay away. If the task set is to pull down some one or other institution, more members are eager to join the fray. -So, you should keep your viveka (wisdom) intact and discriminate between the destructive and constructive impulses. Do not listen to destructive criticisms and cynicisms, which are the poisons eating into the vitals of spiritual life today. Bear witness to the truth of your own experience; do not be false to yourself, or to Me. My name is Sathya Sai; it means, "He Who reclines on Truth."

I am reminded now of past events, events in my previous body. Even then, I had Sathya or Truth as my Support. A wrestler challenged Me then for a fight and he was defeated before a large gathering of villagers. Pained by the insult, he invited Baaba for a second tussle the next day, so that he might win back his lost reputation. The man swore that if defeated again, he would wear a long rough kafni and move about with his head covered in cloth. He dared Baaba too to swear likewise. Baaba was in no mood to enter the arena again and he was quite prepared to concede the fellow the victory he craved. So he accepted defeat and himself donned the kafni and the kerchief. The wrestler felt great remorse and his insolence melted away. He appealed to Baaba to resume his usual style of dress and released him from the obligation. But Baaba stuck to his word. He was Sathya Itself, then, as He is now. He wore the new attire.

Truth is the very nature of Sai

I am reminded also of another instance. Some friends of Justice Rege came one day, a mother and her little son. After an hour or so at the Dwaarakamaayi, they went to a Puraanic recital in the village where the Pandith, much to the exasperation of the child, described Baaba as an impostor and a fraud. The child insisted on the mother coming away from the place; it ran towards Baaba and told him the whole story, when Baaba asked them why they came back in such a hurry from the recital. Baaba laughed and said, "Yes, I am an ordinary man, not the Divine Power that you take me to be." But the child could not be put off. It declared that Baaba was God. Baaba replied, "I am not God, little chap. See, my clothes are torn; I have only two hands; God should have four, isn't it?" But the boy was in no mood to agree. He declared that He was God, in spite of the two hands which He then seemed to lack. Even while they were arguing thus some others arrived, exulting over a miracle which they witnessed. A child had slipped from the top floor of a house and escaped unhurt. Baaba told them, "Yes, I held it in my four arms." The boy jumped at the words and said, "Now you yourself agree that you have four hands and so you are God." Baaba clasped the child to His bosom and taking it inside, He gave him a Vision of the Lord with four hands. Such was the adherence to Truth even in the previous body. It is not adherence, it is the very Nature of Sai. Spiritual endeavour is an inescapable task for all You must learn the significance not only of My name, but even of yours. You are all given names redolent with Divine Fragrance and you should draw inspiration and strength from them.

Swaami Abhedaanandha said this evening at the meeting that he would prefer to be called Sathya Sai Charanaanandha and that he had written to Me about that desire a fortnight ago. But his name teaches that he should not posit any distinction between him and Me. It must be an abheda (nondistinct) relationship. He has to practise unity, non-distinction. This is what I wrote to him; "Learn the Lesson your present name teaches, that is enough." So too, you should accept your names, not as labels or means of identification or distinction, but as guides for conduct, as focuses for spiritual endeavour.

Endeavour. That is the main thing, that is the inescapable task for all mortals. Even those who deny God today will have one day to tread the pilgrim road, melting their hearts out in tears of travail. If you make the slightest effort to progress along the path of liberation, the Lord will help you a hundred-fold. Shivaraathri conveys that hope to you. The Moon, which is the presiding deity of the mind of man, wanes, until on the fourteenth day after Full Moon, it is just a tiny curve of glimmering glow. The mind too must be starved into that condition, so that man becomes free. Spend all the days with Shiva and the conquest of the mind is easy. Spend the fourteenth day of the waning moon with Shiva, reaching the climax of spiritual effort on that final day, and success is yours. That is why all the Chaturdasis (Fourteenth days of the dark half of every month) are called Shivaraathris (Shiva's nights); that is why the Chaturdasi of the Magha month is called Mahaa Shivaraathri. This is a day of special dedication to Shiva, and since so many of you here and elsewhere pray to Shiva. The Lingha is emanating from Me for you all to receive the Grace and the Bliss of the Great Moment of Linghodbhava (Emergence of the Linga).

Discover for yourself your stage of spiritual development, to which class in the school you would fit in. Then determine to proceed from that class to the next higher one. Strive your best and you will win the Grace of God.

Do not bargain or despair. One step at a time is enough, provided it is towards the goal, not away from it.

Beware of the pride of wealth, of scholarship, of status, that drag you into egoism. Do not seek the faults of others; seek your own. Be happy when you see others prosper; share your joy with others.

32. Welcome the tests

WHILE Bairaagi Shaasthry and Narasaraaju were speaking, I observed many of you were clearing your throats aloud; your retention should have been devoted to clearing the ears and removing the cobwebs from the heart. What has the throat to do with the imbibing of the lessons their speeches conveyed? Just as this mike should be fixed in front of me, near me but not too near the mouth to transmit the voice, so too, the heart should be held right, straight and open to receive the teachings transmitted. If the heart is turned in some other direction, the teaching will not be recorded clear and distinct; it gets warped.

Narasimharaaju reminds Me of Shyaamakavi from Bangalore who died some years ago. He had deep scholarship, vast spiritual experience, poetic talent and steady devotion. Whatever he touched ended in failure, but never for an instant did he throw the blame on the Lord. On the other hand, he became more intimately attached to Him. The blows of fate did not shake his faith; he stood like a rock, amidst the angry waves. The mind was trained by him to pass through joy and grief unscathed.

The real nature of man is equanimity

The discovery of Truth--that is the unique mission of Man. Man is a minute of Maaya and Maadhava; the Maaya (illusion) throws a mist which aids the Maadhava (God); but through the action of the healthy impulses inherited from acts performed while in previous bodies or through the cleansing one by austerities in this body or through the Grace of the Lord Himself, Maaya melts away; for it is just a mist which flees before the sun. Then Nara (human) is transformed into Naaraayana (God) and this Bhuuloka (world) is elevated into a Prashaanthi Nilayam (place of tranquillity). The illumination of viveka (discrimination) will remove the darkness which hides the Divine essence of Man. Today, man hopes to dispel darkness by the sword, the gun and the bomb, while what is wanted is just a lamp. How can darkness be swept away by darkness, hatred by hatred, ignorance by deeper and vaster ignorance? The very lust for victory promotes darkness. Leave all thoughts of conquest aside; strive to know the Truth and when that is known, false not, ns fondly held by you will fall off of their own accord.

See clearly the lovely image that is hidden in the rock. Release it from that stony prison, remove all the extra stone that is encrusting the idol---that is the task for you. Do not worry about Maaya; concentrate on Maadhava; you are certain to succeed. A tree on the Godhaavari Canal Bund will not go dry, it will have a crown of green, for its roots are fed by the underground water. Similarly, be a tree with the roots in perpetual contact with the flowing waters of the Grace of the Lord and you need not worry about drought.

 The dull-wired man runs about madly in pursuit of 'peace of mind'; trying this prescription for some time and preferring another afterwards He is on the wrong path; the path of catering to the senses, the path beset by Ruupa, Naama, and Guna (form, name, and quality) the path of the temporary and the apparent. But the mumukshu or the seeker after Moksha (Liberation) gets that Peace quite easily. In fact, the real nature of man is Prashaanthi (equanimity)---steadiness, unshakable resolution, peace. Nature is a great store where all things which help you to grasp the truth are found. That truth is first cognised as Samam Brahma Mayam---all this is imbued with Brahman, directed by Brahman, composed of Brahman! Then the seeker rises to a greater awareness, the awareness of Sarvam Brahman---all this is Brahmam; only it appears as something else for a time to the unopened eyes! The final state is one where there is not even a Sarvam to be posited as Brahman; there is just Brahman: the one and only.
 Obey Nature's commands and listen to the warnings The lesson is learnt by man when he studies nature, analysing it and trying to understand it. It is at the mother's lap that the child learns the art of living; so also it is Prakriti (Nature) that teaches man how to succeed in the hard struggle and win Prashaanthi. Break the laws of Nature and she boxes you in the ear; obey her commands and listen to Her warnings and She will pass on to you your heritage of immortality.
 That is to say, have the Lord as your Guide and Guardian and adhere to the rules of dharma. Let the dull-witted man hug his delusion that happiness and peace can be secured through slavery to the senses. Those who know that the world is a mixture of truth and falsehood, and therefore a big conundrum or mithya (false), will leave off the outer attractions and concentrate on the inner joy of attachment to God. If you are declared "passed", you have Peace; if you are declared "failed", that too solves the problem for some little time and puts a stop to worry; but if your results are not announced but withheld (for it is not quite certain whether you have passed or failed), you suffer the maximum Ashaanthi (restlessness), is it not?
 So also, this world which is neither Sathya (Truth) nor asathya (unreal) but mithya (false), breeds profuse ashaanthi (disturbance) in the mind.

Suffering entitles you more to the Lord's Grace Non-attachment alone can grant Prashaanthi. Sathsanga (company of the pious) and the visit to holy places and holy men promote that attitude and habit. Kuchela was prompted to visit Dhwaarakara by his wife who had deep devotion; so too unless your samskaara (merit of action) is good and your inclinations are elevated, and elevating, you will not get the idea of coming to Puttaparthi. I called Narasaraju and his wife for this Shivaraathri here and they have come. I know him for thirty years, him and his plans and yearnings and trials and troubles. The Lord responds not merely to the sweet voiced Kokil (cuckoo) and its song; He gives ear to the warbles of other birds, too. He gives ear to the wailings of every being. In fact, suffering entitles you more to the Grace of the Lord. When suffering comes in waves, one behind the other, be glad that the shore is near: bear them bravely; do not like cowards throw the blame on some outside Power or develop dislike for the Lord.
 The smarana (remembering) of the Self (Aathma) is the spring of joy; the smarana of the Nonself (An-aathma) is the source of sorrow. Welcome the test because thereafter you are awarded the certificate. It is to measure your progress that tests are imposed.
 So do not flinch in the face of grief. The Lord bestows a favour when He decides to test you, for He is impressed by your achievement and wants to put upon it the seal of His approval. Rise up to the demands of the test, that is the way to please the Lord.
 The ways of the Lord are inscrutable There was a great bhakti once who failed in the test and so could not get the certificate. Every day at noon, he used to look out for a needy guest whom he could feed lavishly. Thus he spent years, but one day, a frail old figure toddled into the house and sat for the dinner. He had crossed the century mark in years. The host had the steadiness of the vow, but he did not have the discrimination to derive the fruit of that vow. Like water poured on a dry sandbed, it did not add to its fertility. His heart still remained a dry sand-bed, though the waters of charity were poured on it every noon. The viveka-less heart drank up the charity and he was the same strict ritualist.
 The decrepit guest was overwhelmed by hunger and so, as soon as the first dish was served, he swallowed a big morsel without reciting the Name of God. Annoyed at this atheism, the host cursed the old man and pushed him out of doors to starve or beg in the hot Sun.

That night, he had a dream where the Lord chastised him for the cruelty of his behaviour. The Lord said, "For more than a hundred years, I nourished that man lovingly as the apple of My Eye, though he never once took a single one of My many Names. My dear man, could you not have suffered him for a few minutes?" Thiruththondar in Tamilnadu showed how to stand up to this kind of test when the Lord comes as a hungry guest to the house of the bhaktha. The feeling of surrender is the best for success in all such instances. Let His will be done. He is every One.

Sharanaagathi (seeing refuge for proration) is like grass on the ground, unaffected by storms; egoism is the palmyra tree that sways in the wind but breaks when it blows suddenly in a gust.

The ways of the Lord are inscrutable; your duty is to submit to them faithfully, thankfully and joyfully.

The human body has been given to you for a grand purpose---realising the Lord within.

If you have a fully equipped car in good running condition would you keep it in the garage? The car is primarily for going on a journey; get into it and go. Then only is it worthwhile to own it.

So too, with the body. Proceed go forward to the goal Learn how W use the faculties of the body, the senses, the intellect, the mind, for achieving the goal and march on.

Sathya Sai Baba

33. Near and far

I MUST address you now as Shaanthaswarrupulaaraa (embodiments of patience), for you have sat very patiently through the two-hour speech given by the Pandith. There are many types of food; food for the body, for the mind, for the intellect and for the spirit. But whatever the food, taking it in moderate doses at regular intervals is the best rule.

Hunger is the best appetiser; without it, you develop indigestion and all its dire consequences. Of course, what the Pandith served is food of the highest quality; but I see you are all still hungry! You wish to hear Me also, though it is the same food that I give. The rain from the clouds falls on the roof and might flow through a pipe or gargyle or go-mukha but it is the same water, whatever the shape of the exit.

Your prema towards Me has made you hungry for My Speech, though I have but to repeat the Pandith's words, perhaps in a simpler style. He himself strove to make it as simple as he could and I know he had to make a great effort, unusual effort, to communicate those difficult ideas to you.

What the Pandith was trying to tell you by means of all those Sanskrit slokas is just this: Be attached under all conditions to the source, substance and sum of all Power: the Lard---and then you can draw from that source all the power that you need. This attachment is called bhakthi.

Name of the Lord has vast potentiality

For the bird in mid-ocean flying over the dark deep blue waters, the only re. ing place is the mast of a ship that sails across. In the same way, the Lord is the only refuge for man who is swept by storms over a restless sea. However far the bird may fly, it knows where it can rest; that knowledge gives it confidence. It has the picture of that mast steady in its mind; its form is fixed in the eye. The Name of the Lord is the mast for you; remember it even Associate it with the Form and have that Form fixed in the mind's eye. It is a Lamp shedding light in the recesses of your heart. Have the Name on the tongue and it will drive away the inner darkness as well as the outer. Peace within, brotherliness without---that is the sign of a person engaged in Naamajapam (repeating the Name of the Lord).

The Name of the Lord has vast potentiality. Let me tell you an incident about this. Once Inaanadhev and Naamdhev together walked across a forest tract, and both were afflicted with unbearable thirst. They discovered a well, but they found no rope or vessel with which they could draw the precious liquid within reach. It was a deep well with no steps and the water was far far beneath. Inaanadhev, who had attained Brahmajnaana (knowledge of the Supreme Being), identified himself with a bird that flew down the well and drank its fill. His thirst was quenched that way. Naamdhev called upon the Lord by name; the Lord answered, the water in the well rose; yes, rose, until he could reach it with his hands and slake his thirst.

You consider the world as very near, as around you and behind you; but when you have to point out the Lord, you show Him far away from you, up and above, or at a vast distance. This is a mistake. The Lord is near; the world is far. You are believing that it is the other way as you are afraid of the truth and you like to deceive yourself. There was an Army Captain who once went with the Minister and the King in a small ferry-boat across a flooded river. He was very frightened to be in the boat and began to shake nervously. So the Minister just threw him into the flooded river. At once, he cried out for a place in the boat! He knew then the comfort of the boat, the value of the boat, the value of the aadhaara in fact.

Do not pay attention to mind's vagaries The Lord is the Aadhaara (the basis, the support); the world is the aadheya (the supposed, the superimposed). The basis is in oneself, the nearest entity, the closest companion, the very breath and life of the individual. How then can you point to the distance when you are asked about the Lord? His Name, the Name that appeals to you, is shaped by the intimateness of feeling and its depth, in so far as you are concerned.
Atheism is when the sun of inaana (sacred knowledge) has set; theism is when it rises; thamas (inertia) is ajinaana (ignorance); thapas (religious austerity) is inaana (spiritual wisdom). If the manas (mind) is neglected and allowed to run wild, thamas or "dullness and delusion" will hold sway. Some persons advise you to watch each step of the mind and note down all the false steps and evil intentions it encountered. No, that is a dangerous practice.
Do not pay attention to its vagaries; strive for what you need and not for what you have to avoid.
Count the false steps and you will be led to commit them again. Resolve to walk right and your steps will not falter or fail.
The Lord is won by sincere agony The fact is that you should have a guru who has the highest spiritual experience. Otherwise, you will be misled by amateurs who prescribe patent remedies, irrespective of your personal history and needs. Above all, you must yourself be engaged in Shravanam, Mananam and Bhajanam--- the Yamuna, Saraswathi and Ganga of the three-fold river of Life.
Shravanam (listening to holy names) is the Bhaktiyoga (path of devotion), Mananam (recapitulation on what you heard) is the Inaanayoga (path of spiritual wisdom) and Bhajanam (singing of Lord's name and glory) is the Karmayoga (path of action). All the yogas (paths of seeking union with God) lead to one Goal; Sharanaagathi (the surrender of the Self) in the All-self (the Paramaathma, the Parabrahman), the merging of the river in the sea. Give Me the reins; trust in Me and be directed by Me. I shall take full responsibility. Only, you must accept without demur whatever comes as Prasaadham or Grace!

Grief is the feet and joy the head; both are part of the same entity. You cannot welcome joy and reject grief at the same time. You cannot have the obverse without the reverse; you must take and accept the other side of the sheet of paper, along with this side. It is inevitable. The diamond is first just a dull piece of stone, a hard pebble. Only when it is cut by a skilful artisan, does it become a multi-faceted flame of fire! Allow yourselves to be so treated, that all your dullness will disappear and you will emerge as a resplendent diamond.
You must have that yearning, the yearning of the stone to become a diamond. You must hold the hand of the Mother and walk safe by Her side. You must hold fast and not give up.. Be like the infant- monkey that clings to the mother and so is guarded and guided by her superior strength and wisdom. The Lord is won by sincere agony, steady yearning.
There are some places where Sai Baaba, the previous shariram (body), is worshipped, but where this 'yearning' is not considered important! The person who goes to that place is asked by the man in charge to come for seven Thursdays or eleven Thursdays or forty-one-days and worship Sai Baaba in order to get His full Grace, as if it is just a matter of arithmetic. No. That is but a stratagem to gather a sizeable crowd, so that the shrine may be taken to be famous!
Bhakthi does not lend itself to such treatment.
"Become parts of My History" True bhakthi (devotion) will overcome all obstacles and like a swollen river, leap over bunds and banks and overwhelm all by the strength. Difficulties are created to increase the 'yearning' and to sift the sincere devotee from the rest. By the alchemy of smarana (constant remembrance of God), even a rock is turned into clay. It cannot become soft by merely carrying it on a specified number of journeys into a shrine.
Another point. Have you ever before or anywhere else sat so long, listening or waiting to listen to a speech; sat with such patience, such single-minded ardour? Why have you borne all this? In order to hear My Words, is it not? Now, do not let all that ardour go to waste once the listening is over. Take to the Brahma-maarga (path of Absolute Reality) as well as the Dharma-maarga (path of Righteousness) earnestly and after your life has been transmuted into a never-ending prayer by the silent effect of Dharma-maarga, forget all in the ecstasy of Brahma-maarga. Do not allow the maaya (illusion) that lies in wait for you on the other bank of the Chithravathi to pounce upon you or to entice you to the wordly life you led so far. Be like the tongue in the midst of the teeth, carefully, confidently, courageously going about its task, without getting bitten.

Study well the disciplinary rules laid down for all who wish to be in Prashaanthi Nilayam. These rules are for your own good. Wherever you are, you can make the place a Prashaanthi Nilayam.

Become pans of My history. Do not get far from Me. You have acquired nearness through the accumulated good fortune of many births. If you cut this contact and get away, a time will come when you will weep outside the gates clamouring for entry. Be free from silly delusions and doubts, be free from tawdry desires---and I shall take you into Me.

The mind flutters about and squats on all and sundry objects in the Universe. It refuses to stay only on one idea, God. Like the fly that sits on fair and foul, but denies itself the pleasure of sitting on a hot cinder, the mind too flees from all thought of God.

The fly will be destroyed, if it sits on fire; the mind too is destroyed, when it dwells on God, for, the mind is but a pattern of desire woven with the warp and woof of the same material

34. The broken bow

VEERABHADHRAM read and explained the traditional legend connected with Mahaa-

Shivaraathri; the legend is but a vehicle to teach you the path of dharma. The deers beseeching the hunter not to kill them, promising to return later when they could be killed and telling him that if they break their word they know they would incur the penalty for many a heinous sin---the story is only to propagate the principles of dharma. Every story illustrates a moral, and this Shivaraathri Mahaathmya Katha (story of the Greatness of Shivaraathri) is no exception. When it comes to describing the merits of dharma, even animals become eloquent---"Mookam karothi vaachaalam." Their speech is veritably the Voice of God. They are not deers, they are the tongues of the Lord.

The deers, one after another, declare that they will come back to be killed; they have to go, each one, because it has some dear one to tend or feed or obey. They then say that truth is their vow and they dare not break it, for it is indeed a heinous sin to play 'false.' They say that the sin is equal to a number of other sins they list. The hunter lets them go on their plighted word. He has himself committed the sins they list and he knows by experience during many births that they are heinous and that they bring about dire tragedy in a remorseless manner. There is an iron law of cause and effect operating in this field.

Every experience is a lesson, every loss a gain

The saddest part of the story is that man, though he sees and hears, suffers and falls, does not get quite convinced that sin is a dangerous experiment; that it unmistakably brings on its harvest of tears. The thamoguna of ignorance and delusion draws a veil over the truth and hides the mouth of the pit into which the unwary sinner falls again. Of course, when grief overtakes you, and pain has you in its grip, the Lord does not always announce the exact sin for which that particular experience is the punishment. You are left to deduce in a general way that every experience is a lesson and every loss is a gain.

You have got to learn that you bind yourself and you liberate yourself. You entangle yourself in the three gunas and by your struggles, you only pull the world and tighten it round yourself. You are endowed with viveka, even the most illiterate among you; you have a conscience, whispering dharma into your ear; so you yourselves must choose and select.

A great painter once came to a king and he was asked to execute a huge fresco on the wall of the Durbar Hall, a scene from the Mahaabhaaratha battle. A painter, till then unrecognised, rose up and asked for permission to execute a fresco on the opposite wall. He said that he would, within the same period prepare on his wall an equally grand fresco; in fact, an exact replica of the other, in spite of a thick curtain between the two walls! When at last the King came and drawing the curtain to the very end looked on the opposite wall, he was amazed to find an exact copy, down to the minutest detail of line, curve, tint and tilt, the same Mahaabhaaratha scene! For the local artist had, throughout the intervening period of time when the painting was being done by the other man, only been polishing the wall assigned to him. He had used no brush or paint; he had just polished the wall into a mirror. Polish your mind and the Lord, and His sublime grandeur will be reflected in your heart.

Set apart a "feeding time" for the Spirit daily

Just as you feed the body, and care for its upkeep and repair, the manas, chittham and buddhi

(mind, thought and intellect) have also to be fed with good nourishing food. When the morning cup of coffee is missed, you get a headache; what do you get when the morning dose of japam is missed? Or perhaps you have not made it into a habit. At noon, your hunger drags you from the shades of these trees to where food is waiting; nothing so powerful drags you to your shrineroom. Perhaps, you have no shrine room at all. When you enter a house, even if it has been unoccupied for months, you can declare, "This is the kitchen," from the sooty walls and the smell of condiments. Similarly, you say, "This is the puuja room" from the aroma of incense-sticks and flowers that still hovers in the air. Have a separate puuja room or at least, set apart a small corner for dhyaanam (meditation), japam (repetition of Lord's Name) and puuja (ritual worship). Retire there, at least twice a day for some short time; that will be "feeding time" for the spirit.

Sarveshwara Chinthana---allowing the mind to rest on the tree of the Glory of God---will give the tired bird some rest to fly again, beating its wings in search of food and happiness. Sathsanga (company of the pious) also acts like a tonic. Try the prescription for some time; it will be rather unpleasant at first. Due to weakness, the mind, like the body, cannot behave steadily and remain firm. That is why I addressed you today not as usual as Prema swaruupulaara (embodiments of love), or Aathma swaruupulaara (embodiments of Self), but, as you will have noticed with some dismay, as "Shaantha swaruupulaara! Chanchala swabhaavulaara," that is to say, though your nature is steadiness, your behaviour is ever unsteady. Remove all blemishes that tarnish you. I did not say so to discourage you, but just to reveal the absurdity to you. Do not keep the manas, buddhi and chittham (mind, intellect and thought) hungry or underfed; then they will run after all kinds of foul food. Give them proper nourishment and they will perform their functions well. Their function is to illumine the Aathma within and help you to discover that the Aathma is all. Until the auspicious moment, everything will be in disarray; do not worry. Go to a house where a marriage is to take place; it will be in a huge mess; noise, confusion, dust and din. But when the moment of marriage arrives, it is all spick and span, clean and charming. The Grace of the Lord will overwhelm all obstacles and fruit of saadhana will be vouchsafed. Once you secure the grace, you can fulfil all your wishes with it; if you have the cloth, you can have any type of clothes: bush-coat, coat or pants. It is the grace that gives value to life, authenticity to the Shaasthras (scriptures), authority to the recipient. A piece of white paper has no value at all; but send it to the Security Press and let them convert it into a hundred-rupee note; you value it, though it is printed all over and there is no blank space for writing anything. Become impressed with the stamp of God; carry His signature; that invests you with value and authority. But first you should become white, tough and strong. Remove all the blemishes that tarnish you. The deer referred to the "cow that is honoured during the yaaga." Now why is the cow so selected? Because it feeds on Saathwik (pure vegetarian) food; it has a quiet disposition; it yields milk without any desire for recompense or seeking even gratitude. There is no short-cut to earn God's Grace. A man once sold an old cow to the butcher and when he went to his fields after the transaction, he was confronted by a snake. He shouted, "Oh kill the poisonous reptile;" then the snake said, "I am no reptile, you deserve the name better" When he protested, the snake said, "Go and ask the calf." The calf gave a pathetic story of his greed and cruelty: how he dragged it away from the mother, tied it at the end of a rope and starved it of its mother's milk; and how he beat it and twisted its tail to force it to draw heavy loads. The calf said that that man is an ungrateful beast; he derides other men as pashu (cow), when he is himself far worse. As a matter of fact, do not cast a bad word on man or beast; for He is in all Beings and your harsh abuse strikes the Dweller within. Follow the rules of dharma, which these deers describe; they are not deers, they are the representatives of the Vedhas; yes, there are four in all. The Shaasthras are the authority for the dharma, and the karma (activities) based on dharma (righteousness). It is only when you are blessed with the Grace of the Lord, which is earned by dharma, that you can have shaanthy (peace). A fish can have shaanthy only when it has water above and below and on all sides; so too, you must have Grace all around you. There is no short-cut to this Grace; Naamasmarana is the safest route. Do not believe others who prescribe shorter routes; they may talk of Praanaayaama (breath control) and Hatha Yoga (Yogic exercise). Be warned; they are fraught with danger. Do not lend ear to such, or read and believe the books on physical yoga and start practising the exercises. I know of many cases of madness and other dislocations happening by practice from the printed page. Follow the Shaastraic injunctions and you will not go wrong. They lay down a set of rules for all stages and all professions. See how the panic spread by astrologers regarding the conjunction of eight planets in space has driven men to seek refuge in the Shaastras; yes, specifics have to be taken just when the disease catches you. You must pray more intensely when danger threatens. There is nothing wrong in that. Desire can never be destroyed by fulfilment. It is better than doing some stupid thing or other. Naamasmarana is the best means. Only, you do not really believe that it can cure you or save you, that is the tragedy. People believe in the efficacy of only costly, brightly packed, widely published drugs: the simple easily available remedy which is in everybody's backyard is ignored as useless. Really, if only you have this faith in the Name, you need not struggle to secure the chance to detail to Me your desires and wants. I will fulfil them even without your telling Me. Why? Did Raamadaas take his seat in the varandah like you and await his chance for an interview? The Lord carried to his very door the things that would fulfil his innermost wish! Korika (desire) can never be destroyed by fulfilment; the desire multiplies like a weed; one seed sprouts and produces a tree, which in its turn scatters a thousand seeds which grow into a forest of trees with millions of seeds growing again into a thicker jungle. Place yourself fully at the Lord's disposal. The only hai ('comfort' in Thelugu) is in Sai. The name of the Lord is the Narasimha (Man-Lion) incarnation to the Raakshasas of the Kali Age. Have the Name bright and clear on your tongue, in your mind; and the Form symbolised by it before your eye and mental vision---nothing can harm you. Train children from their infancy to repeat and rely on the Name. Let them imbibe it with the mother's milk. Train them yourselves, practising it and demonstrating before them the shaanthi that you win by it. Do not step back; move forward. Do not hesitate or doubt. Do not deny joy that you have derived, the courage that you have felt. If you so doubt, your only gain will be suffering. Every letter is a Beeja Akshara (seed-letter of a sacred word); so I do not whisper secretly any Manthra in your ear. I am giving it in every word. I speak. Listen to Me. When you wake up, feel that you are entering the stage to play the role assigned to you by the Lord; pray that you may act it well and earn His approbation. At night, when you retire to sleep, feel that you are entering the green-room after the scene, but with the dress of your role on; for perhaps the role is not yet over and you have not yet been permitted to take the dress off. Perhaps, you have to make another entrance the next morning. Do not worry about that. Place yourself fully at His disposal; He knows. He has written the Play and He knows how it will end and how it will go on. Yours is but to act and retire. SECOND DAY The deers which stray into the forest where the hunter is waiting for game, and which promise to come later and be his prey on pain of incurring the penalty for various heinous sins are teaching a Dharma Geetha; and if you practise those virtues and avoid those sins you can attain the Aanandha swarupa, (bliss-form) which you really are. The deers speak of sin, but remember, there is no sin as such; there are only errors due to ignorance or greed or envy or hatred. The principles of dharma enunciated in this story have to be adhered to; it is not the hunter alone who needs approval, every listener of the Puraana must have approval. Even the slightest error has to be avoided by those who possess a developed conscience. It is unpardonable for a wise man to fall into error. But the error of an ignoramus, however dire the consequences, has to be passed over. Some people dismiss the Dharma Shaastras as the fabrications of Brahmins and they refuse to attach value to the rules and restrictions prescribed by them. But that is a false argument. The Shaastras have the authority of Maadhava, of the Lord Himself. It is not Maanava-Dharma Shaastra, it is Maadhava-Dharma Shaastra---not man-made but God-made. Light meal is the surest guarantee of health. The Dharmic way of life is dependent on the guna (quality) of the individual. In the 18th Chapter of the Geetha, the gunas and their characteristics are mentioned, as also the relationship between the type of food and the character that emanates. The food decides the guna, the guna seeks the food congenial to it; thus the vicious cycle moves on. In the Upanishads, there is a story where a man and a cow approach the Lord and pray that they may be allotted their daily duties. The cow was told to serve the master who feeds and fosters her. The man was asked to practise dharma. He shuddered at the responsibility and wanted more freedom than such a life would impose. The Lord told him in answer that he is free to choose the path through which he could attain Him. He gave the cow as food the things that grow on the ground and to Man He assigned a morsel of food in the early hours of the day and another at the end of the day. He prescribed mithaahaara (moderation in eating).

 Both came down to earth and the cow now eats, and eats the eaten thing again, but man finds that a light meal is the surest guarantee of health.
 Face the Truth and proceed towards Truth Arjuna was affected by thamoguna (quality of inertia and doubt), which made him fall into the delusion of "mine" and "my family." Faith in the Lord one moment, doubt about the consequence another moment---that was his condition. Well, you are also in the same predicament. One day you tell "I must follow Baaba's Commands;" the next day, you start doubting, "Is it possible?"
 That is why I am adjusting the conditions of your lives so that you can pull yourselves up according to My Orders; that is why I am granting you courage to develop Faith, unshakable Faith. But I find many of you do not yet walk along the path laid down in spite of the confidence I impart and the favourable environment I provide and the favours I bestow. This is, of course, deplorable.
 God has given man a hundred years of life and plenty of work to fill the years with; but you fritter the time away in playful games, in founding and fostering a family; and awake to the fact of preparing for death only when Death knocks at the door. Then, you feverishly pray for a little more extension of the span of life in order to fulfil the task for which you have been sent.
 You have no time for reciting the Name of the Lord or meditating on His Form, which is within you! Alas! You have time for the club, for a game of cards, for the film show, for wayside chats, for all kinds of trivialities but no time for a little quiet, for a simple item like worship. It is a false excuse this, the want of time. No. Face the truth and proceed towards the Truth. When you tread the path of dharma, imperceptibly you will be drawn towards the Truth, gently and steadily.

The Geetha is for granting Liberation to all See how the wicked hunter was transformed into a sympathetic listener by the appeals to conscience made by the first two deers; he is eager to hear what the third deer has to say about the disciplines laid down by Shaasthras and the penalties imposed for the breach. He is also being slowly changed by the sound of the distant bells of the Shiva temple, where the Mahaa Shivaraathri Puuja is being done. As a matter of fact, both deer and deer-slayer are fiction; they represent the instruments for the teaching. It is all in the Lord's Plan.
 Consider, for example, how, long before the Geetha was spoken, the Lord had got-ready a Sanjaya, who could see and hear whatever was done or spoken at a distance; his mission was to preserve the Geetha for. humanity. Arjuna was just an excuse to bring the Geetha forth. The Geetha is for saving all, and granting all Liberation. Geetha, in Thelugu, means "a line;" it draws a line across and cancels the series of births and deaths; it teaches you to stand erect, unafraid, along the straight path of dharma, along the line laid down.
 You should gradually get rid of the attachments that lead you astray.
 Then only can you stand erect, without bending under the load. But, nowadays, instead of the elimination of Chiththavariththi (mental agitations), every effort is made to multiply them. It is like giving a monkey a drink of toddy; it will behave even more monkeyishly, that is all. I refer to the grant of spiritual titles to saadhakas, extolling their attainments! They are intoxicated by these titles, conferred by over-enthusiastic or pompous Gurus; they become Iyothis or Stars or Rishis or Paramapurushas (highest persons). They are thereby rendered more liable to spiritual disaster, through bloated egoism.
 Those doctors who are expected to administer drugs to patients afflicted with poison are now administering poison to persons in perfect health! The giver of the title and the recipient are both blameworthy. One aggravates the egoism he pretends to cure; the other revels in tawdry jewellery.
 Do not decry ancient scriptures The Varnaashrama discipline is also intended for the gradual fixation of the mind on ultimate merger with the Infinite. At each stage of life and for each social group, patterns of behaviour have been laid down, modes of livelihood recommended social rights and obligations have been prescribed---all with a view to the sublimation of the instincts and the elevation of endeavour.

Varnaashrama is a deep-rooted tree, the shade of which affords shelter to all the various communities of man.

Do not decry that discipline or the ancient scriptures. They are your authority to confirm My Truth; it is through the study of those Scriptures that you can picture the grandeur of Divinity.

Do not decry Vishnu or Shiva for the reason that your devotion is towards some other Name and Form you seek to honour. Why, even if you dishonour a man, be warned you are dishonouring

Me; for I am in him. Honour the Aathma of which he is an encasement; honour the imperishable Aathma which you are and do not commit any act which will insult that Basic Reality.

The deers in this story only show the hunter that the path to self-realisation consists of four stages: Shaasthras, Dharma, Bhakthi and Sathya (scriptures, virtue, devotion and truth).

"I shall fulfil your wishes at your own place"

One word more: Perhaps many of you are worried that I have not yet started calling you individually and granting you interviews in which you could tell Me your troubles and where I could bless you personally and send you home. But you are so many in number; I would like to see first the old and the sick and those who will find it difficult to come again. Surely the others will approve of that.

Besides, it is enough if you call Me from wherever you are; in My ease, there is no need for you to travel long distances and spend hard-earned money. I shall fulfil your wishes, at your own place.

I shall, from tomorrow, grant you this privilege of a personal talk in the room and I shall come down four: times a day for the purpose, spending almost the whole day with the devotees.

Let Me tell you one thing: Of course, I can bear any thing for your sake; I have come to save you and guide you. But, somehow, I cannot tolerate the smell of tobacco, of beedis and cigarettes.

Can you not postpone the disgusting practice for an hour and come to me without that insufferable smell? Besides, I have laid down certain disciplines and codes of conduct for you here. I would ask you to study the list and practise them not only within this compound, but in your own places, wherever you happen to live.

THIRD DAY

Veerabhadhram read the last part of the Shivaraathri katha now; the deers return and insist that they be killed. Their hunter, chastened by their truthfulness, their teachings and by the holy vigil that he unknowingly went through on the auspicious night, refuses to kill. He breaks his bow and with tears of repentance, he is overwhelmed by the animals adherence to the promise made. The deers try to persuade him to kill them, but the hunter wriggles out. He argues that he had to kill them under the tree where he had spent the night, waiting for prey, and not near his cottage to which the deers had come in the morning!

Dharma-Karma is the best discipline

The wicked heart was transformed by the shravana (heating) of good words and of the temple rites and bells. That is the subtle alchemy of the surroundings and the company. Some places have a tremendous impact on the mind. The atmosphere is surcharged with the Name of God on account of the generations of bhakthas who assemble there. That is why I say dharma-karma (virtuous action) is the best discipline. That means, action surcharged with devotion. That will itself lead to inaana (spiritual wisdom), where the world is found to be a dream and the only reality is the All-pervading Grace or Power.

The Naasthika (atheist) is blind, ignorant and afflicted with a fever that spoils his sense of taste; he finds everything bitter. The aasthika (believer in God) on the other hand is able to feel the true taste of everything: bitter as bitter sour as sour, sweet as sweet. But the Yaasthika (the man of realisation) tastes all things and all experiences as sweet, filled with the sweetness of God.

Prahlaadha was a Yaasthika; he was beaten, trampled upon, cast into fire and water, but he tasted only sweetness at all times. He overcame every calamity with the reinforcement derived from the Name of Naaraayana in the heart. There is a secret spring in the heart that will well up when the name is uttered and that will slake your thirst.

Speak without malice, speak to transmit joy

The ordeals which Prahlaadha had to endure only demonstrated his attainment. Once the Lord entered the house of a inaani (liberated person) as a thief and when the master of the house caught Him and argued, "You are a thief; I have caught you," the Lord said in reply, "So long as the ideas, you and I inhere, there can be no inaana," and disappeared.

It is easy to mug up slokas and texts and quote them profusely, but it is useless unless you act in accordance with what you say. Anushtaanam (practice of austerities) brings about Anugraham (God's Grace). Act and earn Grace. By the belch, you can judge the food; as the flour so the roti. Vivekaanandha was able to declare at Chicago the worth of Sanaathana Dharma (eternal universal religion) in an unmistakably leonine tone, because he had the strength of anushtaanam behind him.

The driver of a car should be alert at driving it along a rough road infested with pot-holes not merely along smooth concrete highways. So too, you must know how to amid the temptations of falsehood and how to sail along the smooth road of Truth. You may say that very often you are caught in a dilemma by the conflicting demands of truth and falsehood. Remember the Geethasaying: "Anudhvega karam vaakyam, sathyam, Preethikaram" --- "Speak without malice or hatred or envy; speak the truth; speak to comfort, to consol, to transmit joy." When in difficulty, pray for guidance before jumping in any direction. Men will give you advice only as far as their cleverness can reach; but the Lord who transforms dullness into intelligence will :reveal to you the way out of the dilemma. Ask the Lord and He will answer. The Lord revealed the proper course to the hunter. Finally, he broke the bow and arrows and other deadly weapons as a result of that inspiration. The arrows are the symbols of vice and wickedness. He realised his Self that way. Those who come to Puttaparthi come by many ways: from Bombay via Guntakal, from Bangalore via Chikballapur, from Nellore via Paakaala, from Madras via Jolarpet; but all have but one goal and one joy on arrival. Whether it is four four-anna coins or two half-rupee coins or a one rupee coin, the value is the same. Saakshaathkaara (Realisation) attained by any one of the means is of the same Truth, of the same Grandeur; it means the same Spiritual Victory.

Shed tears of thankfulness at the Lord's Feet

The Lord will manifest where and when you yearn for Him; if you yearn that He should come before you in flesh and blood, He will respond. He is ever ready to respond; only, you are not ready to invite or welcome or receive Him into your heart. You have not purified the heart and removed therefrom the thorns of lust and greed, of envy and hatred. The baby that has been fed on milk may start crying; do not be worried, It is very helpful for digestion. Cry, so that you can digest the joy of knowing God; cry and shed tears of joy. The tear glands have been allotted to you not for weeping helplessly before others with hands extended for alms, but to shed tears of joy, of thankfulness, at the Feet of the Lord.

Do not get dejected. Really, you are all lucky, eminently fortunate that you are here now in the Presence listening to these words. Take your fill of this Aanandharasa (essence of Bliss) and having digested it, come again with a sharpened appetite.

Mahaa Shivaraathri Katha, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 8, 9 and 10, March, 1962

35. Inner progress

THE New Year which you have called in today with the exit of the old year, has an auspicious name, Subhakrith. Your arranging this Festival in honour of Saint Thyaagaraja on this day is indeed an auspicious way of welcoming the auspiciously named New Year. I congratulate you.

I am coming often to inaugurate the Festival for I feel it is a part of the task for which I have come. I may tell you that I am coming today straight from the very region where Thyaagaraja lived out his life.

I find that you in this Holy Town Thirupathi are not all imbued with devotion to the Deity who has made it His Home, Shrinivaasa. Most of the people here live on the Lord's bounty or 'property' or 'charity'. The income from the shrine of the Lord is utilised in running colleges, hospitals and in various other ways. That is to say, it is taking the lives of many thousands happy and contented. I do not blame them for living upon the income of the Lord, for, what does He want it for, if not for the needy and the hungry? But let Me add a warning. If it is eaten in excess, calamity will intervene. Eat as much as you deserve for the toil you have put in, for the hunger you have acquired by your exertions in a good cause. What is the toil which entitles you to consume the property of this shrine? What is the exertion which the lord approves? Only spiritual toil and spiritual exertion can entitle you to the sacred share; only dhyaana and Naamasmarana, steeped in the thrill of devotion!

Idol worship is not a sign of barbarism

The true culture of India is a structure that is built on four pillars--- Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (Truth, Virtue, Peace and Love). Every one of you must be aware of this fact. If you are, then you will not be attracted by cultures that are built on less durable foundations. The culture that has to be protected by the bomb cannot claim prema as one of the pillars on which it is erected. Bhaarith is a land where since millennia people have been praying for and toiling for the peace and happiness of entire humanity. They never prayed for success in the wicked race for wholesale slaughter. Do not swallow without discrimination the criticisms hurled against you that you are uncultured barbarians, worshipping stocks and stones. Idol-worship is not a sign of barbarism. No, it is as significant and meaningful a rite as the kumkum dot on the forehead of the bride. The Idol is revered as the Swaruupa (Living Form) of the Lord, He who pervades everything everywhere is invoked and visualised in the Idol and approached reverentially by the cleansed mind, anxious to efface itself in the Eternal and the Universal. This attitude is called Prapatthi Surrender for Fulfilment. Install Truth in the shrine of your heart Without this attitude, worship becomes empty and vain. It is no use deciding just now, when you are listening to Me, that you would cultivate Faith and Fortitude; and not put that resolution into action after you leave this place. Bhakthi is not measured by the outward signs of tears and exhilaration. It is an inner revolution, a transformation of all values and outlook. You may have heard the story of the woman who was shedding profuse tears, apparently of exultation, during a Puraanic recital. The Bhaagavathar was overjoyed that day, for he had succeeded by his touching exposition in evoking response from at least one contrite soul. At the close of the day's session, he congratulated the old lady on her bhakthi and offered her the coveted first spoonful of Holy Theertha (consecrated water) as a tribute for her shraddha and saadhana (faith and spiritual effort). But the lady denied all claims to devotion and said, "I do not know what that thing called bhakthi is, nor the other things named shraddha and saadhana. I shall tell you why tears fell from my eyes. That thick black string with which you have tied that palm-leaf book put me in mind of the string round the waist of my departed husband; he wore a black string, long long ago." Mere external signs mislead the observer, but they cannot mislead the Lord who is the ever-present, ever-vigilant Witness. Bhakthi will foster prema, because it is born of prema itself. At present, this land is full of factions and rival groups; all do not pull together and to the best of their ability and capacity. That is why it has become necessary to ask the help of other countries and peoples and borrow funds and burden ourselves with interest payments, etc. There is no co-operation and willingness to sacrifice self-interest for the sake of the community or country or humanity. Every village is riven by partisan groups. I shall tell you what happened in a village of this type. One section had specialised in acting the drama, Lankaadhahana (burning of Lanka); but the other section decided to enact the story of King Harishchandra instead. For the role of Chandramathi, the queen, they had to select a person from the Lankaadhahana group because they had no substitute actor at all. The scenes were following one after the other. All went well until the prince died of snake bite; then the mother refused to weep! The "son" belonged to the opposite group. So vengeance was taken on Chandramathi by Harishchandra. He rained blows on her being so callous; the drama sped along in another course, the course of hatred and faction. Yearn for illumination of your inner world Thereupon, the Anjaneya of the Lankaadhahana group brought things to a climax by jumping on the stage in his role with a tail burning at one end; and he set the theatre on fire to the delight of his henchmen and the consternation of his rival! You must put on play either Harishchandra or Lankaadhahana; it will end in a holocaust if you play both together on the same stage. Rather, prefer Harishchandra and reject the playing with fire. Install truth in the shrine of your hearts and that will engender the wholesome habit of brotherliness among all men. Well, the electric lights have started burning again and I see you are all satisfied that the line was set right so soon. I know how greatly you yearned that the illumination of this Pandal be restored soon and you felt sorry and dejected when you had to sit under dull improvised, kerosene light. I want that you should yearn also for the illumination of your inner world, the restoration of the current to shed light on the dark recesses of your minds. That is what is called bhakthi, the yearning for Light, for Illumination. People blame the Lord for all ills caused by their own extravagance or ignorance. They are themselves to blame for the sufferings they undergo. Suffering is due to ignorance only. Take the case of even physical ills and physical suffering. Most illnesses are due to overeating or faulty eating habits. Mitha thindi, athi haayi--Moderate food gives immense comfort. The food must be clean and pure and derived through pure means; and the strength derived from it must be directed towards holy ends. Then, living is worthwhile. Food is the basis of man's character. Remember that Thyaagaraaja kept such rules rigorously in mind. He never dined outside his home or ate unconsecrated food. Many thought that he was a conceited fool who was needlessly strict. But there are subtle influences that pass into food from the persons who prepare it and handle it and are absorbed by those who eat it. Food is the basis of character. The state of the mind is conditioned by that of the body. I shall tell you now of an incident that happened eighty years ago. There was a great Yogi, Hamsaraaj by name, at Badhrinath. He was always immersed in singing the glory of the Lord. He had a disciple who was equally earnest and sincere. That young man was pestered for a few days by a dream which gave him no peace. He saw a fair young girl of sixteen weeping in great agony and calling out pathetically, "Can no one save me?" The disciple was amazed at this strange dream; he could not shake off that doleful figure and that desperate cry from his mind. He recited his woes to the Master. Hamsaraaj, I can assure you, was a true Hamsa (the Bird of Paradise). That bird can eschew water from milk. Hamsaraaj, by his viveka, analysed the situation and discovered the cause of that horrid experience. He prodded the young man with such questions as: "What did you do the first day?" "Where did you go?" "What did you eat?" etc. It was revealed that he had gone with a friend to a feast and eaten some puuris and chappathis. It was discovered that a poor Brahmin had prepared the feast. Well, Hamsaraaj sent the disciple to find out why and with what resources that Brahmin arranged the feast for the recluses of Badrinath. Examine the source of the food offered. The young man cursed the day when the dream started haunting him, for he was now being sent by his Master on purposeless errands to investigate irrelevant issues; he wondered how his saadhana could be helped by all this. Nevertheless, he went and pursued the inquiry about the feast and its origins and the wherewithal out of which it was prepared. It came to light that the funds were supplied by a sixty-year old money lender to whom a Brahmin had given his daughter in marriage and received in return a sum of ten thousand rupees. She was now appealing to the holy men for a bit of human kindness towards a forsaken child. Hamsaraaj thus demonstrated to his disciple that one should examine the source of the food, the motives for the gift and the passions that surge and sway the giver before accepting such an intimate gift as food. You may say that saadhakas alone have to bear such rules in mind, but tell Me who is not a saadhaka. All are pilgrims on the road; some going fast, some going slow, that is all. The goal is the same for you all, though the roads may be many. You are all cultured and civilised according to current notions. Of course, there is a vast difference between the methods of living now and in the past. Man has travelled far from the days when he wore the barks of trees or leaf garments. Today is the day of nylons and georgettes and bush coats. Well. Admitting that all this is a sign of higher civilisation, should there not be a corresponding rise in the level of thinking and feeling and action, in the arts of living together and earning mental peace and poise? The spiritual life of man must also become more cultured and civilised is it not? There must be gratitude for the chance of life, for the blessings of the beauty and bounty of nature, and a realisation of the more durable values of life. Attachment to sensory pleasure has to be discarded in preference to the more lasting joy of inner contemplation. Prayer can bring about the impossible. Thyaagaraaja had discovered that joy. He gave expression to that joy in moving musical notes, in simple sincere words in songs that bring tears to the eye and thrills to the heart. The Raaja of Raarnnad, who is the President of this Festival, comes from Thamil Naadu and the Thelugu language in which Thyaagaraaja sang is strange to him. Yet, he is profoundly affected by the music; he loves the Krithis (songs) very much. Knowing the meaning of the songs and the context which begot them so spontaneously and so sweetly from the sublime devotion of Thyaagaraaja will make you imbibe the spirit better; the language in which he sang is the language of the seeker, the saadhaka, the straggling saadhak, and very rarely, the satisfied sage.

You can easily learn that language, the language of the saadhaka. Do not keep away from it because it is not the language to which you are accustomed. There is no place for hatred in this field, nor between State and State.

This is a sacred task on which the Committee has entered. They may sometimes feel the burden to be too heavy; they may even reel under the weight of disappointments and difficulties. But I assure them they have no reason to lose heart. Lord Shrinivaasa opens His eyes and your task is accomplished. And He will open His Eyes. Have patience and wait prayerfully. Prayer can bring about the impossible. Recite the glory of the Lord and repeat in the cavern of your heart His Name. That will bring success.

Tirupathi, 5-4-1962

The body is but a boat, an instrument for crossing the sea of change, that you have through the merit of many generations.

When you have crossed the sea, you realize the Dweller, in the Dwelling. That is the purpose of the body.

So, even when the body is strong and skills even while the intellect is sharp and the mind alert, effort must be made to seek the dehi (dweller), in the deha (body).

Sathya Sai Baba

36. Proceed beyond thiruputi

I HAD no plan till now to speak to you. But Kasthuri mentioned that those of you who are here for many years have not had the chance of even a Namaskaaram (reverential salutations) since three months, i.e., from before Shivaraathri, when streams of devotees started coming in. He stated that you are all hungry for darshan. Since I am spending hours and hours talking with those devotees who are anxious to leave this place. I put in My appearance at the Bhajan sessions; twice a day, just for a minute or so, to receive aarathi (worshipful waving of lights) and leave. I find you are all sad at what you misinterpret as neglect. So I shall administer some tonic to your drooping hearts.

Well. You have the chance to see, experience and be sanctified by the Incarnation of the Lord; this chance you have got as a result of the accumulation of merit in many previous lives. That merit has brought you here, when I have come down. For this chance, Rishis (sages) and Dhevas (demi-Gods) have prayed long in the past. Having won this chance, strive to taste the sweetness and achieve the Bliss of Merging, without wasting even a single moment. The rays that emanate from Me are of three grades: the Sthuula (physical, gross), filling this

Prashaanthi Nilayam; the Suukshma (the subtle), pervading the earth; and the Kaarana (causal) coveting the entire Universe. The people who have the privilege of living in this Nilayam are indeed lucky, for they are nearest to the Kirana (rays). The Sthuulakirana makes man a Saadhaka; the Suukshma makes him a Mahaathma (Great Soul) and the Kaarana converts him into a Paramahamsa (ascetic of the highest order). Do not therefore waste your days entertaining wordly desires and ambitions and planning to achieve them. Success in this line or failure should not elate or depress you. When a banquet is in store for you, why run after the droppings from others' tables? Such plans and desires have no finality or fixity. They have no genuine worth.

Command the mind, regulate your conduct

Keep undimmed before you the main goal, the task for which you have come into this school; do not deviate from it, whatever the attraction that tempts you to stray.

Command the mind, regulate your conduct, so that the goal is won. Let not the care of the body or the fostering of the family or the demands of pride and pomp overwhelm the call of the Spirit for self-expression. Shiva

(Supreme Reality), Ieeva (individual) and Prakrithi (subjective world) are the three principles that confront you; the world has to be utilised by the individual to attain Shiva, which is the fundamental fact in both. Until you get Aathmaanandham, by realising Shiva, the world will press on you with its weight and well-nigh suffocate you. After that, the world will fall off, of itself.

Winning the Grace of the Lord is as easy as melting butter; that is why the heart of the Lord is compared to butter. It is as soft as butter, they say. A little warmth is enough to melt it; a little warm affection shown to a suffering companion, a little warmth while pronouncing His Name, turning it over on the tongue, so to say. The Name is the spring of all the Chaithanya (essence of the Supreme Spirit) that you get by Naamasmarana; it is the life-giving nectar; it is the fountain of Primal Energy. Recite the Name and the Named will be before you; picture the Named and the Name will leap to your lips. They are the reverse and the obverse of the same coin, the Name and the Form.

Be steady, fixed in your resolve and conduct

There are some who vow to write Raamanaama or some other Name a million times, but very often it is just a matter of the fingers and the pen. The mind of the writer is the spoon which does not taste the honey which it doles out. The mind should not wander from the Name; it should dwell on the sweetness which the name connotes; it should ruminate on the beauty of the Form which it recalls, the perfume which it spreads. The conduct and behaviour of the writer should be such as befits a servant of God, others should be inspired by them and their faith should get freshened by their experience of the writer.

To earn the goodwill of the Master, there is one recipe: obey His orders without murmur. I am telling you My truth, not in self-praise, but so that you can understand Me. If I do not tell about Myself, who can? Grace is showered on all who obey instructions and follow orders. But the number of such is very small. Even though instructions are light and easy, they are designed to make you go beyond Thri-puri---the three-fold distinction of the Pilgrim, the Path and the Goal; of Bhaagavatha, Bhaktha and Bhagavan---of Lover, Loved and Love.

Become masters of your own kingdoms

You are in Ambareesha Thathwa (Principle of devotion) one moment and in Dhurvaasa Thathwa (Principle of anger) the next. This is wrong. You should be steady, fixed in your resolve and in your conduct. That is why, outside the Prashaanthi Nilayam, I serve in my discourses what you call Vindu or Feast, but here, to you, I always administer Mandu or drugs. This is the Kendram (the Centre), the Headquarters of the Aasthika army which is to establish Lokakalyaanam (world prosperity). Of course, I insist everywhere on piety and a high moral life; but here I lay down stricter and more rigorous rules. Well, I shall tell you some hard words. You very often condemn the mind as a monkey but take it from Me, it is far worse. The monkey leaps from one branch to another; but the mind leaps from the heights of the Himaalayas to the depths of the sea, from today to tens of years ago. Tame it by the process of Naamasmarana. Make it, as Raamadaas did, into a Bhadhraachala--a stable steady mountain. That is the task I assign to you. Make your heart an Ayodhya by means of Raamanaama; Ayodhya means a city that can never be captured by force. That is your real nature---Ayodhya and Bhadraachala. Forget this and you are lost.

Install Raama in your heart and then no outer force can harm you.

Realise that like the waves of the sea sukha and dhuhkha (happiness and grief) rise and fall; they are like the inhalation and exhalation of the breath. If you attain that calm, the ground whereon you stand becomes Kaashi, every handwork of yours gets transmuted into the highest form of Shivapuuja. Roam about in the region of your own mind and understand its moods and mysteries; do not dream of wandering in foreign lands before you become masters of your own kingdoms. Self first; help next. Know yourself; that lesson once learnt, you can know others, much sooner and much more truly.

Dedicate this life to the service of others, for the others are only visible representatives of the Lord who resides in you. I have come in order to repair the ancient highway leading man to God.

Become sincere, skilful overseers, engineers and workmen and join Me. The Vedhas, the Upanishads and the Shaasthras are the road I refer to. I have come to reveal them and revive them.

Take each day as a gift of God

The rules I have prescribed for those who come to the Nilayam may appear strict and even severe; but it is all for your good. Inner Purity first and outer purity latter--that is the natural order. You feel full satisfaction when you take a bath first and then wear washed clothes. I have to be strict, because if I excuse one error, the tendency is to commit another. A plant will grow well only when the ground all around the stem is raked up and exposed to the sun and rain. I want you to drop old deep-rooted habits of purposeless talk, vanity, envy and scandalmongering.

You are not to live like earnest saadhakas just to please Me; it is a duty you owe to yourselves and so, you must adhere to those rules wherever you are; not merely within the confines of the Nilayam. Of course, the Prashaanthi Nilayam, you will have noticed, has no wall or fence around it; for it is not limited by any boundaries, it spreads and spreads until it envelopes the Universe.

Generally, I speak sweet, but on this matter of discipline, I will not grant any concessions. I do not care whether you come or having come, go. I will insist on strict obedience. I shall not reduce the rigour to suit your level, for that will only ruin you; I pay attention to your ultimate good. Live peacefully, happily, contentedly, taking each day as a gift from the Lord. Do not rush and scramble, fret and fume. Be vigilant and do not allow greed or anger to creep in.

Attend all the sessions in the Hall: the Pranava japa (recitation of OM), the Bhajana, the Discourses. Do not take shelter behind excuses. If you are ill, Bhajana (devotional singing) will help the cure, or, let Me tell you, it is far better to die during the Bhajana with the Lord's name on the lips. Saadhakas are led along wrong paths and the respect due to pious people is dwindling because they are not kept rigorously on the hard path. Concessions have spoiled them.

Hereafter, I will not excuse the slightest deviation. You have been here for years and so I have to treat you as grown-ups, not as children. It is on account of the prema that I have towards you that I rebuke you when you take a false step. My Anugrahakirana (rays of grace) will make the lotus of your heart blossom.

Drug and regimen are both supplementary

In a hospital, the doctors care for the disease, not for the size of the bank deposits the patients have. Disease is the important thing. So too, in the case of every one suffering from Bhavaroga

(the disease of birth and death) and, the dual buffets of good and bad, has a right for the care and consideration of the Doctor. The doctor prescribes the drug and the regimen; both are supplementary. When you get a relapse of doubt and distress, take the drug a greater number of times and in larger doses. Join Sathsang (the company of the godly); just as the tame elephants surround the wild tusker and rope him and bind him hand and foot and immobilise him preliminary to taming him, the spiritually minded will bring the doubter round.

The current flows always along the wire. You have only to take a connection and switch on. If the connection is loose, then the flow of Grace will be disturbed and might even stop. It is you that connects and disconnects. You switch on and off and. you get day and night. Study the Geetha; you know Geetha draws a line which you should not cross. I do not ask for your vows; why should I force you to make them and cause you to break them? If you do so, your life becomes a tom cloth, stitched loose; it may tear again at the slightest pull.

Let me tell you one thing in the end: However you are, you are Mine. I will not give you up.

Wherever you are, you are near Me; you cannot go beyond My reach.

Hindu culture is the pillar and support of the nation; it is the backbone of the spiritually adventurous; it grants both this worm and the next to all beings. It is really Worm Culture, the culture that the worm needs. Other cultures assume various forms in various climes.

But, the culture of Bhaarith has asserted eternal values, values for all times and all climes---like dhaya, dharma and dhama (compassion, virtue and self-control). It has not bent before the pressure of patronage or persecution.

Sathya Sai Baba

37. Precious treasure

CHILDREN have unselfish Love; they are innocent onlookers; they observe the action of the elders and they learn their lessons from the home much earlier than from school. So, parents have to be very careful in their behaviour with the children and between themselves. There was a Judge who used to come to Shirdhi; he asked his wife and child to stay with Baaba and left for home for a few days. He said to the boy when he took leave, "This is God Himself" After some time they fell in with a Kathak who was reciting musically some Puraanic story. Within a few minutes, they heard him revile Sai Baba as a mad man and a cheat; the child could not stand it any longer. He tugged at the sari of his mother and forced her to return to Baaba.

Next morning, they approached Baaba for his Blessings and He asked them why they had returned. The incident of the Kathak was duly reported. The boy heard everyone addressing Baaba as the Lord. Remembering the harsh words of the Kathak, the boy wept, but Baaba pacified Him humorously, "I am only a man. What the Kathak said is true; I am mad and I am cheating people of what they consider very valuable, but what I feel is useless." Then, even as they were talking, one Mr. Patel came there and related how Baaba had saved his child from a serious accident. Baaba told him, "Yes, I held him when he fell, with My four hands. "Patel shed tears of thankfulness; but the boy cried out "Ah I told you, You are God; You have four hands like Vishnu." Baaba laughed; He took the boy inside and gave him a vision of Himself, as having four hands.

Children should grow with love of the mother

That boy stayed on in Shirdhi for 26 years after this and left it only after Baaba "left." He then took sanyaas and became a great sage. Children should have the love of parent. The child should grow with the mother for the first five years of life. Many children do not know what the prema of the mother is like. The mother should not hand over her responsibility during those years to some one else and be called simply 'Mummy' as if she is some doll with which the child likes to play. Now, the children of rich and "educated" parents are severely handicapped. They are deprived of the care and love of parents. They are handed over to the care of servants and aayahs and they grow up in their company and learn their vocabulary and habits and styles of thought. This is very undesirable. When a boy is five years old, the father has to take up the task of bringing him up. Then, he must be entrusted to a Guru; the Guru must teach him a standard of value with which to deal with the family, the village, the country and mankind. Teachers must be aware of their good fortune as well as their duties; some teachers shirk their duties and play false to the expectations the society has in them. They come into the class, write on the blackboard, say "Silence" and go off to sleep in the chair! So, the school is disliked by the children. Teachers in the old days used to go round the village with two stalwart students and peep into house after house for shirkers and when they discovered any, the malingerer was forcibly carried weeping and struggling to school, there to be beaten severely for the crime. Children are like fresh cloth; they can be given any colour you like. Just dip them in that colour, that is enough. Adults are like old clothes that will not imbibe colour so easily and well. Hearts that are green and soft will learn habits and disciplines quicker. For learning good habits and manners, age is no bar; training will make even children learn them. Become as straightforward as a child. Adults develop a sense of shame and of pride, which is mostly artificial, false and skin deep. And so they invent excuses to justify their actions and also manufacture justifications for their errors. Children have no such inhibitions. They believe everybody and everybody can believe them. Their hearts are like gramophone records; they get impressed by whatever tune you sing to them. They play back the correct tune, without any distortion, provided the needle is sharp. The needle is prema and it must be one-pointed and direct. Then only can the music be drawn out. In the case of elders, the needles would have been blunted, but children have the gift of ekaagratha (one-pointed attention). They are fearless; it is the elders who plant their fears in them. They are truthful, but the elders teach them the art of lying. They set children to watch and report and thus they become interested in the faults and errors of others. When the elders speak, it is difficult to discover whether it is truth or untruth. But children are plain-spoken. They have not discovered that success in the wordly sense is dependent on cleverness in the short run; though in the long run, it is honesty and plain-speaking that bring maximum profit. That is why it is said that you must either become as simple and straightforward as a child or as wise and discriminating as a deeply learned scholar to win the Grace of God. The gramophone records which do not have any grooves, because they have not been used, can be played over and over 'again, with the needle ekaagratha not being blunted at all; for the grooves blunt the point, not the plate. Prahlaadha is a fine example of this, for he had no egoism; he was in perfect unaffected calm. So, whatever happened to his physical cloak, he never felt it. The needle simply rolled round and round; there was no music; there was just silence. Richest inheritance you can give to children Visha and amritha (poison and nectar) cannot merge; Sath can merge only with Sath; Prakrithi is Brahma-mayam (Nature is full of Supreme Reality); Brahman is Prakrithimayam (Supreme Reality is full of Nature)! Cloth is yam-mayam and yam is cloth-mayam. One is meaningless without the other. The childhood stage is the pure Sath stage and if you only manage to live on with that innocence as Sage Sukha did you can achieve merger quite naturally. The Sun's rays wait outside your closed door, silently and patiently. Open it to the width of a chink---and it gladly rushes in through that chink. Open it wider; it bathes you in light and warmth. Children's minds are always open; they have no closed doors, which bring in the darkness. That is why their smile is like sunlight in a grief-stricken home. Dhruva and Maarkandeya achieved the Vision of the Lord and Liberation for themselves, not by means of a trick or a stratagem, but because they had transmuted their minds by saadhana into the Divine Instrument for Salvation. Of course, what do you seek in life? Aanandha, anukoola, anyonya and anuraaga--joy, mutual harmony, unison and love---between the officer and the clerk, the master and the servant, the husband and the wife, the father and the son; in fact, between any two, bound by rights and duties, these four are essential. Sow the seeds of these harmonious qualities even while your children are young; that is the richest inheritance you can give them, the most useful insurance against the attack of despair, despondency and discontent. He who does not work but eats is a cheat. There is a story of a dog that came to Raama, bleeding from blows. Lakshmana was sent to inquire why it was in such pain. He discovered that a Brahmin had beaten it with a stick. When asked, the Brahmin could only give as sufficient cause that the dog was coming across his path. So Raama asked the dog, "Well, how do you want me punish this Brahmin?" The dog promptly gave the reply, "Make him the manager of a temple." "What?" said Raama. "That would be a reward, not a punishment." The dog said, "No, I was a manager and since it is next to impossible not to mishandle or misuse or appropriate some fraction of Gods's money, when he is the manager, he too will get this canine birth and perhaps get beaten too." Remember, not only that dog and that Brahmin, but every one of you is living off the property of God, for does not all this belong to Him? And what do you do in return for all the benefits you derive from the property of the Lord? You cannot eat it and sit quiet. You must at least give some physical labour in return; he who does not work but eats is indeed a cheat. Not that the Lord wants anything from you, but it will give self-respect and it will purify your heart. So teach children not to receive anything for nothing. Let them earn by hard work the things they seek. Again, when boys play cricket or football or tennis, if they become eager to defeat the opponent, they start committing faults or fouls. Then, even if they score a goal, it will be declared not a goal; it may well be offside or out. But if they stick to the game and play it well, unaffected by the atmosphere of rivalry and lust for victory at all costs, they are bound to win. In a race, it is better to let the horse go along gathering its own speed; do not compare and compete; that will cause a fall or a slip. This lesson has also to be taught to children; that competition has to be healthy, subordinated to the proper rules of the game and free from hatred and malice. Above all, realise that children are precious treasures; yours is the great task of rearing them up to become devoted servants of God and sincere saadhakas on the spiritual path.

Whitefield, 19-5-1962

The chief purpose of religion is to make man aware of his relationship with God. Every person has full rights for worshipping God and winning His Grace. But, whatever the road, whichever the path, the Goal is the same. Vedhic religion will not permit you to quarrel with any other religion, or hate it or decry it. It insists on tolerance and respect.

38. The prison walls

EVEN enthusiasm must be under control; devotion must be regulated; there is no meaning in simply running behind and before My car. See, what happened on account of your overenthusiastic welcome! This meeting, which Raaghavan and others had fixed for six in the evening, is starting now at nine! Of course, I was prepared to stay until midnight or even later if that would help. Only, I have to return to Whitefield this night itself. So what happens? Your restlessness has deprived you of My darshan for a longer time. I am also making My talk very short.

What a pity! Had you been quiet and disciplined from the very beginning, I could have spent more time with you. This is how man loses the chance that he gets. Each one of you felt just a little inconvenience and discomfort and you argued about it and lost your patience over it. Well, I felt the discomfort and the discontent of all of you. Still, I am ever ready to give you aanandha; only, you must be ever ready to receive it from Me.

The Niranjana Bhajana Mandali is regularly doing bhajana (devotional music by group singing) here, I know. Do not think I am coming here for the first time; I am here, whenever you sing the Glory. That is why I have come physically to this place to tell you to carry on this Naamasmarana. Just as the times have changed and conditions of living have changed, the rigours of saadhana have also to be modified. Doing severe thapas (penance) was a great and rare achievement in those days; now, repeating the Name of the Lord is becoming as difficult a thapas. Hence, it is said that smarana (remembrance) is enough; smarana that can be done along with all other activities of living. It is the inner purity that matters, not the outer movement of the lips. Smarana being an inner activity helps that inner transformation.

Evoke the divine in you by Naamasmarana

This meeting has something to do with the Divine Life Society also.

Well, human life is divine life. That is the reason, the justification, the goal of human life.
 Reading books in the Society Library is no good; scholarship reeks with pride; it is eager to win scholastic victory; it jumps at any chance to outwit an opponent; it strains after recognition and honour. Raavana was a famous scholar who had mastered the Vedhas. But that did not endow him with character; he fell into the abyss, nevertheless, it is certainly a wakeful way of spending precious time in mere study without any attempt to translate it into action. You need not give your word to Me now; but try to put into practice at least a few of the good things that appeal to you and that are helpful in giving you peace and contentment. To evoke the Divine in you, there is no better method than Naamasmarana.
 Your Bhajana Mandali is called Niranjana, after the Niraakaara swaruupa (Formless personified) of the Brahma thathwa (principle of Supreme Reality).
 Now, there can be no bhajana of the Niranjana---the unmanifested, pure, absolute principle. You can limit by name and form that Niranjana thathwa and make it Saakaara (with Form and attributes) for the sake of visualising it. Then, by slow stages, you will find that particular Form enclosing all beings and therefore assuming a Universal nature. It will gradually drop its boundaries of time and space and like the blueness of Krishna, pervade the sky and sea and become a symbol for the depth of Eternity.
 The only sane man in this mad world Without surrender, there can be no liberation. So long as you cling to the narrow "I," the four prison walls will close in on you. Cross out the "I" and you are free.
 How to kill the "I?" Place it at the feet of the Lord and say, "You", not "I"---and you are free of the burden that is crushing you. Associate always with the Niranjana---the vast, the unlimited, the divine; dream and plan to merge with the Absolute; fill your ears with the call from the beyond and the boundless.
 Transcend the walls, the bars and bolts, the locks and chains. You can do so easily by fixing your mind on your own infinity.
 Do not condemn the mind as a monkey, etc. It is a fine instrument with which you can win either liberation or bondage. It all depends on how you manipulate it. It will carry out your orders to the minutest detail. It will lead you, if you so desire, along the royal road, right up to the door of Realisation. Or it will make you wander about in the blind alleys, where every step lands you in dirt.

 You should hang your heads in shame when you find from the papers that human beings like you are today inventing and testing weapons which can wipe out millions and injure even coming generations. But you feel proud of man's intelligence and cleverness!
 Some people even admire such inventors! By all means feel proud of persons who invent something which will help man to live happy lives, but use the proper words when you have to describe those who manufacture such killers of entire populations. In the Mental Hospital, you will find all kinds of madness affecting man; some spit on others, some bite, some scratch, some throw stones, some hurl abuses. These mad men are engaged in hurling bombs; that is their madness.
 The world is full of people who suffer from insanity, but who are still outside the asylums!
 Suddenly, when hatred envelopes a country, even ordinary sane people go mad and behave like savages. But in the Mental Hospital, you will find sometimes one type of "mad man." He sits in a corner, resting without a break, watching the pranks and the wildness of the other inmates. The doctors will be thankful to him, for he needs no care; he causes no trouble. His madness may be melancholia or he may be a inaani (realised soul). The God-bound man is like that. He is the only sane man in this mad world.
 Whatever happens to you, take it as a lesson to harden your character and toughen your nerves and heighten your vairaagya (non-attachment). That will give Peace and Joy.
Maddhur, 24-5-1962
 Serve the worm as you would serve as Master; be humble, be eager, be efficient in that service. If you dare treat the worm as your servant, you will be dragged down into disaster.
Sathya Sai Baba
 39. The inner prompting THE day is Vyaasa Pournami and it is also celebrated throughout India as Guru Poornima. The importance of the day has been explained now by the Lawyer from Repalle in Thelugu, by Vineetha Raamachandra Rao in Kannada and by the Editor of Sanaathana Saarathi in English.
 Well, I shall also speak now. Whatever My language, I speak not to inform but more to heal. I administer medicine for your minds, not food for your brains, or rather it is both; like honey, it is both food and drug.

There is nothing specially related to Sage Vyaasa which makes this day attached to his name. He was not born on this day nor did he 'leave' on this day; it is just dedicated to his memory and to the worship of all Gurus. For Vyaasa is the Aadiguru, the Muulaguru (the first and the source of all spiritual teachers). He recognised and declared the Truth in a variety of ways and helped in opening the inner eye of man. He described in beautiful simple, clear terms the Glory of the Lord and of the means of attaining Him. He saw that unless the Mind is negated or destroyed, the Lord will not be manifest. He prescribed the paths by which this could be done. So he is the Lokaguru (world teacher), the Paramaguru (greatest teacher). He collected the hymns, collated them and put them into the Four Vedhas; he assembled the later Vedhic literature and composed the Brahma Suuthras (aphorisms on Supreme Reality) to expound the philosophy that was inherent in it. He wrote the Mahaabhaaratha, which includes the universal specific, the Bhagavad Geetha. Then, when he was sunk in sadness, in spite of all this knowledge and scholarship and teaching, Naaradha advised him to sing the glory of the personalised aspect of Godhead, to waken the emotions and guide them Godward through bhakthi. That gave him and the world great joy and peace, for Vyaasa then wrote the Bhaagavatha. Discover that happiness is an inner gift. Now, whether it is Vyaasa or the Guru whom you honour today, the more important thing is the Pournami (Full Moon) that happens today; that is the one thing certain about it; the rest of the story is conjecture. The Guru is needed when you have the guri ('Goal' or 'Aim' in Thelugu). If you do not have that urge, what can the teacher do? On sand or rock, if seeds are strewn, it is a sheer waste of precious stuff. Inner prompting to see the light must send the aspirant to the teacher or must draw the teacher to wherever he is. You must inquire and discriminate: Do objects grant happiness? Is any one happy? How can one be happy through the multiplication of desire and the frantic effort to feed the raging fire? At last, you will by your own experience, discover that happiness is an inner gift, a spiritual treasure that can be won by equanimity. The Moon is the presiding deity of the mind; it must shine cool and comforting, eternally, in fullness, in the Hrudhaya-aakaasha (the inner firmament of the heart). The external material

Moon waxes and wanes but the mind should be trained to stand up against modifications and moods. The internal Moon has no marks on it; it is ever full, it is always Full Moon for the victorious spiritual aspirant. Man is possessed by the ghost of Maayaa. The mind spins a cocoon for the jeevi (individual soul) to be imprisoned in. Karma, which is the activity of Maayaa (ignorance), encloses the individual in its grip; it is the husk that makes the paddy seed grow and yield more paddy plants and more grains of paddy. Remove the husk and there is no more sprouting. The husk, karma, makes the jeevi sprout and undergo the penance of vaasan (going through the pleasure and pain produced by the impressions unconsciously left on the mind by past good or bad actions) and samskaaras (performance of purificatory rites and sacred ceremonies), You reward and punish yourself as the result of your own activities; you are here because you wished to come here; you gravitate to the level to which your deeds drag or lift you. You make your own future by your thoughts and desires and deeds.

Maayaa is like the ghost of a tribal woman, which once possessed a great Pandith in a Himaalayan hermitage. The unfortunate Pandith sang and danced like any tribal damsel; he swore and cursed in the Paisachi (ghost) dialect and every one in the hermitage became ashamed of his company. At last, when the ghost was exorcised and the Pandith was freed, he became his original self; he remembered nothing of his pranks and blabberings. Man is similarly possessed by the ghost of Maayaa. The ghost has to be driven out. The mode of exorcism of this ghost is taught by the Guru or the Geetha. Do not despair; it can be driven out. Confidence adds the required courage and strength. Do not doubt or give vent to despair. It must happen whether you welcome it or not, whether you strive for it or not; that is your reason for taking birth, the goal you have to reach. You have not come to be a tool in the hands of a ghost. The ant moves steadily and slowly towards its goal, climbing over everything that comes in its way. Let yours be the same Pipeelika maarga (path of the ant). Follow the path of Naamasmarana steadily, climbing over all obstacles like sloth, pride, haste, doubt, etc.

The Guru can help you to a certain, extent only, but be grateful to him for that little. He is like a skilled gardener. who tends the plants and waters them intelligently; cutting the tree into proper shape, applying the correct manure to supplement the soil and keeping it free from drought and pests. Give the Guru the gratitude for all this service; but reserve Sharanaagathi (seeking refuge for portection) for the Lord. Do not offer the Guru more than his due. Do not also change your allegiance. Do saadhana in unbroken disciplined way. You cannot sell your house to some one and later, mortgage it to another, and rent it out to a third party after some further interval. Shri Raamakrishna had to cut asunder even the form of Kaali when it came across his path towards the realisation of the Nirguna (formless) aspect of God. Do not do spiritual practice off and on; do it in an unbroken disciplined way. Otherwise, it will be like watering a plant for some time and leaving it to go dry before you start again. The Bhru-madhya (centre point between the eyebrows) on which you are asked to concentrate is not the point where your eyebrows meet in the centre of your forehead; it is a point in your inner awareness, the hrudhaya (heart). Like the celestial damsels that were sent by Indhra to break the penance of sages, you will be getting during meditation nine varieties of music, but you should not be elated by that and suspend your saadhana. Guru Pournami here is distinct from the festival in other places. Between you and Me, it is not the relationship between Guru and sisya (teacher and disciple) that prevails, or that of the Guide and the Pilgrim. The external Guru should not be equated with the Sarvantharyaami (innermost soul in all the hearts). Even Garuda cannot reach the Goal if it does not spread its wings and leap into the sky. So, make a move, put a step forward. That is the immediate task; your resolve on this day should be that start with a sincere desire to succeed. Light will be shed by the Grace of the Lord. The Lord has come to help you. Prashanthi Nilayam, 17-71962 Practise the attitude of offering every act at the Feet of God as a flower is offered in puuja. Make every breath an offering to Him. Do not be upset by calamities; take them as acts of Grace. If a man loses his hand in an accident, he must believe that it was the Lord's Grace that saved his life. When you know that nothing happens without His sankalpa (resolve), everything that happens has a value added to it. Sathya Sai Baaba

40. Unfurl it on your consciousness AT Prashanthi Nilayam, every day is a Festival Day; every day is a holy day. As the saying goes, it is "Nithya' kalyaanam, Pachha thoranam" --- "Perpetual joy, perpetually green."
Following the customary habits of people, feeling that the external signs of auspiciousness have their own value in educating and sublimating the inner emotions, the Navaraathri (festival of nine holy nights) is celebrated here also. For that reason, you need not wait for Navaraathri here or at home to instal Durga or Saraswathi in your heart; the day you feel the urge, that day is the auspicious day. Do not delay or postpone. I have been saying more or less the same things every time the Flag is hoisted on this Nilayam. But just as you have to eat the same items of food every day, just as you have to wash your face every now and then, the washed face being washed again, so the spoken message has to be spoken again and again. This is needed for those who have heard it from Me already; it is even more needed by those who have come for the first time. This Nilayam is "Prashanthi" Nilayam (abode of tranquillity). It is the abode of the highest form of Shanthi, Prashanthi (absolute peace). In fact, you are, each one of you, the Nilayam of Prashanthi. That is why I very often address you as 'Shanthi swaruupulaara' (embodiments of peace)! My object is to remind you that your real nature is Shanthi, equanimity, peace, unruffledness, non-attachment. You cannot draw out from within you that which is not there, is it not? Therefore, Shanthi must be there, deep down, as the very core of your being. It is the ripeness of the fruit, the sweetness filling the ripened fruit. Shanthi is an ennobling, elevating experience Shanthi is not just an external polish, which can be put on or brushed off. It is not the same as fortitude, like that which young Yudhishtira had when he bore without a tear or a gasp the hundred blows with a cane administered to test his stamina. It is not resignation which comes of frustrated ambition or satisfied desire. It is an ennobling, elevating experience which comes when one attains the merger with the very source of one's being. It is the stilling of the waves; the calming of mental activities and agitations. Every one who has attained it has hoisted the Prashanthi Flag; in fact, each one of you should strive to unfurl it on your own hearts. You must all become an army of dhaarmic workers, equipped with the weapons of sathya, dharma, shaanthi and prema, to revive humanity and rid it of all the ills with which it is now stricken. I have told you often that this flag hoisting is not a mere formality; it is a meaningful rite in the inauguration and training of that army. I never do any act which is devoid of significance or speak a word devoid of purpose. The symbol on the Flag is also full of significance.

Concrete representation of the symbol on flag

This Prashaanthi Nilayam has no compound wall, as you have noticed. It is, as it should be; people can come to the Lord from any direction, without let or hindrance. But we have gates!

The persons who walk along that road, which takes a turn when it approaches the Nilayam are, like all else, burdened with inherited imputes and earned dents and bents in their personality make-up. They are moved on by desire and urged by the six-thonged whip of passion. They enter the gate only when they are no longer overwhelmed by thamoguna (quality of inertia and indolence); that is, when they have the curtain of delusion drawn aside a little. From there they move on towards the Nilayam and pass through that second gate, where they are attracted by the imposing building, the portico, the statue in front---all appealing to the comparatively superior rajoguna (quality of passionate activity). Even this falls off when they enter the Hall, where sathwaguna (quality of serenity and poise) overpowers the mind---what with the pictures, images, the bhajana, the Naamaavalis (singing of Lord's Name), etc.

This circle in front of the Nilayam--this is a concrete representation of the symbol on the Flag; you should all be told about this and you should in turn educate others about it. The first circle within the brick outline is as you can see strewn with sand. That is kaama (desire), mere waste land, where nothing can grow, from which no sustenance can be procured. The next one is the circle of krodha (anger), enemy number two of man. It is represented here as a hardy tuber plant with many leaves, which though cut often beyond recognition, sprouts at the next fall of rain.

Anger is like that; you feel you have uprooted it, but let your pride be injured or your wish opposed, it sprouts again. Its roots are tentacles difficult to escape from.

Every Navaraathri (the nine-day festival), the thousands of devotees who walk about here trample the plants and leave no trace. But when the Birthday Festival comes a month or two later the sprouts come again and grow into a sizeable height. That is the way anger grips a man. It grows into hatred and vengeance, the two red steps that you see as the next two concentric circles. When some one stands across your path, you hate him; when some one refuses to be your accomplice, you hate him. Acts of commission as well as omission cause hatred. That is why we have two steps here.

Make the symbol alive in your consciousness

Crossing the sands of greed and lust, the wilds of anger, climbing the heights of hatred and vengefulness, the spiritual aspirant comes to the green meadow of prema. You can see that circle of broad green grass, attractively embellished with good thoughts and virtues, which refresh and satisfy. Beyond that, we have the broad expanse of Shaanthi (quiet), where all agitations cease and the mind is at rest in its own silence. Now is the chance: establish yourself in yoga---the saadhana of spiritual union with the Universal Power, the Absolute Wisdom, the Eternal Verity.

The consciousness ascends through the six centres, marked on the Yogadhandha (yogic staff) in the centre of the circle, and then, watch what happens. The Lotus of the Heart blooms, the petals unfold, the fragrance permeates the Universe, the rays of the Sun are inhaled, and as you see represented here, the Aathmajyothi (the splendour of the Aathma, the unsullied effulgence), illuminates you and everything else in One All-embracing flame.

Contemplate on this symbol; make it alive in your consciousness; that is what I mean when I say, hoist the flag on your mind. You will find it highly beneficial. When this flag waves happily with the wind on the Nilayam, it must also wave happily on your consciousness, calling you to further effort and further spiritual effort.

It is not mere bhakti (intense devotion) that I want, I want action motivated by bhakti. Throw off all your present responsibilities and take up this new responsibility of saving yourself; then you will have discharged your duty smoothly and to your satisfaction.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 29-9-1962.

Know that the basic reality is God, Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent. Become aware of it and stay in that awareness always. Whatever the stress and the strom, do not waver from that Faith.

Or you can earn that awareness by reminding yourselves of it with every breath of yours.

How can you so remind yourselves, you may ask.

By means of any one of His Names, any Name that is fragrant with Divine Pre-fume, any Name that is reminiscent of His Beauty His Grace and His Power.

Sathya Sai Baaba

41. Dharma moolam

TODAY, long before the Sun rose, I could see Aanandha rising in your hearts; for you woke up long before dawn and got ready to come here for the Inauguration of this yajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice)! I had suggested 9-30 as the time for this event, but others suggested an earlier Muhuurtha (auspicious hour) due to the showers that came this morning. My sankalpa (resolve) prevailed, and we are meeting here to inaugurate the yajna at 9-30 itself! Aanandha is ultimately based on food, food is derived from rain, rain is the gift of God in exchange for yajna offerings.

Yajna is a rite done as per the Karmakaanda, a part of the Vedhas dealing with action. So, the Vedha Purusha (Vedhic God-head) is the spring out of which Aanandha wells. That is why this yajna is called Vedha Purusha Yajna.

Yajna (Sacrifice), is the destiny of every living being. Life is sustained by the sacrifice, of the living. Every being, from the tiniest amoeba to the most profound scholar, is perpetually engaged in yajna. The mother sacrifices for the child, the father for the progeny, the friend for the friend, the individual for the group, the present for the sake of the future, the rich for the poor, the weak for the strong---it is all yajna, sacrifice, offering. Only, most of it is not conscious; most of it is not voluntary; most of it is not righteous. It is done out of fear or greed or with a view to the fruits thereof, or by mere instinct or primeval urge. It must be consciously done, it must be for spiritually elevating purposes, especially in man. Then, when Life becomes yainamaya (sacrifice-filled), egoism will disappear and the river will merge in the sea.

Bring out the priceless pearls of India's past

The stream of yajna is the river Saraswathi of the Vedhic Thriveni; the meaning and significance, of every single hymn and rite of the Vedhas is yajna. Every single syllabus of the Vedhas is a name of God; it has about thirteen lakhs of such syllables. When the river Saraswathi underneath the twin rivers, Ganga and Yamuna, dries up, it will be a terrible tragedy; so also when the stream of yajna dries up, it will be a great loss of spiritual wealth; because when that happens, India cannot continue to be India. Bhaarithavarsha is called Karmabhumi, since yajna is the karma that is the most worthwhile. It is Vedhabhumi (land of Vedhas), not the Vedhanabhumi (land of anguish) it is fast becoming. Vedhana or suffering can never come if the Vedhas are learnt and practised again.

Do not be satisfied with simply collecting a few gaudy shells from the shore of this ancient' culture. Dive deep into its past and bring out the priceless pearls.

"Vedhokhilo Dharma muulam"---The Vedhas are the root of all dharma (virtue). If the roots are injured, the tree will die. If the roots are alive, the tree can grow again; it can survive the lopping of the branches, the denudation of the leaves, but once the roots decay, there is no hope. The Vedhas and the Shaasthras are the two eyes of India. But by blind imitation of Western cultures and by blind carping on the native culture, these two eyes have become dim. Those who have no vision have to be led by others. Indians too are thrown into this plight, when they allowed the Vedhas and the Shaasthras to be neglected. They are reduced to dependence on others, who showed them the way to their own culture.

Man has bandaged his eyes with egoism

Do not cry out for help to the rulers or the Governments if you desire to revive the Vedhas. No, the Vedha belongs to those who crave for it, who know its value, who are afflicted with an insatiable thirst for it, who desire to practise it and who are eager to derive the joy and calm which it can impact. No one else has the right to patronise it and talk highly about it; such talk will be insincere and therefore, valueless and even false. People who do not know how to distinguish between the fleeting and the fixed, the right and the wrong, the true and the false, sit in judgement on the Vedhas and strut about pompously in their narrow conceited circles; but others keep aloof from such critics. To say, as some of these do, that the Vedhas are contraptions put together by a few Brahmins for their aggrandizement is the height of folly; it is the case of the mentally weak judging a thing beyond their ken.

A fish, even if it is put into a golden bowl, struggles desperately to return to the sea from which it was pulled up. It is in mortal agony until it reaches its primal home. It wants water all round it to be happy and alive. Man too is of the nature of Aanandha (divine bliss); he cannot survive without Aanandha. He is Amritha swaruupa (Immortality embodied); hence, it is difficult for him to imagine that his body will fall off and he has to die one day. He has bandaged his eyes with egoism and he says the darkness is very congenial; the curious shapes of things he sees darkly, he takes as true.

Vedhic scholars must save the Vedhas

There are some disciplines and some dharma to follow if you desire to take off the bandage and see the Light and all things in the new Light. This Bhavarogha (worldly disease) can be cured by the Vedhic drug and the regimen of restrictions and regulations, the various do's and dont's which these Brahmins are following. Do not dismiss these restrictions and regulations as mere superstitions; no one will practise them for the fun of it all; they are very hard limitations on conduct and on the details of daily life. It requires great faith, courage and hardihood to hold them as true and put them into practice. Honour those who have that faith and that courage. I know the sincerity with which they have been leading this regulated life, for I have been with every one of them since years.

By long neglect, the road laid down by the Vedhic Seers is overgrown with thorns; it is now well-nigh unrecognisable, what with pot-holes, scoutings, hollows and brush. Just as some travellers spoil the very rest-houses where they are given shelter the Vedhas have been covered with calumny by the very people whom they have blessed and elevated. When a country is in danger of invasion, the army, that is a part of the population, selected carefully and trained systematically for the specific purpose of war, rushes to ward off the invader. Similarly, when the Vedhas are in danger, this well-trained, selected band of dedicated Vedhic scholars must take up the task.

These Pandiths and scholars were struggling in agony because they felt forsaken and alone.

Now, look at them, sitting gaily dressed, as brides in the marriage pavilion; with joy in their faces and hope in their hearts. They had no one hitherto even to listen with patience to their scrupulously correct recitals of the Vedhic Manthras (holy letters, words). Henceforth, they have no reason to fear.

My task comprises Vedha sam rakshana (protection of Vedhas), Vidhwath poshana (fostering Vedhic scholars) and Dharma sthaapana (establishment of Righteousness). All three are interdependent. Vidhwath poshana helps both Vedhas and Dharma and so I assure them that their scholarship and sincerity will not go unrewarded. The era of neglect has ended.

Vedhapurusha sapthaaha Yajna: Prashaanthi Nilayam, 1-10-1962

When Raama enters the mind, kaama has no place therein. Desire ceases, when God seizes the mind. In fact, since desire is the very stuff of which the mind is made, it becomes non-ex-istent and you are free.

This stage is called, mano-nigraha, mano-laya or mano-naashana --the death of the mind, the merging of the mind or the killing of the mind.

42. Bhrama and Brahman

WHEN you listen to these speeches by distinguished scholars, these wise men who have become like ripe fruits full of sweet Vedhasaaram (essence of Vedhas), you forget (I can realise your feelings) the discomfort, the rain, the heat, the sleeplessness and the hunger which might be pestering you. That shows that the Vedhas are a reservoir of joy. And for you, the joy is greater because you are all the time listening with Me in your minds, comparing My words and deeds with what you hear these people describe as the words and deeds of the Vedhic God, and discovering that both are the same. For your inner joy, they are not the cause, nor is it, believe Me, even I. It is you yourself. The proofs and arguments they quoted for the purity of the rites and establishment of a happy social order, which is the product of the rites, they are in you already, they are for you. You have those messages whispering their words of warning and encouragement in your inner ear; it is up to you to be silent for a while, so that you may hear it and benefit by it.

You have been born for one purpose: to die. That is to say, to kill the "I." If bhrama (delusion) dies, you become Brahman (the Supreme Spirit), or rather, you know that you are Brahman. All this literature, all this effort, all this yajna, all this teaching is just to hold a mirror before you, so that you may see Yourself.

Karma is like the clouds that pass

Now, this can be done by karma, upaasana or inaana (action, worship, sacred knowledge); the Vedhas are the basic teaching for all humanity, on these three; it has the Karma kaanda, the Upaasana kaanda and the Inaana kaanda. Of course, bhakthi or upaasana (through the karma which it sublimates and sanctifies) will lead you on to the highest jnaana. It is enough if you take a ticket and sit in the "through" carriage of the train; it will take you through many junctions to the distant destination. The karma of purchasing a ticket and getting into the carriage and the bhakthi or intense desire to reach the terminus (without any urge to alight at intermediate stations) will take you through a series of junctions and stations, right to the very place where you want to go.

In the firmament of the heart, the mind and the intellect must shine as the Moon and the Sun;

Karma is like the clouds that pass; do not worry about them. Some clouds are inevitable; they will shift soon and fade away. So also karma. They will not disappear if you simply shout at them. Discipline alone can drive away those clouds; that is to say, karma has to be done to free the mind from the consequences of Karma.

The Vedhas are endless, Anantham; Vedha is the sky. which envelops all, which has no limit in any direction. The Shaasthras are like buildings built under the sky, each with its own roof; some big, some small, but all constructed to give shelter and comfort; the same nectar is found in both, but the Vedha is the reservoir from which they draw and fill their own tanks.

Take a stone image; the face, the nose, the feet, the ankle, the knee, the hair, the crown, the precious stones set in the crown are all stone. The cloth that the image wears is stone, the smile is stone. So too, the entire world is Brahman, one substance, one energy, one mind. Vidwaans

Kolluri Somasekhara Shaasthry, Sannidhaanam Lakshminarayana Shaasthry and Uppuluuri

Ganapathi Shaasthry all went through their speeches at express speed, for they felt that you were longing to hear Me also. But that was wronging you, for rarely do you hear men of such talent and experience. Still, I shall close now, for you have sat too long without any interval.

Give the body the attention it deserves, but not more. Some people advise that you should cultivate disgust towards it; but, that is not beneficial. Tend it as an instrument, use it as a boat, as a raft. Disgust is not a desirable attitude towards any-thing in creation. Everything is God's handiwork, an example of His Glory, His Majesty.

Sathya Sai Baaba

43. Ghee and sandal

DAILY you are getting the "Essence of Divinity" from these scholars, who have come to this little village hidden behind the hills and forests; they are giving you medicine to reduce your fever and restore you to health. This stream of amritha (nectar of immortality) is coming to you because of your fortune, earned by goodness, and good deeds. Of course, it is interesting to hear from them speeches on subjects contained in the books which these Pandiths have studied; but it is much more interesting and useful to hear what they have themselves experienced and practised on the basis of what they have studied. I tell you only what they have already said, but you like it nevertheless, probably because I try to make it simpler to suit your measure of understanding, which I happen to know more than they; they do not know you as well as I do, or as long as I do.

There are, I know, many even in this gathering who whisper among their own group that this Homa (offering oblations to gods into the consecrated fire) with fine cow's ghee and costly sandalwood chips is a big waste. But if you always dwell in the realm of accounts, of plus and minus, how can you ever get the joy of realising a wish that is unsatisfiable by mere money?

These people struggle for ghee and for sandal fuel; not for the more precious joy of the performance of an ancient rite.

The questioners themselves have eaten bags of rice and drunk pots and pots of ghee since birth.

Let me ask them whether they have had a single day of happiness or whether they have given joy at least to their kith and kin. This yajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice) gives great joy to so many; I have not gone to any one for funds for this; I and My people are very delighted by this celebration! What have others to do in this matter? They are concentrating on material utility. I want you to concentrate on spiritual significance. They struggle for a little ghee; they crave for a little fuel. You get incalculable joy.

Yajna is correlated with human aspirations

The yajna has a deeper meaning, the meaning that symbols have, the meaning that is really valuable for human progress. Every rite is a symbolic act. Yajna is correlated at every step with human aspirations and saadhana. It is kept in touch with human life and aspirations in its minutest detail. Butter is the product of the churning of the emotions, impulses, impressions and instincts of man; the purest and the most authentic essence of the divine in man. That butter, when it is still more clarified, becomes ghee; it is that which is offered to the Gods.

You may ask how it reaches the Gods. Well, the Vedha itself is the authority for that belief. You cannot demand any other; for it will be as foolish as asking the eye to prove by some authority unconnected with the eye, the validity of what it has seen. How can the ear give some other authority to prove the genuineness of the sound which it alone can hear? The eye is its own authority, the ear is its own pramaana (testimony). The Vedha which has probed into the science of propitiating the Gods says that the Sacrificial Fire conveys the subtler aspects of the offerings. And the Vedha is its own testimony. Strive to secure Grace, not any lesser' fruit Indhra (Lord of celestial gods) is the presiding Deity of the Hand and the Indhra yajna confers the communion of human labour; the collective co-operation of human industry for the progress of the individual and of society. Also, Brihaspathi (Spiritual teacher of celestial gods) is the Deity of the Intellect and the yajna associated with his name establishes cordiality and coordination. The Chandra Yajna (Sacrifice for Moon) similarly tends to develop the harmony of hearts and the Aadhithya Yajna (Sacrifice for Sun) the promotion of sameness of vision among all, for the Sun is the Deity presiding over the Eye. Every yajna has a great unseen influence on human affairs, for these Manthras (sacred formulas) are potent sounds, charged with subtle mysteries. Always concentrate on the lasting fruit; the universal, the spiritual. Do not pursue mean objectives; utilise the mind to follow the Plan of the Lord to re-establish Dharma in the world. What can you plan with your paltry intelligence? There was a man once who laughed at God for giving the majestic banyan tree a tiny molecular seed and conferred on the ash gourd a gigantic uncouth fruit. "No sense of proportion," he said. However, he had to sleep once under the shade of a banyan tree and when he woke up after an hour or so, he saw a large quantity of seeds that had fallen on his body. If only the banyan tree had seeds in proportion to its size, a single seed falling from that height would have killed the critic in no time! Therefore, he thanked God for his poor sense of logic and moved away perfectly safe. Take everything as it comes; cultivate contentment; do not multiply your wants and foster greed and despair. You take off your warm clothing when you start feeling warm yourself. The coat of desire has to be taken off when the warmth of bhakti increases. Strive to secure Grace, do not strive to secure any lesser fruit. Faith can compel the Lord to manifest Himself. There was a thief who listened quite accidentally to the recital or the charms of Krishna during childhood; he stopped for a moment, but could not pull himself away. He heard the description of the ornaments he wore and got a great desire to rob those precious treasures, he asked the Pandith where exactly Krishna would be tending the cows alone or with just his elder brother or with handful of comrades. The Pandith told him rather curtly, "In Brindaavan, on the Yamuna bank." Planning to catch Krishna alone and deprive him of the ornaments, he hurried off to Brindaavan. Sure enough, he met the Boy alone next morning at the head of his herd of cows, but how could he take off the ornaments from that Loveliness? He was afraid that the removal of even one ornament would reduce the lustre and his hear did not allow him to do that. He looked on for hour, lost in ecstasy, till Krishna himself asked him, but he was too ashamed to mention it. Krishna knew it however. He gave him all the jewels he wore. The thief was overcome with shame and joy; he fell at the Boy's Feet, but when he rose, Krishna was not to be seen. He came to his village and consulted the Pandith. "Are these the jewels of Krishna that you extolled the other day? I went to Brindhaavan and He gave them to me." Needless to add, the Pandith fell at robber's feet. Faith can work wonders, it can compel the Lord to manifest Himself and give you what you believe he will give. The Rithwiks (priests) and Pandiths (Vedhic scholars) pressed Me with the request that I should agree to their proposal to have some programme which they called Thribhuvana Vijayam (conquest of three worlds). That is a sign of their enthusiasm and their faith. They wish that I should agree to give them audience as Seshasaayee (Vishnu lying on the serpant with one thousand heads forming the couch), using the Sesha paryanka (serpant-like couch) that has been brought by a devotee from Bombay; it seems they, like the rishis mentioned in the Bhaagavatha, will represent to Me then the sad condition of the Shaasthras (scriptures) they study and practise, including the Mother of all Shaasthras, the Vedha. When this idea was first placed before Me, some one objected on the ground that I was asked to give darshan (audience) "like" Mahaa Vishnu. He did not like the idea of "like." I have also an objection against "acting" in a "drama."

But I was so moved by the earnestness of their request that I agreed. Really speaking, this Avathaar is itself acting a part. It is 'putting on' a function and 'assuming' a role, by the Functionless and the Role-less. As far as the yajna is concerned, I shall give you the darshan of the Vedha swaruupa (Vedha personified) before you disperse. Be assured of that.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 4-10-1962.

44. What is dharma, what is not ?

VAARANAASI Subrahmanya Shaasthry spoke so well about Dharma, especially the problem of right and wrong as brought out in the episodes of the Mahaabhaaratha. Of course, as he said, right and wrong have to be decided in each case by the analysis of the particular context, with reference to some fundamental principles. Those principles have been visualised by Sages and laid down in the Vedhas. That is why the Vedha is declared to be the root of Dharma. Ganapathi Shaasthry brought out this primacy of the Vedha in his talk. Both of them have already served you a fine banquet of wisdom. The time is 6.25 p.m. and Ghantasaala, who is to give a musical recital, has already occupied the attention of most of you.

Ghantasaala tells me that he requires about half an hour to begin and so, it seems, I have to keep you engaged until he is ready, whether you like it or not!

Naturally, I always speak of Dharma. For, I have come to re-establish it. I have no other work here. I give what is Paanakam (sweet drinks) for the ignorant and what is Amritha (nectar) for the illumined. You cannot infer that Dharma is declining only in India, because all the.

Avathaars you know took place here; the Avathaar has to take shape. in the place where the Dharma originated and where it is still studied and valued. The rest' of the world is but the branches of this tree. For Me, there is no native land or foreign land. All humanity has to be brought back to the path of Dharma. The Vedha is Apourusheya--- "Not ascribable to human skill or authorship;" the Vedha Purusha (Soul of Vedha) is not ascribable to any one country. Vedha emanates from wherever you yearn for it. All religions and Dharmas are but proliferations of Vedhic truths.

Intentions of actions should be pure

Human nature has to be chastened, controlled and guided along certain channels; otherwise, like the flooded Ganga, it will bring disaster to millions who rest in 'security, believing it to be harmless. The haste to secure an immediate advantage has to be cured, the later advantage may be more lasting and more healthy; benefits to the individual have to be given up in favour of benefits to the group, the village, the community, the country or the whole of mankind. Ideas, principles, laws, 'customs, codes, habits, actions---all are to be judged on the twin points of intention and consequence. Is the intention pure, is it born out of Prema, is it based on Truth?

Does it result in Shaanthi? If yes, dharma is enshrined in that action or law, custom or conduct.

Intention and consequence are the two bunds that guide the flood waters of the Godaavari safely into the sea, which can swallow any amount of river water.

In fact, it is the rule and the restriction that gives charm to the game of life. If in the game of football any player can do any thing with the ball, and there is neither foul nor out, neither offside nor goal, neither throw nor penalty, then it will be a meaningless game incapable of giving Aanandha.

Principles on which Dharma is based

Now, how are you to decide in any particular case what is dharma and what is not? I shall tell you some principles which you can use on such occasions. That which does not inflict pain on you. and on others---that is fight, that is dharma. So act in such a way that you get joy and others too get joy. Or, take another standard for your actions: Make the manas, the vaak and the kaayam (thought, word and deed) agree in harmony. That is to say, act as you speak, speak as you feel; do not play false to your own conscience; do not cover your thoughts in a cloak of falsehood; do not suppress your conscience by forcibly enslaving it and embarking on actions not approved by

it. That is the dharmic way of life Frequently doing right makes it easier and easier, habit grows into conscience. If you are once established in right conduct, you will automatically follow the right. What you do depends on what you are; what you are depends on what you do. The two are interdependent to a great degree.

Or, there is another principle. Dharma trains you to be calm, level-headed, secure in equanimity.

You know the transitory nature of success or failure, riches or poverty, joy or grief, appointment or disappointment. You are not elated or deflated. You are serene, unmoved. Anything that helps you to maintain this unruffled stability is dharma. To cut it short: sensual life is adharmā; the spiritual life is dharma. Dharma is that which sustains, saves and sanctifies. Man is born and is given a lease of life so that he may earn the knowledge of His identity with the Infinite. There are differences between the limbs of the body but they all belong to the body; it is foolish for them to imagine that they are unconnected with the body. The Sun sends out a million rays but they all belong to the Sun. The Sun is reflected in a million pots of water but though they all are tiny images of the Sun, the Sun is the Truth and the reflections are all relatively unreal. Do not have a double standard. One common definition of dharma is that it is the adherence to the rule: "Do unto others what you wish them to do unto you; do not do unto others what you do not wish them to do unto you." Do not have a double standard. Treat all as your own self. That is to say, you must have faith in yourself and then only can you have faith in others. You must respect yourself and respect others. Egoism is the measure of altruism. Mankind is one community; you harm yourself and you harm all. You make a man stand erect and that act makes you stand erect. The treatment you wish others to render to you is itself the measure of your duty to them. The Vedhas and the Upanishads, which form the Inaana kaandha and the Upaasana sections of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion), are the best guides to the path of dharma for mankind, for all classes, for the family, for society, for the professional group and for the individual. Just as Delhi is the capital of India, India is the spiritual capital for all mankind. It is the responsibility of Indians to demonstrate in their lives that Dharma confers on them shaanthi and soukhya (peace and happiness), so that the rest of mankind may get the inspiration to follow the same path. Prashanthi Nilayam, 5-10-1962

45. The Braahmin

YOU may not remember it now, but this meeting started at 4-15 and perhaps most of you were here by 3-30 at least; and now the time is 7-40. You have heard the lucid exposition of Uppuluri

Ganapathi Shaasthry, who knows the different shades of meaning of every individual syllable of the entire Vedha. That is his thapas (penance). And his prema (love) towards you is so great that he puts all that vast learning into such simple and sweet Thelugu that even a child can understand and what is more, you become enthusiastic to know more. He has been helping you to understand the why and wherefore of the various rites and rituals and manthras which are used in this yajna, for this is inaana yajna (sacrificial rite of spiritual wisdom), and every one must know the significance of everything done here. He explained why earth from the Royal Stables, the Royal Elephant Stables, the Palace Gates is considered sacred for the yajna; why the earth from the ant-hill is also used in preference to other places. I took special care to bring these materials in thief genuineness and gave these people everything they needed, and told them not to be satisfied with substitutes and secondbests, for I know they too wish to seize this opportunity for performing a scrupulously correct yajna. I want to show you and them that a Vedhic yajna celebrated strictly according to Vedhic formulae will certainly grant the fruits 'promised by the Vedha Purusha (Supreme Being). Vedha is a deep sea containing precious pearls. Remilla Suuryaprakaasha Shaasthry spoke on Kumarilabhata, who preceded Shankaraacharya and revived Vedhic learning and overwhelmed the opponents of Vedhic ritual in those days. They are now arranging here the Seshaparyanka (serpent-like couch). The Thiribhuvana Vijaya, for which Kalluri Veerabhadra Shaasthry and others have been planning, will start soon. I had no idea of speaking today but since you will all be disappointed if I do not, I shall fill up the interval. The two Shaasthrys spoke very well, because their authority for all their statements is the Vedha, nothing less. Their purpose was also praiseworthy; to elevate man through the spread of the Vedhic teaching. When the mind is so pure and the brain so full, the words will certainly be sweet and nourishing. It is a very difficult task to dive into the deep sea, the beginingless and the endless 'Vedha,' and bring up such precious pearls; not that the pearls are few, but because the sea is so deep. The Vedha teaches man lessons that take him beyond the ken of the three gunas--- the dull, the active, and the calm; the black, the red and the white. The Vedha also speaks the language of symbols and one has to be well versed in Vedhic vocabulary and the technique to be able to interpret it, as Ganapathi Shaastri does or as Remilla does. For example, they said explaining a manthra, that all men are children of Suurya. The meaning of that is: all those who have eyes to see are specially blessed by the Sun, for the Sun is the presiding deity of the inner and the outer vision. The manthra does not mean that all men belong to Suuryavamsa (Sun dynasty)! There are seven Suns, seven types of rays; and that is the reason why you are advised to have half-closed eyes when you meditate on the Form of the Lord.

Then there will be the first three rays trying to penetrate the upper eyelid and the last three, the lower eyelid; but the eye will receive only the fourth ray, the fourth colour.

Such subtle secrets are also hidden in the hymns to the various Gods. It is not correct to say that each Vedhic God represents a Force of Nature that is patent to man: the Rain God, the Thunder God, the Sun God, the Dawn Goddess, etc. The glory and the majesty of the One. God is visualised in various contexts and praised; that is all. The manthras have far deeper meanings.

This humanity is a motley crowd of pilgrims

It is often said that the Brahmin caste, out of hatred and contempt, has denied to the other castes the chance to study the Vedhas. If you go out to catch fish, you must equip yourself with the rod, the 'hook and the bait to attract the fish. If you desire to master the Vedhas, you must have the rod of Dharmic living, the hook of Vedhic Sanskrith, and the bait, viz., the Braahmin who is revered by the Vedhas and who revered the Vedhas in turn. The Braahmin has been prepared by a series of purificatory rituals or samskaaras. This enables him and entitles him to pronounce the manthras and to expound them.

Every one has not won the same sublime impulses and impressions. All of you listen to Me, but do all of you understand what I say to the same extent? Or, do all of you practise what I suggest to the same extent? No. Each understands or practises according to the tendencies, the roots which those tendencies have laid in the mind. Men are not so uniform. One person is not equipped like another. It is a motley crowd of pilgrims, this humanity.

The correct pronunciation of Vedhas is essential

The Braahmin, when born is just a Suudhra; birth does not entitle him to take up the study of this

Mystery, even if the boy happens to be the son of a great Vedhic scholar! It is only when he has been formally initiated by a special ceremony that he can start the study of the sacred scriptures.

The ceremony makes him a Braahmin; he is then born again into a sacred world of study and responsibility.

Many Braahmins have fallen from this responsibility of maintaining a certain ascetic simplicity of life and a certain level of scholarship. When the pure metal has been turned into an alloy, it has to be put into the crucible again. Again, whenever we find genuine Vedhic vessels like these Pandiths, we have to protect and preserve them. If people sit quiet when stones are thrown on these vessels by little folk swayed by foolish hatred, the vessels will be broken and Vedha too will become inaccessible.

If Braahmins are driven into the forest, the Vedhas too will enter the forest with them, for they are the repositories of Vedha. They study the correct pronunciation of each syllable and have, by a remarkable technique of keeping it in memory, preserved it through the ages, through all the calamities India had to endure. There was a boy who was reading aloud his English lessons at home but he did them so wrongly that the parents were one day put into a great fright. MILK was what the boy was reading; he spelt it out first and then read the entire word. He shouted, emmayelkay milk, emmayelkay milk, emmayelkay milk so fast and so nervously that the parents felt he was shouting in fear, Amma, yeluka---*yeluka meaning in Thelugu, the rat. Correct pronunciation is essential. Encourage the Brahmins to dedicate their lives to the proper study of the scriptures; you too will benefit by that study as you are benefitting these days here.

The Lord cares for single-minded yearning Jaathi and Neethi (caste and conduct) are based on each other and there is no jaathi without its corresponding neethi, or controlling restrictions. That is done for purposes of systematic training and for elevating the individual, not for suppressing or cheating him.

If a boy is admitted in the Primary School or the Nursery School instead of a College, you cannot say that he is cheated or treated with contempt. It is the first step towards College and a Degree.

But remember, the Lord makes no difference between caste and caste. What He cares for is virtue and single-minded yearning. When the elephant Gajendra raised its trunk and surrendered to the Lord and prayed to Him for succour, it was no longer a beast; its beasthood had dropped off. A piece of paper, however soiled or directed, is valued and kept in the strong box as a precious possession once it has imprinted on it the insignia of the Reserve Bank and called a hundred-rupee note. Bhakthi makes the lowest, the rarest of men. There was a bhaktha called Sena in Delhi at the time of Akbar's reign. He was the royal masseur at the Court of the Emperor. Every morning at seven the Emperor expected him at his side and had ordered that he should massage his body for half an hour. One day, Sena entered his puuja room as usual and, in the ecstasy of that Vision of Beauty, he lost all sense of time! His wife ran about in panic outside the closed door, for she had no mind to disturb her husband's concentration. Meanwhile, Akbar was being massaged by Sena at the Palace and the Emperor was praising him, "Sena, I have never felt so happy all these days; your fingers are indeed divine." When the session was about to close, Akbar saw in the cup of oil on the teapot in front of him, the reflection of the masseur's face---and he was surprised to find that the face was of Krishna! He turned to examine the face of his attendant, but he was no longer there! The lord does not weigh the status or caste of the individual before bestowing His Grace. He is all-merciful and His Grace, like rain or moonlight, falls on all. The Vedhas themselves declare this. So, have faith in this and proceed to deserve it and to acquire it. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 6-10-1962

Each man carries his destiny in his own hands. You will not be bound, because others are not freed. You should strive for your salvation, at your own pace, from where you started when you born into this chance.

46. Poornaahuthi
BHAAGAVATHA was the subject of the discourse by Kalluri Veerabhadra Shaastri today; but do not think that it has no relevancy to the Vedhapurusha Sapthaaha Inaana Yajna (Seven-day Vedhic ritual of Sacrifice of Spiritual Wisdom for the Supreme Being of Vedha); for the Bhaagavatha contains Vedhasaaram (essence of Vedha) itself. The Vedha speaks in hymn after hymn of the Glory of God, known by various names as Indhra, Varuna, Mithra, etc. It is all Upasana---worship filled with bhakthi, devotion to God, whom the Vedha itself declares as One, "though endowed with a variety of Names." The Bhaagavatha is the Vedhasaara (the essence of Vedha), made available for easy assimilation by all. It is just a limb of the Vedhic literature and as limb it is an inseparable part of the Vedhic tradition. The same blood flows in this limb too; it makes the Vedha beautiful and charming. Just as juveniles are shown pictures and made to learn names of the objects which they represent, the Bhaagavatha teaches the Akshara (Imperishable) through the Kshara (perishable). You cannot attain the subtle without experiencing the gross, without the instrumentality of the gross. After rising to the heights of the Chith (Awareness), with jada (dull witted) as the instrument, you have to also make the jada so suffused by Chaithanya (Supreme Consciousness) that the difference does not persist! In dhyaana, the picture first felt has to be transformed into the picture of the purified imagination, and that again has to be rarified into the subtle abstract principle only. Then only can the dhveya or Form meditated on, be transcended and the highest Vision of Universal beauty, wisdom and strength obtained. The Bhaagavatha helps in this spiritual education, taking the student through all the lessons from the primary to the postgraduate levels. Look for the real meaning of Vedhas Most of you always by-pass the real meaning of the legends, tales and descriptions given in the ancient scriptures. Brahma's lotus is not stalk that grows in mud and rises above the waters to catch the rays of the sun and blossom, but the many petalled Lotus of the Heart, each petal being the direction in which a particular tendency attracts the individual. The Bull on which Shiva is said to ride is not the animal called by that name, but the symbol of Dharma or Righteousness which has the four legs, sathya, dharma, shaanthi and prema. Gopaala did not graze cattle, but protected and fed jeevis (living beings) known also as 'Go'. In the study of the Vedha, you should look for the meaning that satisfies the heart, and not rest content if the meaning satisfies the head! A sentence may be quite right grammatically, but may still be sheer nonsense! Ganapathy Shaasthry, for example, while describing the reason why the earth from ant-hills is recommended for the sacrificial mound, said that white ants are deemed to have powerful latent skill, which is put at the service of the Gods, for they once ate up the cord of Vishnu's bow!

When Vishnu's bow was thus released from tension, its end hit Him under the chin and the impact removed His Head and carried it aloft into the sky! Now, if you take that story as applying to Lord Vishnu who is also known as Naaraayana, then it is something that belittles the Glory of God. But take it as applicable to the all-powerful, all-embracing Naaraayana aspect of the Godhead. How can we accept the explanation given for the white ants eating up the cord? The reason given is that the Gods wanted to prick the bubble of Vishnu's pride. Now, how can Naaraayana be accused of pride? How can the Gods conspire to depute white ants to manoeuvre in such a sly way to take off His head? No. The story obviously refers to a minor God, a Devatha, one among the many in the Vedhic heaven, who bears the name Vishnu; that is all. There is no need to besmirch the grandeur of Naaraayana by identifying the minor God Vishnu with the Chief of the Gods. Prefer the meaning that elevates and you will always be right. Be proud of your ancestry. You have to trace your ancestry and be proud of it. From Paramaatma Moola (Supreme Soul, the Source), Prakrithi (Nature) descended with the emergence of maaya (illusion); and from the stuff of that illusion, Aakaasha (Space); from Aakaasha, Vaayu (Wind); from Vaayu Agni (fire); from Agni, Jala (water) from Jala, Bhuumi (Each). By a combination of the five elements, this tabernacle of Paramaatma (the Divine), that is you, was produced. The entire ladder has now to be climbed up in order to reach the Paramaatma, the Origin of all. There is a regular syllabus for the promotion of the spiritual aspirant, which is given in that form in the Vedha and in an elaborate story form in Bhaagavatha. I will not accept it if you say that you are an atheist with no faith in the Lord. For what is the root of that faith in yourself? Who are you that you should believe yourself? No. You believe, yourself, because your Self is God. and you have an unshakable faith in God, deep down in you. Faith in yourself and faith in God are identical; you tap the strength of the God within when you stand at attention against an enemy without. That is why there is a persistent whisper, within to use that strength in the path of Mercy, Charity, Helpfulness. Offer your bad qualities into Sacrificial Fire. Every one has to go from here when the provisions he has brought or secured have been spent.

But by that time, attain the purpose of all this bother of arriving, travelling, accumulating and spending: the realisation of supreme happiness by ending this circle of birth and death. Change your habits and conduct for the better from this very moment. That is the measure of your sincerity. Have faith and steadfastness. I cannot be deceived by mere playacting. Folding of arms and shedding tears will not make Me take you as a bhakta. If you try devious paths pretending to be what you genuinely are not, the punishment will be greater in order to cure you of that trait also. Tomorrow, between eight and nine in the morning the Poornaahuthi or the Valedictory Offering in the Sacred Fire will take place. That is a precious moment in every yajna; the full and final offering is considered the fulfilment of the ritual. But here, you must keep one fact in mind. I am not getting this yajna done; I am He who receives the offerings of yajna. I observe many of you are getting active to procure from Bangalore or Ananthapur, in time for the Poornaahuthi, articles like sandalwood, gold, precious stones, etc. to be put into the Sacrificial Fire when the final Aahuthi is made. I am not permitting anybody to do that. It is easy to throw away a few rupees and purchase a few material objects from some shop and bring them here and throw them into the fire and go about saying that you have done a great big act of sacrifice. I am going to set you a more difficult task; you cannot escape by doing the easy thing. I want that you should all, when the Poornaahuthi is offered into the fire, stand up and reverentially offer into the same fire everyone of the dhurgunas (bad qualities) that you have--- the faults, the failings, the temptations, the transgressions. Search for these today, unearth them from their hidden places, bring them with you here tomorrow, nicely packed, and with one final heave of mental exertion, throw them in when the flames of Poornaahuthi rise aloft. That is the share you have to secure in this yajna. That, nothing more; and nothing less. These Pandiths have done you a great service. You must be grateful to them for it. They have given you a clear picture of the glory and splendour of Vedhamaatha (Vedhic Mother). which is the real form of Bhaaritha Maatha (Motherland). I shall tell them just one thing: when they have given Me Aanandham, they have given Aanandham to you also; for I am in every one of you.

47. On to victory

TODAY, you have heard discourses on the excellence of the. Divine Name, on the indispensability of bhakti and on the omnipotence of Divine Grace. In so far as all these three are concerned, whatever a person may say or expound, it is one's own experience that matters, not scholarship or skill. The Divine Name, when uttered by a dedicated soul like Prahlaadha, brought out the Lord from wherever he sought Him!

The Divine Name saves and liberates! It is armour against the onslaughts of pride and self-pity.

When japam (pious repetition of holy name or sacred formula) is started by you in a systematic manner, fixing your inner eye on the Form which illustrates the Name, you will meet with many obstacles, disquieting thoughts and enticements. They should be ignored, by passed, treated lightly. Strengthen your habits, stick to your discipline, improve your inner administration; mix more in the company of the good and the godly. The unruly bull has to be roped and tamed, its nose bored and ringed; it has to be yoked and trained to drag heavy loads and become the docile servant of its master.

There are some who condemn the six passions as dire enemies and advise you to eject them outright. But I would advise you to keep them with you as docile servants, useful for your purposes. Hate those who slight the Name of the Lord and tell you that it is a hollow meaningless sound; hate them so much that you avoid them for ever! Attachment can be used to fix your heart on the Lord; be fascinated by the overwhelming beauty of His Form reflected in all the loveliness of Nature.

Shaasthras are binding on every living being

Kaama (desire) is not a vice, for it is given the status of one of the goals of human endeavour (Purushaarthas). Develop desire, but not for the material, the momentary. Desire for the deathless, the indestructible. Desire for the steady development of faith in the Shaasthras (Holy Scriptures) as a means to this. The Shaasthras are binding on all men, said Ganapathi Shaasthry.

I will go a step further and say that the Shaasthras are binding on every living being that has sacred knowledge or even discrimination. Or else, how can we explain the killing of Vaali by Raama except on this basis? Vaali argues about the right and wrong of Raama's action; he pleads for the protection of the principles of dharma; he charges Raama with a number of adharmic

(un-righteous) deeds---but himself, when accused, claims exemption from the Shaasthras on the score that he is a monkey while the Shaasthras are only binding on men. You cannot have it both ways. When you discriminate between right and wrong and pompously argue on the basis of the principles of dharma, you are bound by the Shaasthras which lay down the discipline.

If you adhere strictly to the path of virtue and stick to the yearning, you can become a Paramahansa (ascetic of the highest order), though you may now be a novice or even a nonbeliever!

Sometimes, by just seizing a chance, you can elevate yourselves steadily. Someone comes to Me to get his stomach-ache cured; then he likes this place and its atmosphere and its Omkaara and bhajana and its prashaanthi; he sees Me and observes My movements and words and actions.

He takes home a picture or a bhajana book and, before long, he forgets the ache which brought him hither and cultivates a new ache---for prashaanthi, for darshan, sparshan and sambhaashana (dialogue); for japam, dhvaanam, saakshaathkaaram (Realisation).

Of course, I never deviate from Truth. Since I recline on Truth, I am called Sathya Sai; Saayi (as in Seshashaayi) means reclining. The name is very appropriate, let me assure you. It is only those who fail to follow my instructions and who deviate from the path I have laid down, that fail to get what I hold out before them. Follow My instructions and become soldiers in My army; I will lead you on to victory. When someone asks you, in great earnestness, where the Lord is to be found, do not try to dodge the question. Give them the answer that rises up to your tongue from your heart. Direct them. He is here in the Prashaanthi Nilayam. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 21-11-1962

48. Open your eyes

UPPULUURI Ganapathi Shaasthry has a title that very few scholars have. He is called Aamnaayaartha Vaachaspathi ---the Master Expounder of the Meaning of the Vedhas. I had permitted him to speak for as long as he liked; indeed, I had encouraged him to make a long speech for just after this he is opening the Vedhashaasthra Paathashaala---an institution that is dear to his heart when established anywhere, but dearer to him because it is established here, in the Prashaanthi Nilayam. In fact, he sees in it an important step in My Plan of Vedhic revival.

But he was so over-powered by Aanandha that he could not proceed with his speech even for a few minutes. As he said, he spoke even those few words just to express his debt to the Vedhas. It is not only his debt but the debt of all humanity. The Vedhas have shaped India and India shaped, is shaping, and will shape, the rest of the world.

The Vedhas are without beginning or end; they are eternal messages caught by developed consciousnesses in the silence of meditation. Loyalty to the Vedhas has faded often in the past also and so the present 'decline' which Ganapathi Shaasthry deplored is just a passing phase.

Dhuurvaasa was a reputed Vedhic scholar; he had the music of the Saama Vedha on his tongue and the cinders of anger in his eye; a strange combination, indeed. Seeing this absurdity, Saraswathi, the Goddess of Learning and Liberation, laughed in derision. The sage was stung to the quick; he threw a curse on Her and she was born on earth as the daughter of Aathreya. There was a brother too, a feeble minded chap incapable, in spite of the efforts of the skilled teachers, of even pronouncing the Vedha aright. He was beaten with a rod, but that only made him weep helplessly. Saraswathi was moved with great pity. She intervened and saved him from physical torture. She taught him the four Vedhas and the six Shaasthras and he became a great Master.

Vedhas are in need of revival again

Meanwhile, the Vedha had faded from human memory and, as a result, famine stalked the land.

Rishis were reduced to skeletons. They yearned for the Vedha, for that was the sustenance on which they lived. Saaraswatha, the brother of Saraswathi, prayed to Chandhra (the Moon). She made the each sprout forth edible plants (Saakha), on which the Rishis decided to live.

Saaraswatha taught them the sixty different sections of the Vedhas but so thick was the fog that had descended on the Vedhas that the sages who learnt the Vedhas from him were confounded by cynical critics. Naaradha had to assure them that what they had learnt was the genuine Vedha itself, but even he could not remove the main of doubt. They jointly approached Brahma. He said, "You were all able to get this Vision of Me as a result of your Vedhic study; you can have yourself become Brahma when you practise what you have studied." That was how Saaraswatha Maharshi revived the Vedhas once in the past.

Reasons for the present sorrow and suffering

Now again the Vedhas are in need of revival, of promotion. Someone has to prevent the axe from reaching its mots, the goats eating the sprouts. Do not be too conceited, feeling that the Avathaar has come for you particularly. I have come for the sake of Dharma. And, how is the avathaar to guard Dharma? Well, Vedhokhilo Dharma Moolam---"The Vedhas are the root of Dharma."

When the Vedhas remain unharmed, that is to say, when the Vedhic scholars are unharmed, the Vedha will remain ever-green in the heart of man. That is the real Dharma-sthaapana.

You may ask, "Well. The Lord has incarnated. Then why should the world be torn by strife and stricken with sorrow?" Why, even when Lord Krishna was here, there was war and wickedness, strife and sorrow. The husk will have to be pulled out, the pure saved always from the impure.

The present suffering is mainly due to the lapses in discipline among the professed followers of the Vedhic path, their disregard for the morality laid down in the Shaasthras and their absence of faith in the ancient scriptures. What use can a blind man make of a lamp, however bright it may be?

You may ask why Pandiths and Vedhic scholars are passing through hard times now? They are mostly hungry, ill-clad and homeless; that being the reason why no one comes forward to join Vedhic schools? Paatasaalaas are becoming defunct. But I want to tell you that the Pandiths and Shaasthris have come to this pass because they have themselves lost faith in the Vedhas. They are like the proverbial cat which is loyal to two homes and is denied food and comfort in either. The Pandiths have one eye on secular matters and secular studies and another on the spiritual. Let them be fixed in that faith, faith in the Vedhas. Then the Vedha will keep them happy. Because if the Vedha cannot make a man happy, what else can? Like the hotel-keeper who goes to a druggist for a pill when he gets a headache, while that same druggist goes to the same hotel for a cup of coffee when he gets a headache, the West comes to the East for mental peace and the East is enamoured of the West for what it considers necessary for mental peace!

Story of unshakable faith of a devotee

Let me tell you an incident which happened while in the previous body at Shirdhi. There was a lady from Pahalgaon, a simple illiterate devotee. She stored water in her kitchen in three clean, brightly polished brass pots from three separate wells and she had named the pots---Ganga, Yamuna and Saraswathi. She always referred to them by those names. Whenever any thirsty wayfarer called at her door, she mixed water from all three and offered it to the person as Thriveni Theertha (water from three rivers). Neighbours used to laugh at her faith, but her belief that the three wells were connected underground with the three rivers that joined at Prayag, was unshakable.

Her husband started on a pilgrimage to Kaashi. His mother, while blessing him on his departure, put on his finger her own gold ring and directed him to take good care of it, for it would be a talisman for him. When he was taking the ceremonial bath at the Manikarnika Ghat, the ring slipped into the waters and could not be retrieved. When he returned and related this story, he said, "Ganga waned it; she took it," just to console his mother. When the wife heard this, she said, "No, no! Mother Ganga will not hanker after the property of a poor old lady. She will accept only what is offered out of love. She will give us back the ring, I am sure. I shall ask Ganga; she is in our kitchen." So saying, she went in and with folded hands, she prayed before the particular pot named by her as Ganga. Putting her hand in she searched the bottom and sure enough, she got the ring back! She had come to Dwaarakamaayi with her husband and motherin-law. It is faith that matters; the form and the name on which it is fixed do not matter. For all names are His; all forms are His.

The four-fold Mission of Sai

Faith can grow only on the soil of Dharma, with the fertile sub-soil of Vedha. That is why the Paatasaala (Vedhic School) is started here today. I announced this in October and it is being started in November. With Me, the resolution and the realisation coincide in time; there is no time-lag. You may say that only twenty boys have joined now. When a huge country is administered by a cabinet of twelve, this band of students is enough for the work I have in view.

My task is to open your eyes to the Glory of the Vedhas and to convince you that the Vedhic injunctions, when put into practice, will yield the results promised. My task is to make you aware of your errors and the loss you are incurring; not only you who are here just now, but all the people of India and even the world.

This Paathashaala will grow into a University, establishing branches wherever there are other types of Universities now. It will afford cool green shade for all. My prema towards the Vedha is equalled only by My prema towards Humanity. My Mission, remember, is just fourfold: Vedha, poshana, Vidwath poshana (fostering the Vedhas and Vedhic Scholars), Dharma rakshana and Bhaktha rakshana (Protection of virtue and devotees). Spreading My Grace and My Power along these four directions, I establish Myself in the Centre.

These boys will grow into strong straight Pillars of the Sanaathana Dharma---the Ancient Wisdom, the Eternal Path; they will be the leaders and guides of this land in the days to come.

Parents who have sent them to this Paathashaala have every reason to be happy, for these boys will be Gems spreading Vedhic splendour everywhere, disseminating Shaasthraic learning everywhere. I shall care for them as the apple of My eye, more than any mother. They will always have My Blessings.

Fear is the biggest cause for illness. When you have slight temperature, you start imagining that it is the beginning of some serious fever. You say to yourself someone whom you knew had also a slight increase of temperature, which later became serious and led to complications and so, you become more prone to illness than formerly.

Think rather of the instances where fever was prevented or overcome; think of the Grace of the Lord that restores and saves.

Sathya Sai Baba

49. Planning the curriculum

MINISTER Chenna Reddy 'opened' the Puttaparthi School Building an hour ago but the meeting in connection with that happy event is being held here now, because the village has no place to accommodate even a tenth of this vast gathering of persons from all over India. The Minister had seen Me and I had been to his house eight years ago but his yearning to come to this village and to this Prashaanthi Nilayam has materialised only today. Even today, the opening of the school building is just an excuse which he has utilised to come to Me. He has hastened straight from the East Godhaavari District to fulfil this programme and satisfy the yearning of years.

In villages, no two persons have the same viewpoint, no two agree; this causes and promotes illfeeling, misunderstanding, pride, envy, hatred between individuals: but, I am telling this not only to the people of this village but the people who have come here from a thousand villages, remember. When it is a question which interests the entire village, do not thrust forward your little prejudices, your particular hatreds, but think only of the common good, the common welfare. Then, all your personal likes and dislikes should be forgotten. I am also known as Puttaparthi Baaba; therefore, you in this village have every right to come to Me, all of you, whenever you desire to do any good to the village.

This day, when the Village Elementary School is moving into the new spacious well ventilated terraced building of its own, is indeed a great day in the annals of this village. It is a day which starts a new era; when education will grow and will result in virtue, humility and peace.

India has Dharma on its side

I know that your hearts are filled with other thoughts---the thoughts of pushing back the Chinese from the land they have invaded and occupied, of sympathy to the families of the soldiers who have been killed and wounded. Minister Chenna Reddy also referred to them feelingly. They fought for their country to keep the enemy away. It is your first duty to pray for the dead, and to pray for the happy and victorious return from the battlefield of the gallant fighters. It is your duty also to search for your own faults and failings and to correct them soon. You have also to discover and develop all your talents and become strong, self-reliant, full-grown Indians, in order to save your country and its culture. Above all, you must get firmly entrenched in faith; faith in the ultimate victory of Truth and Love, of Justice and Fortitude. You have not tried it, and so you are unaware of the potentialities of faith.

During the Mahaabhaaratha War also, people had the faith that "Where Krishna was, there victory was certain," for Krishna will always be on the side of Truth and Truth cannot bring defeat. India has Dharma on its side; that is to say, Krishna on its side, and so the paeans of victory will sound soon---if they have not already sounded! The Chinese can do India no harm; for we are not wanting in the strength of Virtues, in Truth, in Justice, in Love, in Forbearance.

These are the real arms, the real ammunition, the armaments.

When Ashwathaama slay entered the Paandava camp and blinded by hate, slaughtered the sleeping children of Dhroupadhi, she scorned to wreak vengeance on the maddened culprit, for he was the son of the Guru of the Paandavas and as worthy of reverence as the Guru himself.

That is the nobility that stirred the hearts of mothers in this country. That is no weakness; it toughens the fibre; it demoralises the enemy, who is rendered a coward by the fear that haunts him and the hesitation and doubt about victory that dog his steps.

Learning is of no use if not put into practice.

So, be brave and confident. My Birthday Festival will not be marred by any dispiriting news; it will be made happier for you by quite positive cheerful news, I am sure.

I must now speak about the school which has this function today.

Minister Chenna Reddy is also Minister for Planning and he spoke about the plan for education also.

No amount of planning or even carrying out the plan will help, if the things learnt in schools are not put into practice. For example, there are lessons on health and hygiene in the text-books of even the primary classes.

They are all learnt by rote and repeated, but examine how far they are practised. Look at the village roads, the village well, the village home, the village children and tell Me whether fifty or sixty years of teaching the rules of health and hygiene has had any effect! If even these matters involving life and well-being are neglected, I need not tell you that other subjects which are laboriously taught in schools produce even less effect.

What profit is it for the children to know the length of the Mississippi River or the height of Vesuvius? Why load them with information they may never require?

On the other hand, give them the tonic to strengthen that spirit---the tonic of the Repetition of the Name of the Lord, the tonic of meditating on the glory of God, in the silence of the heart.

Formerly, children were learning Raamanaama and the Aksharamaala (Garland of letters) together; Suddha brahma Paraathpara Raama, they used to read and write. Now, they sing, "Ding dong bell; Puss is in the well." This type of silly meaningless jargon is spreading everywhere like a poisonous infection destroying the seeds of peace and joy.

The doctor does not give any medicine that comes to his hand: he diagnoses the illness, studies the patient, his background, his ancestry, his habits, his food, his likes, his dislikes. Then he prescribes the appropriate remedy. For the illness of greed, hurry, hatred and discontent that this country, along with the rest of the world, is afflicted with now, the planners of education must discover the correct remedy. Then they will find that the first few steps in spiritual discipline must be taught even in childhood. Man has the springs of joy and peace in his heart, even as a child. Cultivate them, give them the fullest freedom to gush forth and fertilise all fields of activity---that is the real purpose of education.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1962

50. Tiny trace of ego

SHAANTHASWAR UUPULAARA (Embodiments of Peace)! I am addressing you thus today; perhaps I should have said, "Athi Shaanthaswaruupulaara!" for you have shown not only Shaanthi but Athi Shaanthi (extreme calmness), not mere ordinary forbearance. You have been squatting on the floor for-nearly three hours. Perhaps you yourselves have not realised it because Bulusu Appanna Shaasthry's learned discourse on the Geetha and Kalluri Veerabhadra Shaasthry's interesting discourse on the Bhaagavatha entranced you greatly. I realise that you also want Me to speak. These florists from Bangalore, devotees since many years---why, since twenty years, I should say---are preparing a floral jhoola (swing) insisting that I should sit on it and give audience to all. I have given them My word that I shall not disappoint them. So I shall be very brief.

You will have known by now that the Chinese, of their own accord, prompted by the mysterious working of a Higher Power withdrew from the advance lines they held on the night of 22nd and, as I said, My Birthday was celebrated in an atmosphere of joy. Some unseen force caught them by the neck and hurled them back. Man is impelled forward in aggressive warfare by the Aasuri Shakthi (demoniac power) or Greed and Lust but he is compelled to retrace his steps by God, by the Dhaivi Shakthi (Divine Power).

Appanna Shaasthry is the doyen among the scholars of the Geetha. The Geetha has as many commentaries written on it as there are hairs on My Head! Yellappa's commentary attempts to distort the Geetha into a Yellappa Geetha while Mallappa, by his commentary, proves that it is a Mallappa Geetha and nothing else. Everyone forgets it is "Bhagavadh" Geetha, the Geetha that Krishna taught and Arjuna learnt. What was Arjuna's condition and how did Krishna cure it?---that question has been tackled only by the commentary of Shankaraachaarya.

Role of Braahmana in the society

Appanna Shaasthry said that the Avathaar comes for Dharmasthaapana (establishment of Righteousness) and that is achieved by fostering and safeguarding the Brahmin. A Braahmana is one who is installed in Brahma Thathwa (essential nature of Supreme Being), who has realised Brahma Sathyam---that Brahman is the Truth and no other---or at least one who is keenly following the discipline prescribed for attaining that knowledge. The Braahmin is the instrument by which society has to excavate the treasure of Brahmajnaana (Sacred knowledge of the Absolute Reality). Some individual instruments have become blunt and unfit, Why? Many have lent themselves to other purposes and so rendered themselves inadequate for the task. But there is no doubt that the instrument can be fashioned again out of the same metal; the Braahmin can, even now, restore faith and morality by devoting himself to the original function for which he was designed by the founders of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion). So long as that possibility is there, do not ridicule or condemn the Brahmin. Ridiculing him is but ridiculing God and the Vedhas to which he is the accredited signpost. Correct your vision, remove your delusion. All this creation and all this history is His Leela or rather, Himself, Brahma Sathyam, also, Jagath Sathyam. Only Jagath (world) is 'relatively real' until the distinction between Brahman and Jagath disappears and then even Jagath is seen to be Brahman, felt as Brahman, known as Brahmam. Then you know Sarvam Brahma Mayam. (All is full of Supreme Being). To be more correct, there is no separate sarvam (all) to be recognised as mayam (full of). Brahman alone is, one without a second, Adhvitheeyam, Ekam, Nithyam, Vimalam, Achalam (Non-dual, Single Eternal, Pure and Immovable). Who created all this variety from that Ekam (Single)? The answer is, there is no variety at all; so the question makes no sense. No person or force or urge or concatenation of circumstances or accident produced this multiplicity.

There is no multiplicity! The One remains as One. You mistake it as many; the fault is in you; correct your vision, remove your delusion, Brahman (Supreme Reality) did not change into Prakrithi (relative world); the rope does not change into a snake. Only you mistook it to be a snake. Brahman is Brahman for ever and ever; your ignorance of this fact makes you see it as Prakrithi. The world stands on one leg, delusion. Cut down that leg and it falls.

You experience the disappearance of this variety, this multiplicity, this Prakrithi, this world based on delusion, every day but you do not hold on to that experience. That is the tragedy!

When you are asleep, what happens to your world? In what are all your manifoldnesses subsumed? What is the source of the feeling of joy which sound sleep brings? Sleep keeps a tiny trace of the ego as a memento of the world and so, when awake, you are the same deluded individual, pestered by creatures of your own fantasies!

That is why I very often tell you not to identify even Me with this particular physical build-up.

But you do not understand. You call Me by One Name only and believe I have One Form only.

Remember, there is no Name I do .not bear, there is no Form which is not Mine.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 24-11-1962

If your thoughts centre round the body you will have worries about pains and illnesses, real or imaginary;

if they are centred on riches, you will be worried about profit and loss, tax and exemption& investment and insolvency;

if they roam round fame, then you are bound to suffer from the ups an downs of scandal, calumny and jealousy.

So, let them centre round the seat of power and love which deserve willing submission and let your whole being surrender to it. Then, you will be happy for ever.

51. Sprouts of faith

VEERABHADHRA Shaasthry described very realistically the childhood pranks of Krishna and explained their significance. That has refreshed you, as I can see, for you felt them and experienced them. Raama is the embodiment of Truth and Dharma and so there is a sternness about Him but Krishna is Prema and His story confers Aanandha quickly and spontaneously to one and all. The prema in the human heart responds to the call of that Divine Prema; it surges up and overflows.

Krishna came with the Yogashakthi (Balaraama), as His Brother and Maayaashakthi (Maayaa) as His Sister. That is how Mahaashakthi (Supreme Power) gets born. Devaki, the mother, could not take in the splendour of the divine form, with all its inseparable glory, and so the child had to be transferred at His own request to Yasodha, who had prayed that she should be favoured with the privilege of being the foster-mother of the Lord! Sparshan or contact with the Divine is said to confer the boon of liberation from the bonds of karma; so, when the infant Krishna was taken by

Vaasudheva's hands, the chain that bound them fell off; the bolts flew from the prison door, the locks opened of themselves; when he moved on towards the river Yamuna, the floods parted in front of him.

Love of the Gopees is beyond physical awareness

In the divine story, you will observe one special fact; no incident is unconnected with the rest, no happening is without significance. For example, Parashuraama exterminated the Kshathriya rulers of his time by systematic campaigns directed against each. How then, why then, did Dasharatha and Janaka survive? The truth of the matter is: Parashuraama made two exceptions under which his victims could save themselves and survive. This secret was known only to these two survivors. He had resolved within himself that he would not kill a bridgegroom or a person engaged in a yaaga So, whenever Parashuraama reached the frontiers of their kingdoms and was on the point of crossing them, Janaka got himself initiated in preparation for a yaaga (ceremonial sacrifice in which oblations are presented) and Dasharatha fitted himself out as a bridgegroom about to wed another princess. Of course, this was according to the Divine Plan, for Dasharatha had to live to get Daasharathi and Janaka had to discover Jaanaki.

The Love of the gopees (milk-maids of Dwaaraka) about which so much philosophical speculation and analysis was made before you is, let Me tell you, Sahaja prema---the genuine prema that is beyond physical awareness, that is unaffected by praise or blame. It is not like the thin filament of oil floating on water, which comes off on the finger when it is touched. It is like the lotus stalk, which penetrates deep down through all the layers of water into the soil underneath; but the leaf floats above, unaffected by the water which gives it the essential environment. Man should struggle similarly to rise above the sensory world which is his inevitable environment; the sensory world tempts you to strive for this triviality and that, but like the gopees, you should discard the hankering and fix your eye on the vitally precious fountain of joy. The gopees had no other goal, no other ideal, no other wish. It was a surrender of the self--- complete unquestioned, unwavering.

Sai will not tolerate hatred among devotees

Let me tell you of a devotee, a woman in a small Maharashtra village who lived in the last century. She went through even the little details of life in this spirit of dedication. Walking was to her a pilgrimage; talking was japam. Even when she threw off a ball of cowdung after applying it over the floor used by her husband to keep his dining plate while eating, she said and felt Krishnaarpanam---"May this be an offering to Krishna!" Her thapas (penance) was so sincere that the cowdung reached Krishna and struck to Krishna's idol in the village temple every day!

The priest saw the mysterious defilement; he was amazed, he was lost in terror; he cursed himself that he had lived to see that ignominy daily, about noon, the idol being defiled by the same size of cowdung. He hung his head in shame. As he walked along, keeping the disturbing phenomenon all to himself, one day, he heard that particular lady exclaim, "Krishnaarpanam" as she, like many other housewives, threw the tell-tale cowdung ball. He suspected; he noted the timings, the quantity, the material etc., until he was convinced that she was the culprit for the disfiguration of Krishna, the difilement of that liveliness. Then he beat her so severely that her arm that threw the dung was fractured.

When he returned triumphantly to the temple expecting to be profusely blessed by the Lord for punishing the wicked woman, he was shocked to find Krishna's right arm fractured and bleeding, exactly like the saint's arm! The poor fellow wept in his agony and said, "I beat her only through love of you; she spoilt your charm, Oh Lord." Krishna replied, "You must love all whom I love, remember." Here too, I want that you should so behave, or at least love yourself, that is to say, love your own better self and 'best interests.' I will not tolerate envy or malice or hatred among devotees; nor will I allow you to hate yourselves or think of yourselves as mean or weak.

Disturbing the faith of others is treason

A word to the men who are gathered here: you must live up to the glory of your inner purity and strength. You come from distant places at great expense but you bring with you all your habits and prejudices, your proclivities and preferences; without making any effort to purify them, to suit the holy place which you have sought. Here too you seek and secure the company to which you are accustomed; namely, the company of the factious, the envious and the wordly. Come to Me with mean desires and you will be disappointed! I will not worry if you do not come again. If you destroy or disturb the faith of others or the devotion of others, it is ingratitude, treason; it is like pouring glowing cinders on a heap of flowers.

If the child gives up its mother, how can it grow? Keep attached to God, so that you may grow.

Do not clip off the sprouts of faith in your heart or in the hearts of others. It is that Faith that gives poignancy to the yearning for God and which wins ready response. Raamamuorthy, who is here, called out "Swamee" in that poignant sincerity when his wife's saree was in flames; she was too frightened to call Me. That call took Me to Aukiripalli and, though only a quarter of the saree was left unburnt, she was saved.

Cheats who trade on the faith of devotees

Talking of faith, I must issue a warning. Many people are collecting money in various places using My Name for various purposes like arranging receptions, building temples, doing puuja etc. That is unauthorised and against My wish and command. Do not yield to such requests and encourage this practice, which I condemn. Then there is another set of people who trade on your faith. They advertise that I have 'possessed' them; that I am 'talking' through a medium or a stove (!) or some other thing. Treat all such people and their agents or brokers as you treat cheats; if you do not treat them so, then you are also accomplices in the cheating process.

There are others who gather groups of followers and admirers and collect money exhibiting mine idol or image that has been 'given' by Me or advertising mine other sign of My Grace. Some of them even declare "Baaba sent me to you to take from you some money" or "Baaba has given me this" or "Baaba blessed me specially thus and thus" and then ask for your help or your praise or your purse! I ask you to chastise all thee types of men and turn them away---whoever they are.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 25-11-1962

52. Grief and God

MANY things have happened here since 3-30 p.m. when you all gathered. The programme began with the Burra Katha (folk-tale) on Paarvathi kalyaanam (marriage) by the girl students of the Saadhuamma High School and it ended with the kalyaanam of Krishna, described by Veerabhadra Shaasthry. In the middle, Ganapathi Shaasthry told you of the origin and meaning of the Sanaathana (ancient) social order, as laid down in the Vedhas and the Shaasthras. Out of the many plausible interpretations of the Shaasthras, you are prone to attach yourselves to the one that pleases your own prejudices; so it is essential to hear such Pandiths who know the authentic meaning and who will not deviate from it in order to make the exposition popular.

Listening to such talks should not end with shravanam (listening) only; follow it up with mananam (rumination, digestion).

So also, with the talk on the Bhaagavatha, cogitate over it within the four walls of your puuja room, sitting before the shrine and offering ritual worship. 'Do not treat the Bhaagavatha as a chapter of ancient "history; you can experience the thrill now, today, for ever. The Bhaagavatha is for all time, for the elevation of human emotions in all climes and places. The Vedhas with their meaningful rites and their deeply significant philosophy are valuable for all time. Once, someone decided to worship the greatest. He fixed upon 'the earth, but the sea erodes the earth; the sea too is not so great since Sage Agasthya drank it up; Agasthya is now a tiny star in the broad sky; but the sky was just enough for one foot of the Thrivikrama form of the Lord; 'and the Lord is enshrined in the heart of Bhaktha (devotee). So he concluded that the Bhaktha was the greatest of them all! Castes have no superiority or inferiority Bhakthi (devotion) knows no caste; it saves all, ennobles all. Castes have no superiority or inferiority according to the Vedhas. A sugar doll is all sugar. The hymn. of Purusha Suuktha speaks of the four castes having come from four parts of His Body. The meaning is that all are equally high born and equally important. The mouth cannot walk nor can the feet talk. It is the voice that is obeyed and the arm that protects. Well, all those who felt (and follow the feeling) that fighting is their righteous duty are Kshatriyas; all those who feel it their duty to study the Vedhas and the Shaasthras are Braahmins---not those who feel it as their right!

Yesterday, I spoke a few words specially to the men. Today I shall speak to the women. Many of you become so desperate and dejected that you bemoan your birth and welcome death. This is very wrong. You cannot flee from your responsibility in the middle of your allotted task. It is a sign of weakness and cowardice. After all, just think for a moment whether the rich are happy, the strong are happy, the highly educated are happy or the clever are happy. No one is happy you will find. If you must be happy, one of two things must happen. All your desires must be fulfilled, or you should not have any desire. Of these, the reduction of desire is the easier path.

Become more steady in spiritual discipline

Take the troubles that come to you as tests and opportunities to learn non-attachment. It is the hot summer that sends you to air-conditioning. Grief sends you to God.

When a child dies, ask yourself the question, "Is it for my sake that he was born?" He had his own destiny to fulfil, his own history to work out. Gauthama Buddha's father was so overcome with grief when he saw his son with a begging bowl in the street that he told him thus: "Every one of my ancestors was a King: what misfortune is this that a beggar was born in this line?" Buddha replied, "Every one of my ancestors had a beggar's bowl; I know of no king in my line." The father and the son walked different paths, travelled along divergent routes. The blood of the son when transfused may prove fatal to the father.

Another point: you should all become more steady and regular in your saadhana (spiritual effort). You must curb the propensity to indulge in inane jabber and idle curiosity. Follow the discipline laid down for the Prashanthi Nilayam and become examples for the new-comers!

This applies to the men also. You will have noticed that I do not address you as "Bhakthulaara" (dear devotees) at any time. For, to get that name, bhaktha, you must have dedication, unwavering faith and steady discipline.

When the Nirguna Niraakaara (Attributeless and Formless) is available here and now as Saguna Saakaara (with Attributes and Form), you must use every moment to earn His Grace.

You do not realise your unique good fortune. In the years to come, people will revere you, for you had a chance that millions could not get; they will worship your pictures in their shrines!

Live and love in such a way that you may deserve that honour. Prashanthi Nilayam, 26-11-1962

For Naamasmarana, no expense is involved; no materials are needed; there is no special place or time to be provided. No qualification of scholarship or caste or sex has to be proved. When a bit of iron is rubbed to and fro on a slab of stone, heat is generated; only, the rubbing has to be vigorous and continuous. When you do so at intervals and with poor pressure, the iron will not get hot. So, too, in order to get sufficient heat to melt the soft heart of the Lord, in order to get sufficient heat to melt the soft heart of the Lord, rub the name Raam Raam Raam Raam vigorously and unintermittently. Then, the Lord will shower His Grace.

If you devote but two minutes and a half in the morning and another two minutes and a half in the evening the little heart will cool off twice a day and His heart will not melt.

Sathya Sai Baaba

"SATHYA SAI SPEAKS" Series is, according to late Prof. N. Kasturi, the original translator and compiler, "a fragrant bouquet of flowers that never fade or falter". These discourses were delivered by Swaami out of profound compassion towards seekers of Truth during the last few decades. The need for revised and enlarged editions of the Series was strongly felt and expressed by devotees, especially by foreigners. An attempt has therefore been made in these volumes to meet their needs. The discourses have been presented year-wise so that there is no overlapping of the discourses delivered in a year, in more than one volume pertaining to the same calendar year.

This rearrangement has resulted in an increase in the number of volumes, from the previous twelve to the present fifteen volumes, covering the years 1953 to 1982. Further new volumes will also be added in due course, to cover the discourses delivered after 1982. The retention of Sanskrit words on page after page, in the previous volumes, without their English equivalents in most cases, was causing great confusion to readers, especially foreigners, who were not familiar with Sanskrit. In the present revised volumes, an attempt has been made to aid easy reading by replacing Sanskrit words with English equivalents wherever they do not affect Baaba's original expression. Sanskrit words have been retained wherever it was felt necessary to preserve the essence of the original expression of Baaba and where the English equivalents may not do full justice to the text in the particular context. However, in all such places the English equivalents have been given along with the Sanskrit words. Some very commonly understood Sanskrit words or Sanskrit words which are repeated too often are retained without English equivalents to retain the original flavour of Baaba's discourses. Further, in this revised volume, phonetic spellings have been adopted for all enable readers who are new to these words to pronounce them correctly and to remove any vagueness in the pronunciation of these words.

A Glossary has been added in these revised editions to provide comprehensive and detailed explanation of the more important Sanskrit words for the benefit of lay readers who may be interested in Vedhic religion and philosophy. It is hoped that this will be of great help to devotees to understand more clearly the topics of Baaba's discourses covering a wide spectrum of Vedhic philosophy.

The revised series of volumes are being brought out in a larger format, Demy Octavo size, so that they can be companion books with other publications in private libraries. Computerised typesetting using a larger size of type, a more readable type face and better line spacing have been adopted for more comfortable reading of the books, especially by elderly readers. Very long paragraphs have been split into shorter paragraphs and suitable sub-headings have been added in every page, to relieve the monotony on the eye and make reading a pleasure.

Better quality paper, improved binding, dust cover with new design and foil printing and plastic cover have been adopted for the revised volumes for better preservation and durable shelf-life of the volumes.

With these changes, it is hoped that the revised and enlarged volumes of "Sathya Sai Speaks"

Series, will be of great benefit to earnest seekers in spiritual realm.

Sathya Sai Speaks

"I ve come," He Says, "to wake you all,

Who sleep the sleep of ages---

While one be on the pages

Of account book of paltry deeds and thoughts,

Accumulate in defiling piles...and keep you from

The happy land,

Above, beyond the sleep, the dream,

Above beyond the waking stage---

The Realm of Restful Peace."

"I ve come," He Says, "to save you all

Who stray away in silly pride,

Hunting fantasies in bush and briar,

With bandaged eyes, in pitch-dark gloom

And fall into birth-and-death,

Failure, fracture, faction, fanatic fire."

"I ve come," He Says, "to cure you all

From petty selfish inanities!

Trivial tinsel temporalities!

'Your tweedledums and tweedledees,

The little loves and hates,

Peevish paisa rivalries,

Across dividing line of 'mine' and 'thine'!

Brother gouging brother's eye,

Sister crushing sister's babe---

For the sin of wall between!"

"I've come," He Says, "to show you all

The Path; a Form, a Name; a Way of life,

That cools and calms the fevered Mind,

That stills the waves,

That fills, fulfils;

That leads you into He (whom you forgot)

That follows you into It, from which you came."

Here you find on every page

The Words He spoke for You.

A few...which I dared translate

As I sat at the Feet, to catch His voice

So Sweet, so charged with Grace!

The solar rays, they open wide

The buds of Lotus, Waiting for the Warmth!

May Baaba's Words, their warming touch

Unfurl the petals of your Lotus heart!

1. Climb the right tree

I KNOW that your hunger has not been fully appeased, even after listening to two excellent discourses, radiating Aanandha (bliss), given by these Pandiths (scholars). Both of them said that they had no claims to scholarship and that all that they were able to see and speak about was due to My Grace. Well, that is but a way they have cultivated, to curb conceit. Hanumaan was not aware of his vast strength; he had cultivated that much of self-effacement. Some one had to remind him of his skill and prowess and then, Hanumaan would rise to the occasion, with his powers fully awake.

It was also pleaded on your behalf that I should speak to you today, for it is a long time since I spoke to you at this place. I feel I must satisfy, that desire of yours. You eau yourselves bhakthas (devotees); so, I shall talk to you about the dharma of persons who seek to acquire bhakthi. No one can become a bhaktha by naming himself so, nor, by others calling him so.

Bhakthi involves dedication, with nothing held back; not even a wisp of ego should remain. His command alone counts; His Will prevails. Like a drunkard, the bhaktha has no sense of honour or decency, pride or conceit. He is a mattha, an unmattha (a mad person), unconcerned with all that is unrelated to his ideal. He is deaf to the call of hunger and thirst; he misses steps in logic and he calculates wrongly while dealing in the market place.

Naaradha says that those full of the liquor of ignorance stumble after the shadows of the world, while those drunk with nectar of wisdom never move away from the Highest, which they have discovered as themselves.

Bhakthi must soften the mind

You saw this in the case of this Shaasthry a few days ago when he came and sat in this Hall for the first time, after 30 years of intense study of the Srimath Bhaagavatha. He felt that he had won the fruit of years of study and worshipful exposition. He lost all awareness and some of you thought he had an attack of epilepsy or something akin to it. I knew that he was in the realm of Aanandha. That is why I did not encourage you to take him to the hospital. Even today, you noticed how when he started to describe the depth of Divine Grace he was overcome with joy.

The Lord broke His own plighted word in order to give the Bhaktha the credit for making Him do so, Bheeshma had said that he would force Krishna to wield a weapon on the battlefield, contrary to His declared intention. Bheeshma would accept defeat only from the Lord! And, so Krishna strode towards Bheeshma, brandishing the Chakra (discus) in order to win. The Shaasthry was describing this, when he broke down. Bhakthi must soften the mind and keep it receptive to the higher emotions, the purifying impulses.

Every being is a pilgrim to reach God

Bheeshma was a bhaktha and by winning the Lord's grace, he was clothed with more majesty and splendour than any earthly emperor. What majesty have these petty sceptre-holders? They cannot claim to have inner peace, inner joy; they know not the joy of sharing love with all.

Bheeshma surrendered to the Lord, when He challenged him with the Su-dharshana; that is to say, when He offers Su (good) dharshana (vision), one must be wise enough to surrender, give up all; that is what Bheeshma did.

Like the kitten calling the mother to where it sits, by mere mewing, the bhaktha has only to yearn, to mew with the pain of separation. The growing crop in the fields thirsts for rain; it sees the heavy rain-clouds sail across the sky; it cannot rise up to that altitude and drink the lifegiving rain; nor can it bring the clouds down to the ground. Humanity too sizzles in the hot Sun, the unbearable heat of ego and greed. It needs the rain of Grace; it knows it can flourish only then in peace and joy.

As the clouds form droplets and fall upon the fields which they choose to foster, the Formless Absolute individualises Itself, assumes Form and comes down in the midst of humanity to save and sustain, That is the secret of God Maadhava coming down as maanava (man), the cloud taking pity on the crop, parching in the Sun. Once the rains come, the Sun has its uses! So too, when the grace of the Lord is gained, then ego and greed can be put to profit by being made to flow; into useful channels.
In past ages, Avathaars (divine incarnations) rid the world of evil, by destroying the few fanatics and ogres who wrought it. But, now fanaticism and felony reign in every heart. The number of asuras (evil men) is legion; no one is free from that taint; all are wicked to some extent or other.
Therefore, every one needs correction; every one has to be educated and guided into the right path. Every being is a pilgrim destined to reach Maadhava and merge in Him; but most people have forgotten the road; they wander like lost children, wasting precious time in by-paths.
You can win Lord's Grace only by dharma Maanava (man) has to become Maadhava (God); that is his destiny, the plan and purpose of his being armed, as no other animal is, with the sword of viveka (discrimination) and the shield of vairagya (renunciation). Man is the only animal that can picture a previous existence and existences in a series, with impressions accumulating from one to the other. What you see and feel in a dream has some basis on what you have seen and felt in the waking state; so too, what you see and feel in the present life has, as its basis, what you have seen and felt in other lives, previous lives.
You can win the Grace of the Lord only by dharma. Dharma induces the spirit of self-surrender and develops it. Without the training that the practice of dharma gives to your senses, your feelings and emotions, you cannot have steady faith and steady detachment. The Lord is Dharma conceived as a personality. Raama is known as Vigrahavaan Dharmah (Righteousness personified). If you step across the bounds of Dharma and play foul, you cannot win the game of life.

Pursue your task with one-pointed effort When Hanumaan was speeding along the sky like an arrow from Raama's bow, many temptations attempted to halt him. He did not delay or turn back. He sped on, intent only on the task his Lord has set for him. When the Mynaaka mountain rose up to offer him a little rest, he trampled it down into the depths of the sea. The mountain rose again and pleaded for the chance of serving him for a while. It had decked itself with green orchards and fragrant flower gardens for his recreation and recoupment, for when Indhra slashed off the wings of all the mountains in past ages, Mynaaka had fled with the help of Vaayu, the father of Hanumaan, and he wanted to express his gratitude by granting hospitality to the son; but, Hanumaan pleaded that his master's task brooked no delay. A few moments later, Hanumaan was confronted by a terrible monstress, Surasa by name. Hanumaan overcame her by skilful tactics and avoided further delay. You should pursue your path to liberation with one-pointed effort.
The Shaasthy said that the Lord wishes that His bhaktha should shine over non-believers; that he should be happier, more contented, more courageous than the rest: Bhakthi ought to make a man so, But the bhaktha does not cultivate these traits deep enough. He lets the chance go to waste. If Shaasthy gives his sons a hundred acres each, one son may tend it well and reap golden harvests from it: another may allow it to lie fallow and himself sink into misery. The equipment each has brought from previous lives may be different: you cannot blame thee father for this state of affairs. Even the blood of one son may be fatal when transfused into another son. Spiritual strength will be less in one, more in another, in proportion to the efforts of each, now and in the past.
Let the light within shine
The pity is that man is not eating the most relishing, the most nourishing fruit, from this Garden of Nature. He is climbing the wrong tree and seeking to pluck the wrong fruits: so, his appetite is ruined, his taste is vulgarised, his health is destroyed. Only the Glory of the Lord can satisfy the hunger of man, for he is part of that Glory.
Only experience can reveal the sweetness, the sublimity, the purpose of that Glory.
Parashuraama came across Raama and challenged him when he was returning to Ayodhya after his marriage. He had won Seetha by bending and breaking the bow of Shiva: and thereby humbled the pride of all the crowned heads that had come seeking Seetha's hand. But, Parashuraama was intoxicated with his own achievement, in defeating the Kshathriya rulers in twenty-one campaigns. That pride lowered the Divine status of Parashuraama and so, he could be felled in a moment by Raama who was to all appearance just a stripling!

The Lord, it was said, punishes some and favours others. Let Me tell you- the Lord does neither.

He is like the current in this electric wire. It rotates the fan and makes one's life cooled; it operates the electric chair and makes one's life shorter. It has no wish to allay the warmth of the atmosphere; it has no eagerness to kill. The Lord's Grace is like the wind that blows. Roll up your sails and the boat lies limp and lame; unfurl them, it moves faster and faster. It is like light; one person does good using the illumination; another executes an evil plan, with its help. Have an "inner day," though an "outer night." Let the light within, shine. When you are unaware of the world, though in it, heedless of its call for participation, you are having an outer night and an inner day. The Vedhas teach you this Truth and impart the discipline needed to attain this fortune.

The Lord is the Father of all in the world

The Shaasthry spoke of the value of the Vedhic discipline. The Vedhas declare that if a karma (act) is done in a definite way, a definite result will accrue. They give you a pen filled with ink, they teach you how to write and what to write. They are so kind.

Vedhamaatha is so full of maternal love (vaathsalya as they call it). She repeats an injunction, over and over again, just as I go on reminding you of the disciplinary rules of the Nilayam, on every possible occasion. So, do not set aside the commands of the Vedhas: they are the authentic Voice of the Lord Himself as heard and recorded by purified intellects.

A father gives his wealth to the son, who respects his wishes and obeys his orders, not to the rebel son who flouts him. The Lord is Loka-pitha (the Father of All). If you are an Aasthika (a person who accepts that there is God and shapes his life accordingly), then you will get the Aasthi (wealth or property), if a person is an idiot, ignorant of his true interests, unaware of his own downfall, then he is not entrusted with his own Aasthi, a guardian has to take care of his affairs until he proves himself able to manage it with care. Dwell always on the Glory of God

It may take many lives for a man to prove that he knows what is best for him, that he is able to chalk out his own future without harming himself or others, that he is aware of the pitfalls on the way. So, it is best to trust to the experience of sages, who were filled with compassion and who were moved by that compassion to illumine the path of liberation. This experience is enshrined in the Vedhas. Faith in the Vedhas irrigates the heart and makes it yield the harvest of Universal Love.

The Shaasthras warn you of false steps; they console you in times of stress; they strengthen you in distress; they give correct interpretations of moral dilemmas. They prescribe the dress, the food, the manner of speech, the methods of social conduct, the mode of mutual behaviour, the lines of onward march. They are the conscience of society.

In this Prashanthi Nilayam, too, there are certain limits laid down, certain modes of spending time usefully, recommended by Me. All who come here, whether longtime residents or new arrivals, have to observe them. You have seen Me, and stayed here, and heard these discourses.

Let Me ask what is the gain? Are you going back, unchanged, unaffected? Dogs do not chew sugar cane; they seek a bone, instead, m-fated mortals recoil, when the talk is about God, goodness, saadhana (spiritual effort) and Saakshaathkaara (vision of the divine) But, you must pull yourselves up into the purer air of aadhyaathmik (spiritual) life, draw yourselves away from slums and bylanes and travel on the highway to God. Dwell always on the glory of God; then, you will shine in that glory. Adhere to Truth, that is the surest means of removing fear from your heart. Prema can grow only in the heart watered by Truth.

What is Bhakthi and who are Bhakthas? Naagayya, even while he plays the role of Thyaagayya, is always conscious that he is Naagayya.

"Thyaagayya is the role I am playing," he would say. Now, go one step further. When asked who you are, say that you are Naaraayana-swaruupa, playing the role of Pullayya or Thimmayya or Mallayya, or whatever your name is. So too, every other person is a role played by Naaraayana.

Naaraayana washed clothes as the dhobi, shapes wood as the carpenter, forges iron as the blacksmith, prepares pots at the wheel as a potter. He is all this---and more. His glory is inexhaustible. The Avathaar (divine incarnate) is another role He takes up for another purpose.

The Lord comes as Avathaar when He is anxiously awaited by saints and sages. Saadhus (the pious) prayed---and I have come. My tasks are three, or rather two, since Dharmarakshana (protection of virtue) and Vedharakshana (protection of vedhic culture) are both practically the same. The two are, therefore: Vedharakshana and Bhaktharakshana---fostering of the Vedhas and fostering of Bhakthas (devotees). Now, what is Bhakthi (devotion)? Who are Bhakthas? It is faith, steadiness, virtue, fearlessness, surrender, absence of egoism.

Puuja done however elaborately and pompously, is sheer waste of time and energy. Why pluck flowers and hasten their death? Some of you go round this Nilayam and satisfy yourselves that you have done so many pradakshinas (circum-ambulations), but, they can be called so, only when your mind circles this place along with your feet.

Talk less, talk low if you must

I notice that while your feet are taking you round by force of habit, your tongues blabber about the faults of others, or the price of vegetables, or the dishes you propose to cook for lunch.

Before you start on your rounds, which you call pra-dakshina, give your mind as dakshina (thanksgiving offering) to the Resident of the temple, the Lord. That is the first thing to do, and perhaps, the only thing to do. Pradakshina is not to be taken as prescribed, for loosening the limbs or giving them some exercise.

This Nilayam should not be treated with scant reverence. Make the best use of your stay here. Do not treat this chance lightly. You come spending much money, and put yourselves to much trouble to reach here; but, you do not bloom as fragrant offerings at the Lord's feet by learning the saadhana path. The senses have to be curbed into obedient servants of the spirit, For example, I insist on silence. Talk less, talk low when you must talk.

Do not thrust your sorrows, your needs, your problems into the ears of those who have come here with their own bundle of such things. They are not interested in adding to their troubles. I am here to listen to you, to console you. Do not by loudness of voice disturb those who are meditating or reading or writing the name of God.

All ills are traceable to faulty living

Meditate if possible, yourselves, alone; read spiritual books if you can;

write the name of the Lord in the quiet of your corner; if you cannot do these, at least do not disturb others who are doing these. Encourage one another to march along the path to God.

Become entitled to the honoured title of Bhaktha. My glory is spread daily through those who call themselves My bhakthas. Your virtue, your self-control, your detachment, your faith, your steadfastness---these are the signs by which people read of My glory.

Not that I want any such prop.

But, it just happens so, in this world, where men estimate others indirectly, rather than directly.

Let Me tell you, such bhakthas are very rare. That is the reason why I do not address you gathering as, "Bhakthulaaral" You can lay claim to that name only when you have placed yourself in My hands, fully, completely, with no trace of ego kept back to cater to your vanity.

All ills are traceable to faulty living. And what is that traceable to? To ignorance of one's real Nature, ignorance so deeprooted that it affects thoughts, words and deeds. The drug that can cure it is patented under different names: inaana, karma, upaasana (contemplation), bhakthi. They are all the same in potency, and curative power. The difference lies only in the method of administration either as mixture or as tablet or injection.

Be confident that you will be liberated; Know that you are saved. Go and tell all that you had gone to Puttaparthi and that you got there the secret of liberation.

The mind must become the servant of the intellect, not the slave of the senses. It must discriminate and detach itself from the body.

Like the ripe tamarind fruit, which becomes loose inside the shell, it must be unattached to this shell, this casement called body.

Strike a green tamarind fruit with a stone and you cause harm to the pulp inside; but, strike the ripe fruit and see what happens. It is the dry rind that falls off; nothing affects the pulp or the seed.

The ripe aspirant does not feel the blows of fate or fortune, it is the unripe man who is wounded by every blow.

Sathya Sai Baba

2. Revealing you to yourself

DEEKSHITH just said that this is a sacred day, not only for the 35 boys who were initiated into Brahmacharya (religious studentship) but for Sanaathana Dharma (universal religion) itself, since the Upanayanams (investiture ceremony of sacred thread) here are an important step in the restoration of Varnashraama dharma (code of conduct prescribed for the four social groups of Hindu Society) itself. The study of the Vedhas is the highest type of learning, since it leads to the conquest of Death. All other studies deal with the means of living or the surroundings within which you have to live; they deal with earning and spending, deriving a little pleasure by this trick, escaping a little grief by that other trick. The Vedhas show the path to the Realm of Eternal Bliss, where there is no birth or death. People learn details about China, Russia and America; they know about the volcanoes of the Pacific or the islands of the Arctic regions, but, they do not know an iota about the features of their own inner realms. Inaana must grow from within. There are five such Realms in them; but, they are aware only of the outermost realm, the Annamaya kosha (the material casement), in which they are housed; even this is just an awareness, not full knowledge. There are deeper layers of which they are ignorant--the Praanamaya (sheath of vital energy), the Manomaya (mental sheath), the Vijnaanamaya (sheath of intelligence) and the Aanandhamaya (sheath of Divine Bliss). Those who are conscious only of the Annamaya kosha, can claim to be only just Kaarnaswaruupa, not Raamaswaruupa (embodiment of desire but not of Raama). That is to say, they will be swayed by every gust of kaama (desire); they will scarce be able to control desire and rise to the demands made on nobler virtues by the Divinity latent in them. They will get proper inspiration and instruction to explore and exploit the inner realms only from the Vedhas, and the Shaasthras that expound the Vedhic truths. The Karma Kaanda is the biggest part of the Vedhas, because Karma (sanctified activity) is the means by which the tree blossoms and the fruit matures and grows; the Upaasana Kaanda (the contemplative portion) deals with the Upaasana---method by which the fruit ripens; the Inaana Kaanda describes inaana (spiritual knowledge), the process by which the fruit fills itself with sweetness. The first stage takes the longest time; so, it comprises the largest portion; the second and the third are quicker by comparison. So, they are shorter. The third stage can be accomplished even apart from the tree by keeping the fruit in a warm place amidst straw or in a hot room. Man can acquire the sweetness of inaana by keeping himself in sathsang (holy company) or even by remaining in a solitary place, all by himself in dhyaana

(meditation), for example. But by whatever means, the sweetness (the inaana) cannot be injected from outside; it must grow from within. It is a transformation of the inner nature, won by a struggle with inner foes. Get rid of grief in this life itself. Just think of this for a while. You are in this body, in this receptacle, in order to realise the God you really are. This body is the cocoon you have spun round yourselves, by means of your impulses and desires. Use it while it lasts, to grow wings so that you can escape from it! You came into this world crying, announcing your grief at being thrust into it, grief for having lost hold on God. Having come with grief, decide not to go with it, from here. Get rid of it in this life itself. You were told now that the Raamaayana was welling with shoka rasa; the main mood of that epic was, it was said, agony, Well, the first step to prayer is a touch of agony. Agony is more potent than awe, in leading you Godwards. Grieve for lost chances, lost time; move on, everyday, forward to the Goal. Amidst all these absurd loves and hates, the meaningless game of having and hoarding, losing and lamenting, building and demolishing castles in the air, you have no moment of real calm. Everything in the Universe is Divine. Peace of mind will not descend on you because your room is air-conditioned or your sofa, softcushioned. It does not depend on your bank-balance; or on the diplomas you have collected. It can come only when, you deny the dhaanava (demon) in you all chances of moving you, when you encourage the Divine in you to manifest Himself. The dhaanava is the prompter of the Asuric traits mentioned in the Geetha. Everything in the universe is Divine; it is; it shines; it is lovable. It is asthi, bhaathi and priya; it is Sath, Chith and Aanandha. For, it is the same as the Universal, Eternal, Absolute, which is also Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being, awareness, bliss). This is the Upadhesha (spiritual instruction) that these boys got today through the manthra that was taught them. Upaanayana means, "near-leading," leading near, leading the boy to the teacher, taking him to the teacher, the Gum, for this Upadhesha, this initiation. The Guru who can give this Upadhesha must himself have transcended name and form, the relative regions of worldly ambitions and achievements; he must have experienced the Oneness of all this variety. Such men do not put up boards to announce their greatness or compete with others for status or reward.

These boys are specially lucky: good fortune, of which even they are not aware, has brought them here for this ceremony, which will transform them. They have done consciously, in previous births, meritorious deeds, the fruits of which they are now tasting, unawares. The Guru does not teach anything new; he reveals you to yourself. He trains you to cleanse the mirror of your heart, so that you may be reflected in it, without warp or twist. The brahmachaari (celibate or spiritual disciple) must obey the commands of the Guru, without flinching and to the full.

Use your fullest powers to grasp the truth

While Aanjaneya was bringing the Sanjeevini Mountain, he had to take a course that made the citizens of Nandhigraama see him in the sky; Bharatha, who saw the strange sight of a monkey carrying a hill, brought him down with an arrow and when he learnt that the hill had the drug which could cure Lakshmana who was stricken in battle, Bharatha offered to send the hill quicker to where Raama was, by shooting an arrow which could lift it and carry it fast. But,

Aanjaneya said, he could fly quicker than any arrow from the bow of the fastest marksman! Use your fullest powers to grasp the truth. Rely on your own skills, your own force; then, they too will develop to the utmost demand you make of them. That will give you the greatest joy.

Many of these boys are today joining the Vedhashaasthra Paatashaala (School of Vedhic Studies) here or have already joined it. They will be enthused by each other in their study and saadhana. When ten friends gather around you and shout, "Come, come, we shall go," you feel like joining them and you gladly go on the adventure. Teachers at the paatashaala, who are experienced men, will foster virtues and encourage at every step. I am planting the sapling in your heart; they will water it and manure it. I shall also water the sapling, off and on, especially, when they are not with you. In order that the lotus may not go dry, the lake has to be full of water. Prema is the water that must fill the heart: hatred will make it a parched waste. Have faith in your own Aathma (true Self or Being); that is the medicine. Act always in the spirit of service and kinship with all; that is the regimen.

Surrender must be complete without reservations

To all of you I say, "Let mountains fall; let the sea overwhelm the land; but, do not give up your saadhana. And, remember, saadhana is a waste, unless you grow at the same time in virtue and uprightness." If you give up all and surrender to the Lord, He will guard you and guide you.

When you complain, "Oh! He has not guarded me," I reply, "You have not surrendered." The Lord has come just for this very task. He is declaring that He will do so, that is the very task that has brought Him!

Of course, you only talk of Sharanam (surrender), of placing all at the Feet; but you withhold a great deal. Your minds are wayward like monkeys that skip and jump from bough to branch.

Give them to Me; I can make them steady and harmless. When I say, sit, they will sit; when I say, stand, they Stand. That is what Shankaraacharya offered to do, he told Shiva that he will hand over the monkey that was his mind to Him so that it might be tamed and used for His delight. But, it must be a complete handing over; no reservations.

Prashanthi Nilayam, Upanayanam Day, 3-2-1963

3. Ask for Me

TODAY, you had the nectar of Raamaayana from these two Pandiths. They spoke with genuine joy when they dilated on the incidents of the Raamaayana. One of them selected today the hospitality shown to Bharatha and his retinue by the sage Bharadhwaja and how Bharatha reacted to it. The other Shaasthry who generally talks on other topics, was persuaded this evening to select Naaradha's description of the qualities of Raama to Vaalmeeki as the theme of his talk. Raamanaama is so sweet that I could see all of you relishing these talks. If a man talks about Raama, without himself being inspired by the glory of the Lord it sounds hollow; it is of no benefit; it is like the image of a table heavy with edible dishes seen inside a mirror; the dishes in the mirror will fill no hungry stomach. No language can picture the actual bliss that the Name can confer; words can at best delineate only an atom of that joy.

Man comes into the world burdened with maaya and its instrument, the mind. The mind expresses itself through attraction and repulsion, raaga and dhweshha (affection and hatred), towards the external world. Raaga is raajasik (passionate) in its effect; it can be used for one's uplift, as Naaradha used it to fix attention on the Lord. Dhweshha is Thaamasik (negativistic), as Dhurvaasa expressed it in his dealings with Ambareesha and others. Without Raaga and Dhwesha, the mind cannot function at all. If these two are removed, there can be no mind and no maaya, and you get fixed in inaana. Let raaga and dhwesha go and let Raama enter; then there will be no manas or maayaa (mind or illusion).

Have aversion towards evil, pride and egoism

The Thaitthireeya Upanishath analyses the mind and its behaviour very well. It gives directions to merge the mind in God; the weapons with which you can foil the tactics of raaga and dhwesha. Use them for positive purposes, as Naaradha and Dhurvaasa did. Have attachment to the Lord and aversion towards evil, pride, egoism. Water and fire are incompatible; fire is put out by water. But, by means of fire, you can convert water into steam and use it to haul long lines of heavy wagons.

How to overcome raaga and dhwesha? By discrimination, by inquiry, by reasoning. Arrive at the truth by this means. Dhuryodhana, though he stuck to falsehood, greed and envy had, according to the Mahaabhaaratha, a swell time, flags flying, festoons swinging, banquets everyday; but, Yudhishtira, the eldest of the Paandavas, had, as reward for his high morality, exile, poverty and privation. This does not mean that Vyaasa who wrote all this is a cheat or a fool.

Dharma (righteousness) stood firm in spite of hardships; shraddha (faith) was steadied and strengthened. In the case of Dhuryodhana, prosperity did not induce caution, humility or discrimination. So you revere Yudhishtira and execrate Dhuryodhana today, centuries after they died. Vaalmeeki also pictured Raama as wandering forlorn in the forests; but, He never for a moment wavered in the path of Dharma. So, He is revered even today as the embodiment of Dharma.

Ask to be examined and your progress recorded

The Guru-sisya (teacher-disciple) relationship which has been established between these boys and those who initiated them into the Gaayathri has also a special. Dharma (spiritual quality) which directs the sisya to learn with gratitude and the Guru to teach with love. There are cases when the sisya was made to forget all that he had learnt when the Guru was displeased with his behaviour.

India has been Yogabhuumi, Thyaagabhuumi, Vedhabhuumi---the land of Divine Communion of renunciation, of spiritual intuition. It spoke of Samaa-dhee, the wisdom that sees all as equal repositories of Divinity. Samathwa is just a matter of origin and essence; water in lakes, pits, wells and rivers is rain water, though the taste, colour, name and form are different, based on where the rain has fallen and how pure is the container. Divine grace is like rain, pure, pellucid, falling on all. How it is received and used depends on the heart of man.

The Lord does not test a man just for fun; He does not pile calamity on calamity because He enjoys it. Examinations are held, to measure achievement and award marks and honours. You must ask to be examined, so that your progress may be recorded.

Dheekshith spoke of Bharadhwaaja setting up a Dhurbaar (regal audience) Hall, with a bejewelled throne and all other paraphernalia, for the reception of Bharatha. Bharatha mentally installed Raama therein and stood behind, framing his brother.

Bharatha was applauded for this act of genuine detachment by the sage. He was glad the citizens came to know the real nature of Bharatha by this means.

The Avathaar has no blemish, no trace of Guna

Bharatha did not partake of the rich banquet that the sage had prepared; he was too grieved over the turn of events to think of food, drink and sleep. He did not even take a drop of water, before he could speak to Raama. The thought of Raama was so intense in him that people saw Raama in the form of Bharatha. Ceaseless contemplation had made him an exact replica. That is the depth of the bhakti which is fruitful. But, you praise Me when all goes well and you call Me stonyhearted when grief assails you. Grief or joy, whatever the Lord hands out, you must welcome with equal calmness.

It was declared that Raama was born of the paayasam which was brought by the deity from out of the sacrificial fire. No Avathaar is born flesh and blood, including this Avathaar. The body of the Avathaar is chith (awarenessful) substance; it is not jada (inert) like other materials. The embryo of ordinary mortals is jalodhakashaayi (enveloped in watery stuff; the embryo of the Avathaar is encased in Ksheerodakashaayi (the pure white milk of holiness). That is why in the make-up of the Avathaar, there is no blemish, there is no trace of Guna.

Raama's insistence on His vow of hermit-hood

Dhasharatha wept, for he had no sons to offer ritual food when he moves out into the next world.

When all are of the form of God and of the substance of God, who is son and who is father, who is to offer food to whom, when that high stage of wisdom is reached? Kshamaa (fortitude) is the father, Shaantham (peace) is the mother, Vairaagya (renunciation) is the wife, and the Lord is the son, the centre of affection. Dhasharatha desired the lower type of son, the male issue, to save him from perdition. This desire brought his 'spirit' again before Raama, when Seetha was about to enter the fire in Lanka. Raavana was killed and Raama asked Sugreeva and Lakshmana to crown Vibheeshana as Emperor of Lanka; he pleaded that Raama Himself should bless him on that auspicious occasion, but Raama insisted that His vow of hermit-hood prevented Him from entering an inhabited city. Then, Raama sent Hanumaan to Seetha and requested him to bring Seetha to the camp in a palanquin. Vibheeshana had not thought of that; he was too immersed in other affairs Hanumaan bowed before Seetha and got a vision of Lakshmi rising out of the waves of the ocean of milk. He felt that, that Vision was enough compensation for all the births he had to undergo. While the palanquin neared the camp, there spread everywhere a sublime splendour from it, which astonished the vaanara (sub-human or monkey) hordes. Raama sent word that Seetha may alight and walk the remaining distance, so that they may fill their eyes with her glory. This is not mentioned in the books. Two purposes of Seetha's fire ordeal When Seetha was about ten yards away, Raama, who is butter when He melts and steel when He hardens, said, "Stop, I can accept you only after you pass through Fire." Lakshmana swooned at this thunderbolt; the monkeys who had to bring the fuel for the Fire bent under the weight of even twigs. The Fire Ordeal served two purposes- to scorch the slanderous tongues, which haunt the tracks of Avathaars (Divine Incarnations) at an times; and, to retrieve from the Fire the real Seetha who had entered into it, prior to abduction by Raavana. Dhasharatha also came there, to assure Raama that Seetha was Purity itself; and also, to satisfy his parental craving to see his son. He appreciated the steadfastness of Raama in the respect he had for his father's wish; he also saw the vaanaras rise again from the battlefield and gather around Raama. The Raakshasas (demonic persons) had already attained liberation for they had the vision of God when they drew their last breaths. "The vaanaras came down to be My instruments and so they have no death, neither are they born, except at My Command," said Raama. Man too must become His instrument in order to escape death and birth. He has come, imprisoned in the ego, and he has to liberate himself. This can be done only by making him aware of the Universal (Aadhaara) basis, like a man sunk in poverty, dwelling in a hut that is raised over a vast underground treasure, man is suffering, with a spring of joy inside him, of which he is unaware. I have come to give you the key of that treasure, to tell you how to tap that spring, for you have forgotten the way to blessedness. If you waste this chance of saving yourselves, it is just your fate. Do not hunger for comfort or riches You have come, most of you, to get from Me tinsel and trash, petty little cures and promotions, joys and comforts; very few of you desire to get from Me the thing I have come to give, viz., Liberation itself; and even among these few, those who stick to the path of saadhana and succeed are a handful. Many are drawn away by the outer signs of sainthood, the long gown, the beard, the rosaries, the matted hair; they keep track of many such who move about in this land and follow them into the wilderness. It is very difficult to demarcate clearly the manifestation of the Lord and so, I am announcing Myself and Myself describing My mission, the task, the characteristics, the qualities which mark out the avathaar from the rest. Do not hunger for comfort or riches; hunger for Aanandha. If you have faith and if you keep the name of Raama as constant companion, you are in Vaikuntha or Kailaash or heaven, all the time. These are not distant regions that have to be reached by tortuous travel; they are springs of tranquillity that are in your own heart. You cannot have this chance of the nearness of the greatest of all sources of joy in any other place. Here it is so near, so easy to attain, so full of grace. If you fall back, you will seldom get the chance again. Ask and get what will save you, not what will bind you. You ask from Me a thousand things of the world, but rarely do you ask for "Me" That is why I seldom address you as bhaktas (devotees); I usually address you as Divyaathma swaruupulaara (embodiments of the Divine), for that is your real swaruupa, this Divyathwam (Divinity).

Though you do not know it, it is a fact. Therefore, I Call address you so with confidence. I can even call you Divya-divya swaruupulaara, but, as for bhakthi, since it is a quality that will make you desire the Lord and nothing else. I find you cannot lay claim to it.

Methods to curb Raavana tendency

Some of you claim to be Sat bhakthas or Raama bhakthas or Krishna bhakthas. No, unless you are perfect instruments in His hand, you do not deserve that name.

For example, Bharatha can call himself a Raama bhaktha. He lived with Raama naama in every breath; he was with Raama in the forest and on the battlefield; he suffered as much as Raama; he was as much an anchorite as his brother; so, he too became Shyaama (dark skinned) like

Shravan, manan, and nidhidhyasan (listening, Contemplating on what has been listened to and practising what is dictated by the mind so transfused), these are the methods by which Raavanathwa (the Raavana tendency) has to be curbed. What is that tendency? It is kaama---lust, greed, inordinate desire for things of the sensory world, egoism, and the rest of the fatal brood.

When the pot of milk on the hearth boils over, you pour cold water on it and it settles down in the vessel itself, is it not? Dhurvaasa is the example of the pot boiling over; and Naaradha, of the pot of milk that does not. Naaradha had the name of the Lord always on his tongue and so, the senses did not establish mastery. If you too keep your senses and your wishes in check, you will gain by listening to these talks and by this visit; and, I will be happy that you have taken to the path that will give you real strength and joy.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 4-2-1963

No one can liberate you, for no one has bound you. You hold on to the nettie of worldly pleasure and you weep for pain.

The kite is pursued by crows so long as it carries the fish in its beak; it twists and turns in the sky trying to dodge the crows who seek to snatch the fish; tired at last, it drops the fish. That moment it is free.

So give up the attachment to the senses, then grief and worry can harass you no more. The kite sits on a tree, preening its wings, enjoying its happiness.

You too can be so happy, provided you drop the fish you have in your beak.

Sathya Sai Baaba

4. The search for Seetha

SINCE three days, the Pandiths who spoke here have been discouraging on the Raamaayana. This is understandable in the case of a specialist like Dheekshith but even the other vidhwaan has turned away from his usual topics; he too spoke on the Raamaayana. Of course, the Raamaayana is a limitless ocean, from which any number of canals can be dug and water drawn. I was wondering whether at least today some one will refer to Krishna thathwam! Not that one gets tired of Raama thathwam. The Thathwam (Reality) of the Lord is ever fresh.

Every life is a new chance, a fresh opportunity for realising the Truth. Yesterday is gone; today is the fresh chance, the new opportunity is now; tomorrow, you cannot be sure of Every minute is to be welcomed as unique and as valuable, precious, in fact. Do not pine over the chunks of time you have wasted; seize the moment that has come within your grasp.

Search for the Lord as Hanumaan searched for Seetha. He had not seen her; he had only heard her being described. He could also judge what she should be like, if Raama could aspire for her so deep. It was like the attachment of Purusha for Prakrithi, no less. Like Hanumaan, man too should seek the incomprehensible. Aadhishakthi (Primal Energy), among the multifarious counter-attractions and distractions of Lanka.

Through dharma and karma man can attain salvation

Since the entity is not known, one has to discover it by means of the characteristics it is supposed to have. The experience of sages is the only guide, the only map, or chart. That chart is supplied by the Bhaagavatha, the Raamaayana, the Puraanas. Have the Lokamaatha (Universal Mother), the Thripura-sundhari, in your heart, Her lineaments clear and pure; then proceed bravely into the land of raakshasas; and you will succeed. Saturate yourself in the search; establish yourself in the faith; then, you can fill yourself with the Bliss.

Who can describe the signs of the Seetha you seek to find? Only Raama can, for He is the master. Take Him as the truest guide. The Vedhas are like that. Lakshmana, Sugreeva and the rest are as the Shaasthras, arguing by deduction, not from actual mastery. They did not describe Seetha; they could not, for they had not seen.

When Raama went to the hermitages at Chitrakoota, the sages, saints and Vedhic scholars, all gathered round Him and their gratitude at getting His dharshan was as a garland of flowers on His breast, flowers of many hues but, all strung on a strand of deep devotion. They knew that Raama was both the Seen and the Unseen; that He had come to establish dharma and karma, for through dharma, and karma done along the lines of dharma, man is certain to attain peace and salvation. The avatharaas insist on dharma it is declared that the purpose of the avathara is Dharma sthaapana (establishment of virtue); but, what is dharma for, if not for liberation from the bondage of ignorance?

Every step of the Avathara is pre-determined

The aeroplane has to land at certain places in order to take in those who have won the right to fly, by the tickets they have purchased. So too, the Lord has to come down so that those who have won the right to be liberated may be saved incidently, others too will know of the Lord, of His grace and ways of winning it, of the joy of liberation. There are some who deny even today the possibility of air travel; they curse the contrivance; they cavil at it. Similarly, there are many who cavil at the Avathara that has come to save.

Dheekshith spoke of Kabandha who swore at Raama and wanted to eat Him up alive; but, Raama liberated him from his curse and restored him to previous glory. If you condemn the Brahmin and the Vedhas then, you drift afar from Me, if you desist then, you are drawn near Parashuraama, the inveterate foe of the Kshathriyas appeared before Raama, when He was returning to Ayodhya, after the marriage. He was blazing like fire, terrible to behold, for he had heard the twang of the bow of Shiva, when Raama broke it in twain. He challenged him to draw the bow of his father and to meet him in single combat. But, Raama said, "You are worthy of respect; you are a Brahmin and you are related to Vishwaamithra."

Every step in the career of the avathara is pre-determined. Raama knew that the coming of Suurpanakha was the prelude to the coming of Raavana; He had asked Seetha to enter the fire and remain in it as just as an outer manifestation. Even before the human manifestation, the Lord had decided that the Shakthi (Energy) must also accompany Him, because Raavana's thapas (penance) was so strong that only some major sin could make the blessings he had won from the gods null and void. The ordeal of fire through which Seetha was asked to prove herself was not an ordeal at all; it was got up only to recover Seetha from the fire in which she had taken shelter, in preparation for the Lanka episode. That is the way of the avathara; it will not go about announcing its nature; it will announce itself by deeds.

Do you yearn for the Lord's mercy and grace?

Jataayu recognised the divinity of Raama; he said, "Raama! I am content; this body has realised the acme of joy; I have seen you, have been touched by you; I have spoken to you and imbibed your voice." Only Raama knows the significance of each step of His and the character of the next step; He carves His own career.

You were told that Raama showed man how to bear suffering while Krishna taught him how to overcome it. No, Raama was all Aanandha inside, though he was lamenting outwardly for Seetha, Raama thathwa (Divine Reality) is known only to Raama. What can the rest know?. At best, they can have but a glimpse of Raama's grace. And, even that only if they are immersed in intense inner prayer for God. Think of Him, call out for Him; He melts. Whatever form He may be shining in, that intensity will make you recognise Him. He may be a cowherd boy, standing under a tree, with a flute at his lips. You will see him and adore Him and place Him in your heart. You extol the Lord as Love, Mercy, Grace; but do you yearn to earn them? Do you believe you can win them? Do you strive to treasure them?

Have an idea of the place of your last journey

Take the example of Suurpanakha, the sister of Raavana. She was mutilated by Lakshmana, she was rejected by Raama, she was ridiculed by Seetha, humiliated beyond cure. She fled in terror to her brother and, what did she ask him to do? She described the heavenly charm, the Divine grace of Raama and advised him to fill his heart with the sweetness that Raama exhaled all around Him! Raama came to feed the roots of Sathya and Dharma and so, Seetha joined Him through correct orthodox rites. There was no Seetha-apaharanam (abduction of Seetha).

In the Krishna avathara, the task was to foster Shaanthi and Prema Now, all four are in danger of being dried up. The dharma that has fled to the forests has to be led back into the villages and towns. The adharma that has ruined the villages and towns has to be driven to the jungle. You will have no rest until this is done. For it is your problem, the problem in which each of you is vitally involved.

Now you are unaware of the problem, the problem of Liberation.

There was a courtier once with a king; he was so idle and ease-loving that whenever the king ordered him to see someone, he raised flimsy objections like, "Perhaps, he is away," "If he does not greet me, what shall I do?" "What if he gets wild?" "I may not be able to return in time", etc., etc. SO, the king got the word, "Fool" embroidered on a broad tape and commanded him to wear it on his brow so that all may learn a lesson. The courtier became the laughing stock of the palace. Within a few months, the king was on his death-bed and the courtiers vied with one another in weeping over him. When the fool came near he told him with tears in his eyes, "I am leaving on my last journey, dear Fool." The fool said, "Wait, I shall bring the royal elephant;" but, the king shook his head and said, "Elephants will not take me there." The Fool pleaded that the king might use the chariot, but, when told that chariots too would be of no avail, he suggested the royal steed as the alternative. Even that was of no help, he was told. Then, the Fool innocently asked the king. "What is this strange place to which you are journeying?." The king replied. "I do not know." At this, the Fool untied the tape from his brow, and tied it on the brow of the dying king. "You deserve this more; you know you are going, but, you do not know whither! You know that elephants, horses, and chariots do not proceed there; but, you do not know where it is or how it looks!" he said. But, you can have some idea of that place if you evaluate your deeds and thoughts now in this life. Prashanthi Nilayam, 5-2-1963

5. Sweeten and lighten life PERHAPS, this Raamanaama Feast is cloying to some tastes; but, it is something that is ever fresh, that gives undying sweetness to the heart that is filled with the love of God. One single Name will yield fresh sweetness, fresh joy, every time it is rolled on the tongue. I have to tell you the things I have told you often before; for, until digestion is well established, medicine has to be taken. The face has to be washed day after day. One meal is not the end of the story; you have to eat, again and again. To get angry is but the effort of a moment but, to get peace, to become unaffected by the ups and downs of life, is the result of years of training in Vedhaantha. It can be well established only on the basis of the belief that all material things which fall within the range of sensuous experience are fundamentally non-existent. They are maaya, products of illusion, of the tendency to see many where only One exists. You see corpses proceeding one after the other to the graveyard; but you move about unconcerned. You feel you are eternal. In fact, you are. That is the real you, I mean. Just as the water you drink is eliminated as perspiration, the karma that you accumulate is eliminated through karma, gladly borne. So, bear both 'mirth and moan' with equal calm. Like the aakaasha (space) in the pot merging with the aakaasha outside the pot, silently, fully, with no trace of separation or distinctness, merge with the Universal. That is real sharanaagathi (surrender, salvation, liberation). Today is the fastest friend, hold fast to it Raama is extolled as the ideal son, who acted according to his father's wish, regardless of his own happiness. But, Bheeshma is a better example in this respect. He acceded to a whim Of his father and in so doing made even a greater sacrifice than Raama. Dhasaratha made Raama an exile in the forest for fourteen years to satisfy the claims of Truth while Shanthanu made his son give up the throne as: well as a wedded life to satisfy a sensual desire of his senile body. As a matter of fact, it is not the obedience to the father's whim ;that is important; it is the adherence to sathya and dharma, which is Raama's forte. Dheekshith said that kings, because they have to compromise with justice and truth sometime or other, usually go to the nether regions. His kingdom is, really speaking, his body. He must evince as much interest in the proper upkeep of the most distant part of his kingdom, as he does in the upkeep of his toe or scalp. Pain anywhere must be felt and remedied as quickly as pain in any part of his body. Such a king never goes to the nether regions. He is indeed thrice blessed. Janaka, for example, felt that all was His, not his. Though he had a body and all the commitments of kingship, he felt as if he was an A-shareeri (without a body) and A-samsaari (without a family). It requires all the strength one can collect to carry a load up-hill. The gear, the accelerator, have both to operate to haul a car up a steep. The Guru who taught you cannot do anything to haul it; he can only guide. The control of the senses, changing the mode of life, the habits of thought, have to be done by you. The senses say, "Why struggle? Eat, drink and be merry, while you can,"

but, the Guru says, "Death lands on you without notice; overcome its fear now, before he calls."

"Now is the true friend; yesterday has deceived you and gone; tomorrow is a doubtful visitor.

Today is the fastest friend; hold fast to it."

Be tranquil amidst the storms

Once when his eldest brother, Dharmaraaja, promised to a mendicant yogi some help for a yajna (ritual sacrifice) and asked him to call the next day, Bheema ordered all drums to beat and all flags to fly, for, "My brother is certain to live until tomorrow! At least, that is what he believes will happen."

Death stalks your footsteps like a tiger in the bush. So without further waste of time, endeavour to give up sloth and anger; be tranquil amidst the storms; mix in tranquil company. Let the flagrant smoke of divine thoughts, full of love to all, rise around you; why try to scatter fragrance from scent-sticks available in the market? The flame of jnaana (experiential knowledge of Supreme Reality) can reduce to cinders the impulses inherited through many births and many experiences. In the heat of that crucible, dross is burnt and precious metal is isolated.

The Lord is sweet in every one of His actions

Saadhana (spiritual effort) requires regular habits and moderation in food, sleep, and exercise.

Fasting weakens the intellect and reduces the strength of discrimination. The body, the mind and the spirit, all three must be equally looked after. Unless you have "muscles of iron and nerves of steel," you cannot contain in your head the tremendously transforming idea of Adhwaita, of your being the Universal itself, the Eternal Reality itself! Lesser strength can only think in terms of servitude or subsidiary roles. To see the Truth as Truth, and the untruth as untruth, clarity of vision and courage of vision are both needed.

The seven-walled fort---mamaakaara (feeling of mind and one's own) and the six evil tendencies, kaama (lust), krodha (anger), lobha (greed), moha (infatuation), madha (arrogance) and maathsarya (jealousy)---has a garden in the centre and a lake, where the hamsa (divine bird) plays. It is the image of your own true self; become aware of it and you are saved. You have come into this lokha (world) to enter the presence of the Lokesha (Lord of the world). So do not tarry in wayside inns, mistaking them to be the goal. The Lord too will be longing for the arrival of the lost. He is like a cow yearning for its calf.

Once Krishna was in a fix; it was the birthday of Rukmini and it was also the anniversary of his marriage with Sathyabhama! Both queens were awaiting His arrival in their palaces, but,

Krishna, to the great mortification of the proud Sathyabhaamaa, went to Rukmini and after sharing the feast with her, entered the palace of Sathyabhaama. She was in an inconsolable mood of resentment, but, though she did not offer anything to Krishna out of pique, Krishna Himself picked up a few jambu fruits from the garden and ate them, appreciating all the while the care with which the queen was looking after the garden and the extraordinarily fine taste of every fruit that grew in it! Sathyabhaama was thus encouraged to forget the sense of injury. The Lord is sweet in every one of His actions, movements, words, gestures. He is sweetness itself.

This life is a dream you have taken to be true

Take the instance of Raama, Bairaagi Shaasthy recited a poem about the lotus feet of Raama, treading the stony, thorny jungle regions. But Kaikeyi had not realised this, when she asked that Raama should go into exile. She learnt about it and was horrified at what she had done only when she saw Raama, Seetha and Lakshmana in the hermitage as she watched her son plead with Raama to return to His throne. Raama never felt the thorn or the stone for He had devised the jungle Himself, in order to infuse faith in the sages and nip their fears.

As a matter of fact; what other functions have those feet than warding off the hurdles on the path of bhaktas? The bearer alone knows the Weight of the load on his shoulder. The tiniest suffering in you causes the same suffering here also. There is an old woman from Salem here, since a week; her son, a young man of twenty-five years, is insane and cannot attend to his needs. She does not know how much I was affected, but, I was inquiring, "Did he take his morning coffee?" And telling her, "Carry food to him and feed him, he is hungry." Her anxiety was just one-sixtyfourth of Mine! You think that I pay attention only to those who sit in front, but, I see all and I am with all, wherever they may be. Only those who have been blessed will know, not the rest.

No fuel, no fire. No saadhana, no sankalpa (sub-consciousness desire). Pour oil and light the wick. You are on a pilgrimage to the beyond, so, you cannot long dwell in this beneath. Some time or other, sooner or later, this birth or the next, you have to realise that this is but a dream you took to be true; you have to pack up and march. This is asath (non-Being); go towards the Sath (Being). This is thamas (darkness): this is the realm of death. Proceed towards the iyothi (effulgent Light); proceed towards the realm where immortality reigns.

Let the desire to be saved sprout in you The tree might appear to be dry; but, it will bloom, it will bear fruit; do not despair. I shall make it sprout, provided the sap of repentance is still running. Come just one step forward, I shall take a hundred towards you. Shed just one tear, I shall wipe a hundred from your eyes. I bless only thus! May your Aanandha (Bliss) grow.
When the night grows chill, you draw the rug tighter around you, is it not? So too when grief assails you, draw the warmth of the name of the Lord closer round your mind, Out of all the crores of Indians, you alone have gained this contact, through your good luck. Let at least the desire to be saved sprout in you; I shall see that it grows and gives fruit, provided you yearn and try. To pour the nectar of grace, the vessel must be cleansed. Clean it and demand the nectar; do not grieve later that you missed the chance, when it had come within reach. You will not know Me in a trice, or even in days. It is something that has to be realised by stages, in due course, through viveka, vairaagya and vichakshana (discrimination, non-attachment, clear-sightedness).
You have been squatting for four hours and some of you might be squirming and feeling an ache in the back. But it is no ache, pray that you may get this feeling all through life, for you have been receiving the teaching that will sweeten and lighten life itself.
Each has his allotted task, according to the status, taste, tendency and earned merit. Do it, with the fear of God and of sin, deep in your heart. Welcome pain and grief so that you take both success and failure as hammer strokes to shape you into a sturdy saadhaka. Inner content is more important than outer prosperity.
Sathya Sai Baba
6. Griha or guha?
THE Deekshith spoke about the glory of the Lord and the other Pandiths gave you detailed accounts of the experiences of ideal men who struggled to arrive at the Truth. Every one must be interested in knowing about these, for, all should have an ideal to strive for, a goal to be reached.
Otherwise, life is reduced to aimless wandering. For saplings to grow, soil is essential; for ideals to get implanted, knowledge of the struggles and successes of saints and sages is essential. These experiences are not uniform; each saadhaka has a different story to tell, depending upon his equipment and enthusiasm. So, the vision and the glory are different, though all are divine. The mansion of India's glory is built of charming stones, each block being the hardy thapas of some sage or other. No one sage can be neglected, for if his attainment is ignored, the wall of the mansion would be so much the weaker.

Take the case of Agasthya, for example. I mention him because some one gave out his name, while addressing you. He is called "potborn," but, remember, he and Vashishtha were both children of Mithra-Varuna and were both born from the same pot! He put an end to the evil deeds of the ferocious giants, Ilvala and Vaathaapi, by just three words, "Vaathaapi jeerno bhava." He made the high-peaked Vindhya bow his head and become low; that is why he is known by the name, Agasthya! That is to say, he taught humility to the proudest in the land.
The home must resound to the name of God Agasthya is also reported to have drunk off the ocean all in one sip. That is to say, he dried up the ocean of samsaara, with its waves of grief and joy, prosperity and adversity, success and failure. It is not any sidhi, this feat; it is a parable explaining that though he was a grihastha (a married man) with a son who recited the Vedhas as soon as he saw light, he had conquered all attachments of the world. Be attached only to the ideal---that is the sign of the sage.
Kabeer was weaving a peethaambara (yellow silk garment) for the Lord, for his Raama. He had to work the loom alone, by hand. He recited Raama Raama Raama and went on weaving ceaselessly. The cloth had become twenty yards long, but, Kabeer did not stop; his thapas continued unabated the peethaambara was becoming longer. The aanandha of the craft, devotion to his Lord, was enough food and drink for his sustenance. When he gave it to the temple priest for clothing the idol of Raama, the peethaambara was just the length and breadth, not a finger breadth more! Such men are the mainsprings of the joy that spiritual persons fill themselves with in India.
The griha (home) must resound to the name of Govindha; otherwise, it is just a guha (a cave), where wild animals dwell. The body needs a house but, the body is itself a house; in that house too. the name of Govindha must be heard. Or else, it is a ghata (a mud pot), not a man's body.

Offer God the fragrant leaf of bhakthi

An insidious disease is now rampant among most people, namely, unbelief. It sets fire to the tiny shoots of faith and reduces life into cinders and ashes. You have no criterion to judge, yet you pretend to judge. Doubt, anger, poison and illness---all these have to be scotched before they grow. Repeat the Raamanaama, whether you have faith or not; that will itself induce faith; that will itself create the evidence on which faith can be built.

There was a fisherman once, who spread his net over a lake and sat watching, for robbers might drag away his catch. He sat on a tree; and for getting clearer vision all round, he plucked leaves and pulled off branches. It was a bilva tree! The day was Magha Krishna Chathurdhasi, Shivaraathri day. Mahaashivaraathri (Great Night of Emergence of Shiva's Radiant Form), in fact. And, right under the tree, where bilva leaves fell, there was a Shivalinga! For want of food, he starved the night and so, he got the merit of a vigil and of a fast! His wife too ardently waited for him in his hut; just when she was about to eat her supper a dog peeped in; she felt it was very hungry and so she followed it with the plate of food and fed it, in a spirit of puuja. She too kept vigil. In the morning, he went to the temple and prayed that he may merge in God; his wife prayed that he may be spared for her sake; but God had both of them merged in Him.

You attach importance to quantity; but, the Lord considers only quality. He does not calculate how many measures of "sweet rice" you offered, but, how many sweet words you uttered, how much sweetness you added in your thoughts. Offer Him the fragrant leaf of bhakthi, the flowers of your emotions and impulses, freed from the pests of lust, anger, etc.; give him fruits grown in the orchard of your mind, sour or sweet, juicy or dry, bitter or sugary.

Your homes must be immersed in highest shaanthi Once you decide that the orchard in your mind is His, all fruits will be sweet; that sharanaagathi (seeking refuge for protection) will render all fruits acceptable to the Lord and so, they cannot be bitter. And, for water, what can be purer and more precious than your tears, shed, not in grief mind you, but, in rapture at the chance to serve the Lord and to walk along the path that leads to Him!

All who aspire to be bhakthas must eschew raaga and dhweshha (attachment and aversion). You need not be proud when you are able to sing better or if your puuja room is better decorated.

There must be a steady improvement in your habits and attitudes; otherwise, saadhana is a vain pastime.

This place as well as your homes when you return must be prashaantha---immersed in the highest shaanthi (peace)---undisturbed by any streak of hatred or malice, pride or envy. No puuja, thapas, no vratha can equal the efficacy of obedience, obedience to aajina (the command), given for your liberation.

Individual reconstruction is much more important than the construction of temples.

Multiply virtues, not buildings; practise what you preach, that is the real pilgrimage; cleanse your minds of envy and malice, that is the real bath in holy waters. Of what avail is the name of the Lord on the tongue, if the heart within is impure?

Injustice and discontent are spreading everywhere due to this one fault in man: saying one thing and doing the opposite, the tongue and the hand going in different directions.

Man has to set himself right and correct his food, his recreation, his method of spending his leisure as well as his habits of thought.

7. Bend before Prema and Sathya

DO not grieve that the Lord is testing you and putting you to the ordeal of undergoing them For, it is only when you are tested that you can assure yourself of success or become aware of your limitations. You can then concentrate on the subjects in which you are deficient and pay more intensive? attention, so that you can pass in them too, when you are tested again, You should not study for the examination at the last moment; study well in advance and be ready with the needed knowledge and the courage and confidence born out of that knowledge and skill. What you have studied well in advance must be rolled over and Over in the mind, just previous to the examination; that is all that should be done, then. This is the pathway to victory.

Many grieve : "It is said that darshanam (getting the audience) is paapanaashanam (destruction of sin); well, I have had darshan not once but many times, but, yet, my evil fate has not left me and I am suffering even more than formerly." True, they have come and have had darshan and they have sowed fresh seeds secured from this place, seeds of Prema (Love), Shraddha (Faith), Bhakthi (Devotion), Sathsanga (Good company), Sarveshwarachintha (Godly thoughts), Naamasmarana (Remembering God's Name), etc., and they have learnt the art of intensive cultivation and soil-preparation. They have now sown the seeds in the well-prepared fields of the cleansed hearts. Now, until the new harvest comes in, they have to consume the grain already stored in previous harvests. The troubles and anxieties are the crop collected in previous harvests- so do not grieve, and lose heart.

In this sacred land, people have forgotten the real source of sacredness, of holy life, of living in peace with oneself and others. Now, the time has come to remind them of it. With jewel in the neck, the wearer has been searching for it everywhere else. A person has to hold the mirror to the face. The Vedhic clarion call will soon ring in ears of humanity. The Person has come to remind man and to redirect him along the True path.

If any one challenges you to show them one text where the principles of Sanaathana dharma (Eternal Religion) are succinctly stated tell them about the Bhagavath Geetha. It is the essence of the Vedhas (Scriptures, of Eternal Truths) and the Shaasthras and the Puraanas. It is like a bottle of fruit-juice obtained from a basket of fruit. It will not get dry or rot like the fruits, for the juice has been well extracted and preserved. Its taste and excellence will persist until the end of this Yuga (Age) and then it will merge in the Vedhas.

In the forest of samsaara (worldly life), the body is a tree and the thoughts, feelings and imaginations of man are the branches, twigs and leaves. Worry, anxiety and fear are the monkeys that frisk among the branches. Grief in its various forms represents the insect pests that destroy the blooms. The blossoms are smiles; the owls and crows that infest it are anger, hatred, sloth and spite!

The Sun never rises or sets; it appears to rise and appears to set, on account of the revolution of the earth! What happens when the Sun rises is that the avyaktha (invisible) becomes vyaktha (visible), that is all. This series of udhaya (rising) and asthamana (setting) of Sun exist only for those who feel it and does not exist for those who deny it. The duality of appearance and nonappearance can be overcome by inaana; so also, when the inaana-bhaaskara (Sun of Knowledge) is known, it is experienced as shining always with undiminished lustre.

Lingam means simply "the sign," "the symbol"; it is just a mark, which indicates merging (laya); that is to say, the passing away of the mind and all mental agitations and all mental pictures, which means, this objective world. Shivaraathri is the day on which the Moon, the presiding deity of the mind, is as near laya as possible and so, just a little extra effort that day leads to full success: the saadhaka can thereby achieve complete Manonaashana (destruction of the mind). The realisation is that everything is subsumed in the Lingam (the symbol of the Formless).

God is a huge fire, and the sparks that fly out from it are the jeevis (individual souls); the jeevis are infinitesimal fractions of the same effulgence, having the same splendrous essence as their base; but, the wind of vaasanas (impressions left on the mind by past actions) sweeps upon the sparks and puts out the light and destroys the heat. But, the same wind cannot put out the fire, it can only feed it further and cause its splendour to shine forth in even greater measure, for, the Sankalpa (will) of the Lord can only add to His Glory.

Just as the dreams you see are shaped by the experiences, cravings and disappointments of the waking stage, the experiences of the waking stage are the results of your previous lives. While dreaming, you do not relate the incidents and emotions to the waking stage, do you? You feel they are un-related, unique, genuine experiences, is it not? So too, you do not realise that your joy and grief, your actions, and reactions in the waking stage are all based on your past lives. But, they are so based.

A great painter once came to a Prince and offered to do a fresco on the palace wall; behind him came another, who declared that he would paint on the wall opposite, whatever painting the first one drew, even if a curtain hid it from view and even if he was not told the subject of the fresco! Both were commissioned to the tasks they had accepted. The second man finished his work at the very moment, the first one announced that he had completed the task! The Prince arrived in the hall, where a thick curtain partitioned off the two artists and their paintings. He saw the fresco and admired it very much. Then he ordered that the curtain be removed, and lo, on the wall facing the fresco, there was an exact duplicate of the picture that the first man had so laboriously painted! Exact...because, what he had done was, polishing the wall and making it a fine big mirror! Make your hearts too clean and pure and smooth, so that the Glory of the Lord might be reflected therein, so that the Lord might see His own Image thereon.

The players do not derive as much joy as the onlookers; so develop the attitude of the onlooker, the witness (the dhrashta). The batsmen, bowlers and fieldsmen do not get a fraction of the pleasure that the 'fans' beyond the boundary, derive. They note each fault and excellence in stroke and defence; they appreciate the finer points of the game. So too, to get the maximum joy out of this game of living, one should cultivate the attitude of the onlooker, even when one has to get embroiled in the game.

I will not bend before any one for anything. I am therefore un-afraid. I bend for Prema, I bend before Truth, that is all. Do not worry about worldly comforts and ask Me about those things as if they are all-in-all. Do not waste your precious life-time in distracting doubts about the existence of the Lord in human form, here and now. Cultivate prema towards all; that is the greatest service you can do to your self for, all others are but you yourself. You too should bend, only before prema and sathya, not before hatred and cruelty and falsehood.

Man did not come here to sleep and eat; he has come to manifest, by disciplined processes, the divine in him. That is why he is called vyakthi (individual), he who makes vyaktha (clear) the Shakthi (power) that is in him---the Divine energy that motivates him. For this purpose he has come endowed with this body and the intelligence needed to control it and divert it to useful channels of activity. You must achieve this by Dharma-nishttha and Karmanishttha-- steady pursuit of morality and good deeds.

Sathya Sai Baaba

8. Devotion of the gopees

THE meaning of the Krishna Avathaar is beyond your understanding; why, all the Avathaars (Divine Incarnations) are inexplicable, in the language of this world, in the vocabulary of common men. To attempt it is to encase the ocean in a canal by its side. You can understand it only when you become lost to the world and its attachments through the expansion of your sympathies and the purification of your motives. The One God-head was experienced by the gopees as immanent in every being; they steadied their minds and installed Him therein.

Veerabhadra Shaasthry said just now that the Lord will not stay in the heart unless it is maintained, fixed and unagitated. Of course, when you place a child in the cradle, it must be firm and unmoving; but, once the child is laid, the cradle can be swung, for it is only when it is swung to song that "I am glad and you are glad." Remember, the Lord too is a child, personified sath chith aanandha, devoid of gunas (qualities).

When Uddhava came to Gokula, Shaasthry said the cows were fat and full, the gopees were happy and joyful and the place was full of fragrance and music." But, the facts were different.

The place was forlorn and the men and women, disconsolate and helpless; the cattle too were overcome with grief. Uddhava brought them all a fresh lease of life. Krishna told him, "Their hearts are merged in Mine; their minds think only of Me; they have forsaken even bodily needs and they exist only because they hope to see Me again, some day." So how could the gopees be as happy and gay as Shaasthry described Uddhava himself was humbled at the sight of their complete surrender and the pangs of separation which consumed them. That is the very reason why He sent Uddhava to them.

The simple gopees were wiser than yogis Every act of Krishna had a meaning and a purpose and a sweet aptness. The gopees were convinced that Krishna was the Lord. Many yogis and ascetics, many Raajas and Mahaaraajas among whom Krishna moved had not realised that truth. The unlearned simple cowherds and cowherdesses were wiser. When you too feel so, affected by those pangs, you can understand the gopees, not till then. For that pain, the message of Krishna is the antidote. "Your grief is caused by your limited artificial outlook; you take Me to be a limited bound entity and so you feel :I am far away, I am absent, I am by your side, etc. You are hugging a delusion, awake to the Truth and establish yourselves in joy."

The One does not, of its own Free Will, desire to become many. It has no desire. It has no likes and dislikes. It is immanent and transcendent. It is all this and more. What then is the reason for this manifold appearance? The reason lies in the mind of bhaktha (devotee). You declare. "Baaba appeared before me in this Form; I saw Baaba in this Form." But, what happens is you desire that vision. I do not change into that Form. The Lord is sugar, sweetness. You may drop it into tea or coffee or milk or water. Into whatever thing you put it, it will make it sweet. That is My nature, sweetness; My signature. Once It has melted, what remains is neither water nor sugar, but a third thing, sherbeth (syrup). But, when your tongue is bitter through envy, hatred and pride, how can you taste the sugar? Seek God just as you seek food. The Lord cares for the motive, not the object offered. The tiny leaf from the cooking vessel that Dhroupadhi gave Him satisfied His hunger and the hunger of the Universe, along with His---for, she saturated it with her bhakthi. The thulasi leaf placed by Rukmini in the scale was able to balance the weight of Him who has all the 14 worlds in His belly, for, her intent added so much weight to it. The handful of flattened rice that Kuchela took to Krishna was worth less than a paisa but, it was suffused so heavily with the devotion and faith of his wife that it brought great good fortune. It is possible to fill in an atom of deed, a world of Feeling and the Lord will value and appreciate that. Krishna is the causeless conditioning, you cannot discover the causes for His acts or deeds; it is sheer waste to search for them. If you go on searching for causes and then trying to tread the path, you may not get the chance at all. You have come as men in order to reach God, remember that. "Why do you go to Madhura-Brindaavan, to Thirupathi, to Puttaparthi?" people stop you on the way and ask. Nobody asks you "Why do you take food?" In fact, one has to seek God just as one seeks food. Both are necessary for happiness, man seeks happiness, for his originally and truly free; he is immortal and so he seeks to overcome death. Everyone must rise to the level of the gopees. Do not blame the Lord for your failure in saadhana (spiritual practice); examine yourself. You set the alarm clock at 6 a.m. and go to bed; if it rings only at 10 a.m. you infer that something is wrong with its nuts, bolts, springs, wheels, etc. So too, when the expected results do not materialise, infer that something is wrong in you yourself, your habits of food, drink, sleep or conduct or behaviour or attitude to others. Everyone, be he a Brahmin or Pandith or Student or Artist, has to adhere to a strict code of discipline. Without that, victory is beyond reach. You must become master of the senses and attain the Mahaashthi (Supreme Energy) from this basic Maayashakthi (Deluding Power). In short you too must rise to the level of the gopees. The body is assigned to you as a boat to cross the ocean to samsaara (worldly life) but you use it for storing things which give worldly joy and do not launch it on the waters; misusing it like that, it comes in the way of, all activity that is really conducive to happiness; use it in the way of Dharma (righteousness) and success will be yours. Bheema asked Dharmaraaja whether, if Dhuryodhana invited him for another game of dice after the 12 years of forest and the one year of incognito were over, he would agree and he replied, "I can never deviate from the path of Dharma." Since that was his attitude, the Paandavas were helped by the continuous Grace of Krishna and the blessings of sages like Maarkandeya and Vedhavyaasa. The Kauravas, on the other hand, were debilitated by curse after curse from enraged sages and by one ill-omen after another. Gopees are best examples of yearning for the Lord. Your saadhana involves not reading or writing so much as actual experiencing. Raavana was a postmaster in the four Vedhas and the six Shaasthras (spiritual sciences); his ten heads were full of them. But, of what avail? He had no shaanthi (peace), nor could he give shaanthi to his kith and kin. What is the profit if you simply repeat, "Delicious food, delicious food" a thousand times? You have to eat, digest and assimilate. You have no deposits on your account in the Bank of Bhagavaan's Grace and yet you dare issue cheques, expecting His Grace when in distress! Have the deposits or, at least have some property on hand (like service to others, prema (love) towards all, Ahimsa (non-violence), etc. so that you can mortgage it and get help. If you have neither, why blame the Bank? Through your daily avocations and activities you can realise the Lord, believe Me! The gopees are the best examples of this, the best proofs. Remember ever the Name of the Lord with agony of unfulfilled search and remember ever the beautiful Form with the agony of being forced to be away---and, you too can see Krishna in your midst. That yearning must be there: then, the result is certain.

The Lord wants sincerity, not imitation

Prahlaadha was immersed in that bhaava (thought); when he was thrown downhill, trampled by the elephant and tortured by the minions of his father, he paid no heed, for he heeded only his Lord; he needed only his Lord. The gopees too when they listened to the murali (flute) lost all attachment to the world and to the senses and to the manifold objective phenomenal things; they yearned for the sublimest spiritual merging with the Infinite that was always calling on the finite, to realise its finiteness.

By the purification of impulses one gets into the higher stage, when the Mystery of the Divine is grasped--the Saalokya (realm of spirituality) stage. Then, by contemplation of the Divine, the Saameepya and the Saaruupya (proximity to the Divinity and likeness of the Form of Divinity) stages are won. Many great mystic poets attained this height.

Jayadheva sang in that strain, but, if you sing that song in the same way, Krishna will not appear. He wants sincerity not imitation.

The name uttered with sincere faith was the flower offering of the gopees; that was the bead of their rosary.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, March 1963

9. A drama within a drama

THE two Pandiths who spoke have given you substantial food, but, one feels full only after drinking a glassful of water in the end; I shall provide the water now. Of course, the water drawn from the Shaasthras is not just water, it is nectar. The Pandith referred to some episodes in the Raamaayana which cause confusion and doubt. He asked why Dhasharatha chose an occasion when Bharatha was absent, to raise the question of the coronation of Raama, why the Ahalya incident was allowed to reveal the Divinity of Raama, when all along Raama is depicted as only human, why Vaali had to be killed by such a virtuous hero as Raama from behind a tree, why

Kaikeyi who loved Raama even more than she loved Bharatha suddenly got so concerned about Bharatha. The fact is, doubt grows wild in the absence of faith. Faith can be established only when one grasps the inner significance of each incident and remark.

All must reach the goal some day or other Dhasharatha did not invite the king of the Kekayas for consultation along with the other leaders and princes who were called to give their opinion on the choice of Raama as the heir-apparent, for, in that case, subsequent events in furtherance of the Master Plan would have been rendered difficult. Why, Dhasharatha did not command Raama to go into exile in so many words; he only acknowledged to Kaikeyi that he had granted her two boons and that he was now helpless to back out of that grant. It was Kaikeyi who communicated the news to Raama. Silence was as good as approval and Raama had to accept silence as the command from His father. Kaikeyi had to intervene, so that the purpose of the Avathaar might be fulfilled. The sense of righteousness in Raama was so strong that when he heard of the dilemma in which Dhasharatha was caught, He helped him to come out of it unharmed; he insisted he would go into exile as his father had promised by implication.

The Aathmaaraama (Divinity) in every one prompts him to stick to truth and to the moral code; you have only to listen and obey and get saved. Some hear even its whisperings; some listen only when it protests loudly; some are deaf; some are determined not to hear. But, all have to be guided by it, sooner or later. Some may ascend a plane, others may travel by car or board a bus, some may prefer a train journey, others may like to trudge along---but, all must reach the goal, some day or other.

Sugreeva forgot his plighted word and indulged himself in the newly won revels of the court; he ignored the fact that the jagath (mundane world) is based not on dhana (wealth) but on dharma (virtue); so, Raama prodded the snake Anantha, to raise its angry hood and hiss furiously. That is to say, he reminded Lakshmana of the ingratitude of Sugreeva and made him furious. An ungrateful king is as worthless as an ungrateful subject.

Line of Grace must be won by saadhana alone

The Pandith spoke of the death of Vaali, which gave Sugreeva the throne. But, remember, it was not Vaali alone that died. His ajnaana (Primal ignorance) also died with him. He saw Raama with all His divine glory, as filling the entire Universe, which is but a fraction of His personality.

The anger of Raama at Sugreeva's dilatoriness is a drama within a drama; for, Raama knew that Sugreeva will set about the task of searching for Seetha, as soon as He gives the prompting.

The avathaars all play a drama, within the drama of this universe. You say that Raama 'wept' for Seetha; but, how can an ant judge the depth of the sea? Raama was the greatest hero in history; he killed the 14,000 raakshasas led by Khara, Dhushaasana and Thrisiras, all by Himself! Every raakshasa beheld in every neighbouring raakshasa a Raama; and, full of fury, he slew the Raama and was killed in turn by his neighbour. The avathara behaves in a human way so that mankind can feel kinship, but, rises to superhuman heights so that mankind can aspire to those heights. The nara thathwa (real nature of man) can be transformed into the Naaraayana thathwa (real nature of God), for both are basically the same. Only, you have to switch on to the particular wave-length. Know it, adjust correctly and the all-pervading will be grasped clearly with no distortion. You may read the Geetha many times; but the Geetha ('line,' in Thelugu) of grace must be won by saadhana. The line of fortune that the palmists say will bring success is the result of grace alone. You may say that you are the master of the Geethashaasthra that you have read and digested it, but when you belch, the taste and the flavour must be manifest! They are not evident at all. Trifles are sought after; temporary benefits pursued; joy and grief alternately tease and agitate. The sea of samsaara (worldly life) has to be crossed and all its Waves transcended, with the help of Raamanaama. If you seek to know the highest and secure the award of the Lord, there can be no place for doubt. The heart should be set on achieving the task of realising the Lord within you, as the motivator. The Lord comes in human form to show this.

Falsehood looks easy and profitable; but, it binds you and pushes you into perdition.

Sathya Sai Baba

10. True nature of Raama

DHARMA (virtue) is not a matter of time and space, to be modified and adjusted to the needs and pressures of the moment. It means a number of fundamental principles that should guide mankind, in its progress towards inner harmony and outer peace. When man strays away from Dharma, he meets with greater harm than even physical slavery. There is a dread now about invasion and bondage to the enemy if you are not alert enough and united enough. But the loss of Dharma is an even greater calamity, for what is life worth if man cannot live up to the talents he is endowed with?

These principles are called Sanaathana (Eternal), because their origins are not dated, their author is not identifiable; they are the revelations made in the clarified intellects of impartial sages.

They are basic and eternal. They do not represent temporary vagaries. India stood unshaken and undaunted against the onslaught of attitudes that were bred in other lands to suit the needs of limited societies, because she stuck to the Dharma that was laid down for all time and all men.

Indian rulers also respected the rigours of Dharma and took the advice of the repositories of Dharma and the interpreters of Dharma, those who were purified in the crucible of thapas. They recognised the Ruler of Rulers, and sought His guidance by prayer and penance. They knew that their Prabhu (Master) was Sarvaantharyaamin (the Eternal Indweller or Onlooker). They were taught that He was in full sympathy, not only with the king but even with the lowliest of his subjects. Therefore, the rulers of this land were warned to care for the happiness and cure the misery of every single individual in the State.

The Divine is an indivisible entity. Dharma is the code of conduct which will promote the ideals of each stage of man---learner, householder, earner, master, servant, saadhaka, sanyaasi, etc. When the code is distorted and man undermines his earthly career, forgetting the high purpose for which he has come, the Lord incarnates and leads him along the correct path. That is to say, He comes as Man, to restore the principles and re-establish the practice of Dharma. This is what is referred to as Dharmasamsthaapana in the Geetha. Among these Forms assumed by the Lord, there is no higher or lower, though Pandiths may argue who is better or greater among, say, Raama or Krishna! That is but a type of intellectual gymnastics, which gives the Pandiths the keen joy of a pugilistic encounter! Veerabhadhra Shaasthry has posed a similar problem now. Let me tell you at the outset that the Divine is an indivisible entity, whatever Form it may assume, here or elsewhere.

Raama never deviated from Dharma

Raama appeared as Maayaa-maanusha-ruupa (illusory human form); He stuck to Dharma in daily practice, even from His infancy. He is the personification of Dharma. There is no trace of adharma (vice) in him. His Divine Nature is revealed in shaantha guna (calm temperament) and karunaa rasa (feeling of love and affection); meditate on Him and you are filled with Prema for all beings; dwell on His story and you find all the agitations of your minds quietening in perfect calm. When Thaataki, the female demon, had to be killed, He argued, hesitated and desisted, until Sage Vishwaamithra convinced Him that she had to be liberated from a curse by His own arrow. That is a sign of His Karuna Rasa. Raama never provoked another in order to create a convenient excuse to destroy him; on the other hand, He gave the adversary every chance to be saved, He carried the message of Dharma to the Vaanaraas and the Raakshasas, as well as [o sages like Jaabaali. He accepted the homage of Vibheeshana without demur and He announced that He was prepared to accept even Raavana, if only he repented his iniquity. "Sathyam vadha" (speak the truth), says the Shruthi; Raama stuck to truth, in spite of all temptations. "Dharmam chara" (Practise virtue), says the Shruthi. He never deviated from the path. For example, He had, as you know, to live 14 years in the forest, to fulfil His father's behest. So during that period, He did not enter an inhabited town or village. He avoided Kishkindha and Lanka, even when the Coronations of Sugreeva and Vibheeshana took place. Vibheeshana pleaded with Him very plaintively, saying that only a few days remained out of the 14 years, but Raama sent Lakshmana instead. He did not waver or overstep. That was the strictness with which He kept the vow. Make Raama your Aathma Raama Raama is Dharmaswaruupam (Embodiment of Virtue); Krishna is Premaswaruupam (Embodiment of Love). Raama was ever aware of the obligations of Dharma When Dhasharatha, running after His chariot in mortal anguish, cried out, "Stop, stop" and called on Sumanthra to stop, Raama told him not to. He said, "If he chides you, tell him you did not hear him." Sumanthra was in a fix. How could He say something not true? But, Raama explained, "This order to stop the chariot comes from a grief-stricken father, whereas the order to take Me to the forest came from the King, whose minister you are. You should not hear the ravings of a man who has lost his reason through sorrow; you must listen only to the commands of the King."

Even before the advent of the Avathaar, the stage is set to the minutest detail; Kaikeyi is ready with her two indefinite boons, Dhasharatha is ready with the curse of the ascetic on his head, entailing upon him a death due to anguish at the separation of his son, the Vaanaras are ready to help the Divine Purpose. Seetha is ready risen from the earth, to provide the cause for the downfall of Evil. Just as a garland is made of flowers gathered from many plants, flowers of many hues and fragrances, so too the Garland of the Divine Story is made up of a variety of incidents, a boon, a blessing, a curse to provide the wonderful plot of His Story. There are some who say that Raama shows man how to suffer! Well, if a king arranges a play in the palace and takes delight in enacting the role of a beggar, and acts it very realistically, do you therefore declare that he is suffering the miseries of beggary? Raama is Aanandha (Bliss). Aanandha is Raama. If it is not sweet, how can it be sugar? If Raama is suffering, He cannot be Raama. A ball of iron cannot burn the skin; but, make it red-hot; it does. That is but an assumed role. When the heat subsides it is as cool as ever. Raama Naama (name) will save you, if you have at least the Pithru Bhakthi and Maathru Bhakthi (devotion to father and to mother) that Raama had. If not, Raama Naama is merely a movement of the lips. Meditate on the Raama swaruupa (Form of Raama) and the Raama swabhaava (the true nature of Raama), when you recite or write Raama Naama. That will give exercise to the mind and it will be made healthy and strong, in the spiritual sense. Make this Dharmaswaruupa your Aathmaa Raama, on this Janmadhina (birthday) of Raama. That is My advice anti My blessing. Rajahmundhry, 1-4-1963 11. The Fifth Vedha GULLAPALLI Buuchiraamayya Shaasthry spoke about the Mahaabhaaratha so well and with so much scholarship, as he has been specialising in its exposition for years. The Mahaabhaaratha is considered by many as not so conducive to Bhakthi as the Bhaagavatha for instance, or as the Raamaayana; but, if once you know the taste, no one will give it up or consider it as of lower value. It is called the Fifth Vedha, not without reason. The Vedhas reveal things that are beyond the reach of the intellect. The truths declared by the Vedhas are made practicable and simple, interesting and instructive, by means of stories and homilies in the Mahaabhaaratha.

The Puurva Meemaamsa (analysis of Vedhic statements concerning rituals) deals with the Pravritthi maarga (path of worldly desire) and the Uttara Meemaamsa with the Nivritthi maarga (path of renunciation). Puurva Meemaamsa deals with the kaarana (reason) and the Uttara Meemaamsa, with the kaaryam (duty), which is inaanam. In the Mahaabhaaratha, both the paths are fully explained. So, it is called the Fifth Vedha. It is the Vedhasaara (essence of Vedha) itself. In Thelugu there is a proverb, "If it is a question of listening, listen to Bhaaratham; if it is a question of eating, eat gaarlu." That is because the Bhaaratham gives in sweet simple style all the inspiration that a man needs for this world and for the next.

Where there is Dharma, victory is assured

The Vedha saadhana has four pillars on which it stands---Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema.

They have to be practised, experienced and their combined result, namely, Aanandha has to be enjoyed. Krishna told the Paandavas that He did not know anything about the fateful dice game, which started the succession of calamities. "I was in Dwaaraka at the time," He said. Dwaaraka means the citadel with the nine gates or dwaaras, the Body itself. Krishna is the witness of everything; anything done without His approval or without being dedicated to Him will be a failure.

The five Paandava brothers are the Five Praanas (vital energies), symbolised in story, and with the help of the Lord, they won the battle against the forces of evil. Where there is Dharma, victory is assured. The Mahaabhaaratha teaches that truth. The Pandavaas had many temptations placed before them to slide back into A-dharma; but, they held on to the difficult path of Dharma and won. The status of manhood has been won after aeons of arduous struggle and to waste it in vain pursuits forgetting the Dhivyathvam (Divinity) which has to be manifested is indeed pitiable. God weighs only the feelings behind prayer Dhroupadhi praying in distress from the Assembly Hall of the Kauravas is an instance in point.

The Mahaabhaaratha proves times out of number that the Lord answers prayers that come out of faith and agony in yearning. There was a cowherd called Maaladhaasa who was determined to see the Lord, as He was described in the sacred texts he had heard expounded in the village temple by a Pandith. So he prayed and prayed to the "black Lord riding on the white bird" all the time his cows were pasturing in the fields. Eleven days passed; but, there was no sign of the "black Lord riding the white bird," He had forgotten to take food and drink during all those days and so, had become weak, too weak to walk or talk. At last, the Lord melted at his entreaties and presented Himself before him as an old Brahmin; but the Brahmin was not riding a white bird, nor was he black, beautifully black, as the Pandith had described. So, he asked the Brahmin to come the next day at seven in the morning, so that he may bring the Pandith and verify whether He was the Lord Himself. The Pandith laughed at the whole affair and refused to take part in it; but Maaladhaasa was so importunate that he agreed.

The entire village turned out on the river bank the next day, long before seven o'clock. The Brahmin was there, exactly as he had promised and Maaladhaasa showed Him to all. But, they could not see him! They began to laugh at the cowherd's antics and threatened him with a severe beating for bringing them along as butts for his joke. Maaladhaasa could see the Brahmin clearly but no one else could. At last, he got so enraged that he walked up to the old Brahmin and gave him a whacking blow on the cheek, saying, "Why don't you show yourself to all?"

That blow changed the entire scene. Krishna appeared in resplendent robes, smiling face, captivating form and the white bird. As the astounded villagers were recovering from the amazement, the Vimaana (heavenly chariot), floated down from the sky and Krishna asked Maaladhaasa to sit inside it. Then, with the Lord by his side Maaladhaasa rose up and soon was out of sight.

Mahaabhaaratha is an inspiration for all time

The Lord always weighs only the feeling behind the prayer to satisfy and please; the Saguna form visible to the eye and cognisable by the senses, but something unapproachable by the senses (In-dhriya-atheetha), has to be offered. In this way, karma itself becomes Upaasana, by the addition to saturation point, of dedication. Rathi (attachment) is the seed; Bhaava (feeling) is the sapling; Prema (love) is the tree; Sath-Chith-Aanandha (Being, Awareness, Bliss) is the fruit.

The Vedhas have Karma, Upaasana and Inaana (action, devotion and knowledge) sections. The Mahaabhaaratha teaches all three and so, for the Vedhavriksha (Vedha tree), the Bhaaratha can be said to be the fruit.

You have heard that the Lord comes down when Dharmaglaani (the decline of Dharma) happens; well, Vedhaglaani (the decline of the Vedhas) is equivalent to the decline of Dharma, for Vedha is the very root of Dharma. There are five treasures which the good always try to guard, and which you should endeavour to foster---the Cow, the Brahmin, the Vedhas, the Shaasthras, and Chastity. If these are lost, then, life is lost; everything that adds value to life is lost.

You are your own foe and friend

Where there is Dharma, there Krishna is; so, think for yourself, each one of you! How far have you deserved the Grace of the Lord? You draw Him near; you keep Him far. You entangle yourself, bind yourself, and get caught in the trap. No one is your foe except yourself. No one else is your friend; you are your only friend. The Guru shows you the road; you have to trudge alone, without fear or hesitation.

The Mahaabhaaratha clearly explains the bunds which Sanaathana Dharma has constructed to direct the wild flocks of the senses and the emotions, into the sea, without harming the banks.

Brahmacharya (student celibate), Grihastha (householder). Vaanaprastha (recluse in the forest), Sanyaasa (ascetic)---these stages of life with the restrictions and regulations prescribed for each are such bunds to guard the individual and society from the upsurge of the beast in man. Even today, the Mahaabhaaratha can be of great help; it is an inspiration for all time, for all humanity.

The battle between Dharmakshethra (the camp of virtue-bound noble Paandavas) and Kurukshethra (the camp of the egoistic wicked Kauravas) is ever on and however strong the Kurukshethra might appear to be, even if it has the Yaadhavas on its side, so long as the Lord is the charioteer, victory is certain for the champions of Dharma. Even now, when the Chinese are pressing on the frontier, the best armour for the country is Dharma, which will win the Grace of God. What is not possible for a people who have won that?

If only men knew the path to permanent joy and peace, they will not wander distracted among the bye-lanes of sensual pleasure. Just as the joy felt in dreams disappears when you wake, the joy felt in the waking stages disappears when you wake into the higher awareness, called jnaana. Use the moment while it is available, for the best of uses, the awareness of the Divine in all.

When you die, you must die not like a tree or a beast or a worm, but, like a Man who has realised that he is Maadhava (God). That is the consummation of all the years you spend in the human frame.

12. Shankara's Adhwaitha

THE Ari-shadvargas (the six enemies of Man), get a foothold in his mind, because it is filled with the darkness of Ajnaana. They are nocturnal birds like bats and owls that cannot tolerate light. Darkness will not flee if you throw stones at it; nor will it disappear if you lay about it with a sword, or shoot it with a gun. It will be destroyed only when a lamp is lit. Shankara taught this simple truth to many who were ignorant of this simple fact. The people of this country were lost in the pursuit of many goals, because their vision was blurred by darkness. Shankara taught them that the Vedhas, Upanishaths and Shaasthras had but One in view, the One-without-a-second, Adhwaitha.

Shankara, when quite a young boy, was one day offering puuja to Dhevi, the household Deity, because his father was away and he had asked him to perform worship in his absence. He placed milk before the image and prayed pathetically that She should sip the milk, as he imagined She was wont to do, when his father did the Puuj. He wept so sincerely that Mother melted at his walling and drank the entire quantity) Shankara had seen his father distribute the milk that was offered to the Mother, a tiny spoonful, to every member of the family; but, since the cup was emptied in one quaff by Her, nothing remained; the boy feared that he would be blamed for drinking what was the share of the others. So, he wailed again. Dhevi felt great pity at the plight of Shankara, who had taken the Image to be alive, and who had compelled Her already to manifest Herself from it. But, she did not pour milk out of Her palm, as I do; she pressed Her Maternal Breasts and filled the cup. Shankara's Avedhana, his anguished yearning, had succeeded in matting Dhevi respond!

Beginners only need image worship

Similarly, the other day, Shri Raamamurthy, who is sitting among you here, shouted, "Swamee" in sincere faith and agony. His wife was writhing in pain, because her clothes had caught fire.

She was too panic-stricken to call out My Name. But, this cry was heard by Me. I hurried to the spot, which is, as you say, 400 miles away; I crumpled the fire out, before it was too late.

Shankara worshipped images in childhood and he knew the value of Saguna swaruupa (God as endowed with qualities). He advised Saguna Aaraadhana (worship of Form) to the large majority of people, even later in his life. Little children must be taught with the help of slates and boards, on which illustrations are drawn. Temples, images and pictures are the slates and boards for the children in spiritual progress. But, if you play with a toy elephant, you cannot derive the experience of contacting the real one. The Formless can be conceived only when you have transcended Form.

Shankara's Adhwaita is the Ultimate Truth

When Shankara thought of renouncing the world (in order to get the authority to educate it), he felt that his mother's consent had to be taken for the step. So, while bathing in the Poorna river near his house, he cried out one day that a crocodile had caught his leg. It was true, for the crocodile was, as in the Gajendhramoksha story, only Samsaara (wordly life) called by that name, Sensual Desire, to put it in other words. When the mother came rushing to the bank of the river, he told her that the crocodile would let him off, only if he took Sanyaasa, became a monk!

This was also true, for, renunciation, detachment, giving up worldly ties, is the means of saving oneself from bondage. The bewildered mother agreed and the boy left home to seek his Guru, and through him the secret of liberation.

Shankara lived only for thirty-two years, but, during that time, he purified and consolidated the various schools of worship and brought them under the over-all care of one philosophical principle, Adhwaita (non-dualism).

The Mahaavaakyas (the great statements on Supreme Reality) of the Vedhas once again began ringing in the hearts of all, with their true meaning. Aham Brahmaasmi; Thath-thwam-asi;

Prajnaanam Brahma (I am Brahman, Thou art That; consciousness is Brahman)--all were explained in simple, convincing logic, in sweet captivating poetry.

Shankara's Adhwaita is the ultimate Truth and so, it is only confirmed, not shaken, by the discoveries of science or the flights of intellect. It speaks of the unity of matter and energy; of time and space, of the Universe being but Brahman Seen through the veil of Maayaa, which too is but an activity of the Primordial.

Shankara knew that Adhwaita requires intense saadhana (spiritual effort) which will remove all trace of ego, all idea of duality, from the mind of man. So, as a preparatory discipline to the dawn of the awareness of one's real unity with the substance of the Universe, he taught the rules of yoga and bhakti and karma; these, according to him, will brighten the intellect, cleanse the emotions and purify the heart. Adhwaita is the awareness of the Divine, in everything, everywhere, in full measure.

Shankara suggested sath-sanga (good company) as the very first step in saadhana; the company of the wise and the good will develop into detachment and love of silence and solitude. That will promote the disappearance of moha (delusion), which according to Arjuna, was the fruit of listening to the Geetha. When that happens, one is established steadily in the Thath-thwam, the reality of this and that, the identity of this with that. Well, the recognition of that identity is the attainment of Mukthi (liberation).

Prashaanthi Nilayam, Shankara Jayanthi, 28-4-1963

13. Shivam, not shavam

GHANDIKOTA Subrahmanya Shaasthry read and offered what he called a Navarathna Haaram---a Garland of Nine Poetic Gems; but though I do not accept garlands, I certainly accept the devotion that gives fragrance to the garland. He said that the Vedhas are for the glorification of the Gods (Dhevaanaam sthuthyartham), that in the Kali Yuga, one is asked to rely more on Naamasmarana (repeated remembrance of God) for liberation. Why is it considered enough for the people of this Age? For, other Saadhanas are fraught with difficulties. They need rigorous discipline and much preliminary effort. Again, there is another advantage in Naamasmarana: as soon as the Name is uttered, the owner of the Name comes into view. When you think of the Form, the Name may not always accompany; you may not be able to identify. There may be more than one Name and you may be confused. But take the Name, and the Form automatically appears before the mental eye.

In Bhaarith, the discipline, to remove that attachment to the senses and to curb the mind from running after fleeting pleasures, is clearly laid down since ages; and we have the experience of many saints, recorded in the sacred literature of this land. All the activities of thought, word and deed are sublimated to this higher purpose. Man is Shivam (auspicious), not shavam (corpse); he has three eyes, which are derived from the Sun and the Moon, and from Agni.

Where the Lord's Name is sung, there He sits The Agni eye is the internal eye, which can be opened by the discipline of the Yoga. The threeeyed Shiva can see the past, the present and the future. A boy of ten whom you have seen, you can recall his picture as he was when you saw him; but you can't see him as he is now or as he will be ten years hence. But, if you earn the Thrinethra (three eyes), capable of seeing the past, present and future, you can see all three. You become master of time and space.

The Name is enough to give you all the results of every type of saadhana (spiritual effort). This is accepted by all the Shaasthras and all the saadhakas (spiritual aspirants) who have left accounts of their struggle and success. Moreover, the Name is capable of being recited and meditated upon by all, equally. Of course, the Name is a limitation of the Universal; it identifies the un-identifiable, through one of its aspects. Take the Upaadhi (disguise) as a means of saving yourself; take it as a boat that will take you across the sea of birth and death.

When you repeat the Name, all the sweetness of the Form and its associated glory must come to memory and just as your mouth waters when you remember some sweet dish you relish, your mind must "water" when you contemplate it. Choose the Name that captivates your heart. Why run after riches when all the pleasure and satisfaction that riches can offer and even a hundredfold, can be got by dwelling on the Name? The Lord has said that where His Name is sung, "thathra thish-tthaami" ("there I sit"). He establishes Himself there! He will not move from the place. So, the tongue is enough to win Him, the tongue that speaks the language of the pure mind.

The Lord is a Kalpavriksha (Wish-fulfilling Tree); you have to approach Him and develop attachment to Him. You must win His Grace and be ever near Him keeping back all the forces that draw you away from Him. Even if you commit some technical faults in singing about Him or in worshipping Him, it does not matter. Bhakthi (intense devotion) makes every error excusable. Nectar, though poured into a brass cup, will not lose its savour or taste. Poison, even if is poured into a cup of gold set with gems, will not lose its death-dealing property.

The Name persuades the Form to bend and bless Bhakthi will force the Lord to give you Himself as the gift. The Coronation Ceremony of Sree Raamachandhra and the celebrations were all over; the presentation of gifts to all important people was over. Then, Seetha remembered that Maaruthi had been forgotten. There was no one in the hall except Raama, Seetha and Maaruthi. Raama wondered what to give him: He suggested to Seetha that the gemset ring that Janaka gave him on the occasion of the marriage would be the best gift, because as He said. "Your father gave this to me. on the day he gave you to me; this Maaruthi gave you to me. a second time. So. I shall give him this." Maaruthi did not seem quite happy when the ring was placed in his hand. Evidently he did not appreciate the gift because it was not given in full sight of all; when all were given, he was neglected! But Maaruthi placed it near his ear as if he sought to know what sound emanated from it: he bit it with his teeth; tried to peer into its structure.

Raama asked him why, and Seetha was also anxious to know. Maaruthi said, "I am finding out whether it has the Raamanaama which I want to the exclusion of everything else." Then, Raama embraced him and said, "Maaruthi! what other gift can I give you? I shall give you Myself as the gift. Accept Me!" So, that is why he was neglected, at the time every, one else was awarded gifts! That is why wherever Maaruthi is. there Raama is bound to be wherever Raama is, there Maaruthi is invariably present. The Name is so valuable for the Bhaktha (devotee). It persuades the Form to bend and bless. The Name that pleases you is best for you Just consider this- the form changes from age to age, from one appearance to another. Raama and Krishna were different in form; even their deeds were distinct. But still, people agree when you say that both are identical. Well; tell them that Raama held aloft the Govardhanagiri, they will not accept it.

The Name has the association of all the special fragrance of the Leela (Divine play) and the Mahima (Power) and the Upadhesha (spiritual instruction). Each one has a special attachment to one Name out of many, suited to the temperament and the Samskaara, the inherited instincts and tendencies shaped in previous births.

Meera loved the Name Giridhaari (mountain-holder). To her, that leela appealed as the most significant, as the most symbolic of the Lord's glory. The name that pleases you, that arouses the sweetest and the purest love, is best for you. Raamayathi is Raama (the thing that pleases is Raama); Harathi is Hara (the thing that destroys Maayaa, is Hara or Hari).

Keep the Name lit on the tongue Suurdhaas was overwhelmed with grief, when the lovely little body who held his stick and led him along the road to Brindhaavan suddenly left him with the announcement that his name was Krishna! He ran about with both hands extended to catch Him and keep Him in his embrace, but Krishna had disappeared; then, Suurdhaas shouted, "You may run away from my clasp; but I have you in my heart. You can never run away from there."

Prahlaadha was also like that; he had no other thought; he saw nothing else; elephant, snake, poison, fire---all were for him Naaraayana-thathwa (divine principle) itself. How then could they harm him?

The Naama is the Narasimha for the Hiranyaakshas of the mind; the Raajasik (passionate) and Thaamasik (ignorant) forces, besieging your heart are bent on your downfall. Just as they give Calcium and Vitamin tablets to cure anaemia, etc., take Naamam tablets to get rid of mental anaemia and other illnesses. There are some throat pastilles, which you have to carry to your mouth and whose taste you have to slowly swallow, in order to relieve cough; have the Naamam on your tongue and imbibe its taste slowly to get rid of the troublesome upsurge of passions and emotions. Keep the Name lit on the tongue; it will illumine your interior and also the exterior. It will cleanse your mind, as well as minds of those who hear the Name when you recite it.

Keeping it on the tongue is like keeping a lamp lit on the door-step at the entrance to your house.
Naamasmarana is the best saadhana; it is the most beneficial sath-pravarthana. That is the highest japam, the most profitable thapas. Kuchela won the Grace of the Lord through the same means. Fill the Name with your Love, whenever you repeat it; saturate it with devotion. That is the easiest path for all of you.
Prashanthi Nilayam, 29-4-1963 A mere Five-minute inquiry will convince you that you are not the body, or the senses, the mind or the intelligence, the name or the form, but that you are the Aathma Itself, the same Aathma that appears as all this variety.

Once you get a glimpse of this truth, hold on to it; do not allow it to slip. Make it your permanent possession.

Sathya Sai Baba

14. Sathyam, Shivam, Sundharam

TO EARN the Grace of God, you have to pray to the Personified Power with Name and Form; it is your yearning that decides in what form the Lord appears. You call and He answers. If you are not earnest, if you feel indifferent, and say, "Let Him come when He wills, in the Form He likes and with the Name He prefers," He will not come at all. Call on Him with anguish; He will respond.

In Raajasthan, there was a priest who worshipped the image of Baalakrishna installed in the temple, attached to the palace of Udhaipur. His name was Dhevesha. His story may not be found anywhere but since he was intimately connected with Me, I know him very well. Every night he used to "put Baalakrishna to sleep," with appropriate ritual and close the door of the shrine; but, before he came out, he would take from the head of the image, the mallika (jasmine) garland he had placed there in the evening and wear it himself, before proceeding home. Of course, on those days on which the Mahaaraana visited the temple, the garland had to be given to him, for wear.

One day, however, the Mahaaraana came immediately after he had worn it inside his tuft 'of hair; so, when the Ruler demanded the flower, he had to get inside the shrine and, slyly removing it from his tuft, hand it reverentially back to him. The Mahaarana was happy that he had not missed the gift; but, was shocked to find in it a strand of gray hair! Suspecting some tricks he shouted angrily. "What! has our Balakrishna grown old and grey?" The priest, to save his skin, said "Yes, Yes." The Mahaaraana replied, "Well, I shall not disturb now; but, early tomorrow, I shall come and see if His hair has really gone grey."

Devesha had no food or sleep that night. He wept his eyes out in agony, for, he had in his fear, imposed old age and greyness on the ever-youthful Lord. Morning came and the Mahaaraana hurried to the temple to open the shrine. They both looked in and, lo, the hair was grey. The King suspected that the hair was false, planted by the priest. So he pulled and tugged at it, only to find drops of blood at the roots. God had responded to the anguished cry, the call of the agony.

The Formless will assume any Form and undergo any transformation to satisfy the yearning of the devoted aspirant. The over-riding purpose is to make all karma-jeevis (action-oriented beings), Brahma-jeevis (God-filled beings).

Man must crave for the vision of God, then only is he entitled to the status of human-ness.

Maanava (the human) must reach Maadhava (the Divine). He must conquer the mind. Man is the ruler of Manas (the mind), not its slave. Who takes the role of educator from the beginning of your life? The Mother, is it not? Prakrithi (Nature) is the Mother, the Feminine principle, the Maayaa (illusory energy). She is the great teacher. If you do not learn the lessons well, Nature punishes you, boxes you in the ear, hits you on the head. She is a stern merciless instructress; but, if you learn well, she will lead you proudly to the Presence of Purushoththama (the Supreme Person). Obey Prakrithi and be well trained by her: then, you can inherit the Glory of Purushoththama. If you disregard Her teaching, the Mother gets disgusted with you and the Father too will disregard your entreaties. The commands of Prakrithi given for your good are called, dharma. Have that dharma as the witness of all your thoughts, words and deeds. Be guided every instant by the dictates of that Dharma, and success will be yours.

Little children must be taught with the help of big letters scrawled on boards and slates. Temples, images and Saligrams (crystal stones) are the slates and boards, for children in spiritual progress,

But, even if you play with a toy elephant you cannot get the experience of contacting a live elephant, can you? The Formless God-head can be understood by you only when you have rendered yourself Formless! When you are in the world of gunas (qualities), you have to attach yourself only to a Saguna Lord (God with attributes).

Even a thief does not like being called "thief" He gets either ashamed or angry when he is called.

Why? Truth is his real nature and his true nature revolts against the appellation. The Aathma is always Shivam (auspicious and holy). So it protests vehemently when the vehicle where it resides is called amangalam (inauspicious), Shayam (dead). The Aathma is also Sundharam (beauty). A U M is the Ahamkaaram (egoism) of Paramaathma; it has no vikaaraam (ugliness) in it. So it is always Sundharam (beautiful, charming, lovely). That is why when it is described as ugly, deformed, disgusting, etc., he lowers his head in shame, for something revolting to his true nature is being imputed. Sathyam, Shivam, Sundharam is yourself; you have not realised it because of delusion, ignorance and false inference. Get rid of these and merge in your real self.

Excerpts from Discourses during May 1963

Enter from now on into a discipline of Naamasmarana, the incessant remembrance of God through the Name of the Lord. It does not need any special time or extra allotment of time; it can be done always, in the waking stage, whether you are bathing or eating, walking or sitting. All the hours now spend in gossip, in watching sports or films, in hollow conversation, can best be used for silent contemplation of the Name and Form, and splendour of the Lord.

Sathya Sai Baaba

15. Shiva Shakthi

(Baaba was brought down the winding stairs into the Private Room on the ground floor, because He insisted on giving Darshan to the thousands of devotees who had come on that auspicious day. He had an attack of cerebral thrombosis (or tubercular meningitis?) and was in bed for eight days from the morning of Saturday, 29th June to the evening of 6th July. His left hand, leg and eye were affected; His right hand had also slight palsy; the tongue was indistinct and the face was twitching. He was placed on the Silver Chair in the Prayer Hall and His hand and leg were adjusted in proper position. As soon as He was seated, He communicated the following message which was interpreted and announced).

THIS is not Swaami's illness; this is an illness which Swaami has taken on, in order to save some one. Swaami has no illness, nor will He get ill at any time. You must all be happy; that alone will make Swaami happy. If you grieve, Swaami will not be happy. Your joy is Swaami's food.

Then, Baaba signed to Kasturi to speak, and after his short speech was over, Baaba wanted the mike to be held before Him. He asked through it, "Vinipisthundhaa?" (Do you hear Me?) But, though He asked again and again, the voice was so indistinct that no one could make out what it meant. He then signed for water and when it was brought, He sprinkled a little with His shaking right hand on the stricken left hand and on His left leg. He stroked His left hand with the right.

Immediately, He used both hands to stroke His left leg; that touch was enough to cure it. He doffed the disease in a thrice! He started to speak! It was the same musical voice.).

God is the refuge for those who have no refuge Dhikkulenivaariki dhevude gathi---"For those who have no refuge, God is the refuge." That is exactly the reason why I had to take on the disease that one helpless Bhaktha was to get. He had to suffer this dire illness, as well as the four heart attacks that accompanied it; and he would not have survived it. So, according to My Dharma of Bhakthasamrakshana (protection of devotees), I had to rescue him. Of course, this is not the first time that I have taken on the illness of persons whom I wanted to save. Even in the previous sareeram at Shirdi, I had this responsibility. The suffering that you saw was too much for this particular devotee and so, I had to save him, by Myself going through it. This is My Leela: My nature. It is part of the task for which I have Come: Sishyarakshana (protection Of disciples). Persons who were near Me during the last week were asking Me to give them the name of the person whom I had saved. I told them that it will make them angry against that person, for Swaami they would say, "had to undergo so much of pain in order to save that one person." Then, they replied, that they would honour the person, because of the extraordinary Bhakthi that persuaded Swaami to run to his rescue, on Saturday morning. Baaba's Identity, Mission and Advent revealed. Some people even asked Me whether it was this person or that, giving names of those who had attacks of paralysis, especially on the left side! This is even more ludicrous, because when I save a person, I save him completely. I do not wait until he gets the disease and I do not leave in him a fraction of the disease, so that he may be identified later. It all looks so funny to Me, the guesses and surmises that you make. Even in Shirdi, Dhadha Saheb, Nandharaam, Balawanth, all were saved by these means. Balawanth was destined to get plague, but, the bubo was taken over and the boy saved. This is perhaps the longest period when I kept the devotees wondering and worried. That was because of the heart attacks which had to come later on the Bhaktha, from Which also he had to be saved. Then, there is another reason too, why the 8-day period had to be observed. Well, I shall tell you why. That means I must tell you about Myself, about something I have not disclosed so far, something which I was keeping within Myself, for the last 37 years. The time has come to announce it. This is a sacred day, and I shall tell you. You know I declared on the very day when I decided to disclose My Identity, My Mission and My Advent, that I belonged to the Aapasthamba Suuthra (Code of conduct) and the Bharadhwaaja Gothra (lineage). This Bharadhwaaja was a great sage, who studied the Vedhas for full one hundred years; but, finding that the Vedhas were anantha (endless) he did thapas for prolonging life, and from Indhra he got two extensions of a century each. Even then, the Vedhas could not be completed, so, he asked Indhra again for another hundred years. Indhra showed him 3 huge mountain ranges and said, "What you have learned in 3 centuries from only 3 handfulls from out of the 3 ranges, which the Vedhas are. So, give up the attempt to exhaust the Vedhas. Do a Yaaga (ritual sacrifice), instead, which I shall teach you: that will give you the fruit of Vedhic study, full and complete." The yaaga performed by sage Bharadhwaaja Bharadhwaaja decided on performing the yaaga; Indhra taught him how to do it; all preparations were completed. The sage wanted that Shakthi must preside and bless the yaaga. So he went to Kailaasa but, the time was not opportune for presenting his petition. Shiva and Shakthi were engaged in a competitive dance, trying to find out who could dance longer. Eight days passed thus, before Shakthi noticed Bharadhwaaja standing in the cold. She just cast a smile at him and danced along as before! The sage mistook the smile as a cynical refusal to notice him; so he turned his back on Kailaasa and started to descend. To his dismay, he found his left leg, hand and eye put out of action by a stroke. Shiva saw him fall; He came up to him and consoled him; Bharadhwaaja was told that Shakthi had indeed blessed him and his yaaga. Then, Shiva revived him and cured him, sprinkling water from the Kamandalu. Both Shiva and Shakthi granted the Rishi (sage) boons: They would both attend the yaaga, they said. All past assurances accomplished by one incident. After the yaaga was over, They were so pleased that They conferred even more boons on the sage. Shiva said that They would take human form and be born in the Bharadhwaaja Gothra (lineage) thrice: Shiva alone as Shirdi Sai Baaba, Shiva and Shakthi together at Puttaparthi as Sathya Sai Baaba and Shakthi alone as Prema Sai, later. Then Shiva remembered the illness that had suddenly come upon Bharadhwaaja at Kailaasa on the eighth day of the waiting in the cold on the ice. He gave another assurance. "As expiation for the neglect which Shakthi showed you at Kailaasa for 8 days, this Shakthi will suffer the stroke for 8 days, when We both take birth as Sathya Sai and, on the 8th day, I shall relieve her from all signs of the disease by sprinkling water, just as I did at Kailaasa to cure your illness."

It was the working out of this assurance that you witnessed today, just now. This had to happen, this stroke and the cure. The assurance given in the Threthaa Yuga had to be honoured. I may tell you now that the poor forlorn bhaktha who had to get the stroke which I took over, was a convenient excuse, which was utilised. You see, a railway engine is not made available to haul just one bogey; they wait until a number of bogeys are to be taken along and then, they put the engine into action. So too, the disease had to be gone through, the Bhaktha had to be saved, the assurance to be carried out, the mystery had to be cleared, the Divinity had to be more clearly announced by the manifestation of this Grand Miracle. All these were accomplished by this one incident.

Let Me tell you one more thing: Nothing can impede or halt the work of this Avathaara. When I was upstairs all these days, some people foolishly went about saying. "It is all over with Sai Baaba" and they turned back many who were coming to Puttaparthi! Some said I was in Samaadhi, as if I am a Saadhaka! Some feared I was the victim of black magic, as if anything can affect Me! The splendour of this Avathaara will go increasing, day by day. Formerly when the Govardhanagiri was raised aloft by the little boy, the gopees and gopaalas realised that Krishna was the Lord. Now, it is not one Govardhanagiri, a whole range will be lifted, you will see! Have patience, have faith. Tomorrow morning, I shall give every one of you the Namaskaaram blessing that you missed today.

Gurupournami Day, 6-7-1963

To discover one's reality and to dwell in that Divine peace, one need not give up the world and take to asceticism.

16. Protection of the devotees

YESTERDAY, when I came into the Hall, I could see the agony you all felt. That was because you identified Me with this body, that was having the illness. If you had known My truth, you would not have been sad; in fact, if you had known your Truth, that would be enough. The illness came and went; I was its master, throughout. One day, when it reached its climax, I was watching its behaviour and directing it to finish its Dharma. For I had taken it on Myself and so, I must allow it to do its Dharma! All kinds of silly stories were circulated when I was ill! Some people feared that when I went to the South recently, some black magic was inflicted upon Me and that the stroke was the consequence. Let Me tell you that nothing evil can affect Me.

Nothing can harm Me. I am the Master, the Shakthi (Power) that overpowers everything else.

I knew that short explanation: some people were saying that I was in Mounam or Samaadhi (silence or a state of concentration in Yoga). Now why should I keep the vow of silence? If I am silent, how can I carry out My Task of reforming you and making you all realise the aim of life?

And, why should I seek Samaadhi, I who am the Aanandhaswaruupa, the Premaswaruupa (Embodiment of Bliss and of Love) Myself. It is the wavering doubter, the ignorance dabbler, who will lend his ear to such talk. The true bhaktha will discard all such news. For the bhakthas here, the 8 days were days of intense thapas; they had no other thought than of Swaami.

To think low or mean is also egoism

Once, Krishna too pretended to be suffering from headache, intense, unbearable headache! He acted that role quite as realistically, as I did last week. He wound warm clothes around His head, rolled restlessly in bed. His eyes were red and He was in evident distress. The face too appeared swollen and pale. Rukmini, Sathyabhaama and the other queens rushed about with all kinds of remedies and palliatives. But they were ineffective. At last, they consulted Naaradha and he went into the sick room to consult Krishna Himself and find out which drug would cure Him.

Krishna directed him to bring---What do you think the drug was?---the dust of the feet of a true Bhaktha! In a trice, Naaradha manifested himself in the presence of some celebrated bhakthas of the Lord; but, they were too humble to offer the dust of their feet to be used by their Lord as a drug!

That Is also a kind of egoism. "I am low, mean, small, useless, poor, sinful, inferior"---such feelings also are egoistic; when the ego goes, you do not feel either superior or inferior. No one would give the dust wanted by the Lord; they were too worthless, they declared. Naaradha came back disappointed to the sickbed. Then, Krishna asked him, "Did you try Brindhaavana where the Gopees live?" The Queens laughed at the suggestion and even Naaradha asked in dismay, "What do they know of bhakthi (devotion)?" Still, the sage had to hurry thither.

Do karma which is approved by higher wisdom

When the gopees heard Krishna was ill and that the dust of their feet might cure Him, without a second thought they shook the dust off their feet and filled his hands with the same. By the time Naaradha reached Dhwaaraka, the head-ache had gone. It was just a five-day drama, to teach that self-condemnation is also egoism and that the Lord's command must be obeyed without demur, by all Bhakthas.

When I said that I had taken on the illness that was destined for some one who could not have suffered it or survived it, many of you felt, "Why should Swami, for the sake of a single person, plunge so many of us in grief?" Well! Did not Raama proceed to the forest though all Ayodhya wept? My Dharma of Bhaktharakshana (protection of devotees) must be carried out; the Dharma of the disease must also be worked out. Krishna could have stopped the rains, however powerful Indhra was; but, Indhra had to do his Dharma and by lifting Govardhanagiri to protect the cows and cowherds, Krishna manifested His Divinity!

In this case also, it is the same Leela (Divine sportive act). Using the chance to demonstrate to a doubting world the Divinity inherent in this Human Form. I told you yesterday that even this lucky bhaktha was just an instrument to work out the promise made in the past to the Sage Bharadhwaaja; it served to announce My real Nature to you all. You are indeed fortunate that you could witness on the sacred Guru Pournami Day this magnificent proof of My Divinity.

Karma of a higher order leads to inaana

There is no Sathyam (Truth), without Shivam (Goodness); there is no Shivam, without Sundharam (Beauty). Truth alone can confer Mangalam (Auspiciousness) and Mangalam alone is the real beauty. Truth is beauty; Joy is beauty; falsehood and grief are ugly, because they are unnatural. Buddhi, chittham and hrudhayam (intellect, sub-conscious mind: land and heart)---these are the three centres in the individual where reside inaana, karma and bhakthi. The effulgence of Sathyam will reveal Shivam; do karma (action) which is approved by the higher wisdom, not karma which is born of ignorance. Then, all karma will be Shivam (auspicious, beneficial, blessed). The experience of that Shivam is what is called Sundharam; for it confers real Aanandha. That is my Reality. That is why My Life is named "Sathyam Shivam Sundharam."

Do karma based on inaana, the inaana that all is One. Let the karma be suffused with bhakthi; that is to say, humility, prema, karuna and ahimsa (love, compassion, non-violence). Let bhakthi be filled with inaana; otherwise, it will be as light as a balloon, which drifts along any current of air, or gust of wind. Mere inaana will make the heart dry; bhakthi makes it soft with sympathy and karma gives the hands something to do, something which will sanctify every one of the minutes that have fallen to your lot to live here.

This is why bhakthi is referred to as upaasana, dwelling near, feeling the Presence, sharing the sweetness of Divinity. The yearning for upaasana prompts you to go on pilgrimages, to construct and renovate temples, to consecrate images. The sixteen items of Upachaara (honouring) with which the Lord is worshipped satisfy the mind which craves for personal contact with the Supreme. All this is karma of a high order; they lead to inaana. First, you start with the idea, "I am in the Light;" then the feeling "the light is in me" becomes established. This leads to the conviction, "I am the Light." That is the supreme wisdom.

See yourself in all; love all as yourself. A dog caught in a room whose walls are mirrors sees in all the myriad reflections, not itself but rivals, competitors, other dogs which must be barked at. So, it tires itself out by jumping on this reflection and that, and when the images also jump, it becomes mad with fury. The wise man, however, sees himself everywhere and is at peace: he is happy that there are so many reflections of himself all around him. That is the attitude you must learn to possess, that will save you from needles bother.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 7-7-1963

17. Lakshya puuja

THOUGH there is no particular reason for this evening's gathering, Kompella Subbaraaya Shaasthy tried to discover one and he concluded his speech with a reference to the Varalakshmi Puuja that is generally done in Hindu homes today! This search for 'causes' is another of the delusions that pester man; he is out to seek the cause of every thing and in that confusion, he forgets to derive the full benefit of the result which is before him. Shaasthry quoted from the Soundharyalahari to explain the meaning of Shiva-Shakthi, probably moved by the incidents of the last Guru Pournami Day. Shiva-Shakthi is the conjunction of jada (insentient or inert) and chith (awareness), the conjunction of the wire with the current, which activates all the instruments---fan, stove, bulb and radio. Shiva-Shakthi is in all, not only in Me; there is only the difference in power and capacity to manifest. The fire-fly has some power of illumination; it also emits light. We have oil lamp, the electric bulb, the petromax lamp, the Moon, the Sun--all emanate light; that is the common quality. Like that, both good and evil have the right to exist. The evil has to be used for the purpose for which it is suited. The skin of the orange is not sweet; but it helps to protect the sweetness within. The bitter green skin of the unripe orange protects the fruits during the ripening period. The skin too gradually takes on some of the sweetness and flavour of the ripening orange; so too, evil has to be slowly transformed into good by the subtle influence of association. Purpose and rationale of Nature around us The indhriyas may be used for the purpose of increasing spiritual Aanandham (bliss). When fruit-juice is poured into a cup, the cup does not know its taste; if you hold it in the palm, you do not get the taste. You have to drink it with the straw, the senses; then buddhi (intellect); then the tongue experiences the sweetness. The fruit juice is prakrithi (the Nature) around us. Taste its sweetness, namely, the Divinity that is immanent in it; that is the purpose and rationale. Prakrithi is just the leela of the Lord, set before you so that you may become aware of his Glory, His splendour. If the mind obeys the dictates of buddhi, then, the individual gains. If the orders from Delhi are obeyed by every State, then the country gains in strength and unity. But, if the mind becomes the slave of the senses, then woe be to the individual. When the mind thus follows the outwardbound senses and forgets the Reality, when the individual revels in the dream-world of false fantasy, this Shivathaayi (Divine mother) pats the child and wakes it. There is then no more need to tell them anything else. When awake, the truth will stand revealed. Your right is to realize Vishwaswaruupa (cosmic nature); so, don't play about forever in the dehabhaava (thought of the body), the consciousness that you are just this five-foot body; transcend the attachment to the family, the home, the village, the community, the district, the state, the nation. You must acquire not the independence denoted by the political fact of Swaraajya, but the freedom of the spirit called Swaraajya (dominion over oneself). All different conceptions of God are valid The cry of equality now being used as a slogan is a vain and meaningless cry; for, how can men, inheriting a multiplicity of impulses, skills, quail-ties, tendencies, attitudes, and even diseases from their ancestors and from their past be all of the same stamp? And in spite of all this advertisement for the supposed equality, you find more misunderstandings and factions now than at any previous period of history. Those who promote inequality are those who most loudly proclaim this modern doctrine of equality. Each person has a different conception of God and of goodness, according to his upbringing and the state of purification of his impulses. All such conceptions are valid; when water is let into the fields, you will find sheets of different shapes---circular, rectangular, oval, square, according to the shape of the fields. The fertility or the quantity of the crops harvested do not vary according to the geometrical correctness of the shapes. How far, how fast you have established attachment to the Lord, that is the test. The rest does not matter. Bhagavath prema (steady Love of the Lord) is like a mosquito curtain; it will keep out the disease-carrying moha and madha (delusion and pride), kaama and krodha (lust and anger), lobha and maathsarya (greed and jealousy). Develop faith, so that you may love without doubt. The "illness" that ended on Guru Pournami first shook the faith of many, but, later, confirmed the shaken faith. That is not as good as keeping faith unshaken, whatever may happen. How can the nose that falls down when you merely cough, be firm when you sneeze? Shankara harmonised the various schools and sects I had to do My Dharma (divine duty), and every act of Mine has its significance, which you cannot understand. You are in the dark and so, you fear more. You cannot notice the heaps of earth and the pits on the road. You cannot even know that the road is smooth and fine. There is no fault or partiality in creation--be confirmed in that. Then you will no more waver in your faith. If God's Creation itself was faulty, all would have suffered equally! Now, each person has a different version to give, if you ask him whether he is happy and why. The same person speaks differently at different times about the acts of the Lord. So, the fault lies in you, the excellence that you praise is in you. You see yourself in the outside world; what you like or dislike is your own self! Wealth accrues by fair means as well as foul Shankaraachaarya declared, "Brahma Sathyam; Jagath mithya"--- Brahman alone is Real; the world is false. But he did not therefore discard the world as beneath notice. He continued the work of Kumarila Bhatta, harmonised the various schools and sects of those days, established Mutts (Missions) for the propagation of the Adhwaitha (non-dual) doctrine in the four corners of India, Bhadhrinath, Sringeri, Puri and Dwaaraka and then left. "Brahma Sathyam, Jagath mithya" is the essence of the Shruthis (holy scriptures). That truth can be cognised by minds trained through Dwaitic (dualistic) worship of the personal God, and Visishtadhwaitik emphasis of the jeevi as the limb of the Absolute. One batch of students after while should be passing out of a college while batch after batch is joining the first year class. So too more and more people must take up Bhakthi-Karma (devotional activity) and slowly ascend to the stage of full Inaana (knowledge of the Supreme); then only can humanity achieve the Goal. With this idea Shankara established the Mutts. A man lost in the jungle was asked to move on in a certain direction; then, after some time, he saw a village; now, that village did not emerge for his sake, just then. He saw what was already there, that is all. So also, Adhwaitha shows you the way to something that is already there, but which you did not recognise so far---namely, your being the unlimited, illimitable Brahman. Well; just a word about the Varalakshmi Vratam, which Subbaraaya Shaasthry mentioned. Let Me tell you frankly, I do not like this Lakshmi Puuja, which people do, expecting to grow rich and accumulate wealth. They even speak of Dhanalakshmi and have special Sthothrams (sacred prayers) to propitiate Her. Lakshmi (wealth) accrues by fair means as well as foul; money is earned by gambling, by various forms of deceit, by highway robbery itself, by high and low, by all and sundry. Worship Lakshya, I shall appreciate you! Keep the lakshya (the Goal) of expanding your love till it embraces all beings, till it sees every being as your own self---keep it ever steady before your mind's eye; then, Lakshmi will, of her own accord, favour you to the extent necessary for realising the Goal. Never doubt that. Never falter. Prashanthi Nilayam, 2-8-1963 Life is a battlefield, a Dharmak-sethra, where duties and desires are always in conflict. Smother the fiery fumes of desire, of hatred and anger that rise up in your hearts, it is sheer cowardice to yield to these enemies that turn you into beasts. When obstacles come, meet them with courage. They harden you, make you tough. Sathya Sai Baaba 18. The love of the gopees KOMPELLA Subbaraaya Shaasthry spoke about the coming on earth of the incarnation of Krishna and read extracts from the Bhaagavatha describing the antecedents of the birth. All of you enjoyed listening to him, though many of you are listening to the story for the hundredth time; the story of the Lord does not lose its sweetness when repeated, Inaana, yoga and karma (knowledge of Supreme Self, meditation and selfless action) are, each one of them, hard to go through, but like chutney, which is salt, chilly and tamarind in the right proportion ground to a paste, bhakthi which is inaana, yoga and karma in the correct proportion, is bound to be appetising to all tongues. The Grace of the Lord is a subject dear to every one. It is a subject that is within the grasp of all. The Lord also can be addressed by any Name that tastes sweet to your tongue or pictured in any form that appeals to your sense of wonder and awe. You can sing of Him as Muruga, Ganapathi, Shaaradha, Jesus, Maithreyi, Shakthi, or you can call on Allah or the Formless, or the Master of all Forms. It makes no difference at all. He is Sarvanaama and Sarvaswaruupa (all names and all forms). He is the beginning, the middle and the end; the basis, the substance and the source. So, any story that brings into your consciousness, His Glory, His Grace and His Beauty must perforce appeal to you. Every thought sets up a function, agitating all around Believe Me, all Vriththis (mental modes or functions) are A-nithya (impermanent). A vriththi is a circle, like the circle that emanates from the place where a stone falls into the still water of a lake. The water gets agitated and the circle affects the water up to the farthest end. Every thought acts like the stone on the stillness of the mind; it Sets up a Vriththi. It agitates all round. The Pravritthi maarga (path of attachment) multiplies these circular waves and seeks to create further and Wider agitations. But, the Nivritthi maarga (path of detachment) aims at Stilling the waters. No agitation at all. Preserve the calmness, even the level. Keep the agitating thoughts away.

Concentration on the Name and Form of Krishna tends to calm the waves of Vriththi. When

E.M. Forster came to India, he was for some time with the Thakore of Raikot and when he found the Thakore-engaged in dhyaanam (meditation) before the image of Raadha-Shyaam, he wondered at first what it was all for! The Thakore had no wants to fulfil. What could he pray for?

One day, he asked the Thakore, "Why?" He replied that Krishna was for him the embodiment of Prema, Soundharya and Aanandham (Love, Beauty and Bliss), and so, when he meditated on that Form he was filled with love, beauty and joy. The senses, intellect and emotions, all get purified and clarified by dwelling on the pure and the splendid.

Forster was induced to try the first steps and though he found it rather difficult at first, the thrill engendered by the strange calm egged him on to persist. He found dhyaanam, good and useful.

Krishna's pranks reveal His divine essence

Krishna was only a few weeks old, when a certain ascetic came into the house of Nandha; Yasodha was having the baby in her lap. Of course this is an incident not found in any book- I have Myself to tell you this. The maids ran in, for, they were afraid the child might start weeping at the sight of the uncouth individual. He walked in nevertheless, and Yasodha found that when he was sent away, the baby raised a cry; not when he was approaching! The Muni also announced himself as having come to see Krishna Paramaathma (Krishna, the Supreme Self), a name that was new to the entire family. No wonder, the baby cried when that distinguished visitor was asked to go! Devaki had been given the vision of Krishna being the Lord Himself, but, this Muni had discovered the arrival of the Avathaar, by the Grace of the Almighty. It was Baaba who had invited the Muni for His dharshan.

The replies that Krishna gave when the Gopees complained to His mother about His mischievous pranks and thefts of milk, butter, etc., also reveal, by the inner meaning they convey, the divine essence that He was.

"Why did you drink the milk from the pot she was carrying?."

"She was taking it to be offered to God, perhaps, God might have drunk it up."

"Where had you run away?"

"I was always with you, is it not?"

"Why do you hold that butter pot in your clasp?"

"So that others may not eat it!"

"Why do you put your hand into that butter pot?"

"I am looking for a lost calf."

These were the types of answers He taught them with. He was the Ancient One, in the new garb.

His words came from the beginning of Time.

Raadha's prema was pure without egoism

The Raadha-thathwam (principle) is also a deep, inscrutable one. She was ever in the contemplation of the Lord and His Glory. She too saw the child Krishna as the Divine manifestation, separate from the human form. Yasodha one day was searching for Krishna who had strayed away; she sought almost everywhere and at last, she went to the house of Raadha.

Raadha just closed her eyes and meditated on Krishna for a while and when she called "Krishna," Krishna was there. Then, Yasodha shed tears of joy. She said, "I love Krishna as a mother; I have a sense of egoism in me that He is my son and that I must save Him from harm and seek to give Him guidance and protection. Your prema is pure; it has no egoism prompting it."

The gopees had that one-pointed prema (love), unwavering, clear and pure. The relationship between the gopees and Krishna as depicted in the Bhaagavatha has been unfortunately judged by persons who have not regulated and controlled their Vriththis. This subject is beyond the comprehension of such people. Only Brahmachaarins (celibates) of the most ardent and ascetic type like Shukha Maharishi who described it to King Pareekshith and in recent years, Raamakrishna Paramahansa, can appreciate that relationship and pronounce upon its uniqueness. All the rest are apt to see in it only the reflection of their own failings and their own feelings. The language of samsaara (worldly life) is the only language they know; the regions of Thuriya---beyond the regions of wakefulness, dream and deep sleep--to which those experiences relate, are not within their reach. So, they drag the subject down to their own level and claim that they have mastered their mystery.

Every Godward step makes you shed all attachment

As a matter of fact, the Inner Eye, the Inner Senses are needed to grasp the meaning of this relationship. Oruganti has shown that it has eluded the grasp of most interpreters, for it is closely allied to the Adhwaithik experience of Nirvikalpa Samaadhi (the superconscious state where there is no mind) itself. The mind has to be the master, not the slave, of the senses, if the interpretation has to be just. Thoughts, wishes, deeds and feelings---all have to be purified of the desire for gain. Ahamkaara (egoism) itself must lose all its hold on the interpreter, as it did on the gopees.

Prema towards the Lord such as the gopees had, should make a man strong, not weak. In fact, the gopees were not weakened by their Love; they were rendered tough. Raamakrishna too exhorted his disciples, like Narendhranaath, to grow strong, with the cultivation of prema towards the Lord.

Every step taken towards the Lord makes you shed bit by bit all attachment to the world. How then could the gopees retain their physical awareness? Dhruva went into the forest to get from the Lord the boon of sitting on the lap of his father, a very ordinary wish of a plainly earthly type. But as he advanced in thapas, that wish disappeared from his mind and his mind was elevated to great spiritual heights. How can one who has tasted amritha (nectar) be eager to taste water? Or, crave for tamarind fruits after tasting kharijur (dates) and having it in his possession?

Every craving will be sublimated into the higher realms of pure consciousness, the moment one enters the spiritual field.

The gods came to the world as gopees

And then who are these gopees, according to the Bhaagavatha itself?. They are the demi-gods who wanted to share in the glory of the Avathaar and who came down to the world as witnesses and sharers ill the Divine leela (cosmic sport). They came for a purpose; they are not ordinary village folk, who could be dismissed as a crowd of voluptuous women. They saw in every gesture and gait, every word and phrase of Krishna the Divine, not the human at all. They had no occasion or chance to be agitated by a secular vriththi (thought wave); all vriththis were awakened by Divine promptings and urges. Like the magnifying glass which catches the rays of the Sun and directs them all to one spot, thus concentrating the heat on one point and helping it to ignite, the hearts of the gopees collected all the vriththis and concentrated them and caused the illumination and the flame. The flame burnt all dross; the illumination revealed the Truth. All other interpretations are to be laid at the door of either ignorance or scholasticism, the pompous pride of mere book learning, which scorns the exercise of discipline. Meaning of Krishna's theft of butter

Krishna is condemned as a thief who stole butter from the cowherd maidens; but, the butter represents the bhakti of the heart that is got after the process of churning. It is a question of a symbol being taken as literally true. He is Chiththachor (the stealer of hearts). The thief steals at night, in the darkness, without awakening the master; but, when this thief steals, the master awakens; He wakes him and tells him that He has come. The victim is left supremely happy and satisfied.

Every gopee had the highest type of bhakti in her heart. They saw only Krishna wherever they turned; they wore on their foreheads blue kumkum, in order to remind themselves of Krishna.

There were many husbands who protested against the colour of the kumkum, but they dared not wipe it off, lest harm should befall them and the sacrilege recoil on them alone. [Here Baaba who had filled his hand with petals of Mallika (jasmine) flowers pulled apart by Him from garlands given to Him, showered the petals from one palm to another and they fell in a cascade of blue gems. Even the gems they preferred were of this type, blue, like Krishna. He showed the astounded gathering the gems He was referring to. Each gem had Krishna's form in it, beautifully clear.]

Do not have pride in your attachment to God

There was a gopee named Suguna. One day, when Krishna was with Sathyabhaama, He pretended to have severe stomach ache and in spite of all the remedies that she tried she could not afford relief. Of course, it was all acting, superb acting such as the paralytic stroke I had for a week previous to Guru Pournami recently! Even Rukmini was not admitted into the house by her to inquire about Krishna's health. But, Rukmini found Suguna pining outside the door in great agony at the illness of the Lord. She gave her the articles and asked her to go in. Krishna welcomed Suguna and made her sit at His Feet and ate the fruits she had picked up from Sathyabhaama's own garden and suddenly, the ache had gone. It was her agony at the Lord's condition, her simple sincere devotion that was so effective.

There should be no artificiality in your attachment to the Lord, no affectation, no pride, no egoism left, to soil the freshness of the flower you offer.

Sathyabhaama protested when Krishna accepted the fruits, for, Krishna had brushed them aside as tasteless when she had herself offered them as the precious product of her assiduous gardening effort. They were tasteless, since her pride had entered into them now. When the simple rustic gopee picked them from the ground and saturated them with her devotion, they became tasty and attractive for the Lord, who cares for the bhaava (inner feeling), not the baahya (outer show)!

The only prema that will not allow pride and envy to interfere with its purity is prema towards

God. I know that many of you, who know that I have been taking only a cup of buttermilk daily for the last two months, are genuinely grief-stricken, though I have been talking to you that no work of Mine has been stopped or delayed as a result of what they call My "reduced intake of food;" that is a sign of their prema but really, I live on your Aanandham, not on this material food at all. I wish that you realised this and stopped worrying or weeping.

Prashanthi Nilayam, Krishna Janmaashtami, 12-8-1963

Remember always that it is easy to do what is pleasant; but it is difficult to be engaged in what is beneficial. Not all that is pleasant is profitable.

Success comes to those who give up the path strewn with roses, and brave the hammer-blows and sword-thrusts of the path fraught with danger.

19. Vamsi Kuni

HERE was an occasion when Krishna laid His flute aside and declared that He would not play on it again. It is a long story, not found in books; I alone must tell you about it, for it is only the Person who has experienced it that can describe it, A bride called Neeraja came to Gokulam as the daughter-in-law of a Gopa family. Her husband and parents-in-law warned her against Krishna and His pranks and threatened her, on pain of dire punishment, to keep away from Him and to avoid Him by every possible means.

It was Govardhana puuja (worship) day and all the gopas and gopikas had to go beyond the village limits to circumambulate and worship the Govardhan Hill, a festival they celebrated every year. Neeraja too went with the others and in spite of the severest warning, she peeped into a crowd of enthusiastic gopees watching the dance of Raadha with Krishna, in a flower bower near the Hill. She was so captivated by the Divine Presence that she was no longer the same person.

Another day, while on the Yamuna bank, she saw Krishna fashioning a Flute from a reed taken out of vamsi kuni (bamboo bower) and she heard Him play! Oh, it was overwhelmingly ecstatic!

It was a call to transcend the material bonds to free oneself from the trammels of earthly endeavours. Neeraja did not care for any one now. She became God-mad. In fact, she was the first to hold the reins of Akrura's chariot when he was taking Krishna to Mathura away from Gokulam, and try to push the vehicle back!

Krishna responds to the call of yearning

Well; she was driven out of her house by the mother-in-law for that.

She was an outcast. The whole village rose up against her; she spent her days in the vamsi kuni, her whole mind fixed on the Lord whom she had installed there. Years passed. Nandha,

world. She was now 52 years old. One day, she prayed desperately to Krishna: I can no longer bear this forlorn life. My eyes have gone dry, they have no more tears to keep this Love, green.

My heart too is fast turning a wasteland. Come, O Lord, come and save me, take me unto yourself. Krishna heard the prayer.

He responded to her yearning and called her by name, so sweetly that the very Voice filled her with new life. The vamsi kuni was fragrant with Divine glory. Krishna came near and took Neeraja's palm In His Hand. "What do you desire?" asked He. She asked "What is the purpose of life?" "To merge In God." "Well let me merge in You...but, before that, before my Prema merges in yours, let me hear you play on that flute for a short while." Krishna smiled and gave the excuse that He had not brought His flute. But, seeing Neeraja's yearning, He plucked a reed from the vamsi kuni and broke it right and in a trice converted it into a flute. With Neeraja on his lap, Krishna played so melodiously on the Flute that the entire Gokula and even the whole world, was bathed in ecstatic joy. When He stopped, Neeraja had attained final beatitude and was no longer a limited individual gopee separate from Him.

Krishna laid aside His flute and said, He will not play on it again. That is the story of one gopee; the story of every gopee will be interesting, each in its own way, for they were all so transmuted by the Bhakthi they bore towards the Lord. The gopees were declared by Naaradha in the Bhakthi Suuthras (aphorisms on devotion) to be the greatest among the bhakthas (devotees).

Gokulaashtami day, 12-8-1963

In your daily affairs, do not create factions, or revel in hatred. See the good in others and the faults in yourselves. Revere others as having God installed in them; revere yourself also as the seat of God. Make your heart pure so He can reside therein.

20. Su-dharshana

LAST evening, when you heard about the Krishnaavathaara (Incarnation as Krishna), your hearts were filled with joy, which overflowed through the eyes, as I could see. Your minds too were purified by that experience. The Avathaara had, come in order to guard the world and to strengthen dharma (righteousness) as the means of guarding it. Books that contain the Lord's words and great men who know them declare that the Lord assume HumanForm in order to carry out these purposes. The story of Kuchela tells how one has to meditate on Him to worship Him and to honour Him. Kuchela knew what exactly had to be given to the Lord; the Lord cares for the feeling that accompanies the gift, the attitude with which the offering is made; He is not moved by the quantity or the cost. Dhroupadhi offered a tiny piece of leaf sticking to the side of the vessel in which she had cooked the meal and the Lord was so fully fed that He said. He was freed from all hunger. Rukmini placed just, a Single Thulasi (basil) leaf on the scale, but, since she had saturated it 'with her devotion, it weighed as much as Krishna Himself. Kuchela took a little "beaten rice" and the Lord ate it with relish and was highly pleased at the offering so full of bhakthi.

Have the goal of Saavyuiya always in View

A piece of paper that is white tough and clean, is not as valuable as another piece of equal size, which though Soiled and dirty, has upon it the imprint of the Reserve Bank making it a hundredrupee note. The imprint of bhakthi makes the "beaten rice" precious. Give the Lord the fruit, prema, that grows on the tree of life. Develop the illumination of prema and the bats of grief, envy and egoism will fly away into the darkness.

You must have the goal of Saavyuiya (merging in the Absolute) always in view; do not give it up or forget it. Be like the river that flows slowly to tile sea. A person who has purchased a ticket to Calcutta from Madras, because that is the place he wants to reach, Will not halt at any other place on the journey; lie has the destination always in view. Of course, he may be interested in the sights and scenes on the way; he might get down here and there for refreshments but, he will not seek a home anywhere, in between Saalokyo, Saameepya, Saaruupya (being in the same place, nearness to the master and likeness of the Form of Master) may come in between; in fact, they do. But, you should not be satisfied with those stages. They are intermediate stations, remember. You have to reach each and travel beyond.

In this Kuchela episode, the wife of Kuchela plays a more important role than Kuchela himself

She has much more bhakthi; in fact, women are more devotional than men. They can master their minds better. It was her maternal love that prompted her to send Kuchela to the Lord so that her children might get a full meal. She had faith in the Lord. Kuchela hesitated and argued that Krishna might not recognise him or remember him or invite him in or accept his homage.

Fear of God should be absent in a genuine bhaktha

Kuchela is described in the Bhaagavatha as constantly engaged in the meditation on God. But, then, how can his doubt be explained? She urged him to give up all doubt and proceed at least as far as the gate of the Palace of Krishna. She was certain that Krishna would call him in, if he took at least that little trouble. Of course, fire warms all, but one has to go near it, is it not?

Staying away, you cannot complain that the fire is not warming you. Kuchela was so nervous that he could be persuaded to go only up to tile gate.

Once it was decided that Kuchela would go, she took from the place where she had hidden it for a rainy day, a quantity of paddy, just a handful; she put it in boiling water, took it out and dried it and, then, frying it over the fire, she pounded it with a pestle to prepare the "beaten rice" that Kuchela said was Krishna's favourite food, while at school. Thai was tied to a corner of the cloth worn over the body and he moved on, his fear Increasing at every step. Such fear should be absent in the genuine bhaktha. He must approach the Lord as of right and earn the Grace that is his clue.

Of course, the Lord showers his mercy on the Aartha (distressed person) and the Artharthi (one who longs for wealth), as well as on the jiinaasu (seeker of spiritual knowledge) and the jnaani

(liberated person). The arththa is the person who is ill and suffering; the arththaarthi is the poverty-stricken who seeks prosperity and fortune. So, Krishna called him in, with overwhelming joy, and reminded him of the happy days at school which they had spent together at the Guru's Feet, and even while Kuchela was squirming to hide the common-place offering tied to the corner of his tattered cloth, Krishna sought out the stuff and began eating it with great relish. Bhakthi had made it very tasty to the Lord. The Lord can transform poverty to wealth. It is related that Rukmini Devi held His hand when He took the third handful and the reason given usually by commentators is that she was afraid all the riches of the Lord would go over to Kuchela if a few more handfuls were taken in by the Lord! What a silly idea! As if the riches of the Lord are exhaustible, as if He would care if bhakthas carried all of it away, as if the Mother of the Universe is stingy in Her Gifts. This can never be true! The real cause for Her holding the hand of Krishna was- She claimed Her share of the offering of the devoted heart; She wanted a portion for Herself; it was Her right to have a share. Kuchela left Dhwaarakaa rather disappointed because he was not given any donation or promise of a donation. He was sad when he remembered his family and the starving children. He was lost in grief and so, he passed his own house without noticing that: it had undergone a great change and had become overnight a huge big mansion. His wife, who saw him, called him back and related how suddenly, happiness had been showered, upon them by Krishna's Grace. Sweeten your speech, sanctify your deeds Kuchela's saadhana Started that day! Until then, he was just a ritualist, going through the outward forms of the rites prescribed in the Shaasthras. When he realised how the Lord can, through His Mahima (miracle power), transform poverty to wealth, He decided to win the Grace of God for securing perpetual, undiminished Joy, that is to say, win Saavyujya. He got sudharshana, the vision of what is Good for him, And, in the midst of the treasures that now filled his residence, he lived that life of an ascetic, without any attachment. He knew that it was all a dream, the riches now and the poverty then. The emperor dreamt he was a beggar and wept when he was refused alms at one door and was overjoyed when at another door, he got a stomachful. He woke up and he was no longer poor; he was an Emperor. Even that is a dream, an illusion. Brahman alone is Sath (real); Prakrithi is A-sath (unreal). Be in this awareness always, that is the highest saadhana. Seek Sudharshanam (vision of the Divine). Make your speech madhuram (sweet), and your good deeds an arpanam (offering). This is the three-fold path. Become a child, lose your conceit and pride. When you are still in the region of the gunas, motivated by desire (whether for the good or for the grand or the mean), you have yourself to seek the mother; when you are free from the bonds of the gunas (the enticements of desire), the Mother Herself will hasten towards you and fondle you in her lap. Purify your vision, sweeten your speech, sanctify your deeds---that way lies liberation. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 2-9-1963 I do not accept from you flowers that fade, fruits that rot, coins that have no value beyond the national boundary. Give Me the lotus that blooms in your Maanasasarovara--the clear pellucid water of the lake---of Your inner consciousness; give Me the fruits of holiness and steady discipline. I am above all this worldly etiquette, which enjoins you to see elders with some fruit or flower in your hand. My world is the world of the spirit; there values are different. If you are happy with faith in God and fear of sin, that is enough "service," enough kainkaryam for Me. It pleases Me so. Sathya Sai Baba 21. Vishaya, the visha KALLURI Veerabhadhra Shaasthry has made Aanandha well up in every one of you by his clear and moving description of the incidents of the Bhaagavatha. His words were apt and sweet; his comments revealed the inner significance of the events; he made all partake personally in the life at Brindhaavan of the families of the cowherds during the time that Krishna was among them. Some persons feel intoxicated by the emotions or they get near mad, on account of the devotion they have. But such overpowering emotions have to be mastered. One has to transform bhakthi into inaana and become stronger thereby. Man's life is meaningful only because he can use it to see God. The goal of life is the final merging in the sea, God. You should not fill life with the world; that will make it a vanity fair, an insanity fair. Listen to all such things as will draw you towards the principle of Godhead; then, think it over in the silence; make it part of your consciousness. This process of manana (reflection) makes you a man; that is the test of man.

Sensory object is man's most deadly poison Veerabhadhra Shaasthry described the scene of Kaaliya mardhana (Krishna's dance on the head of the serpent). Well, Kaaliya is a huge big serpent, full of poison, rolling in death and destruction. He is the representative of man, rolling in sensory objects, poison so far as its effect on life is concerned. Vishaya (sensory object) is the most deadly visha (poison). When Krishna danced on the head of Kaaliya, (incidentally I might add, you should make your hearts as smooth and soft as the hood of the snake), the poison was all vomitted! And the serpent was subdued.
When God is revered, the world and all its poisonous fumes recede and you are restored to original health. Make the Name and Form of the Lord dance upon the hood of your heart.
Krishna had no vishaya-vaasana (attachment to sense objects) and so, He could plunge into the pool and call out to Kaaliya and jump on to his hood and trample on it and squeeze the poison out. If you are deep in the mire, you cannot pull out another who has fallen into it. Be on the bank; do not get caught. You are now struggling in the mire of samsaara (worldly life), the slithery mud of attachment. So, how can you trample on the snake?
You can save yourself only by calling on God, who is free from vishaya and who is on the bank.
Hold His hand and He will pull you on to hard ground.
Krishna never parted in those days from Balarama; but, that day, He came alone, without him He was wearing a necklace of green beads a nose-ring of pearl and in his right ear, a ring of pearls. He wore no shirt or coat just yellow silk round his waist and a kerchief wound round the head, or rather thrown carelessly round one end this way and another end that way! The peacock feather which is described by poets and sages, was not always worn.
It was struck up only off and on. Of course, peacocks abounded in Brindhaavan then and they are found in plenty even today. On his bare chest, there was a mole which could be clearly seen, an inevitable mark of all Avathaars, including the Sais.
Krishna had no objective desires Krishna saw the carcasses of animals which had died When they inhaled the poisoned air, near the Kaaliya pool; birds had fallen dead on the ground. Nothing green could survive in the neighbourhood. As soon as Krishna jumped into the pool to save the region from the serpent's havoc, his companions ran horne to bring the parents, so that they could intercede and stop the foolish pranks of their mischievous son. They were in great panic; only Raadha was calm and collected. She knew that for Him, it was a minute's fun, a moments sankalpa (resolve). He had no vishaya (objective desires) and so visha (poison) could not affect Him.

Even objective desires will be transmuted into higher spheres of purity when one approaches the Lord. Nothing against Dharma can stand the Presence of the Lord.
That fire will consume all impurities; and people forget that Krishna was just eleven years old, when He finally left Brindhaavan, the Scene of the Raasaleela, towards Madhura and from thence to Dhwaarak. The Bhaagavatha itself explicitly says that. But, it is ignored, because the minds of the people and the poets who want to see sensuality in the Raasaleela are vitiated by vishayavaasana (attachment to sense objects).
The boy, Dhruva, went to the forest to do thapas and get from the Lord a boon, so that his father might treat him as lovingly as he did his half-brother. But, as he progressed in saadhana, that wish was forgotten and more lofty ones came to occupy its place The Lord once He enters the mind will rid it of all evil Raam (God) and kaam (desire) cannot coexist, Lord and lust cannot be together. How then could the gopees have any body-consciousness, when they adored Krishna?
The Lord never does anything without purpose Krishna had already :announced His Glory to the cowherd maidens by such divine miracles, as the uplifting of the mountain Govardhanagiri. He had proved Himself superior to Indhra, Brahma and Varuna. He had manifested the Universe in His mouth and showed that He had come on a Divine Mission to destroy the wicked and save the good There is no loukikam (worldliness) in their behaviour; it is all aloukikam (other worldly).
The Lord never speaks a word without relevance or significance; never does anything without appropriateness or purpose. Garuda is the symbol of karma with the two wings of shraddha (faith) and bhakthi (devotion), the bird on which the Lord will take His seat, the hridhaya vihanga (the heart as the bird). Raadha is Prakrithi (Nature), known as dharaa (Universe), which helps you to think about the aadhaara (support), in a regular dhaara (continuous flow).
The incident of the rope is another instance. Krishna felt that it was time to reveal His Truth and so, just as He showed all Creation in His mouth when His mother asked Him to show her His tongue, when she suspected He had eaten sand, He made even the longest rope too short to bind

Him. It became the talk of the place and every one felt he had all the 14 worlds in Him!

Know the secret passage to the heart of the Lord Avathaars choose the time and the mode of announcement of their advent and their Glory. Even in this avathaara, such miracles had to be done when I decided that the time was opportune for taking the people into My secret.

Let your mind ever dwell on Krishna of such stature. Sanctify every word and deed by filling it with prema of Krishna or whatever Name and Form you give to the Lord you love. The gold of which an anklet was made, can become the gold for a crown on the head of a temple image; only it has to be melted in the crucible and beaten into shape. The waters of the river might be dirty; but, the bhaktha who sips it with a manthra or a sthothra (sacred sound or prayer) on his lips, transmutes it into a sacred theertha (sanctified water). The body becomes healthy by exercise and work; the mind becomes healthy by Upaasana (devout contemplation) and Naamasmarana

(remembrance of the Divine), by regular, well-planned discipline, joyfully accepted and joyfully carried out.

Ahimsa (non-injury) is the rice; Arpitha (dedication) is the gram; praayaschittham (expiation) the raisins; paschaaththaapam (repentance) is the jaggery. Mix all these well with the ghee, sadhguna (virtue). That is the offering you should make to your Ishtadevatha (chosen deity), not the paltry stuff you make out of articles got for a paisa in the shops! The gopees knew this secret passage to the heart of the Lord and they realised Him quick and fast.

The Lord has no hatred in Him

You have heard that Krishna is Murali-Maadhava, and what exactly is the murali? You must be the murali (the flute). Let the breath of Krishna pass through you, making delightful music that melts the hearts. Surrender yourself to Him; become hollow, Vaasana-less, egoless, desireless; then, He will Himself come and pick you up caressingly and apply you---the flute---to His Lips and blow His sweet breath through you. Allow Him to play whatever song He likes.

The Lord is all prema. He has no dhwesa (hatred) in Him. Once at Shirdhi, a certain Dr. Pillai came with much suffering, and he prayed that he might be given ten births with the chance of dividing the pain into ten parts, so that he could suffer a little each time and pay off his kaarmic debt, without being hard put to it having to pay it all off in one! He was informed through Kaaka Saheb that he should fall at the feet of Baaba and as he did so, Baaba got the pain transferred to himself. For ten minutes, Baaba suffered, at the rate of one minute for each janma (birth), and thus he rid Dr. Pillai of his obligation. Baaba was quite normal, as soon as the 10 minutes were over.

Prema must be many-stranded in order to be strong and tough. A single strand, is too weak..

Have it many-stranded, one towards the mother, another towards the father, others strands towards husband, wife,, friend, son, daughter, etc. of course Prema. is all-embracing, it cannot be confined to one item and denied to, another. It is a current that flows over all Meditation on the Lord and His Prema will help you to tap it from the depths of your heart.

There is no living being without the spark of love; even a mad man loves something or somebody intensely. But, you must recognise this love as but a reflection of the Premaswaruupa (the embodiment of Love), that is your reality, of the God who is residing in your heart. Without that spring of Love that bubbles in your heart, you will not be prompted to love at all.

Recognise that spring, rely on it more and more, develop, its possibilities, try to irrigate the whole world with it, discard all touch of self from it, do not seek anything in return for it, from those to whom you extend it.

Sathya Sai Baaba

22. Thamo gunam, thapo gunam

ORUGANTI Narasimha Yogi has been explaining the Krishna-thathwam (principle) to you during the last three days. Pandiths (scholars) are the instruments through whom you can gather the key to the understanding of the mystery of God; they give you the gist of the Shaasthras in easy, simple style and interpret them in the light of whatever experience they have earned. You have to listen to them with shraddha and bhakthi (faith and devotion), in a mood of humility.

Arjuna told Krishna, "I came into this battlefield a dheera (brave person). I have now become, a dheena (a man in distress) for I am but an instrument in your hands." Arjuna was a Chinmaya muurthi (embodiment of divine consciousness), not as he imagined, a Mrinmaya muurthi (mud filed body). He was suffused with Divine Consciousness, not earthly inertia. Only, he was not aware of it. A man gets into the company he deserves, is it not? From the company, you can judge him. Well; Arjuna had the Lord Himself for company! Arjuna had the shraddha (faith) to concentrate on the Geetha teaching, even in the midst of the battlefield, on the eve of the fight that was to decide the fate of his family. He had bhakti enough to compel Krishna to show him the Vishwaruupa, the Viraatswaruupa (Universal Cosmic) itself! He had the humility to declare that he would much rather beg than kill his kith and kin; also to fall at the feet of Krishna when he could no longer see how he should proceed. Ajnaana is the disease afflicting the mankind. Develop these qualities and you too can get the company of the Lord. Krishna aroused the raajasik (passionate) qualities again in Arjuna, by prodding him and laughing at him for his cowardice and un-kshathriya (warrior) attitude of renunciation; thus, the Thaamasik qualities of sloth and ignorance were removed. Later, He transformed him into a saathwik (noble, pious) hero, fit for the dharma yuddha (war of righteousness) that he was to wage. Ishaavaasya Upanishath mentions that ajnaana (ignorance), is the greatest sin. The Kaarpanyadhosha that the Geetha mentions is another name for the same ajnaana. Geetha is the specific for this fell disease, which afflicts the majority of mankind. You must all study the Geetha daily. Read a few slokas and meditate on the meaning yourself; it will dawn on you in the silence of your heart. You need not read elaborate commentaries. Each word in the Geetha is a gem. No more do you need gemstones for the ear, the nose, and the neck; have the gem of the Geetha slokas in your heart, let them activate your intellect and your hands. Essential purpose of all Divine play is Bliss. So long as you are entangled in the sensual world you cannot distinguish the real from the unreal. But, you have to discover the real, through discrimination; there is no avoiding that responsibility; you have to do it, now or later. Power, status, wealth, authority---these are useless in this adventure. Alexander, during his campaigns in the Punjab, was anxious to see a celebrated sage; he went to the cave where the sage was, and expected that he would be received most thankfully and with demonstrations of welcome. But the sage simply asked him to move aside and go. He was not interested in the famous world-shaker, the Greek conqueror. Alexander was very angry; he threatened to kill the sage and drew his sword. But the sage said calmly, with a laugh "I do not die; I cannot die." That put some sense in Alexander and he put his sword back into the scabbard. Narasimha Yogi spoke of the leela (divine play) where Brahma (One of the Trinity) takes away the entire population of Brindhaavan including the cattle; Krishna creates out of His maayaashakthi (miracle power) identical men, women and children and identical cattle and they carry on undiscovered, quite normally, for one year! Now Brahma is not different from Vishnu or Krishna; they do not work contrary to each other; they both work out the same plan. This ruupa (form) is that ruupa; this upaadhi (disguise) and that upaadhi are both of the same Mahaa Shakthi (Divine Energy). The essential purpose of all this leela (divine play) is Aanandham (Divine Bliss). So, the One carries away when in one upaadhi called Brahma, and creates substitutes, when in another upaadhi called Krishna---all for the sake of the Aanandham it gives to the participants as well as to the onlookers and :those who listen to the story later. This is one way of announcing the Divinity of the Avathaara. Which has to be done so that men may listen and obey. The common man will sit up in wonder and his awe will ripen into faith; later, even if he salts discriminating and arguing pro and con, the Avathaar will only be glad, for the faith will thus be confirmed. Remove the feeling of inferiority that dwarfs you. The mind is ever unsteady; it has to be educated; its quicksilver quality has to be curbed; it is really Chaithanya-swaruupam (embodiment of Consciousness) and it will become steady only when it is merged in Chaithanya, that is, the Divine. There may be ice on a lake; the ice is jada (inert); but, move it all to one side, press it aside and the sahaja swaruupam (natural form) of water, the Chaithanya reveals itself, That Chaithanya has no joy or sorrow. It is ever in perfect equilibrium "I am That" I am not affected by either. Mine is Samaadhi---intelligence which is sama (steady), unaffected, unchanging Wisdom. Remove the cataract and the vision becomes clear. So too, remove the feeling of inferiority that dwarfs you now; feel that you are Aathma-swaruupa, Nithya-swaruupa, Aanandha-swaruupa (Absolute, Eternal and Blissful); then, every act of yours becomes a vajina (sacrifice), a puuja (ritual worship). The ear, the eye, the tongue, the feet all become tools for your uplift, not traps for your destruction. Transform thamogunam (quality of inertia) into thapogunam (quality of austerity) and save yourself. Know the best way of showing your gratitude. You are indeed lucky that such learned and experienced Pandiths share with you their scholarship and their joy. Practise mananam (contemplation) of what you hear; that is the best way of showing your gratitude. You have another advantage too. With your experience, you can understand the Bhaagavatham better. Swaami's nature is Vishwaprema (all-pervading Love), you have known, and Bhaagavatham is the story of Vishwaprema. I declare that I am in every one, in every being. So do not hate any one, or cavil at any one. Spread prema always, everywhere. That is the best way of revering Me. Do not seek to measure Me or evaluate Me. I am beyond your understanding. Pray or worship for your own satisfaction and contentment. But to say that I will respond only if I am called or that I will save only if I am thought of is wrong. Have you not heard the declaration. "Sarvathaah paani paadham?" You can hear My Footsteps, for, I walk with you, behind you, beside you. When you cry out in agony, "Don't you hear my heart's plaint? Have you become so stony-hearted?" My ear will be there to listen. Ask that I should protect you like the apple of the eye, My eye will be there to watch over you and guard you. Have dhoopam (incense) and scent-sticks for the puuja, and I smell them. I answer to whatever Name you use; I respond to whatever request you make with a pure heart and a sanctified motive. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 7-9-1963

23. You and I AS Subbaraaya Shaasthry said, the deha (body) has to be used to ascend the ladder of the three gunas, from thamas (inertia) to rajas (activism) and from rajas to sathwa (goodness), so that finny, you may get beyond the ladder into the heights above. The deha is the root of all the grief and all the disquiet which is now the lot of man Why? The deha was acquired by means of the good and bad that was done in the previous birth. They are called collectively, karma. Karma is caused by attachment and hatred, affection and disaffection. They are the products of sheer ignorance, ignorance of the unity of all creation including oneself. This ajnaana (ignorance) can be removed only by Su-jnaana (good knowledge). When a man suffers from stomach-ache, the best treatment will be salts or a hot water bag applied to the stomach, and not medicated collyrium for the eye! Ajnaana can be removed by acknowledging the universality of God and the merging of your individuality in the Universal. First practise the attitude of "Nenu neevaadu" ("I am yours," in Thelugu). Let the wave discover and acknowledge that it belongs to the sea. This first step is not as easy as it looks. The wave takes a long time to recognise that vast sea beneath it that gives it its existence. Its ego is so powerful that it will not permit it to be so humble, as to bend before the sea. The three steps to reach Non-duality "I am yours. You are the Prabhu (Master). I am a dhaasa (servant). You are sovereign, I am bound." This mental attitude will tame the ego. make every activity worth-while. This is the religious outlook named Maarjaala-kishora---the attitude of the kitten to its mother, mewing plaintively for succour and sustenance, removing all trace of the ego. The next step is "neevu naavaadu" ("You are mine" in Thelugu) where the wave de]hands /he support of the sea as of right. The Lord has to take the responsibility of guarding and guiding the individual. The individual is important, worthy to be saved, the Lord is bound to fulfil the need of the bhaktha. Suurdaas said, "You are mine; I will not leave you; I shall imprison you in my heart; you shall not escape." The next stage is. "Neevu nenu---("You are I" in Thelugu)- --I am but the image, You are the Reality. I have no separate individuality; there is no duality. all is One. Duality is but delusion. The first sign of spiritual life is vairaggyam (detachment). If you have no vairaggyam, you are illiterate so far as spiritual scholarship is concerned. Vairaggyam is the ABC of saadhana. (spiritual effort). Vairaggyam must become strong enough to make you discard the bondage of the senses. Just a few minutes of thought will convince any one of the hollowness of earthly riches or fame or happiness. When you are affluent, every one praises you; when the tank is full, hundreds of frogs croak all round. When the tank is dry, not a single one is there to address the tank.

 Seek the difficult road of God-realisation
 If a corpse had a few jewels on it, the proverb says, many will claim kinship with the dead person; if it has no valuables on it, not a single person will come forward to weep for it! Consider when you are adding to your bank account further and further sums of money whether you are not accumulating troubles for yourselves and your children, making it harder for your children to lead clean, comfortable and honourable lives. When you struggle to achieve paltry fame by devious means, remember who among crores of your countrymen are honoured today and for what? Don't you see that only those who gave up, renounced, sought the more difficult road of God-realisation, instead of the easier path of world-realisation, are honoured everywhere?
 Welcome all the blows of fate, all the misfortunes and miseries, as gold welcomes the crucible, the hammer and the anvil, in order to get shaped into a jewel; or as the cane welcomes the chopper, the crusher, the boiler, the pan, the sprayer, the dryer, so that its sweetness may be preserved and used as sugar by all. The Paandavas never demurred when disasters fell thick upon them. They were happy that they helped them to remember Krishna and call upon Him.
 Submit to the Will of God in a resigned way Bheeshma was in tears on the arrow-bed, when he was about to pass away. Arjuna asked him why and he replied, "I am shedding tears because the miseries undergone by the Paandavas pass through my mind." Then he said, "This is done in order to teach the Kaliyuga a lesson, never to seek power, position or pelf, but to submit to the Will of God, in a completely resigned way, so that you may be ever happy and unmoved."
 The Lord rushes towards the bhaktha (devotee) faster than the bhaktha rushes towards Him. If you take one step towards Him, He takes a hundred steps towards you! He will be more than a mother or father. He will foster you from within you, as He has saved and fostered so many saints who have placed faith in Him.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, 8-9-1963
 Anger and hatred can be used to ward off the evil that stalks the spiritual aspirant; be angry at tilings that hamper you, hate the habits the brutalise you. Cultivate inaana (supreme knowledge) and visualise the Lord in all things and activities. That makes this human birth worth-while.

Sathya Sai Baaba

24. Be Mahaaraanis !

PRINCIPAL Parvathamma has been yearning long for this day, when I could come to your College and speak to you. This College, as she said just now, has been in existence for eightyfive years and it has educated and sent into various fields of life thousands of women. Bhaarath is the land where Bha or Brahmavidhya (knowledge of Brahman) has attracted the rathi (attachment) of its people, where the people have a natural attraction towards spiritual saadhana, where the call of the Infinite is listened to with keenness. This keenness has now declined; it is a great misfortune; you must see that it is not lost. You should decide that it must be revived, at least in your own hearts.
 An intellect that is moved only by Truth and a Consciousness that will not tolerate the impurity of meanness or vice---these two are the pre-requisites for the fulfilment of that ideal. This is the aasthi (wealth) that will make a person an Aasthika (believer in God)! The intellect must investigate, as far as it can, the fundamental problem, why this birth, whither this life, whence this adventure, what the effect of human actions is on this life and on future lives, etc.
 Consciousness must dive deep into the Divinity that underlies it. Have faith in your own essential Divinity
 The education that does not confer vinaya and viveka (modesty and wisdom) is sheer waste of precious time; whatever else you learn or do not learn, equip yourself with the strength that is necessary to be virtuous, to resist temptation and the lures of the objective world. Viveka is not the cleverness that is given inordinate value today, but, the capacity to see things in their proper proportion, to evaluate the temporary and the lasting, the particular and the universal, the shallow and the deep. You must also have the attitude of reverence towards the past, the elders who are the repositories of the saintly spiritual wisdom anti experience which you have to acquire.
 Have also Faith---faith in your own essential Divinity, faith in the higher values attainable by earnest practice and the exercise of vairaagya (detachment). Life becomes sweeter, with a little dose of denial too; if you get all your desires, it begins to cloy. Deny yourselves many of the things your mind runs after and you will find that you become tough enough to bear both good fortune and bad.

Now, people are apt to go by the appearance, rather, than the reality of things. There was a man once, who was such an ardent devotee of Ganesha that he used up all his riches to make golden images of that God as well as of the Mouse which is His vehicle, besides an umbrella, a seat, and other appurtenances, all of gold. Later he fell on evil days and so he had to sell all these loved things. The merchant who offered to purchase them started weighing each item and declaring the price it would fetch. When he said that the Ganesha would fetch as much as the mouse, for both were of equal weight, the man got enraged and complained that he was being let down. Ganesha must fetch more than the mouse! That was because he forgot the reality and attached value to the appearance, Form and the Name, and not to the substance. Education is not for mere living. If value is given to the office that a man holds, which is but temporary, as soon as he retires and starts sitting on a bench in the Laal Bagh, people will stop recognising and saluting him! The schooling that gives only the outer polish is just a waste of opportunity. Education is not for mere living; it is for life, a fuller life, a more meaningful, a more worthwhile life. There is no harm if it is also for a gainful employment; but, the educated must be aware that existence is not all, that gainful employment is not all. Again, education is not for developing the faculty of argument, criticism, or winning a polemic victory over your opponents or exhibiting your mastery over language or logic. That study is the best which teaches you to conquer this cycle of birth and death, which gives you the mental equipoise that will not be affected by the prospect of death, that will not be disturbed by the blessings or blows of fate. That study begins where this study of yours ends. When this material world is studied and analysed, you realise that it is just a conglomeration of good and bad and you aspire for something beyond this duality. The light will dawn on you, only after you have acquired Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema. The root cause is that the basic thing is not known or experienced. How then can lasting peace be got? Joy and grief are not brought about by others. When the doctor said, apply this ointment at the place where the scorpion stung your son, the fond father asked the son, "Where did the scorpion sting?." The boy replied, "in that corner" and the father applied the ointment to that spot on the floor! How can the pain disappear? Take the lamp to the place where the darkness is. Joy and grief are not brought about by others, they are emanations from within you. So, cure yourself, do not try to put the blame on others and start plans to cure them. You carry piles of books up and down, from your rooms to college and back; you know more about questions than about the answers. You can learn more by observation and meditation than by conning over the pages of books. The really valuable things, you can learn from the Vedhas and the Upanishads and religious scriptures. A Pandith engaged a boat to take him across the flooded Godhaavari. When the journey over the river started, he began a lively conversation with the boatman. He asked the boatman whether he had any schooling and when the reply came that he had none he said sadly, "Alas! A quarter of your life has gone to waste. It is as if you have drowned those years in the Godhaavari." The Pandith asked the boatman whether he could tell him the time from his watch; the boatman confessed he did not have a watch nor cared to have one. The Pandith deplored and said, "Half your life has gone into the Godhaavari." His next question was about newspapers, did the boatman read any, what was his favourite paper? The boatman replied that he did not read any nor did he care to know the news. He had enough to worry about already. The Pandith declared forthright that three-quarters of the boatman's life had been liquidated. Be prepared for both joy and grief. Then the sky darkened with storm clouds and there was an imminent threat of rain. The boatman turned to the Pandith, it was his turn to put a question. He asked, "Can you swim?" and when the frightened passenger confessed he could not, the boatman said, "In that case, your entire life is now going to merge in the Godhaavari." This is the case of the educated in India today. They do not have the training that will help them in distress, or in dire need, to win back their mental poise. You are being carried along the flood of material pleasures and lures; how long can you drift like that? When you live in the world of desire, you must be prepared for both joy and grief. If you invite the Minister Bhoga (material enjoyment), you must be prepared for the visit along with him, of his Private Secretary Roga (illness)! Invite, on the other hand, the Minister Thyaaga (sacrifice), or his colleague Yoga (meditation) and you will be happy to receive their Private Secretary Bhoga (enjoyment), who plays a minor role in the presence of his master.

Develop a pure and strong character Real education is not the command over a number of languages. I remember an incident that happened some time ago. The wife of an educated gentleman used to get letters from a certain Lakshminaaraayana, whom the husband suspected to be a boy friend of her college days and when a telegram came one day asking the wife to meet Lakshminaaraayana at the railway station, he hid the message and waited for developments, full of anger at the stranger as well as at his own wife. Tragedy was averted when Lakshmi, the college friend rushed in, disappointed that she did not meet her at the station according to the telegram. It seems she had come to that very town, because her husband, Naaraayana, had been transferred to that place! Mere literacy is the source of such silly suspicions!

What is the worth of education if sheelam (virtuous conduct), is not found in those who claim to have been educated? Develop a pure and strong character. Remember most of you will get married and you will have the great responsibility of rearing up families, that is a Very valuable opportunity. Learn to adjust your likes and dislikes to those of others, learn the gentle art of sacrifice and service-keep in mind, when you react angrily against your mother-in-law, that a day will come When you too will have daughters-in-law! Try to appreciate their points off, view; they may have greater forethought, greater experience, greater sense of responsibility; they may know more about people and things than you, who are fresh entrants in their household.

The family of the husband which you enter with marriage is a good training ground; it is a saadhana-kshethra (field of spiritual practice). When you are found fault with, do not fly into a rage; examine your Own conduct and discover the faults in yourselves; self-examination is the first step to self-improvement and peace. Do not exaggerate the faults of others, but give them a wide margin and see them as small; exaggerate yours, see them big and strive to remove them fast. Take all faultfinders as your friends and well-wishers for they give you warning-signals in time.

Cultivate a sweet temper and sweet speech I find that now-a-days, the art of cynical argumentativeness has spread everywhere. This is a dangerous sign. On account of this, reverence has disappeared; respect for the teacher has also gone. Of course there are teachers who undermine their own dignity by such acts as begging cigarettes from their own students! There was a murderer who was sentenced in court, but, while arguing his defense, he pleaded, "I am the Aathma (Pure Self), as the Geetha declares. How can I kill or the deceased be killed?" The judge answered, "Do not worry. You will not die when you are hanged, nor can I get you executed. It is all Aathma, undying, unkilling, everywhere, in all."

Dharma (Law) is applied by such people only when it suits them; otherwise, they do not care for its commands.

Cultivate a sweet temper and sweet speech which is its natural consequence. Speak without anger or spite, without any artificiality or formality, straight from the heart. Then, you will be spreading joy and love among all. When your parents plead that they cannot afford to clothe you as you wish or give the various frills of finery that you crave for, do not get wild and quarrel with them. Be bold enough to resist temptation of yielding to the pressure of the crowd. Gunaposhana (nourishing the good qualities) is as important as deha-poshana (nourishing the body), remember.

Be silent partners, inspirers and teachers
You go about filling every bus, in attractive dresses, and carrying heaps of books, but, let Me tell you, the greatest beauty aid for women is sheelam (virtue). Attach importance to nishttha (discipline), and not to naashththa (breakfast). You can miss naashtha but not nishttha. Live a regulated disciplined life from now on; make it a habit, an armour that will protect you from harm.

Pray to God and recite His Name or meditate on His Glory for some fixed period of time everyday; you will find it amply rewarding. Don't say, "Let me have a taste of the reward and then, I shall start the saadhana." Practise, and the experience will follow, must follow.

This College is known as the Mahaaraani's Women's College. I want each of you to be a Mahaaraani (Queen) of your household. Mahaaraanis watch the world from the inner apartments of the palace, through interstices in the wall or enclosures; they can see, but they are safe from other eyes. That is the highest sthree-dharma (Women's duty), as laid down in the Shaasthras; you should not be seen or talked about; you must be away from public gaze; you must be silent invisible partners, inspirers and teachers. If you desire that others should honour you, you should honour them too. If others must serve you, serve them first; love begets love; trust engenders trust. Self-aggrandizement and selfishness bring disaster in their train. As a matter of fact, no joy can equal the joy of serving others. Be like this timepiece; show the correct time to all who desire to know, irrespective of the person who comes for the information. It has no likes and dislikes. A prayerful life will be a source of strength. People call you weak. Do not believe it. Having all these strong points in your favour, intelligence, discipline, spiritual capacity, consciousness of other's excellences, awareness of one's faults, eagerness to improve yourself, how can you be called "weak"? I was asked by your Principal to plant a champaka tree in the garden of this college and I did it gladly; but the thing which will give me greater pleasure is to plant the sapling of prayer in your hearts. A prayerful life will not yield to the fury of passion; it will be a source of strength and Co-operation. Decline in the discipline of Naamasmarana (constant thought of the Lord) has been the cause of the decline of this country. A single household now has ten factions and parties; those who cannot reform their own homes have started reforming the country and advising co-operation and harmonious living to others. The knowledge of the Aathma as the very basis of all beings is now forgotten and that is the cause of Ashaanthi---all the unrest, the confusion and the moral crisis of today. It is to awaken the sleeping, and communicate to them this Message that I have come. I bless that all of you may have lives full of joy and peace; I bless that this College may have many many more years of useful life, useful in helping the women of this land to realise themselves and help others to do so. Mahaaraani's Women's College, Mysore

The journey of every man is towards the cemetery; every day brings you nearer to the moment of death. So, do not delay the duty you must carry out for your own lasting good. Recognise that you are Shiva (God), before you become a shava (corpse); that will save you from further deaths. Sathya Sai Baba 25. A-naatha and Sa-naatha KANNADA is a sweet and soft language; but, I do not propose to speak in it now; I feel that you can follow Me even if I speak in Thelugu. I am happy to lay the Foundation Stone of this Home for Retarded Children and the Hostel and Workshops of the Mahila Makkala Koota for service is the best form of worship. I know this is an institution that does real service. It is a light house in the sea of mere worldly-mindedness. For all the higher forms of service, bhakthi is the very life-breath. Of the two, Preyas (worldly gain) and Shreyas (spiritual merit), Sunandhamma has chosen Shreyas; so, even when she is ridiculed, she carries on; even when she is praised, she does not accept the praise. If she must succeed in this venture, she must strengthen her faith in the Lord. That is enough. When the election season is on, you find people suddenly going round and round and falling at the feet of all and sundry, praying for votes. They could have fallen at the feet of the Lord, and He would have showered His Grace. If he is a godly person, full of humility and the spirit of service, he would have got the votes he needed, even without this humiliation of door-to-door soliciting. Faith is the very breath of victory. Be good, be serviceable, be useful, be kind, be God-fearing---the confidence of the people will be yours. I am sure Minister Kaanthi who is here will agree with Me when I say, that such a man has no need to beg for votes, people will themselves come forward and offer the votes at his feet. Faith, faith---that is the very breath of victory---faith in oneself, faith in the good work one has set upon; faith in its success, in spite of signs of failure. Attachment and hatred---these are the greatest enemies of progress in any scheme of social service, why, in any scheme of work. If the individual is deluded into believing that he is saving others, then woe be to him, for, there is no other at all. All are One, one man's sorrow is every one's sorrow. The fundamental flaw is the ignorance of man. If only he was wise, he would have known that all individuals are waves on the surface of the self-same ocean. Nishkaama karma (selfless action) is the ideal to be aimed at; now everything is measured by the result, the gain that accrues. Study too is for the salary one can get on the basis of the degree which is its goal. If you fan a person out of love, when you leave of, he cannot blame you but, when the paid servant who is the pankaahwaallah stops, the master takes him to task. In the first case, the act is done in the nishkaama way; there is no aim to seek gain, The desire for gain is like the poison fangs; when they are pulled out, the snake of karma is rendered harmless.

 Faith becomes steady through Saadhana The correct discipline to acquire the nishkaama (without selfish desire) attitude is dedication; and dedication is possible only when you have intense faith in God.
 That faith becomes steady through saadhana. Now, saadhana (spiritual effort) is like the snacks one eats; the main dishes are all of the world, from the world. The spiritual must be the major portion of the food.
 You must be aware of the danger of a fall, in time. Do not behave like the master of a house, who when his wife said, "I hear some noise; it is perhaps a thief" replied: "I know; do not interrupt my sleep." In a few minutes, she said, "He has entered the house," but, the man said, "I know." Later, she said, "He is opening the box"; still, the man said "I know" and kept quiet. After some time, she said, "He is running away" and the master said, as formerly, "I know." He did not pay any attention to the warnings of the theft; so, too, you do not heed the warning, but move forward to the calamity, with eyes open.
 Once you feel that all are waves on the self-same sea you will no longer use the word, A-naatha (helpless orphan), which I found in the report that was read. In one sense, there is no A-naatha at all; all are Sa-naatha (protected by a guardian), for the Lord takes care of all. He is the Pashupathi, pashu meaning individual jeevas (living beings). There is only one Purusha (Masculine) in creation; all the rest are sthree (feminine). There is no fool too; that is only a role played by that particular manifestation of the jnaana swaruupa, which is Paramaathma. Nagayya might play the role of Thyaagayya, in the film on Thyaagaraaja, but, all the while his Nagayya is the truth, the reality. The Thyaagayya is a temporary role in the drama of life.
 Journey to God is to be through good karma Remember this and do not tarry on your journey to God. You fill up the petrol tank with fuel for the journey that lies ahead, is it not! When you propose to keep the car in the garage for long, you do not fill the tank. Well, the body too is fed with fuel so that it may go on a journey; journey to God. That journey is through karma, good karma, Nishkaama karma. Such karma is called kaayaka (relating to the body), the exertion of the kaaya (body) for the liberation of the soul imprisoned therein.

 Not all the raindrops that fall from the sky manage to reach the sea. It is only those that flow into a flowing river that attain the goal of all the drops; for, they come from the sea and they yearn to reach their source.
 I find that the Sun has invaded this side of the pandhal; the hall is not big enough to provide shade for all of you. I cannot bear to see you suffering. I find one man has fainted there. Here, take this Vibhuuthi (sacred ash) to him, let him drink it in a glass of water. {He waved His right Hand once and created a quantity of Vibhuuthi as a token of His Grace). When I am leaving do not crowd around and fall at My Feet. Do the Namaskaaram (obeisance) in your hearts; that is better than crushing everybody and pushing forward. There are many old men, sick persons and children; so, be calm and patient. Why do a thing, which does not give you full satisfaction, nor gives Me satisfaction? Make Sai the resident of your heart; that gives you hai (happiness) and Me, joy!
Mysore City, Vaanivilaasapuram, 15-9-1963 You must tread the spiritual path with an uncontrollable urge to reach the Goal; you must cultivate the yearning for liberation from all this encumbrance.
 Remember that you have to dwell in a house built on four stout pillars: dharma, artha, kaama, and moksha (righteousness, wealth, desire and liberation); Dharma supporting artha, and moksha being the only kaama or desire.
 However much you may earn either wealth or strength, unless you tap the springs of aanandha (Supreme bliss) within you, you cannot have peace and lasting content.
Sathya Sai Baba
 26. Building or begging?
 I MYSELF asked Sunandamma to call you all here this evening, so that I can talk to you about the great piece of social work you are engaged in. I laid the Foundation Stone for your Institution this morning; I blessed the endeavour, because you are serving women and children, especially children who are mentally defective and physically handicapped. I understand you have the help of experts in psychology, who can understand the special problems of the underdeveloped children. So far so good.

As Trustees who have undertaken to help Sunandamma in this Mission of Mercy, I would advise you to start the construction of the rooms for the inmates and for the classes, first. The Prayer Hall can wait; the atmosphere of the place where such work is being done cannot be anything but a prayerful one. This is thapas (penance) that you are doing and the children and adults who watch you and your efforts do not require something more inspiring than that.

Discover a via media between ancient and modern Sunandhamma was telling Me that some of you want the buildings to be reminiscent of ancient Indian architecture, a kind of temple, in fact; while others prefer the latest style, plain utilisation and cheap, without elaborate decorative motifs. You cannot revive the Parnashaala (hut made of leaves, hermitage) now, in the 20th century; you have to discover a via media between the Sanaathana and the Nuuthana (the ancient and the modern).

Moreover, I want the Sanathana spirit in the heart; not in brick and mortar. When the children are all of this modern age, affected by its attraction and attitudes, how can the style of the building in which they dwell change their outlook? And what of the teachers? They are imbued with the passions and prejudices of the modern age. Change their hearts into Parnashaalas, full of the ideals and aspirations of the sages of this land, charged with simplicity and sincerity, moved by the urge to expand in love to all beings--- then, the style of the building does not matter. It is the architecture of the mind that matters. If the needs of the modern age require a change, change the non-essentials. Do not dilute the truth so much that it loses its genuineness.

If some one favours drinks of a blue colour or red, do not pour blue dye or red dye into the bottle; pour the drink into a blue or red glass, and offer it to him. That would be enough. So too, if one style of building is to be preferred, by all means, put up the structure; but do not change the essentials of the work to be done therein, or the outlook of the workers.

Patience and strenuous effort will be rewarded Hitha and Mitha (pleasant and moderate), these are the directions. Let it not be too garish, too ramshackle, too costly, too fragile. Take the middle course; that will yield maximum benefits.

The craving for sense objects cannot be given up fully, so transform it into an instrument for worship. Dedicate all your efforts to the Lord; accept all achievements and failures, as proofs of the Grace of the Lord. His Will decreed that they should so happen. Transform all the six passions into instruments for spiritual uplift. I know also that you are worried about funds for the completion of your plans. Sunandhamma even asked Me to show the way! Well, He who showed the way so long, will do so hereafter also. This will be completed; otherwise, I would not have laid the Foundation Stone. Good works never languish for want of funds; the Lord will come to their rescue. Only it may take some time; do not lose heart. The orange is quite bitter when it is green; but, time gradually sweetens it into a delicious fruit. Patience and strenuous effort will get rewarded. I must tell you, however, that for such good causes as this, you should not collect money in devious ways. Help should come from pious hearts, from well-earned money, from persons who know and appreciate the purpose for which they give. That is why I oppose all benefit shows, where you tempt people with a dance, or a drama or a film and collect money for your pet plan. I am also against lotteries, where the lure of getting a big prize, for which one does not do anything, a prize collected out of other people's earning, is used for the collection of funds.

Let each one give, out of the fullness of his heart, on his own initiative, whatever he can give gladly, after studying well the present work and the future possibilities of the institution. Your duty is only to inform; do not try even to persuade; begging for the sake of work which is inherently good is an insult to human nature; the man who asks and the man who is asked, both are demeaned.

I want to give you this courage and this confidence. Carry on in a spirit of humility and fortitude and you will succeed.

Meeting of the Trustees, Mysore City, 15-9-1963

All the joy you crave for, is in you; but, like a man who has vast riches in the iron chest, but, who has no idea where the key is, you suffer. With proper directions, dwelling upon them in the silence of meditation, it is possible to secure the key, open the chest and be rich in joy.

Sathya Sai Baba

27. Human and Divine actions

Many people consider all acts of worship, puuja, etc., as "His" and all acts of earning and spending as "Mine." But, this is a mistake. All acts are "His." There is no such distinction as Maanavakarma and Maadhavakarma (actions of man and God); all karma leads you towards Maadhava or away from Him. For example, you say that you fall ill, that you are in good health, etc. That is because you feel that the body is "you," whereas you are really only the Aathma, with the five sheaths which you have super-imposed on it. This is the result of the system of education now prevalent which teaches that the Aanandha one derives from the senses is all the Aanandha that one can get. It does not disclose to the individual the eternal source of Aanandha that he has within himself.

There is no training in the art of acquiring mental peace. No one is told the secret of attaining the state of equanimity, amidst the confusion of modern civilisation. Everyone is induced to float with the current that drags humanity down to fear, anxiety and despair. Life today is similar to the situation when the master of the house is restricted to a tasteless regimen, while the members of the family revel in a banquet. The senses revel without limit but the Aathma is ignored.

Modern education does not produce wise men

Modern education produces only "learned fools;" it does not produce wise men who can meet life calmly and bravely. Its products know how to fill themselves with information, device tools or handle them for the destruction of fellowmen or cater to the whims of the senses---but, they are helpless to meet the crisis of death, a crisis that is inevitable.

Hanumantha Rao of the I.A.S., who is the President of this Meeting said that, during the last 14 years, when he had not visited this place, many great developments have taken place, including this Hospital.

Some of you may ask why there should be a Hospital at all, here! Why should not Baaba cure diseases by an exercise of His Will? That is the question. Well, for one thing, this Hospital is not My only Hospital. Hanumantha Rao has a Hospital in Madras where disabled children are treated and trained to be useful and self-respecting individuals. That too is My Hospital. In fact, all hospitals everywhere are Mine. I visit them all. Why, all those who call out from their hearts for succour, in whatever language, from whatever clime, whether from hospitals or homes, are Mine.

Do not confine Me to these few acres round the Prashaanthi Nilayam. Wherever a person craving for Prashaanthi (perfect peace) lives and prays, there a Prashaanthi Nilayam exists.

Faith in Grace is not yet strong

You should remember another point. The Hospital serves to increase faith, to demonstrate Divinity and to remove doubt. That is also necessary, Besides, you have to mark time, in consonance with the song that is sung. There are many who are hungry for medical treatment and they are satisfied only if drugs are given and injections administered. Their faith in Grace is not yet strong. So, a Hospital is required for such anugraha (grace), that is the crucial gain. The hospitals can be closed, especially if the spiritual saadhana used for gaining the Anugraha results in simple lives, spent in contentment and undisturbed calm.

The King of Death does not bring a noose when he comes to drag people to his abode; the noose is made by the victim himself and he has it ready round his neck, awaiting the arrival of the end.

It is the Karma-paasa (noose resulting from action) which each manufactures and winds round himself that ultimately drags him away. Become aware of your reality and you will lose the sense of identification with the body. That will make you disease-free.

You will have perfect ease. This is quite easy, understanding that you are not the body. For, you are practising this truth every day for at least six hours, ever since birth! If that cannot teach you, I wonder which can.

Every day, when you sleep, where are you? Who are you? Your senses are in-operative, your intelligence is in abeyance: you mind creates a world of its own and after playing in it for sometime, it lapses into inactivity. That is sleep, the nearest you reach in your journey to Samaadhi (super-conscious state).

Each one of you can become Bhagavaan Live in the Aathma thathwam (true nature of Self); that will ensure Shaanthi. With the poison of raaga and dhwesa (attachment and hatred) inside you, how can you be pronounced healthy?. If you experience the Aathma thathwam, you become Bhagavaan (Divinity) Himself. That is why I do not address you as Bhakthulaaraa! You are not Bhaktaas (devotees); you are more than that-- -you ought to become Bhagavaan; each one of you can become Bhagavaan by merging your separate individual jeevas (souls), in the Ocean of the Universal Aathma.

Death comes swooping like the falcon on chicken feeding on the ground. The man who dies, prays to Me to receive him; the persons who weep at his departure, pray to Me to keep him alive.

I know both sides of the picture, the past and the present, the crime and the punishment, the achievement and the reward and so, I carry out what is just, though modified by Grace. I am not affected one way or the other, by the arrival into the world of some or the departure from it of some others. My nature is Nithya-aanandham (eternal Bliss). You can share in that Aanandham by following My instructions and practising what I say.

Shri Sathya Sai Hospital, Seventh Anniversary Festival, 18-10-1963 28. The day they got the light

I AM surprised that you read out a Welcome Address to Me and extolled Me as jnaana swaruupa, Prema swaruupa (embodiment of Supreme Knowledge and of Love), etc. I must tell you that I am no stranger and therefore need no welcome. I am no stranger anywhere, much less here, of all places where I took birth. I belong to you, I am very near to you. Besides, I do not like this praise, for praise places you at some distance, whereas I take delight in being with you, beside you, around you. No father likes his sons to praise him! No son approaches the father with a Welcome Address, in which his scholarship, wealth, strength, virtues are listed and extolled.

Kinship evokes kindliness; there is no need or chance for formal ceremonial behaviour.

Now, you have asked Me to switch on these street lights and you have mentioned that this is a supreme moment---for, the village is to be free from darkness and full of light, hereafter! Let Me tell you, this village is not getting light, today! it got the Light, the Day this Shakthi took birth in this place! For, what is this little light that illumines just a few yards around each pole when compared with the Light that illumines the heart and spreads joy and peace.

Light from Puttaparthi is widening over the world From that day, when this light appeared, you have been witnessing how the Light is widening over the country, attracting the attention of the entire world to this tiny hamlet nestling among these hills away from the flow of the turbid currents of civilisation.

Now, you have buses and lorries coming along the newly laid roads. Just today the decision has been made to improve the roads around this village to the standard of tarred roads; you have at the Prashanthi Nilayam an up-to-date Hospital, you have a fine school building for your children, and this and the neighbouring villages have the benefit of this very useful electric current, which you can now direct for various purposes at home as well as in the fields.

You gave Me this garland of flowers when I came; but, I would have been glad if you, every one of you, had become a fragrant flower, free from insect pests of vice and wickedness, strung on the thread of devotion to God. That means, you must be united and of one mind, free from hatred and spite, factionalism and greed. Villagers are being ruined everywhere by elements that promote faction, and sow the thorny seeds of hatred, in fields where useful crops have to be grown.

Here, many feel that 'you are not attending Bhajana or frequenting the 'Nilayam as much as they do. They say among themselves that the inhabitants of Puttaparthi, the village where Sathya ' Sai Baaba was born, have no Bhakthi! But, I know, that you are every moment thinking about Me, watching for Me, talking about Me, pointing Me out to visitors, expecting Me to return soon when I have gone out of this place, etc. If this is not smarana (constant remembrance), what is it?

Injurious attitude is being perpetuated You must have seen women carrying a number of water pots one over the other on their heads; they may have babies on their hips, and children which they lead along; but, all the while, their thought will be about the hearth in their kitchens and the food that is being cooked there for they are anxious that it should not be spoiled.

The strength-giving, peace-creating culture of Bhaarith has been submerged by the flashy, glittering ideals introduced from the West during centuries of foreign rule The attention of the people of this land is drawn from the heights, to the lowly needs of the senses and the stomach.

Even after Indians have regained the power to shape their own future, the situation has not improved, for the same injurious attitude is being perpetuated. The beliefs and practices of the past are condemned as superstitions by the inheritors of that very heritage! I won't agree with people who dismiss them as superstitions; for, they gave those who believed and acted according to the belief, the most precious treasure of Aanandha and Shaanthi.
They helped to pull out the poisonous fangs of karma, fangs which inject greed, egoism and hate.
They taught man to do karma (action) as a sacred duty and leave the result to Gods thus avoiding two evils- the evil of pride and the evil of frustration---pride that the act was a success, frustration when it did not succeed. It also contributed some positive good; the karma was done well, as well as the individual can execute it, for all karma was transformed into worship of the Supreme. Man was saved by this emphasis of Nishkaama Karma (Selfless action), from unending desire and inexplicable sorrow. Now like water, man flows ever downward, and at the least disappointment, he breaks into bits and drops.

Faith in the Divinity of man has to be restored Once again, that attitude must be implanted in Man. He has acted the role of clown or servant or an extra much too long; it is time he took on the role of a Hero for which he is destined, and equipped. So like the garland maker who selects flowers of various hues, sizes and fragrances for preparing a garland, the Prashaanthi Vidhwan-mahaasabha too has selected these Pandiths and prepared a Garland. The purpose of this Sabha is to remind every one of the role of the Hero he has to play. Of course, I am the sustainer of the flowers, not the garland maker! The heroism of the wise man has gone from this land; and the weakness of the ignorant has overwhelmed the people. This has to be corrected. Sloth has taken the place of earnestness; hesitation has halted courage. Even in other lands, the sense of values has to be restored and faith in the Divinity of Man has to be restored. That is the task for which I have come.
Even the Pandiths who have great scholarship have no happiness; the scriptures that they have mastered are designed to confer peace of mind, contentment and unshakable joy, but, the repositories of that scholarship are a very discontented group today. They have the umbrella in their hands, no doubt, but it does not protect them against rain or shine! So, even they have to be made aware of the excellence of the knowledge they are carrying, and its curative property.
Know thyself---not the Sun and Moon---is the specific for man's ills.
Act up to your professed declarations Watch the mind, just as you watch the cable through which the current flows. Do not establish contact with the mind; it is as bad as contacting the cable. Watch it from a distance; then only can you derive Aanandham; search for the cause of Ainaanam (ignorance) just where it resides Then you will find that the Mind in association with vishaya (sense objects) is the cause. Cut it off from the vision of vishaya and inaana (wisdom) dawns.

There was a person who proclaimed himself a Sthithaprajna (established in super-consciousness) and an adept in Yoga. He went into Samaadhi in a trice and sent his Kundalini Shakthi (inner cosmic energy) to the Brahmarandhra (crown of the head) ! Then he got himself buried in the river bed; but he rose after a few days and started asking for Cash contributions from onlookers!
It was a descent from the sublime to the ridiculous. You must guard against that. Be consistent; act up to your professed declarations. The members of the Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha have to share their learning and their experience and their joy with the people, that is their elementary duty. For this, they are not to receive any monetary benefits, for they are only doing their duty, increasing their own joy, sharing their own enthusiasm. I am sure this Sabha will move from victory to victory, for it is contributory to My Work. This huge auditorium was erected, would you believe it, in 15 days! It was all done by the Bhakthas; not a single cooly was employed. The Chithravathi river helped a good deal, for it supplied the sand with which the place was filled. No Government, no force of authority could have achieved this so soon; only devotion can inspire this consistent shraddha (firm faith). It is all the effect of Sankalpa (Will). The Sankalpa is there and so, the Mahaasabha also will carry on its great task, unhindered.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, 20-10-1963
The body is the cart and the mind is the horse that drags it. No food is given to the horse, which is really the more valuable of the two. Give the mind and its culture the importance it deserves; then only is life worth living.

29. Loka Kalyaanam
ONE meaning of Karma which is popularly accepted is that it is one's destiny, or fate, the inescapable "writing" on the brow, which has to work itself out. There is no escaping it. But people forget that it is not written by some other hand. It is all written by one's own hand. And the hand that wrote it can also wipe it off. The husk, with which the paddy is born, can be removed by effort; the Maayaa (worldly illusory power) which persuaded you to write all that destiny can be conquered in an instant and then, the entire page can be wiped away.
Men are spinning cocoons for themselves; they suffer because they are unable to come out of it into the world of light. They are like the monkeys caught by the wandering beggar, dancing at the end of the rope and begging paisa from those sitting round the ring. Shankara said that he would willingly offer the monkey (mind) to Shiva so that He may teach it tricks which please Him and use it for getting alms for Himself. That is to say,

Shankara proposed to fill his mind with thoughts of God, so that the monkey would be tamed and made to serve God's purpose. You too must make the mind the servant of God, not the slave of the senses.

Criterion to determine the Dharma of each person

You must have watched a bird sitting on a branch that waves in the wind. It is unafraid, because it has more confidence in its wings than in the branch; it knows that any moment, it can take to its wings and leave off the perch, the uncertain perch. The branch is prakrithi (objective world) and the wings are the anugraha (grace) of the Lord. Develop strength of wing and sit on any tree.

You won't come to harm. But, if you trust prakrithi and rely only upon the protection it gives, you fall.

Mullapoodi Naaraayana Shaasthri and Vaajapeyam Venkateshwara Avadhaani both spoke now of the difficulty of demarcating what exactly is dharma (duty) and what the criterion is to determine the dharma of each person. Well, the dharma that you have to follow is to be what you profess to be. This is an easy and intelligible test. If you feel and believe that you are a Brahmin, then you have to follow the dharma as laid down for a Brahmin. If you feel and are convinced that you are the Aathman, then your dharma is the Aathma dharma (divine-oriented duty). If you feel and are certain that you are the body, then, the Deha dharma (body-oriented duty) is the dharma for you.

But, every one must imbibe higher values and consider himself as Aathma and follow the Aathma dharma. That is the mission for which I have come. That is the work of the Vidhwanmahaasabha. Wherever the ants may be, sugar will be placed near the entrance leading to their colonies. All men are Mine; so the whole world has to be saved from the consequences of ignorance or limited knowledge. I will get all My people near Me, for they are Mine and I am theirs. Then I will start teaching and training them, until they become entirely ego-free.

Devotees seldom know what is good for them

For the last 25 years, it has all been sweetness, kindness, soft persuasion; hereafter, it will be different. I will drag them, place them on the table and operate. That is to say, I have no anger or hate; I have only Love. It is Love that prompts Me to save them, to open their eyes, before they get deeper into the morass.

The Organisation that was inaugurated yesterday will approach the people, those who are as yet ignorant of the great teachings of Vedha and Vedhaantha, who have not enough capacity to digest it and assimilate it into their system; so it will be given in small easily assimilable doses, with love and sympathy. Each one of those Pandiths will contribute some share to the eradication of Ajnaana. The watchword will be "Thamaso maa jyothir-gamaya," "Lead me from darkness to light"---the ancient Vedhic prayer. It will be lighting the lamp in village after village, lighting little lamps from these big lamps.

This work has to be done; but the rulers won't take it up, nor do the ruled ask that it be done.

Unless the child starts wailing, the mother will not feed it. But, this Mother is different. She knows that the child must be fed and when it is to be. The advent itself was according to My Sankalpa (Resolve); every step in this Avathaara is due to My own Sankalpa; not due to the prayer or petition of devotees. The devotees seldom know what is good for them.

Foster the Vedhas and ensure world prosperity

Since Brahmins are the custodians of the Vedhas and the Shaasthras, fostering the Brahmin will foster the Vedhas and the Shaasthras and ensure Loka Kalyaana (world prosperity). There are some who say that the Brahmin has monopolised the Vedhas and Shaasthras and that he is misusing that monopoly for his aggrandizement; it is said that the Vedha is a huge conspiracy by a clique of Brahmins for promoting the wealth of that community. This is very far from truth.

Look at all the rules and regulations, the prohibitions and denials which the Brahmin has to observe; they were all laid down for the Brahmin by Brahmins themselves. Eating, drinking, moving about, sleeping, conversing, working, giving, receiving, earning, spending---all the various activities of living are controlled by hundreds of restrictions. This does not convey the impression of a clique bent upon enjoying at the expense of the rest of the community.

Moreover, the regulated life of the Brahmin and the rites, vows, fasts, and Japam which he undertakes as part of his duty are intended to benefit the whole world, for securing Loka Kalyaanam. As a matter of fact, you must encourage more and more Brahmins to keep up the traditional way of regulated He. That is also one of the purposes of the Vidhwanmahaasabha. Goddess Bhavaani gave a sword to Shivaaji and sent him on Her work of restoring Dharma (righteousness). This Shiva-Shakthi is giving into the hands of these Pandiths the sword dhairyam (courage) and asking them to go forth in order to re-educate our people and remove their ajnaana. Shivaaji's sword was always used on behalf of Dharma only. Once, when Shivaaji with his army paid a visit to the Aashram of Samartha Raamadhaas, his soldiers invaded the field opposite and plucking the sugar cane, they ate off the entire crop. Besides, when the owner protested, they beat him off with the cane itself. Shivaaji heard about this and he not only punished the soldiers for the theft but, on the recommendation of his Guru, he made the land of the peasant tax free for all time! These Pandiths know the medicine for the Bhavaroga (worldly disease); learn it from them and begin taking it. Attend the meetings which they will address in the villages wherever your District Committee arranges. Accept whatever good they give. Become the soldiers of Prashaanthi, to drive away the Chinese from your hearts, those who are undermining your awareness of the Aathma. Honouring them is honouring Me; neglecting them, is neglecting the Vedhas and Shaasthras and it is as foolish as neglecting Me. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 21-10-1963

30. Purusha and Purushoththama MAN has known about everything else, except death. Why should a person die? Of what benefit is it to die? Why does he die? The answer is in order that he may not die again. He is born, so that he may not get born again. Having been born, man earns and acquires land, riches, materials, grain, articles of comfort and luxury, which he feels will give him happiness and which therefore become the objects of his struggle. But, the object of realising God is forgotten. You may ask: "Why should any one seek company, do good deeds, direct his mind towards good thoughts?" You are listening to Me and what do you get when you so listen? You agree that I am giving you Aanandham, is it not? Well, what do you give Me in return? Give Me the Aacharana (following, observing) of what I am telling you; practise what I teach, that is enough. That is all I ask.

Man should not die like a cat or a dog. He should leave the world better and happier than when he came into it. He must get away, full of gratitude for the chance given to him to see God in everything that he saw, heard, touched, smelt and tasted. He must remember the Lord, with his last breath.

Never allow your attention to stray away from God

To get that recollection, a lifetime of practice is needed. When you are at the steering wheel of the car, you may be hearing the talk going on inside the car and even join in it; you may be doing many other things, but, your attention will always be on the road ahead. When the mother returns from the well with three pots one over the other on her head, talking to her companions, her mind is concentrated on the baby in the cradle which she has left at home. So too, when you are engaged in the various duties and obligations of the world, never allow your attention to stray away from God, the Goal. Be always attentive to the signs of His Glory and His Mercy and His Omnipresence. A soldier is the result of many years of intense training; his courage and coolness on the front line are the product of several years of calculated exercise and discipline. As Raani Narasimha Shaasthri said, it is only after years of intense study that one can appear for an examination and the results are not announced immediately; you have to wait some more time for that. So, cultivate the habit of remembering the Lord with every breath; then only can you remember Him with the last breath.

There was an old man lying on his deathbed. I think he belonged to the Kannada country. While in his last moments, he could only blabber some word, which his children could not understand; they called in a doctor and asked him to give oxygen or something so that the words might become clear; they surmised that he was announcing to them where exactly he had kept the money he had earned. So, they did everything to get the words correctly. They could distinguish only one sound, ka! So they asked whether he meant kanaka (gold) karu (calf), kanaja (granary) kasabarike (broom)! When the broom was shown, he nodded his head and died. So, he had to take birth as a broom!

Death is a consummation which is inevitable

You should not die like that man; you must die like Bheeshma. He lay on the bed of arrows while he taught the Shaanthiparva to the Paandavas, and he died with Krishna before him and in his heart. Death is considered as something to be afraid off as something that should not be spoken about in happy circumstances! But, death is neither good nor bad. You have no choice in the matter. You can't get it sooner if you welcome it; nor can you avoid it if you condemn it as bad. It is a consummation which is inevitable; from the moment of birth, the march to the cremation ground has started. Some reach the place quicker than others, some go by a round about route and arrive late. That is the only difference, between man and man. But, yet, man walks about as if death is but a distant calamity. When some neighbour loses his child, you console him saying that it is alia dream, that children are born and die because they are creditors who have come to realise old debts incurred in previous births, etc., etc. But, when you lose a child of your own, you do not console yourselves by the same arguments. They are only for the consumption of others. What dies is the body, not its occupant. Arjuna addresses Krishna as Purushotthama, for He only is Supreme amongst the Purushas. Purusha means He who is in this Pain (fortified town), namely, this body. Each body has the Purusha in it and the entire Universe has the Purushotthama immanent in it. So, after all, what dies is the body, not the occupant of the body, the Purusha. The faith that you have the Purusha in you, will cleanse the mind of all evil and the senses of all evil propensities. The vessel too must be clean, not merely the drink. Without that, smarana or dhyaana done for however long periods they may be, will not yield fruit. That is why the Vedhas were entrusted to the Brahmins, along with rigorous rules of discipline. Without minds cleansed by that discipline, the study of the Vedhas is a barren exercise. When a man was about to die, the wife asked, "What is to happen to me?" The parents asked the same question; the children asked, "What is to happen to us?" Even the servants asked piteously, "What is to happen to us?" The dying man looked around helplessly and asked all of them "What is to happen to me?" He should have foreseen the event, if he was wise and prepared himself with an answer to that question. Then he could have died in peace and seeing him die so calmly, his children too could have benefited. Now, a fashion is spreading in conversation; "Oh! It is all God's Grace," when something you consider good happens to you. If it happens to somebody you don't like, it is not God's Grace evidently, for God is specially yours and not the other fellow's. When something you dislike happens to you, why don't you take that also to be a sign of God's Grace? Resign yourself into God's hands; let Him give success or failure, what does it matter? He may be bent upon toughening you, or it may be for your good in the long run. How can you judge? Who are you to judge? Why judge? Do your best and keep mum. Fix your mind on this attitude. Death will not give advance information. You don't know when the cameraman is going to click. Mathew, who takes photographs at the Nilayam, at least jumps about in front of you with the camera pointed at this place or that; but, Death will not give any advance intimation, or say, 'Ready' and wait until you are ready. Therefore, be ready always, so that you may produce a good impression with His Name on your lips and His Form in your cleansed heart. You do not now realise your good boon in getting Me as the Guide. I shall not rest until I reform all of you. The basement for My work has ' been completed: now, the structure will rise upon it. I go round the whole world alone, with no paraphernalia and no publicity, because I am established in My own Glory, in My own Truth. I have Aathmic relationship with all, and so I am always succeeding. To protect the crop, the weeds have to be removed and manure must be applied; that is the work of these Pandiths of the Vidhwanmahaasabha, instruments that were long unused and neglected. Join this great work; it is the chance of a lifetime for you. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 20- 10- 1963 The ills of the country are due to under-nourishment; not so much under-nourishment of the body, but under-nourishment of the spirit, want of spiritual exercise, neglect of spiritual regimen. Allowing the malady the fullest scope, people are engaged in reciting the names of the drugs in the pharmacopia! They do not make any attempt to take the drug in. The means of conveying into every home and village the life-giving waters of the spirit have all dried up or got choked up. That is the reason why under-nourishment, with all its attendant symptoms of debility, nervous disorder and mania is so rampant today. Sathya Sai Baaba

31. The Geetha balance MANY Pandiths and scholars have explained the Geetha in many ways to you all these days; if you ask Me, I will say that the Geetha is like a balance, scales, needle and all. The scale on the left is shloka 7, of the second chapter, speaking of "Kaarpanya dosha." The fulcrum is the 22nd sloka of the Ninth Chapter, beginning with "Ananyaaschinthayantho maam;" and the scale on the right is the shloka in the eighteenth chapter, speaking of "Sarva-dharmaan parithyajya." See how apt the fulcrum shloka is; it speaks of single- minded attention, steady, like the needle of a well-adjusted balance! Really, the Geetha begins with two scales and a fulcrum, the two armies, of Righteousness and Unrighteousness, with Krishna the Teacher in the middle! We have the two scales of Loukika and A-loukika (worldly and other worldly), clamouring for attention and respect, inaana (spiritual knowledge) alone can remove the ajnaana (ignorance) of Arjuna, that is the Sankalpa (Will) of the Lord.
 The Inaana has to be put into practice. Otherwise, it is useless. Once the deer of the forest gathered in a great assembly and discussed their own cowardice in the face of the pursuing hounds. They argued, "Why should we, who are equipped with fleet feet and sharp antlers, be afraid of these insignificant dogs?" At last, a resolution was moved and passed that no deer should henceforth flee before hounds but, even while the cheering was going on, they heard the distant baying of the hounds and, not one stayed there; all had fled as fast as their legs could carry them! The resolution could not be put into practice!
 Karma has to be done as it is one's nature Now these Pandiths are well versed in the art of teaching and explaining the sacred scriptures to the people; what is lacking is training for the people in the art of listening to them and following their suggestions for spiritual advancement. The art of engaging in karma (action) without getting involved is the thing that has to be learnt, Karma has to be done, because it is part of one's nature, not out of any external compulsion. Suurya (Sun) is a Sahaja karmachaari (worker by nature), He draws the vapours of water high up to form clouds which pours back as rain; no one taught Him to do this. When you do the sahaja karma (action dictated by nature), it won't be a burden. It is when you go contrary to it and do something out of the way that you feel the misery.

 The police constable's life is not sahaja (natural); so, he feels happy when he comes home, and doffing his uniform, gets into ordinary clothes. When the baby wails, all rush towards the cradle because its sahajakarma is to smile and be contentedly happy. So too, karma done for the profit arising therefrom accumulates consequences which bind a man. It increases in size like a snowball, but karma done without any thought of the fruit therefrom, keeps on diminishing and leaves you free from all consequence.
 One cannot escape from doing karma The Dharma-karmas (virtuous actions) have to be done; there is no escape. Fleeing to the forest is no solution, for it only gives the situation a new turn. Your body may be in the jungle, but, your mind will wander in the market-place! There was a saadhaka (spiritual seeker) once who was initiated by a Yogi into some manthram (holy words); he wanted to meditate on it undisturbed and he found his home too full of distraction. He fled to the forest and discovered a convenient tree, under which he could meditate. Before long, the birds roosting on its branches started to clamour aloud and they showered on his head their droppings. He was greatly incensed. "Have I no place where I can commune with God", he cried. "Children at home; birds and bats in the jungle! I shall immolate myself, get born under better auspices and then, start saadhana afresh," he decided.
 So, he collected a pile of fuel and making a pyre out of it, lit it and was about to ascend it, when he was interrupted by an old man who accosted him. He said, "By all means, carry out your decision; but, just as now the wind blows from here towards those huts where we live; so, please wait until the wind turns its direction, for, the smell of burning human flesh does not agree with us. Or, if you are in hot haste, you can shift to some other place and avoid being a nuisance to us, poor folk." The saadhaka felt he had no freedom even to die. So, he returned home, and decided to brave it all there itself. He understood that karma has to be carried through in the objective world itself and there is no use trying to shake it off in a huff. From the A-shaanthi---the confusion and travail of the world---one has to snatch harmony and peace.
 Be in the world, but not of it Vishnu is described as "Bhujaga shyanam" (lying on the snake) and also as Shaanthaakaaram!

The bhujaga (snake) which has visha (poison) represents the vishaya (worldly desires) and when you rest upon it, instead of allowing it to envelop you, you can afford to have shantham (peace).

Let your boat be on the waters, but do not allow the waters to enter the boat. Be in the world, but, not of it. That is the secret of a successful life.

Desire leads to ultimate ruin. It can never be destroyed by fulfilment. It grows upon each satisfaction and becomes a monster that devours the victim himself: so, try to reduce your desires, go on reducing them. There was once a pilgrim who accidentally sat under the Kalpatharu (a wish granting tree)! He was terribly thirsty and said to himself, "How I wish some one gave me a cup of sweet cool water!" And, immediately, there was placed before him a cup of deliciously cool water.

He was surprised, but, drank it nevertheless. Then, he wished for a meal of tasty dishes, and he got it in a trice. This led to a wish for a cot and a bed and when he wished his wife was there to see all this wonder, she appeared in an instant. The poor pilgrim mistook her for an apparition and when he exclaimed, "O she is an ogress!" she became one, and the husband shook in terror, crying, "She will now eat me up," which she promptly did!

The chain of desire binds one to the point of suffocation. Control, curb your tendency to wish for this and that. Tell the Lord, "You are enough for me. I do not wish for anything else." Why pine after golden jewels? Pine for gold. The Geetha teaches the lesson of Sharanaagathi (unconditional surrender to the Lord); wish for His Will to prevail, not your wish to succeed. This is what Krishna meant when He said, "Be a Sarvaarambha parithyaagi (one who renounces all self-centred actions)."

Sharanaagathi is the main gate to attain Mukthi

Death is but a passage from this life to the next; it is the change from old clothes to new, as the Geetha says. But, some cynics laugh at the comparison and ask, what about the death of newborn infants, children, youths and middle-aged persons? Their bodies cannot by any stretch of meaning be classified as jeerna, (worn-out)! Well, the clothes might not be old, but the cloth out of which they were made must have been from very old stock, so that though new clothes were prepared out of it, they had to be discarded soon. Again, there are some crooked men who refuse to believe in a previous life, because they cannot recollect the events!

These people cannot recollect the events of one particular Magha Shuddha Dhashami, say, 5 or 10 years ago, though they are certain they were alive on that Dhashami! Forgetting the events of that day does not mean that they were not alive at all; it only means that they did not pay any special heed to them, they had no lakshyam (objective) or special reason to keep it in memory.

Sharanaagathi is the main gate to enter the mansion of mukthi (liberation from birth-death cycle). It has four floors- Dhyaana, Karma, Bhakthi and Inaana (meditation, activism, devotion and spiritual knowledge). Each floor rests upon the one beneath and the topmost one cannot be reached without ascending the first three. Remember this when you hear people arguing about the relative superiority of the yogas or labelling themselves as 'this' or 'that' in the Aadhyaathmik (spiritual) field.

Human life is superior even to the life of gods

The Geetha does not refer to any problem of family or social life. It teaches the spiritual aspirant the Path that leads to perfect communion with the Divinity inherent in himself. The reason why Bulusu Appanna Shaasthry extolled this human life as superior to the life not only of beasts but even to the life of the Gods, is that man alone can strive to squeeze out of his experience of this objective world, answers to questions on his own origin, significance and goal. Raamachandhra Shaasthry indicated the measures for clearing the mind of enmeshing obstacles so that the answers might be reflected therein. And the third Pandith who spoke today, Maddulapalli Sathyanaaraayana Shaasthry made it clear from the Shaasthras that the world has Shaantham, Aanandham and Inaanam (Peace, Bliss and Spiritual Knowledge) as its fundamental base, real Reality. What is needed is to remove the shade that is hiding the effulgence, the screen that covers the truth from view. The Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha has been designed by Me for this very purpose.

Try to break the coconut, as it comes from the tree; the shell is covered compactly by a coat of fibre. You cannot break the nut by hitting with a crow-bar even; take off the fibrous armour; breaking it is very easy. When you take a coconut to be offered in the temple, you take it, after removing the fibre; then, you offer it to God, breaking it into two halves. This is the symbol for destroying the ego and surrendering to the Lord.

So you have to remove the fibre of desire for sense-objects and then, go before the Lord devoid of kaama and krodha (desire and anger); there you declare that you are ego-less by breaking the coconut into two. You will be accepted then, not before.

Sathya Sai Baaba

32. Thath-Thwam

PERI Venkateshwara Shaasthry and others by their speeches, relieved you from hunger; now, it is My turn to sharpen your yearning, which is the hunger of the mind for the higher joy. When Dharma declines or rather, when those who have a duty to regulate their lives according to dharma lose faith in it, then, its restoration cannot be taken up by all and sundry. A broken bridge on a highway cannot be set right by amateur skill and the momentary enthusiasm of the villagers around. The very authority which laid down the road and planned the bridge has to initiate repair. The Lord has come again on this Mission; He has collected the engineers and contractors and the labour for the purpose. He is now set on the task. When Krishna knew that Brahma had taken away and hidden the cows and calves and the cowherds and boys, the whole lot of them that had gone out of their homes into the pastures, He created anew, the same number, the same types, the same persons, cattle and all, and nobody suspected for one full year that the genuine was hidden and that it was the duplicate that was in the village everywhere. All that was thus created was Krishna thathwa (true nature of Krishna), just as all that was hidden by Brahma Was also Krishna thathwa. You too are Krishna thathwa; what other thathwa is there, really? Everyone must be conscious of Krishna thathwa. Even now with Me, My Maayaasrishti (creation out of the void), is for some definite purpose; just as it was then. Then it was to purify and sanctify the gopees; now, too, the aim is to purify and sanctify. Nara is limited and deluded; when that limit is crossed and when that delusion is gone, he is Naaraayana and he shines in his thathwa. Every one must be conscious of this thathwa, which is his reality. To make each one conscious of it is the aim of those who come for Dharmasthapana (revival of righteousness). In the Mahaabhaaratha, the most noteworthy theme is this Dharmasthapana. When the Paandavas were exiled into the forest, it is as if the five Praanas (life breath) of Dharma, the sustaining forces of Dharma, were exiled. Dharmaraaja is the Praana of the Right Conduct, Bheema, of the Protective Might of Dharma, Arjuna of the Faith and Devotion needed as its foundation, Nakula and Sahadheva, of the steadfast faith essential for the practice of Dharma. When the Paandavas went to the forest, Hashtinaapura was reduced to Asthinaapura---a city of bones, without flesh and blood.

You call Me Dharmamuurthi (personification of Virtue). No, each of you is a Dharmamuurthi.

But, you have strayed away; to bring you back to the status that you have lost, that is My aim.

This Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha, which has been established here this Navaraathri, will be doing just that job. Today, its aims and objects as well as the methods of working were discussed and settled, it is your Sabha; you can make use of it, in proportion to your bhakti (devotion) and your shakti (capacity). The deposits which these Pandiths have made in inaanam and thapas (penance) are yours; draw cheques on them and they will give you the riches, without question.

The sowing part of the work has begun Pandiths and scholars of Vedhas and Shaasthras have been suffering a lot, due to neglect by society. But, that is not the result of their having studied the Vedhas; it is because they have not put what they have learnt into action. Every one must wait till the fruit is ripe. It will take time for the growth of the tree, for its blossoming, for the fruits to appear, to ripen and to be filled with sweet juice. Pluck it before time and you have to throw it away. Why? To become a graduate and take a degree, one has to struggle with the alphabet at first, then read words formed by the letters, then study sentences and finally complete texts.

The fruition of their studies has come now, after all these years, when the Pandiths have secured this medium for sharing their joy and their wisdom with their brothers and sisters. The Pandiths have been allotted districts and a selected few will be supervising the programmes in each district. The District Committees will arrange meetings and invite the Pandiths for the three-day sessions of the Sabha.

The light is in you, you are the light. This is the sowing part of the work, sowing the seeds of the Karma kaanda, the Upaasana kaanda and the Inaana kaanda, of Vedhaantha, of Dharma Shaasthras, of the Glory of God as described in the Raamaayana, the Mahaabhaaratha, and the Bhaagavatha. You have to look after the fields, tend the young crop, feed it with manure of manana, and rid it of pests, and harvest the happiness that comes from eating the nourishing grain. That is the real agriculture for you.

Chance to share in this agriculture will come only to a few, the few who are endowed with the merit of many lives.

First, the Sabha will be concerned with Andhra Pradesh and later, it will reach out into the Karnataka and Kerala States, and then into all the States of India, and within a short time, even outside India. Already, there are quite a few Sathya Sai Sanghas outside India and they are pressing for the extension of Swaami's Grace in this form too to their places.

The first profit from such a Sabha is that you will be able to tend and develop something that is specially India. I am saying this, because you understand only the language of profit. Whatever you are asked to do, the first question is, "How much will be the profit?" This greed for laabha (profit) has made you sink in lobha (greed)! The highest profit is the arrival through this road back at the place from where you came, your Swasthaana.

Brahma who was born in the lotus that arose out of the navel of Vishnu wondered how he came to be there and it seems he searched and searched for the place from where he came. He could not trace it at all. But, by some little thought, you can know, from where you came, or, rather, what your real nature is. Then what remains is the attempt to attain it. That is what is meant by Liberation, or Moksha.

Simple faith in the words of the wise is more profitable than years of study and discussion.

Meditate on such a Mahaavaakya as "Thath-thwam-asi" (That thou art) and as you go on revolving it in your mind, meanings will dawn upon you, without the help of any commentary.

Commentaries only tend to confuse you. Think of the "Thath" (Divinity); analyse the "thwam (yourself); and then, you will be convinced that 'asi' (equality) is the only solution. You are in the Light; the Light is in you; you are the Light---these are the steps. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 25-10- 1963

You can be free from fear only when you are confident of the strength of the foundation. You do not see your breath or weigh it; but, breath is the very sustenance of life. The unseen is the basis of the seen. If you are caught up in the meshes of the seen, you cannot know the importance of the unseen.

Sathya Sai Baaba

33. It will not last

THE greatest wonder of all is that nobody knows himself nobody struggles to know about himself, even among those who spend their lifetime in knowing about others. Your Self is something subtler than water or air or even aakaasha (space). It must go into the eye so that you may see; it must move into the hand so that it may hold; it must move into the feet so that you may walk. The senses are inert materials; the 'I' must operate so that they may function.

That "I" is Brahman, mistaken to be separate! In the Thretha Yuga, vaanaras were made to act and talk like naras (humans); in the Dhwaapara Yuga, nara was transformed into Naaraayana

(God) by the Grace of Naaraayana; in the Kali Yuga, the declaration is made that Nara is

Naaraayana

Himself. The Ghata-aakaasha (space in the pot) and the Matha-aakaasha (space in the monastery) are identical with the Mahaa-aakaasha (Vast sky space); only the upaadhis (disguises), ghata and matra keep up the illusion of separateness. The senses are the villains, they instill the delusion that you are the upaadhi (body). Curb them as the bull is curbed by the nose-ring, the horse by the bit in the mouth, the elephant by the goad. When the Paandavas were traversing the Himaalayas towards the end of their careers, Dharmaraaja was still affected by mental anxieties and so he prayed to Krishna to spend some time with them. On His departure from their dwelling, Krishna gave Dharmaraaja a note, which he was to read to himself whenever he was affected by joy or grief. The note read: "Eppudoo undhadhu" (This will not last). That is one method by which mental agitations can be calmed.

You are in this world under sentence

Take life in the world as a compulsory duty imposed on you. You are now in jail under a sentence for crimes committed in a previous birth. The Superintendent assigns various dutiescooking, drawing water, hewing wood, etc. You have to do the work assigned to the best of your ability, without any expectation of reward. If you behave well, cause no trouble, and do the assigned duties without demur, then some days may be written off your sentence and you may be released sooner, with a certificate that you are reliable and good. This attitude will give you practice in nishkaamakarma (Selfless action), which is very valuable for curbing the senses.

When you talk of God to some people, they ask, "We will believe, only if we can see Him."

When the Vidhwanmahaasabha Pandiths go to the villages for their mission of spreading the truths of the Vedhas, this question will crop up. Then you have to ask them: "I won't believe that you have pain unless I can see pain with my eyes." God is Bliss, how can bliss be shown and seen? Whether others believe or not, 2 plus 2 is equal to 4, You may agree or refuse to agree, but, that is a fact, proved by the experience of all those who agree. So too is the fact of God.

Live in constant thought of God
 You must live in the constant thought of God as well as of another fact, Death. The body is the car in which you are riding to death. You may meet death any moment, while riding; some tree or lorry or ditch or slush will bring it. Remember Death Remember that time is running out every moment; then, you will not be tempted to waste time in idle talk or vain pursuits or wanton mischief or vulgar entertainment. Travel in the car carefully, slowly, with due regard to the needs of others on the road; do not greedily try to overtake others, or compete in speed, know the limitations of the vehicle and the road! And then, you will not meet with any accident. Your journey will be a happy experience for you and the rest of the people.

Jonnalagadda Sathyanaaraayanamurthy in his speech was exhorting you to teach, to reform, to reconstruct and do many other things. But, not all can enter upon such tasks, First, self; then, help, improve yourself, teach yourself, reconstruct yourself---and, then proceed to solve the problems of others, That reconstruction is quite easy, provided you inquire calmly into your own personality---"Am I the body, or the senses or the mind or the Buddhi, etc.?" You heard in the Burrakatha (folk tale) on Shivaaji, how Goddess Bhavaani gave the sword to him. This Shiva-Shakthi will give you the Inaanakhadga and the Subodhakhadga (the sword of spiritual knowledge and spiritual instruction) that will destroy the forces of Ajnaana. Take it and become wise and happy.

 Activity results in either joy or grief, due to the attachment with which it is done. "I" and "mine" are the two fangs of the serpent; pluck them out, then, you can safely handle it and play with it. You need not give up activity. As a matter of fact, you have to be intensely active.

In this Karmabhumi (the land of sacred action), it is only through karma that you can transcend karma.

Birds and beasts are not aware of this secret; man alone can select and accept the karma that is most profitable for liberation from the chain of karma.

 34. Sankalpa
KALLURI Veerabhadhrashaasthy declared now that the Swaadhyaaya Inaana Yajnas (ritual sacrifices for Self enlightenment); which started on the 20th had ended; but, there is no samaapthi (conclusion) for the yajna. All life is a yajna; when does the yajna meet its samaapthi? I shall tell you. Sama means Brahma; aapthi means praapthi, attainment, reaching.

When Brahmam is attained, that day, that moment, the Yajna which is Life can be said to have ended; not until then. This samaapthi marks only the end of these rituals. Carry on the yajna, wherever you are, by means of shravana, manana and nidhidhyaasana (listening, contemplation and deep meditation).

Shaasthy today described the story of Rukmini Kalyaana. Now, this is not simply the story of a marriage. It is the union of Purusha with Prakrithi itself. The Brahmin intermediary is the symbol of Vedhic authority through which alone the merging of the two is known. Rukmini is the leeva (individual self) and Krishna is the Paramaathma. She is suffering from the rules and restrictions imposed by Prakrithi (objective world); Ahamkaara (egoism) is her brother; Worldliness is her father. But, on account of her sadhaachaara (good conduct), her mind rested on God. So she was able to plan a method of reaching God.

One is born to serve out one's sentence
 Her prayers, repentance, yearning and steadfastness were rewarded. Her observance of the ageold code of good conduct at last saved her for she went out for the Gowri puuja (Worship & universal mother Goddess), before the marriage rite. In that temple she was immersed in the worship of God and so she was liberated from the bonds by the God who was lying in wait! The parents and the brother and all the relatives objected but, an individual is born to work out his destiny, not to act a role in some one else's drama. One is born to serve out one's sentence; when the sentence ends, one is free. You shall not remain in prison, on the pretext that a dear comrade is still in! Just think of this fact: Rukmini had not met Krishna before; there was no preliminary wooing. The soul yearned and it won. They had met in the realm of the spirit.

This is no ordinary marriage, though the people who write about it and describe it in Harikathas (divine stories), speak of it as the romantic adventure of a wilful girl and a young care-free bravado! It is merging of thath with thwam (That with This). The same thing, if it is near, is referred to as this, and if far, is referred to as that; this is there (that is when it is not here but there). Thath is the same as thwam, only it is far; why is it far? Because it is beyond the reach of the intellect, the senses, and words. To communicate one's experience of the Godhead, words are inadequate; in fact, even the attempt is beyond the fortunate sage. Two pilgrims were passing through a forest and sitting under a tree, they were talking about the debt Man owed to several "mothers." One of them detailed a list of such "mothers," the Maatha that gave birth, the Go-maatha, the Bhu-maatha, and the Vedha-maatha (mother cow, motherland and mother scriptures). Conception of Brahman depends on one's experience. The talk drifted towards the importance of Go-puuja (cow worship); and, they began discussing what exactly is meant by the word Go, which means a cow. There ensued a debate about its characteristics: a tail, two horns, four legs, an udder, etc. They rose up and wandered long to discover an animal with those items and at last espied a buffalo, which they worshipped to their heart's content. So, the conception of Brahman also will depend on each one's equipment and experience, but, that does not mean, there are so many different Brahman. A man is called Daddy, Son, Uncle, Grandfather, Cousin, Nephew and Husband---but, that does not make him more than one individual! Our Vidhwanmahaasabha will establish this truth in the minds of all. It is not out for condemning any faith or attracting people into a new faith. It will be engaged in fostering the positive attitude in spiritual effort; encouraging, as Sanaathana Dharma (ancient, eternal, universal religion) has always done, all to move forward from wherever they are, in the direction of the Lord, whom they are free to picture in whatever Form they like. No harsh word is to be used when referring to another's faith, for, faith is a precious plant and harshness might make it wither. Know the truth; experience the Aanandha (bliss)---that is the Message that these Vidhwans (scholars) will carry. Those who say that Aanandha is the essential nature of man have the responsibility to be full of

Aanandha themselves. You enquire of another person the reason why he looks depressed; you are not worried if he looks happy. Why? Because depression is unnatural; it is against man's essential nature. Water is cool; that is its nature. So, the hot spring in front of the temple of Bhadhrinaath by the side of the ice-cold Alakanandha is looked upon with wonder. Be yourself what you tell the other man to be. People will follow only the man who speaks out of personal experience. Shaasthras are based on Saadhaks' experience. Some people were on this bank of the river and since they were strangers they sought information whether the river could be crossed at that point and how. A lame fellow said, "It is dangerous to cross at this point; go further down." They did not believe him, for he could not have waded through! A blind man said, "You can cross; only, keep more to the left for some distance and move to the right afterwards." They did not follow his advice, for he could not have known; he must have been led by some one else. At last a man came, who volunteered to take them across. "I have crossed often; I live on the other bank and I own lands on this side." So, they followed him with confidence and they could reach the other bank safe. A little child is taught names and facts by the elders; it calls a thing a dog; another thing a tree; a third thing, a stone. It says, when asked, that is a man. How does it know? Because it has been told so. The characteristics of animals, plants, trees, birds and men have been taught by the elders and it believes them and takes them on trust. Then why cannot you believe also in God? You are told that also; from thousands of years you have been told that there is God with many characteristics by which you can visualise Him. The Shaasthras (spiritual sciences) declare that the signs of God are such and such. The Shaasthras are based on the experience of saadhaks (spiritual aspirants) and they have as much authenticity as any thing else. Many things are taken on trust, depending on the reliability, the impartiality, the attainments of the people saying them. The rishis (sages) are impartial; they have no intention to deceive or mislead. Prema alone can understand prema. If you feel that you too must have the experience or else you will not believe, well, come and experience. There is no use simply coming one day and going away the next day, saying, "I have seen Sathya Sai Baaba. He wears a fine long gown and He has wonderful hair." If you spend the time lounging in the hotels here or playing cards, or listening to tales, how can you understand?

Determine to discover, decide to learn, dive deep, and then you will know.

Thousands have come now and in the years gone by; many have no desire to know; many who have the desire are unaware of the fact that they must pay more attention to actual experience of the mind, not to the sense impressions. You may be staring at something, but, if your mind is not focussed on it, you cannot cognise it. If your body is in this auditorium, your ear in the hotel and your eye all round the compound, how can anything be learnt?

Prema alone can understand prema (love).

Prema is the manner of speaking; Truth is the substance; Dharma (virtue) is the language;

Shaanthi, the result aimed at. As a matter of fact, I am Premaswarupa. I do not need any rest in My efforts to give you Aanandha. All this yajna, this gathering of Pandiths, this Vidhwanmahaasabha is for your Aanandha.

Join this great task of Dharmasthaapana

If all this arrangement is done somewhere else, what a great noise it would have made! People would have scoured the land with lists of likely donors, and worried this man and that, and finally boasted of their achievements. But, here, only just a few know about this. It was all a case of the Sankalpa (Will Power) working itself by the force of its own goodness. And, what do you bring to Me? Only, tears! Tears of grief when you come and tears of Aanandha when you go!

I am unattached to any event or plan. I am not worried at all by fear of failure, for, I know that My Plan must succeed. This Prashaanthi Vidhwanma-haasabha too is not something new; it is Sanaathanam (eternal). Only, it is now once again set on the age-old Mission. This work of Dharma-sthaapanam (establishment of righteousness) is being done over and over again. You have now the chance to share in it; so, join this great task, and make your lives worthwhile.

These evening discourses of Pandiths and My own sambhaasahna (discourses) have to stop from tomorrow; for, I must start meeting those of you who have brought huge loads of grief, discontents, difficulties and problems for My attention. That is also My Work and I shall gladly attend to it.

Have a time-table for spiritualsustenance, just as you have now for physical sustenance.

A breakfast of pious repetition of Lord's name (japa) and meditation (dhyaana), a lunch hour ritual worship of the Lord (puuja), 'tea and snacks' of reading scriptures or sacred books (pravachana) in the afternoon and a light dinner of devotional music (bhajana) in the early hours of the night.

If you follow this regimen, you can sleep soundly and wake up refreshed.

35. Amirtha Vaani

THEY speak of two types of Karma: Dhaihika and Daivika (physical and spiritual). But, this division is absurd and even dangerous. All acts and activities are spiritual, the body is but an instrument for spiritual progress and attainment. Modern education emphasises the physical and neglects the spirit, which is crucial. It teaches that joy derived through the senses alone are worth while; it does not give even a glimpse of the deeper and more lasting joy derivable through the spirit which is your real self and it is, in essence, aanandha, shaanthy, inaana---Sathyam, Shivam, Sundharam (bliss, peace, spiritual knowledge---Truth, Goodness and Beauty).

You must have noticed that I never address you as 'Bhakthulaara' for how can you be only that?

You are Bhagavaan, you become that by just shedding the avidhya (ignorance) that makes you imagine that you are limited. That is why I address you either as Shaanthi Swaruupulaara, or

Aanandha swaruupulaara, or Divyaathma swaruupulaara (Embodiments of Peace or Bliss or Divine Soul). That is your real nature, but, you are not even told who you are. Your misery is traceable to this failure to know yourself.

Educators today do not teach the ways and means of crossing the sea of misery, of facing success and defeat, of remaining calm and collected. The brain is stuffed with information, the hands are trained in skills, but, the senses are not tamed, the intelligence is not curbed, the mind is allowed to run amok. That is the cause of the tragic crisis in the world today.

Do karma full of joy and enthusiasm

You have been born in this Karmakshethra (land of spiritual activity) and your duty is to engage yourself in continuous uninterrupted karma. Do not get bogged in gloom and sloth; do karma full of joy and enthusiasm, as if each act is an offering at the Feet of the Lord. Bhaaratha desh

(India) is the Guru' peetham (seat of Spiritual Teacher) of Humanity; that is the role it has played and has to play; but, as consequence of undue attachment to the senses and the world, fostered by blind admiration and snobbish imitation, the role has been forgotten, to the great loss of ourselves and of the rest of humanity. The restrictions, regulations and rules of guidance for individual family, community, nation and humanity are either not remembered or brushed aside as obsolete. The joy, peace and contentment that one gets by observing them are themselves witnesses of their worth.

The Pandiths and scholars who have assembled here, for the Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha being inaugurated now, have therefore a great responsibility for they must hold fast to the Prashaanthi (total peace) that the study and practice of the Vedhas and Shaasthras has conferred upon them; they must also share that Prashaanthi with all humanity. They must be bold, free and happy always, for they know that this is all an unreal dream. They know the goal of life and they are marching steadily towards it with every passing minute. Grief is the greatest friend of man All that is padhaarthas (matter) must be transformed into paraarthas (spirituality); that is My plan.

The inaana which the Vedhas and Shaasthras have given to these people must be distributed. At present these scholars have no self-confidence, because they are losing faith in what they themselves have hitherto considered invaluable. They send their children to technical courses and secular studies, for they are heavily pinched for the means of livelihood. What is the good in having an umbrella that allows the Sun to burn you and the rain to soak you, they have started asking! But, the Vedhic treasure-house has vast riches, which is urgently needed today. It is to conserve, develop and utilise it more fully that this Sabha is inaugurated now.

The Vedha is the basis of dharma, which is like the Mother in its loving care for man. Bhaaritha bhuumi (India) is Yoga bhuumi, Karma bhuumi, Thyaaga bhuumi, not Bhoga bhuumi (Land of spiritual union, spiritual activity, renunciation and spiritual enjoyment). The Kauravas failed because they stuck to empire and greed for power, and fixed their minds on bhoga (enjoyment). The Paandavas secured Divine guidance and won, because they stuck to spiritual joy, ascetic self-control and simplicity and sincerity. To follow the same path is the sign of wisdom. That is the Path of Dharma (virtue) from which mankind has strayed away. Grief is the greatest friend of man, for it opens the eyes and shocks you into the search for the secret of shaanthi and santhosha (peace and happiness).

There is no need for tears or despair
A monkey put its hand into a pot of nuts and tightened its fist full of the food, but, it could not take its hand out of the narrow neck because the fist was too big for it. Unless the nuts were dropped back into the pot and the fingers released, the hand could not be got out! That is the situation of man today. His greed is giving him great pain but he has not discovered the fact; so he clings to his possessions and tries to pull his hand out; that gives him great pain. There is no use blaming the nuts or the pot. The fat, It is in the monkey itself.

Prakrithi (Nature) is the pot and the sensory objects are the nuts.
A bird sits on a tiny twig, in perfect confidence! Where does it get the confidence from? Not from the twig; but, from the wings which can take it aloft at the slightest sign of danger. The twig is Prakrithi (objective world) Sit on it lightly, gaily, confidently; but, rely more on the wings, namely the Grace of the Lord who can lift you aloft, away from Prakrithi at the slightest premonition of danger. The twig is not very reliable but, the wings are always there to save you.

The revival of that dharma is a task which the rulers have not planned for; it is a programme which the people are not keen upon. Then, who has to take it up? It was said that I have taken up this Form in answer to the prayers of saadhus (noble souls) and others. There are some mothers who feed the baby only when it starts crying; the more considerate and loving type of mother knows when the baby is hungry; she need not be called to its side by a loud wall. This Mother is that type of Mother. I have come, because I felt I had to come. I resolved upon this. There is no need now for tears or despair, either among the repositories of the Vedhic wisdom or among the good, who suffer from the cruel winds of adharma (vice). This campaign will succeed; it will not fall. The welfare of the world will be ensured through the fostering of the Godly everywhere, and more particularly of these reservoirs of the ancient wisdom of this land.

Dashara Discourses, November 1963 Love is God. God is Love. Where there is Love, there God is certainly evident. Love more and more people, love them more and more intensely; transform the love into service, transform the service into worship; that is the highest saadhana.

36. Gift of spiritual knowledge

EVEN in this holy place of Shrishailam, such a jubilant and auspicious celebration has not taken place since years. In this land where thapas (penance) alone is valued as significant, in this Karma bhuumi (land of spiritual activity), there is no reason why ashaanthi (confusion and turmoil) must spread; it is all due to the multiplication of wants and desire for sensual pleasure, instead of spiritual contentment. Even the starting of a Nithya

Annapoorna Annadhaana Sathram

(Place for gift of food to the poor)) here by the Akhila Bhaaritha Aarya Vyshya Sangham today, is a sign of the decline of faith and strength. There should not be any need to feed; the cry of

"give" "give" ("dehi! dehi!") should not be heard in this land of Annapoorna, of plenty and prosperity. This place of must be approached in the hue spirit of humility and prayer. Picnic parties and tourists have no place here.

There are many legends regarding the temple at Shrishailam.

Mallikhaarijuna is the white, fragrant, Nirmala (pure) God, the Grace-showering Shiva, who bends in mercy at the slightest yearning of the devotee. Bhramaraamba (the consort), is the Bee, hovering on the fragrant mallika (jasmine), drawn by the makarandha (honey) of the flower, the true representative of the bhaktha (devotee).

Legends the fore-fathers have treasured

Do not laugh at the legends that your fore-fathers have gathered and treasured. They have invested the place with sanctity and elevated the thoughts and fancies of generations of men.

This shrine has consoled and comforted thousands and thousands of pious persons, year after year. Shankaraacharya was here and he sang of the holiness of this place and the calm he enjoyed here. He has installed a chakra (sanctified holy symbol) which, I may tell you, is in a small cave by the side of Paathaala Ganga.

The desire to do service to the poor and the hungry is good; but, it is taking a turn towards building up institutions and collecting funds and seeking donations. While this is being done, egoism increases; envy spreads; feelings of inferiority and superiority spring up; the mental peace one had is spent while one is caught in this affair. All the struggle falls on one man, though there may be a committee. And, when the institution is finally built, a sense of possession develops and though all institutions are the Lord's and nothing can rise or exist without Him, people forget it and claim all the credit.

There are certain dire possibilities which I want all social workers to guard against. First, cleanse your own minds and then start advising others. Earn mental peace and strength for yourself and then try to secure them for others. Learn the secret of lasting happiness yourself and then, endeavour to make others happy. Seek the real limb, not the artificial limb. Get the doctor who would assure, "here-after your will not fall ill" and not the doctor who gives some relief to the present attack.

The atmosphere of holy places should improve. The nature of Sanyaasis (monks) requires drastic correction. Too many of them are involved in householder functions; too many of them are after worldly fame and riches. All this will be done by Me as part of Dharmasthaapana. The Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha about which Veerabhadhra Shaasthry spoke is one of the instruments for this revival of dharma.

Man needs food more for the Spirit

More than food for the stomach, man needs food for the spirit. The "anna" (food) that Annapoornadhevi (Goddess of Nourishment) gives is the not food, rice and curry. The bhiksha (alms) that She is asked to give is Inaana bhiksha, not the handful of rice that you think it means.

It is Inaana bhiksha, Prema bhiksha, Bhakthi bhiksha, Anugraha bhiksha (alms of spiritual knowledge, love, devotion and grace). Seek Her Grace to get more inaana, more prema, more bhakthi and more of Grace. Do not lower the standard of service when serving pilgrims in this holy place; place emphasis here on bhakthi, vairaagyam and inaana. Do not encourage pomp and insincerity here, of all places. If some one, out of sincere devotion, gives a naya paisa, accept it as if it is a crore, do not accept a crore if it is given with a view to parade wealth or advertise detachment.

I am laying the foundation stone of the new block of this Sathram (pilgrims rest-house), and I bless that you may so act that the significance of the name Annapoorna is not neglected. You have My Blessings in full measure; join hands, all of you in this task and make it a success soon.

Do not feed indiscriminately, and make this an asylum for idlers. Feed only those who come with yearning to spend some days in this holy atmosphere; then only will people be grateful. Feed those who come here for doing saadhana, for living their lives in the Presence of God; feed those who are living examples of the joy that comes from spiritual effort. Shrishailam, 5-12-1963

The sages of ancient times divided karma into vikarma (that is intentionally done) and akarma (that is done without any intention to gain the consequence). Follow the latter and you will save yourselves from suffering. All other activities---the earning of wealth, of reputation, of fame and publicity---result in suffering.

Sathya Sat Baaba
37. Sahaja and a-sahaja SATHYA, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (Truth, Virtue, Peace and Love) are the four pillars of Sanaathana Dharma, the four faces of the Ancient Teaching. Of course, these words are on the lips of every one, but, what they mean is something quite shallow and ineffective. To describe an incident just as you saw it happen, is 'truth'; to give water to the thirsty and food to the hungry is 'Dharma'; to suffer calamity in silence is 'Shaanthi' and to nourish wife and children is 'Prema'--

-that is the general Interpretation!

But, this is all wrong. Truth is something that is not modified by time or space or characteristic.

It must be the same for ever, unaffected and unchanged. Then alone is it Truth. It should not be proved false by some subsequent event or knowledge. Dharma is a body of principles that are fundamental to social stability and individual progress. There are various branches of Dharma---

Karthavya dharma, Vama dharma, Aashrama dharma (obligatory duty, duties pertaining to status and stages of life), etc., but, the aim of all is to help man, stage by stage, towards liberation from grief and from the chain of birth and death.

See how grand the conception of each is compare this with the common meaning that has been so far given. Then, take the quality of Shaanthi. It denotes the capacity to bear success and failure, joy and misery, defeat and victory, with perfect equanimity. And, Prema is the quality of Sarvasamaanatha (equality of every one), of not only Ahimsa (non-violence) but the conscious acceptance of the duty of love, because every being is a spark of Divinity, as much of a spark as you yourself. All lies in the inspiration behind the act

The first step in spiritual training is to curb the Icchaa shakthi (power of desires), which prompts the senses to pursue objects, if the iccha (wish) is for God it is good; if for objective pleasure, it harms the individual, if a house is set on fire, it is incendiarism; if Hanumaan sets fire to Lanka, it is justifiable retribution and a good lesson. If a dacoit cuts off your hand, it is himsa (injury); if the doctor amputates it, he saves your life and so, it is ahimsa (non-injury). Vishaya vaasana (attachment to sense objects) makes an act low, Bhagavath vaasana (attachment to God) makes it sacrosanct. Daksha yajna (ritual sacrifice) was converted into a battle, because Parameshwara was not present; the Kurukshethra battle was transformed into a Yajna, because Parameshwara was present there. Arjuna dedicated himself at the Lord's Feet; Daksha scorned the Lord. That was the difference, and that is the explanation. It all lies in the bhaava (the motive), the inspiration behind the act and the word.

Bhakthi (devotion) is not like lime pickle, to be used only when you have fever; it is man's daily substance, the vitamin he must needs have for physical and mental health. The contemplation of God is the main rice dish; the rest are side dishes, appetisers, fillers. Take the tablets, the Naamasmarana (constant thought of the Lord) tablets, and all the experience of your daily life, the good and the bad, will be digested nicely. You don't eat paddy, do you? You have the sense to remove the husk and then boil the rice before you eat it. So also, why do you take in nature as it is? Remove the allurements it has to the senses, make it just an expression of the Divine Will and then assimilate it.

Do Naamasmarana with full faith and pure heart. You forget your nature in the complex tangle of artificiality; you miss the sahaja (natural) when you are caught in the net of a-sahaja (artificial). The natural is prema, shaanthi, sathya, aanandha. The artificial is hate, falsehood, war, grief and greed. You must discover the spring of your own truth; you cannot play truant for long; after many a birth, even if their number is a hundred, you have to reach the source from where you strayed. Your mind is steady when it is engaged in other activities; but, when it is focussed on God, it begins to waver. It does not like to stop its vagaries, which it will have to do, once God enters your heart. Tame it by Naamasmarana. That is the message which I have come to announce. Have the Naamam (God's Name) on your tongue, the Ruupa (Divine Form) in your eye, the Mahima (Divine Glory) in your heart---then thunderbolts will pass you quietly by.

Do Naamasmarana in some set manner, with full faith and pure heart. When the country is endangered, it is as bad as when the body is endangered. The Name will give you courage to save the Mother. If all of you strengthen your moral qualities, and develop faith in God and Sanaathana Dharma (eternal religion), calamity can never visit this land. Let all Aasthikas (believers in God) proclaim the value of meditation on God. I shall bless that endeavour; I know that will save you and save the country. That is why I am blessing you on this note of joy.

Shrishailam, 6-12-1963

The consequence of karma can be wiped out only through karma, as a thorn can be removed only by means of another. Do good karma to assuage the pain of the bad karma which you have done and from which you suffer now.

The best and the simplest karma is the repetition of the Name of the Lord; be ever engaged in it. It will keep out evil tendencies and wicked thoughts. It will help you radiate love all round you.

38. Project site, Puuja site

I LIVE upon the Aanandha that you derive when you sing the Name and glorify the Form of the Lord. That is My food, My daily sustenance. So, I have no need to talk to you; it is sufficient if I sit here and draw in the Aanandha that you feel when you do

Bhajana (group singing of the glory of the Lord),

You have all gathered here from the distant corners of our country, from every state and every linguistic unit, in order to pool your separate skills of hand and head for the successful completion of this great task which will give food and happiness for crores of brothers and sisters for centuries. This is a great chance for all of you, a chance that comes to few, however skilled they might be. It is a rare chance that comes to few in any country. The lake that will fill this gorge with waters of the Krishna river when you build the dam across it, will be your Nishkaama karma, a samudhra (an ocean of selfless effort). You will all see it and feel its coolness, depth and strength. It will gladden you and inspire you and make you feel that your life has been worth while.

Don't go about this holy work in a haphazard way, without shraddha and bhakti (faith anti devotion). You have to, by that shraddha and bhakti, curb this mighty river, which has carved its way through these hard rocks since the beginning of time, and you have to obstruct its speed and its rage for the benefit of man and beast. Man has, by his skill and daring, to make this wayward child of Nature halt for a while, and pass on.

Canalise your passions into useful fields

This task will become lighter if man curbs his own waywardness and his own egoism, anger, malice, envy, and greed and the roaring flood of his passions. Dam them in your own hearts, and canalise them into useful fields. Utilise the force of those qualities to gain better results from your efforts and saadhana (spiritual discipline). Grow in those fields the fruits of Shaanthi and Prema. That is the agriculture that aspirants know, and which you can also learn with ease. For it is an ancient science, which your own forefathers practised for ages. I have come to remind you of it and to tell you all of the need once again to follow that path.

Blood, phlegm, bile---these decide, by their proportion and predominance, the physical health of a man. So too there are three qualities that decide by their proportion and predominance the mental health of man. Just as you obey the rules of health for fear of falling ill, you have to practise certain mental restrictions and regulation so that you may have peace, contentment, joy, enthusiasm and faith. You have to apply the brake on the wayward mind so that it may not drag you into disaster. You have ever to work in the cool shade of two dreads: the dread of sin and the dread of God.

You do not remember that you are really and genuinely Shaanthi and Aanandha, that you are fundamentally (and therefore, mentally too) Sathya, Nithya and Nirmala (Truth, Eternal and Pure). The anxiety and fear which haunt you now are caused by this loss of memory. The intention of the Lord is that you should have shaanthy and aanandha, every moment of your life; but, you forget the springs that well up within you, that have their Source in the Divinity enshrined in your hearts, and pine for what you feel you have not.

Prescription for peace and contentment

You may not have, all of you gathered here, the same Name and the same form, for the God whom you adore; you may differ in habits, customs, manners and styles of food and dress---but the Aanandha you derive from them is the same. Everyone of these has been designed by the wisdom of ages to give you security, safety and satisfaction. When the padha (word), is changed, the padhaartha (matter) remains the same; water is known by the word paani in U.P., Thanneer in Madras, Neeru in Andhra---but, the substance is the same. So, you may speak different languages or use different sound-signals and follow different habits of food and dress and even of worship and prayer. But, they are all, believe Me, instruments for your uplift and progress.

I shall give you one prescription which will give you the Peace and Contentment which you seek: It is Naamasmarana (remembering the name of the Lord). Install on the tongue any one of the thousand names of the Lord, current in any part of the world, among any community of devotees. Repeat the Name for some time at least every day as part of your duty to yourself, a discipline which will yield good results, a habit which you Should cultivate as a compensation for the hard toil that you do by your body from sunrise to sunset. Spend a few minutes daily with God Bhaa-ratha (India) is the land where every one has rathi (attachment) to Bhaa or Bhagavaan (God); but, today, people are in fact losing that taste and that attachment. You may tell Me, "We are so busy, we have no time to spare." Well, I cannot believe it is true. I know that you are finding time, in spite of the hard work throughout the day, to attend cinemas, to engage in wayside chats, to promote and partake in factions, in quarrels and for many other distractions which add to the sum of your worries.

It is best you stay away from companions who drag you to such distractions that weaken and worry you; spend a few minutes every morning and evening in the silence of your own shrine or home, spend them with the highest of all powers that you know of. Be in His elevating and inspiring company; worship Him mentally; offer unto Him all the work you do; you will come out of the silence nobler and more heroic than when you went in. Just consider---do you come out of the cinema theatre more peaceful, more heroic, purer, nobler than when you went in? No; your passions are aroused, your animal impulses are catered for, your lower nature is fed. Nothing else can give one that rich reward, which silence and prayer and communion with the Master can give. Not even a decent bank account, nor a string of degrees, nor the muscles of a prize fighter.

Spend money you earn usefully and wisely

There is a story connected with the construction of the great temple at Kaalahaathi. It was built according to tradition by sage Agasthya, helped by Bhrigu and Bharadhwaja. Every day when the Sun was about to set, Agasthya called every worker before him as he sat on the river bed and under his instruction, the two sages poured into the lap of each worker, sand taken from the bed; that was his wages! Now, that sand changed into gold in strict proportion to the work that the receiver had put in that day. If one did more work, he got more gold; if less, less. If one had wasted the entire day, it would remain sand, so far as that worker was concerned. There was no injustice, no grumbling, no favouritism. All worked in the presence of the All-seeing and so, all accepted the gold that was vouchsafed by the Almighty, for it was just his due, no more, no less.

It is work that is done in this spirit, the spirit of the constant presence of the Lord, that is honest; the Lord will reward by His Grace the work that is done sincerely and gladly, not work that is done for fear of superior officers, or maistries (foremen). If your hearts are pure, your work too would be pure.

Remember the grandeur of what you are engaged in, here. Remember the might of this river which you are persuading to obey you. That will make you humble and devoted. In the Prashaanthi Nilayam, the Bhakthas themselves carried on their shoulders stone, mortar and sand, and as a result of the seva they did, we have now a big hospital and a fine Paathashaala and a huge auditorium. The entire building is saturated with their Bhakthi and so I said once, the patients are cured by the aroma of that devotion itself.

Be careful when you choose your friends

You should use the money that you earn usefully and wisely. Crores of rupees are distributed at every project site to the workmen, but, at the end of it all, when the camp is broken and the people start packing, they have little to carry home! Do not fritter away your hard-earned incomes on tinsel, entertainment and temporary pleasure; think of your future, your children, your parents. Think also of the reaction these wasteful, attractions produce. Think of the harm they inflict on your precious character. Think of all those who are dependent on you for food and shelter and the love that you alone can offer them. Examine each item of expenditure with reference to these noble tasks. That is the sign of the wise man.

Do not admit into your mind the demon of a-shaanthi (restlessness).
 Direct all your cleverness and all your intelligence to the successful execution of the great drama which all of you are helping to present. It is His Drama, He is the Director, you are but a role, an actor, carrying out His Will, speaking words that He has put in your mouth, making movements as directed by Him.
 It is all a matter of the company you fall into. Be careful when you choose your friends. Form small Sathsangs and meet regularly for Bhajana and mutual consultations about spiritual matters.
 Read some fine spiritual classics like the Bhagavadh Geetha. Fill your eyes with the Beauty of His Form, your ears with the story of His Leelas (miraculous activities), hearts with the sweetness of His Glory; inspire yourselves by seeing Him everywhere.
 Think of His Immanence in every hill and dale, every man and beast, every tree, bird and insect. You will be really thrilled by the joy of that vision. That will make your work as light as puuja and as satisfying.
 Dwell on Brahman that binds all jeevas together The vaanaras (sub-humans) while building the bridge across the ocean, carried huge boulders on their heads, repeating Raama-naama all the while and that made the rocks weigh less; it is even said that they wrote the name on the stones and that made them float! Each time they hauled or lifted a stone, they sang Raama-naama in unison and so they were a happy lot, doing puuja; not work, which is unpleasant. Raama's Grace helped all to overcome obstacles. Take the name and make your work light; that is My advice to you.
 Your officer here gave Me a garland of flowers just now; it is made up of two things- flowers that were buds yesterday, that blossomed today, and will fade before morn; and the thread that was, is and will be. The flower is a-nithya (impermanent); it represents the jeevi (living being), that is subject to birth, growth and decay; the thread is nithya (eternal), it is Brahman (Omnibeing), on which all jeevis are strung---"suuthre mani ganaa ira." The Jeevas, like these flowers, are of different characteristics and natures and vaasanas (past impressions), but the string is one uniform consistent base, the Brahma Suuthra, that binds all together, in one common creation. Dwell upon that unity for some time at least, every day, and that will save you from all types of a-shaanthi {agitation).
 You are engaged in the task of conferring sukha, santhosha and sampath (welfare, happiness and prosperity) to crores of people; I bless you so that you may complete the sacred task quickly and successfully, without the shadow of misfortune of interruption of any sort, and with no discordant note.

Shrishailam Project Site---Address to the Workers, 6-12-1963 Without the control of the senses, man is like a horse without blinkers, like a bull that refuses to yield to the yoke; his saadhana is a waste of time and energy. The special feature of man's composition is that he has discrimination, detachment and synoptic intellect; he can discover Truth and be fixed in it, and gain unshakable peace.
Sathya Sai Baaba
 39. The turn of the key THE task now is to install Dharma in every heart, to shed light on every road, through the revival of Vedhaantha. The world is like a famished person, waiting for a feast; it is like the parched land waiting for rain. I have seen and felt the atmosphere of this land surcharged with discontent and dishonesty; I have seen it from Kanyaakumari to the Himaalayas. That is the reason why thousands like you seek dharshan, sparshan and sambhaashana (sacred sight, touch and talk). I am only surprised that thousands are denying themselves the chance.
 Man 'is daily growing more and more greedy to know more about the lives of others, more extrovert, in fact. He wants to escape from himself, by interesting himself in others. He does not want to worry about the details of his own life, or the problems of his own rehabilitation. Of what benefit is all this burden of information that you seek to carry in your head, this knowledge of the various regions of the world, without a knowledge of the region of your own self, the centre of all the interest that you evince? It is no good wandering all over the world, contacting men of various races, and getting engrossed with earning and spending without being able to know your own identity!
 To win Bliss, saadhana with vairaagya is essential
 The tree of the human body finds its fruition, when it yields prema.
 That sweet gift is the reason why it grew and had to be fostered. It drew its substance from the earth and the Sun. What does it give in return for the gifts it got from both these as well as from the human community prema.
 The fruit is sweet, but the rind can afford to be bitter. For the rind of anger, malice, envy, greed has to be peeled off, before it is put to use. Use the bitterness in you to preserve and develop the sweetness within yourself.

From the experience of saints and sages, you can realise that the joy got from the external world is infinitesimal when compared with the Bliss won through spiritual discipline. To win that Bliss, saadhana (spiritual effort) full of vairaagya (detachment) is essential. When boring is done to draw water from the bowels of the earth, the pipe has to be kept free from air so that the water could rise up. If the air enters, the water will not rise. So too, be sure that attachment to worldly things does not mar your saadhana. Prema will not well up, if sensual pleasures and personal pride invade the Mind.
So long as life persists, you will be caught up in heights and depths, good and bad, rights and wrongs. Duality is inevitable. It is even necessary. A hero shines against a background of villains; Prahlada's faith had to be tested against the background of Hiranyakasipu's denials; the Paandavas demonstrated the strength of meekness only when they faced the savagery of the Kauravas. A city has pipes for the drinking water, as well as for sewage. Man has a system of arteries as well as veins, for the circulation of pure and impure blood.
Both contribute to the health of the individual.
Yoga is often turned into Roga The fault is: You know that a thing is improper, but still you continue to do it, curbing your conscience and suppressing the nobler impulses. The world is all set for profit, as the quickest means of attaining joy. High profit, quick profit, easy profit---why, when measuring or counting, you don't start with "One," but say instead, "Laabham" (Profit). The next one is two, of course, but, the idea with which you start is "Laabham," not Service!
The problem should not be how to live glamorously so that you make others envy you, but how to live gloriously or better still, how to die gloriously!--so gloriously that you are not put to the humiliation of dying again. What do you take with you when you die?
Mahamud of Ghazni instructed his Vazir to take his corpse to the burial ground with both his hands raised, so that people should see that he came with empty hands and went with hands as empty as when he came, though he had plundered the wealth of a hundred cities.
Saadhana has to be taken up under the direction of an expert, who knows your health and temperament well. Over-enthusiasm and irregularity are both to be avoided. If viveka (discrimination) plays false, saadhana (spiritual practice) is a snare; a little forgetfulness of the limits of heating may spoil kiln of bricks; a few extra handfuls of washing soda will ruin a bundle of clothes in the wash; a few extra words with the neighbour regardless of time, and a whole potful of rice is overboiled and wasted. Vigilance, care, circumspection---these are very important for the Saadhaka. Yoga is often turned into Roga (disease), for lack of continuous selfexamination.

Attach yourself to the Larger Self A man weeping, because he has been bitten by a cobra in his dream, can be cured by just being woken up! No doctor is needed. So, too when Arjuna who was suffering from ajnaana (ignorance) was given jnaana (spiritual knowledge), he recovered and did his duty. The pain and the snake will both disappear if the dreamer is awakened. He is only imagining that a snake bit him.
When you invite a blind person for dinner, remember that you have to lay two plates not one for one guest only. For, he will be certainly accompanied by a guide. The blind man is Arjuna and the guide is Sujnaana. Sujnaana (good knowledge) will lead him aright. Both are in the same person. Only, Sujnaana has to take charge and lead.
Turn the key to the right, it is unlocked. Turn to God and righteousness, the lock opens, the chain falls away. Turn it to the left, you become bound; the bolt falls in; the chain holds fast. It is just a question of the point of view---outlook or Inlook? Out-query? In-query?
For all this, the prime need is Faith. Faith in yourself! You can move mountains in the social level, if you conquer your mind in the individual level. Curb your powers and make them run along useful channels; that will result in Joy for you and others. To get that faith, know your Truth. To know that, attach yourself to the Larger Self, of which you are a part, by constant Naamasmarana.
Speech at Dhronaachalam, 8-12-1963
To get the attitude of surrender, of dedication, you must have Faith in God.
This world is His play; it is not an empty dream; it has purpose and use. It is the means by which one can discover God; see Him in the beauty, the grandeur, the order, the majesty of Nature. These are but shadows of His Glory and His splendour.
Upaasana (adoration of God), leads to the knowledge that He is in all; when you experience that there is no Second, that is jnaana!

Sathya Sai Baaba

41. Fine arts and the finest arts

INDIA is the Moolasthaanam (sanctum sanctorum) of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema (Truth, Virtue, Peace and Love); she has been holding forth these ideals and emphasising their practice since centuries. Bhaarith means the land that has rathi (attachment) to bha or Bhagavaan; it means that the people here are God-loving, not so much God-fearing. If you love God, you have to love Man also. This teaching that Sathya is the basis of Dharma which lays down individual and social duties and obligations, and that Sathya is also the root of Prema and Shaanthi---this is the unique feature of Bhaarith. Sathya is enough; no other God need be worshipped.. Here, in the Gurukulams and the Rishiaashrams (hermitages), the emphasis has always been on practice, on Aachaara and Vichaara (conduct and deliberation). Use your reason; it is God-given gift. Satisfy yourself whether the prescription will cure you; then, follow also the course of discipline which is recommended with the particular drug. Then you gain Aanandha, full, free, undiminishable. That is the teaching which the people of Bhaarith have been receiving from the cradle to the grave for ages. Sundharamuurthy had arranged a "grand" procession for Me from his Institute to this Stadium, for, this day he is celebrating the Silver Jubilee of his Institute! Let Me tell you this now itself: I do not like this pomp and show. I do not derive any joy out of it. Do not waste money on pomp and show. Pomp, such as this, has become a fashion now, even among ascetics and monks who ought to know better. They profess poverty and simplicity and yet, they allow or encourage their disciples to waste much energy and money on pomp and pageantry which serve only to develop the egoism of themselves and their followers. The emphasis on show makes a thing hollow of all meaning. The misery of the present age is largely due to this empty ritual of insincere demonstrations. You should all resolve to maintain the honour and dignity of the country, which is your responsibility. Bhaarith is entitled to be the Guru (preceptor) of the world. Her's is no mean history. This is the land of Krishna, where the Vedhas and the Upanishadhs saw the light, where Shankaraacharya established monasteries for the propagation of the Sanaathana Dharma (eternal religion). This land will be saved, for it has a mission to perform, which no other can fulfill.

Don't yield to silly fears that this or that country will endanger its freedom. That is impossible.

The Avathaar of the Lord has come and the effect will be safety for this holy land. Live the life that was held forth as the ideal by the sages of the past and happiness is ensured. That kind of life will give internal contentment and quiet calm. Festival of the Aathma is more magnificent. Prayer is a more powerful force than military re-enforcements: if made with a sincere heart it will be certainly answered. It will strengthen the hands of the people of this land more than any other source of encouragement.' It will join the hearts of the people more than lectures or pamphlets can do. What is the use of trying for the unity of mankind or the union of this continent or that, with so many factions and misunderstandings festering this country? Become united yourselves sincerely and firmly, before advising others to close up their ranks. Repent for the faults of partisanship committed by you and begin a new chapter of brotherly co-operation.

Sundharamuurthy and his friends and coworkers are happy today because of the 'Silver Jubilee'.

It is a festival for the Institute: but, I consider the Festival of the Aathma to be more magnificent.

The Aathma has an eternal festival! It is Aanandhaswaruupa (bliss-filled). It is beyond time and so does not calculate the passage of time. How Can man celebrate a festival, let Me ask, while he is afflicted by Deha bhraanthi, Indhriya bhraanthi, Mano bhraanthi and Loka bhraanthi? He believes the falsehoods (bhraanthi) that are named the body, the senses, the mind, the world! He pursues them and tastes joy and grief; and, when a certain number of years is passed in the pastime, he celebrates a festival!

Man is a compound of animal and angel

This is maayaa (illusory power) within Maayaa (the great worldly illusion). I have not come to announce to you that this Institute has finished twenty-five years of existence. I am concerned with the spiritual arts, the finest arts, rather than the fine arts. I want that Sundharamuurthy should depict in dance spiritually elevating subjects, like Raadha and Krishna and their sublime relationship that is beyond the ken of man. He must give up themes such as drunkards, evil men, power-drunk personalities and clowns, which cater to vulgar tastes.

Adjust all items of dance and dramatic representation to the spiritual urge in man; foster it, fertilise it and take people a little nearer to the Goal.
Man is a compound of animal and angel, we can say. He has in him the wolf, the monkey, the bullock, the jackal, the snake, the peacock, the bear---and he has beneath all these, the pure Spark of Divinity too. It is the duty of all who cater to the senses of man to transform the low values now pervading, and transmute them into higher values. The rulers too must canalise the enthusiasm and imagination of the people along healthy lines.
Bangalore, Shivaajinagar, 14-12-1963 41. Samadhrishti THOSE who live in Malleswaram have made good arrangements for celebrating the Annual Festival of the Bhajana (community singing) that they have been conducting here. Bhajana always gives aanandha and shaanthi. See that it is not used for increasing your egoism, or mutual recrimination, or envy or pride, as very often happens. Be humble, be calm, be tolerant.
Co-operate with all and treat every one with courtesy and kindness.
Bhakthi is not a uniform to be worn on Thursday evenings, when you gather for bhajana, and to be laid aside when the bhajana is over. It must mean the promotion of an attitude of humility, of revering parents, teachers, elders, and others; it is a mental outlook, an attitude that is everpresent.
It is the sustenance of the heart, just as food is sustenance for the body. Like the needle of the compass always pointing to the North, never deviating from that direction, returning to it, readily, gladly, quickly, whenever it is shaken off that line, so too the bhaktha (devotee) must face the Lord ever, must be happy only when he is set towards Him.
The spiritual Thriveni leading to samadhrishti Many people think of God only when grief overtakes them; of course, it is good to do so; it is better than seeking the help of those who are also equally liable to grief. But, it is infinitely better to think of God in grief and in joy, in peace and strife, in all weathers.
The proof of the rain is in the wetness of the ground; the proof of bhakthi is in the shaanthi the bhaktha has, shaanthi which protects him against the onslaughts of success as well as failure, fame, dishonour, gain and loss.
Bhakthi is the river Ganga. Vairagya (detachment) is the river Yamuna and Inaana is the river Saraswathi of this spiritual Thriveni (confluence of three ivers). Inaana is the throughtrain: you just board it, that is enough; it takes you direct to the destination.

Bhakthi is the through-carriage; though it may be detached from one train and connected with another, if you get into it, you need not worry; so long as you stick to your place, it is bound to take you to the destination. Karma is the ordinary train; if you board it, you have to disembark, climb in and climb out at every junction, load your luggage and unload it, and do a good lot of work to reach your destination.
Bhakthi alone is enough, even to acquire inaana. It ends in Samadhrishti (seeing only Brahman in all) and it destroys egoism. Inaana too gives you these. Naaradha once offered to teach the Gopees (illiterate cowherd women), the principles of philosophy, Vijnaanabodha, as he called it.
Krishna agreed. But, they said. "We do not care for your learning and your discourse. We see Krishna everywhere and in everything and so, we have no hate or envy or malice. We have Samadhrishti and we have no ahamkaaram (egoism). We believe this is enough for us." Naaradha found that what they claimed was correct; so he left discomfited.
You are not travelling Godward Now, most of you are leading a double or treble life; Yogam (practising union with God) in the morning, bhogam (enjoyment) the rest of the day and rogam (suffering) at night. You seek Aanandha outside you and suffer from the ulcer of desire inside you.
You utter one thing with the tongue and carry out the opposite with the hand. You claim to be seekers of Inaana but you are attached to the delusion you have cultivated. You have a ticket for Calcutta but you are travelling in the train headed for Bombay! With the body which is your ticket, Vijnaana, and Vairagya (world knowledge and detachment) t as your luggage, you are travelling not in the train which goes Godward but in the train leading to Prakrithi (objective world). This is the pity!
The roots must go deep, deep down to the level of underground water. The trees that grow on the bunds of canals are green with thick foliage. Your roots must also go deep into the Divinity that will keep you green whatever the dryness of the weather or heat of the Sun.
You can recognise God in your own self This is the Age of Profit. The question that any one asks when he is asked to do a thing is, "What is the profit?" "How much is the profit?" "How sure is the profit?" Well. Let Me also ask, "Of what profit is all this feeding and growing, this striving and struggling, this earning and saving and spending, this losing and gaining, this speeding in cars and planes, if by these means you do not get peace in the mind, joy in the heart?" All these activities only serve to hide the real nature of the individual, to overwhelm it under a mass of trivialities, to suppress the natural influence of the real Truth of Man. Develop a love for God, then you can recognise Him very near you, in your own Self.

That is the assurance I am giving to all of you.

Malleshwaram, Sathya Sai Bhajana Mandal, 15-12-1963

The conquest of the ego is a very hard task; years of persistent effort are needed to get success in this endeavour. For getting a Degree you struggle in the University for a number of years, poring over books night and day, how much more difficult is this examination, success in which guarantees lasting happiness, and escape from the weary round of birth and death.

Sathya Sai Baba

42. The Divine Voice

NARAKAASURA is present in every one as kaama, krodha, lobha (lust, hate, greed) and as bhaya and dhukha (fear and grief), which are against the very nature of man. Just as an umbrella with inferior cover, cannot protect you from rain, but only one with a waterproof cover, so too in this stormdriven world incessantly flushed by-torrential rain, an umbrella with kaama-proof and krodha-proof covering is required. The five bhuuthas (fire, earth, water, ether and wind) cannot harm one who is equipped with such protection. The five Durgas (fortresses) in which Narakaasura is said to have taken refuge are the five elements.

There is great Avyaktha shakthi (latent power) inherent in every one and when that shakthi is made vyaktha (explicit), man deserves to be called vyakthi (individual). When that is made manifest. the asura (demon) will automatically be destroyed. Your reality is Aathma; your quality is Aanandha. What does it matter to you if the Narakaasura of the Puraanas is killed, by Krishna and Sathyabhaama. For you, Krishna is Paramaathma (Super or Omni Self) and Sathyabhaama is the jeevi (individual self). Paramaathma destroys the evil propensities with the active collaboration of jeevi; jeevi defeats evil with the active Grace of the Lord.
Make kaama, the servant of Raama

India is the repository of spiritual power: but now, scarcely any one practises the disciplined life which is the mark of that power. Even now millions go on pilgrimages; millions of copies of sacred texts and spiritual lore are bought and read-thousands of ascetics and gurus are scattered over the land and they receive the homage of the people. But yet there is no peace in the heart, no food ill the stomach, no clothes to keep the cold off the body. India which is Annapoornaswaruupa (the granary of the earth), has now to go about with begging bowl for food for her children. This tragedy is caused by ill-discipline, by want of self-control. by what can be called A-swaaraaiya (the absence of Self-Government, Government of the Self).

Sathyanaaraayana, when he acted the role of Sathyabhaama in the drama, remembered always that he was Sathyanaaraayana, though he was also aware that he had a part to play in the drama and he played it well. It would be a failure if he forgets either his Sathyanaaraayana-hood or his Sathyab-haama-hood. So, too, act in the world but remember your genuine Self. When humanity forgets that this is a play and starts assuming it real, the Lord comes down to remind them of it.

Otherwise, when the execution scene is enacted heads will fall; when Lanka is set on fire in the drama, the theatre itself will be consumed. Do not take the world more seriously than it deserves.

There is space for only just one throne in your heart. But, now you are inviting too many to sit on it or you try to put two thrones there, one for Raama, and one for kaama; or, when you find it difficult, you are inviting Raama and Kaama to squeeze themselves into that one seat! Or, you install Kaama and want Raama to sit down below as his henchman!

No wonder Raama deserts you. Make Raama the deity on the throne and utilise kaama as His servant---there is no harm.

Cultivate the inward look The mother-cat, it is said, takes hold of the new born kitten and shifts it from place to place, seven times, within few days of its birth, so that its eyes might open and it might see! The kitten gets proper vision after going through seven transfers but, man does not get the vision (viz), that he is in reality the deathless, birthless, infinite Aathman even after he is shifted from womb to womb a million times! This is the tragedy of ignorance and sloth.
You have heard of the story of Gajendhra moksha, the elephant caught and dragged by the crocodile, appealing helplessly to the Lord and the Lord sending down the Sudharshana Chakra (discus) to slay the tormentor and save the beast. The story has a deeper meaning, which has universal appeal. The wild elephant is the jeevi (the individual), full of sensual greed and blind with delusion. It enters the tank of samsaara (flux), of the objective world. There the crocodile of egoism grasps its leg in the vice of its teeth and pulls it down deeper and deeper into the mire of Samsaara. There is a definite process for God-realisation. The individual struggles by itself for a long time until pride is exhausted and its faith in its own powers is spent. Then, it appeals in complete sharanaagathi (surrender) to the Lord and what does the Lord send? Sudharshana. Mark that word, What does it mean? Sudharshana---Good sight! Beneficial outlook! A vision that is correct, conducive to lasting joy, namely, the inward look, away, from the sense objects, Aavariththa Chakshu. As soon as that sight is cultivated, egoism is destroyed and the jeevi is freed. Live and act in the world, by all means; but, deal with samsaara as you apply collyrium to the eye. The eye is not blinded by the collyrium, it is rendered more efficient, more charming, that is all. So too, samsaara (worldly life) must make your saadhana (spiritual effort) more efficient and more pleasing to yourself and others. Be like the lotus which though born in mud rises higher, through the waters, on the region of sunlight. It requires both mud and water for its existence but, it knows their real value; so it does not allow itself to be contaminated by either. A great sage once fell in with a gang of non-believers in an atheist settlement. They crowded around him and plied him with impertinent queries and insisted that he must show them the God in whom he believed. The sage promised to do so, but, asked for some milk, before he could demonstrate God. The vessel of milk was brought; he sat silent for a long while, stirring the milk with his finger. The crowd got exasperated at the delay and at his silence. They asked him what he was at; he replied that he was only trying to spot out where the butter was, top, middle or bottom? The crowd shouted that it was everywhere, in every drop of milk and that he could see it only when the preliminary process of churning was done. Then, the sage answered, "Well, the Lord too is immanent in every atom of this Universe. He can be perceived and experienced only when the preliminary spiritual exercises of saadhana are done. There is a definite well-known process for God-realisation also, just as there is a definite well-known process for butter realisation. Prashaanthi Nilayam, December 1963 I want devotees to improve their behaviour and character. It is no good attending the temple and sharing loudly, with cymbals in your hands, in the singing of devotional songs there. They are but external signs of enthusiasm. God watches the bhaavam (the thought power behind), not the baahyam (the outward pomp)

Sathya Sai Baba
Does Sai Speak?
Sathya Sai Speaks
Does Sai speak these words into avid ears and arid hearts? No!... It is our Mother that speaks, caressing, cajoling, crooning lullabies to relieve the pain, bless with bliss, Mok-shayisbyaami, maa suchah! (I will see that you are liberated, don't worry). Don't weep, she cradles us! She leads us softly along the road, over pebbles, thorns. When the path is bitter, uphill, hard, she sings us through Yogakshemam vahaamyaham (I bear the responsibility of your welfare))--- our Mother speaks.
Sathya Sai Speaks
Does Sai speak these words into tingling ears and twinkling hearts? No!... It is our Father that speaks, refining, revealing, reminding our name to us, long forgotten, long begotten! Abhayam Sarva bhoothebhyo! (I protect all the creation). Don't fear, He armours us. Upward, onward, goodward, Godward---guides us, guards us. When the path is tortuous, twisted, He pulls us through. Na Sukhaal- labhyathe sukham (without good times happiness is not possible) --- our Father speaks.
Sathya Sai Speaks
Does Sai speak these words into mazy ears and crazy hearts? No!... It is our Master that speaks, advising, admonishing, heating us crucibly, treating us crucially, leading to God within.
Eesaavaasyam idam sarvam! (Lord is in everything...the whole world is His). There's no two; He opens the lid of Divine Box, with treasures encased in kosas (sheaths) five, Sathyam (Truth), Inaanam (knowledge), Aanandam (Bliss), Brahman (God)---the Master speaks.
Sathya Sai Speaks
Does Sai speak these words into searching ears and seeking hearts? No! It is God that speaks, stilling the mind of waywardness, Brahmavid brahmaiva bhavathi! (Knowledge of Brahman or God makes one merge with Him). Become and be, He wakens. "Dear wave! emerging; merge; dear ray! run back". He calls. "Dear spark! re-enter fire; You are I, I am you". Soham loses 'sa' and 'barn'; Om alone is He and We, Ekam-eva-ak-sharam Brahman (Brahmam is symbolised by ONE syllable Om). This is how Sai speaks.

1. Heroes, not Zeros

PANDITH Sathyanaaraayana Avadhaanulu could have spoken for some more time, but he stopped rather suddenly perhaps to give Me more time. You must not grow listless when others speak; for, whoever speaks here, he is giving you the nectar of the Vedhas or Shaasthras (scriptures) and that is sweet and liberating ever. Moreover, he said that this evening, we have met here since it is New Year Day, the first of January 1964! Well. This is a delusion within the larger Delusion! This Day is welcomed as marking some big change, as if yesterday was something quite different for it belonged to 1963 and today is something quite distinct, for it is 1964! This day is celebrated by people, in picnics, in gambling, in drinking and feasting; they attend cinema shows, wear new clothes, give presents, to each other and greet all with joy and hilarity. They exhaust their money and their energy in the pursuit of frivolity, thrill and excitement.

All this is due to the custom that views this day as something unique. In fact, the 'year' is just a convention. There are as many New Year Days as there are days in the year; many communities and countries have their own distinct calendars. It is not the first of January or the first of Chaithra (first month of Thelugu New Year) that is unique. The year is just a name to indicate a number of months, the month a number of days, a day to indicate a number of hours, the hour is a period of time counted in minutes, and the minute is a name for sixty seconds. Each second is new. It is a gift, a chance, an opportunity, a thing to be celebrated, to be used for your uplift. That is to say, each second is a fresh chance given to you for training the mind, refining the intellect, purifying the emotions, strengthening the will, for getting confirmed in the conviction that you are the deathless Aathma (Self, the Infinite Consciousness). Be like the lotus with head high above waters

Be thankful to the Lord that He gave you Time, as well as action to fill it with. He gave you food, as well as hunger to relish it. But, that does not entitle you to engage yourself in action indiscriminately. When you build a house, you install a door in front. What is the purpose of the door? To admit all whom you welcome and to keep out all whom you do not want. It has a double purpose; you do not keep the doors wide open, for all and sundry to come in as and when they like. So too, select the impulses, the motives, the incentives that enter your mind; keep out the demeaning, the debasing, the deleterious. Admit the highest wisdom of the scriptures, the wisdom culled out of the crucible of experience, called anubhavajnaanam.

All water is not potable; the stagnant pool is to be avoided, the flowing river is better. Select and drink. Use the mosquito curtain, but, see that the mosquitoes do not get in when you go to bed. Keep them out; do not imprison them inside the net. Sail in the boat that floats on water but, do not allow the water to enter the boat. Be in worldly life, but, do not allow it to get into you. Use the doors intelligently, to let in those whom you want, and keep out those whom you do not need. The lotus, born in slime and mud, rises up through the water and lifts its head high above the waters; it refuses to get wet though water is the element which gives it life! Be like the lotus.

By action, done with all this care, the Vision gets clarified. Man is blinded by the objective world and he believes that world to be real, meaningful and worthy of pursuit. The cataract grows in the eye and robs it of its efficiency. The cataract is the enemy of the eye. Ignorance, the cataract of the inner eye, blinds the intellect and robs it of its efficiency. So, it cannot see the Divinity that is your real nature. It misleads you into the impression that you are a man (Maanava), whereas you are really God (Maadhava). Tread the path of Liberation. The rope is mistaken to be a snake and the perceiver flees in fear. The truth is, it is not the organeye that sees; there are many whose eyes are good, so far as doctors can discover, but they cannot see! The eye sees because it is illumined by a microscopic spark of the rays of the Sun.

The scripture says: "Chakshos Suryo ajayatha": From the eye, Surya was born. The soul is the motive force of all the senses; the eye is but a window through which the soul peeps out at the external world. Of what use is the eye, when the vision is not correct? That is to say, when you have no Samadhrishti. Samam means Brahman, the Absolute Reality; Samadhrishti means, seeing only Brahman, the One, in all things at all times. This Ekathwam (Oneness) is the basic truth. All other experiences are partial, distorted, false. Dwell on that, in your meditation. Fix it in your inner consciousness. That is the path of Liberation, which you must start treading and, today is as good a day as any, for deciding to do so. You have meditated too long on riches, status, salary, children, relatives, fame and the standard of living. They are all of minor interest, momentary value, dubious profit. Meditate, fix your urge on the Nithya, the Sathya, the Nirmala, the Nischala---the Eternal, the Real, the Pure and the Immovable. The Eternal Charioteer Pandith Avadhaanulu referred to some incidents mentioned in the Mahaabhaaraatha and so, I too shall mention just one point which will make you appreciate the Mahaabhaaraatha more. The Lord had Maayaa (Illusion) as His Consort, so to say, and He had a son, called Manas (Mind). This Manas, to continue the parable, had two wives: Pravritthi and Nivritthi---Attachment and Detachment. Of course, Attachment was his favourite wife, and she had a hundred children. Detachment was ill-treated and neglected and she had five children. That is the symbolism of the Kauravas (hundred sons) and the Paandavas (five sons) of Mahaabhaaraatha. Though the children all lived in the same kingdom, ate the same food and learnt from the same teacher, their natures differed widely from one another; the Kauravas, children of Attachment were greedy, cruel, selfcentred and vain; the Paandavas, the five of them, each one represented a supreme virtue, so that they could be said to symbolise sathya, dharma, shaanthi, prema and ahimsa (truth, righteousness, peace, love and non-injury). Since they were so pure and born of Detachment, the Lord became their guide. In fact the Lord will be the Guide of whoever installs Him as his Saarathi (Charioteer). He will not consider that position inferior. He is the Sanaathana Saarathi (Eternal Charioteer) come to be the Charioteer of all. He is the Lord, for all who seek a Master, a support. The soul is the Master in every one and Krishna is the Universal soul, personified. Let the Lord shape your mind

There are two birds sitting on one tree, the Upanishadh says: the jeevaathma and the Paramaathma---the individual soul and the Supreme Soul--on the tree of this body, this World. One bird eats the fruits of that tree, while the other simply looks on, as a witness. But, the wonder is, the two birds are really one, though they appear as two; they cannot be separated, since they are two aspects of the same entity. Steam in the air cannot be seen; it has no shape or form; but it is the same as ice, which is hard, heavy and cold. Niraakaara and Saakaara (without Form and with Form), are just two ways in which the One manifests Itself. The minute hand of the clock is the individual soul the bird that eats the fruits. It goes round and round but, the hour hand moves silently and slowly, with a certain dignity. The hour hand can be said to be the Supreme Soul. Once an hour the two meet, but, the individual soul does not get that consummation fixed for ever. It loses the precious chance and so has to go round and round again and again. Liberation is when the two merge, and only one remains. When the obstacles in the path of truth are laid low, deliverance is achieved. That is why moksha (liberation) is something that can be won, here and now; one need not wait for the dissolution of the physical body for that. Action must not be felt as a burden, for that feeling is a sure sign, indicating that it is against the grain. No action which helps your progress will weigh heavily on you. It is only when you go counter to your innermost nature that you feel it a burden. A time comes when you look back on your achievement and sigh at the futility of it all. Entrust to the Lord, before it is too late, your mind and let Him shape it as He likes. Assign to your mind the task of serving the Lord and it will grow tame. You do not hand over the goldsmith an ornament that is quite nice; you give him for repairs or reshaping, the ornaments you feel have been broken or dented or gone out of fashion. So too, give the Lord your mind that certainly needs repair, if not complete reconstruction. Man should have no fear. The blemish that affects the mind is illusion. It is like a fierce dog that will not allow any one to approach the Master. You can manage to by-pass it, only by assuming the ruupam or Form of the Master, which is called Saaruupyam, or by calling out for the Master so loudly that He comes down and accompanies you into the house, that is to say, by winning (proximity). Illusion is His pet and so, it will not harm you if He orders it to desist from harming you.

His Grace, Saameepyam

The Master comes to save not one good man from Illusion, but the whole of mankind. Of course,

He has to come assuming a Form that man can love, revere, and appreciate. He can give joy and courage, only if He speaks the language of human intercourse. Even as it is, many are afraid to approach Me, for they know I am aware of their innermost thoughts and deepest desires. But, let Me tell you, only helpless animals have fear. Man, who is child of Immortality, should have no fear. People pray before stone images of the snake god, but when the actual snake appears in answer to their prayers, they run away terror-stricken from the shrine! The Lord manifests Himself only to shower Grace, never to strike terror.

On the banks of the river near Lucknow, there was a sage who addressed dogs, crows and men equally as God; he had realised the unity of all in the Divine Essence. That is the result of Divine knowledge, or intense Bhakthi, where you do not see anything other than your Ishtadevatha (Chosen Deity), wherever you turn. Be ever in that Divine Bliss, the bliss that comes from Godconsciousness, always and everywhere. That is the Eternal Bliss (Nithyaanandha) which the wise enjoy.

Like the silk-worm that spins from out of itself the cocoon that proves to be its tomb, man spins from out of his own mind the cage in which he gets trapped. But, there is a way of escape, which the spiritual teacher (Guru) can teach you or which the God in you will reveal to you. Take to the spiritual practice which will bring relief. Away with the roles of clown and clout, which you have acted all the ages. Take on the role of the Hero, not the Zero! Forget the past, do not worry about possible errors or disappointments. Decide and do.

There are some spiritual teachers who advise you to keep a daily diary, where you note down every item of evil that you did; they ask you to read it as a spiritual exercise and resolve to correct yourself. Well, reading it, and writing it will only tend to impress it more effectively on the mind. It is better to substitute good thoughts for the bad and cleanse the mind of all evil by dwelling on righteous deeds and holy thoughts. Forget the things that you do not want to remember. Bring to memory only those things that are worth remembering. That is the sane way to achieve spiritual progress.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 1-1-1964

2. Names do not matter

TODAY is a holy day because people honour it as such. Every day is holy for those who utilise it for holy purposes; but there are some days set apart as specially significant and Makara Sankraanthi is one such. Sankraanthi is so called because the day takes you from darkness to increasing light; the path of light is open from today. The Sun enters upon the Uttaraayanam (journey towards North) this day; he moves from the Makararekha in the Madhyarekha.

Bheeshma waited for this day, spending 56 days on the bed of arrows in pain, because he felt that death, when the Sun starts the journey towards north, is auspicious. He wanted to offer his life at the Feet of the Lord at an auspicious moment.

Man must proceed ever towards bhavam (strength); he should not take to untruth, wickedness, crookedness--all of which denote a fundamental fatal trait of cowardice, weakness (balaheenam).

Weakness is born of accepting as true a lower image of yourself than what the facts warrant. You believe you are the husk, but, really you are the kernel. That is the main mistake. All spiritual practice must be directed to the removal of the husk and the revelation of the kernel. So long as you say, 'I am,' there is bound to be fear, but, once you say and feel, 'Aham Brahmaasmi' (I am Brahman), you get unconquerable strength.

The body is the field (kshethra) of the Master who knows all kshethras. One day, when Vivekaanandha was in his room, at night, sleepless because he was tossed about by conflicting thoughts, Raamakrishna who was 'asleep,' was talking as if in a dream but his talk was clearly heard by Vivekaanandha. He said, "O Manas! (O Mind!)! O Maanasa raajahamsa (Royal swan of the mind)! O Nithya-aanandha rasaika nilaya (Repository of Etenal Bliss only)! You are Divine in nature---Daivaswaruupa. Sport in the pure lake of meditation of the Divine; instead, why do you crave for the dirty pond of sensual pleasure!" That was the advice of the Guru to Naren. Naren immediately resolved to take that advice to heart.

Characteristic of Incarnations

The influence of the Divine is such that while you are contemplating it, all traces of envy and greed will disappear from the mind. The boy Krishna had entered a Gopee's house and was just standing beneath the pot of curds when she discovered Him. Krishna ran out into the street and the Gopee pursued Him, and wanted to catch Him soon, for she was so pained that the boy was running in the hot Sun. She never worried about the loss of curds or milk or butter, but the very thought of Krishna's tender feet walking over the hard stones in the Sun was something she could not bear. The divine love that Krishna showered, made every one forget everything else. He too gave such disarming replies to the queries of the mother and the Gopees (cow-herd girls) that no one could have anything but divine love towards Him. That is the characteristic of Divine Incarnations, at all times.

"She was carrying the milk to the temple to be offered to God; perhaps God Himself took the vessel away from her," He would say, announcing indirectly His own Reality. "I was sleeping by your side, Mother. How then could I have gone away to their houses, to steal their butter?" He would plead--suggesting that He could be in more than one place at a point of time. When caught in the act of searching for butter, He would say that He had put His hand in the pot, just to find out if a calf that had run away was inside it! With such lovely retorts, He won a place in every heart and the Gopees vied with each other in fondling Him and serving Him.

Tread the path of Gods Krishna was the same Premaswaruupa (Divine love personified) even for the Grandfather Bheeshma. The illiterate simple Gopees and the old revered warrior Bheeshma, persons of all types, grades and professions found in Him their chief source of Wisdom, Grace and Inspiration.

That is the sign of the Incarnation. When he waited for the northward movement of the Sun to come, Bheeshma was giving man a valuable message: the Sun is the presiding deity of intellect (buddhi) and when in the hridhayaakaasha (space in the heart) the Sun takes a northward turn, that is, the Utthara-ayana or the Utthama-ayana (the Superior Path), the path which leads to God instead of the downward path to the objective world, that period is best for the journey of the soul too. So, what you should also do today is to resolve to tread the path of Gods (Deva-ayana).

Have the resolve to begin remembrance of the Supreme Lord's Name, Ritual Worship, and Divine Service (Naamasmarana of Paramaathma, archana and aaraadhana). The day on which you begin these, and thus inaugurate the Superior Path for your intellect, that day is Uttharaagana for you. Do not wait for the almanac to tell you the date.

The most dangerous illusion
 The very first lesson I gave when I declared My Identity at Uravakonda was: "Maanasa bhajare Gurucharanam, Dusthara bhava saagara tharanam." That is to say: First know that you are in this cycle of birth and death, the ocean of worldly life (bhavaasaagaram); then, resolve on crossing it (tharanam); then fix on a Guru or the Name and Form of God which appeals to you; lastly, dwell on His Glory, do bhajan, but do it with all your mind. He, who is deluded by this relative reality is the worldly person (samsaari); he who is aware that it is only relatively real is the spiritual practitioner (saadhaka).

Egoism is the most dangerous illusion that has to be exploded and destroyed. Bheema had it, but when he could not lift and lay aside the tail of an old decrepit monkey, who was really Anjaneya Himself, that bubble was exploded. Arjuna had it; one day, after the battle, when Krishna brought the chariot back to camp, he wanted that like all charioteers, Krishna should get down first; the master must get down later, after the charioteer opens the door for him, is it not?

Krishna refused, and insisted that Arjuna should alight, before He Himself should. At last Krishna won. Arjuna got down and then, as soon as Krishna left His seat and touched the ground, the chariot went up in flames! If only Krishna had got down first! The fact was that the various fiery arrows that had the power of burning the chariot had hit the target, but due to the Presence of Krishna, their igniferous powers could not manifest themselves. Knowing this Arjuna was humiliated; his egoism had a rude shock. He knew that every action of Krishna was full of significance.

Krishna was the Avathaara (Incarnation of Vishnu) come to destroy evil; but now, the evil is not identifiable in certain persons alone; it is widespread. The scorpion has poison only in its tail; the cobra only in its fangs; but, man has poison all over! He has in his eye, his tongue, his mind, his intelligence, his gait, his brain---everywhere. You may ask, Q when will this poison be counteracted and destroyed? It will disappear, do not doubt it. That is the very purpose for which I have come. Bring your 'flower of the heart' (hridhayapushpam) to Me, rid of all the pests that infest it, the Six Enemies of Man---desire, anger, etc.

There is a Destiny that shapes events No one is prepared to make the effort for spiritual victory. If you demand the job of a Collector to be given to you straightaway, how can it be done? There are certain qualifications---age, scholarship, efficiency, talent, experience. The flower must become the fruit, the fruit must ripen, the ripeness must be expressed in sweetness. It all takes time. Even an atheist must accept a superior or mysterious power which guides things and events. The argument that you have not seen it and therefore you will not accept it as true is not quite intelligent. The eye is at best a poor instrument. Again, you need not yourself see a thing; others who have seen it, if they are unprejudiced and wise, can be believed.
An old man was warned when he proposed to go through a narrow road that there was a cobra on the road side; but, he said that he had not seen it and so, he was not prepared to believe it. He had to believe it when it bit him, but then it was too late to benefit by that knowledge! Nagayya said just now that recently in one of his speeches Nehru had to acknowledge that there is a Destiny that shapes events, irrespective of individual efforts. Well, everyone has to come to that conclusion, sooner or later, for, there is a limit to the capacity of man to control events. Beyond that, an unseen hand takes over the wheel of events. You may call it Destiny, another may call it Providence and a third, Go. Names do not matter. It is the humility that matters, the wonder, the sense of awe that matters.
Result of extreme miserliness Then there are some who say that having a trait in the mind, revering it as valuable, is enough; practising it is not so necessary. It is like saying, it is enough that food is in the dish, it need not be eaten and assimilated! Two brothers were famous for their miserliness; the elder was the worse culprit. One day, he had to go some distance to another village.
So, he rose early and moved out of the house. Half way along the road, about five miles off, a doubt arose in his mind whether his younger brother had put out the oil lamp at home as soon as he left. So, he returned fast and asked the brother inside. He said, "Do you doubt my intelligence? I put it out as soon as your back was turned; but, pray, why did you walk back? Consider how much your chappals have worn out by these extra five miles!" The elder brother replied, "What? Do you doubt my intelligence? I have tucked the chappals under my arm; I walked back barefooted." But, do you know the result of their miserliness! The younger brother was stung by a scorpion in the dark; the elder was bitten on the bare foot by a cobra on the road!

This Nagayya when he acted the part of Thyaagayya in the film, never forgot that he was Nagayya. If he forgets that, the film will fail. So too, never forget that you are the Infinite Consciousness (Aathman); with that consciousness, you can play any role on the world stage.
This fact will get stabilised in you, if you read the Geetha in the light of Krishna's actions in the Bhaagavatha and the Mahaabhaaratha. Fill your mind with Divine plays of the Lord and His glory. Once, He and His comrades stole into a house and brought down the vessel of curds.
When the mistress of the house came in, "Why did you come in?" she asked. "My mother had a stick in her hand; so, I ran in here out of fear," Krishna replied. "Who are these boys?" she asked.
"I brought them to bear witness to what I say," replied Krishna. "Why have you placed that vessel between your legs?" she asked in feigned anger. "So that these fellows may not get hold of the butter," was the answer! "Why do you go from house to house and eat the butter from their stores?" asked Yasodha. "I like only things I select and choose; I do not like to be fed," replied the Boy Krishna. Krishna could not be confined to one house or to one routine. He is Allpervading (Sarvavyaapi); He loves the devotees (Bhaktha Vathsala). Make your heart the Seat of the Lord; then it will have value. Soil which has veins of mica is valuable; but, that which has veins of gold is even more precious. The soil is valued according to the preciousness of the metal which it has in its fold. So too, hearts are evaluated by the contents.
Keep God in your hearts; they will then be most precious possessions.
Youth must realise the depths of their personality If God is implanted in the heart, you will see only God everywhere, even in the objective world.
For, Sarvam Brahmamayam (all is Brahman), is a fact. Resolve this day to engage only in virtuous deeds, good thoughts, good company. Let your mind dwell on elevating thoughts. Do not waste a single moment of your waking time in idle gossip or vain boasting or demeaning recreations. Death stalks behind you to fell you and carry you off.

Consider Kennedy, how death was lurking around, waiting for the chance! Did he not have men to guard him, soldiers, security men, bodyguards? But, it was all in vain. So while life persists, do good things, speak soft and sweet, never injure or insult another, serve those in need and keep the image of God ever before the mind's eye.

The secular state is hesitating to teach the principles of Eternal Religion (Sanaathana Dharma) to young children and students in schools, though those principles are of universal application and do not go against any particular religion. The Shri Prakaasha Committee may, it is said, recommend a course of moral instruction! But if it is not emphasising the superconscious basis of the individual, much of the invigorating strength of Sanaathana Dharma would have been lost. A regular course in the discipline of meditation must also be given to youth, so that they may realise the depths of their own personality and its infinite possibilities for ensuring peace and happiness (shaanthi and soukhyam).

Freedom is independence from externals. Perfect freedom is not given to any man on earth. Lesser the number of wants, the greater is the freedom. Hence perfect freedom is absolute desirelessness.

3. The house of the Lord

I HAVE been coming off and on to Trichinopoly since fifteen years but this is the first time I am imparting Aanandha to such a large number of the citizens. The Grihapravesham (entering the new house ceremonially), for which A.K.C. Natarajan is glad I have come, is just an excuse; giving you all this happiness was the primary purpose of My coming over. Your joy is My joy.

Today A.K.C. entered the new house that he built for himself; I want that you should all build new houses for happy living, and install the Lord therein. I do not mean houses of brick and mortar, but houses of good thoughts, good words, good deeds and good company, where you could live calm and collected. Invite Me for the Grihapravesham of such houses and I shall most readily agree. In fact, then, the house is Mine already and I do not need even an invitation to come and enter it. These houses are for worldly comfort; that house is for spiritual joy. And My Place of Residence is the pure, aspiring heart.

'Deho devaalaya': the body is the temple, it is said. That is the real house of A.K.C. and of each one of you. You are going about with a temple, where God is in the innermost shrine. The body is not a mass of flesh and bone; it is a medium for manthras (sacred words or formulae) which save when they are meditated upon. It is a sacred instrument earned after long ages of struggle, equipped with reason and emotion, capable of being used for deliverance from grief and evil.

Honour it as such; keep it in good condition, so that it might serve that high purpose; maintain it even more carefully than these brick houses; and, always preserve the conviction that it is an instrument and nothing more. Use it for just the purpose for which it has been designed and given.

Feel strong with faith and devotion

Above all, at this moment, it is urgent that every one should inquire into the true, the pure and the permanent. For, there is at present a delusion about values. Even the leaders of people are hugging the false hypothesis that happiness can be got by means of wealth or health, or housing, or clothing, or the cultivation of skills in handicraft and manufacture! The bird sits upon the bough that sways in the storm, confident of its wings, not confident of the bough whereon it sits!

So, you too should feel strong because of the bough of the objective world, whereon you have perched.

You know from the experience of the Cauvery river floods that nothing can save a man from drowning in the floods, neither status, nor caste, nor wealth nor even health, unless he knows the simple art of swimming. Need I say that crossing the ocean of worldly life, reaching the other shore of the sea of Birth-Death, is similarly possible only for those who know the art of spiritual discipline? Those, who are trying to build the human community on a foundation of wealth (dhana), are building on sand; those are who seek to build it on the rock of righteousness (dharma) are the wise.

Practise a fraction of what you preach

Dharma moolam idham jagath: Righteousness is the root of this world. Obey it and you are happy. The evil man is a coward, haunted by fear. He has no peace within him. Respect for the parents who started you in life and brought you into this world, to gather the vast and varied treasure of experience, is the first lesson that Dharma teaches. Gratitude is the spring which feeds that respect. It is a quality that is fast disappearing in the world today. Respect for the teacher, for the elders, for the wise---all these are on the decline. That is why righteousness is fast disappearing and losing its hold. People talk loud and long from all kinds of platforms about right conduct, divine love, peace, compassion, truth (dharma, prema, shaanathi, dhaya, sathya), etc.; this gets published in the newspaper next day and there their purpose ends. The paper of today is waste paper tomorrow! It is used for packing, thrown into the dust-heap, and burnt as refuse. That is the story of all platform professions. Put into practice a fraction of what you preach. Just as the body is the house you live in, the world is the body of God. An ant biting the little finger of your foot is able to draw your attention to the spot, and you react to the pain, making an effort to remove the tiny enemy. You must similarly feel the pain, misery, or joy or elation, wherever it is evinced in the entire land; you must make an effort to protect the land from the enemy, however remote may be the place where the enemy has presented himself. Be kind with all your kin. Expand your sympathies, serve others who stand in need to the extent of your skill and resources. Do not fritter away your talents in profitless channels. Every person consumes quantities of food, but does not stop to calculate what he does in return to the society that helped him to live; the food must be transformed into service, either of one's best interest, or of the interests of others. You should not be a burden on others or an enemy of yourself. Mere care of the body is profitless, for the body is only a container, a despised container, when the spark of Divinity which it contains goes out. No one will take in a corpse, if rain interrupts the funeral; a wayside shop may permit you to keep your shoes for a while, while you go into the nearby temple; but the corpse never! That is something disgusting, whose sight has to be avoided. Start the first step with Naamasmarana. Turn the key in the lock to the right, it opens; turn the same key to the left, it is locked. So too, turn your mind towards the objective world, it is locked, caught, entangled. Turn it to the right, away from the objects of the senses, the lock is loosened, you are free, deliverance is at hand. How to turn it right? Well, begin with remembering the Lord's holy name (Naamasmarana), as the first step. All journeys start with the first step. That will itself take you through the second and the third, to the very goal. I have to tell you one other point. I find that certain devotees have announced that I will be going from here to their places and even arranged processions and public meetings, without My permission. You have seen here itself how the Municipality had to present their Welcome Address to Me, at the Pandal here; I was not consulted about this programme before, nor had I agreed to it. Tens of thousands had gathered at the Municipal Hall. At Salem and a number of places between this town and Bangalore, people have organised such functions. When I have given My word, I keep up to it. That is why I came all the way from Thirupathi, starting at 11 a.m. and motoring till 10 in the night. I knew that A.K.C. had announced here that I would reach by 10.30 p.m. and so I stopped for about an hour some miles away on the road, so that his guess might prove true. A.K.C. was wondering when I came, how I came exactly at 10.30 as per his announcement over the mike a few hours previously. Perhaps he forgot that I could hear his announcement miles and miles away. And who prompted him to make it, may I ask? When I say that I am coming, I do come; but, these over-enthusiastic devotees at Salem and elsewhere are causing great hardship to the thousands whom they mislead. Please hereafter do not be led away by all kinds of rumours that I am visiting this place or that, on My way to this place or that. Test the authenticity of each such piece of news before you believe. Trichinopoly, 3-2-1964

What are problems?
Whatever they are, they are all transient In relation to eternity and of no lasting consequence.
What are thoughts?
They are creative force within man, and represent the free will given to man by God.
Life should be full of joy and it will be, if you live your life in complete harmony with God.
SHRI SATHYA SAI
4. Brahmaanda Linga PANDITH Umaamaheshwara Shaasthry and Veerabhadhra Shaasthry both spoke on the Principle of Godhead, (Bhaagavath-thathwam), as far as they had grasped it, and as far as language can express it; for, it is something beyond expression and explanation. It has to be experienced and once experienced, the richness, the fullness, the extent, the depth of that experience can never be communicated to another. Man must feel that his highest destiny is to have that experience. He is not a despicable creature, born in slime or sin, to eke out a drab existence and be extinguished for ever. He is immortal; he is eternal.

So, when the call comes from the region of immortality, he responds with his whole heart. He refuses to believe that he will die. He laughs at Death and treats him as a harmless casual visitor. For, there is something in him that whispers a challenge to death. He is a mixture of deha and deva---of the mortal and the immortal. If liberation means the stoppage of grief and the acquisition of joy, then, it is easy.
What you have to do is to place all your burdens on God; that makes you care-free, grief-free.
Then, when you take everything as the Lee/a (Divine play) of the Lord you love, you clap your hands in bliss whatever may happen, for it is all His Divine Play and you are as happy as He is, when His Plans are going through!
The genuine status of Man "Eashwara sarvabhoothaanaam hriddese Arjuna thishtathi." "O Arjuna, the God resides in the heart of all beings," says Lord Krishna in Bhagavadh Geetha. He is not to be found specially in cities like Amarnaath, Kaashi, Thirupathi, Kedharaam or Gokarnam. Just as every drop of the ocean has the salty taste, the composition and the name of the ocean, so too every single being has the Divine taste and composition, and the name of the Lord. Only you do not realise it so clearly. The river Godaavari realises itself by reaching the Sea; man realises himself by merging in the Absolute. That which merges with the goal is Lingam: Leeyathe gamyam ithi lingam.
The space encased in the pot must become one with the Space that traverses the entire Universe, by the negation of the attachment, which is just an artificial creation of the deluded mind. That attachment must disappear; that inferior status of manhood that now satisfies him must give place to the status of Reality of God (Maadhavathwam) which is the genuine status. That is the task for which Sai is calling you; that is the work for which I have come. A Judge of the Supreme Court may, while at home, play with his grandchild and bend on all fours for the little fellow to mount his back and then He may crawl on the floor when the child cries "Holla"; but, all the while his status as a Judge does not suffer diminution, nor does he forget it. So, you too must always be conscious of the high calling on which you have come; you should not disgrace it by any mean or meaningless act or word or thought. I have come to give you the courage to conceive yourself as the Supreme Truth (Paramaathma) you really are; to give you the intellectual power (dheeshakthi) to grasp the reality. That alone can destroy the delusion born of ignorance.

Have the deliberation first Step by step, you reach the end of the road. One act followed by another leads to a good habit.
Listening, listening, you get prodded into action. Resolve to act, to mix only in good company, to read only elevating books, to form the habit of remembering the Lord's name (Naamasmarana) and, then ignorance will vanish automatically. The Divine Bliss that will well up within you by the contemplation of Aanandhaswaruupa (Bliss Personified) will drive out all grief, all worry.
Shiva, it seems, laughed when He took a good look at the Chariot that was provided for Him when He started out to slay the Thripura-asuras, the demons of the three bodies, Sthuula, Suukshma and Kaarana---the Gross, the Subtle and the Causal.
Vishnu, the Charioteer, was mostly in Yogic Sleep (Yoganidhra), the stable Earth was the Chariot, and the two wheels were the Sun and the Moon, two spheres which never revolved in unison!
That laughter laid the demons low; there was no more need to proceed against the demons.
How did the evil forces that dwelt in the three bodies die? They could not exist where there was Divine Bliss; for, they are products of grief. Develop Aanandha; then evil impulses and tendencies will vanish, for they will not get any foothold in the heart.
Move forward towards the Light and the shadow falls behind; you move away from it and you have to follow your own shadow. Go every moment one step nearer to the Lord and then, Maayaa, the shadow (illusion) will fall back and will not delude you at all. Be steady; be resolved. Do not commit a fault or take a false step and then repent!
Have the thaapam (the deliberation, the decision, the discipline) first, that is better than paschaath-thaapam, (regret for the mistake made). Arjuna had thaapam, he saw the consequences even before the battle began and wanted Krishna to advise him what to do. But, Dharmaraaja, the eldest brother, had paschaath-thaapam, sorrow after the war was over, repentance after the loss incurred. Reason out and discriminate

Above all, you must take every step in spiritual practice or in the worldly life, only after deep deliberation and satisfying yourself that it will be for your good. Otherwise, it will be like the story of the weeping city. One day, a close female attendant of the queen came to the palace weeping in great sorrow, and so, the queen began to shed tears. Seeing the queen in tears, the entire female attendants wept and the weeping spread to the male attendants also. The king, finding the queen inconsolably sad, also wept profusely in sympathy, and the sight made the entire city weep loud and non-stop. At last, one sensible fellow set in motion an inquiry, which passed through person after person until the queen herself was accosted. She said that her attendant was in sore grief, and when she, a washerwoman by caste, was interrogated, she confessed that it was all due to the sudden demise of her favourite ass! When this news spread, the weeping ceased and there was wide-spread laughter and shame. Reason out, discriminate; do not rush to conclusions or be led away by mere hearsay. I have come to re-form you: I won't leave you until I do that. Even if you get away before I do that, do not think you can escape Me; I will hold on to you. I am not worried if you leave Me, for I am not anxious that there should be a huge gathering here, around Me. Who invited you all here? There was not even a little notice in print, but yet you have come here in thousands. You attach yourselves to Me. I am unattached. I am attached only to the Task for which I have come. But, of one thing, be assured. Whether you come to Me or not, you are all in Mine. This Shivamaatha, this Sai Maatha (Mother of all) has the love of a thousand mothers towards Her children; that is why I do so much laalana (fondling) and so much paalana (protecting). Whenever I appear to be angry, remember, it is only love in another form. For, I have not even an atom of anger in me; I just evince My disappointment that you do not shape as I direct. When I direct you along a line of action, reflect on My advice; you have full liberty to do so; in fact, I shall be happy if you do so; I do not like slavish obedience. If you feel that it will help you to reach the goal, follow it; if not, go to some other place; but, let Me tell you one thing: Wherever you go, you meet only Me. I am everywhere. Have you heard the story of the rabbit that had borrowed from Mother Earth four naye paise?

She thought that if she moved into a new region she would be free from the obligation. So, one day she ran as fast as her legs could carry, her and went far far away from the place where the amount was originally received. At last, she sat down in great relief and said to herself, "Now no one will ask me to repay." What was her surprise when from the ground underneath she heard a voice, "Mother Earth is right under your feet, here. You cannot escape from me, however far you run!" So too, you cannot run away from Me. I will demand good conduct, good habits, good thoughts, good company, wherever you go seeking for refuge! And what reason have you to leave? Only those who ignore the joy, the consolation, the courage, the love and the blessing they have received here, will do so. Only those who believe the ear and not the eye, will do so. In a short time, you will be witnessing the emergence of the Linga that is formed within; the auspicious time for the emergence for the Linga is approaching; you see it and you receive the blessings; but, yet, there will be some among you who will doubt it and deny it. That is the karma of such; what else can they do? (Here, Baaba stopped the discourse; the movements started, first in the region of the abdomen, then the chest and the throat; Baaba swayed from the side; leaned on the table; drank water; and finally, after about twenty minutes, an eggshaped pink Linga emerged from His mouth. Holding it between the thumb and forefinger of His right hand, Baaba discoursed further about it). Ah! This is the Brahmaanda Linga! Symbol of the Universe. Inside it, the nine planets (Navagrahas) revolve; the entire Universe is represented herein, all the planets and their satellites, the primal fire, the clouds of primal dust, and over the anda, there is an eye imprinted, the Jagadekachakshu (the Eye of the One Eternal Witness). You are indeed blessed, the merit of many births has brought you here to see the Great Phenomenon, this rare Creation. Years of worship, or ritualistic vows and fasts, may not give this unique chance which you now have had, remember. Use this good luck to hear good Godly advice, to select good company and to strive more earnestly to reach the Goal. Prashaanthi Nilayam, Shivaraathri, 11-2-1964
5. The Mani Mantapa KUPPU Bairaagi Shaasthry and the Srouthi from Mysore gave you the pleasure of hearing both Vedhaantha (system of Hindu philosophy based on Vedhas) and Vedha, while Veerabhadhra Shaasthry selected as his subject the Dolothsavam (swing festival) of Krishna, evidently because today; these devotees from Bangalore, mostly florists and decorators who have been attached to Me for more than twenty-two years, insisted on My sitting for some time in this jhoola (swing) they have constructed with such care and devotion. I shall speak only for some little time, for, there is a Harikatha (musical discourse) later and as I have often told you, you must learn to respectfully listen to whosoever addresses you here, for they speak only of things that elevate you and strengthen your spiritual discipline.

What exactly is the aim and purpose of all the Shaasthras (scriptures), the Bhaagavatham (containing tales about Avathararas of Vishnu), the Puraanas (mythological tales), these discourses and the Harikatha? Just try to answer that query. It is to tell man the truth about himself. There is no plot to mislead you. That is not the desire of the sages who wrote down these annals and their own experiences. You know only the present, what is happening before your eyes; you do not know that the Present is related to the Past and is preparing the course of the Future. It is like the headline and titles of a film on the screen; as the letters gleam one after the other, you read them and pass on to the next that comes to view. Each new letter or word wipes out the one already before your eye, just as each birth wipes out the memory of the one already experienced.

All have to merge finally

Man does not realise that the end of this cycle of birth and death is in his own hands. The tree came from the seed and the seed from the tree and so on, from the beginning of time. Yes; you may not know which came first, tree or seed; but, you can easily put an end to the cycle, by frying the seed. It won't sprout again. Being extraordinary, man is now descending to levels which are below ordinary. The marshy lake. Like the animals of the desert, he is running towards the mirage to slake his thirst. He claims to have mastered the senses and all low desires but they sprout at the first chance, like grass after the first shower after summer.

Just as you seek the udder of the cow for the milk it gives, seek the Lord and His Glory only in nature. As a matter of fact, Nature is useful only when it adds to the wonder and awe that it is able to provoke and sustain. Everything is an image of the Lord.

Krishna revelled in seeing His own images in the Mani Mantapa (pavilion set with precious stones) of His house, when He was a child. Just as the Lord is pleased when He sees Himself in His manifestation called Nature, there is such joy welling up in all when they hear the story of the Lord and how He calls all to Himself. It is the call of the b/tuba (object] for the prathibimba (image); to merge in it. So, all are entitled for merging; all finally have to attain it. Otherwise, there is no meaning for the yearning to become greater and greater.

You might ask Me to speak about my own mystery. It is not easy to understand it. When you have the chance, gather all the joy you can. There is no use of bolting the door after the thieves have robbed and fled. Seize the chance and do not repent later that you missed the opportunity.

Remember, you have to come to Me, if not in this birth, at least within ten more births! Strive to acquire Grace; Grace is the reward for spiritual practice; the highest spiritual discipline is to follow the instructions of the Master.

Years of rigorous training make the soldier, who can then stand all the rigours of warfare. The heroic fighter is not made in a day. So too, the practising spiritual aspirant (saadhaka) who can win victories, is not made in a day. Restrictions and regulations, drill and techniques have been laid down for him also. Follow them sincerely and steadily and victory is yours.

Happiness is an interval between two moments of pain.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

6. Kaashi and Badhri

LIFE is only relatively real; until death, it appears to be real, that is all.

For the procession of the bride and groom, the father of the bride had brought an elephant or rather the model of an elephant, correct to the minutest detail; the model was taken by all who saw it to be alive. Then, while all were admiring the wonderful work of art and arguing that it was alive, it exploded, shooting forth lovely little stars and snakes of light that gleamed through the sky. It was filled with fireworks and when it was lit, the entire stock filling the inside emerged, with a burst of noise and a brilliant riot of light and colour. Man is like that elephant, true, until the explosion!

Before that explosion happens, man must realise himself. The fireworks are desire, anger, delusion, pride and jealousy etc., and they now fill this artificial animal, useful only for the show.

Man is saved from such calamity by Vedhaantha, which is like the roar of the lion; it gives

Courage and Enterprise; it makes man a hero. It does not whine or howl or cry. It drives cowardice away; instils the highest types of self-confidence. It is the strongest armour against the arrows of fate. It acts like a waterproof against the hailstorms of sensual pleasure. It is a curtain keeping out the mosquitoes of worry, which would otherwise rob you of sleep. With Vedhaantha-saturated heart, you are a rock on the shore, unaffected by the waves of temptation.

Vedhaantha challenges your spirit of adventure, your own reality. Get into the train of spiritual discipline now; station by station, you will reach the terminus, which is inaana (realisation) of you and of all this. Go to Penukonda, purchase a ticket for Bangalore and sit in the train. Do not get down in the middle when some station attracts you. The stations are karma, upaasana (action, contemplation), etc. You have to pass through them, but remember they are not the termini. The terminus is Realisation.

Harmonious outlook essential

Man is now possessed by the ghost of Delusion; he is prating a language which is unbecoming, behaving like an animal moving in a zigzag manner, climbing and sliding. I have come to exercise the ghost; that is part of My work. This delusion, that the man who is possessed is really intelligent, has caused great harm. For example, Pandiths spend a good deal of time to argue that

Raama is superior to Krishna or that Krishna is superior, whereas the truth is that each of them reveals a certain phase of Divinity. The comparison itself diminishes the integrity of the inquirer.

If he has any reverence, he would not attempt an intellectual estimate; he would try to get an intuitive experience, as Raamakrishna Paramahansa did; and, then he would realise that one is as sweet as the other. Saint Thyaagaraaja discovered this because he was a mystic, one who experienced, instead of arguing over it. He sang that Raama is composed of two sounds, 'Raa' taken from Naa-raa-ya-na and 'Ma' taken from Na-ma-sshi-va-ya; that Raama is the harmonisation of Vaishnavism and Shaivism (worship of God as Vishnu and worship of God as Shiva). Harmony is the test of any religious outlook; if it breeds hate or faction or pride, the outlook is definitely evil. Keep away from such, if you are interested in your spiritual practice.

Regulate love with virtue and service

I am not attracted by learning or scholarship, which does not lead anywhere except towards egoism and pride. I am drawn only by devotion. Bring to Me whatever troubles you have; I shall take them on and give you Aanandha. When I like My devotees, I like their faults too, though some here turn up their noses and laugh at the peculiar follies and foibles of people who come from all the various States. I am drawn by the Love which brings you here from long distances through great difficulties, which makes you happy in spite of the want of the comforts to which you are accustomed, which makes you put up with the life under the trees or in the open sheds.

I know that you do not go to the old mandhir (temple) in the village, for as you say, from there you cannot see Me whenever I happen to pass from this side of the building to the other! I am here since three hours and you are having sight of Me (darshan) so long; but, yet, as soon as I go up into My room, you rush to the Nilayam to get another darshan, as I come out into the verandah! What greater sign of devotion is needed than this yearning for darshan?

But, this love alone is not enough. In fact, it does not mean much at all. What is wanted is the regulation of that Love, in the form of virtue and service. If you achieve that, then there is none to equal you, in this age. As the seed, so the sapling; as the status, so the behaviour; as the teacher, so the students; as the food, so the belch. Here, renunciation and divine love from the atmosphere, and silence is the discipline. Do not criticise others; criticise yourselves rather. Have the name of the Lord on your tongue; the form of the Lord before your eye. If you shape yourself this way, the place where you stand will become Kaashi, the house which you inhabit will become Badhri. Let all your activities be directed towards the purification of your hearts. You have My Blessings in this endeavour.

7. Beacons of light

I AM glad I am speaking to a gathering of artists, poets and literary men, as well as those who are interested in promoting the fine arts. You have met here to commemorate the Coronation of Krishna Devaraaya, the Vijayanagara Emperor who patronised poetry, drama, sculpture, painting, music, dance, and literature and revived Hindu Dharma through all these media. The culture of Bhaarath (India) that has grown from the ageless Vedhas (the four ancient books of Hinduism) was for some time overwhelmed by the influence of Western standards of life and thought, on account of the artificial support they got when Westerners ruled over this land. Now, it has to be re-discovered and re-established, mainly through the removal of the weaknesses among the people of Bhaarath. People have become too weak to be the recipients of the tremendously powerful Message of the Eternal Religion, Sanaathana Dharma! The individual is called by us, vyakthi, do you know why? Because we expect him to make vyaktha, that is to say, to manifest his Divinity! Ishwarassarvabhuuthaanaam hrddese, Arjuna, thishtathi "The Lord is residing in the heart of all beings, O Arjuna!" thus said Lord Krishna to Arjuna in the Bhagavadh Geetha. Demonstrate that it is true, realise Him within your heart, let Him become manifest, that is the obligation of the individual. The Kings of Vijayanagara had virtue, courage, patriotism, love of Dharma, generosity, vision, statesmanship. They built many temples; they restorted dilapidated ones; they constructed many tanks and towns. It is good to remember them and be grateful for what they did. But, there is one mistake which you should not commit: do not be contented merely with the contemplation of the past. Why survey the road which you have traversed already? Why allow the achievements of the past to curb enthusiasm in the present? You ask, can we today carve or build or paint or sing as well as they in the Vijayanagara Empire did? That is a sign of weakness, being benumbed by fear.

Give no room for cowardice

A hermit once met the Cholera Goddess on the road, returning from a village where she had thinned the population. He asked her how many she had taken into her lap. She replied, "Only ten." But, really speaking, the casualties were a hundred. She explained, "I killed only ten; the rest died out of fear!" Man is Aathmaswaruupa (Self-embodied), that is, Abhayaswaruupa (Fearlessness-embodied). If he knows his real nature, he will give no room for weakness or cowardice.

That is the main aim of culture, to cultivate mental calm, mental courage, to make every one feel kinship with every one else. You are born with the cry, 'koham' (who am I?), on your lips; when you depart, you must have the declaration, 'Soham' (I am He), on your smiling face. This is the message of the Dharma which Krishnadevaraya fostered. Take that lesson home from this meeting. You are now seeing with the EYE---a three-lettered physical apparatus, the three letters representing the three qualities: Sathwa, Rajas and Thamas (purity and poise, restless activity, ignorance and inertia). See with the clarified, unperjudiced, unattached 'I'; then, you see only One, though you see yourself you are indeed everything that refers itself as 'I'.

Win the title the Upanishadhs proclaim

It is because this single aim (lakshya) has been given up, that all this confusion (avalakshana), has come about! Bezwada Gopala Reddy said just now that the Pandiths who have specialised in the ancient scriptures and sacred texts are the Maanasa-sarovara (the holy lake where the holy river Brahmaputhra arises) of our culture; but, very few honour such men today. There is a general neglect of the higher aspects of culture. People know more about the details of the personal lives of film stars; more and more of them are getting interested in such trash. They do not care for the Pandith toiling in the same street; they do not know the names of the poets and the painters of their own town. That is the tragedy of the educated classes; they have no sense of values.

This day, when you have called here literary men like Puttaparthi Naaraayanaachar, I feel it is a day of Aanandhodhayam (dawn of Bliss) for every one; for, literature gives, or ought to give, bliss and peace. You honour a ruler for promoting culture and literature; well, you must recognise, therefore, that the rulers have a responsibility even today to continue the tradition.

They must canalise the energy of the people and their intelligence into, moral activities and socially harmonising programmes. I always encourage religious, social and cultural activities (Sanaathanam, Saanghikam and Saamskrithikam) the three S's; if it is reviving the values recognised as great by time or recreating the damaged structure of the good society, or restoring rigour to some fine art that is declining, you can count on My Blessings. I always exhort people to win, not the titles that come to those who canvass support, but the title that the Upanishads proclaim as the highest decoration for spiritual aspirants:

Amrithasya Puthraah, Children of Immortality.

Of what use is it if a man boasts that his grandfather was a great scholar? Manuja, the Sanskrit word of Man, implies a noble ancestry, from Manu Himself. Boast of your inner Divinity which is your greatest treasure. I must say this to the poets and writers who are here: Saraswathi is a Goddess, the Consort of Brahma, the creator, you are the votaries of a Goddess, whom every one worships; She confers wisdom and liberation. Be true to the highest boons She confers. Do not be contented if you give some food for the worldly hunger of the senses. Do not lower your ideals for the sake of cheap fame or vulgarise public taste. Instead of loukika sringaram (worldly enjoyment of sex), give aloukika Aathmaanandham (Bliss of the Self). Contribute to the expansion of love, the purification of motives, the enlargement of sympathy, the tolerance of difference, the respect for individual striving.

By all means, pay gratitude to the heroes of the past and the benefactors of the present. But fill yourself with enthusiasm to reach the Goal, by means of good thoughts and good deeds and good words. Kalluru Subba Rao spoke of the 25 years of struggle he has had, to celebrate this Festival in various parts of Rayalaseema, the struggle he had to change the name of these districts into Rayalaseema, instead of the old name, Ceded Districts or Dattamandala. He must be helped much more, not by means of maatalu (words) but by mootalu (bags of money). Festivals like this have to be celebrated more frequently, and I too shall join you more frequently.

In fact, Puttaparthi is just 16 miles off, still, I have come like this to Penukonda only twice--- once when Krishnarao brought Me to preside over the District Athletic Competitions and now, when Krishnadevaraya brought Me! I am looking forward to share My joy with all and so, I feel that you have but to invite Me and I shall be with you. I know that you have not understood Me yet; you only see Me from a distance, see Me through the thousands who pass through your town to come to Me. If only you catch a little of their faith and joy, you will be amply rewarded. I have been worried--if worry is the name for that feeling--that while people from the farthest corners of this country and even from foreign countries are benefiting, the people of Penukonda are denying themselves the chance of sharing My Aanandham.

Penukonda, the town that derives its name from the mountain, has been too long a heap of stones, albeit a huge heap. Your hearts must become kondas, that is, huge mountain peaks, and on the top, as in Arunagiri, the Iyothi (light) of knowledge must shine like a beacon. Learn, experience, and be happy. Control, canalise and secure. It does not matter a bit if you have no faith in Me or in God. Have faith in yourselves, that is enough. For, who are you, really? Each of you is Divinity, whether you know it or not.

Penukonda: Jubilee Celebrations of the Coronation of Krishnadevaraya of the Vijayanagara Empire, 17-2-1964.

8. Dharmakshethra

THIS is the Inaugural Meeting of the Prashaanthi

Vidwanmahaasabha established to promote the knowledge and practice among all mankind of the fundamental truths, beliefs and disciplines of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion). The Raaja Saheb just now gave expression to his great joy and satisfaction that the Wheel of Revival is being set in motion by Me at this place, from the Palace, in spite of the claims of many other places for that honour. It was at Rajahmundry last year, on Shri Raama Navami Day, that I announced to the Pandiths gathered around Me on the sands of an island in the river Godaavari, the aims and objects of this Sabha. Naturally, devotees resident there were hoping and preparing themselves in that hope, that the Inaugural Meeting could be arranged in their town. Without doubt, Rajahmundry is a place competent to bear that honour. With its historic past and large number of Aasthika Sanghas (Associations of believers) and institutions that it is fostering, it ranks high among the upholders of tradition. But, like all good things and all lucky chances, this too is won, not so much by effort, as by merit merit accumulated through years, and even through centuries and ages ! The Godward path is Karma based on Dharma This is an epoch-making event. For, it is no less than the Dawn of the Golden Era of the Liberation of Humanity. Venkatagiri has been for centuries the seat of a Royal Family dedicated to the support, protection and promotion of Dharma and so, it has earned this honour. Consider how many temples were built or renovated or maintained by the Raajas of Venkatagiri! Take count of the number of Pandiths they have patronised and encouraged, the number of religious books their donations have helped to see light! Consider the atmosphere of Dharma which they established in this State for centuries. See the interest the family is taking even now, when their State and status have been swept away by the storms of political change. Bhaarathavasha (Mother India) has kept before her this ideal of Dharma. That is the taproot of her culture, the source of her vigour and vitality. The Godward path is action based on righteousness (Karma based on Dharma). That is the path, also towards joy, contentment and therefore of strength. Now, the path has become hidden by an overgrowth of briar and bush; the bridges and culverts are in disrepair. People have forgotten the goal, the path, and the habit of walking on it. That road is the only refuge; it must be trodden tomorrow, if not, today, for the goal lies at the end of that road. It was laid down centuries ago, beyond the memory of history, in the Vedhas, Sathyam vadha, Dharmam chara---"Speak the truth, practise righteousness," the Vedhas call on 'you. These Pandiths well versed in Vedhas and Shaasthras know what Dharma is and they can explain it to you without distortion. That is why you have to go to them reverentially and seat them amidst you and get enlightened by them. Knowing is not being. You must try to translate into daily life what you learn from them. The moral life is the best prescription for joyful life. Learn to live in His Glory Every one's heart is a Dharmakshethra (the scene of Mahaabhaaratha war) where the battle between the forces of Good and Evil is fought. Why, the whole country is Dharmakshethra. So, the mothers and children of this land must be devoted to Dharma, above all. The Geetha begins with word, Dharmakshethrae, and ends with the words, Sarva Dharmaan parityajya: through Dharma, you have to transcend Dharma. That is why Kaushalya exhorted Raama when he went into the forest, "May the Dharma which you are upholding by this act, be your guardian when you are in the forest, as an exile." And, Raama too upheld Dharma even under the most trying circumstances. When, after the death of Raavana, Vibheeshana's Coronation was arranged, he prayed that Raama himself should crown him in the city of Lanka. But, Raama declared that His vow and His father's orders did not allow Him to set foot in a city during the years of exile. That period was not yet over, He said. So, the function was attended only by Sugreeva and others. Raama thus demonstrated by His actions how scrupulously Dharma had to be observed. We want mothers who are so wise, and children who are so steadfast in the practice of Dharma. Practice---that is the real thing in spiritual matters. Scholarship is a burden, it is very often a handicap. So long as God is believed to be far away, in temples and holy places, man will feel religion a burden and a hurdle. But, plant Him in your heart and you feel light, burdenless, and even strong. It is like the food basket; when carried on the shoulder, it feels heavy; you are too weak even to carry it. But, sit near a stream and eat it. Though the total weight has not decreased, you feel lighter and stronger. That is the consequence of taking the food in: do likewise, with the idea of God. Do not carry it on the shoulder, have it 'in.' Keep the memory of the Lord and His Glory always with you; that will quicken your steps and you will arrive soon at the Goal. The mother, coming from the well, with a pot of water on her head, another on the hip and a third in her hand, hurries home, since she is always conscious of the infant in the cradle. If she forgets the infant, her gait slows down and she wanders around, chatting with all her friends. Similarly, if God, the Goal, is not cherished in the memory, one has to wander through many births and arrive home late. God is the life-breath of every soul. So, learn to live in His Glory, in His Memory, in His Contemplation, every moment. That is what the Vedhas and Shaasthras teach. Venkatagiri, 18-2-1964 If there is righteousness in the heart there is beauty in character.

If there is beauty in character there is harmony in the home.
If there is harmony in the home there is order in the nation.
If there is order in the nation there is peace in the world.

Shri Sathya Sai

9. Yanthram & Manthram

MAN has immense capacities latent in him, waiting to be tapped and used. He has many talents which he has to bring to light. He feels the urge to love all beings, to share his joys and griefs with his kind, to know more and satisfy the curiosity of his intellect, to peep behind the awe and wonder that Nature arouses in him. He is able to gather information about all kinds of things from all comers of the world, but, he is unaware of what happens in the comers of his own mind.

He knows who is who among all the rest, but, he does not know the answer to the simple question, "Who am I?"

The fact is, he has to ask it himself and seek out the clue to the enigma himself. He has not felt that it is essential to know the answer; he is content to move about blindly in the world, groping his way in the dark. Without knowing who he himself is, he is rashly judging, labelling and even libelling other men! This is the fundamental reason for the hollowness of human life today, for the hate and fear that stalk the world.

The Vedhas and Shaasthras of India have the key to that answer; they can teach you the process by which you can discover it for yourself if you are so inclined. There are only twenty-six letters in the English alphabet; yet by combining them in various ways, thousands of books are written.

So too, the ideas and hints given in the Vedhas may be a few-, their application explains the entire literature of Akshara, which means both 'letter' and 'indestructible.' Every person born in Bhaarith must be an exemplar of these disciplines; for, Bhaa' implies 'splendour,' prakaasham, the splendour that is encased in man, and 'Rathi' implies 'the desire to manifest it, to taste it.' Live up to that glory and you will all be transformed into fullness.

The Divine Principle

You are the Formless (Niraakaaram) come in the form of Man (Naraakaaram), the Infinite, come in the role of the finite, the Formless Infinite appearing as the formful infinitesimal, the Absolute pretending to be the Relative, the Aathma behaving as the body, the Metaphysical masquerading as the merely physical. The Universal Aathma (Self) is the basis of all being. The sky was there before houses were built under it; it penetrated and pervaded them for some time; then, the houses crumbled and became heaps and mounds; but, the sky was not affected at all. So too, the Aathma pervades the body and subsists even when the body is reduced to dust.

The same inexplicable, invisible, electric current, when it enters a bulb, a fan, a stove, a cooler, or a sprayer, activates each one of them or all of them together.

Similarly, Ishwara sarva bhoothaanaam' the Divine Principle activates all beings. That is the inner core, the Divine Spark, more minute than the minutest, more magnificent than the most magnificent. To observe the minute you must use a microscope; to bring the remote nearer your eye, you seek the help of a telescope; these are Yanthras (material instruments). The instruments that help you to visualise the Core that has such strange contradictory attributes are called Manthras---formulae that save you when you meditate on them. They are also called Thanthras (Ceremonies and rites) when their practical application has to be emphasised. Faith in the efficacy of these Manthras and in the utility of the procedure prescribed, as well as in the existence of the Core are all essential for success in the great adventure, just as faith in the efficacy of the Yanthra, in the correctness of the procedure, and in the existence of the material he is seeking to know more about are essential for the scientist.

"The liberation from night"

You must tackle this problem, straight from where it starts. Ignorance can be cured only by knowledge; darkness can be destroyed only by light. No amount of argument or threat or persuasion can compel darkness to move away. A flash, that is enough; it is gone. Prepare for that flash of illumination; the light is there already, in you. But, since it is heavily overlaid by repressing factors, it cannot reveal itself. "The liberation from night" which happens when the light is revealed, is called Moksha. Every one has to achieve it, whether he is striving for it now or not. It is the inevitable end to the struggle, the goal to which all are proceeding.

But, please do not be afraid of reaching the goal of liberation (Moksha)! Do not conceive that stage as a calamity. It is the end of calamity. It is death to all grief; the birth of joy---a joy that knows no decline, the death of grief, grief that will never more be born.

Well, how do you prepare yourself for the stage? I must tell you that the answer is in that very word Moksha, itself. It is self-explanatory. 'Mo' indicates Moha (delusion; being deluded by the scintillating, the gaudy, the transitory, the temporary trash); and, 'ksha' means kshaya (decline; disappearance, destruction). It requires you to keep the flights of your mind away from these deluding attractions, and on the straight path towards liberation. Avoid illusion by denying it

See how the insufferable heat of the Sun is controlled and modulated and reduced by your bodily mechanism to the congenial temperature of 98.4 degree; so, you too should keep the destructive force of your elemental passions born out of the clamour of sabdha, sparsha, ruupa, rasa, gandha (sound, touch, form, taste, smell) rigorously in check and bring it down to tolerable levels, yielding comfort and congenial living. You yourselves create the illusion of which you are the slave; deny it, don't give it a chance to Lord over you, then it will not harm you. Someone was told, "There, inside that well, lies your shadow." He said, "No; it cannot be." But, he decided, nevertheless, to go and verify the fact. He walked up to the well and peeped in. And, lo, he found it was true. The well had his shadow inside! Poor fellow, he did not know that the shadow would be there only when he looked in! Do not test Maayaa. Try to locate it, it will present itself. You can avoid it only by denying it; you can escape only by concentrating on the substance; do not attach any value to the shadow, whether inside the well or outside it. For, after all, it is just a shadow! Illusion haunts man as kaama or thrishna (desire). Desire calls for sabdha, sparsha, ruupa, rasa, gandha---the qualities of the Five Elements of which man is the complex; sabdha of Aakaasha (space), sparsha of Vayu (air), ruupa of Agni (fire), rasa of Jala (water), and gandha of the Earth. Man is prompted by the element of Space in him to seek sweet sounds that satisfy the ear, by the element of Air in him to run after smooth and soft things that yield pleasure to the skin, by the element of Fire in him to pursue things that by beauty of form appeal to the eye, the Water element in him to crave for food and drink that are tasty to the tongue, and by the inner urge of the element of Earth in him to cater to the nose, by trying to enjoy perfume and fragrance and pleasant smells. Kaama (desire) has a two-headed son, krodha-lobha by name, the twin-headed monster anger-greed. Through the malignant designs of these three, you are robbed of lasting happiness.

Be the Prince you really are Unaware of your Divine Status, you revel in low company; you toil and sweat as the slave of mean passions which drag you into disgrace. Be the Prince you really are. Be like the lotus, which though born in the slush at the bottom of the lake, by sheer will-power rises above the waters to see the Sun and be inspired by its rays. The lotus discards contact with water, though it is born and bred in that element; so, you too should avoid being attached to the elemental passions, that the elements constituting you urge you into. How long are you to sit content with the minor role of a clown or a clout? Are you not ashamed? Have you no ambition? Why smother your genuine talents under a self-imposed mask? All these are zero roles; take on the role of the hero which is your right, and shine!

I shall tell you how to deserve that role, how to earn it from the Suuthradhara, the Director of this play. Enter on a course of spiritual discipline; your experience itself will tell you the validity and the value of that course. Instal a radio receiver, select the wavelength of the station you propose to listen to, switch on correctly to that wavelength, and you hear the programme clear and distinct. Your ear will tell you the accuracy with which you have tuned. Similarly, take on a form of manthra (manthraswaruupam); pronounce it and meditate on it with accurate care and steady attention; tune in to the Voice of within you. One of the obstacles in the way of the spiritual aspirant is the satire and criticism poured on him by quacks that crowd round him. Do not pay heed to their advice or their barbs. They are experts only in the silly short-lived trivialities of social life or sensual pleasure. Most people nowadays are more interested in the history of film stars than in the history of Yogis and Paramahamsas (ascetics of the highest order) who can save you from the disaster of deep-seated ignorance. Three-stranded rope of Yama Yama or the God of Death is described as dragging his victims to his abode by means of the rope of paasa (snare). Well. He has no rope factory there, for supplying him with the rope he needs. You manufacture the rope yourself and have it ready round your neck; he has only to take hold of the rope and pull you along! It is a three-stranded rope, the strands being Ahamkaara, Vishayavaasana and Kaama (Egoism, Sense-attachment and Desire).

Do not respect men who are caught up in the tangle of the senses.

Give respect according to the knowledge each possesses of himself, i.e., of the Immanent and the Transcendent. How do you fix the price of cane? According to the sugar content, is it not? You evaluate oranges in proportion to the juice they contain, is it not? So too, a man is worthy of honour in proportion to the knowledge of the Self he has acquired. This knowledge alone can confer steadiness and strength. Without it, all profession of renunciation, all pretence of devotion, all performance of charity are but tongue-deep or skin-deep!

It is not the resolution that matters; it is resoluteness. Resolution is just a string of words. You may know the 700 slokas of the Bhagavadh Geetha by heart; but, believe Me, the time you spent in learning it by rote, and in reciting it, is all a waste, if you do not resolutely act upon even a single shloka. Why? That learning might even be handicap; for the skill has affected your head, and made it swell with pride.

Dharma will never play false

Bhagavadh Geetha is a means by which you can get immersed in your own Bhagavadh-bhaava

(relationship with God). If you are so immersed, you will have undiminished, undiminishable Aanandham, Nithyaanandham (Eternal Bliss). Now, in your ignorance, you feel small, you feel miserable, you feel that the wicked, the greedy, the cruel, are all happier than you and unjustifiably so. You feel it is unjust that you who are so truthful, so loving, so good, should suffer. Just ponder over this. Are they as happy as you imagine, and is your condition so bad as you picture? Just investigate and you will find out for yourself. They are only painted pots of poison; the paint of honey is just a thin coating, a mere show. Their hearts know no peace; they are as miserable as you, if not more.

Believe that Dharma or Moral Rectitude will never play false; it will ensure greater joy than can be gained through all other means. Raama destroyed Raavana; it was a victory of one head over ten; concentration over distraction. Raavana craved for Prakrithi (Seetha) discarding the Purusha (Spirit) which gave it values and meaning, viz., Raama. If you crave for Prakrithi, the objective world, you degrade yourself, you deny your reality, and you join Raavana's brood Do not also imagine that the Lord is outside Prakrithi, or even of you, who are really a part of the objective world. He is in you, behind you, beside you, before you. He is the eye of your eye; the I of your

I. Yearn for the yoga or union with Him, through the unwavering awareness of His being the real

You. Yearn for yoga; and whatever bhoga (pleasure) you really need will be offered to you in due course. If on the other hand, you yearn for bhoga itself, you are gone! You are blessed only with toga (disease), remember!

Live in the consuming conviction that you are the Aathman. That is the hard core of the Eternal Teaching. The Aathma it is that sees through the eyes, hears through the ears, handles through the fingers, moves through the feet. That is the basic 'you.' That 'you' is not elated by praise or deflated by blame. When some one carps at you, reason out thus within yourself: 'Is he casting aspersions on my body? Well. Why should I be worried? He is doing just what I should myself do, casting out the attachment to the flesh, to this paltry prison. Or, is he throwing them at the Aathma? Nothing can affect its purist, or tarnish its glory. So remain calm and unperturbed.' You may ask, what happens then to the strings of abuse? Like the letter sent by post and refused by the addressee, it returns to the sender!

I enjoin you to go home and ruminate over these suggestions and ideas. Reflect upon what you have heard, especially from these who convey to you the gems contained in the ancient scriptures, tested on the touch-stone of experience all along the centuries. Sanaathana Dharma recommends the three-fold course of listening, recapitulating, concentrating. Listening makes you learned only. Concentrated meditation on the meaning of the thing heard gives you the fruit of the teaching as intended by the Teacher.

10. A rupee or hundred paise?

PICHAYYA Shaasthry of Nellore spoke so feelingly of his ardour and anxiety to meet Me, an ardour he has had had for many years, he also spoke of the joy he now has at the realisation of his desire. Of course, for every desire to come true, the time, the cause and the circumstances have to coincide. It is just today that, in his case, these three combined to give him this satisfaction. I have known him all these years and I was aware of his yearning to come to Me, especially during the last four years, and I called him today to have his wish fulfilled.

Remilla Suuryaprakasha Shaasthry spoke on the Apaurusheyathwa (not having a person as their author) of the Vedhas and Vaaranaasi Subrahmanya Shaasthry on Dharma as reflected in the actions of Raama as depicted in the Vaalmeeki Raamaayana. These are subjects of great interest to all of you. But, I must chide you for not paying them the attention they and the subjects deserved; you were restless and worried and not concentrating on the teaching. This is a part of the atmosphere that you carry about with you, wherever you go, nowadays. There is lack of earnestness, of single-pointed attention.

The trouble is, you are moving in the wrong direction, away from the desirable destination. You have come into the world to realise yourselves, fully equipped with all the instruments needed for that endeavour---viveka, vairaagya and vichakshana--- (discrimination, non-attachment and ability), the urge to enlarge your love, to enrich your emotions, to ennoble your actions.

But, you have lost your way; you are caught in a morass; you are confused by mirages and dreams which you take as real; you run after false colours and cheap substitutes.

Vedha is the source of Dharma Subrahmanya Shaasthry, using his erudite scholarship, selected from the Raamaayana fine incidents to show that Raama is the perfect embodiment of Dharma and proclaiming Dharma to the world. In his arguments with the dying Vali, he declared that all beings, endowed with discrimination, are bound by righteousness and shall meet punishment if they should ignore it.

He was aware of all the various applications of Dharma in the various fields of human activity.

Now, the Vedha is the source of Dharma, Vedha which Suuryaprakasha Shaasthry declared was revealed to the Yogic Consciousness of sages. And Raama is the Personification of that Dharma.

So Raamaayana partakes of the excellence of the Vedhas. The Mahaabhaaratha is generally known as the Fifth Vedha. And the Bhaagavatha describes the Glow and the Grace of the Lord and His splendour as the Indweller in All. So, that too is as efficacious as the Vedhas to elevate man and to release him from the bondage to the mean and the sordid. It is the Vedhaswarupam (essence of the Vedhas) that is enshrined in these three works, thus making them equally effective as drugs to cure you of ignorance. But, why do you promote clamour and discord by accusing these Brahmins of exclusiveness and monopolistic greed? Even they, in spite of all their faith and sacrifice, are finding it difficult to follow the regimen recommended by the Vedhas. They have generations of practice and encouragement behind them.

Develop the Divinity in you

The study of the Vedhic lore has been with them and their families for centuries; but, yet, they are finding it hard to live up to Vedhic standards of Brahminhood. How then can you take it?

Four persons have a rupee coin each; if each changes the coin into naya paise and keeping 25 for himself, gives 25 each to the other three, no one loses. Each of them has a hundred paise, instead of a single coin, but, there has been no diminution of the purchasing power each had at the beginning. The Raamaayana, the Mahaabhaaratha and the Bhaagavatha are 100 paise; the Vedha is the rupee. That is all the difference. Why then lose yourself in this campaign of hatred? Why try to can' a burden which is beyond the capacity of your shoulders? Look at all the time-tables, the restrictions and regulations, the ceremonies and rites that the Brahmins have burdened themselves with. Their purpose is not merely to ensure security and solace to themselves but, even more, to ensure the orderly working of the forces of nature for the benefit of all mankind, of all beings in all the worlds. That is the high ideal for which they have imposed on themselves all the toil and tribulation.

Your duty is to concentrate on the development of the Divinity latent in you; once you do that, all hate and all pride will disappear; you will become humble fellow-pilgrims with the Brahmins, to the same goal, though along parallel paths. Remember these things cannot be decided by the counting of votes or measuring popular support. You cannot judge fish as more precious than diamonds, merely because there are more crowds in the fish-market, and only a handful of customers in the shops selling diamonds.

Aanandha has to be earned the hard way

The cottage and the castle are both built on the earth: so too, all faiths and religions, all disciplines have the Vedha as the basis. The special feature of Indian culture is that here the dress and demeanour, the language and literature, the manner and mode of living, the ideals and institutions are all attuned to the spiritual progress of man, emphasising as they do the superiority of the spirit over the body, the subtle over the gross. Everything is subordinated to that supreme task. The body should be fed and kept free from disease. Why? So that it may be fit for spiritual discipline. Spiritual discipline for what? For the realisation of the truth about oneself. The subtle is the basis for the gross; the Divine is the basis for the Human. Indian Culture turns your eye to the basis, not to what is built upon it. This outlook was, for long, the natural outlook for every Indian; it was automatic, even. It was imbibed at the mother's lap, from the father in the field, the teacher at school, from neighbour and friends and relatives, from the old and the young, from whatever was done or written or spoken by those around. It is because that attitude is fast disappearing and is in danger of being completely thrown overboard that this Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha has been started by Me to remind you once again of the duty of cultivating it. You will all doubtless agree when I say the Divine Bliss is your greatest need. But, you cannot order it from any shop. It has to be earned the hard way: doing good deeds, moving in good company, desisting from evil, keeping the mind attached to the Glory of God. Good and bad cannot be kept together in the same vessel; then, the good also will turn bad. Night and light cannot coexist. The Sun was proud that he had no enemies left. But, some one told him that he had one enemy left, viz., Darkness. Then, he sent his rays, the emissaries, to seek out the foe, but, wherever they went, they saw only light, the darkness was nowhere to be found. They returned and reported "There was no such thing as Darkness upon the earth; we made the most rigorous search!" Make intellect Master of your mind Suuryaprakaasha Shaasthry said that the worlds this side of Suuryaloka are all inhabited by beings that are subject to life and death, to the processes of involution and evolution and that the world on the other side are inhabited by beings that are free from these aspects of change. He also asked, who can give us the secret of transcending the barrier that divides the region of death from the region of immortality? Of course, the Lord has often sent Messengers to tell humanity about it and He has Himself come down in human form to communicate it and save mankind from perdition. It is because the task of guiding man has gone on so consistently that today in India there is at least this quantum of earnestness to achieve it and to escape from the cycle of birth and death. You can gain that victory only by rigorous Saadhana. Spiritual discipline is more arduous than physical discipline; imagine the tremendous amount of effort undergone by the lady who runs along a wire stretched across the ring, underneath the circus tent. After all, the gain is just a few rupees. The same steadfastness and systematic effort aimed at a higher reward can endow you with mental balance and you can maintain your equilibrium under the most adverse or the most intoxicating circumstances. The Inaanendhriyas (organs of perception) are more important for this type of saadhana than the Karmendhriyas (sense organs), the intellect more important than all the rest of the inner instruments given to man. Make the intellect the Master of your mind and you will not fail; you will fail only when the senses establish mastery over the mind. Clarify intellect by spiritual discipline A lame man and a blind man became friends and they moved from place to place, the lame man riding on the shoulders of the blind. One day, while passing through some fields, the lame man saw hundreds of what are called Dosakaayis (an edible variety of gourd) in a field and he suggested to the blind man that they pluck a few and eat their full. The blind man had greater sense and so he did not welcome the idea immediately he heard about it. He asked, "Brother! Have they fenced the crop?" The lame man said, "No." Then, the blind man said, "Let us go our way. The Dosakaayis must be bitter; that is why they are left unguarded." You know there are sweet as well as bitter Dosakaayis and the blind man, by his intellect, was able to discover that they were bitter, even without tasting them. His intelligence perceived the truth faster and clearer. Clarify the intellect by spiritual discipline so that you get a vision of the Lord who dwells within; that is the Suudarshana (Discus, a weapon of Vishnu) which saved Gajendra, the wild elephant (man) that was caught by the alligator (egoism) while rollicking in the lake of Samsaara (the objective world). Look upon joy and grief as teachers of hardihood and balance. Grief is a friendly reminder, a good taskmaster, even a better teacher than joy. The Lord grants both protection and punishment; for, how can He be the Lord, if He does not insist on strict accounting and strict obedience?

You are as distant from the Lord as you think you are, as near Him as you feel you are. Well, let Me tell you this. The distance from Me to you is the same as the distance from you to Me, is it not? But, you complain that I am far, far from you, though you are approaching nearer and nearer. How can that be? I am as near you as you are near Me.

You are a prisoner under sentence

That nearness is won by Devotion, which cannot be steady except after getting rid of "I" and

"Mine". When a prisoner is taken from place to place, he is accompanied by two constables, is it not? When man who is a prisoner in this jail moves from one place to another, he too is accompanied by Ahamkaaram and Mamaakaaram: Egoism and Attachment. When he moves about without these two, you can be sure he is a free man, liberated from prison.

Now that I have referred to jail and jail life, let Me tell you something more. You are all under sentence of imprisonment and are in this jail. There is no use hoping for reward when you work in jail; you have to work because you are ordered to; and you must work well too. You cannot argue that rewards are not distributed justly and you are not entitled to desist from your allotted task. If you do so, your sentence will be extended or you will be transferred to another jail. On the other hand, if you quietly accept the sentence and go about your work without clamouring or murmuring, your term is reduced, and you are sent out with a certificate that ensures a happy life, unpestered by constables. This is the attitude that the jeevi (individual) must adopt, if he is aware of his sentence and if he is earnest about freeing himself.

Remember, Freedom is your birthright. Concentrate on that and practise the means of attaining it.

Venkatagiri, 20-02-1964

Remember that with every step, you are nearing God.

And when you take one step towards Him

God takes ten steps towards you.

There is no halting place in the pilgrimage!

It is one continuous journey, through day and night, through tears and smiles, through death and birth, through tomb and womb.

When the road ends and goal is gained, the pilgrim finds that he has travelled from himself to himself, that was long and lonesome; but God that lead him unto, was all the while in him, around him, with him and besides him.

He himself was always Divine.

Shri Sathya Sai

11. Role of the Pandith

THE springs of Indian culture have very nearly, gone dry under the scorching influence of foreign cultures to which Indians are fast selling themselves. The agencies which are keeping the tree green, have become weak; institutions and customary rites and rituals which kept the facets of that culture alive in the eyes of the people, have faded into feebleness. People, who were charged with the social duty of reminding the masses of their heritage, have been rendered dispirited and mendicant. The Dharma laid down in the Vedhas has to be experienced, in order to be appreciated; it cannot be merely talked about, in tall language. The use of the Vedhas does not consist in mere recitation, though the reciters are doing a valuable service, preserving them in correct form and style of pronunciation. Vedhas yield Aanandha; Vedha maathaa (Mother of Vedhas) is the Aanandha maathaa (Mother of Divine Bliss).

They provide the answer to the Question of questions: "Who am I?" Every one of you has to know that this question has to worry you sooner or later. And, every one has to discover the answer. The senses, each specialising in one small field of cognition, are powerless to give the answer, they at best very inadequate even in their own specialised provinces; there are sounds the ear cannot hear; there are colours the eye cannot take in and interpret to us and tastes beyond the ken of the buds of the tongue. They are imperfect instruments for the study of the external world.

How can they serve to teach us about the intangible, invisible, inner world of the Self?. The Vedhaanthic vision alone can reveal to you "the smaller than the smallest, the bigger than the biggest" (Anoraneeyaan mahatho maheeyaan).

When you have vision, you do not realise its value; you take it as just natural. It is only when you lose it or when it gets dim, that you run to the ophthalmic hospital.

When the Vedhaanthic vision of India had become dim, Shankaraacharya restored it and so saved the country. If he had not done so, believe Me India would have become another China.

Dharma is eternal, basic, fundamental When you are boring and fixing a pipe to draw the water up, you have to take good care, lest water or air gets into the pipe and spoils the creation of the vacuum that is needed. So too, if you desire success in your effort to unravel the truth of your inner Sell you have to take good care that the outer sell does not enter and spoil the concentration. You have to prevent thoughts of the outer world from entering the mind. The senses are positive handicaps in that field of research.
One of the dangerous tricks of the modern times, which is misleading a number of people, is the claim made by many, that they have been sent to re-establish Dharma. Each one is doing it in his own fashion, and as it suits his skill and idiosyncrasy. When a bridge on the highway gets damaged, no single pedestrian, however eminent, can start repairing or re-building it; nor can the villagers living in proximity to it, start the operations, according to their own ideas of bridgebuilding.
The very authority which laid down the road, and planned the bridge has to come down and draw up the plan. Dharma is the road for individual and social progress, in this world and through the world, to the next. It is eternal, basic, fundamental. The principles may not be altered or adjusted to suit personal whims, or pressing problems, that appear formidable to the eyes of some individuals, or group of persons. It is like the mother who has to be accepted, not like the wife whom you can choose or discard.
Man is basically Immortal Vaaranaasi Subrahmanya Shaasthry spoke of Dharma as expounded in and through the Mahaabhaaratha. That is a prop which can sustain any drooping heart. If you can inquire deeply and reason fearlessly, you can appreciate the Indian point of view that, instead of seeking a lower standard of aanandha (happiness) by feeding the senses, one can get lasting Aanandha (Divine Bliss), by training the mind to be ever in the eyes of the Cosmic, the Universal, the Lord, as It is called, when you impose a Name and a Form upon it, to enclose it in you Consciousness. Why does man get Aanandha when he contemplates the Cosmic and the Universal? Because he himself is the Cosmic, the Universal! It is the thwam (thou) called to the Thath (That); the Thath responding to the kindred voice of the thwam.
Man is basically, essentially, fully, Immortal; he is Amruthaswaruupam (of the nature of Nectar of Immortality). But, yet he is afraid he would die! He is Aanandhaswaruupam (of the nature of Bliss); but, yet he is it that weeps that he is miserable. He is Shaanthiswaruupam (of the nature of peace); yet, everywhere he is overlaid with anxiety. This absurd self-deception is the root of the tragedy from which the world suffers today. The truth has to be driven into the consciousness of both the spiritual teachers and disciples, wherever they may be, in this country or elsewhere.

Accept what scriptures declare Many Gurus do not instruct people in this doctrine of courage, they do not bring up those who go to them in the discipline of the knowledge of Self (Aathma-inaana), for, they themselves are not established in the Reality of Self (Aathma-thathwa). They intensify the egoism of their disciples and devotees and hasten their doom, rather than avoid it. The disciples too asked for quick results and shortened courses and less and less austerity. The Gurus have therefore to water down the rigour of spiritual discipline, and behave as minions of the disciples themselves! They wink at many a moral transgression, and very often share in the plots and intrigues which are the daily routine of the devotees! It is a sad state of affairs, indeed! A people destined for glory, for the role of guides of humanity but, grovelling in the dark, seeking to squeeze lasting joy from food, clothing, shelter and hours of trivial entertainment.
A business magnate from the West, Mr. Kilman, came to Puttaparthi and, during the discussion on various spiritual problems, he asked Me, "Why build temples, when what we want are wells, dams, hospital and factories?" I told him to find out from the well-fed, and well-employed whether they are happy, whether they have inner calm! The Aathma alone is the source of inner strength, it is the fountain-spring of Joy---joy unaffected by reverses or victories.
You may ask, "How do you know, or rather, how are we to know that there is an entity called the Aathma?" Well, how do you know that today is the 24th day of February? The Sun did not rise today, after an announcement from the skies that is the twenty-fourth day of the month called February. Some person whom you respect, said that today is the 24th February, that is all. You accepted their word and you were glad that your acceptance made things smoother for you.

Similarly, when the Vedhas and the Scriptures declare that you are Aathman, instead of mistaking yourself to be the gross body, accept it and find in it a great source of peace and step by step, the truth will be revealed to you in your own unmistakable experience.

The world is a training ground
The Lord has declared in the Geetha, 'Mama Maayaa' My Illusion; that is to say, this relative world is His Handiwork, His Leela and His Mahima (Divine Play and Greatness), devised as a training ground, an inspiration, for those who desire to see Him, the Source and Substance of all this. "This objective world is My Play," He says. From illusion, you must get interested in the Author, the Master, the Lord. Once you see the world as the arena of His activity, the stage for His play, then, you will never more be misled; you will not be deceived by any tricks of the play or of the stage-effect; you will not be distracted; you will not be led to believe it as genuinely real. It is valid so long as it lasts, and you are in the theatre. Take the base (Aadhaara) as more real than the structure (Aadheya); the Lord as more real than the world. This is the basic lesson of Indian thought. Among all the principles of Vedhantha, this is a pearl. The world is like a mirage; the mirage does not originate from any rain; nor does it reach any lake or sea. It was not there before the Sun shone, nor will it be there when evening falls. It is just an intervening phenomenon; it is best left alone. This Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha has been established in order to give each thirsty soul a cup of solace and strength, from the well of the Vedhas and Shaasthras, to lead the waters of fertility to every parched area. Ghandhikota Subrahmanya Shaasthry read out some verses he wrote about Me. These Pandiths are not with Me to extol Me; nor is there any need to extol Me or them. I have no other purpose than this: to lead you to the path of Aanandha. I have no special attachment to the Vidwanmahaasabha because I have established it. All Sabhas and Sanghas (Associations) and individuals that do this same task, according to their capacity and means, are dear to Me. I do not call upon you to cultivate faith in Me or to worship Me. I want only that you should cultivate faith in yourselves, and worship the Lord who is utilising you as His instrument. Practise the teachings you heard Realise that your essential core is the Aathma. I have no need to seek fame through these meetings or associations. Not that the statements made by Ghandikota Subrahmanya Shaasthry are wrong. But, I know that some of you sitting here suspected, when he was reading his poem, that he and others have collected here, just to eulogise Me! Let Me tell you, I do not like such demonstrativeness and show; they are against My very Nature and Purpose. After hearing these Pandiths for three days, morning and evening, do not go home without becoming richer; let it not be the story of, "I went; I sat; I saw; I heard; I came." That is what the dull-witted do. Make the teaching your own by practising it. Let the meaning circulate in your veins and enliven your earnestness. There are some weakwilled persons, who are dragged hither and thither by others. They see some one going and they too go to Puttaparthi. They see some one staying away and they too stay away. Why be moved by the vagaries of others and why lose the lucky chance that may not recur at all? Of course, I love all; those who come to Me, as well as those who stop coming; those who stay at the Nilayam, as well as those who stay away; those who praise, as well as those who blame. For no one is beyond the boundary of My love. Hold your right palm, spread it vertically before you! You find that the thumb points towards you and is keeping apart from the other fingers. That represents the Paramaathma which is aloof and unaffected. The forefinger is the jeevi, the self attached to the three gunas, the three-stranded complex of the objective world. It seeks to mix with this, that and the other, to show this and mark out that; it is ever busy identifying objects and so it gets the company of only the three qualities (gunas). But, once let it turn towards the Paramaathma (Supreme Self), let it achieve Saameeepya (proximity) with it! Then it will lose the contact with the gunas; it and the thumb will form the Chin-mudra---the sign of the Puurna (Full), the completed Consciousness. I bless you that your attention and activity be always focussed on the Self within you; that is the purpose for which the Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha has been established. Rajahmundry, 24-2-1964

12. Amrithasya Puthraah THE Hindu Samaaj, Rajahmundry, was established, as its President told us now, in 1903. So this can be considered the Shashtiabda Puurthi Celebration of this institution, which means the celebration of its attaining the sixtieth year of its life. It is the custom to have such celebrations a little time after the completion of the period, not on the exact date on which the period is completed. Therefore, this conforms to that custom also.

This rite is named a Shaanthi (Pacification), the attainment of an equipoise, of calm. At sixty the senses have lost their wildness and waywardness, they have become powerless to drag the individual into ruin. That is believed to be just the time to fix one's mind on God and start on the course one has missed in the confusion of material pursuits.

The Samaaj too has wandered far from the path it was set on; it was a premier institution in this town of many institutions for the encouragement and promotion of Sanaathana Dharma, the Eternal Religion. It held competitions in the recitation and interpretations of the Bhagavadh Geetha, the authoritative book on that Dharma, and it distributed copies of the Geetha itself to hundreds of high school students, just when they were stepping out of their schools into the larger world. I know that it took a leading role in the task of spreading the doctrines of Sanaathana Dharma.

Real form of Devotion is Divine Love

Now, owing to causes like the apathy of the people, the attractions of more showy forms of activity, and the drying up of funds for rewarding students, scholars and Pandiths, this Samaaj has been reduced to a recreation centre for office-goers and others: re-creation, not of the ideals for which India stood in the past and stands at present, but of the activity and liveliness of the body and the nerves and the mind. This Samaaj has now to take up the responsibility again, for it is as important now, as it was sixty years ago. For such service the demand is continuous; it can never become out-of-date, or superfluous. If one looks around and observes the fall in standards, the need is even greater today. This is the reason, perhaps, why the President came to Me with a prayer to bless the Samaaj and to speak to you on the work you have to do.

Devotion to God is not to be calculated on the basis of the institutions one has started or helped, the temples one has built or renovated, the donations one has given away, nor does it depend on the number of times one has written the Name of the Lord or on the time and energy one has spent in the worship of the Lord. These are not vital at all, no, not even secondary. Devotion is Divine Love, unsullied by any tinge of desire for the benefit that flows from it or the fruit or consequence of that love. It is love that knows no particular reason for its manifestation. It is of the nature of the love of the soul for the Oversoul; the river for the sea; the creeper for the tree, the star for the sky, the spring for the cliff down which it flows. It is sweet, in bad times as well as good. It is not like pepper or salt with which you savour your dishes; it is the very bread and butter, the essential substance itself. It is not the pickle, which only lends a twang to the tongue and helps you to consume a little more of the food. It is an unchanging attitude, a desirable bent of the mind, standing steady through joy and grief. For the Divine Bliss comes through knowledge of the Self; the Devotee is the true witness.

Dharma is a means of living

Vaaranaasi Subrahmanya Shaasthry said now that Yudhishtira, the eldest of the Paandava

Brothers, had that devotion and so, he did not falter even an inch from his faith when in exile; nor did he lose his head, when he won back his throne. Others like Dhuryodhana used Dharma as a handy excuse to escape the evil consequences of their acts. Righteousness is not to be treated as a means of escape; it is a means of living. Never once did Dhuryodhana observe the principles of righteousness towards the Paandava Brothers; at last, he had to face the inevitable doom, when Bheema challenged him for the duel which was to lay him low. At that moment, the author of the deceitful gambling game, the house of lac which was set on fire, the insult heaped on the honoured Queen, the slaughterer of Abhimanyu by a pack of ferocious foes who fell upon him, the dark designer of all these iniquities, took refuge in Dharma and started quoting texts.

Wavering and indecision affect you in the realm of Dharma when you are not stabilised in the knowledge of the Self, which gives you a correct sense of proportion and also a sense of direction and achievement. That is why the Geetha lays so much emphasis on the necessity to know both the kshethra and the kshethrajna (the field of knowledge and the Knower of that Field). Know both, and then, you are entitled to the title, Amrithasya Puthraah: "Children of Immortality." Other titles are burdens on the head that wears them. Of what benefit are they, those that vanish in a whiff, and do not deceive any one, for more than a few years?

The grandest things in Creation Through devotion to God alone can that knowledge be attained.
Bhakthi purifies the heart, elevates the feelings and universalises the vision. It also brings down the Grace of God; for, the clouds have to come over the fields and pour rain; the plants cannot rise up to drink the lifegiving fluid. The mother has to bend to the cradle to fondle the child.
Bhakthi has that power, to bring the Lord down. Once Naaradha was asked to name the most noteworthy among the things of the world. He answered that the earth was the biggest. But, he was told water has occupied three-fourths of the earth; it threatens to swallow up the balance too, bit by bit. So, water, he had to agree, was more powerful. However, water too was drunk up by the sage Agasthya and the oceans were rendered dry by him, and he, in turn is now just a star in the sky! Is the sky the biggest, then? No. For, it was covered by one single foot of the Vaamana-avathaara of the Lord (Vishnu's Incarnation as Vaamana, the Dwarf). And, the Lord? O. He enters the hearts of the devotees and resides there. So, Naaradha had to conclude that the hearts of devotees are the grandest things in Creation!
That is why I condemn all signs of weakness and call the sense of weakness itself a sin, an unpardonable sin. it is an insult to the heritage of Immortality, the title Amrithasya Puthraah, which mankind deserves and must earn. Weakness, vacillation, despair, all these bring dishonour on Him who conferred on you the honour of child of Immortality; you are Bhala-swaruupa (of the Nature of Strength). Whenever accosted, you must declare yourself so, and not otherwise. Do not bend and cringe and barter your self-respect. Do not believe that you are this little lump of body. You are the indestructible, immortal Aathma, of the same nature as the Absolute Reality, Brahman itself.
The four resolutions to be made by everyone Have gratitude to the Creator who poured into you the nectar that ensures immortality; He requires you to stand firm in the face of joy and grief. Even animals exhibit gratitude; not only the pet animals, but wild ones, like the lion. Have you not heard the story of the lion suffering from a wound in the foot? A slave who was fleeing through the forest saw it and when he approached it with sympathy, the lion put out its foot. He then slowly pulled out the thorn that had caused all that pain and left the place, only to be arrested later and taken to Rome. There, they decided to throw him into the amphitheatre and let loose upon him a lion that had been recently captured. It was, however, the same lion which the slave had saved and so, its gratitude did not allow it to harm its saviour. Be grateful to the Lord for endowing you with powers of discrimination, of detachment, of evaluation.

Make four resolutions about your life hereafter :
(1) Purity: Desist from wicked thoughts, bad habits, low activities that weaken your self-respect (2) Service: Serve others for they are the reflections of the same entity of which you are yourself another reflection. No one of you has any authenticity, except with reference to the One Original.
(3) Mutuality: Feel always kinship with all creation. See the same current flowing through all the objects in the Universe.
(4) Truth : Do not deceive yourself or others, by distorting your experience.
Respect our ancient culture The Hindu Samaaj must set about doing the duty for which it was started, the revival in the minds of the educated classes and the students, of respect and attachment for our ancient culture.
Do not be led away by the cynicism of critics; that should serve only to encourage you. There was once an incident in train that was going over the Godaavari bridge. A poor ryot searched for a naya paisa coin and he threw it into the river for he felt it as a sacred duty to honour the holy river. Immediately a fellow-traveller sitting comfortably in the corner got wild. He condemned the act as silly superstition and economic waste. "This is why this country is poor and powerless," he said, puffing his cigarette, as he poured out his wrath against the custom of throwing coins into the rivers. The ryot did not keep quiet. He said, "Look here, my man! I pass over this bridge perhaps once a year or so; I lose only one naya paisa at a time; I derive so much joy and satisfaction by that little sacrifice; but, pray, tell me, what benefit and economic gain you derive from this constant smoking which you are indulging in. The smoke you puff into the air poisons the atmosphere for all of us; it harms your health, it spoils the health of others; it wastes your money; it is a Raajasik habit (of passion and restless activity), which increases your pride and makes you nervous and unstable." Examine the faults that may lie dormant in you and try to get rid of them. Do not merely declaim from platforms the excellence of such qualities as charity, Service, sympathy, equality, secularism, etc. Descend and practise a few sincerely. When your neighbour is in the throes of a serious illness, do not rest content with the idea that you are happily free. No one is free if even one is bound. Remember that the food you give to each living being reaches God Himself, the service you do to any one being fills God with joy.

 Do not vulgarise devotion Now, all worship and rituals are for bhakthi only, for the better comfort and more luxurious consumption of the worshipper himself. Devotion has been vulgarised into a business deal. I shall give you so much, provided you give me so much in return. If that shrine promises more, this shrine is given up; if even there, you do not get quick returns, somewhere else, some other God might be more profitable. That is the way in which worldly men wander about in their panicky rounds. "If I stand in the midst of others, God will not notice me; so, I must stand alone and shout, to attract His attention. Otherwise, He might ignore me," they argue and behave foolishly. Hold fast to the Ideal; do not try to degrade the Almighty to suit your limited vision.
 Rise up, strengthen your detachment, establish yourselves in discrimination. Then, your goal is brought near.
Rajahmundry, Hindu Samaaj, 25-2-1964 13. Fragrant with Grace NOT all places where images are installed are sacred; or, if they are sacred, not all of them are equally potent. Raama incarnated as Man for the re-establishment of Dharma; centuries later, Gopana had the chance to worship Him on this hill and to talk and move with Him, as his Master and Lord. Badhragiri, by his thapas, forced Raama to install Himself on his head. Truly, this place is a monument for the uniqueness of Bhakthi as a means of realising the Lord. All stones are not Ahalyas; nor are all feet those of Raama. It is only when the stone that is Ahalya is trodden by the feet of Him who is Raama that the resurrection takes place. What is the resurrection, really? It is the revelation of the divinity inherent in man. That is the result of contact with God-head; that can come only after years of contrition, which serves to remove the evil from the heart of man.
Raavana had vast knowledge of spiritual texts. His ten heads represent the learning he had earned from the six Shaasthras and the four Vedhas. But, he never put that knowledge to any use. He craved for the possession of Prakrithi (material objects), only; he wanted to master the world of matter, the objective world. He was a master of the material sciences.

 But, he was not tamed by the spirit. He discarded the Spirit, Purusha-Raama; he was content with the possession at Lanka of Prakrithi (Matter), represented by Seetha. That was why he fell.
Prema alone will remove hatred When people do not place faith in the Self but pursue the senses only, the danger signal is up and the Lord sends a Messenger or comes Himself if a great big step in reconstruction has to be taken. Arjuna forgot the basis of Self. Raavana went counter to it. The world is building itself up on the sandy foundation of the sensory world. So, Avathaars have to come. Like the monkey which could not pull its hand from out of the narrow-necked pot, because it first held in its grasp a handful of doughnuts which the pot contained, man too is suffering today, since he is unwilling to release his hold on the handful of pleasurable things he has grasped from the world. Man is led into the wrong belief that the accumulation of material possessions will endow him with joy and calm. But Divine Love (Prema) alone can give that everlasting joy.
Prema alone will remove anger and envy and hatred.
 This is a sacred occasion on a sacred hill. You have been privileged to be born in this holy place; why the very sight of the pilgrims who come here daily full of yearning and God-hunger, that itself is a fortunate chance. They bring so much of Love of Raama (Raamaprema) with them; they sing Raamanaama (holy name of Raama) and they recite the Lord's name. They never allow you to forget that this is a place fragrant with the Grace of God. Do you realise what a great service this is for your advance? When I was in Ayodhya Some years back, I could hear the continuous chanting of the holy name of Raama, that the air there was wafting in all directions. But, let Me ask you how you behave towards these pilgrims who come here, after years of sincere preparation, with hearts laden with faith! Many of you crowd round them and seek chances to exploit their devotion and their ignorance of this place.
 You squeeze out of them all the reverence they bring towards you and the place. They respect you, they envy you, since you breathe this holy air and drink this holy water and witness this holy worship. But, you laugh at their foolishness, while trading on their devotion. This is very unjust. You are like men who have plenty of delicious dishes before them, but have no hunger for the delicacy.

Realise the Omnipresence of God

I must speak also to the pilgrims, for, I see them also here in-large numbers. If you come as on a picnic, without the mental preparation necessary to receive the Grace of God, you are a nuisance here. You spoil the atmosphere of the place. You have come to see sights, not to strengthen your spiritual inclinations. You go from place to place, like postal parcels, collecting impressions on the outer wrapper, not on the core of your being. A blind man going places is not worried whether it is night or day. So too, you do not differentiate between one place and another. You behave equally unconcerned, equally senses-centred, in all types of places. You do not allow the holiness of the place to act on your mind.

As a result of the pilgrimage, your habits must change for the better; your outlook must widen; your inward look must become deeper and become more steady. You must realise the Omnipresence of God, and the Oneness of Humanity. You must learn tolerance and patience, charity and service. You must determine to seek, after the pilgrimage is over, sitting in your own home, ruminating over your experiences, the higher, the richer and the more real experience of God-realisation. I bless you that you may form that determination and, striving step by step, achieve that Goal.

Bhadhraachalam, 28-2-1964

Reawakening of man is at hand.

Reawakening to the knowledge that man himself is God.

The human body is not you, it simply houses the soul or the spark of Divinity within, for God dwells in the heart of every man and that dwelling spark of the divine is you - yourself.

All else is illusion.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

14. Be like lamps

YOU are all pilgrims, moving along this land of action (Karmakshethra) to the goal of land of righteousness (Dharmakshethra). The literary men, the poets, the teachers and administrators who addressed you so far are all guides who help you along; but, the road has to be trodden by you, every inch of it. "Kavim puraanam anusaasithaaram" the Poet is the person who commands, who lays down the law, the ancient, the timeless--that is what the Vedhas declare. So these Poets too have to place the rules of right conduct before people and warn them in time when they go astray. They should not themselves stray, while professing to show others the path.

Kavi, the Poet, is called the all-seeing (Kraantha Darshi); he is the seer of Manthra (Manthra Drashta); his role is to interpret God to man. He should not indulge in meaningless talk, significanceless writing. That will be degrading his role.

He should not be asking questions without end, for, he should seek in silence to get the answers, without infecting others with his doubts and his posers.

Life is a mirage; it comes from no visible rain; it falls into no recognisable sea. There was a man once who was pestered by a host of relatives when he was dying.

Parents, wife, children, brothers, sisters---all surrounded his bed during his last moments and wailed. They asked him

"What is to happen to us?" The dying man lifted his head a little from the pillow and asked in return, "What is to happen to me? I am now more interested in that problem, than being worried about what is to happen to you." Well, it is better every one asks that questions even now and equips himself with the answer rather than wait until it is too late.

"What am I for?" "What ought I to do?" These questions you must pursue, and arrive at the answers.

You are happiness in essence

Your nature is Sath, Chith and Aanandha (Existence, Consciousness, Bliss Absolute), believe

Me. That is why you behave in the way you do. You desire to exist for ever; you enjoy continuing to live; you avoid all talk of your own death. That is enough evidence to conclude that you are Reality in essence (Sath-swaruupa). Then, again, you are filled with wonder and curiosity and a desire to know the world around you. You ask continuously what, why, how and when, about all and sundry. This is the prompting that is given by the Consciousness (Chith), that is in your make-up. Lastly, you are always seeking joy, through some means or other. You try to avoid grief, you try to taste joy instead. It is the nature of man to do so. For, he is essentially of the nature of Bliss (Aanandhaswaruupa). When he seeks Aanandha, it is like the call of the deep for the deep. When some one asks you, "How do you do," and you answer, "Quite well, thank you," he does not stop to enquire why you are well. It is only when you answer that you are ill, he stops and expresses concern and probes into the causes, symptoms and cure of the illness. "Well-ness" is natural; "illness" unnatural. Anxiety is caused by the unnatural only. So, you are happiness in essence (sukhaswaruupa) also. Be strong to resist temptations Sath, Chith, Aanandha are the attributes of the Aathma (Self) and you are the Self not the body.

 There was a king who had an abiding faith in astrology. So, when his son was born on a day when the Moola Nakshathra (Star) was in the ascendant, he feared that the child would bring calamity to the line; he therefore asked his soldiers to slay it and throw the carcass in the jungle.
 The servants were so overcome by pity that, instead of killing the child, they just cast it away in the jungle and came away. The child was discovered and fostered by a washerman for many years. The boy was engaged in watching the clothes spread out to dry, when one day, the king lost his way and strayed into the village where the washerman lived with the Prince. While resting in the washerman's house, the king discovered that the boy who watched the clothes was his own son. He took him back and crowned him Yuvaraaja. Now, even when the boy was with the washerman, he did not lose his status as a Prince. Only he did not know his reality. You are all in the same plight: Princes, misled into believing that you are washermen, souls ignorant of the magnificence of the status, but declaring that you are only the shortlived, easily-destroyed bodies.
 The gods once were so elated at some victory they won, so proud and so forgetful of the Divine Grace that helped them to foil their enemies, that they held a great banquet to celebrate it. When they were engaged in the revelry, the Lord decided to prick the bubble of their conceit. So, He created a strange phenomenon which presented itself before them and arrested their attention.
 They went near it out of fear and wonder. It accosted them and when it was told that they were a company of gods celebrating a victory, it challenged them to prove their mettle by using their powers on a blade of grass that it placed on the ground. Agni, the god of Fire, tried to burn it but was foiled; Vaayu, the god of Wind, tried his best to sweep it off but could not. Thus, each god tried to prove his worth by using all his skill on that tiny blade and it was demonstrated that without the overall Grace of God, each of them and all of them would have failed in the battle, instead of winning it. Humility was thus taught to the exultant gods by the all-merciful Lord.

 Read elevating literature You must be humble, but yet strong to resist temptation. Do not yield like cowards to the sly insinuations of the senses. Your time in school has to be used not only in the task of collecting information and earning certain skills that will give you an income on which you can live; it must also be used to acquire the art of being content and calm, collected and courageous. You must also cultivate at school an ardent thirst for knowing the truth of the world and of your own self. Your words must be like honey; your hearts must be as soft as butter; your outlook must be like the lamp, illumining, not confusing. Be like the umpire on the football field, watching the game, judging the play according to the rules laid down, unaffected by success or reverse of this team or that.
 I want you also to read such books as will prompt you to ask and answer questions about your Self. Read good stuff, elevating literature, like the "Educator," which I am inaugurating today. I shall also write some articles for it, off and on, for it will be read by teachers who will pass on the inspiration to the pupils. I am glad the Teachers Guild of Anantapur District have taken up this task of publishing a magazine for their mutual benefit. They are the people who brought Me here today, to this School, which bears My Name. I am glad that the School is celebrating its Annual School Day. The Headmaster has a special responsibility to cultivate the enthusiasm Of the local people and canalise it for the benefit of the school. And, when the plan is for the benefit of the school, all should join hands to help him. Grace is proportionate to exertion I have heard discordant voices emanating from this town, and whispers that if Sathya Sai Baba is really Divine, why is the Bukkapatnam Tank dry during the greater part of the year? Some of you here might have heard such statements, made by irresponsible persons who have no knowledge of the working of Cosmic Laws. What is the relationship between My Truth and the freshes that fill the tank of your village? It is really an absurd idea:

that since Sai Baaba is within four miles of this place, the Bukkapatnam Tank must be full all the year round and the lands below it must yield good profit for the owners! Why should I expend My Grace especially on this tank, as proximity gives greater attachment? All places are equally near for Me and, if they turn away from good ways, all are equally far! For Me, distance is not to be measured by miles.

A tank in another continent might be as near to Me as a tank across the Chithravathi.

Again, unless the people of this village have deposited amounts in the bank, how can the bank honour the cheques they draw? Have you deposited devotion to the Lord, service to your kind, faith in your spiritual practice? Then alone can you draw upon the Grace that is won by such exertion: Grace is proportionate to exertion.

And, I may also ask, in what way have you suffered? Whereas other villages hereabouts are declining and people are migrating from them to the bigger towns, Bukkapatnam is thriving continuously. This is due to the stream of pious pilgrims who are flowing into Puttaparthi through this village. The atmosphere is rendered cool by the company of the holy that gathers there. The Supreme Divine Power (Mahaashakthi) that manifested in your neighbourhood and the Supreme Devotion to God (Mahaabhakthi) radiating from that place have yielded benefits which you cannot deny. This school is but one of the many evidences of that Grace. I bless you that you may grow more and more in devotion to the Lord, under whatever Name and Form, and earn His Grace to a larger extent.

Bukkapatnam, 13-3-1964

When the Name is pronounced by the tongue, and the image is adored by the mind, these should not degenerate into mechanical routine; the Meaning of the Name and the Content of the Form, must, at the same time, inspire and illumine the Consciousness.

15. Sai Sankalpam

TODAY is thrice blessed, because first, it is the New Year Day for those who follow the Solar Calendar, second, it marks the beginning of the Vasantha Navaraathri; and third, because of the entry into Brindaavan, which you all witnessed this morning. For the Kannada country, there is an additional reason for rejoicing, for, just now we are inaugurating in their State the activities of our Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha. On such an auspicious day, it is the duty of every one of you to gather and cherish in your hearts the wise words, the drops of Amritha (Nectar), which these Pandiths offer you from their knowledge and experience. Not merely hear, but, endeavour to act accordingly, for, the rain has to fall on prepared soil in order to promote the growth of the crop. You have to collect the rain, store it in tanks, direct it along well laid out canals to the fields which thirst for it; you should not allow it all to flow into waste or into a sea of salt. These Pandiths are repositories of ancient learning and I can assure you, whatever subject they speak upon, they will not stray a hair's breadth from the path of India's genuine culture.

We have here today Jatti, the Finance Minister of Mysore, Sawant, the Agriculture Minister for Mahaaraashtra, and Members of Parliament like Dr. Raamakrishna Rao, legislators chosen by the will of the people. Dasaratha, when he desired to crown Raamachandra, consulted the representatives of his people, as well as the Pandiths of the court. He placed before the people, not merely his personal wish, but also the reactions of sages like Vasishta to his proposal. But, at present, the link between the Pandiths and the politicians, the religious heads and the rulers has snapped and each goes his own way, irrespective of what the other thinks or feels. Long years of foreign rule during which the Pandiths were considered to be symbols of an out-dated civilization contributed to this, no doubt. But, even after that rule has ended, nothing has been done to re-establish the link.

Scriptures are like traffic signs

The system of education which promotes an attitude of contempt towards the learning which does not yield immediate pecuniary benefits is very largely responsible for the neglect of these great men. I must also mention as another cause the fall in the general level of morals. When all are sliding down the easy path of flippancy, those who advise against it and warn the victims about the inevitable disaster are ignored and laughed at. Sunk in the search of pleasures and cheap recreation, people become deaf to the counsels of the past and calls of the sublime.

Another factor which I must condemn is the hatred between castes and religions. The Pandiths are mostly of one caste and the politicians treat them from the angle of communal hatred. This hatred is not based on reason; it is rooted in fear and ignorance, and so, is undesirable. The Vedhas, Upanishads and Shaasthras are like traffic signs on the road; if they are removed, the journey is rendered slow and difficult, replete with accidents. We cannot afford to destroy them. We have to restore them in the interests of humanity itself. Caste (Jaathi) has to be determined on the basis of Guna (qualities) though a man belonging to a caste can be judged fit or unfit, on the basis of his Karma. If jaathi has to be decided on the twin bases of Guna and Karma (qualities and actions), as evidenced by the character and activities of the individual, a person will have to be labelled differently every hour or every minute of his life! It is only in pitch darkness that the ground appears level; day reveals the heights and hollows. So too, it is only ignorance that makes people talk of equality; knowledge reveals basic differences in health, equipment, attitude and tastes! Bhakthi-directed education is today's need Sai Sankalpam is to bring together once again the Paalakas (Rulers) and the Pandiths, the guardians of the welfare of the people in the secular and the spiritual fields. That is why the ministers and the legislators are here on this platform, along with Pandiths and Shaasthris. Without the cooperative functioning of these two, there can be no progress, no success in the attempt to build up a new world. The Kauravas had all the 'instruments for victory; wealth, might of arms, allies, fanatic hatred of the enemy, Kama! But, they all became dust, for they never paid heed to the higher values of Dharma; they did not equip themselves with the Grace of God, which is reserved for those who walk the path of humility and peace. Krishna was not their charioteer: they put their faith in lesser things. When plans are laid by the rulers for the uplift of the people and for training the children of the land, I want that the ancient wisdom of this land, still preserved and practised by these Pandiths, must be consulted. That will keep the keel of the ship straight. I want that the knowledge embodied in the Upanishads should be handed down to every one. Bhakthi-directed education must take precedence over the Bhukthi-directed (enjoyment-directed) schooling that prevails today in most countries of the world. Bhakthi is the Aashakthi or yearning which goads you on to the spiritual discipline which will endow you with that Inaana. Have both faith and steadiness--- and you will win. Calamities must heighten your faith You have been putting up since morning with the Sun and the lack of accommodation in this crowded pandal; your faith and steadiness have not been shaken by these. Keep them unaffected by the still greater difficulties and disasters that might blow over you. The gale helps to toughen the trunk of the tree. Calamities must deepen your courage, enlarge your faith; your spiritual practise must be intensified just when the weather is inclement. In fair weather, a care-free attitude is pardonable, but, in foul weather, every precaution is of value. These Pandiths know the precautions and they will tell you about them. Treasure them well and act accordingly. That is My message to you today. The Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha is bound to extend its activities in Karnataka and enter, as Sawant said, not only Mahaaraashtra State, but all States of India and all countries of the world. For the Wisdom of the Sages is the Heritage of Humanity. Brindavan, Whitefield, 13-4-1964 16. Take wings and fly KAANTHI, the Minister who spoke just now, is in charge of education in this State of Karnataka and he knows well that the education he is arranging for the children of his people is not adequate to meet all the challenges of life in this fast-changing, quickly firing world. These Pandiths who have dedicated their scholarship and their talents for the spread of the means and methods of attaining peace are therefore valuable collaborators with Kaanthi in the field of education. I am glad he recognises that truth. Dharma is a word related to dhaarana and derived from the same root. Dhaarana means 'wearing,' as a cloth; Dharma is the very habiliment of India, the dress that Bhaarathmaatha (Mother India) wears to protect her honour, to proclaim her status, to shelter herself against heat and cold, to set a standard to her sisters. When the wicked Kaurava princes seized hold of the sari that Dhroupadhi wore and tried to inflict insult on her honour, Krishna rescued her and foiled the foul design. Dharmaraaja sat as if he was unaware of his fights and duties; Bheema was involved in doubt concerning his obligations to his elder brother and his consort; Arjuna cared more for his own interests; Nakula and Sahadeva waited and weighed the pros and cons. But, the Lord did not wait! His Grace knew no delay or doubt. Now, Bhaarathamaatha is in a similar plight. Dharma, the very clothes that she has worn since centuries, which is the expression of her natural style, is now seized on by wicked irreverent hands. They wish to dress her in unbecoming styles, as their own imitative or frenzy dictates. So, Krishna has to come again for rescuing the victim of the wicked. Everything has its Dharma. Krishna revealed the hollowness of the people who were confident of their capacity to dishonour Dhroupadhi and the weakness of those entrusted with the task of protecting her. Now too, I have to foil the attempts to undermine Dharma and to stand in support of those who are the traditional protectors and protagonists of Dharma. Every single thing has its Dharma; water has its Dharma, the nature and obligation to move; fire, the Dharma to burn and consume; the magnet, to attract and draw unto itself. And, every one of these is keeping up its Dharma unchanged, including the Solar system and the stars of the firmament. Among the things endowed with Consciousness or Chaithanga, the plants and trees, the insects and the birds, born out of eggs or the mammals--all have managed to treasure their specific Dharmas unaffected by the passage of time. But man, whose intelligence sweeps from the inert and the 'infinitesimal to the' Super-conscious and the Universal, is the only living thing that has slipped, and is sliding down. The experience of many generations of seekers, who sought the means of contentment and joy, embodied in the precepts of practical living, collectively called Shaasthra is neglected, and new-fangled nostrums are recommended and tried on vast scale. No wonder, contentment and joy are far, far away from human grasp. Dharma, for example, says 'Sathyam vadha' and 'Dharmam chara': Speak the truth and practise righteousness. Sathyaannaasthi paro dharmah: there is no more stabilising factor in society, no more support for individual progress than Sathya, Truth. Hiding the truth or perverting it or denying it or defacing it are all signs of cowardice; no bold person will stoop to cover the face of Truth. Besides, you must know the Vedhic injunction is: 'Dharmam chara', "Practise Dharma." It is not enough if you learn about it; you must act it, fill every moment with word and deed and thought that reflect your awareness of Dharma. That type of living is the hallmark of what is called seelam (character), in such statements as Seelam param bhuushanam "Character is the most precious jewel." Resist temptation to ignore Dharma. You must examine every moment of your waking time whether you are observing the precepts of Dharma or straying away' Dharma is now just a convenient excuse to derive benefits from others, not an opportunity to fulfil your duties to others! You remind others of it, when you desire to squeeze some advantage from them. You must remember not only the fights that Dharma confers but also the duties it imposes. The temptation to ignore Dharma grows from egoism and the acceptance of false values. The wish to satisfy the lower desire is the root of Adharma (unrighteousness). This wish takes hold of you slyly, silently, like a thief in the night; or like a comrade come to save you; or like a servant come to attend on you; or, like a counsellor come to warn you. Oh, wickedness has a thousand tricks to capture your heart. You must be ever alert against the temptation. The wish makes a chink in your consciousness, enters and establish itself and then multiplies its brood and eats into the personality you have built up with laborious care. The fort is no longer under your control. You have been reduced into a puppet manipulated by these inner enemies. Whenever you try to rebuild yourselves, they undermine the structure and you have to do it all over again. That is the extent of the harm they do. Gopikas state of God-consciousness. To conquer this egoism, no rigorous system of exercise or breath control is necessary. No, not even complicated scholarship. The Gopikas (cow-herds) confirm this truth. They were simple rural folk, untouched by the conclusions of deep study. Naaradha was once so shocked at their ignorance of the science of spiritual progress that he volunteered to go among them and put them through some lessons in Inaana. He found on entry into Brindaavan that the gopees (cowherd girls) selling milk or curds in the streets forgot to shout the names of their ware but said, "Govindha, Naaraayana," instead; so immersed were they in God-consciousness. They did not know that they had sold off all the milk; they still wandered on, calling out the names of the Lord, for the dust of Brindaavan was so sacred for them. They had no vishayavaasana, that is, no wish for sensual pleasure; and so, they had no Ajnaana (ignorance). Hence, Naaradha concluded that they had no need for the lessons he had planned to give. He prayed to them to teach him the means of getting that yearning and that vision of the all-pervading Krishna.

Achieve identification with the Lord There was a gopee, for example, called Suguna, who had no other thought than those related to Krishna. Now every evening, it was the usual routine in Brindaavan for every housewife to light the lamp from the flame of the lamp at the house of Nandha; they believed that getting light from the flame of the lamp of the eldest and highest is auspicious. Suguna went with the lamp of Nandha's house and when she reached the house, her mind was lost in the thrill and joy of seeing the very house where Krishna spent his childhood days, to which his pranks and prattle drew all the cowherd boys and girls. She stood there with her unlighted lamp for a long while, near the big oil lamp, illumining the central hall. She was holding the lamp near the flame, but not near enough. She had her finger right over the flame. She was not aware that her finger was being scorched by the flame; she was too full of Krishna-consciousness to be aware of the pain. It was Yasodha who saw her plight and woke her from the reverie, or shall we say, vision? For, to her, the house was alive with Krishna wherever her eyes turned. That is the thanmayathwam (identification) one must achieve. There is no use if the fledgeling stays in the nest; it should develop wings and fly into the sky. There is no use if man grovels in the dust; he should take to his wings and fly.
India is the teacher of all humanity in tiffs field. That is her special role. If the body is the temple of God, the world is the body of God. So, He seeks to establish Aanandha in all countries and all people. That is why I have been giving these discourses and getting the Pandiths from all parts of the country to give discourses to you.
Brindaavan, 15-4-1964 17. His residential address THE Thelugu Vijnaana Samithi, Bangalore, has done well in recognising the greatness and spirit of service of these Pandiths who are propagating, under the auspices of the Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha, the practical disciplines laid down in the Vedhas and Shaasthras. They are invaluable spiritual text-books for all mankind. Shaasthra means that which 'ordains,' or 'commands' or 'instructs with authority.' They do not force you to do as they ordain, but, they "remind you of your worth and work" --- "inaapakam, na thu kaarakam," as the saying goes.

For, there is great need of that reminder, the Divine that the Human really is, has been forgotten.
It was once glowing and shining in the experience, but, it no longer inspires the individual with sublime confidence. The Vedhamaatha has been deserted; spurious guardians and sham caretakers have won the hearts of the people Remilla Suuryaprakaasha Shaasthry just now in his speech on the role of Suurya (Sun) according to the Vedhic Riks (hymns) mentioned that the Sun is the source, sustenance, and silent slaughterer of life. But, he did not mention about the much greater role played by the inner Sun, buddhi (intellect), in individual and social life. Chakshos suuryo ajaayatha -- "the Sun was born out of the Eye of the Purusha," says the Purusha Sooktha. Intellect illumines the Vision (Dhrishti). What is the Nethra (Eye) that is talked about? It is the Inaana nethra or the Shaasthra nethra (Eye of knowledge or Eye of Scriptures), which is endowed with correct Vision.
The Shaasthras direct you to the Reality easily and without hesitation. You have heard people pointing to the faint crescent moon in the sky and saying, "There!
Right on top of that mango tree, a yard from the lightning-conductor on that spire, to the left of it." That is just the kind of help that the Shaasthras give about the Universal and the Absolute.
You have to run your eye along the tree, the spire and the lightning conductor, and see the moon yourself. Shaasthras guide you to the truth and lead you to it, in easy stages.
Mere scholarship will not help It is a hard job to know about your own Self. Take the case of the food that you eat with your own mouth. You feel it in your stomach and after that, you do not experience what happens to it at each stage. How then can you know, without acquiring the special means for it, the Truth that lies behind the sheaths that encase and enclose you --- the Annamaya, Praanamaya, Manomaya, Vijnaanamaya and Aanandhamaya -- (sheaths of material, vital energy, mind, intelligence and bliss)? Clear your intellect or intellectual power (dheeshakthi) of the cobwebs of the ego, the dust of desire, the soot of greed and envy, and it becomes a fit instrument for revealing the Swaruupa--the Inner Truth. "Know yourself, know the Inner Motivator, the Antharyaamin"---that is the exhortation of the scriptures of all faiths. For, unless you are armed with that knowledge, you are like a ship without a compass, sailing on a stormy sea. I must tell you that scholarship in the Shaasthras will not help you; scholarship is a very dangerous thing for it makes you aware of your ego all the time, instead of helping you to overcome it. If you notice serried ranks of bottles on the shelves of a man, you can conclude that he is a chronic invalid, addicted to drugs. So too, if you see on a man's shelves serried ranks of books, you can conclude that he is a chronic invalid, suffering from doubt and despair and confusion, and addicted to the drugs that he believes will cure them. Like all long-standing invalids, both these will start giving, at the slightest provocation, tedious accounts of their illnesses and the methods by which they tried to cure themselves. Royal road to achieve the Truth Want of steady faith is what drives people to drugs and books. There is a story about Raadha and her faith in Krishna. The elders in Brindaavan who revelled in scandalising Krishna--successors have been born for them even now---set an ordeal for Raadha to test her virtue. She was given a mud pot with a hundred holes and asked to bring water in that pot, from the Yamuna to her house! She was so full of the Krishna-consciousness that she never knew the condition of the pot. She immersed it in the river, repeating the name of Krishna as usual with every intake of the breath and every exhalation. Every time the name Krishna was uttered, a hole was covered, so that by the time the pot was full, it was whole! That was the measure of her faith. Faith can affect even inanimate objects. The ancients have laid a royal road for cultivating the spirit and achieving the Truth with that as the instrument. Why wander about in the thorny wastes, or slushy bylanes? Practise the Saadhana of Japam and Dhyaanam as prescribed; know all about it, from these Pandiths and others who have the experience. Do Puuja (ritual worship), with flowers, Japam with rosaries, etc., but, only until you get set for higher endeavours. You must offer the Lord, not the flowers that plants grow; that will reward the plant, not you! The Lord wants you to offer the lotus that blooms in the Lake of your Heart, the fruit that ripens on the tree of your earthly career, not the lotus and the fruit available in the market place! You may ask--"Where can we find the Lord?" Well, He has given His address, in Chapter 18, Sloka 61 of the Bhagavadh Geetha. Turn to it and note it down. Ishwarassarvabhoothaanaam hrididese, Arjuna, thishathi'---" O Arjuna, the Lord resides in the heart of all beings." Now, after knowing that, how can you look down on any living being in contempt or how can you revel in hating him or indulge in the pastime of ridiculing? Every individual is charged with the Divine Presence, moved by Divine attributes. Love, honour, friendliness -that is what each one deserves from you. Give these in full measure. The hard path to win Lord's Grace The Grace of the Lord cannot be won by a little pretence of vairagya (non-attachment) or just a grain of vivekam (discrimination). Know and act; realise and experience; that is the hard path. Surrender yourself to His Will. Life is a great Yajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice). Allow the Lord to preside over it. Do not ignore Him. This is not a Bhoga-bhuumi (land of enjoyment), it is Thyaagabhuumi, Yogabhuumi, Karmabhuumi (land of sacrifice, union with God, and of devoted action). See how even the rain which threatened to pour on you and disturb the gathering stood away. When 1 started from Whitefield some people said, "There cannot be any meeting this evening; there will be heavy rain at Bangalore also." I told them, "Never has rain interfered with the meetings where I spoke." The clouds melted away in a refreshing gale, which scattered on your sweet-smelling flowers from that row of trees, that is all. Have that love, that spirit of united work and prayer---and I assure you, Raamarajya (kingdom of Lord Raama) will establish itself again in this land. Malleswaram, 16-4-1964 Listen to the primeval Pranava AUM resounding in your heart as well as in the heart of the Universe SHRI SATHYA SAI 18. Upanayanam TODAY is Shankara Jayanthi---the day commemorating the advent of Shankaraacharya who came to restore Dharma; it is also the day on which Brahmopadesam (instruction about Brahman) was given here for the boys sitting on this dais, who have come from Bengal, Bombay, Hyderabad and Bangalore. The Shankara Jayanthi Day was chosen by Me for their initiation into the higher Aadhyaathmic (Spiritual) Life, for Shankara is an inspiration even today for millions of spiritual aspirants all over the world, who seek to know the Reality of the Universe and its fundamental Unity. They had this lucky chance of getting initiated here in My Presence by Me, as a result of their own good fortune.

The ceremony of Brahmopadesam is Upanayanam, which means, "taking near," taking the young aspirant near Brahman, that is to say, introducing him to Brahmajijnaasa (desire to know Brahman), the path of Brahman. It is one of the Samskaaras (purificatory acts), rites which reconstruct the personality, reform the mind, purify it and re-build it. It makes the person receiving it a Dwijia (a twice born)! The boy is born first into the world; now, he is born into the Saadhaka world. He becomes a Brahma-chaari--a person who walks towards Brahman. So, it is a very significant day in the lives of these people, a day they must long remember with joy and thankfulness. It is the day when their hearts were turned towards God; and they should try not to run away from God hereafter; that is a great responsibility.

Gaayathri manthra is Universal prayer. The initiation was done by the Upadesham (instruction) of the Gaayathri manthram. The manthram (sacred formula) is a universal prayer that can be used by men of all climes and creeds, for, it calls upon the Glorious Power that pervades the Sun and the three worlds to arouse, awaken and strengthen the Intelligence, so that it may lead to intense Saadhana and Saadhana may lead to success.

Every little moment or incident results in sound; only, you may not be able to hear, because the range of your ear is limited. The falling of an eyelid over the eye makes a sound, the dropping of dew on a petal makes a sound. Any little agitation disturbing the calm is bound to produce sound. The sound caused by the primal movement that resulted in the enveloping of Brahman by self-evolved illusion is the Pranavasabdha or OM. The Gaayathri is the elaboration of that Pranava and so, it is now held so venerable that initiation into spiritual life is achieved by its contemplation.

The sound of a Manthra is as valuable as its meaning. Even a poisonous cobra is quietened by music; Naadham (sound), has that allaying property. The child in the cradle stops wailing as soon as the lullaby is sung; it may not carry any meaning; it may be a nonsensical rhyme or just a jingle, but, it quietens, soothes the nerves and induces sleep. In the case of the Gaayathri, the meaning too is easy and profound. It does not ask for mercy or pardon; it asks for a dear intellect, so that the Truth may be reflected therein correctly, without any disfigurement.

Requisites of spiritual discipline. The Brahmachari has vowed himself into a life of spiritual discipline. Now what are the requisites for the discipline? First: Faith, that can stand the ridicule of the ignorant, the cavilling by the worldly, the laughter of the low-minded. When someone ridicules, you should argue like this within yourself: Is he ridiculing my body? Well, he is doing what I myself would wish to do; for, I too want to escape out of this attachment of this body. Is he ridiculing the Aathma? Well, he is doing the impossible, for, the Aathma is beyond the reach of words or thought; it is unaffected by praise or blame. Say to yourself, "My Aathma thathwa (Principle of the Self) is Nischala (immovable), it is Nirmala (pure)," and carry on.

Second: Do not worry about ups and downs, loss or gain, joy or grief. You are yourself the maker of the ups and downs. If you but care, it can all be one smooth level. You label something as loss and something else as gain. You crave for a thing and when you get it, you call it joy; when you don't, you call it grief. Cut the craving off, and there will be no more swinging from joy to grief.

Third: Reason out and get convinced of the truth, Sarvam Brahmamayam (All is Brahman). You know there are five elements or bhuuthas, which constitute, by their permutations and combinations, the world called Prapancham, the "Five-constituted." Prithivi or the Earthelement has five qualities, the maximum, and so, it is the grossest. It has its own special characteristic of gandha (smell), as well as the characteristic of the other four, namely, sparsa, ruupa and sabdha (touch, taste, form and sound). The next one Jala, the water-element has only four, its own special one---taste and touch, form. So it is subtler than the Earth-element.

Agni is subtler still, because apart from its special characteristics of form, it has only two others, sound and touch. Vaagu, the Air-element has touch as its special and one more quality, sound.

Finally the lightest and subtlest of all the five, Aakaasha, the Sky-element, has only one characteristic, its own, namely, sabdha. Now, God is subtler than even Aakaasha and so He is all-pervading, even more than ether or anything more pervasive than that. His nature is beyond all human vocabulary, beyond all human mathematics. Have this conviction well stabilised in your intellect.

Establishment of Dharma by Adhi Shankara

Fourth: Be steady in spiritual practice, and never hesitate once you have decided on it. When the bus is moving on, the dust will be floating behind as a cloud: it is only when it stops with a jerk that the dust will envelop the faces of the passengers. So, keep steadily engaged in the practice.

Then, the cloudy dust of the objective world will not cover your face.

Shankaraacharya came to this world for the work of Dharmasthaapana (establishment of righteousness), but he did not wage a war against the narrow sectarians or the wild theologians who opposed him or the critics who condemned him as a pseudo-Buddhist. He won them over by argument, persuasion and preaching. He spoke softly, but, with conviction. He gave his opponents fair chances to present their cases to the best of their ability and sometimes he even helped them to clarify their own points of view. Through Bodha (knowledge) alone can Dharma be saved in the modern Kali-age. That is why I am engaged in bodha (imparting knowledge), in this task of re-constructing through upadesha (instruction).

When you scatter seeds on the surface of the soil, they do not germinate. You have to keep them inside the soil. So too, bodha, if it is scattered on the surface, it will not germinate, grow into the tree of knowledge and yield the fruit of wisdom. Plant it in the heart, water the plant with divine love, manure it with Faith and Courage, keep off pests with insecticides of bhajana (group singing of holy names) and sathsangha (company of the holy), so that you can benefit in the end.

You have not yet got started in saadhana; still you demand shaanthi; you demand Grace. How is it ever possible? Start! Then, everything will be added unto you.

Ask for the right things

God gives you whatever you pray for; so, take care. Ask for the right things. There was a man who had four wives; he happened to go to Bombay on some work connected with his business.

From there, he wrote to all of them that he was prepared to bring home whatever each of them wanted. So, they all wrote to him giving a list of things they wanted. The first wife asked for some nice tonics for her health, and rugs and woollen clothing, to be of service whenever she fell ill. The second wife wanted some sails of the latest style, choli pieces, jewellery of the Bombay type and such other sundry decorative stuff. The third asked him to select for her some religious books, the Inaaneshwari, abhangs, Bhakthi-vijaya, etc., available in Bombay book-shops, as well as pictures of Pandarinath, Bhavaani, Sai Baaba, etc. The fourth wife had no list at all; she simply wrote, "If you return soon and safe, that is enough for me." She got nothing but his love.

The others got big packets containing whatever they had written for. So think well, discriminate clearly before you ask, before you pray.

I know how systematic you are all in eating and drinking. You take pretty good care of the body.

I do not condemn it; I only want that you should take equally good care of the needs of the spirit also. Take a dose of Dhyaanam (meditation) and Japam (silent repetition of holy Names) as the morning breakfast; Puuja and Archana (ritual worship) as Lunch at noon; some Sath-sangha

(holy company) or Sath-chinthana (thinking 'holy thoughts') or Sath-grantha paaraayana

(reading of holy books) or Naama likhitha (writing of holy Names) as afternoon tea and snacks; an hour of bhajana (devotional singing) as Dinner; and a small ten-minute manana (reflection) as the cup of milk before going to bed. That dietary is enough to keep your inner being happy and healthy. That is My advice to you today.

There is in this world no austerity higher than fortitude, no happiness greater than contentment, no punya (good deed) holier than mercy, no weapon more effective than patience.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

19. Jeeva and Dheva

WHEN you pour oil from one tin to another; the hand that pours must be steady and the tin from which it is poured must not shake; nor, should the tin that receives shake, for, that will also make the oil spill on the ground. You should be nischalam (not moving); then only can you accept the Bodha (imparting of knowledge) straight into your hearts.

Now, there are some who say that Jeevi will be jeevi (individual soul) and Deva will be Deva

(God) and the two can never be the same or merge. If that was true, then, what is the use of Japam, Dhyaanam, Sath-karma (good deeds) and all the other varieties of Saadhana (spiritual discipline) recommended by the Shaasthras and the sages? There is no doubt that Nara (man) can become Naaraayana (God); 'thwam' (thou) can become 'Thath' (That). That is the doctrine of the Upanishads and the experience of the saints.

Once a quarrel ensued between the Adhwaithin (non-dualist) who said that the jeevi (individual soul) is really God who falsely identifies himself with the limited Name and Form which he appears to have assumed, and the Dhwaithin (dualist) who said that the jeevi is distinct from the Dheva. When the quarrel boiled over, the Dhwaithin said, "See, even this dhobi knows that Adhwaithism is wrong." The Adhwaithin said that the dhobi too is subject to the Ajnaana, the delusion that he is the limited Upaadhi (adjunct) of name and form, which are but temporary adjuncts of the personality. The knowledge of the kshethra and the Kshethrajna will alone help to overcome that delusion. Kshethra is the field, the field of the senses, the field of the dualities, and the Kshethrajna is he who knows the field and is its Master. Human body is "God's temple"

Every word used in philosophy and even in common parlance has a deep meaning, full of significance. Dhehi which means, liable to be burnt, is the word for body; not merely because it is consumed by fire after the, praana (life) has left, but because even when alive, man is consumed by the fire of Thaapathraya (threefold suffering caused by oneself nature and fate).

Sareeram, which is another word for the body, also comes from the root, meaning that which is consumed.

The dheha (body) is called a Dhevaalayam (God's temple) for the jeevi (individual soul) which is the Deva (God). The architectural temple has three parts; the Praakaaram (the outer temple), the inner temple and the shrine or Garbhagriha (sanctum sanctorum). These three represent the sthula, the suukshma and the kaarana sareera (the gross, the Subtle and the causal body) of man; when you go to a temple, you should remember this symbolism.

Prakrithi is a word that is used to indicate condition of the body, the svabhaava (one's nature) of the body. Well, this

Prakrithi or Nature is also just svabhaava of the Lord, 'his Sankalpa (Will), a manner of His manifestation. All this is, as Kasthuri said in his speech, while quoting some experiences of Bhakthas, "His Hands and Feet, His manifestation." That is why it is said that Sarvam is Brahmamayam.

A yogi had an attack of gastritis and his comrades and co-saadhakas gathered round him to advise him on the treatment. One man suggested that he should always keep some salt in his mouth and swallow the saliva. He did so and was having always salt in the mouth. A few days later, he wanted to distribute some sweets to the children around his aashram, but, whichever item he tasted, he found it not sweet enough. At last, one sweets-vendor asked him to spit out what he had in his mouth and gargle his throat and wash his mouth and then taste the sweets.

That made them taste quite nice. With all this salt taste accumulated through many births on your tongue, how can you discover the true sweetness of the Lord?

Keep intellect free from prejudices

At one of the railway stations of North India, when a thirsty passenger asked the waterman whether the skin-bag from which he was pouring water into his cup was clean enough, the waterman replied, "The bag I have is cleaner than the bag, into which the water is being poured by you." Keep your mind clean of Vaasanas (tendencies caused by past deeds), your intellect free from prejudices, your character free from blemishes, your behaviour free from rudeness-- then, you can attach yourself to God and God too will favour you with His affection.

With just a little paint and a piece of white paper, the painter can draw a frightening picture of a demon, or a charming picture of a smiling baby or an inspiring picture of a yogi meditating on the Absolute. All those different reactions are the result of the combinations of colours; the basic reality is just colour. So too in the picture house, the screen is the stable substance, the shadows come and go. When the picture is being flashed on the screen, the screen is not noticed; it is the base, the foundation, the whole of it has become the picture. Sarvam Vishnu mayam jagath (All this Universe is pervaded by Lord Vishnu).

Every one calls himself "I," is it not? Now, who gave that possession? Was it any company? Or, did you get it as part of the dowry? Or, from the rulers? Or from some organisation? You say it is your birthright; well, let it be so. That 'I' is the entity which is posited as Brahman in the Mahaavaakya (great Vedhic dictum), 'Aham Brahmaasmi.' I am Brahman.

See the divine in the sense-impressions

When the One became many, when the One manifests as Prakrithi composed of the Five Elements, do not imagine that its value is affected thereby. When a rupee is changed into tennaya paise coins, its value is not decreased at all. So, see Nature as Supreme Soul, not as multiplicity of sense-impressions and sense-attractions. Wherever your eye turns, whatever your ears hear, your fingers touch, your tongue tastes, and your nose smells, whatever has form, sound, touch, taste and smell, take that also to be God-filled. Do not allow the mere sound, the mere taste, etc. to captivate your senses. See the divine in each, welcome and accept only that.

When Thukaaraam was asked how man can keep this monkey-mind from running after sensuous pleasures, he replied to the enquirer, "Let the monkey run; you keep quiet where you are; do not let the body go along with the monkey-mind." Tell the mind, "I shall not give you the body as your servant." Then, the mind will desist and it can be defeated. Just as there is a method to be followed even in pulling down a house, there is a method to be followed even in pulling down the complex structure of the mind.

You can become Master of yourself

The mind can be pulled down by systematic efforts and you can become master of yourself. You might ask, can such a mighty force come down? Well. When We were nearing Rishikesh on our way back from Badhri, Governor Raamakrishna Rao also asked Me the same question. I asked every one to come beyond a certain point on the road in a matter of minutes. Everyone was surprised that I was ordering them to get down from the cars and buses and scurry forward in hot haste. I told the Governor that the projecting rock on the mountain by the side of the road will slide very soon on the road and block it. He asked Me "Is it possible?" Within a few minutes, after every one had come forward to a safe distance, the rocks fell and the road was blocked for a long time, until debris was cleared.

The ladder must be as tall as the height to which you want to climb, is it not? Your spiritual practice to curb the mind must be carried on step by step until Saakshaathkaaram (Realisation) is gained. The rice in the pot must be well boiled and become soft and sweet. Until that happens, the fire must burn. In the vessel of 'body,' with the water, that is to say the 'senses,' boil the mind and make it soft. The fire is the Saadhana. Keep it burning bright; the jeeva will at last become Deva.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 17-5-1964

20. The Guru is the guide

THIS day is called Vyaasa Poornima, holy day, which must be celebrated with the prayer and contrition which alone can cleanse the heart, and not by feasting or fasting, which affect only the body. The fact that Sage Vyaasa is associated with this day or that Lord Raama or Krishna is connected with some other day is merely an opportunity to mark the day as outstandingly important, when something holy has to be done. It is full moon today, when the moon shines, without any let or hindrance, when moonlight is bright and cool and full. The mind of man is compared to the moon, for it is as wayward as the moon with its swing from brightness to darkness; this day, the mind too has to be bright, effulgent and cool.

Vyaasa was born with a great urge for spiritual uplift and he entered into deep study and saadhana, even as a child. He acquired such divine wisdom and glory that he is identified with Naaraayana Himself. He stands out as the Lokaguru (World Teacher) for he codified the Vedhic hymns, and prepared the great Vedhaanthic text of Brahmasuuthra, besides the epic commentaries of the Vedha-vedhaantha (teachings based on Upanishadhic philosophies) for the people whom he loved to educate, commentaries named the Mahaabhaaratha and the Shrimadh Bhaagavatha.

You have to traverse the path

He is called Vedha-Vyaasa because of his service to the students of the Vedhas, which defied understanding, since they were countless and fathomless: Anantho vai Vedhaah. He composed also the eighteen Puraanas, on the various Naamaruupas (Names and Forms) of the same Godhead, Puraanas which are text-books and illustrative descriptions of moral codes, historical episodes, philosophical principles and social ideals. Vyaasa sought to bring home, through the Puraanas, the need for mastering egoistic impulses, as the sloka says, Ashtaa dasha puraanesu

Vyaasaaya vachana dwayam;

Paropakaara punyaaya

Paapaaya para peedanam.

"Two statements can summarise all the eighteen Puraanas composed by Vyaasa. Do good to others; avoid doing harm," says the hymn. Doing good is the drug; avoiding harm is the regimen, that must accompany the treatment. That is the cure for the disease of suffering from joy and grief, honour and dishonour, prosperity and adversity, and the dual throng, that bothers man and deprives him of equanimity.

Vyaasa is the Lokaguru: he is Divine Effulgence. Even Vyaasa can only show you the road.

YOU have to traverse it alone. He gives you a manthra (a sacred word or formula), which you repeat; though you may not know its meaning, it will act as the purifier of your mind.

When a ryot has to get something done for him by the Collector, he goes to a lawyer, who knows how it has to be asked for, he writes it out in English, and gives it to him as a typed sheet, which the ryot presents to the Collector. He does not know what is written or its meaning but it does the work because it has come from the brain and the experience of a man who is his Guru for the purpose. The Lord is kinder than any human officer and far more eager. He takes on the roles which will save the devotee from harm, as he did to help Sakkubhai. Make the offerings without egoism

There was a devotee who felt that Seetha was his sister and Raama his brother-in-law; he loved Raama as Krishna loved Arijun! He came to know that Seetha had gone into the forest following Raama in exile; he imagined the distress she must be suffering, for want of sandals in the thorninfested jungle paths and of a cot in the snake-infested depths of the forests. So, he went about in the jungle, with a pair of sandals and a cot, calling out, "Sister! Seetha!" long after his throat had turned hoarse. This happened a few decades ago. He took the Raamaayana as a contemporary event.

Raama appeared before him and consoled him. He fell before Him and prayed that He should accept the sandals and cot from him and use them, pleading that Seetha cannot walk on the hard thorny ground, or rather, that he would not be happy until she used them. "My dear brother-in-law," he addressed Raama fondly. Raama accepted them and asked him to leave happily.

Offerings that are made with no defilement of egoism are gladly accepted by the Lord. If you feel proud or conceited, even the most fragrant flowers placed at the Feet of the Lord will be rejected by Him as unbearably stinking.

Man is a mixture of dhaiva, dhaanava and maanava, (god, demon and man). The wickedness of the ogre can be overcome by dhaya (the quality of mercy and charity), of sympathy and fellowfeeling; the pride of the god can be overcome by dhama (self-control), detachment, renunciation; the egoism of man can be overcome by following dharma prescribed by the impartial sages who have been purified by thapas (penance), and by canalising the instincts and impulses into fruitful fields. When these three are thus sublimated, maanava (man) is transformed into Maadhava (God). Each one must take up this process of purification, by discovering his faults and failings and realise the road to success.

Krishna moved by devotion of Bheeshma

One morning, Dharmaraaja went to Krishna, in order to pay homage. He found Krishna seated in the padmaasana (lotus seat) pose, meditating deeply, with teardrops rolling over His cheeks.

Dharmaraaja wondered whom He was meditating upon. At last, when Krishna opened His eyes he dared ask Him the question and Krishna replied that He was exulting over the devotion of a great soul towards Him. He said that it was no other than Bheeshma, whose mind was intently fixed on Him even while he was on the bed of arrows. It is not enough if you claim to be a bhaktha; the Lord must acknowledge it and exult over it, as Krishna did, when He was lost in admiration over the steadfastness of Bheeshma.

Vyaasa composed the Mahaabhaaratha, also called jaya (victory) with its galaxy of great persons, like Bheeshma, Bheema, Arjuna, Vidhura, Dharmaraaja, Dhroupadhi, Kunthi, all revolving around the divine Krishna. This epic will remove the darkness of ignorance, the pettiness of selfishness, the cowardice of separation from the hearts of men. So, the title of Lokaguru for Vyaasa is very apt. He is extolled as Vishnu, sans Shankha (conch) and Chakra (discus); Shankara (Shiva), sans the three eyes; and Brahma (the Creator) sans the four heads.

You must make the best use of this Guru, as you must, of this Puttaparthi itself. You must acquire here the skills for winning shaanthi and santhosha (peace of mind and bliss), the grace of God, the lessons of saadhana, the fruits of sathsang (company of holy men); do not fritter away your energy and time, seeking sensory satisfaction in ungodly company.

You pray, not for grace, but for petty impermanent pleasures; you do not try to know the ordinances of God and decide to follow them. Look at Dhruva. He started his penance, with the low aim of getting mastery over his step-mother's son; but as he progressed, he saw that he could get something far higher than even imperial honours, namely, the grace of God. Learn to appreciate the Aathma (Divine Self) and to detach your mind from that which is not Aathma. Become wise and discriminating. Leave everything to the Guru. When I was in the previous body at Shirdhi, there was a woman named Raadhabhai who yearned to get a Manthrapadhesha (inflated into a sacred word or formula) from me. That day was also Vyaasa Poornima. She was so anxious to get a Naamam (Name) that she refused to take even food until she got it. Three days passed like this, but Baaba did not yield. At last, Syaama who was with the previous body spoke about her and pleaded for her and feared that she might even die of hunger. He said that if she died, it would be poor reflection on the broad-mindedness for which Baaba was known. Raadhabhai was brought to the place in a weak condition. Baaba asked her to go to some Guru and get initiated into the name; she said, "I know of no other." Baaba asked her the meaning of the slokha "Guru Brahma Guru Vishnu Guru Dhevo Maheshwarah, Gurusaakshath param Brahma Tasmai Shri Guruve namah." He asked her, "Why not take the Guru's name, then? Why demand another name from the Guru? If the Guru is God, obeying His orders, walking in the path He has shown, these are as effective as the japam (repetition) of the name." You are judged by your words. Once you have secured a Guru, leave everything to him, even the desire to achieve liberation. He knows you more than you yourself ever can. He will direct you as much as is good for you. Your duty is only to obey and to smother the tendency to drift away from Him. You may ask, how are we to earn our food, if we attach ourselves to a Guru like this? Be convinced that the Lord will not let you starve; He will give you not merely money but even Amirtha, not only food but the nectar of immortality. Become immersed in the sweetness of the Name on your tongue. That will render your words also sweet and soft. By your words, will you be judged. A Mahaaraaja out hunting happened to ride far forward, so that his retinue could not catch up with him. He saw a blind man by the jungle road and so he accosted him, "Hallo, dear man. Did you notice any one passing along?" The blind man said "No." Then, after a few minutes, the minister came along and asked the same man, "Hey brother! Did you notice any one passing along?" and got the same answer. The commander when he saw him asked "Here, you fool! Did you notice some one passing along?" and a soldier who came last shouted, "You blind rotter, open your dirty mouth and tell me whether any one passed this way." At last when the priest of the court came along and said, "Dear brother, please tell me whether any one passed this way," he could reply that a king, a minister, a commander and a soldier had passed and had asked him the same question. For their style of speech, revealed their status and character. If you have dhaya, dhama and dharma (sympathy, self-control and righteousness), that will take you beyond the realm of the three gunas (qualities of the mind); there is no need then for getting a Naama (Name) from the Guru and repeating it. The ajina (command) of the Guru or the Lord is even more important than the Name of the Guru or the Name of the Lord. Of what use is the repetition of the Name, without at the same time purifying the impulses by the observance of His commands. Prashanthi Nilayam, 24-7-1964 Maayaa itself has caused multifarious forms. This is a clever stage-play, a kind of fancy-dress. The objective world or Nature assumes many forms through the manipulation of Maayaa, the Deluding urge. Shri Sathya Sai 21. Sravana and Smarana THE first among the nine forms of devotion is sravana (hearing) and today, we have installed here at the Prashanthi Nilayam this instrument for sravana, namely, the telephone. I am used to hearing not the talk that comes through this instrument, but the cries of agony; the call of pining hearts hungering for grace. Still since it gladdens the hearts of devotees and I am never against anything that makes them glad and full-hearted, I have agreed for this installation. Just now, sitting in this hall, on this chair, you heard Me speak to Kanjilal at New Delhi and only he and I know how happy he is at the present moment, for he was able to speak to Baaba direct and to hear My voice, while in his own house.

 Just see how this telephone itself came to be installed. The engineering staff were working day and night to fix it, but heavy rains interfered and even this noon, they were afraid that a connection with Delhi had become next to impossible. I had fixed the time as 5-30; but they pleaded with Me to postpone My coming into the hall for a few minutes at least, so that they could make sure that Delhi was coming through fine and clear. I said that we could speak to Delhi later, if they felt that would be better.
Sravana can transform the individual
 But, you saw how, as soon as I sat on this chair, Kanjilal could be heard clearly and I could inaugurate the service. It is given to these men who are here today to share in this achievement and this joy; they have the luck, the chance. Many times, people search far and wide for a groom for their daughter; but all the while, the young man might be in the neighbouring house itself.
 The engineers may say that they only did their duty and they might not look for any gratitude; but I am sure, you will thank them for the service they rendered, in these rains and under high pressure of work.
Sravana, hearing the voice of God, hearing about God, these are important events in life, events that transform the individual. Arjuna "heard" the Bhagavadh Geetha; Pareekshit "heard" the Bhaagavatha; both were liberated from bondage thereby. In the Mahaabhaaratha, Karna, meaning the Ear (!) is the most outstanding character; it is called Karnarasaayana, (sweet medicine to be "heard") and assimilated into daily life. The Sabdha (Sound), the Pranava (Om) are all very important keys to bliss; the Vedhas are to be "heard" and "recited." They are Shruthi, that which was heard, in moments of supraconscious ecstasy, by purified scholars doing saadhana. I am reminded of all this in the presence of this contrivance for Doora-sravana, hearing people who are far away.
Bhaagavatha-sravana (listening to Bhaagavatha) leads to Bhaagavatha-smarana (the constant remembrance of the Lord), and detachment from the ties of the objective world. There was famous dacoit once who advised his son while initiating him into the ancestral profession, never for a moment listen to stories of the Lord. "Do not stay to listen to any Puraana (mythological stories) or any reading of the Bhaagavatha," (tales of incarnations of Vishnu), he exhorted the young aspirant. The son scrupulously observed this injunction for years and amassed a good fortune.

 Effect of hearing the Bhaagavatha
 One night, however, while running with his loot on his shoulder through a side lane of the city to avoid the police, a piece of glass cut into his sole; he sat for a while to pull it off and stop the flow of blood. He was then behind a house, where some one was reading and explaining the Bhaagavatha to a small group of listeners; he listened perforce for a short two minutes. The spark fell on the heap of cotton. During that short period, he heard the Pandith explaining the nature of God. He has no ears, no eyes, no limbs; He has a thousand forms; He is without form.
"Sarvathah paani-paadham," (with hands and feet every here) as the Geetha says. That description got fixed in his heart. He could not shake it.
 A few days later the police came to know of the depredations made by him as well as his associates and kinsmen. In order to know more about their activities they entered the area incognito, one constable as Goddess Kaali and some others as the worshippers and priests. They shouted and yelled, cursed and terrified the dacoits and called upon them to come out of their homes and fall at the feet of Kaali.
 Many did so, but the son who heard the Bhaagavatha albeit for two minutes knew just enough to save his skin. He was not terrified at all. He challenged the constable who was acting the role of Kaali and tore off his makeup and exposed the plot and instilled courage into the hearts of the gang. Then, when the police left discomfited he argued within himself thus: "If two minutes of the forbidden fruit could help me so much, what can I not gain if I devote myself entirely to the stories of the glories of God?" He left off the evil path and became a saadhaka (spiritual practitioner).
 Tongue is man's biggest weapon of offence The grace of God descends upon the eager saadhaka, who listens attentively to the story of that grace. The name of God, if recited with love and faith, has that power. Once the mother of Agasthya boasted that her son drank all the waters of the ocean; but the mother of Hanumaan, who was there, said: "Why go to that extent? My son leaped over it in a trice." But there was the mother of Raama with them. She said, "Your son leaped over the ocean, uttering my son's name.

Without it, he was helpless." The name has that overmastering power. It can award unheard of, unimagined strength and courage. The other two women disputed the fact that it was Raamanaama that strengthened Hanumaan for the enterprise. So, Kaushalya asked Raama Himself. He said, "Why, it was because this body was called Raama, the name that combines the beejaaksharas (mystic letters) of both Shiva and Vishnu, that I Myself was able to conquer Raavana and his hordes!"

The name has much efficacy. By repeating the name, the Lord and His attributes can be easily identified. The tongue must be sanctified by the repetition of the name. It has also to use sweet expressions which will spread contentment and joy. Be very careful about your speech. Animals have horns, insects have stings, beasts have claws and fangs. But, man's biggest weapon of offence is his tongue. The wounds that his tongue inflicts can scarce be healed; they fester in the heart for long. They are capable of more damage than even an atom bomb.

When Bheema went to bring the Saugandhika flower for his beloved, he saw Hanumaan with his tail lying across the road. Bheema talked rudely to Hanumaan, ordering him to remove the tail, for he thought it mean to walk over some one else's appendage. The rudeness made Hanumaan refuse the demand and so, Bheema was humiliated for he could not lift the tail and set it aside.

He learned the need for politeness in conversation.

Speak so that your language is as sweet as your feelings are. Make the words true and pleasing.

(Sathyam broth; priyam brooyath). But, for the sake of pleasing another, do not speak falsehood or exaggerate. Cynicism which leads you to speak about a thing in a carping manner and in order to bring it into disrepute is as bad as flattery which makes you exaggerate and cross the boundaries of truth.

Bliss is man's native character

You can give Aanandha by your speech, only if you have attained the state of Aanandha yourself. A lamp burning under a pot with five holes: that is the symbol of man, who has the Flame of Wisdom shining through five senses. Cover the pot with a thick cloth and no light emerges. The cloth is the cover of ajnaana (ignorance), of thamas (inaction). Remove it; it shines feebly through the senses, that is the symbol of rajas (passion and activity). Remove the pot itself, that is to say, remove the identification with the body, (the dhehaathma-buddhi); then the Aathmajyothi (light of the Sell) shines full and bright. The jyothi or Aanandha (Divine light or Divine Bliss) is ever there but, it was obstructed by the pot and the cloth. Aanandha is your native character, your real stamp, your very reality.

The patient must himself drink the drug. There is no vicarious cure.

The balm must be applied where the pain is. The cause of the illness and of the misery is in your mental vision, for, you see many, when there is only One. You say "My God," "Their God," "Your Baaba," as if there are so many Gods existing to help you quarrel and right among yourselves' Ask the Lord for the removal of your earthly troubles; there is no mistake in that. It is much better than asking other men, and losing self-respect and honour. For the sake of votes, people catch hold of the feet of all and sundry; if they fall at the feet of the Lord, that will bring them more votes, for the people will plead with Him to lead them as a great servant of God.

Communicate from heart to heart

You can call Me on the phone, but I will not be available for all those who do not have the sincere and steady yearning for the Lord. For those who say "No! You are not my Lord," I say

"No." For those who say, "Yes," I too echo "Yes." If I am available in your heart, I will be available over the phone. But, remember, I have My own special postal and telephone systems.

They operate from the heart straight to the heart. There are rules and regulations for the operation of that system, which the Shaasthras (scriptures) declare. You can find them there. I am glad that devotees have today acquired this new convenience at Prashaanthi Nilayam.

Difficulties are created to increase the yearning and to sift the sincere devotee from the rest.

22. Eliminate the Ego

IT is indeed a piece of good fortune that you have been able to hear, in the midst of the many worldly worries that engross you, the valuable teachings of the ancient scriptures of this land, from these great Pandiths. This is what really confers lasting happiness. In the land which once cultivated these great ideals, weeds and thorny bushes have over-run the fields and with the decline of spiritual enthusiasm, enmity, factions, injustice and falsehood have grown wild. Indian religion and culture have treasured many folkways and customs that enshrine the lessons laid down by yogis and rishis for the good of the community. They are called samskaaras (purificatory acts), acts which sublimate the baser emotions and impulses; there are 48 of these mentioned in the Shaasthras, but, of these, 16 are essential for the individual who strives for the higher destiny. These have been neglected by society, since many decades, on account of a mad infatuation for the ways of the ruling race, which had come from the west. Their language slowly modified habits of living and even thinking; their dress which was adopted, changed outlooks and modes of living; their games and recreations transformed the ways in which Indians spend their leisure; their culture percolated into every field of activity and Indian culture is faced, even after the recovery of national independence, with a great danger to its continuity. Discard all low desires. Of course, there is no need to feel unduly depressed. One has only to recognise ignorance, in order to make it vanish. One has only to know one-self in order to contact the springs of Bliss and Immortality and of kinship with all beings. In Sanskrit, the individual is known as vyakthi, because he has to make his innate divinity vyaktha (explicit). That is your reality; discover it, dwell in it, desire to divulge it. Discard all low desires for a few acres of land, or a fat account in the bank, or a few more bungalows or cars or radios; desire rather the joy that will never fade, that will never cloy, deep, steady and strength-giving, the joy of Divine Realisation. Discover your holiness, your divinity, your truth. You may have doubts which is dharma (right conduct), which is sathya (truth), which is prema (Divine love), etc.; I admit; but, you can have no doubt about yourself, is it not? So, find out who you are and be fixed in that truth. That is enough to save you, to give you everlasting joy. That is why the Vedhas and the Upanishads teach, what the sages and the saints experienced, what these Pandiths (scholars) remind you in their discourses. Remember the God in whom you move, the God who makes you move, the God who is all this vast universe, every atom, every huge star. Select some Name and Form for this all-pervasive immanent God and keep those on your tongue and before your mental eye. That is what is called japasahitha dhyaanam (meditation-cum-recitation of the Name). Discover the truth in silence. You are now more interested in listening to film-songs on the transistor radios which you carry round your necks. A villager came to Madras recently and his educated son-in-law went to the railway station to meet him and take him home. While they were proceeding homewards in a taxi, the father-in-law asked the son-in-law a rather strange question: "How much do the barbers here charge per shave?" The son-in-law was amazed at his curiosity; he asked why he was so eager to know this particular fact, more than anything else. The villager replied, "I saw a few barbers going along the road now; they are all wearing rich clothes, and they are carrying their equipment not in tin boxes as our village barbers do, but, in fine shiny leather boxes." The old man had seen people carrying these transistor radios. People miss a very valuable thing if they do not listen in, even while they are moving about or resting in the park or beach! They are afraid of being alone; they avoid silence as something detestable! But, you can discover your own truth only when you are alone with yourself and there is silence all around you. Justice Sadhaashivam said now that he had seen huge gatherings of eager listeners at religious meetings like this and so, he was led to the conclusion that atheism is not gaining ground in this country. The gatherings are certainly large but they are not very encouraging if you consider what a small percentage actually pay attention and of those who attend, what a small percentage cherish the teaching in the heart and strive to regulate their lives accordingly. As a matter of fact, there are no atheists at all but, only ignorant people. They do not know that God is their innermost core. They deny God because they do not know that their very breath is God. It is like fish denying the existence of water. You have to pity them for their colossal ignorance, not get angry with them for saying things you do not like. God dwells in you as aanandha (divine bliss); that is why you seek aanandha automatically, always, in every object around you. To become as full of aanandha as Raadha (the consort of Lord Krishna) or as Raamakrishna Paramahansa or as Vivekaanandha, you have to sacrifice your ego and saturate yourself with the consciousness that the Lord is your very being.

 Krishna and Aanjaneya
 You must have heard many stories of garvabhangam--the suppression of conceit or egoism by the Lord. One day, Aanjaneya appeared in a garden on the outskirts of Dhwaaraka (abode of Lord Krishna). Krishna who heard about the pranks of the strange monkey, directed Garuda to proceed and scare the animal out of the city limits. Garuda failed, even though the later took the entire army with him for the fray. His pride was humbled. Krishna sent a message through him to the monkey, who had declared himself as Aanjaneya, that he should deign to come to Krishna's court. But, Aanjaneya recognised only Raama and would obey only the orders of Raama. So, Krishna had to send another message that Raama was calling him to His audience hall! Devotion compels the Lord to yield to the whims of His servants. Aanjaneya hurried to see Raama and Krishna gave him the darshan of Raama Himself. Sathyabhaama had offered to change herself into Seetha and when she stood by the side of Raama, Aanjaneya could not recognise in that form his Seetha. He was bewildered at this apparition. He asked Krishna, "O Lord Raama! Where is my Seetha? Who is this substitute?" Thus, the conceit of Sathyabhaama was broken by the Lord. He then asked Rukmini (Krishna's consort) to come forward and Aanjaneya immediately saw in her the Seetha he adored. So long as you have a trace of ego in you, you cannot see the Lord clearly. That is the thera (curtain), which Saint Thyaagaraaja prayed Lord Venkateshwara to remove from his mind. Egoism will be destroyed if you constantly tell yourself, 'It is He, not I.' 'He is the force, I am but the instrument.' Keep His Name always on the tongue; contemplate His glory whenever you see or hear anything beautiful or grand; see in every one the Lord Himself moving in that form. Do not talk evil of others, see only good in them. Welcome every chance to help others, to console others, to encourage others along the spiritual path. Be humble, do not become proud of your wealth, status, authority, learning or caste. Dedicate all your physical possessions and mental skills and intellectual attainments to the service of the Lord and to the Lord's manifold manifestations. Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha (Madras), Inauguration by Shri M. Bhakthavatsalam Mother is Love. Worship the mother as God. Father is Truth. Worship the father as God.

SHRI SATHYA SAI
 23. The Rain Clouds
 FOR the last two hours, you were fully immersed in the aanandha of Krishnathathwa (Reality of Krishna) and of Vedhasaara (essence of Vedha), which are both the same. How grand it would be if all the moments of life you were imbibing this aanandha undisturbed! Iyengar spoke on Krishna-thrishna, the thirst for Krishna! What an appropriate word, that! The thirst for worldly goods can never be allayed; trying to satisfy it makes it only more acute. Thirst can never be quenched by drinking salt water, which is the objective world. Human desire is illimitable, without end. It makes you pursue the mirage in the desert; it makes you build castles in the air; it breeds discontent and despair once you succumb to it. But, develop the thirst for Krishna, you discover the cool spring of aanandha within you. Krishna Naama (name) makes you strong and steady; it is sweet and sustaining. Gouranga, the great example of this thirst, is so called because his heart was so pure that it had no touch of blemish at all. He is called Krishna Chaithanya, because he lost his chaithanya, that is, became unconscious of the world outside him, when he heard the name Krishna and became Krishna conscious! Yearning of Gopees for Krishna Look at the gopees (milk maids of Gokulam) and their yearning for the Lord! They never swerved from the path of bhakthi, of continuous smarana (remembrance) of the Lord. When in pain you shout "Ayyo, appa or amma"; but the gopees always called on Krishna only, whether in joy or in grief. A gopee was moving along the streets of Brindhaavan selling butter and ghee and milk; but, she was not crying aloud the names of her ware; she was calling aloud the names of Krishna: "Govindha! Dhamodhara! Maadhava!" The gopees forgot the very purpose of their visit to Brindhaavan, their very livelihood, their task of selling and earning. They stood watching Krishna, running along with a hoop and ignoring all else, they ran behind him with a ball of butter in the hand, offering it to the Divine child who had captured their hearts, calling on Him to receive the gift; "Govindha!" Dhamodhara! Maadhava!" When one of them was rolling on the ground in terrible anguish at the separation from Krishna, they sat around her and instead of assuaging her grief by turning her thoughts away from Krishna, they augmented it because they themselves could not think of any other subject to talk to her than Krishna's glory and Krishna's prema! They sat around and sang, "Govindha!

Dhamodhara! Maadhava!" Whoever has the thirst, Krishna will quench it; whoever calls on Him in the agony of that thirst, Krishna, the rain-cloud, will answer that call and appear.

You can understand Raadha (Krishna's consort) only if you can fathom the depth of that thirst.

Raadha believed that Krishna is the Aadhar (basis); she did aaradh (worship) to Krishna in a continuous dhaara (stream); in fact, she is Dhaara or Prakrithi, which is another form of the Lord or Pursuha Himself. How can those who are full of evil tendencies and impulses grasp that relationship?

In this Kaliyuga, the principle of Prema (Divine Love) is not in evidence. It is smothered in jealousy, conceit, hatred, fear, falsehood and greed. That is why it is best referred to as the kalaha-yuga (the age of faction), marked by fights between mother and daughter, father and son, teacher and pupil, guru and guru, brother and brother. The recitation of the name of Krishna is the best method for cleansing the mind of all these evil impulses.

You may ask, "If we engage ourselves in this pastime, how can we earn our livelihood?" Well, let me assure you, if you have pure and steady faith in the Lord, He will provide for you, not merely food, but the nectar of immortality. You have that mighty potentiality in you, to discover the Lord within and compel Him to grant you that nectar.

Make the thirst for Krishna grow in you

When you say that Krishna was born in Gokula, then. He grew up in Brindhaavan, that He ruled over Mathura and that He later reigned at Dhwaaraka, what do those statements signify? The manas (mind) is the Gokula! where He was born (where He is born even now to whoever takes the spiritual path); the heart is the Brindhaavan where He grows, where prema (divine love) for Him develops; the Chith is the Mathura which He rules over and the Nirvikalpa stage is Dhwaaraka where He installs Himself, as the reigning monarch. Make the Krishna-thrishna (thirst for Krishna) grow through these stages and you will be saving yourself! You will be joining the ranks of Raadha, Meera and Sakkubhai (devotees of Lord Krishna).

Once upon a time, we used to hear of three famous names Lal, Bal and Pal; they were famous in the days of the national struggle. But many do not know now who they were. At least, Lal and Pal have disappeared from the memory of the people; a large percentage of even educated persons will flounder if you ask them who Lal and Pal were. Bal, meaning Bala Gangaadhara Thilak, is still known to many, because he has made a contribution to spiritual knowledge, being a saadhaka himself and a good student of Geetha for which he wrote a commentary. So, saadhana alone makes life worth while; the rest is mostly froth or fake or failure, flashes of the moment.

Three principles to guide you

The mind must become bhaktimaya (saturated with devotion to God); the intelligence must be transformed into inaana-dheepthi (the splendour of universal wisdom), or inaana (Divine

Knowledge); the body must be a willing and efficient instrument for saddharmacharana, (the practice of righteousness). Such a life is indeed the crown and glory of humanity. The rest are contaminated, contained, caged lives!

There is no use asking a doctor to advise you about the plans for the building you propose to raise; nor is it wise to ask the engineer for a balm to assuage pain. Go to the proper Guru and learn from him about at least three principles to guide your lives.

(1) Dharma : What is dharma, why should it be followed, what does it allow, what does it condemn, etc.?---these have to be clearly known. The Geetha is the best text on Dharma: the first word in it is dharma and the last word is mama (mine). So, it teaches each student what exactly he should consider as "the dharma which is mine!" Each one must evolve his own dharma based on Aathmadharma, the faith that the Aathma (soul) is his true reality.

(2) Bhakthi Bhakthi (devotion) is like a king, who has two aides-de-camp called inaana (divine knowledge) and vairaagya (non-attachment). Without these two bodyguards, bhakthi is never secure or safe. Bhakthi must be built upon the foundation of inaana; it must flower as "detachment from the world." The inaani is the sthitha-prajna (unmoved by agitating feelings and emotions), unshaken by the storms of fortune, good or bad; the vairaagi (the detached), is the person who has rid himself of the three gunas (qualities of the mind); and the bhakti (devotee) is he who is all prema (Love). Bhakti, jnana and vairagya are three peaks of the same Himaalayan range. Prema creates dhya (compassion); vairagya induces dhama (tolerance); and, jnana leads you along the path of dharma. Put out the fire raging within you (3) Saadhana- When the house catches fire, you run about in desperate haste to get succour and to put out the flames; but, you do not realise that the fire raging inside you is even more devastating and devouring. You must take up the duty of fire fighting in right earnest and never rest until the flames are put out. Start the fight right now. Start serving your parents, your teachers, the elders, the poor, the diseased, the distressed. Do not foster factions and divisions. Promote love, concord, co-operation, brotherliness. Do not look upon people as belonging to this state or that; all are in the state of bondage to the senses, to the objective world. Join the company of the good, the striving, the yearning saadhakas and you will soon reach the stage of peace within and harmony without. Madras, 14-8-1964

24. The sandalwood tree

THE importance which Sanaathana culture (unchanging truth) gives to dharma was explained to you by the Pandith; he outlined some of the main principles of that subtle ideal. Dharma (righteousness) is the feet and Moksha (Realisation) the head of the human community, while the other two purusharthas---artha (wealth) and kaama (desire)---form the trunk and limbs. Now, feet and head are ignored and the other two reckoned as vital. That is the tragedy of modern times. Enough warning against this tragedy has been given in the ancient texts of this country.

The Kauravas are useful examples of the calamity that awaits those who pursue the ideals of artha and kaama, without the regulating influence of dharma and moksha. They were drunk with power; they were overcome by greed and pride; they had insatiable desire; they suffered untold misery and were destroyed.

Ravana fell because he strove to accumulate artha and was carried away by covetousness, kaama. His "ten heads" indicate his mastery over the four Vedhas and the six Shasthas; but, of what avail was all that learning? Aanjaneya reported that Lanka was echoing with the recitation of the Vedhas and the air was thick with sacrificial smoke. But, the raakshasas (demons) were wicked, in spite of all that ritual exactitude. Ritual must result in righteousness; otherwise, it is only rigmarole. Ravana sought to gain Prakriti, not Purusha (the manifestation not the manifestor); Seetha not Rama! And, so his life became futile. Kaama is the three-headed demon; when you win your desire, you develop lobha (miserly greed), to retain the gain and see that it multiplies; when you are defeated in desire, you develop krodha (resentment, anger); even thapas (penance) might not transmute such a character, as seen in the case of Bhasmasura, who sought to destroy the very Lord who granted him the boon he was after! Kaama, lobha and krodha are all forms of rajoguna (quality of passion and activity), the feverish activity that ignores the "means" while concentrating on the "end." Rajoguna pursues the goal, but is not particular about the correctness of the path. Qualify yourself and desire

There is a story of some monkeys who planted a mango garden. They planted the saplings, watered them a few days, and plucked them from off the ground to see how deep the roots had gone! They wanted them to grow fast and yield fruits, but they were unaware of the process by which alone they could get the fruits they craved for! Act right; then, claim the fruit. Cultivate with care, and collect the harvest.

What is good of burdening yourself with desire when you do not have the qualification to fulfil it? Madhuraanath once asked Ramakrishna Paramahansa for a chance to enjoy what was known as Nirvikalpa samaadhi (superconscious state of Bliss), about which he had heard.

Though Ramakrishna demurred because he had no qualification and preparatory training for it, he insisted; so when at last, the Master acceded, and made him lose consciousness for three days, the poor man protested and appealed for an end to that experience. It was a burden too heavy for his weak shoulders.

The three gunas (qualities of the mind) have to be transcended one after the other; thamas (lethargy) being transmuted into rajas (passionate activity) and rajas into sathwa (serenity and poise) and sathwa too, at last into characteristiclessness. "The gunas bind man and leave impressions. Thamas is like the worms that creep and crawl in offal; rajas is like the fly that sits on foul things as well as fair; sathwa is like the bee that visits only fragrant flowers. But, all three are drawn towards objects, whereas one should be free from all traces of attachment. When hearts are infested with flies and worms, the flit of Naamasmarana (constant remembrance of God's name) has to be used for disinfecting the place. You must recognise the high purpose of this human body and the unique chance man has. Then only will you strive to benefit by this hard-won piece of luck.

The magnanimous king A Raaja (king) was out hunting in the forest and while pursuing the deer, he went too far and discovered that his retinue was left behind. He lost his way and was overcome by hunger and thirst. At last, he saw a tiny hut where lived a poor wood-cutter and his wife selling fuel in the distant villages. Their larder was almost empty, but the wife managed to bring out a roti (bread), which the king ate with avidity. He had never known such taste, for he was never so hungry as then. and, he slept soundly that noon, for he was never so tired as then. By that time, the courtiers and soldiers came upto where he was and the astounded wood-cutter learnt that his guest was no less a person than the monarch of the realm. He apologised for the poor fare he offered, though the king never uttered a harsh word.
Tragedy of man everywhere Next day, a man came from the capital to take him to the court and the poor fellow was certain that he was going to be punished for insulting the ruler. His wife accompanied him, for she offered to share the misery with her lord. The Raaja gave him a seat and insisted upon his sitting, an honour which the wood-cutter knew was usually given to animals that were about to be sacrificed. He was fed nicely, along with his wife, another honour which such animals usually get.
Then the king asked him what boon he would ask from him, and the terrified man could ask for only this: "Please allow me to go home alive, with my wife! Please do not cut off my head," he cried. The Raaja said, "I am not an ungrateful wretch to treat you so cruelly. If I give you an estate you will ruin it, for you are unaware of agriculture. If I give riches, thieves will carry it away, for you live alone in the jungle. Well, I shall give you a sandalwood plantation in that forest, thirty acres in extent. Make good use of it and prosper." The wood-cutter felt relieved and he went away into the woods.

After about six months, the King went to the forest again for a hunt and remembering the bread, he went in search of the wood-cutter. He found him quite happy for he said, that he had started selling charcoal instead of fuel. The sandalwood trees were being reduced to charcoal by that man; he did not know the value of the gift he had received. Man too does not realise the value of the precious gift of "the number of days" of life he has received from the Lord. He fritters them away for temporary earnings. That is the tragedy of man everywhere.
Sanaathana Dharma has laid down the rules and regulations for the best possible utilisation of life, but for want of teaching, exposition and example, they have been sadly neglected. This is like inflicting injuries on oneself, this neglect of the rules, which give real happiness and peace.
This is like the foolishness of living upon your neighbour's leavings, while your own home has a relishing, nourishing banquet ready!
Regulate the way of living Reform the body, reconstruct the mind; regulate the way of living; then, the country will become automatically strong and prosperous. Do not wail that is a mud pot if it contains nectar; it is far better than having a gold pot with poison in it. The land may be rich, but, if life is mean, it is deplorable. It does not matter if the standard of life is poor, provided the way of life is pure, full of prema, humility, fear-of-sin, and reverence towards elders.
It is easy to restore this way of life, provided the Vedhas are once again studied and followed.
The Vedhamaaatha (mother of Vedhas) will foster in you love and kindness. Have faith; do not discard a diamond, dismissing it as a piece of glass. The Dharma laid down in the Vedhas is the best armour to guard you against sorrow.
Women should observe sthree dharma and men purusha 'dharma, the householder, grihastha dharma, the monk sanyaasa dharma (the path of righteousness prescribed for each category of persons. The outward symbols like shave head, the ochre cloth, kamandalu---these are like the barbed wire erected to protect the crop from depredation. But, what we now find is, there is plenty of fence without, but no crop within!
You may have a grand feast on the plate, but, unless you have hunger, you will not be tempted to eat. There are qualifications for every task, be it eating or fasting, be it leading a householder's life or monk's life. Only a stone that was once Ahalya and was saturated by dhyaana (meditation) and remorse can be transmuted into human form and only the feet of a Divine incarnation can so transmute it. All stones trodden by Raama did not get transformed into women; nor did any of the feet that trod upon that stone had the power of giving life. The Guru must have the awakening touch and the sishya (disciple) must have the eagerness to awake. The relationship should not be like the snake with a frog in the mouth, the frog too weak to escape, the snake too full to swallow. The Guru must be able to save; the sishya must be ready to be saved.

Hanumaan's dedicated service Dedicate all tasks of offerings to the Lord. Never deviate from that attitude. Hanumaan was such a bhaktha; Raama was the very life-breath for him. After the coronation, one day, Seetha and the three brothers of Raama met and planned to exclude Hanumaan from the seva (service) of Raama and wanted that all the various services for Raama should be divided only among themselves. They felt that Hanumaan had enough chances already.
 So, they drew up a list, as exhaustive as they could remember, of the service from dawn till dusk, down to the smallest minutiae and assigned each item to one among themselves. They presented the list of items and assignees to the Lord, while Hanumaan was present. Raama heard about the new procedure, read the list and gave His approval, with a smile. He told Hanumaan that all the tasks had been assigned to others and that he could now take rest. Hanumaan prayed that the list might be read and when it was done, he noticed an omission---the task of 'snapping fingers when one yawns.'
 Of course, being an emperor, Raama should not be allowed to do it himself. It has to be done by a servant, he pleaded. Raama agreed to allot that task to Hanumaan!
 It was a great epic piece of good luck for Hanumaan, for it entitled Hanumaan's constant attendance on his Master, for how could anyone predict when the yawn would come? And, he had to be looking on that heart-charming face all the time, to be ready with snap, as soon as the yawn was on! He could not be away for a minute nor could he relax for a moment. You must be happy that the seva of the Lord keeps you always in His presence and ever vigilant to carry out His behests.
 Select a Name and a Form
 The Lord cares for ekaagratha and chittha-suddhi (concentration and purity of mind). You need not feel that you are physically away from Him. He has no 'near' and 'far' Provided the address is clear and correct, your letter will be delivered, either at the next street or at Calcutta or Bombay for the same stamp. Smarana (remembering) is the stamp; manana (recapitulaiton) is the address.

 Have the Name for smarana; the Form for manana, that is enough.
 Select one Name and one Form for smarana and manana; but, do not talk ill of other names and forms. Behave like the woman in a joint family; she respects and serves the elders of the family such as the father-in-law, and his brothers and her own brother-in-law, but her heart is dedicated to her husband, whom she loves and reveres in a special manner. If you carp at the faith of others, your devotion is fake. If you are sincere, you will appreciate the sincerity of others. You see faults in others because you yourself have those faults, not otherwise.
 While in Dandakaaranya forest, Raama was once reclining with His head on the lap of Sugreeva and the vaanara (monkey) leaders were around Him. The moon was shining overhead in full glow, but, there was the tell-tale spot which marred the fullness of the effulgence. Raama asked each one of them what the spot indicated. Each one gave a different explanation; the reflection of the sea, one said; a deep pit, said another; a mountain range, said a third; but, Aanjaneya said, "It is your reflection I see on the moon, your colour, nothing else." That was the measure of his devotion. He saw everywhere, everytime only Raama.
 Have faith in your culture, which emphasises the path of self-control and discipline. Do not be led away by the tinsel attractions of foreign cultures. Indian customs, like the wearing of the sari are now adopted by western women, while Indian women are wearing gowns! Indian women bob their hair and discard the kumkum (vermilion dot on the forehead), in order to look fashionable; but, every Indian custom has deep significance, ignored in this imitative rush. A vessel of sweetness can be spoiled by a drop of kerosene. Accept good things from other cultures, the things that help you to control the vagaries of the senses and the mind, to investigate and discriminate more dearly.
 Of the many lakhs of people who dwell in this city, you alone had the great chance to come and hear the advice given today. So make the best use of this treasure and decide on leading more useful lives from this very moment. Listen to all who speak of the glory of the Lord, who is in you, as in everybody else. Learn from all the methods by which you can discover Him and reach Him. That is my advice to you.

25. The bubble of pride MAN is a pilgrim towards Dharmakshethra, the pride of dharma, which is the abode also of Shaanthi; but, on the way, he is led into the bylanes and alleys of objective pleasure by the senses to which he has become a slave. Man is eager to know about all kinds of trivialities, like the details of other lives and other places, but, he has no keenness to know about himself or the place from where he himself has come. Man is sunk in ignorance about himself, his source and substance, his goal and fate. He reduces himself to just one individual; he, the inheritor of unlimited wealth and fortune, feels himself a pauper. Remove this ego boundary; then only can you recognise the vastness of yourself.
 This microphone before Me must have been made by someone, is it not? He is not seen or known by you, but of his existence, there can be no doubt. Besides, it is certain he must be knowing all about this microphone which he has made. So too, there must be a creator for this universe and He must be knowing all about it. This universe is composed of the five elements and He is the master of all the five, their manipulator, aware of their subtle characteristics and properties. He is the kshethrajna (Indweller), he who knows this kshethra (field). When I speak into the mike, all of you can hear Me clearly; but the tape recorder here, the fan, the bulbs, the tube-lights, all operate on account of the self-same unseen electric current that animates each of them.
Diwan Bahadur Raamaswamy Shaasthry, Yogi Suddhanandha Bhaarathi, and others addressed you now, each one on a separate note, but, all described only the self-same Kshethrajna, the Universal knower, who is known by all names and who is in all forms. He is the impersonal person described in a hundred different ways in the Vedhas, the Shaasthras, the Mahaabhaaratha, the Raamaayana and the Bhaagavatha. Hold on to Him and live your lives; you will not slip. Build your activities on that basis; your career will not cave in. You will also develop courage, consolation and faith in yourself and in your destiny.

 Krishna's lessons to control the ego Krishna addresses Arjuna in the Geetha sometimes as Kaunteya. Now, what does that appellation mean? It means, "One who assimilates quietly" as you are doing now. You are seated comfortably under this pandal, in fine weather and you can afford to listen in silence. But remember, Arjuna was between two opposing armies, eager for the fray for which they had prepared for years with unquenchable vengeance. It requires extraordinary self-control and yearning to command concentration at that time. Krishna addresses him as Kurunandhana, which means that he takes delight in karma dedicated to the high ideals he had in view. Every mode of address of Krishna has an inner meaning and appropriateness, as well as a lesson for others.
 Arjuna was trained by Krishna, without break, to control his egoism. Before the Mahaabhaaratha war, Arjuna once happened to be at Raamasethu, near Raameshwaram. Arjuna spoke of the bridge with some scorn in the hearing of Aanjaneya who was there and said that he would have built a bridge of arrows, single-handed and not bothered about subduing the sea and getting monkeys to pile up rocks one over the other. Aanjaneya asked him to build one. When Aanjaneya walked gently over the bridge, the arrows broke under his weight!
 Krishna suddenly presented Himself and suggested that it should be done in his presence, for there was no witness when the challenge was made and accepted. In order to save Arjuna from humiliation, Krishna bore the second bridge on His back, when Aanjaneya walked on it, so that Arjuna saw the tell-tale streaks of red, where the arrow points had pierced the Lord's back. Thus, Arjuna's pride was humbled. He prayed to Aanjaneya to fight on his side at Kurukshethra; but Aanjaneya said that the Kaurava army would be too infinitesimal a foe for his prowess; it would not be fair to pit him against such a weak enemy; he would only watch the fight, from the flag of Arjuna's chariot, he said; and the offer was gladly accepted. Egoism is a tough enemy Arjuna's pride was humbled during the war in another interesting manner by Krishna. About the end of the war, one evening, Arjuna felt proud that Krishna was his charioteer, and his 'servant.'
 He felt that as master, he should get down from the chariot after Krishna and not before Him. So, that day he insisted that Krishna should get down first, that he should come down only afterward.

But, Krishna was adamant; Arjuna must come down first, he said. After wasting a long time, pleading and protesting and praying, Arjuna got down, very unwillingly, swallowing his pride.

Krishna then came down, and, immediately the chariot went up in flames! Krishna explained the reason. The incendiary arrows and missiles that had stuck on the chariot were powerless so long as He was on it; but, when his presence was no longer there, they set the chariot on fire. Thus,

Krishna showed that every act and word of the Lord had significance and a purpose, which mortals cannot gauge. Egoism is a tough enemy and it requires constant vigilance to conquer it.

Conquer the foes of the inner realm Pride raises its head in every stage and state. Like grass which covers the earth with a green carpet, as soon as the rains fall even in places which appeared dry waste, pride thrives upon opportunity. Sikhadhwaja, the King, got a feeling of extreme renunciation and left for the forest for ascetic practices. His queen Choodala had the spirit of detachment in greater measure, but, she did not make a show of it as her husband did.

The queen put on a male attire, wore ochre, spelt a rosary and sought him in the jungle.

Discovering him at last, she asked him who he was. The king replied that he was the ruler of the realm, that he had given up his riches, his treasure, his army, his court, etc. "For the sake of what did you give up these?" asked Choodala. "For the sake of peace," replied the king. But, he had to confess that he had not attained it. Then, Choodala taught him that the giving up of "things" will bear no fruit, that the desire for things, the pride of possessing things, of having once possessed them, has to be given up, that one must be detached from the objective world so that he might turn his eyes inward and conquer the foes of the inner realm and become a master of himself.

When the king attempted to fall at the feet of the new Guru that had come to him, Choodala revealed her identity. She was a sathi (virtuous wife) who was the Guru of her pathi (husband); there were many such women in ancient times, when they were honoured and educated much better than today.

Tremendous power of mind over body

You must develop the devotion of the gopees, of Raadha, of Uddhava, of Hanumaan.

Raamakrishna Paramahansa did intense saadhana, transmitting himself into the attitude of Hanumaan and even his physical attributes changed to suit the role. He developed a small tail during the period; such is the tremendous power of mind over body. Many husbands and mothers-in-law tried to scare away the gopees from Krishna by spreading scandals about Him but how can any one keep the jeeva (individual soul) and the jagadeeshwara (Lord of the Universe) apart? Vyaasa, the great saint, says that words are inadequate to describe the intensity of that devotion, the devotion of the gopees to the Lord. They had no egoism left in them and that is why they became the supreme devotees of the Lord.

Learn the art of overcoming the ego from the Shaasthras, whose repositories are here before you, in the Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha. There are still many such in our land, in spite of decades of neglect and the glitter of other studies. You must have heard of Bhojaraaja, the great patron of Pandiths, such as these. He was at first not so considerate; but an incident happened which turned his attention to this essential task. The Pandiths of his realm had the grace of God in good measure, no doubt; but, they were extremely poor and had to struggle to keep their families above starvation. One Pandith was so down and out that he decided to turn thief and steal, not from any poor man's house, but from the king's palace itself, for the king cannot be made poorer by the loss. He crept into the private apartments at dusk and though he had access to a large quantity of silverware and gold cups and plates, he felt that he should carry away with him only what he needed most and so, he stole only a few seers of wheat flour. While moving about with the bag of flour in a dark corridor he heard noises and so he entered a room whose door was ajar, and hide himself under a cot. It was the bedroom of the king!

Scholars must have faith in their learning

The Pandith spent the night under a cot, unable to move or cough or sneeze or even breathe aloud. An hour before dawn, the king rose and sat upon the bed, reciting aloud a stanza he had composed at night, while trying to sleep. There was a gap in the last line which the king could not fill; the appropriate word was evading him. The Pandith heard the stanza; he had the word on his lips and he could not but shout it out from underneath the cot. He forgot for the moment that he was a thief with the tell-tale bag in his hands. The king peeped under the cot, and welcomed the Pandith and honoured him for his scholarship and poured largesses on him in sympathy for his plight. It was thus that Bhojaraaja learnt of the misery in which the scholars of his kingdom lived.

The Pandiths also must have this faith: that their learning will never injure them, never destroy them, that it will sustain them, provided they follow them strictly, gladly, sincerely and in the fear of God. The faith in God will be instilled by naamasmarana (the repetition of the Name of God)---the remembering of the glory of the Lord and of his infinite mercy and power.

When a mother is feeding her child, you can see her with the child on her hip and the plate in her hand, inducing the child to eat, by means of harsh words or a smile, a joke, a threat or a story, diverting its attention, showing the child a dog or a flower or the moon. I have also to adopt the same tactics to make you listen and assimilate the valuable food that is so necessary for your growth. That is the reason why I relate stories, sing, recite poems, etc., in My discourses!

Birth and death are two high cliffs between which the river of life flows.

The force of Aathma-shakthi is the bridge that scans the chasm, and for those who have developed that force and faith, the floods are of no concern.

With Aathma-shakthi as their safe support, they can reach the other bank, braving all dangers.

26. True remorse and false Pandith who spoke about the Geetha explained how it summarised the Upanishads. In fact, the people of Bhaarith can be said to be residing in Geetha Mahaal itself, whether they know it or not. The entrance to that Mahaal is through vishaadha (remorse), discovery of the tawdriness of sense pleasures and searching out for something more substantial and satisfying. The most satisfying prize is Purushoththamapraapthi--the attainment of the Lord, the Supremest Purusha.

The purusha is "he who lives in the pura," namely, the body, the physical body. He who lives in the universe which is His body He is the Supremest, the Purushoththama. A tiny ant creeping over the foot is cognised by your consciousness; that is to say, the purusha had consciousness filling the entire body: The Purushoththama has consciousness filling and activating the entire universe, which is His body: The individual tree is the purusha, the forest is the Purushoththama.

The jeeva is the vyasthi, the samashti is God. For the purusha to become Purushoththama, the path is yoga, or jnaana won by action and devotion to God.

He said that there can be no vision of unity when the jeeva is scattered in five directions by the five senses which drag him. Really, it does not matter if a person has five rupee coins or the same amount in small change. All the five senses subserve the same Purusha. It is one family, under one master. The senses need not necessarily be inimical; they can be trained to co-operate in the saadhana. Why? Even intellect can become an enemy, if it promotes conceit and competitive exhibitionism.

The gods once imagined that they were able to get victory over the demons because of their own prowess. When they were celebrating the victory, a deity appeared before them and cast a blade of grass on the ground. It asked Agni to bum it; but it could not. It challenged Vaayu to lift it, but he could not. It provoked Varuna to wet it, but, in spite of his best efforts, he could not. Then when their pride had been pricked, the deity taught them the Brahma Vidhya (science of Brahman), which reveals the inner source of all strength. This is no ordinary story; Agni is the presiding deity of vaak (speech) and so it tells us that speech has to be humble, that it derives its power only from the basic Universal Principle. Vaayu is praana (the vital air); Indhra is buddhi (the intellect).

A person is judged by his conduct

After all, it is behaviour and practice that count. In the case of dharma and of saadhana, this is specially true. You judge a person by his conduct and character as revealed in his actions. No other witness or proof is needed. There were two women, living opposite each other in a bazaar; one had five cows and the other had just one. The richer woman was wasteful in habits, very extravagant and careless. So, she used to borrow milk from the woman with one cow, and the latter was helping her, in spite of the fact that she had a larger family. When she had thus borrowed about 50 seers of milk, the cow of the poorer woman died, and she went to the other woman and wanted her to return the milk loaned, at the rate of a seer per day. At this, she got wild and deposed in court that she had never borrowed any "Why should I, owning five cows, go to this woman with one cow for the loan of milk?" she asked. The magistrate was a shrewd man who sympathised with the woman whose cow had died. He knew how to get at the truth. He gave each of them five vessels full of water and asked them to wash their feet and come back to court. The five-cow woman poured all the five vessel fuls in one stream on her feet and came in with all the dirt intact. The one-cow woman cleaned her feet by skillful use of one vessel ful only and she left the other four vessels untouched. The act of washing the feet revealed their character and the magistrate had no hesitation in convicting the culprit. The one-cow woman must have saved and the five-cow woman must have wasted and been in perpetual want. The two poison fangs of man Arjuna's vishaadha (dejection) is also a case of finely disguised egoism, which revealed a fault in his make-up. He was a dheera (hero) until he came on the battlefield and was transformed into a bheeru (a coward). It was all a case of I and Mine. "I will go to hell, I would rather beg. I will not fight my Guru, my uncle, my cousin, etc." I and Mine are two poison fangs; they have to be removed to make man harmless. Once Naaradha told Brahma of a ridiculous situation in the world; those who are dying are weeping for those who have died! That was what Arjuna too was doing, but, this foolishness is clothed in the language of renunciation and charity. The question on the battlefield was not who was the kin of whom, but who was right and who was wrong. Fight for justice, fight for truth, fight for these, as a kshathriya (warrior) is in duty bound, and leave the result to the Dispenser of all. Krishna told Arjuna, "I am surprised that you should weep so, for you are Gudakesha, the conqueror of sleep, of ignorance. You do not kill, don't be so conceited as all that; nor do they die, 'they' have many more things to do, and the real 'they' are deathless. The sentence of death has been already pronounced on their bodies by Me and you have but to carry out My orders." You are only an instrument Krishna made Arjuna aware of himself; so, the delusion that made him believe that he was a great bowman, a foe of Dhuryodhana, etc., disappeared from his consciousness; he came to know that he was but an instrument in the hands of the Lord. You too must learn that lesson; for, otherwise there is no end to misery. Thamaso maa jyothirgamaya--- "Lead me from darkness to light"---is the prayer. Egoism is thamas (darkness); sharanaagathi (surrender) is jyothi (light). There is an easy way to illumine the inner consciousness and the outer behaviour, with the light of God. Put the lamp of the name of the Lord, the illumining flame, on the tongue! That is the door-step; that light will drive out the darkness from both inside and outside. Have it ever burning, clear and bright. You will soon reach remarkable heights and enjoy happiness, the like of which you cannot get by sticking to the senses. Madras, 17-8-1964 27. The I behind the Eye This gathering is like the confluence of two rivers, the Yamuna and the Ganga, of people speaking Thamil, and Thelugu. I always speak in one language, and I am not inclined to change the language to suit the audience. I am sure even those who do not know Thelugu will understand the gist of what I say. Whenever ashaanthi (absence of peace) overwhelms the world, the Lord will incarnate in human form to establish the modes of earning prashaanthi (tranquillity) and to reeducate the human community in the paths of peace. At the present time, strife and discord have robbed the family, the school, the community, the society, the villages, the cities and the State, of peace and amity. Anxiety and fear have contaminated the very 'food one eats. Therefore, the Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha has been established, and Pandiths have been entrusted with the task of revitalising the dry sources of Shaanthi, by the teachings contained in the Shaasthras. Why is ashaanthi harassing the world? Because of raaga, dwesha and moha (attachment, hate and infatuation). These are born out of ignorance, which cause delusion. Things seen in darkness cannot be clear; they are mistaken for something else. A rope is mistaken to be a snake; a stump is mistaken to be a thief. A piece of glass may be coveted as a diamond. So, this mistaken notion, this indistinct light, must go. It can go only if methods of discovering the truth are learnt. That is what the Shaasthras teach and what these Pandiths are commissioned to instruct you. They will tell you that the outward-seeking senses must be directed inwards; the inner realm of impulses, instincts, habits, prejudices, attitudes must be cleansed before God is reflected clear and bright therein. How is this to be achieved? The Vedhas explain how. Falsity of dualistic experience

The Vedhas tell you those things that cannot be known by anything else. The word Vedha means 'knowledge', knowledge that cannot be acquired by the senses or the intellect or even by unguided intuition. Adhwaitha is something that no one in the dual world can understand. It is 'spraapya manasa saha:' "beyond the reach of even the mind." In fact, intellect and mind must each be transcended, before one can grasp the magnificence of that Unity. If dhwaitha has to be taught, why should the Vedhas take up that task? Dhwaitha (duality)--the seer and the seen, the creator and the created, the good and the bad, the right and the wrong---this is the daily concrete experience of every one. Prakrithi (Nature, Creation) is patently dualistic. The Vedhas endeavour to open the eyes of man to the falsity of dualistic experience, the reality of the only One, Adhwaitha (the non-dual One). They proclaim it, loudly and with enthusiasm.

Appanna Shaasthry said that the deer, the elephant, the moth, the fish and the bee are drawn to death by the senses of hearing, touch, sight, taste and smell respectively. If each of these falls a victim to one sense, how much is man to be pitied for he has all the five to drag him to perdition!

Arjuna too had the same combination of foes. He had the urge to give up his mission and take up another's mission, namely, an urge to give up fighting, which is the mission of the kshathriya and a temptation to take to sanyaasa (asceticism), which has to 'be earned by further evolution. To overcome these obstacles,' one must have both saadhana and a sankalpa, self-effort and grace.

Lord's hands and feet are everywhere

Arjuna aspired to give up karma, momentarily fascinated by the ideal of sanyaasa. It is only through action that devotion can be deepened. Action cleanses the mind and makes it fit for spiritual knowledge. Sravana (hearing) is a thaamasik act, manana (recapitulation) is raajasik, while nididhyaasana (concentration) is Saathwik. When you are simply listening, quietly receiving without responding, you are just dull (thaamasik); when you turn it over in your mind, attempting to assimilate it, then you are active (raajasik); when you are sunk in the sweetness of experience in dhyaana you are having pure exultation (saathwik). That is the fruit of bhakti, this nididhyaasana.

There is no need to fight against the fundamental delusion of dheha bhraanthi (attachment to body) with overwhelming force and argument! As Agnihothram Raamaanuja Thaathaachaariar said now, the delusion will disappear only if one sits quietly for a minute and analyse for himself the world and his experience of the world. Inaana is not Apraaptha-praapthi, something new that 'is acquired, like gifts by some one, of money that the donor had, but which the recipient did not have. It is praptha-prapathi, like some one giving you a ten-rupee note which you had kept between the pages of a book you were reading. You had lent him the book; when you needed a loan, you asked him for a tenner; and he gave you back your own note. That is how inaana reveals to you your own glory. The Guru gives you from out of your own hridhaya-pustaka (heart-book) the treasure which was there unrecognised by you. You are afraid because you have forgotten your own strength. Agnihothram Thaathaachaariar said that the Lord had sarvathaah paani paadham: "His hands and feet are everywhere." It is through him that you are able to see; your eye required His eye in order to function. It is the reflection the Aathma in the anthahkarana (inner consciousness) that activates it and makes it flow through the senses towards the objective world.

Liberation is attained when the Aathma shines in its own glory; it is not a colony or a suburb where aristocratic residents have secured good sites in paradise. it is the condition of the jeeva which has shed delusion. It is not easy to become a bhakti

When delusion is shed, grief gets destroyed; joy is established: dukha nivritthi (removal of grief) and aanandha praapthi (attainment of bliss) both happen at the same time. The mind is the villain; it is 'another name for desire; the texture of the mind is just desire; both warp and woof are desire and nothing else. If desire goes, the mind disappears. When you pull out all the yarn from a piece of cloth, you have no more cloth. So too, pull out desires from the mind, it disappears, and you are free. Grief and joy are the obverse and reverse of the same experience.

Joy is when grief ends; grief is when joy ends. When you invite a blind man for dinner, you must set on the table two plates, for he comes along with another man who will lead him in. Grief and joy are inseparable companions.

Bhakthi is very difficult to acquire; do not think it is easy to become a bhaktha. As a matter of fact, it is even more difficult than inaana, for it means complete surrender, full contentment whatever may happen. The river must flow back to its source; it must turn back and up. If you flow down, you will have to go down, down, down, and water becomes undrinkable. But, do not despair; you have to win some day. The sooner, the better. A mango seller may seek to sell four for a rupee; if three of them get spoiled, he should not give up hope, for, a person may come and offer a rupee for the fourth one.

Having come here and lists, and secured dharshan and read about Me, put into actual prance at least one of the good counsel you got; one stick is enough to light a fire; the entire box of matches need not be used. Have faith that you will win; have steadiness in the pursuit of the goat

Bhakthi has stages in its growth

For, like the body which passes through childhood, boyhood, adolescence, middle age and old age, bhakthi too has stages in its growth. The tender fruit is love, the grown one is devotion and the ripe fruit is surrender. There is a type of karma which will melt the heart of the Lord. It is the type which does not inflict pain on any one. When Raama met the armies of Khara-Dhuushana single-handed, He did so in order to demonstrate his valour and His divinity to the demons and the sages of the forest.

My coming here and speaking daily at these meetings is the consequence of your merit and my grace. You had fine dharshana and sravana (audience and listening) in this silent gathering, silence which beats even the silence of Prashanthi Nilayam. I am glad so many of you have been prompted by the desire to know about spiritual discipline. The committee too has the energy and enthusiasm needed to continue these Sapthaahams; such chances may be given to you in a larger number in the coming months. This extensive area round the Venkatagiri Raaja's bungalow is always available for your meetings; imagine what a great piece of good fortune it is for him. That so many thousands of you could gather here and hear the elevating discourses of Scholars and get started on the path of spiritual progress must indeed be very satisfying to him.

Tile aanandha that you experienced here now is not something that carne from outside; it was your own aanandha that you experienced; you are Aanandhaswaruupa (bliss personified); and so it welled up from inside your own heart.

Have faith in His Grace, and lead a virtuous life, a life devoted to the service of the weak, life spent in the thought, about the might and glory of God.

Pray that you may carry out your duty well. God will certainly answer your prayers.

28. Be a care taker

TODAY this Saptaaha (seven-day discourse) celebrates its Samaapthi (conclusion). That word means, according to most people, the final function; but it has a profounder meaning too.

Samaapthi means, the attainment (Aapthi) of Samam (Brahman). That is the final fruit of sravana, manana and nididhyaasana (hearing, recapitulation and contention) of spiritual lessons and discourses. In the worldly sense, it means the conclusion of a period of time; in the spiritual sense, it means transcending time!

What is the sum and substance of all these discourses? It is that man has to give up his pursuit of sensory objects if he seeks lasting peace and joy. Material wealth brings along with it, not only joy but grief as well. Accumulation of riches, multiplication of wants--these lead only to alternation between joy and grief. Attachment is the root of both joy and grief; detachment is the Saviour. Aashakthi (attachment) is maarakata (death); anaashakthi (non-attachment) is thaarakata (saviour).

A millionaire pays income-tax with tears in his eyes; a headmaster joyfully gives up the furniture and laboratory appliances of his school when he is transferred to some other place. Why?

Because the headmaster knows that he is only the caretaker, not the owner. He is not attached to these articles; he knows that they belong to the government. So, too, feel that your family, your house, your fields your car, are all the Lord's property and that you are only the trustee; be rely to give them up without a murmur at a moment's notice.

The sacred literature of our country, the Vedas, the Shaasthras, the Ithihaasas, the Manusmrithi and the Puraanas contain the drugs to cure attachment and endow you with the strength of detachment. Drugs available at other places though they may be more pleasant, cost time and money and do not assuage pain. Thyaaga (sacrifice) does not mean that you should not value things; you may, even care for them. But, remember always that they are transient, that the joy they give is trivial and temporary. That is to say, do not develop moha towards them. Know their real worth; do not over-estimate them. Subject yourself to vigilant scrutiny. A thirsty passenger asked the water-carrier at an up-country railway station whether his leather bag was clean. The reply he got was, "As regards cleanliness, all I can say is that the bag which pours is cleaner than the bag which takes in." You must care more for the cleanliness of your mind and intellect than for the external body. Instead of criticising others and finding faults with the actions of others, subject yourself to vigilant scrutiny, understand yourself well, and correct your own faults; do not be like the dancer who blamed the drummer for her wrong steps. This objective world is as ageless as God. Who knows when God resolved upon the Universe? It is as anaadhi (beginningless) as God; we cannot determine when it came into being but we can determine when it will end, at least for each of us. When you look into the well, your reflection is always there; so far as you are concerned, your reflection can be removed from the well moment you decide you will no more seek the well, or pay attention to it. The Shaastri who discoursed today gave a very learned and convincing disquisition on the concepts of Aarya and Anaarya as depicted in the Raamaayana; but, you must now concentrate on the illness from which you are suffering and on its cure. Foolishness, egoism and sheer ignorance are the causes of the misery of man today. The eye, the ear and the tongue lead man to anxiety and malice, instead of making him the messenger of peace and harmony. Intellect is the root of pride and envy. Vishnu is Jagannaatha at Puri; at Kaashi, Shiva is Vishweshwara (both Lords of the Universe); where, then, is there any room for rivalry between those who worship at Puri and those who worship at Kaashi? Vishnu is Gopaal (protector of cows) and Shiva is Pashupathi (master of cows). Still, the innate urge to fight comes up in the heart of man and he uses the names of the Lord as excuses for provoking the fighting he relishes. Limit the desires to your capacity

It is difficult to put into practice even the truths of which you are intellectually convinced. Look at Dhrona on the battle-field. When he heard that Ashwattama had been killed, he was so overcome with sorrow that he did not pause to consider where he was and for what end; even if the news were true he should not have laid down arms, forgetting the task upon which he had come to the field. Delusion (moha) induced him to do so; that was the reason for his discomfiture and death. There are many thousands of people here today, the final day, as there were all these days and so, I would like to tell you that it is not what you hear that is beneficial, but what you put into daily practice. Develop renunciation about your own needs and wishes. Examine each on the touchstone of essentiality. When you pile up things in your apartments, you only promote darkness and dust; so also, do not collect and store too many materials in your mind. Travel light. Have just enough to sustain life and maintain health. The pappu (dhal) must have only enough uppu (salt) to make it relishing; that is to say, do not spoil the 'dhal' by adding too much salt. Life becomes too difficult to bear if you put into it too much of "desire." Limit your desires to your capacity and even among them, have only those that will grant lasting joy. Do not run after fashion and public approval and strain your resources, beyond repair. Also, keep to your own dharma and the code of rules that regulate life or the stage you have reached. Cow: symbol of selfless service. Do not place your needs first, your joy first. Consider the needs of others, the aanandha of others, as even more important. Respect elders and cultivate cordiality between brothers and sisters, teachers and students, employers and employees, etc. Tend the cow, for, the cow is the symbol of selfless service of Dharma. That is why when a newly built house is ceremonially entered, the owner first takes into the house a cow. Once a rishi was taking a ritual bath at the Thriveni Sangham at the confluence of the Yamuna, Ganga and Saraswathi. While he was submerged in the holy water some fishermen threw the net and he was dragged ashore by them as a rare catch. He was claimed by the fishermen and the rishi told the king, who was in a fix, that they should be paid the price of the catch before he could order them to release him. Now, what was the price of the "rishi-fish?" A thousand varaahas? The rishi protested that he was not so cheap. Five thousand? it was too small, the rishi remarked.

Then a yogi who was at the palace suggested a fair solution. He said "Give a cow, that is enough" and the cow was considered fair compensation for the rishi. That is the measure of the value of a cow.

Observe the rules laid down in the Shaasthras, respect the culture of your land and bring honour to the land of your birth. Belief in providence is native to an Indian and fear of sin is inherent in him. Nourish your aged parents; revere them. If you honour your mother, the mother of the Universe will guard you against harm. If you honour your father, the Father of all beings will guard you. This is as true as the fact that if you honour your parents, your children will honour you.

Distinctions of different Incarnations

While speaking of God as guarding you, I am reminded of a note that some one has sent Me from this gathering. The note wants Me to explain why I have not mentioned Sai Baaba in any of my discourses so far, though I bear the name as the avathaara of Sai Baaba. Evidently, the writer of the note had in mind the people who engage themselves in publicity work of Raama or Krishna or Sai Baaba.

For those who know, Sai Raama, Krishna Vishnu, all are One; the distinction is only in the Upaadhi (the form and the name). The power, the glory, the mission, the message are all the same, though the particular achievements may be different, according to the needs and purposes of the age. That is why, though you believe that Raama and Krishna are the same, you do not approve when some one says that Raama lifted the Govardhanagiri or that Krishna broke the Shivadhanus (Shiva's bow). I do not appreciate in the least, the distinction between the various appearances of Godhead, Sai, Raama, Krishna, etc. I do not proclaim that this is more important or that the other is less important.

There are many attempts to construct mandhirs (temples) for Me, and people go about collecting donations for the same. I do not like this enthusiasm. Worship in any temple, any form, under any name. You neglect the ancient temples of your town, and start building new ones. And, very soon, the new ones too will be neglected, when you discover reasons for building newer ones.

People who plan the new mandhirs, and form committees, and go about collecting contributions, help only to spread atheism, for they are urged by egoism, greed and malice, rather than genuine devotion and spirit of service.

Be an example to others

Dhana (money) is the currency of the world; Saadhana is the currency of the spirit. When these self-styled bhaktas come to you with their lists and books, do not give even a paisa. Why do you need a hall to do naamasmarana or japa or dhyaana? The presence of others will more often be a hindrance rather than help; make your house itself a mandhir, meditate in your own shrineroom.

Sing bhajans in your own home; above all, be an example to others by means of sweet speech, humility, reverence to elders, truthfulness, faith and steadfastness. That way you will bring more into the fold of theism than by establishing societies, collecting donations and running mandhirs.

The Lord looks for sincerity, simplicity and steady joy in the contemplation of His name and form. If you keep awake throughout the twelve hours on Shivaraathri (festival of Lord Shiva), because of illness, the vigil will not win His favour. If you quarrel with the wife and desist from food for one full day, it will not be recorded in the book of God as a fast. If you lose yourself in the depths of unconsciousness after a bout of drink, you will not be counted as a person who has achieved Samaadhi. No bhuktha (enjoyed) can be a bhakttha (devotee); that is to say, he who has an eye on the profit he can derive from service to God, cannot be a true devotee. They praise Raama to the skies one day and decry Him the next, if their fortune gets dry. Those who declare that Sai Baaba is great and others are small, do not know the elements of spiritual discipline.

They are unfit for entering the field of spiritual service. I want to warn you against a set of people who have emerged nowadays using My name for such personal purposes. Be careful about these and treat them as they deserve.

Treasure in your hearts the Amrithavaakyas (death-destroying message) that you have heard during these seven days; ponder over them in the silence of your dhyaana; and, endeavour to realise the precious Goal of this invaluable 'Human birth.' I bless you all.

29. Japa and bhaja

THE Ministers, P. K. Savant and Lakshminarasiah, one from Andhra and the other from Maharaashtra, spoke informatively and enthusiastically to you, on health administration and on the part that spiritual discipline plays in the upkeep of mental and physical health.

Savant spoke about the work being done in the Maharaashtra State to eradicate disease in the villages and to persuade doctors to settle in the villages. He said that the ancient Ayurvedhic system of medicine was more suited to the food habits and the climatic peculiarities of this country and since it used the drugs available in the neighbourhood of the village, it was cheaper and more easily available. He also said that he has never been a patient so far, because he has been able to resist disease by means of strict observance of the rules regarding food, sleep and recreation. His faith in Baaba, he said, has proved a great reserve of strength to overcome illness.

Lakshminarasiah is himself a doctor; he spoke in praise of the quiet atmosphere of the hermitages of India and he wanted that the simple living of the ancient seers be revived. He said that deep down in the heart of every Indian there is a stratum of faith in Sanaathana Dharma which has to be tapped for all kinds of reconstruction.

Being the anniversary function of the hospital, I have to say something about physical ailments, their treatment and cure. Health is sought by man, not for its own sake; he tries to cure his illness, for illness means grief; he tries to secure health, for health means joy. He is after Aanandha (joy). At all times, through all acts, he seeks only Aanandha. A fish thrown on the bank of the lake wriggles and struggles to enter the water again. Man's struggle to get back into Aanandha is also of the same nature; he was in Aanandha and he has been thrown into misery.

His native element is Aanandha. He was calm, and experienced concord, Shaanthi and Prema, when he was in the realm of Aanandha. Now, this Aanandha has to be won back, each for himself. No other can get it for him. The minister described how the Plan is providing food, clothing and shelter for all. But, even those who have these three in ample measure are not free from misery; they have not been restored to Aanandha. Aanandha is an inner treasure, won by detachment and discipline. We must have a Plan for Aanandha, a Plan for Shaanthi and Santhosha (Peace and Contentment).

Consider first things first

A person may be sitting on a soft-cushioned sofa in an air-conditioned room, but his heart may be burning with unspeakable anxiety and fear. The body is as the cart and the mind as the horse.

Now, planning places the cart before the horse. It gives first place to body and its needs.

Consider first things first. Then only can the true culture of India be restored in all its ancient vitality. The sages of this land had known of the mine of Aanandha that lies in every human heart and they had discovered methods of developing that mine and working that gold. They said that if Bhoomaatha (Mother Earth), Gomaatha (Mother Cow).

Nijamaatha (one's own mother) and Vedhamaatha (Mother Scripture) were revered and fostered, and used as best as they could be, happiness is certain and liberation is assured. It is because the people of India followed this path that India has remained India and not become either Europe or China.

Inner harmony is what really matters

Even the scarcity of food about which the minister spoke is due to the decline in shraddha (faith) which was the hallmark of the ryots. When the strength that comes from the enthusiastic pursuit of one's profession wanes, when the courage of self-sacrifice is absent, all activity suffers. Have faith in the Lord or the Aathmathathwa; it will vitalise you. A fakir went to Akbar and he was told that Akbar was at his prayers and so could not give audience for some time. He was asked to wait in the ante-room. But, he refused to wait. He said, "What can this beggar get from that beggar?" All are beggars at the gate of God. The hero is he who does not beg or cringe or flatter or fawn. He knows that the Lord knows best. If it is His will, He will grant food and raiment; if not, well, let His will prevail. That is the path of Sharanaagathi or Prapatthi (absolute surrender).

There should be no begging or bargaining; surrender, submit to His will. Some people bargain with God and promise to give Him this or that costly article or their own hair, if a certain illness is cured or a certain calamity is averted. Lord Venkateshwara or any other form of the Lord does not need the hair of your head, but He wants you to respect the plighted word, to whomsoever given.

So in order to be true to your word and not incur the sin of falsehood and deceit, you have to offer it to Him, whatever the lapse of time. Shaving off the hair of the head is a sign that you have lost the delusion that it is physical beauty that counts; you make yourselves willfully ugly, so that you can demonstrate that it is inner harmony, inner charm, that really matters. Sanyaasins (ascetics) too have to shave likewise, in order to escape from a similar delusion, and equip themselves with the proper attitude.

Even the best of doctors will not be able to save a man when death calls. Men have to respond to that call, whether they are on a pilgrimage to Kedhara or Badhri or Rameshwaram, whether they are bridegrooms in the ceremonial seat before the ritual fire. Death brooks no delay; death accepts no excuse. Tears do not move His heart, nor can threats keep Him away.

The waking and dreaming stages

Emperor Janaka was listening to the soothing strains of music in the Durbar Hall, and he fell asleep on his throne. Slowly and silently, the courtiers and musicians slid out of the hall leaving him to himself. He had a dream. His kingdom was invaded, over-run, pillaged. He was captured and imprisoned. But he escaped, he was wandering alone, in enemy territory, overcome with hunger and thirst. The jungle was dark. He groaned aloud. The queen heard the groan and woke him! He saw himself as Emperor on the throne, surrounded by servants. Then, a doubt started haunting Janaka: "Which is true, that or this?" While dreaming, the dream was as true as the experience of the palace when awake. This is true, while awake; that was true, while dreaming.

Each has only relative value, while at that stage. Nothing is absolutely true, really real. The waking experience is as unreal as the dream experience. When you are in deep sleep, there is no world at all. When you attain the super-conscious fourth stage, the 'I' alone remains, the Universal 'I', which was mistaken even in the sleeping stage as limited and particular.

Fix responsibility for your health on Him

A few minutes of quiet thought will convince you of this. But you are too busy with trivialities to pay attention to the vital needs. Plant the seed of the name of the Lord, any one of His thousand names that appeals to you, in the well-prepared soil of your heart and let it sprout in the silence there; water it with love and service to fellowmen; guard it against pests and cattle, the outward dragging emotions and passions, by putting up the fence of japa and dhyaana, then you will get the harvest of Aanandha.

Minister Savant said that faith in Sai Baaba is keeping him fit, the mind and body, all these years. He was the chairman of Shirdhi Samasthan for many years. His devotion and attachment to that body are known only to him and Me. So, when he says that Baaba has been keeping him healthy and strong, I know that it is true and that his faith is deep and sincere. If you have sincere devotion you will fix the responsibility for your health on Him and He will also accept that responsibility. Your mind will be so full of happiness that your body will be fit instrument for Saadhana.

Shri Sathya Sai Hospital Day, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 8-10-1964

30. Genuine kinsmen

Pandiths, scholars in Bhaagavatha lore, have spoken to you so far on many sweet and wholesome topics taken from that great and inspiring work. The teachings of the Bhaagavatha are the mainstay of all bhaktas, the strength with which they walk the path of God. If only the culture of India, which is based on the Vedhas and expounded in the Raamaayana and the Bhaagavatha, is practised with a true understanding of its value, people can ensure for themselves perpetual joy or bliss. Grief is the illness; it has to be cured. The medicine is prescribed in the Vedhas; it is taught in the Shaasthras and Puraanas; it has to be discovered and taken in; then the experience of Aanandha will certainly follow. Of this, there is no doubt.

Samskrithi, the word for culture and cultivation, is derived from the word, samskaara, which means the dual process of removing the dust and dirt of vice and planting the virtues of Sathya.

Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema. Samskaara is also the name for certain obligatory rites of initiation and purification prescribed by the Vedhas for the spiritual upliftment of man. Their number is forty-eight in all; but, they could be reduced to ten and, if needed, even to one; the final and fulfilling One, of recognising one's identity with Maadhava or Shiva or Brahman. Nara (man) is but Naaraayana (God); leeva is Brahman, seen through the limitations of primal ignorance.

Forms of devotion revealed by Bhaagavatha Though the tongue of the penitent might repeat the sloka, "Paapoham paapakarmaanaam," (I am a sinner, committing sins) the inner Dweller, as the real You, will not agree to the description and that self-condemnation! Hence, you turn round in anger when you are accosted as a sinner (paapi). In your heart of hems, you know that you are the Pure, the Full, the Eternal. You are the limitless, timeless, spaceless Aathma, the changeless, characteristicless Self. That Aathma persists in your dreams, in deep sleep, in the varied activities of the waking stage. It persists during childhood, youth, middle age, old age and senility. It is the entity which declares itself as I: I slept, I dreamt, I awoke, I was a child, I am too old to walk erect, etc. My eye, my word, my idea, my plan, my resolution, my experience, you say; thereby, you announce that you are not any of these. You are separate from these, but yet, you are involved with them. How to experience the Aathma? The Vedhas say, "Sathyam vadha; Dharmam chara." (Speak the truth; practise righteousness).
 What is Sathya and what is Dharma? The Raamaayana and the Bhaagavatha reveal this knowledge, through story and example, so that any one, however poor or illiterate he may be, can understand it and practise it and benefit by it. So it is enough if these are taken to the door of every home in this land. The Bhaagavatha will reveal the fortune of Nandha and Yashodha who reared the Lord as their own child; the supramental Love that bound the simple cowherds of Brindhaavan with the Lord; the deep self-abnegating devotion of Raadha; the reverent affection that Uddhava had towards the Lord; and a variety of other forms of devoted service which brings God nearer to man. If you revolve these relationships in your mind and ruminate over the sweetness, it is freed from inferior impulses and your faith in the Supreme deepens.
 Remove the dirt of envy from the mind You will have to re-live the Bhaagavatha in your own experience; become a Nandha or Yashodha fondling the child Krishna; become a Gopee yearning for the company of the Lord, as the soul craves for the Supersoul, as the river craves for the sea; become one with the cows whom He tended, or the boys with whom He played, or the Murali (flute) which He breathed through to give the world the music that captivates. Mere reading the Bhaagavatha is not enough; seeing the picture of grand banquet in the cinema will not appease hunger. Eat a meal and it is appeased.

Samskaara means first removing the dirt from the mind. Know that envy is the stickiest dirt!
 You must be happy when others were happy. Raama is said to have been happy when others were happy; the Raamaayana says that He was then as happy as if, the event that made the other man happy, had happened to Him. That is the true test. Krishna speaks of Arjuna as An-asuya (envy-less). What a great compliment! Therefore, He proposed to teach him the mysteries of spiritual discipline. Dhroupadhi is extolled as an ideal wife, for she served her five masters, who were the five vital airs or Praanas, without the least trace of envy or pride. Sathyabhaama has become famous for jealousy and there are many stories current about Krishna's attempts to put down this vice and teach her humility.
 Have Love towards the Lord, but do not become depressed with envy when others also love him or get attached to Him. The Kuchipudi Party acted the musical dance-drama 'Bhaamakalaapam' here very nicely and artistically. They demonstrated both the love and the jealousy of Sathyabhaama. Try to have Love without the canker of jealousy.
 You come often to Puttaparthi; you hear the pandiths expounding the scriptures; you observe Me and My activity; what is the benefit you derive? How have you improved by all this? Have you succeeded at least in recognising your thaamasik and raajasik habits and tendencies?
 Recognising them as deleterious is the first step in removing them.
 Have you become more and more saathwik (serene and poised) as the years go by, or are you the same dull or perhaps, fiery individual? If you must know the Lord, you must love the Lord and live the good way. Hatred or even indifference will result only in misunderstanding. Develop close association with Him and He will reveal Himself to you.
 Grace is won by suffering only Walk in the path laid down in the Raamaayana, and Mahaabhaaratha and the Bhaagavatha.
 Proceed along that path, inspite of halts and handicaps, inspite of the approval or disapproval of kith and kin, of praise or blame from society. What exactly is praise or blame? Words, sound waves coming from across the air; waves that strike your ear. Let them strike only the outer ear.

Do not welcome them in.
The other speaker said that the lament of Dhroupadhi in her helplessness brought her the grace of the Lord. Yes, grace is won by suffering only. The Incarnation of the Lord comes upon the world when Adharma (unrighteousness) becomes rampant. Therefore, adharma has to be suffered so that one may have the joy of welcoming the Lord in human form. You can experience the swabhaava (nature) and the swaruupa (form) of the Lord through the experience the avathaara confers. That is the greatest gain. If the place you must reach is very near, you can just step across; if the distance is more, you may need a vehicle, bullock-drawn or horse-drawn; for longer distances, you may require a car or a plane. But, the Lord is nearest to you. Slide ajar the door of delusion; part the curtain of ignorance; open the closed eye; He is right there, before you! The fog of sensual pleasure is hiding Him from you. Switch on the light; the darkness disappears and He becomes visible. Know your genuine kith and kin Revere Knowledge as you revere your father, adore Love as you adore your mother, move fondly with Dharma, as if it is your own brother; confide in Dhaya (compassion) as if it is your dearest friend; have Shaantham (calmness) as your better half; treat Sahana (fortitude), as if it is your own beloved son. These are your genuine kith and kin. Move with them, live with them, do not forsake or neglect them. Arjuna asked Krishna how the ever-restless mind could be controlled. Living with these kinsmen is the best recipe. That is the best atmosphere to ensure the discipline and detachment needed for mind control. Mere prayer will not do. You will have to swallow and digest the morsel that is put into the mouth; repetition of the name of the dish is of no use. Hearing discourses and nodding approval or clapping in appreciation are not enough. The mother feeds lovingly, but the child must take it in with avidity and relish. When this earthly mother has so much love, who can estimate the love of the Mother of all beings, the Jagathianani. You heard the Bhaagavatha, portions of it, today. All the teaching you need for liberation from grief and worry, you can get in that one book. Read it every day, bit by bit, page by page and ruminate over the lessons you find there. Gradually, you will earn detachment from worldly sense objects; the book will take you in hand and lead you Godword.

It is a better guide than many of the so-called gurus who ply their trade today. They welcome you with great gusto and proclaim the excellence of their wares, condemning those of the others and set about the profitable task of hooking you as a disciple, so that they may extract funds from you or fame through you. Like shopkeepers clamouring for customers, manufacturers of patent medicines competing for customers, they try to sell their prescriptions to you, before you discriminate and escape. The four-storeyed mansion Whichever the book, whoever the guru, whatever the peetam (institution), the goal is the same. The path is the ancient one, laid down by the saintly pioneers. Or, you can picture it as a fourstoreyed mansion, the ground floor being karmayoga (union with God through action) and the succeeding ones being bhakthi, inaana and vairaagya (devotion, spiritual knowledge and nonattachment). When it is just a nascent fruit, it is karma. That is, the activity that all are capable of, and so it is the first step in saadhana as well. When it matures and is rendered free from egoism and greed, it becomes worship, and so, it leads one on to the second floor, bhakthi. When it is ripe and sweet, that is to say, when the bhaktha (devotee) achieves complete self-surrender, then, it is the acquisition of inaana; when the fruit drops from the tree, it marks full detachment (vairaagya); the fourth floor of God's mansion is then reached. Prema (divine love) is the motive power in Karma Yoga; it is the very breath of Bhakthi Yoga. It is universal and infinite, in inaana; it sees the Lord everywhere and in everything, when vairaagya has been achieved. The Bhaagavatha is saturated with the sweetness of prema. The sweetness of Krishna is filling this Nature or objective world and Raadha is tasting it and being thrilled by it. Who is Raadha? She is Nature, the Prakrithi, the Maayaa Shakthi (power of delusion), the Hlaadini Shakthi (power of joy) of Krishna Himself His Mahaabhaava (Great State). She has stolen and treasured in her heart the aanandha of Krishna which manifested as prakrithi and so, like the owner who roams round and round the house of the thief until he gets back his property, Krishna too is ever around Raadha's residence, seeking His aanandha. Be like the flute on Krishna's lips If you have the capacity to draw the Lord to yourself, He will Himself come to you and be with you. Be like the flute, a hollow reed, straight, light, with no substance to hinder His breath. Then, He will come and pick you up from the ground; He will breathe divine music through you, playing upon you with a delicate touch; He will stick the flute into His sash; He will press his lips on it. In His hand, the infinitesimal will be transmuted into the Infinite, the anu (light atom) will be transformed into the ghana (heavy solid).

One day, Krishna pretended to be fast asleep, with the flute carelessly thrown aside by His side when Raadha approached the fortunate flute and asked it in plaintive terms, "O lucky Murali!
Tell me how did you earn this great good fortune. What was the vow you observed, the vigil you kept, the pilgrimage you accomplished? What was the manthra you recited, the idol you worshipped?" The Flute got a voice through His grace and said: "I rid myself of all sensual desire, of envy, greed, of ego, that is all. I had no feeling of ego left to obstruct the flow of His prema through Me to all creation." Intensify the prema that is within you, as a sacred gift. Expand it so that all beings can share in it.
Ramakrishna Paramahansa had that prema; when someone around him was sad, he felt sad; when some one was glad, he felt glad.: He made himself one with all, in his great prema bhaava (state of Love). Have your prema fixed on the Lord, whether your petty wishes are fulfilled or not. Do not let slip the treasure, on some silly excuse or other. When Sai Baba confers success after success on you, you are foremost in singing "Sai Shankara, Sai Shankara," but let the shadow or disappointment fall on you, immediately you turn round and declare, "This Sai is not God."
Kali Yuga is conducive to win liberation Your worldly 'intelligence cannot fathom the ways of Go. He cannot be recognised by mere cleverness, which is what your intelligence mostly is. You may benefit from God, but you cannot explain Him. You may benefit from electricity, and use it in a thousand ways, but you cannot explore and explain its mystery. How it works so and why it works so and not in any other way, is beyond your ken. Your explanations are merely guesses, attempts to clothe your ignorance in pompous expressions. The mistake is, you give the brain more value than it deserves. The Parathathwa (Supreme Truth) is beyond the reach of the brain; standing on the rock, you cannot lift it! Standing in Maayaa, you cannot discard it.

The present age is described in the Shaasthras as very conducive to liberation; for, while in past ages, rigorous penance was prescribed as the means, the Kali age in which you are, requires only Naamasmarana to win liberation! When the name of the Lord is remembered with all the glory that is associated with it, a great flood of aanandha wells up within the mind. Vyaasa himself knew this; for, when some sages once went to him to find out which yuga is most conducive to success in man's efforts for liberation, Vyaasa anticipated their question and repeated to himself aloud, "O, how fortunate are those destined to be born in the Kali Yuga!" It is so easy in this Kali age to win the grace of the Lord.
But, how do you profit by this luck that you have come across? How far have you progressed using the chance of these discourses and the dharshan and sparshan (seeing and touching)?
Bring something into your daily practice, as evidence of your having known the secret of the higher life' from Me. Show that you have greater brotherliness, speak less with more sweetness and self-control, that you can bear defeat as well as victory with calm resignation.
You read these great books, the Raamaayana and the Bhaagavatha many times, for they are now easily available at a cheap cost. But, what proof can you give for having profited by the hours that you have spent with them? To digest the food you have taken, you have to engage in some physical activity. To digest the lessons that you imbue through holy company or through the study of great books, practise them in daily life. Manana (recapitulation) is a very important saadhana; dwell in silence on the implications of the lessons you have come across.
Keep up the enthusiasm that has given you the patience to sit through these discourses here for the last five hours. Develop it, and seeking the company of pious men, strengthen your saathwik (serene and poised) tendencies and progress in the spiritual path.
You have my blessings.
Prashanthi Nilayam, 9-10-1964
31. How old are you really?
The world is full of sorrow and strife; man tries to avoid these and somehow derive a little joy and peace, in the midst of grief and disappointment. It is like digging a well in a sand heap; the deeper you dig, the faster it caves in. And, the whole process has to be repeated again. The piles of sensual desires overwhelm the aspirant and drag him down into grief. The only means of getting lasting joy is bhakthi; that is the best among the yukthis (the paths dictated by intelligence). That alone gives the shakthi (the strength needed for acquiring unshakable joy).

Bhakthi can grow only on prepared ground. The method of preparation is given in the Vedhas, which speak also of things that have to be avoided. The Vedhas lay down the lines of conduct, the method of living, the ideals to be followed. You may not all be able to study the Vedhas and grasp the meaning. But those who have studied and who are following the teachings and who are overcome by the joy of that experience are here to tell you, in terms that you can understand.

Today, for example, we had the Shaastri, who spoke of the four Purusharthas (goals of human life), as mentioned in the Bhagavadh Geetha, which itself is the essence of the Upanishads, the latter part of the Vedhas called Vedhaantha. Of these goals, the final consummation is moksha; that is the very crux of the problem of life. Moksha means liberation from bondage to both joy and grief, which are the obverse and reverse of the same coin.

Moksha is the recognition of the truth; but, though it is so simple, it required the cultivation of viveka, vairaagya and vichakshana (discrimination, detachment and ability), to know the Truth and escape from the temptation to hug falsehood. Viveka is necessary to decide what is dharma---the very first of the Purusharthas. Each one must decide for himself the dharma he must choose for his uplift; this required viveka, the recognition of the permanently beneficial source of pure and lasting joy.

Walk with the help of Bhakthi and Karma Kurukshethra must be made a Dharmakshethra. Kurukshethra is the field where brothers fought over a handful of earth; but, it must be made a field for the uplift of man through the practice of dharma. It is for the sake of inaana that dharma has been laid down. Bhakthi and karma are the two feet and the head is inaana; walk on with the help of these two. Now, about vairaagya. When you go to a temple you break a coconut before the idol. Now, if you try to break the nut as it has fallen from the tree, will it break? No; the fibrous cover has to be removed, and the shell exposed. The fibre protects the shell and prevents the blow from affecting the shell. Moksha (liberation) results from the breaking of the mind with all its vagaries and wishes. You have to break your mind but, how can you do it, when the fibrous armour of sensual desires encompasses it? Remove them and dedicate the mind to God and smash it in His presence. That moment, you are free. The toughest fibre is anger, it is the stickiest dirt. When you get angry, you forget mother, father and teacher; you descend to the lowest depths. You lose all discrimination in the excitement; even Hanumantha set fire to the whole of Lanka when he was incensed by the demons who set fire to the tip of his tail; he lost sight of the fact that Seetha was in the Ashokavana. It was only when he had exulted in achievement for a little while that he remembered it and then he started condemning himself for his anger. Feel an inseparable unity with the Lord. Another fatal weakness is dambha (conceit, egoism, pride), the desire to be talked about, to be praised; people take delight in tom-tomming their achievements and capacities. This makes them ludicrous and pitiable. They want that their names and deeds should appear in the daily papers in big bold letters, as big as My head of hair! But it is not in the newspapers that you should strive to get attention. Earn status in the realm of God; earn fame in the company of the good and the godly, progress in humility, in reverence of elders and parents If you are for ever in the primary class poring over A B C and D, how can you make out the meaning of what these Pandiths say? These are all subjects beyond the reach of the senses and you must gamer them and cherish them in your minds. Practise them and live in joy. When the discourses are on here, I find many running about with their beds and reserving space for spreading them. When you go to a temple, you see the idol within but your thoughts are with your footwear that you had to keep outside the outer gate. These are matters that reveal the concentration that you are capable of. Every little point has to be taken care of, lest the benefit of saadhana be lost. You cannot get liberation by merely coming here; you cannot get it even by dharshana, sprashana and sambhashana (seeing, touching and conversing). You will have to follow the instructions, the Aajna (the order) and the directions: You will have to follow the path of Raadha, Meera, Gouranga and Thukaaraam. You must feel an inseparable affinity with the Lord, as inseparable as the wave and the sea. You are really of the same essence, the same taste, the same quality as the sea, though you have the name and form of the wave. The Lord is the Saguna aspect (Form with attributes) of the Paramaathma, that is the Universe. Butter, when in the milk, is immanent in it, has no separate name~ and form; but, take it out and it has a name and form which makes it distinct from mille Ghee too when liquid has no particular form, but when it hardens, it has a form. So too Maadhava-thathwam (Divine state) when it assumes a form, is Maanava (Man). Virtue is the life-breath When you are immersed in yourself, you are happiest. The child in the womb is in Soham (I am He); but when it is born in the world, it starts the question, Koham (Who am I?). For it forgot its truth; it identifies itself with the body and the senses. Until it becomes a inaani (person of realisation), it will never regain in Soham knowledge. Maanava can become Maadhava by engaging himself in Maadhava karma (action dedicated to God); he can then discover his Naaraayana thathwam (Divine state). What is the use of doing only maanava karma (human action) or even dhaanava karma (demoniac action) and claiming that man is divine? Virtue is the life-breath; character is the backbone. Without that, no meritorious act will fructify. A characterless man is like a pot with many holes, useless for carrying water, or storing it. Renounce and win peace; have and win troubles. There was a man living in a ramshackle hut when a huge big storm came along threatening to scatter it to the far comers, he sat inside and prayed to Vaayudheva (wind god). "O Vaayu! Abate thy fury," but the storm raged wild and furious. He prayed to Hanumaan, the son of the wind god Vaayu. "O Hanumaan, soften the fury of your father and save this poor fellow's shelter," and the storm blew with even more ferocity. Then he prayed to Raama to command His servant, Hanumaan, to persuade the wind god to reduce His overpowering sweep. He found that too had no effect. So, he came out of the hut and coolly said, "Let it be pulled asunder and lifted by the' storm out of sight. I do not care." Thus, he got his peace of mind back. The eagle is pestered by crows so long as it has a fish in its beak. They swish past that so they could steal the fish out of its mouth. They pursue the bird wherever it sits for a little rest. At last, it gives up the attachment to the fish and drops it from its beak; the crows fly behind it and leave the eagle free. So leave off sense pleasures and the crows of pride, envy, malice, and hatred will fly away, for they want only carrion. Practise renunciation from now on The snake moves in curves, not in a straight line; man too when he is following the senses has to move in a crooked path. He has greater poison in him than the snake; his venom is to be found in his eyes, his tongue, his hands, his mind, his heart, his thoughts--- whereas the cobra has it only in its fangs. The cobra raises its hood and sways in joy when it hears music; so too man when he realises the stage of niruvikalpa--steady unchanging establishment in the Ultimate Reality--- dances in heavenly bliss. Practise renunciation from now on, that you may set out on the journey when the call comes, you don't know when. Or at that moment, you will be in tears, when you think of the house you have built, the property you have accumulated, the fame you have amassed, the riches you have won. Know that all this is for the fleeting moment: develop attachment for the Lord, who will be with you wherever you go. Only the years that you have lived with the Lord have to be counted as life; the rest are all out of count. An old grandfather of seventy was asked by his seven-year old grandchild, "Grandpa! How old are you?" and the old man replied, "Two!" The child was struck with wonder and looked a picture of doubt. The old man replied, "I have spent only the last two years in the company of the Lord; until then I was plunged in the marshland of pleasure seeking." Realise the Indweller in the body Bhrigu asked Varuna what the Lord does and Varuna (rain god) replied, Thapas (penance). For, he explained, "He is in all the five kashas (sheaths)--the Annamaya, the Praanamaya, the Manomaya, the Vijnaanamaya and the Aanandhamaya koshas (sheaths of material, vital energy, mind, knowledge and bliss). He digests the food in the body and the food in the mind. He is ever active, creating, fostering and transforming. You must realise the dhehi (the Indweller), in the dheha (body) and the Naami (person designated) by the Naama (name). There was a wife who got bangles of gold made when she became a widow-, for, she argued, her husband had now become indestructible like gold, whereas he was, while alive, breakable, like the glass bangles she wore then. He had merged in the Akshara Brahman (Indestructible Supreme Reality).

 Develop prema (divine love) towards the Lord, the Parama-prema (Supreme divine love) of which He is the embodiment. Never give room for doubts and hesitations, for questions to test the Lord's Prema. "My troubles have not ended; why? Why is it that He did not speak to me? How is it I did not get a room for staying here? Why did he not call me?" you whine! Do not think that I do not care for you or that I do not know you. I may not talk to you, but do not be under the impression that. I have no prema. As a matter of fact, it is to give you the chance of dharshan that I move along the verandah from this room to that. Whatever I do, it is for you, not for Me. For, what is it that can be called Mine? Only you. Hold fast to your chosen deity. So, do not get shaken in mind; do not allow faith to decline. That will only add to the grief you already suffer from. Hold fast--that must be your vow. Whoever is your Ishta dhevatha (the chosen deity)--Vishnu or Raama or Shiva or Venkateshwara--hold fast to Him. Do not lose the contact and the company; for, it is only when the coal is in contact with the live embers that it can also become live ember. Cultivate nearness to Me in the heart and you will be rewarded.
 Then you too will acquire a fraction of the Supreme Prema. This is the great chance. This chance will not come your way again, beware of that. If you cannot, if you do not, cross the sea of grief now, taking hold of this chance, when again can you get such a chance? Really you are the fortunate few-, out of millions and millions of people you have come, though no one specially invited you to be present here. That is what I call the mark of destiny. Now, engage yourself in spiritual discipline, spiritual thoughts, spiritual company. Let the past go its way. At least from now on, seek to save yourself. Never yield to doubt or unsteadiness.
 That is a sign of ignorance. Have faith in any one Name and the Form indicated by that name. If you revere Shiva and hate Vishnu, the plus and the minus cancel out and the net result is zero. I will not tolerate the slightest hatred of any Name or Form. The wife has to revere the husband, but that does not mean that she has to hate his parents or brothers or sisters.
 You can never attain the Lord through hatred of one or more of His many Forms and Names. If you throw contempt at the God that another reveres, the contempt falls on your own God. Avoid factions, quarrelling, hating, scorning, fault-finding; they recoil on you. You find fault in others because you have faults in you. Remember every one is a pilgrim towards the same goal; some travel by one road, some by another. Raavana, Sisupaala, Danthavakra---they too reached the feet of the Lord, by inviting Him to end their earthly careers. Seek the good in others. Learn to speak little and to speak soft. That will reduce the chances of getting angry. Seek the good in others and the evil in yourself. When I am defamed, I never get incensed, for it is only the tree full of edible fruits that is attacked with sticks and stones. Moreover, without scorn and contempt, greatness will not shine and Spread. It has always been so, whenever Avathaars have come. When you hear the word, Rasala mango, you conceive of a sweet juicy fruit; but, when you have the fruit actually in hand, you are pestered by doubts whether it is really Rasala, whether it will taste sweet or sour. But, I never care for praise or blame; I just discard both. I am ever intent on the task for which I have come, the laying down of Sathya maarga (path of truth), of Dharma and the spread of the knowledge and practice of Dharma. The Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha is just one of the instruments for this task: the task of making the Kali yuga (present Iron age), a Kritha yuga (past Golden age). Stage by stage as the task unfolds, the sound of detractors will also cease; when fully fried, the pappad will make no further noise. Only the frying pappad makes noise. You too should avoid contact with the unfried minds; do not develop either hatred or envy. Have love and charity towards all.

 Know what exactly is your duty. This aged Shaasthry is a sweet fruit, ripe with age and experience; he knows and has actual experience of the life laid down in the Geetha. When I asked him to share his wisdom with the world, he was indeed happy beyond words. He is exulting over the opportunity he has got to partake in the revival of Vedhic scholarship and in the re-establishment of Dharma. He knows and I know, and no one else knows, the intensity of his joy at the chance he now has secured. He has but one desire in him now, a very sacred desire: to see the era of Dharma established on earth through My Sankalpa (Will). What a rare relationship is this, between him and Me! It is Sanaathana Sambandha (eternal relationship); hence he got Me.

Some things happened today to make Me speak in this strain and I wanted all of you to know what exactly is your duty to yourself and to others. There are some men who are like moths, who must bore through whatever they come across, silk or cotton or wool; there are others who are like bees, who seek only honey. The lotus attracts bees from afar, but the frogs that skip around it on the lake know nought of its beauty or fragrance.

32. The path to the presence

This day, three learned Pandiths (scholars) spoke on Adhwaitha (philosophy of Non-dualism) and Avathaara Thathwa (essential nature of Incarnation) and on the Lord of Mathura. They have appeased your hunger in full. When the stomach is full anything extra is bitter. But, a bit of pickle may be welcome. That I shall give you now! Birth as a human being is a unique chance for living beings. For, man is endowed with discriminating intelligence, the power to reason out the best among alternative courses. Man is far from the Pashu (animal), closer to Pashupathi (Lord of beings). He should not relapse into Pashuthwa (animality). Listening to Krishnamurthy Shaasthry expounding the Bhaagavatha--the sweet story of Krishna---told in sweet Sanskrit and explained so sweetly, you should imbue the prema with which the story is filled.

The Bhaagavatha has the majesty of seelam (virtue); it has the majesty of kriya (action); it has also the majesty of bhaava (feeling). By majesty, I mean Udhaaththatha (elevation). What a grandeur you witness in the Raamaayana, for example! When Raavana fell, Raama sent

Lakshmana to the place with a message to see that he is treated like the Emperor of Lanka and not a despised enemy. Lakshmana when he was called in to identify the ornaments of Seetha contained in the bundle she had thrown on the ground during the flight to captivity, declared that he could identify only the toe-rings of his sister-in-law; he saw only those ornaments, for he prostrated every day at her feet, as the consort of the elder brother is, according to the Shaasthras, equal to one's own mother. Now, it is impossible to find such virtue holding sway over men's minds. Now it is egoism, pride and greed that sway them. Importance of moral standards

Man has lost the fear of a fall; he has become worse than animals. It was not like this in the past.

During previous centuries, Rajput women immolated themselves rather than fall into the hands of wicked foes. When Hanumaan offered to take Seetha on his shoulder back to Raama, the virtue of Seetha would not allow her to accept the offer. She had her husband's reputation in view. She said that it would best suit her husband's fame if he himself avenges the wrong and rescues her. Hanumaan's taking her, would be a repetition of what Raavana did, for he too stole her secretly while Raama was away. She did not consider her immediate relief as more important than the implications of that step to her virtue and her husband's fair name. That is what I call Seelodaaththatha (virtue in exaltation).

Or, take the Mahaabhaaratha. The Yaksha who guarded the lake had killed all the four brothers and they were lying on the ground. Dharmaraaja, the eldest brother, went there to slake his thirst and the Yaksha warned him, too. He challenged him to answer his questions, just as he had asked the others; but since he replied correctly, the Yaksha was pleased to grant him a boon; he could bring back to life one among the four who lay dead! And, whom did Dharmaraaja select? Not Bheema who would be his right hand in the coming battle against the Kauravas; not Arjuna, who was indispensable as a bowman of the highest attainments; but, Nakula, the son of his stepmother, Madri. Even the Yaksha was surprised. He asked him the reason why. Dharmaraaja said that his mother had him as the one surviving son but his stepmother too should have a son alive. That was the measure of his attachment to Dharma, to virtue, to normal standards. Then, people lived for the sake of Dharma; now, the ideal is dhana (riches). When Duryodhana had at last to be encountered a single combat, he himself selected a foeman worthy of his reputation, Bheema, when he could as well have chosen a weaker rival. It was considered improper to fight with a weaker foe.

Gopees' prema to Krishna was super-physical

It all lies in the vision that you command, that you have equipped yourselves with. One of the Shaasthrys spoke of certain doubts which he himself had felt about Me, doubts which kept him away for some years. The love of the Gopees towards Krishna has led many ignorant people enmeshed in worldly attachments and physical attractions, to turn their faces away from God.

Before passing judgement on any subject, you must investigate closely.

The prema of the gopees towards Krishna was super-physical, the love of the soul for the Oversoul, of the river for the sea. Persons deep in this type of love see nothing else, hear nothing else; they behave like mad persons, as the world goes. Their joy when they feel his presence is as supreme as their grief when they feel they are deprived of it. That is why among the songs of the saints, you have Nindhaasthuthi also; that is to say, songs, which blame Him for being cruel, partial, negligent, etc.!

You may know that the Lord of the Holy Shrine Shrisailam is called Mallikaarjuna, the white jasmine; and the Goddess, the Consort, is called most appropriately, Bhramaramba, the Bee! For the bee is drawn inescapably to the flower and it forgets itself while tasting the Glory of the Flower. The union of Jeeva and Brahman is of the same significance as the union of Krishna and Thrishna---Krishna and the Thirst, the Lord and the Love.
Doubt leads to perdition, spiritual ruin The children of the Sanskrit School enacted the play Maarkandeya yesterday and you saw the boys who took the role of Marudvathi and Maarkandeya completely immersed in the role and so, they were able to make you also feel every emotion they expressed. You must fill yourself with the Form and the Glory of the Lord; you must not be aware of anything else. Then, you too can become Maadhava.
There are two eight-syllabled axioms in the Geetha, which you must take to heart: Shraddhaavan labhate Inanam and Samshayaathma vinashyathi. The first tells you that the person who is steady in his faith gains the knowledge of the path of liberation and the second warns against the sinister consequence of "doubt"; doubt leads to perdition, spiritual ruin. Dwell on these axioms and practise the spiritual discipline of Naamasmarana, Japam or Dhyaanam. This is the pursuit that is worthy, not the pursuit of fame, nor the friendship of the famous.
You ask for grace, which is available only at a very high cost; but, you pay only trash. It is sheer avarice, like asking a gourd as extra, when what you have paid is for a bean! You may claim that you have been coming to Puttaparthi for ten or twelve or sixteen years or that you have even stayed here long; but, it is not the years that matter; it is the depth to which the roots of karma have grown in previous births. They decide the ears of corn that you have to live upon. It takes a long time and systematic saadhana to clear the field of all those growths---the saadhana, as the Shaasthry said, of Karma and Upaasana which leads to Inaana.

Three stages in spiritual awareness This is the meaning of the injunction that you should dip thrice in succession, when you take a bath in any holy river. The first dip is to cleanse the sthoola sareera (the gross physical body); the second is to cleanse the suukshma sareera (the subtle body), of the praanamaya, the manomaya and the vijnaanamaya koshas (sheaths of vital energy, mind, knowledge) and third is to cleanse the kaarana sareera (the causal body) or the vijnaanamaya kosha, with just a tinge of maayaa still left. They are also meant to consecrate the karma and the upaasana saadhanas and confer inaana, Dhwaitha, Visishtaadhwaitha and Adhwaitha are also only three stages in spiritual awareness.
Somasekhara Shaasthry spoke of the Dhwaitha and Adhwaitha (dual and non-dual) attitudes which colour people's outlook in every field. But, they are not distinct; they are stages of mental transformation. The fruit is the same; the soil and the sun make it reach the ripe stage, through the intermediate stages of tender fruit and mature fruit. When you realise that the Lord is at the address that He has given towards the end of the Geetha in the 61st sloka of the 18th chapter, namely, "Ishwarassarvabhuthaanaam hriddese, Arjuna, thishtathi," that "He is in the heart of every being," then you know the one, with no other.
To realise the Lord in every being, you must cultivate Prema and drive out the bats that infest the dark caverns of your heart, the bats of hate, envy and malice. Let the light of Prema illumine your thoughts, your words, your movements, your activities, your judgements. When you become transmuted into Prema, the Lord who is Premaswaruupa, will reveal Himself to you, and play on the Flute, awakening your higher consciousness in the flood of Universal love.
Saadhana is essential because the effects of karma have to be removed by karma alone, as a thorn is removable only by another thorn. You cannot remove it by a knife or a hammer, or even a sword. The knowledge that the world is unreal was itself spread by Shankaraacharya by means of activity in the unreal world, the establishment of mutts the writing of books and partaking in disputations. You cannot desist from arm; only, you have got to take care that it is saturated with prema and promotes the welfare of the world.

The grand combination
Tomorrow again, the path of the Presence of the Lord will be explained by these Pandiths as well as by Me. Whoever may speak, whatever the text, the substance is the same in no other place can you have this grand combination: Pandiths who expound, as if to their own kith and kin, the great truths contained in the scriptures with such faith and devotion and a congregation of listeners which listens with devoted avidity, eager to learn and practise what they learn.

You must be devoted, as devoted as a boy who studied in the Aashram of Dhoumyarishi. When the guru was conducting his lesson assiduously, the rain came in torrents and the boys ran helterskelter to roll up their beds or collect their clothes or save their kusa grass bundles. But, one boy reasoned out within himself, we had heavy rain last evening too, so this downpour will certainly damage the dike. So, to save the two acres of land that the guru owned, he went and laid himself across the breach. You must so act that the heart of the Guru melts at your devotion. Only that will cleanse the mind of evil and vice. If you develop devotion and steady faith you will achieve the Glory of Self-realisation.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 11-10-1964
After long searches, here and there, in temples and in churches, in earths and in heavens, at last you come back. Completing the circle from Where you started, to your own soul, and find that He, for whom you have been seeking all over the world, for whom you have been weeping and praying, in churches and temples, on whom you were looking as the mystery of all mysteries, shrouded in the clouds, in the nearest of the near, is your own self, the reality of your life, body and soul.

Shri Sathya Sai
33. Faith is the foundation
This day you heard the Pandiths tell you about the supremacy of the Vedhas and the need for establishing Dharma. No one can break the limits of Vedhas and Shaasthras and speak here; in fact, all spiritual subjects are subsumed in the scriptures. All knowledge is derived from the Vedhas. You cultivate your divinity in proportion to the Saadhana you do and the handicaps you have brought down from previous births. It is above and beyond the intellect and incapable of being reached through the senses. Divinity is its own law; it is independent of all restrictions and modes. The senses can each perform only one operation for the gathering of knowledge: the ear can inform you of sound, the eyes can speak of colour, the tongue of taste, etc. But, the Divine is beyond all sensations and systems.

Srishti, Sthithi and Laya (creation, sustentation and dissolution) are the three forms of the Divine will; you have to penetrate the inner meaning of Srishti, by means of Karma Yoga; you have to grasp the significance of sthithi, by means of Bhakthi Yoga and when you master the Inaana Yoga, you arrive at the experience of Laya, of manifoldness in the One. Bhakthi makes you aware of the Lord who sustains and supports every being; it is Prema, which is Nithya, Sathya and Nirmala; that is to say, Love which is unchanging, sincere and pure. There is no one who is devoid of bhakthi; deep down in his core, every one has the feeling of kinship with all creatures.

It is this that makes a lonely man miserable, that makes every one likeable to some one or other.

If you have no love; you are like a lamp without the flame, blind and blinding. Love of the pure type is unmixed with hate, untampered with greed. Karma is necessary for liberation

Faith is the foundation for this type of devotion, faith in doing good, faith in punya and paapa (merit and sin), so that you examine each act in the light of its long-distance consequences, and lastly faith, in the series of births through which the present life is built up. Pilgrimage was, in the years gone by, a long and arduous process, and so, the pilgrim was educated by it in humility and fortitude. Those who came with Me to Badhri were free from fear for the road, and so, they had more time to dwell on Naaraayana and His glory.

Thirupathi has been made so easily accessible now that it is fast being turned into a paradise for picnickers! The sacred hills have been scarred and the full throated exclamation, "Govindha" "Govindha" as the pilgrims climb the steps have disappeared. People go in aeroplanes to Kaashi and return after a quick round of the ghats and shrine, in a few hours. The silent communion with the Divine and the slow infiltration of elation into the inner consciousness have been lost.

Only through karma can liberation be effected. When karma is prompted by bhakthi, it is samasaara bhakthi (devotion of the worldly); when inaana also blossoms a little, it is vaanaprastha bhakthi (devotion of the recluse); when bhakthi fructifies into inaana, then it is Sanyaasa bhakthi (devotion of the ascetic) or Moksha (liberation) itself. Without karma, progress is very difficult. Faith is essential for consummation of saadhana. The inaani too has to do karma, but, like swans coming out of the water, they can swish their feathers and wings and be as dry as when they entered it: karma will not affect them at all. They do it with no ego, with no desire. It is their nature to wish well of the world and to engage in work that promotes the welfare of the world. When a woman who is pregnant is widowed, she does not immediately rid herself of the marks of a married woman, for she can discard the nosescrew, the ear-rings, the mangala suuthra (marriage string worn by married women), etc., only after the child is born! Until then, though she has the outward marks of a woman happy with her husband, she knows she is a widow. The inaani is also of the same type; he knows that he is free, but, to the world he appears bound. Frothy youth, suffering from the fever of cynicism, laugh at inaanis and treat them with dishonour. There is no use blaming them, either. The elders set the example and what else can they do? Prema is the seed; thanmayathwam, over-powering experience of merging, is the tree; inexhaustible Aanandham is the fruit. For this consummation, faith is essential. Look at Arjuna! When the choice was placed before him to decide which he should receive---the army of redoubtable heroes belonging to the Yadhava clan or Krishna alone, unarmed and refusing to fight--he asked only for Krishna! He knew; he believed; he was saved. The same choice India has to make even now, when the Lord has appeared in His swaruupa here. What does it profit the country if it accumulates money, gold and grain? The aanandha, derived from the worship of the name and form which arouses spiritual joy, is far more desirable than these. Want of faith is the source of weakness in all fields. Establishing the reign of Dharma. In the days of Ashoka, there was a poor man living in Buddhagaya. His name was Sishupaala. Though very poor, he stuck to dharma and was never known to forsake that path, in spite of strong temptations. Ashoka slipped into his house one night and craved for food and shelter. Sishupaala was surprised that there was someone poorer than himself, He welcomed him and fed him with his own share of the meal; he asked his son to press his feet, to give relief to the tired limb. When Ashoka spoke praising him for his hospitality, he protested and said, that it was wrong to take such extra notice of what was his duty. "It is our dharma," he said. Ashoka asked him what he meant by dharma and when Sishupaala said that the land was immersed in adharma and that the Emperor was not fostering dharma, Ashoka who was incognito, challenged him. "What Ashoka could not do, can you achieve?" he asked. Sishupaala replied, "Of course I shall; I bend only to God. I am not afraid of man. I care only for dharma." The guest laughed and changed the topic; but Ashoka had no sleep that night. He rose in the early morning and went out of the hut, while it was still dark. Next morning, a gorgeously dressed courtier appeared before the hut and inquired whether he had, by any chance, blamed the Emperor to someone during the night. Sishupaala said that he had done so, but that what he said was correct. The courtier was entrusted with the mission of bringing him to the palace, where Ashoka appointed him as Dharmadhevatha (deity of Righteousness), to establish the reign of dharma in the land. He told him, "If the slightest deviation from dharma happens anywhere you will be executed, beware. I shall give you all the military help you need to transform the conduct of the people." Sishupaala agreed. He said: "I shall do so; I do not need your army. I have full trust in God." Ashoka was rather disappointed that the man placed no trust in him! But he decided to watch the progress of this new experiment in administration, which was to last for ten days. And the unexpected happened. There was no theft, no breach of the moral code, no violation of the Shaasthras anywhere in the land. Young women decked with jewels could go from one end of the empire to another, even during nights, without any fear of molestation or theft. Emperor Ashoka submits to Dharma. Ashoka really got envious of the capacity of the new administrator. He went incognito one night to the house of a prostitute and banged at the outer door, demanding entry. The lady protested and refused to admit him, since Dharmadhevatha ruled the land.

There was an altercation between Ashoka and the hefty watchman at the door, which became hot. A fight ensued, and the watchman was slain.

That was on the seventh day of the new regime. Ashoka had it announced that since a murder had been committed in the town, the man from Buddhagaya had to be executed.

The news spread like wildfire and every one wept at the plight of the good man. Sishupaala, however, had discovered that it was no less a person than the Emperor who had done the deed; he had actually visited the house where the incident happened and recorded details of the persons involved. So, when he was about to ascend the steps and place his head on the block, he shouted "Stop," and asked that Ashoka himself be brought to the place of execution, for, it was he who had killed the watchman. Ashoka too was prepared; he had made an image of himself in gold and that was beheaded in his place, as the Shaasthras allow. The gold was distributed as gifts, and dharma was observed.

Contribute your individual effort
You must use all the talents awarded to you in a prayerful and humble mood. Until then, you have no right to seek the help of the Lord, His intervention. A devotee of Hanumaan was once driving a cartload of grain to the market. On the way, the wheel got stuck and the cart could not be drawn forward by the bullocks. The cart slanted too far to one side and the bags fell on the ground. The devotee sat on the ground and started praying to Hanumaan. He finished reciting the Stothras, the 108 names, and even the 1008 names. The cart did not regain balance. He began to blame Hanumaan and started reviling Him for not coming to his rescue. Hanumaan appeared and took him to task. "Foolish fellow; instead of applying all your strength on the job, you have reviled Me, for not doing what is really your task. Come on, put your shoulder to the wheel; engage in karma; contribute purusha prayaitana (individual effort)."

Karma cleanses the mind, if it is done as a dedicatory act, the consequence being left to the Will of the Lord. Repentance saves even sinners from perdition. No ceremony of expiation is as effective as sincere repentance. The shop-keeper may give short measure; but, he will not accept less cash. The bill has to be paid in full. Pay it through repentance. You cannot deceive the Lord by insincerity or by ruses. Unless you correct yourself by detachment and sacrifice, you cannot reach God. Give up egoism; then only you can see him.

Raama taught dharma, treading in his own life every one of its steps. Krishna paid more attention to teaching it through Arjuna. Small people who cannot overcome their egoism dare judge Krishna and point the finger at what they call his "pranks." Such men were found then, as well as now. They are ever engaged in seeking faults in the great. They dare declare that the Lord should be such and such, of this form and with such characteristics, as if they could ever glimpse the edge of His glory, as if the Lord will assume the form these men decide.

Feel you are the instrument of God's Will
The Lord can be understood only if you approach Him, develop attachment for Him, have faith in Him, and maintain unswerving loyalty to Him. He is understood only when you feel that you are but the instrument and that He wills every little movement everywhere. Who is there so bold that he can say, "the Lord must wear only this dress, the Lord must act only in this manner?"

Who can limit His glory or set its direction! He is immanent in all beings and He gets done all activities through them, just as electricity makes the bulb shine, the mike to transmit the voice, the stove to cook, the refrigerator to cool.

The river of life has four causeways, while the river Vankaperu, which flows in this taluk, has two: one on the road to Penukonda and another on the road to Dharmaavaram. The causeways are brahmacharya, grihastha, vaanaprastha and sanyaasa (celibate, house holder, recluse and monk). Of these, the grihastha causeway has sunk and become impassable. Repair it and become good grihasthas; then the path of life is smooth for the journey. On the road to Prashanthi Nilayam from Kothacheruvu, the Bapanapalle culvert has broken down. But the villagers cannot of their own accord reconstruct it according to their sweet will. It has to be reconstructed by the very authority that first erected it. So too, when dharma has gone into disrepair, He who laid down the dharma has to come again and get it repaired. The four bridges were laid by the Lord, and He has come to rebuild them now. The engineers and others are here, in the Prashanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha; very soon, the rebuilding work will be completed and the inaugural ceremony celebrated. Cultivate faith and detachment. Revere elders and take to heart the advice they give, out of their mature wisdom and experience. Cross the ocean of death and birth and be "children of immortality," (Amrithasya Puthraah), every moment of your lives. Prashaanthi Nilayam, 12-10-1964

Once you rise to the higher level of consciousness and live at that level, all those events cease to have the same meaning and so have less and less effect on you. Instead, you remain happy and calm at all times, merely observing events as they come and go, for that is what they do.

34. Neither different nor diminished

Pandith spoke now about the many forms of bhakthi: Nishkaama bhakthi, para bhakthi, madhura bhakthi, (desireless, supreme and sweet devotion), karma bhakthi (devotion in action), etc. When you claim to have bhakthi, the question naturally arises, where have you placed your attachment, your affection, your unswerving loyalty and why. If you are drawn towards pleasuregiving objects and other material gains, you are in for unending worry, fear and anxiety, ashaanthi (absence of peace), in fact. The happiness they contribute is as unreal as the happiness you derive from similar things in your dreams. The experience of the waking stage is as unreal and fleeting as the dream. The seen is a dream; the unseen is the real. There is a mixture of reality and unreality in the variety of the universe. That is why it deludes; that is why joy and grief are fleeting.

Bhakthi is really unswerving loyalty to God with form and attributes and a name. You can grasp with the reason that you are endowed with, only concrete name-attribute-full things. So, God has to appear before you with form and attributes (sakaara, saguna, swaruupa) so that you can love Him and serve Him and follow Him and get liberated by Him. But when He comes with form, do not think He is either different or diminished. Ghee when it is solidified is white and granulary. When it is heated it is a colourless liquid, having no shape or form. The niraakaara (formless) becomes sakaara (with form), when it is exposed to cold. So too, in the cool recesses of the bhakthi's heart, the niraakaara is rendered sakaara. When the formless transforms itself, it may appear as Vibhavaakaara or as Swaakaara (endowed with some particular glory or power or as the full manifestation of itself). That is to say, the avathaara might manifest only that part of the Divine glory as was essential for the task which brought the Form, or it might exceed the limited purpose for which it came and shine in full grandeur. Raama is a good example of the first and Krishna of the second. Krishna was not satisfied with the killing of Sishupaala and Dhanthavakra, the two demons who were formerly Jaya and Vijaya, or even with the overwhelming of various other evil persons who infested the world then. Fame and ill-fame go together. He laid down in the Geetha and in the upadesha He gave to Uddhava and others, the fundamentals of spiritual life and the ways of removing primal ignorance, as a step to human liberation, ways that can be followed by various sections of the human community, from illiterate cowherds and milkmaids to learned scholars, practised saadhakas, ritualistic experts, adepts at social service, and experienced philosophers.

Jonnalagadda Sathyanarayanaamurthy gave you in his speech a fine description of the pangs of separation which agonised the village folk, when the Lord kept away from them, even for a short while. When they espied a dark-blue cloud in the sky, they shed tears of joy, for it reminded them of the Krishna they adored. But Krishna was scandalised in His time and people spread wicked stories about Him! It is always so; the supply of drinking water implies the laying down of pipes for both fresh water and for drainage. Ill-fame and fame go together. Revered personalities are the targets of irresponsible irreverence. Dedication must come naturally. The sages declare that they become sad when worldly people call them happy or find them happy. Chaithanya felt happy when people reviled him for wasting his time in keerthan and when they broke his mridang and tal. He said, "These people are foolish; they think a tree can be saved if the leaves are watered; the root of joy has to be watered so that joy may grow in you. The root is Krishna, the Krishna in your heart." Water the root with tears, tears of joy that get the chance to sing His name, to praise His glory; not tears of sorrow, for such tears are a sacrilege; they should not contaminate the Lotus Feet of the Lord. It is dedication to the Lord that sanctifies all activities. He is the raison d'etre for activity. He is the prompter, the executer, the giver of the required strength and skill, the enjoyer of the fruit thereof. So, dedication must come naturally to you, for, all is His and nothing yours! Your duty is to believe He is the impeller of your activities, and draw strength from that belief. Until the wound heals and the new skin hardens, the bandage must protect the place. So too, until Reality is realised, the balm of faith, of holy company, and holy thoughts must be applied to the egoaffected mind.

Every one of you has in possession a ticket for liberation from the cycle of birth and death. But, most do not know the train which they have to board; many get down at intermediate stations, imagining them to be the terminus and wander helplessly in the wilderness or are carried away by sights and scenes.

Reference was made to ajnaana. This ajnaana (ignorance) is imported from outside; what is native to man is jnaana. His jnaana is fogged by the smoke of delusion, which makes things appear many or confused. Man has burdened himself with information on a multiplicity of things; he has acquired a variety of skills, but, he has no vision to see things as a whole, to see the basic unity of the objective world. Moreover, he has no equipment to live lovingly with others, to recognise the humanity of all men, to feel that the same Lord activates each of them.

Gifts of reason must not be wasted
How far can the learning which you acquire in schools and through books take you? There was a wife who was given a cheque-book so that she might imburse herself out of the bank account.

She signed every cheque, "Your loving wife" and wondered why they were dishonoured. There must be adaptability, recognition of changed circumstances, awareness of the relative value of things, discrimination between the real and relatively real. The gifts of reason and conscience must not be wasted through neglect. Your story should not be a repetition of that of the woodcutter, who was given a huge sandalwood forest as a reward, but, who out of sheer ignorance of the value of the trees, burnt the trees and sold them as charcoal at so much per bag!

The Divinity that is man is ignored and the opportunity to unfold it (which is called "life") is wasted. You calculate wealth in terms of land and buildings, gold and silver, and finally, feel unhappy to leave them and go. You drug yourself in the attempt to escape from the hold of disease; but you are unaware of diseases that eat into the very vitals of your happiness and make you a social danger---the diseases of envy, malice, hatred and greed. Get the best advice to cure these. Believe that the Lord is living in every heart and so, when you inflict pain, physical or mental, on anyone, you are slighting the Lord or denying Him. He is everywhere.

Purify the heart by being good to all

Do you say that the Lord appeared from the pillar in the palace of Hiranyakashipu though He was not there? Or do you say that He appeared there, since He was there? He was there; He is everywhere. But since Hiranyakashipu said He was not there, he could not see Him; since Prahlaadha said that He was there He could be seen there. If you are blind, how can you see Him, though He may be right in front? You are blind to His Omnipresence; how then can you see Him everywhere? When the magnet does not attract the needle, the fault lies in the dirt that covers up the needle. When the Lord does not approach the devotee, the fault lies in the heart of the devotee; it is not pure enough.

Purify the heart by being good and kind to all. Do not attempt to find fault with others. Look upon all with love, with respect, with faith in their sincerity. I would ask you to treat your servants kindly. Do not entertain hatred or contempt in your heart; show your resentment if you must, through words, not action. Repent for the errors that you commit and decide never to repeat them; pray for strength to carry out your resolutions.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 14-10-1964

35. The bond that unbinds

THE scholarship which revels in the number of texts mastered is of no use; one may know the Shaasthras and the Upanishads upside down; he may have all the seven hundred slohas of the Geetha in his head, but, if aachaara and vichaara are non-existent, it is a burden which is best avoided. Aachaara means, application in practice. Vichaara means continuous self-examination.

The Shaasthry spoke of the incident of the golden deer, which enticed the heart of Seetha. One would naturally wonder why Seetha should fall in for that creature, or why Raama should believe in the existence of such a strange creature. He could have convinced Seetha that it was a stratagem of the Raakshasas to attract their attention and bring about dire mischief. But, like any ordinary husband infatuated with his wife, Raama followed the deer promising to bring it back alive, to be kept as her pet. Of course, if He was an ordinary human being, infatuation like this would be condemned. But, being the Lord Himself He has to be judged differently. All things are according to plan, His plan.

 Know that plan; it is laid down in dharma, depicted in the Upanishads. The Shaasthy that spoke next elaborated upon the dharma as laid down for brahmacharis (celibates). What is brahmacharya? It means charya in Brahman---moving ever in Brahman. Cognise that your existence is in Brahman, through Brahman, for Brahman. It is that awareness that makes acts sacred and successful. Feel pure; that makes your act pure. The gopees moved about, not in Gokula but in the Lord's residence; they did not sell butter and milk; but, used: the opportunity to call out the names of the Lord. Pure words, pure speech; holy listening, holy reading, seeing holy things---these make the heart pure. The confusion and travail that now afflict you, are the consequences of impure speech and impure sight.
 Everyone must fit in with the Lord's plan When I was in the previous sareera (body), Das Ganu who was a police officer came to Shirdhi on account of his good luck. That visit transformed him. Moreover, Baaba accosted him as Das Ganu as soon as he saw him, and this stunned him. He asked Baaba that some parties that were opposed to him might be put down and that he might get promotion in his official career. Baaba invited him to remain in Shirdhi itself and escape all bother. He told him: "Do not wonder why I am suggesting this, when you craved for something else." Later, when promotions came, he ignored Baaba and his promise to come away as soon as his honour was vindicated by official promotion. So, Baaba had to bring about circumstances which compelled him to come at last, as per Baaba's plan. He composed a number of songs and sthothras (hymns); he began performing Harikathas on Baaba everywhere and he was instrumental in bringing the news of the advent of Baaba to thousands in the land. His life was spent in and through the Lord.
Upaasini Baaba was also a similar personality. He was born in 1869 and known as Kaashinaath.
 He married thrice; practised as a doctor, earned much money and lost all; after hard penance, chanced into Shirdhi, where Baaba accosted him. "Hallo, Kaashinaath!" He directed him to Upaasana (contemplation) and guided his saadhana and so he was called Upaasini Baaba. He too was a part of Baaba's plan.

 The journey towards the Source Thus, every one must fit in with the plan; strive to know its main principles and be equipped for the task He allots you. Be ever vigilant in the tasks that the role involves, that is your swadharma (one's own nature and duty). Give your heart fully to the task.
"Raama" means, he who pleases, attracts, and attaches himself through pleasing attributes. Krishna means the same thing; he who attracts. "Hah" means he who robs you of your self, your ego and reveals Himself as you. To attain Him you have to climb, and climbing from the animal to man and from man to Maadhava is a hard struggle with the forces that pull you downward.
 A decrepit old car whines and groans when it has to ascend an incline; for the engine is clogged and worn out. Keep the engine of the mind free from the dust and dirt of sensory yearning and you can ascend easily the heights of spiritual progress. It is like swimming against the fast current, this journey towards the source of Being. The Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion) teaches you how to succeed in this journey; and, due to its innate integrity, it has flourished without losing its pristine glory, even after the onslaught of wave after wave of strange cultures.
 It can never decline, for it is Truth. It is the sum of experience of bhakthas like Hanumaan, Raadha and Meera. Remember this when the yajna (sacrifice) here is drawing to a close for that type of bhakthi alone ensures the aapthi or 'attainment' of Sama or 'Brahman.' That is the genuine samaapthi or finale.
 Many of you are inspired to start in your own places sanghams and samaajams (associations) for doing bhajana, but it is difficult to get bhakthas who are devoted to the Lord without any ulterior desire or intention. A bhaktha must be full of joy, whatever may happen, for he knows it is the will of the Lord that is being worked out. I do not address gatherings as "Bhakthulaaraa" (Dear bhakthas), for, complete surrender and complete purity essential for a bhaktha are commodities that are absent. Ask yourself the question, whether each of you deserves the name, 'Sai Bhaktha' and you will know why I do not address you so.
 Keep your devotion within yourself Bhajana does not become effective through drums, cymbals, violins and other accessories. They cover up the absence of the essential thing---feeling, emotions, yearning, sincerity, faith. When you gather in groups, the evil qualities of envy, competition, pride and factionalism raise their heads. So, offer bhajana to the Lord in your own homes, and do not invite these obstacles by organising groups and mandalis and sanghams. Again there are some who extol others for the absurd reason that Sai Baba speaks through them! Baaba has entered into them, they declare from the housetops. "O, Baaba has come upon this child, this person." How silly! Am I a ghost or a devil to possess someone and speak through him? It is all drama which cheats sick minds. Do not fall a prey to these.

That is why I say, keep your devotion within yourself, under control, and not be led away by crooks and self-seekers. These lead you astray by giving you a wrong idea of the Lord's manifestation. They befoul the faith that their brothers and sisters repose in God.

Institutions, societies and sanghams have another fault. Religious institutions must make people aware of God and of their own evanescence. But, these create a paraphernalia of officers, various grades of members, a secretary, a treasurer, a president and a batch of committee members, who strut about with their badges and revel in their own assumed greatness. A society named after God must help in the removal of jealousy, envy, vanity, egoism and greed; but, these foster them and allow them to grow wild. Real bhakthas will never crave for such positions; they will avoid them as traps which could lay them low. Your faith must be unshakable I do not need any publicity, nor does any other manifestation of the Lord. What are you daring to publicise? Me? What do you know about Me, let Me ask. You speak one thing about Me today and another tomorrow. Your faith has not become unshakable! You praise, when things go well, and blame when things go wrong. You flit from one refuge to another. And even before you bhakthi ripens, you strive to lead others, you collect donations and subscriptions and plan mandhirs and sanghams; all this is mere show, which brings spiritual loss, rather than spiritual gain. When you start publicity you descend to the level of those who compete in collecting clientele, decrying others and extolling themselves.

Where money is calculated and garnered, and exhibited to demonstrate one's achievements, I will not be present. I come only where sincerity, faith and surrender are valued. So spend the silent hours in meditation and naamasmarana (remembering the Lord's name) in your own homes and deepen faith. I do not need bhajans which, like gramophone records, reproduce songs and naamaavalis, without any feeling or yearning while singing. Hours of shouting do not count; a moment of concentrated prayer from the heart is enough, to melt and move God.

Practise detachment little by little

If you deny God, it is as if you deny yourself. There is no God, you declare; but, you assert that "I exist." Well, who is that I that exists, that exists throughout the varying stages of growth, physical and mental, in joy and grief?. That 'I' is God; believe It. For that 'I' sees with eyes, tastes with the tongue, walks with the feet, argues with the intelligence; but, all the while, it is conscious that it is separate from all these. When you affirm "There is no God," you first assert and then declare the absence of that entity. You assert the non-existence of something that "is."

That I must be conceived as a wave of the ocean of God, not as the first person singular. That "first" person leads you into the world of fear and greed. My house, my village, my community, my district, my language--it entangles itself thus more and more inextricably.

There was a man from Puttaparthi who lived in a solitary hut on the banks of the Ganga, some miles above Haridhwaar. He was engaged in severe thapas and was greatly admired by other monks. One day, while bathing in the river, he overheard a party of pilgrims who had alighted from their bus at that site, talking among themselves in Thelugu. His attachment to the mothertongue dragged him thither; he asked them where they came from. They said Ravalaseema. He probed further; they were from Ananthapur District; his ears ached for further details. They were from Penukonda Thaluk, Puttaparthi itself, in fact. So, that monk was very happy; he asked them about his lands, his family, his friends and when he was told that a few of them had died, the poor fellow started weeping like a fool. All his years of saadhana had come to nought. They broke down before the onslaught of language-attachment. He was so bound to his mothertongue.

Practise detachment from now on; practise it little by little, for a day will come sooner or later when you will have to give up all that you hold dear. Do not go on adding to the things which bind you to them. Bind yourself to the great liberator, God.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 15-10-1964

To describe the infinite aspects in terms of limited words and limited experience, is not possible.

The Maharishis who were well versed in the Vedhas and Manthras realised that it is not possible to explain and describe the aspects of Brahman in terms of words, and they were only indicating by their silence.

Shri Sathya Sai

36. Prick the bubble of pride

THE tongue that does not utter the name of God, the hand that knows no charity, the years of life that know no calm, talents that receive no reward, a life that has not garnered wisdom, a temple where there is no atmosphere of reverence, talk that does not communicate knowledge--all these are of no worth.

Dr. Raamakrishna Rao spoke of the teachings of Raamaanujaachaarya and of the basic principles of prapathi, which is another word for sharanaagathi--surrender of the individual will to the Supreme Will. He also spoke of the need for an attitude of gratitude to the Lord for this human existence He has vouchsafed; and for the many chances given for acquiring enlightenment.

Gratitude is a quality that is fast disappearing in human relations; it is a heinous sin to neglect this obligation.

The Shaasthry elaborated on the assurance given in the Geetha, Yogakshemam Vahaamyaham.

This does not mean that the Lord will ensure for you sukham and santhosha (happiness and joy)-

--but, it means that the Lord will endow you with steady unshakable peace, inner equanimity.

Yoga means the acquisition of that which you do not have and kshema means the preservation of that which you have acquired. So the assurance means that the Lord will ensure that you acquire the shaanthi that you do not have and create conditions under which you can preserve that shaanthi. For the greatest happiness is shaanthi, inner peace. How do you get it? By knowing that you are the Aathma, which has no birth or death, no joy or grief, no up and no down.

Just as underground water is the sustenance of all trees, the Aathma is the underlying source of all the aanandha that the jeevi experiences. You bring that subterranean water up by the process of boring; steady hitting, digging, thumping through a pipe, which contains and directs the drill.

The borers have to take care that they do not allow air to go into the pipe; for, then the drilling cannot succeed. So too in the japam that you do, the drilling the Raam, Raam, Raam, you must be very careful not to allow vishayavaasana (attachment to worldly objects) to enter and interfere with the smooth working of the chill. If you do, the Aathma cannot be experienced.

Paths of devotion and knowledge Underground water is perennial; it will not dry up. The pleasure one gets through physical, mental and intellectual pursuits is transitory. Good deeds may grant heaven; but, that too is a temporary habitation, from where man has to journey down to earth, to live his life again. It is like the short term an M.L.A. gets to bask in public fame, earned by the votes cast in his favour; when the term is over, he becomes a beggar once again, begging for votes, to win again the lost status. He starts shouting the same slogans for getting popular applause.

Many people say that Bhakthi Maarga (path of devotion) is much easier than Jnaana Maarga (path of spiritual knowledge); but jnaana is easier. For, it comes in a flash to those who can just sit quiet for a few minutes and analyse themselves. A car moves on its four wheels, but the person who drives it is inside it, not outside. So, also, drive the intellect, the mind, the senses from inside; do not try to guide them from outside. Board the train of saalokya; that is to say, of constant thought of Godhead; it will take you to the station, saameepya, that is to say, nearness to God; then the next halt is saaruupya, where you earn divine attributes; finally, you reach the terminus, saavyuja, when the individual Aathma is experienced as but a wave of the ocean of Paramaathma.

How to destroy the mind?

You must reach the terminus where ignorance dies and jnaana is born; then, there is no more journey. Along the route, there are many pseudo-terminii which tantalise you; but, you would not give up the journey until you reach the real one. Calumny, scandal, loss, dishonour, poverty, distress, fame, pomp, triumph---all these call on you to alight; but you should stick fast to the seat and never give up.

Do not seek more and more sukham; seek more and more jnaanam. The mind is a fertile field for ignorance. Wipe out all traces of the mind (Mano Naasanam)---that is the task of the jnaani (man of realisation). How to destroy the mind? It is easy once you know what it is. The mind is stuffed with desire. It is a ball filled with air, like a football. Puncture it and it will not move from place to place. Nirvaana means, without air. In a square filled with water from an irrigation canal, it appears square; if the field is circular or oblong or rectangular or triangular, the sheet of water that fills it will have same geometrical shape. The mind takes on the form of the desire that fills it. To take another example, it is like a piece of cloth, the warp and the woof being the yam of desire. The texture, the colour, the durability, the feel, the shine of the cloth will depend upon the desire that constitutes the warp and the woof. Remove the yarn, the warp and the woof, one by one---the cloth disappears. That is the technique of mano naasanam (destroying the mind):

Terrible nature of "desire"

Korike (wish) is the elder brother of the mirage. You pursue it and suffer. It enters the consciousness softly, silently; it holds out prospects of pleasure and joy; it draws fine pictures in attractive colours; it gains a foothold, strikes root; then, it strangles, swamps and destroys relentlessly, unintermittently. That is the terrible nature.

Raamakrishna Rao gave the instance of Yamunaachaarya conquering the nefarious hold of desire. Be a hero like him. If you entertain desire, you will lose contentment and peace.

In the Thretha Yuga (Silver Age), there was a king called Vijaya ruling over his empire from the city of Chandhragopaalapuram. He was steadfast in the observance of truth, morality and peace.

He was known far and wide for his deep sympathy with the poor and distressed. He was overcome with desire to widen his sway and conquer the border regions. His spiritual teacher, Garga, permitted him to essay this adventure, for he knew that he would not overstep the limits laid down by the scriptures. He even initiated him into a manthra, which would gain for him superhuman help. When the manthra (sacred formula) was mastered, Vijaya repeated it, and lo.

Hanumaan, Jaambavan and Sugreeva appeared before him, with all their attendants, demanding to be told what he wanted them to do! He told them that his desire was to conquer the four quarters and that he could not rest until that wish was fulfilled.

Hanumaan and others told him:

"That is impossible; go back home. That is possible only in Dwaapara Yuga (Bronze Age)!" So, he returned to his palace and died, to be born again as Arjuna.

Arjuna's encounter with Hanumaan

When Arjuna went South on this conquering expedition, on his coming to Raamasethu, where Raama has built the bridge to go over to Lanka, he was filled with pride at his unrivalled skill with the bow-, he felt that he was superior even to Raama, for Raama had piled it up laboriously, stone upon stone. Arjuna said rather aloud "If I were he, I would have twanged my bow and built an arch of arrows across the sea over which the army could have marched safely along."

Hanumaan surprised him by presenting himself before him with a grin, which Arjuna felt made him even uglier. He challenged him to build one, so that at least one monkey could walk across, not to speak of the vast host. Arjuna shot arrows one after the other and they got entangled one with the other in such strong combinations that a huge structure was formed, bridging India and Lanka. Hanumaan declared that it was too fragile; Arjuna agreed to immolate himself if the bridge could not stand his weight. Then, Hanumaan walked a few paces on the bridge, it crumpled into bits!

True to his word, Arjuna lit a fire and was about to expiate for the sin of pride that made him feel superior to Raama, when Krishna appeared and asked the reason, as if He did not know! In fact, that was the very reason why He appeared! When He was told of the wager and the failure of Arjuna, He declared that any agreement can be valid only when it was made before a witness.

How could the parties be trusted, since it was in their interest to modify the conditions to their advantage?

So, He wanted the bridge to be built again and Hanumaan to break it again. It was done and Hanumaan walked on it as before; but, try as he might with all his might the bridge was absolutely intact! Hanumaan jumped on it, but not a dent was caused. The secret was, Krishna was supporting the bridge with His back wherever Hanumaan's steps were placed, the same back that held the Mandhara Mountain in position, during the epochmaking churning of the ocean of milk by the gods and the demons. This was revealed to both Arjuna and Hanumaan, by the bleeding that was evident on Krishna's back! The Lord interceded to save the honour of His bhaktha!

Hanumaan's offer of help to Arjuna

Arjuna's pride was humbled; he fell at the feet of Hanumaan and prayed that he must help him win the battle. Hanumaan agreed to be present on the flag of Arjuna's chariot, shedding his halo over the warrior within. That was how the Thretha yuga wish was fulfilled and the Thretha yuga manthra proved effective.

This relationship with the past is beyond the reach of human investigation. You can feel that you are inheritors of a long past, of a long history. You may not remember the incidents of a particular day ten years ago; but that does not mean that you were not alive that day. So too you may not recall what happened in the previous life or the life previous to that; but there is no doubt that you had those lives. If you eructate now, you will get the flavour of the food that you have consumed. This life is the eructation of the last one, which you consumed. The flavour of this is an indication of that.

A mother holds a child that has soiled its shirt and puts on it a new one; death is the removal of the soiled shirt and birth, the putting on of the fresh one. Let the mother do her will; be a child in her hands. Have full faith in her love and wisdom. Be an instrument; submerge your will in the Will of the Lord. That will save you from worry and pain. Do not lose seeing people who have gone astray; it will be like judging rain water to be dirty, seeing a stagnant pool. Rain water is pure; it is the soil that soils it. God is in you and in all else. I have been teaching people irrespective of age and circumstance. Years ago, there were no eating houses and the hundreds who came to this place had to be fed by Karnam Subbamma, who delighted in feeding them herself. The water in the big vessel on her hearth was always boiling and she had only to pour the washed rice grains into it in order to get a meal ready at short notice. She did this tirelessly for years; many came and learnt. Those who kept themselves at a distance then, are pining now for lost chances. That will be the fate of all who fall in faith, in spite of experiences that confirm and foster it.

Vaasudhevas sarvamidham does not mean that all this is just Krishna, the son of Vaasudheva. It means that all this is God, by whatever name He is known. So, if you decry any one, you are decrying God, that is, His real core. If you become aware of the God in you and the God in all else, there is nothing to equal the peace and joy that you get. I bless you that you may attain that bliss.

37. Keep the flag flying

[In the poem that Baaba composed impromptu and sang before commencing His speech, He announced Himself as Shri Naatha, Loka Naatha and Anaatha Naatha (Lord of Lakshmi, of the world and of the helpless), the same He, who saved the Gajendhra, the boy Dhruva, the poor Kuchela and the helpless Prahlaadha!]

THE hearts of bhakthas gathered here are all blossoming now like lotuses when the sun rises, for they believe this is the day when the Lord was born in human form. I may tell them that every day is Janmotasavam, a Brahmothsavam, an Aanandhotsavam (different kinds of festivals), at Puttaparthi; as well as wherever bhakthas are. The Niraakaara (the Formless) comes in Naraakaara (form of man) when the virtue of the good and the vice of the wicked reach a certain stage. Prahlaadha's devotion and his father's disregard both had to ripen before Narasimha avathaara could take place. To know the truth of the avathaar, the saadhaka must culture the mind, as the ryot does the field. He has to clear the field of thorny undergrowth, wild creepers and tenuous roots. He has to plough the land, water it and sow the seeds well. He has to guard the seedlings and tender plants from insect pests as well as from the depredations of goats and cattle; he has to put up a fence all round. So too, egoism, pride and greed have to be removed from the heart; sathya, japa, dhyana (truth, repetition of the Lord's name and meditation), form the ploughing and the levelling; prema is the water that has to soak into the t:eld and make it soft and rich; naama is the seed and bhakthi is the sprout; kaama and krodha are the cattle and the fence is discipline; aanandha is the harvest. Knowledge is the final stage of karma. Of course, you will get faith in God only when you have yourselves discovered that the universe must have a creator, a protector, an agency for both evolution and involution or a power that exercises all these three functions. To grasp that idea, the heart must be pure, the mind must be clear. For this, karma is very important. The Karmakaanda (section dealing with rituals) in the Vedhas is the major part of the shruthi, for jnaana is but the final stage of karma. The army will have many soldiers but only just a handful of officers; so too, karmas are many, and they all obey the inaani. Of the hundred parts of the Vedhas, 80 will be karma, 16 upaasana and 4 inaana. Karma has to be done for educating the impulses and training the feelings. Then, you develop the attitude of upaasana, of humility before the great unknown, and finally, you realise that the only reality is you, which is the same as He.

You hear nowadays of equality (Samaanathwa), of each being equal to the rest. This is wrong notion, for we find the parents and children differently equipped; when one is happy, the other is miserable; there is no equality in hunger or joy. Of course all are equally entitled to love and sympathy, and to the grace of God. All are entitled to the medicines in the hospital; but what is given to one should not be given to another. There can be no equality in the doling out of medicine! Each deserves the medicine that will cure him of his illness.

I know that this struggle in the name of equality is only one of the ways in which man is trying to get aanandha. In almost all parts of the world, man is today pursuing many such short-cuts and wrong paths of achieve aanandha. But let Me tell you, without reforming conduct, daily behaviour, the little acts of daily life, aanandha will be beyond reach.

I consider pravarthna

(practice), as essential.

A man or an institution is to be judged by his or its integrity, whether acts are according to the principles professed. The mind, the body, the word---all three must work in unison. By such disciplined karma the senses will be sublimated and prashaanthi won; then, out of this prashaanthi will arise prakaanthi (the great light), and from that will emerge Param-iyothi (the suprasplendour or illumination). That illumination will reveal

Param-aathma (the Oversoul), the Universal.

Now, I am hoisting on this Prashaanthi Nilayam the Prashaanthi Hag, according to the convention that has grown here, like the conventions in the material plane. The flag represents the spiritual discipline I have laid down for you: conquest of kaama and krodha, achievement of prema and the practice of japa yoga, leading to the blossoming of the lotus of the heart and the emergence of the iyothi of inaana therein. When I hoist it over the Nilayam, you should convert your hearts into Prashaanthi Nilayams and hoist the flag there too, and keep it flying.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1964

38. Karma and karuna

[After the song which Baaba opened His discourse, He thrilled every one by singing the two lines from the Bhagavadh Geetha, which declare "Yadaa yadaa hi dharmasya glaanir bhavathi, Bhaaratha, Abhyuththaanam adharmasya tadh aathmaanam srujaamyaham," and adding

"Parithraanaaya saadhuunaam, vinaasaayacha dhushkrutaam, dharma samsthaapanaarthaaya sambhavaami yuge yuge." "Whenever dharma declines, I restore it and put down the forces which cause the decline, by assuming a form" and "I am born again and again in every crisis in order to protect the good, punish the wicked and restore dharma." He began His discourse after this announcement of His Identity with the source of all avathaars].

EVERYONE is now seeking comfort and pleasure; that is the be-all and end-all. If you tell a man that he can eat whatever he likes and as much as he likes, he is delighted; if you add that he might develop, as a consequence, some illness or other, he will treat you as an enemy. No regimen or control is popular. But strength is derived only from control, from restraint, from regulation. Man becomes tough and capable of endurance only if he welcomes hardships.

Struggle, and you get the strength to succeed. Seek the basis for the seen, in the unseen. The tall skyscraper has a deep base reaching into the earth. This seen world has, as its base, the unseen Paramaathma; your body is but the vehicle through which you can search, investigate, and discover that base.

There is no one fully good

The body is the instrument for doing karma; the Shaasthry said that buddhi (intellect) is shaped by karma ---"Buddhi karmaanusaarini"; japa and dhyana will purify the buddhi and make it an instrument for self-realisation and for winning grace. The warmth of divine grace will melt all ajnaana away; you can win it by engaging yourself in good deeds. Do the karma for which you are best fitted, which is your swadharma (one's duties that accord with one's nature); do it without complaint, without any malingering. That is the principle of varnaashrama dharma (duties of social groups and stages of life).

India was the home of peace and prosperity when this was followed by rich and poor alike; but, now, the land is plunged in darkness and confusion. Therefore, another avathaar has come, for teaching people of dharma they have forgotten. Raama, Krishna and other avathaars had to kill one or more individuals, who could be identified as enemies of the dharmic way of life, and thus restore the practice of virtue. But, now, there is no one fully good, and so, who deserves the protection of God? All are tainted by wickedness, and so, who will survive, if the avathaar decides to uproot?

Therefore, I have to correct the buddhi, by various means; I have to counsel, help, command, condemn and standby as friend and well-wisher to all, so that they may give up evil propensities and recognising the straight 'path, tread it and reach the goal. I have to reveal to the people the worth of the Vedhas, the Shaasthras and the scriptural texts, which lay down the norms.

The easiest path to self-realisation is the surrender of the ego, sharanaagathi. Arjuna surrendered and so, the war in which he was engaged was transformed into a yajna, a spiritual exercise!
Daksha performed a yajna; but he did not surrender; he was so full of egoism that he slighted God! So, his yajna was transformed into a war reeking with hate. Do not pit your tiny ego against the Almighty; leave it to His Will and you will have lasting peace.

Grace can countermand all effects of karma You might say that the karma of the previous birth has to be consumed in this birth and that no amount of grace can save man from that. Evidently, some one has taught you to believe so. But I assure you, you need not suffer from karma like that. When a severe pain torments you, the doctor gives you a morphine injection and you do not feel the pain, though it is there in the body.
Grace is like the morphine; the pain is not felt, though you go through it! Grace takes away the malignty of the karma which you have to undergo.
You know there are dated drugs, which are declared ineffective after a certain date; well, the effect of karma is rendered null, though the account is there and has to be rendered! Or, the Lord can save man completely from the consequences, as was done by Me to the bhaktha whose paralytic stroke and heart attacks I took over some months ago, in the Gurupoornima week! It is wrong to say the "Lalaatha likhitham" (what is written on the forehead, i.e. fate) cannot be wiped out; that what one has earned in previous births must be consumed in this birth. Grace can countermand all that; nothing can stand in its way. It is the grace of the "Almighty," remember.

Of the avathaars, some are for a definite limited purpose like Vaamana or Narasimha. They are just manifestations, to counter some particular evils. They are not full-fledged, long-lasting, expansive, like Raama and Krishna. The Lord has no hate in His composition; He is all mercy.
That is why Krishna proceeded to the Kaurava court, as a messenger of peace, with compromise proposals. He showed man how patient he should be in spite of provocations, how self-control wins in the end.
God has no favourites or rivals Krishna demonstrated that if you practise the saadhana of the constant presence of God, you are bound to achieve victory. Take Him as the charioteer; He will steer you through the heaviest odds. He has no favourites or rivals. Like fire, He spreads warmth to all who are near Him. If you do not feel the warmth, do not blame Him: blame yourself that you are far from Him. Look at Bheeshma! He prayed to the very Krishna who had vowed to kill him; he prayed that Krishna should grant him a vision of His divine splendour! That is true bhakthi, real inaana! He had the faith, the vision, and Krishna blessed him.
Hiranyakashipu said, 'He is nowhere' and so, He was nowhere for him; Prahlaadha asserted 'He is everywhere,' and He appeared from the pillar to prove him true.
God did not have to run into the pillar in order to come out of it, to reply to the challenge of the father. He was there all along, just as in everything else. He had only to make Himself visible!
I too am like that; if you accept Me and say yes, I too respond and say S S S! If you deny and say, no, I also echo, no. Come, examine, experience and have faith; that is the method of utilising Me.
Do not demean your talents Dakshinamurthy taught his disciples by his silence, Shaasthry said.
Yes; what he did was to make the disciples rely on their own intelligence. Do not demean your talents; when you dive deep into yourselves, you can discover the source of all strength.
Ants creeping over a rock, millions of them, can carve a deep groove along their path. The minute feet of the ant have that power. You might have seen on the walls around the village wells, hollows produced on granite slabs by the continuous placing of water pots! The pots are made of mud, but, they erase even the hardest granite over the years and cause the hollows where they rest!
The Aathma-swaruupam

(embodiment of Self) is not alpa-swaruupam (an insignificant embodiment)! The aathma is not anaemic. It is a powerful dynamo, capable of generating enormous power. The guru (spiritual teacher) shows you the guri (goal); but, you must generate the power yourself, by your own saadhana (spiritual effort).

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 23-11-1964, 8 p.m.

[Speech delivered after the offering of flower-garlands by devotees continuously at one sitting, from 10-30 a.m. till 7-30 p.m.]

39. Through mirth and moan

The revered old man who spoke of the upaasana of Hanumaan referred to the Ashtottthara Sathanaama (the 108 names) of Aanjaneya. I wonder how many of you know the significance of that number 108. Why is it that the strings of the names of the gods are always 108? They could as well be 110 or 112 or 50 or 120, isn't it? All such mystic numbers have a deep meaning. Man breathes at the rate of 900 per hour, 21,600 times per day, 10,800 during daytime. With every breath, man is supposed to repeat Soham, "I am He," and so, the figure 216 and its half 108 has a deep significance. It is also 9 times 12, 9 being the number indicative Of Brahman, since it is always 9, however many times you may multiply it ($9 \times 12 = 108$, $1 + 8 = 9$, $9 \times 9 = 81$, $8 + 1 = 9$) and 12 is the number of the Sun; also, the Sun moves through 12 raasis or points, each raasi representing one month.

Just as 9 is the symbol of Brahman, 8 is the number of Maayaa. For, multiples of 8 go on diminishing in total value, instead of remaining the same or increasing, (2 times 8 is 16 which adds up to 7; 3 times 8 is 24 and so, the total has come down to 6; 4 times 8 is 32 which adds up to 5 and 5 times 8 is 40 adding up to only 4! 6 times 8 is 48, that is, 12 adding to 3. And 7 times

8 adds up to 2. 8 times 8 is 64 and so, only 1). This decrease in value is the best symbol of Maayaa. Every number has many such valuable inner meanings. It is an interesting subject. You must investigate and reason out, not laugh cynically and condemn. If you stand on the seashore and hesitate to dive into the waters, you cannot secure pearls.

The message of the Vedhas

One bhaktha sings, "O Krishna! You are dark; the 'Kalindi deeps' in the Yamuna river into which you have descended is also dark with rain clouds; my eyeball is dark; my heart too is darkened with dark thoughts. How then can I discover You? Your secret is beyond me; your majesty is ever receding before my imagination." Now, the dark colour of the Lord is the colour of the deep sea and the deep sky. It signifies the fathomless, unfathomable. What has to be changed is the heart, the intelligence. Above all, do not be traitors to yourselves. If you say one thing and do another, your conscience will itself condemn you as a cheat. You are your own witness. Not all the stones which Raama trod on were converted into humans; only one stone changed into Ahalya for, repentance and penance had elevated it to that status.

Nothing ever is born without the will of God, nothing ever happens without His will; that is the message of the Vedhas; understand the Vedhas well and this lesson will be instilled into you.

Fleas drink only the blood of the cow; but men draw from her the sweet and nourishing milk. So, learn from the Vedhas the potency of the Will of the Lord. Once you are fixed in that faith, you will be able to brave all dangers. You complain that God is invisible; but the fault is yours, not to recognise God in all His various manifestations. You are yourself "manifestation of God." But you do not know it; you call yourself a sinner, worm born in sin, wallowing in sin, essentially wicked. But, let some one, who takes you to your word, call you, "Hello sinner!" you resent it'

Why? Because your real nature is purity, peace, joy. Manas, buddhi, chiththam, ahamkaaram, indhriya (mind, intellect, thought, egoism and senses)--these are like the bricks, iron rods, cement, wood, etc., that go to make up a house for the Aathma to live in. They are jewels that the Aathma wears. They are not you; they are only incidental. The real you is the Aathma. This can be learnt only by constant meditation, by moving in good company, by listening to the talks of realised men, by following some prescribed course of discipline. That is why I lay so much emphasis on discipline.

The co-operative commonwealth

The Varnaashrama (social groups and stages of life) disciplines, to which the Shaasthry referred, is very useful in this field. Varna or what is called caste, is a convenient arrangement for the conduct of worldly affairs; the aashramas or the stages of life are roots of supra-worldly joy. The four varnas are universal; they can be found in any country. The leaders of thought are the Brahmins; the fighters carrying arms are the Kshathriyas; the entrepreneurs and the business executives are the Vaishyas; the busy producers and labourers are the Suudhras.

Whether head or heels, it is the same blood that circulates through each; it is the same body which claims them as limbs. Each limb has to perform its task, the task for which it has specialised. You cannot walk on your head or think with the feet. It is a co-operative commonwealth, the body as well as the body-politic. The eye is the master of sight; the ear cannot question the authority of the eye, nor the eye that of the ear about sound, or the ear that of the tongue so far as the taste is concerned. Each is the master in its own field. The aashramas are also steps towards the attainment of detachment and fulfilment. They ensure experience and the unfoldment of personality. God cannot be bamboozled. Each varna and aashrama has its own rules, regulations and restrictions. A bullock cart cannot move on rails nor a locomotive on the road. Each type of vehicle has its own type of road. But, all move forward and reach the goal in their own good time. When the heart is pure, the Lord is revealed. He is the judge; He cannot be bamboozled. The doctor may assure you that you have no fever, but the thermometer cannot lie. The doctor may say so to save you from panic, but the thermometer declares the truth. God knows and God will deal with you as you deserve. Have the faith. Repent for all wrongs done and resolve not to repeat the mistake; then God will extend His grace.

You feel that there is something behind and beyond all this fleeting fantasy; something that persists through all the successes and defeats, all the tears and smiles, all this mirth and moan; but, you are unable to grasp it and realise that it is the same entity that underlies the entire universe. You are one with most distant star and the least little blade of grass. You shine as dew on the petal of the rose; you swing from star to star; you are part and parcel of all this manifestation. The Shaasthras teach you this truth through many a parable and story, and even directly, supported by the experience of sages and mystics.

Hanumaan may have the form of an ape; but that is simply the outer casement, the upaadhi. The Lord is the very breath of Hanumaan: every hair-end of his was echoing with Raamanaama.

All forms of divinity are equally sweet

Through dhyana and upaasana, you can be aware of yourselves as all this. Mud existed before plates and pots; pots and plates are mud; mud there will be when plates and pots are no more.

The plate and the pot must be aware of their being always mud; that, in other words, is selfrealisation.

When that is achieved, wherever your eyes are cast, you find yourself; wherever your attention is directed, you find your reflection. Begin to feel for it now, this very moment.

Do not hold japam and dhyaanam as the games of 'cracks'; hold fast to them, for they alone can save you from ruin. Offer the Lord, not the flowers got in exchange for a few paise from the shop, but the fragrant flowers of your own virtues. Let tears of joy be the holy water with which you seek to wash the feet of the Lord. Let your upaasana dhevatha (deity being worshipped) be

A anjaneya as in the case of this Shaasthry, or any other form; treat that dhevatha as comprising all forms of divinity; do not argue that one form is less and another is more; all are equally sweet.

Seek to identify yourself with some grand and glorious Entity, for all Grandeur and all Glory is

His ultimately,

Prashanthi Nilayam, 25-11-1964

40. Naama and naami

It appears as if, in this Bhaagavatha Bhaktha Samaajam, they impose restrictions on all, except Myself! For, they warned all speakers so far to stop early, and now they ask Me to take as much time as I please! Of course, some 60 members of the Samaajam have come here and each of them wishes to partake in the three-day programme, which is possible only when severe restrictions are insisted upon the length of their speeches and musical recitals. They are masters in their own fields and endowed with bhakthi and shraddha; so I feel that they must be given longer time in the coming years when they would be here.

Man suffers from two types of agony; the first, which can be allayed through the intercession of others and the second, which can be allayed only by the individual's own effort. Hunger and thirst can be overcome only when the individual eats or drinks; however much others may eat, hunger will not abate even an iota. If your wife or father or mother or son or brother offers to take an injection on your behalf, can your illness be cured thereby?

The hunger of the spirit, the illness of inner man is also the same. You must help yourself. The illness has come due to some excess, some infection, some breach of rules. The infection is produced by the viruses of kaama, krodha, lobha, moha, madha and maathsarya (desire, anger, greed, delusion, pride, jealousy). They do not allow your divinity to shine forth; they cause discontent, worry, grief and pain. You can brave them only by manifesting your inner strength. Do not yield to them; fight them with faith that you are unconquerable. Give up the idea that you are the body. How did this fatal ignorance enter into your makeup? Well, there was once a huge mirror inside a room in a rural home. They wanted to take it out, but the door was found too narrow and too short! Some suggested that the wall be broken open while others said that the mirror itself be cut into two! How did they place it in this room, one shrewd villager asked. Yes, how did it get in? If they only knew that, they could manage to take it out too. Before the room was ready, the mirror had got in. So too, ere this body was formed, ignorance had established itself; it is a product of the sloth of previous lives. Do not worry about the house, and the mirror will cease to be a problem. Give up the idea that you are the body and ignorance will vanish. You can see yourself in the light. The members of the Samaajam enabled you to listen to very valuable discourses and inspiring Harikathas, which made you know many facets of the Raamaayana, Bhaagavatha, the Puraanas, the Vedhas and Shaasthras. You heard from them that Raama was "Vigrahavaan-dharmah" (Dharma embodied), that Krishna was "Leelaamaanusha vigraha" (sporting in human form), but, how does that affect you? Have you felt that you too are kith and kin of Raama and Krishna, that every maanava (human) can be a Maadhava, that every nara (man) can be a Naaraayana? Unless you adhere a little to Raama dharma, how can you claim to be a bhaktha of Raama? Unless you evince a little of the prema that Krishna had, how can you pride yourself on being a Krishna-bhaktha? Do not be different from your ideal; approach it as close as you can. You must be as golden as the gold you idealise, though you may be a tiny jewel and He, a vast treasure. The Lord is Kavi and Vaalmeeki is also a Kavi; both create---one the loka (world) and the other, the slokha (verse). The bhaktha must form himself on the model of Bhagavaan; otherwise, he can lay no claim for saaruupya (sameness of the Form of the Lord). Maayaa is a false enchantress. Krishna-avathaara is a Sampuurna Avathaara, the Lord appearing with all the 16 kalas (distinctive marks); whereas Raama shared the kalas with other brothers. Raama appeared as if He was associated with gunas (qualities), or as having qualitative behaviour, whereas Krishna was above and beyond such. Krishna never prayed, even in the direst crisis! But, Raama does so, to Aadhithya (Sun God), for instance; the intent of that Avathaara was different. Krishna was unaffected by the gunas. His relationship with gopees was pure. A person like Dharmaraaja selected Him above all the sages and saints of the day for special worship at the Raajasuuya sacrifice. The best armour against the tendency to read gross meanings into the ledas of Krishna is Faith---faith in Krishna as the Lord. You can also remember that Krishna was a boy of seven, when the raasaleela (sportive dance) happened. King Pareekshith asked Sukha, the immaculate saint who extolled Krishna as God, the same question: How could the gopees attain moksha? Sukha replied: They knew that Krishna was the Lord and they regarded Him as God and no less. He also reminded Pareekshith that he himself owed his life to the divine touch of Krishna which changed him from a still-born child into a hefty baby. The miasma that makes you miss these points and drags your imagination into the mire is called Maayaa. Identify it as a false enchantress---that moment she will vanish and you are free. There was once a brahmin who passed through a forest on his way to a village, with a heavy load on his head. He could not carry it any further and there was no one in sight, except a chandaala (outcaste) youth, who offered to carry it for him only as far as the edge of the jungle, for as an outcaste, he was afraid to enter a village of the upper classes. The brahmin persuaded him to accompany him into the village itself; he advised him to pretend to be dumb and not answer any question put to him. At the village all went well, until the master of the house to which the brahmin had gone asked the outcaste to keep aside a pair of sandals. When he hesitated, the master chided the fellow, as was his wont: "Eh, you chandaala." As soon as he suspected that his identity was discovered, the chandaala fled! Maayaa too will do likewise.

Maayaa can be driven out

Maayaa can be recognised and driven out only when the mind is purified by prema and the avoidance of envy and hatred, born of egoism. No act done without love can be commended; there are many who come here, thousands in fact, year after year, sharing in the bhajana.

listening to discourses, lectures, and staying put exactly where they were when they first arrived.

Naama without bhaava (Godward inclination of the mind) seldom reaches the mark. The name of the Lord must be recited with awe and wonder, humility and reverence. The bow has to be drawn full before the arrow is released; then it will pierce the target. Feeling is the force that draws the string taut and makes the Naama reach the Naami (the bearer of the name).

The Lord is approachable by all; do not have envy towards others or feel that they are your rivals or your inferiors or even superiors; each has a place in His mansion.

Sathyabhaama suffered from envy and so she was never happy. Dhroupadhi had five husbands, but she was able to serve all impartially without envy and so Krishna was ever rushing to her rescue. Give your heart over to the Lord and move in society as a dedicated being; then, no harm can come to you. As a jeeva, you may be an individual; but, as Aathma, you are Vaasudheva, the Samashti (path of the Universal whole).

The gopees were sages in previous births

First save yourselves and then save others, or try to. Being yourselves caught by the wily slush, how can you pull another out? Stand firm and safe on hard dry land and then lend a helping hand to the man struggling in the mire. You may wear the ochre robe but the robe may hide an ogre!

You may advise others on yoga, but you may be full of toga (disease) yourself! Be sincere; talk only about your genuine experience; do not distort, exaggerate or falsify that experience,

Have the Aathmic experience; only then can you understand the Bhaagavatha and explain it to others. For example: the incident where Krishna carries away the clothes of the gopees. The gopees (cow-herd girls) were rishis (sages) in previous Avathaar periods; the vaanaras (monkeys) of Raama avathaara come again under special charter; so their hearts are pure and their motives holy. When the gopees pleaded, "Krishna! is it dharma for you to treat us thus?"

Krishna replied, "My act is not adharm; but yours is, for body-consciousness is against the highest spiritual dharma."

Vyaasa once asked some persons, who came to him for advice to cross the Yamuna near his ashram, to bring him milk and fruits and after eating his fill, he told them, "Well! If I have maintained my vow of fasting go now and the Yamuna will make way for you!" They said, "Then we are lost; for, we saw you eat your fill with the things we ourselves brought you." But,

Vyaasa said, "I did not eat them. I offered all to Krishna; I have no body-delusion. I am the Aathma dwelling in this body." His Aathma-consciousness was so well grounded that he could assert that he had not broken his vow!

World is changing but God is steady

What is realisation? The moment you see your own beauty and are so filled with it that you forget all else, you are free from all bonds. Known that you are all the beauty, all the glory, all the power, all the magnitude of the Universe. This Nature is but an infinitesimal fraction of His Glory; yet, you feel content with the pleasure it gives, the knowledge you gather about it, the wonder it reveals. The reflection of Shivam (auspiciousness) in the mirror of Prakrithi (Nature) is jeeva (individual being).

Look into the mirror and see your own image; you assert "That image within is mine; but, I am different." So too, the jeeva is Shiva but Shiva is not jeeva. The image of the Sun in the water shakes, though the Sun is steady, up above; that is the nature of water, not the Sun; so too Prakrithi is changing, but Shiva is steady, unchanging, ever the same. You do not believe that dreams indicate reality, because the dream is negated on waking.

When you get knowledge, the waking experiences will also be negated. Until then, you will take all this as real; after that, you will find that this has only relative value.

The drug has to be revised, when the disease takes a turn. So, I shall tell you one more point before I close. We hear of many things and see many things. Man fills these with his own illusion and garnishes or tarnishes each thing with that illusion. A baby is born and dies within two hours or two months. If it survives and dies when it is 16 or 18 years old, the pain is greater, for the sense of "mine" has deepened its roots, through association and the development of hopeful attachment. No one is worried if the neighbour's son dies. This is due to the egoism and exaggerated attachment. Give each problem the attention it deserves; but do not allow it to overpower you. Anxiety will not solve any difficulty; coolness comes from detachment. Above all, believe in God and the efficacy of prayer; the Lord has said that he who does good, thinks good and speaks good will not come to harm. That is the way to get Equanimity, Shaanthi. You have designed the chains that bind you. Some of you may imagine that it is a source of joy for the Lord to take a human form. If you are in this state, you will not feel so. I am always aware of the future, the past as well as the present of every one of you. So, I am not moved so much by pity. Not that I am hard-hearted, or that I have no dhaya (pity). If you bolt the doors fast, how can the rays of My Grace be available to you? "Swaami" you cry, "I have no eyes; I am yearning to see you. Won't your heart melt at my plight?" Of course, this pitiable condition melts your hearts; will it not melt Mine? But, since I know the past, the background, My reaction is different. If only you knew, you too will react differently. It is the consequence of evil, deliberately done in previous births, and so, I have to allow the suffering to continue, modified, often by some little compensation. I do not cause either joy or grief; you are the designer of both the chains that bind you. Remove the weight from your head by transferring all burdens to the Lord; leave everything to His Will, His law. Feed your mind with sweet and wholesome food--

Sathsangha,
Sathpravarthana, Sarveshwara-chintha (company of the holy, speaking of God, thinking of the Lord of the Universe); then you are full of joy. I am of the nature of Bliss (Aanandhaswaruupa); come and take Aanandha from Me and returning to your avocations, dwell on that Aanandha and be full of Shaanthi.
Prashaanthi Nilayam, 26-11-1964
The traits of Raavana's lust, of Shishupaala's pride, of Kamsa's hate, of Hiranyaaksha's envy are tainting every human heart. Only the discipline of spirit through Japam and Dhyaanam can quench the flames and sooth the conflagration.

41. Swinging from yes to no
THE dharma that is the heritage of India is the staff of life for all men; it is the backbone of morality and well-being. It is the nectar which can confer immortality. Others may in their ignorance laugh at Indians for taking a stone to be God, but, what they do is to realise even the stone as God. It is transformed into God, an act which is a grand victory. The highest energies of man in this land are used for conquering death, while in other countries, they are misused in the diabolic attempt to make weapons of mass destruction. People here offer themselves to Mrithyunijaya (Shiva, the conquerer of death); those others fall at the feet of mrithyu (death)!

Others are content with tinsel and trinkets; in India, people are taught to dive deep, and win the pear, and not wander on the sandy shore, collecting shells. But, it is a pity that here, too, the infection is spreading and people are fast losing all sense of values and running after vanities and inanities. People attach more value to the many and they forget the One; they do not seek the One Persistent Truth; they follow the ever-changing falsehood and so, naturally, fall into grief and resentment. Take the simple rite of namaskaaram--the folded palms with which you greet reverentially elders and others. What does it signify, that gesture? The right palm is Thath (that entity, the unseen base, the other) and the left palm is Thwam (the I, the separate, the individualised, the thing that feels limited, alone, apart). When the two palms are brought together and kept in contact, the One-ness of that and this, of all that is outside you, and all that is in you, is emphasised and demonstrated: Aham-Brahmaasmi (I am Brahman), in fact. What greater and grander greeting can human aspiration discover and prescribe? You greet the other with as much joy as you would greet yourself; no man loves another more than himself; all are loved for the sake of the self. Or, consider another interpretation of this act of folding the palms. The five fingers of the right hand are the five karmendhriyas (organs of action), the five of the left are the five inaanendhriyas (organs of perception); they are together ten, dedicated to sage or guru or elder to be used for his service or at his bidding. That is the surrender which is called Sharanaagathi, the same that Hanumaan practised. Principle of idol worship

Take the case of the Bhagavadh Geetha, to which reference was made. When and where was it taught? On the battlefield, in the midst of the opposing forces, to solve a mental crisis. It is when such crises affect man that the Lord starts His mission of instruction. For those who have realised the goal, there is no need; for those who have known neither goal nor path, neither thirst nor yearning, it is of no use. It is only to those who are afflicted by doubt, swinging from yes to no, that instruction will be useful. A mental crisis is solved by the word of God.

Again, the worship of idols has to be looked upon as but the worship of the Formless. Water or milk has no form as such; they assume the form of vessel which contains it, is it not? Take milk in a cup or a flask, or a kettle or jug or mug, it assumes those forms. So also the form of Krishna is the form of a vessel in which you fill the formless entity; the form of Raama, Shiva, Linga, Chaamundeshwari, Ganesha--all are forms of vessels in which, according to your fancy, you take the Formless, Unpicturable! The Naama is the nectar, the Naami is the cup, the idol.

Story of crow-demon and its meaning

Take the story which the Bhaagavathar related just now: the story of Kaakaasura, the crowdemon, that wounded Seetha when Raama was sleeping on her lap, when Seetha was there helpless to ward him off. What happened to him? Raama made him and all his race one-eyed; the one eye-ball rolls from the right to the left and from left to right so that he may see this side and that. The meaning is that if you crave for Seetha (Prakrithi, the pleasing, the objective world) you cannot get a perfect picture, a synoptic vision; you become one-eyed, warped, defective.

Again, the Bhaagavathar who gave the musical discourse on Santh Raamadaasa described how a vimaana (aerial chariot) came down from the skies to carry the saint to heaven, when his earthly career was over. The word vimaana does not mean an aerial chariot, as Bhaagavathars describe it; it has a deeper and truer meaning. It means that a person who has given up maana (pride or egoism), ascends to Heaven, that is all. Or else, consider this: Vi means a bird, maana means measure, dimension. So, the idea of going in a vimaana means that the soul moves through the infinite, like a bird through the sky, unopposed. It has gained freedom.

You heard the stories of the lives of Saints Thyaagaraaja and Naamadheva, described by members of this Samaajam. I hope you have learnt the lesson of prema, of Vishwaprema (Universal Love), that they conveyed. Imagine the prema of the gopees. One noon, Krishna stealthily entered the house of a cowherd and drank all the milk in the pot. The gopee discovered

Him and when she admonished Him, Krishna took to His heels; when the gopee saw Him running over the hard cobble-stones of the street she shed tears of contrition. Those lotus feet must pain much, she felt, and wept. "O, what a great sinner I am!" she wailed. Krishna will make the wickedest heart melt in repentance. He is Premaswaruupa and Shaanthiswaruupa (of the embodiment of Love and Peace) and so He makes every heart sprout into prema and shaanthi.

Withdraw into yourself like a tortoise

His prattle, His pranks, His innocent tricks were all-conquering. He gave the gopees a heap of bother and a heap of joy. That was the thapas (penance) for them; the bother was anugraham (favour); the joy was prasaadham (grace). You cannot have only one. Bhadhrum was reading from some piece of paper, on one side of which he had written the poems he hastily composed on Me this afternoon. The other side of that paper contained some scribbles, but he could not avoid bringing those also here. You cannot bring just one side of the paper, the side that you want; you have to bring the other side too though you may not like it. Do not get puffed up with pride when you succeed; do not get punctured when you fail. Be like the tortoise that is able to withdraw its feet under its shell; withdraw into yourself the outgoing senses and be happy in the contemplation of your reality. The Lord took the Tortoise Avathaara because it represents the true saadhaka. Be also like the swan, which on coming up from the lake, gives a vigorous shake to its wings, a shake which scatters the waterdrops off; so too, the saadhaka must shake off the attachments that are likely to grow when the world impinges on him. Three friends you earn in this life Mere scholarship is of no use; it results only in swelled heads.

Vedhaantha, really practised, makes you fearless, like the lion in the forest. You roar and they flee in terror. The Brahma thathwam (Reality of the Supreme Being) expounded in Vedhaantha will make you master of the universe. So, do not attach yourself too much to this body or to the things that bring comfort to it.

You earn three friends in this life.

The first: The riches you accumulate, which refuse to come with you when you move out of this life.

The second: Kith and kin who accompany your body up to the burial ground or cremation-ghat.

The third: The merit and demerit you have earned, which accompany you to the last.

Sleep inside the mosquito curtain; the insects can do no harm; so also, do not allow the insects of kaama, krodha, etc., to harm you. Get inside the curtain of saadhana while you are in the world.

Be in the world, but do not let the world into you. That is the sign of viveka (discrimination).

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 27-11-1964

42. Life's balance sheet

THE opening of this Shrinivasa cloth market is just an excuse for My coming to Kurnool and meeting all of you, including the two ministers, Dr. Lakshminarasiah and Alapathy Venkataaraamiah. Life itself is a market, where giving and taking, bargaining and speculating are part of the game. Life has its ups and downs, its profits and losses, its balance sheets and disappointments, its joys and sorrows. But the giving of bhakthi (devotion to God) in exchange for mukthi (liberation) is the most profitable business of all; and I am interested in telling you about that only.

Bhakthi is not simply the worship of the Lord; it is much more than that. Primarily it is the control of the senses; for, when life is offered as worship, the senses do not run after transient things. They can be thus controlled, for man is not a weak animal; he is endowed with mighty spiritual power and he can learn to use it; he can tap this power through prayer, which brings down Grace to fill the reservoir of his heart. Man tames the lion and the elephant to obey his call; can he not tame his emotions and passions? Make your strength evident in the face of hardships; when all goes well, you become soft, the blows of defeat toughen you into heroes. The difficulties that the organisers of this market encountered, as described to us in the report, show that they but deepened the determination of Raamalingiah and others to plod on, until they won through.

Alapathy Venkataaraamiah is the Minister in charge of temples in Andhra and the words of advice which he gave now are worthy of attention. He spoke of the culture of India and its excellence. It held up to mankind for reverence of not conquerors and millionaires but hermits and saints. He has also a great love for Sanskrit, the language of our scriptures, which give this land the inspiration to advance along the spiritual path of discrimination and non-attachment. The scriptures are so framed that they serve the highest needs of all classes of people, whatever their age, avocation or attainment. Like a loving mother the Vedhas guide and guard all her children, wherever they may be.

The body is worn by the jeeva to realise God

Venkataaraamiah also said that the attitude of bhakthi is the important thing, not the name and form which has drawn it out. Yes; the Lord has a thousand names. In fact, all names are His;

there is no name that is not His. Krishna, Shrinivasa, Sai Baaba---all are names of the same entity. The body is worn by the jeeva in order to realise God, the source from which the jeeva came. That is why it is said that it is very lucky for living beings to get equipped with the human physique. To be endowed with a desire for things of the spirit is the height of fortune.

A grandfather was fondling his grandson, a little lad of four; the boy asked him his age; the grandfather said he was seven; the lad refused to believe; how could a boy of four have a grandfather of seven? But, the old man said, "My dear boy! I do not care for all the sixty-three years I spent in the darkness; it is only seven years since I came under the influence of a guru, who opened my eyes and led me along the path to realisation. I have lived only seven years so far; the rest, I could as well ignore as wasted. I speak the truth always; this the truth."

That is the proper attitude. Do not admire and gape at the engineering achievements of countries that are able to shoot a rocket round the earth or over the moon or invent a bomb that can wipe out an entire city. That is the culmination of the strife for death and for mastery over other nations. That path leads only to misery, loss, hatred, and waste. The competition is about who will earn more in less time. All this comes about because man mistakes himself to be just a bundle Of the senses, packed into this body. Really speaking, he is a spark of divinity waiting to illumine the intelligence.

Man has to develop spiritual attitude

India has been announcing this Truth to the world since ages; this is the land where holy personages, divine personalities, saints and sages, avathaars, carrying the authentic stamp of God, have demonstrated that nothing else can give man the peace and joy that the contemplation of the Universal Aathma can give. The poor ryot who throws a paisa into the river Godaavari when he passes over the bridge might appear to the half-educated boor, smoking in the corner, to have wasted a precious coin, which he could have put to better use, perhaps, buying a bidi! But, what he did is a spiritual act; he felt that the Godaavari was a living mother, who gave food to men and cattle, and his paisa is not just a coin, it is an attitude of mind, a token of gratefulness, a flower of worship. He has the Aathmabhaava (spiritual attitude), while the critic who sneers at him is suffering from anaathma-bhaava (unspiritual attitude). Hindhu dharma teaches man to see and develop this aathma-bhaava not only with all mankind who are bound by the same tie of kinship, but, with all beings and all nature. Man is not isolated; he is one with all. All have to be served; all have to be known, for he is this all.

Kurnool, 4-12-1964

As the carpenter shapes the wood, the blacksmith shapes the iron, the goldsmith shapes the gold, so the Lord shapes in His own way, as the fancy suits Him.

He created the Universe, the manifold, woven of space, time and guna.

Know the Lord is the basis; and lose all fear.

Shri Sathya Sai

43. Actors and action

RARELY do I preside over a dramatic performance; I have come here tonight, because you are having a play on "Shri Sailam" and on a great devotee drawn by the deity to that temple and also because the author is a devotee for years. What exactly is a drama? It is a dream within a dream.

It is a dream which unfolds before you, even while you are "awake," another dream. It tries to shed some light, some joy, some courage, some faith, some hope, some meaning on the dream called life. Naturally, man has to seek all means of discovering the meaning of life. For, without knowing it, he is lost; he wanders from birth to birth, receiving knock after knock, and is seldom the better for all the experience.

He must first know that he is deluded into taking the body, the objects and the sense-experienced world, as real. Then, he must seek to know the real basis, which is mistaken to be something else. That delusion is deep-rooted; it has warped the outlook and put man on the wrong track.

The drama must be aimed at showing man that he is deluded by a false sense of values; that he is running after vanities, leaving reality behind. It should instill into man faith, strong enough to make him recoil from that pursuit, and gain the glory of discovering his great illusion.

The sorrows of life can be ended not through hatred and injustice; these only breed more of the species. They will yield only to nobler and higher thoughts and experiences, germinating from the pure heart where the Lord resides. This drama, on Hemareddy Mallamma, deals with such experiences arising from the heart of a sincere devotee and that is the reason, as I already said, why I agreed to preside over this second anniversary of the Kurnool District Kalaa Parishad and why I stayed on until the entire play was enacted.

Service to man is service to God

Whatever talent a person has, should be dedicated to the service of the rest of humanity, indeed, of all living beings. Therein lies fulfilment. All men are kin, they are of the same likeness, the same build; moulded out of the same material, with the same divine essence in each. Service to man will help your divinity to blossom, for, it will gladden your heart and make you feel that life has been worth-while. Service to man is service to God, for He is in every man and every living being and in every stone and stump. Offer your talents at the feet of God; let every act be a flower, free from creeping worms of envy and egoism, and full of the fragrance of love and sacrifice. If you have the talent for acting dramatic roles, well, use it for the glorification of God, for the uplifting of man.

A question often raised when people talk of dramas or films is this: Are the people who flock to them bringing down the level of these items of entertainment? Or, are the artistes responsible for lowering it? I must say that your responsibility as artistes and writers is much greater, you must not stoop to methods and tricks that will bring in more money perhaps, but, which sow seeds of evil and vice in the minds of the people, who flock to the theatres. A person who comes in to see a play or a film must move out of the theatre a better man, a stronger and more courageous man, and, not a poorer and weaker man, less equipped to resist the temptations of the world.

Remember this when you select a play for the stage or when you take up your pen to write one, and you will be on the right path.

To the actors, I must speak a word. You wear the dress and equipment of noble souls and saints; you impersonate even divine characters; you reel off words of high purpose and noble ideals, and exhibit deeply thrilling experiences. You do all this very realistically.
It is a sign of your skill and your untiring practice. You inspire people to better their lives; from you, they learn the path of inner peace and devotion, for you re-enact before their eyes the lives of great saints.
Develop the saadhana of self-effacement All this is very good. But, is it too much to ask that you show in your own lives, outside the stage, that the godly path is the best and the safest and perhaps even the smoothest? Take this role of the actor as a good guide for your own betterment. It is a saadhana which will give you peace. Raamakrishna Paramahansa actually lived the roles of Puraanic characters like Raadha and Hanumaan and realised Krishna and Raama through identification with the experiences of each.
Become one with the holy characters you represent; derive inspiration and joy therefrom, your acting too will thereby improve vastly; you will earn the gratitude of thousands. Feminine characteristics appeared in Raamakrishna's physical body when he intensely believed himself to be Raadha yearning for a vision of Krishna; when he identified himself with Hanumaan and spent months on trees, uttering only Raamanaama, his anatomy changed; he grew an incipient tail. That was the measure of the depth of his bhaava (thought power), of the self-effacement.
Use the dramatic art and the chances it gives you to develop the saadhana of self-effacement, for that is the quickest means of realisation of the real Self.
Make the theatre holy and sanctifying I must mention another point also. The author of this play is also here and you have this day honoured him for services to your Parishath and to the cause of "drama". Whenever you write a play, transform all that is low and worldly into the high and the otherworldly. Do not treat the low things as low; treat them as lapses, as mistakes, failures, incomplete attempts, errors to be avoided. Increase the aloukika (non-worldly) aspect of all relations between person and person.
Human beings are not mere bodies, appetites, hungers and thirst, passions and prejudices. These are impediments, lapses.

Consider rather the aspirations, the ideals, the dreams of unity and universality, the struggle for truth, for mercy, for grace, for sympathy, for liberation, and depict these in the plays you write.
That will change the atmosphere of the theatre and make it holy, sanctifying. You will then be helping men to become stronger and the nation to become more enduring. Now, people are sliding down the easy gradient of vice and vanity; arrest that process.
Open their eyes to the chasm that yawns below.
I bless you that you succeed in raising the standard of conduct and behaviour, the standard of morals and manners, the standard of social and individual discipline and instill deep desire for discovering the inner Divinity.
Kurnool, Zilla Parishad Hall 5-12-1964 44. Are words mere sound?
THOSE who listen to the teachings of these Pandiths have a great responsibility: they should not by their acts defile the lessons they learn. As you grow in years, detachment too should grow; as time passes by, the fruit must get ripe and become sweet. Life should not be frittered away in accumulating riches; it should be spent in knowing about the glory of God and in realising Him in the innermost being of oneself. No other intellectual exercise can give such joy. To discard this attempt as only seeking to discover the unknowable, as some men are prone to argue, is the height of foolishness. They are labelling the true as "trash" and cherishing the trash as "true".
The saadhaka (spiritual aspirant) should be like a good farmer; he removes the thorny bushes and plants; he ploughs, waters, sows, manures, fences, destroys pests, and then reaps the harvest and fills his granary. Similarly, you have to remove wasteful and wicked thoughts from your heart, plough the heart with good deeds, water it with love, manure it with faith, plant the saplings of the Name of the Lord and fence the field with discipline, destroy pests with shraddha (faith) and reap the harvest of jnaana. Do not be content merely with being in sathsangh (good company) or thinking of God, or listening to such discourses; they are but preliminaries, helping to awaken interest in 'farming.' Many people spend all their time in fencing; they have little time left for attending to the crop which the fence is designed to protect!
What is the jnaana that you should achieve? It is the giving up of deha (identification), the escape from the belief that "you" are the "body." You say, "My hand," "My foot," just as you say, "My watch," "My shoe;" but, yet feel you are the body. Examine the reality of the body, and escape from this false identification; that is the hall-mark of Jnaana. The 'T' that sees, experiences, feels, knows---that 'T' is the Paramaathma (Supreme Soul).

There are three types of men
 The truth can flash only in a mind clear of all blemishes. The first blemish that I would like to warn you against is "inability to bear the success of others." Envy is the greatest of sins. Vanity, envy, and egoism---these three are kin. They cut at the root of man's real nature. To feel proud that you are a bhaktha is also a blot. Though you may be a mountain, you must feel you are a mound; though a mound, you should not pretend to be a mountain.

There are three types of men: Those who consider the Aanandha of others to be their own Aanandha; those who seek Aanandha for themselves, with no attention paid to the Aanandha of others; and those who try to prevent others from getting Aanandha, even at the cost of their own.

There are no Naasthikas (atheists) really speaking, though some of you might aver that there are.

For, when love is God and when even those, who do not assert that God exists, love some one or something, that love itself guarantees that they are capable of sacrifice, selflessness and pity.

Probably, you believe that those who have no faith in Vedhas and Shaasthras and those who do not aver that there is some Omnipresent, Omniscient Being are atheists; but let me tell you, those who revere their parents and foster them, those who love and protect with care their brothers and sisters---these are Aasthikas (theists), believers in gratitude, love, affection, duty, dharma, etc., and these qualities are enough to save 'them' from perdition.

Love all; revere all; help all to the best of your ability. Endeavour to be as beneficial, as sweet, as soft as possible. Then the spot on which you stand become as sacred as Kaashi; the words that you utter will be as holy as scripture. This saadhana will lead you to Realisation.

Manthras can reach the deities Aadhithya (the Sun) must be propitiated by manthras, it was said, just now. Aadhithya is the deity presiding over time. Propitiate Him better by using time well; the manthra is the vehicle of prayer so that the buddhi which Aadhithya has accorded man may be put to the best use. You might ask how manthra can reach Aadhithya. I am surprised at the question, for you know already how it is possible for people in an aeroplane to communicate with the station they have left and the station to which they are proceeding. How do they do that? There are subtler waves which will carry the manthras too to the deities to whom they are addressed. The one is yantra shakthi (power of instruments). If you trust in inert matter, life becomes inert; trust in the active principle and life is activated.

Then, there are people who dispute among themselves whether God is Saguna or Nirguna, (with or without attributes), Saakaara or Niraakaara! (with Form or formless). Now, who are you, among these? Are you Saguna or Nirguna? Are you Saakaara or Niraakaara? Of course you are Saguna and Saakaara, because you are with body. So long as you feel you are with body, you cannot transcend the Saguna, and realise the Nirguna. When you liberate yourselves from bondage to this limitation, you become Nirguna. That happens in a flash. When the Truth dawns, all is Light. There is no more darkness. There is no more fear or hate or even love. All are subsumed into the One without a Second.

Words have tremendous power
 You do not know the gem shining inside you, the Divinity whose effulgence is your to intellect, whose reflection is the Prema you evince. You know many other things other than this, but not this essential thing: you do not know where such and such a scholar lives in Venkatagiri, but know where a certain film star lives in Madras! This is something to be ashamed of--this loss of the sense of values! You must recognise the Higher, the Highest. Death stalks you at every step.

Before he mauls you mortally, know the Truth and be blessed. The Name of the Lord is the rifle which guards you against beasts of prey in the jungle of life. The rifle makes a loud noise when the bullet is ejected fast. So too, along with the sound of the holy Name, eject the bullet of feeling too, so that the target is hit.

Nowadays, people laugh at the idea of Naamasmarana and Naamasankeerthana (remembering and singing God's holy Names). They ask, what is in a Name? It is just an assortment of sounds.

My words too are assortments of sound, but, when they enter your hearts, you feel content, you feel encouraged, is it not? Words have tremendous power; they can arouse emotions and they can calm them. They direct, they infuriate, they reveal, they confuse; they are potent forces that bring up great reserves of strength and wisdom. Therefore have faith in the Name and repeat it whenever you get the chance.

Venkatagiri, Prashaanthi Vidhwanmahaasabha, 12-12-1964, Reawakening of man is at hand---reawakening to the knowledge that man himself is God. The human body is not you, it simply houses the soul, or the spark of Divinity within, for God dwells in the heart of every man and that indwelling spark of the Divine is you---yourself. All else is illusion. Contemplate on that thought and, when the truth unfolds, you will find your true identity; then your whole life pattern will change, and you will see everyone in the same light.

Shri Sathya Sai

45. Ishwara grants Aishwaryam

I SEE that this quadrangle has become too small for this vast audience; but, if all of you exercise a little patience, you will be able to benefit by the discourses given by the Pandiths. If you allow the inconvenience to distract your attention, you will only be losing the chance of a lifetime.

What is the lifetime? Is it to struggle in the mire or march straight on to the eternal? You will get millions to tell you what is pleasing to you; but, it is difficult to get one in a million who can tell you what is good for you. What is good for you is akin to truth; truth is hard: but beneficial. It is unpleasant advice to tell a man to stick to truth at all costs; but, truth alone pays dividends that satisfy.

Sit quiet for a just a moment and inquire within yourself what is it that stays and what is it that does not. You try to know the news of the world, the changing fortunes of men and movements, in all the countries of the world; but you have no thirst to know about the conditions and conflicts of your own inner world happening against the permanent backdrop of the unchanging Aathman, which is your innermost core. Know that and everything becomes known; act and no other act is needed; possess that and all things are possessed by you! That Aathma is the Universal Aathma; that 'I' is the Universal "I." Consider the magnitude of the Aanandha that will fill you when you know that you are all this, that all this is you! The joy that you experience through the senses is a minute fraction of this Aanandham; you will not get it if the Aathmic bliss is not reflected through the senses. When a pot with nine holes is placed over a burning lamp, the light that comes through the holes is the light of the lamp, is it not? When the body is negated, that is to say, when the lamp is revealed, the iyothi (light) is seen fully the Aathma is realised. But, when the thick cover of ajnaana (ignorance) is placed over the pot, you cannot even recognise that there is lamp inside, which illumines the senses.

Get immersed in the Bliss of Aathma

There is a deep urge in man to visualise the One behind the many; scientists seek to find a law that will explain all sources of energy and all forms of matter. You can also know that, which, if known, all else can be known; only, you have to get immersed in the Bliss of Aathma. In the grindstone the base is steady, unmoving; the upper grinder moves; but both are stones. So too, the chara and the achara (the fixed and the changing), the base and the superstructure, are all Brahman. Prakrithi (objective world) moves; Brahman (Supreme Being) is steady; both are inextricably inter-related, the one with other in Avinaabhaava-sambandha (relationship of interdependent existence).

God should be the bedrock on which you resolve; then, life would be smooth. The physical, the mental, the objective world--these revolve around God, and if that close relationship with God is recognised, they lead you into Light. Like the strokes of the hammer, which lend shape and beauty to gold. Aathma gets Name and Form through the strokes of multifarious karma, from birth to birth. The Aakaaram makes it Vikaaram (Form makes it deformed). The deformity has to be set right by Aadhyaathmic rigour--spiritual discipline.

No effort is made now for this kind of discipline, no lessons are given in the educational institutions of the country. It is wrong to lay the blame on want of time; time can never obstruct it. You are the obstructor, not time. The monkey that cannot pull out its clenched fist from the narrow neck of the pot lays the blame on the pot or the maker of the pot. But, if only it releases the hold on the peanuts it has grasped in that fist, it can easily take its hand out. The fault lies in itself. So too man's greed is the reason for this want of time. No one thrust the hand into the pot; no one forced the monkey to grab the nuts. It has become the victim of its own rapacity, that is all.

Why should the Lord Himself incarnate?

Man too is suffering because he cannot rid himself of the greed for sense-objects and sensepleasures (vishaya vaasana). He knows that he has to give up whatever he earns and collects, sooner or later; but, yet his attachment waxes instead of waning, as the years go by. If every man on earth could take with him on death, even a handful of mud from the Earth, there would have been nothing much left and mud would have been rationed at so many ounces per head!

 When people forget the One and run after the Many, Dharma declines; for, there can be no love, no sacrifice, no detachment in human affairs then. So, the Lord takes human form and comes among men to restore his sense of values. You may ask, why should the Lord Himself incarnate?
 Why can He not set about the task of restoring Dharma through the many minor gods He has at His command? This question was passed before the courtiers by Akbar himself for, he laughed at the Hindu idea of the Formless adopting Form, and descending into the world as an Avathaar to save dharma. Tansen asked for a week's time to furnish the answer and got it granted by His Imperial Majesty. A few days later, when he was in the pleasure boat of the Emperor sailing across the lake with his family, Tansen cleverly threw overboard a don made to look like the Emperor's little son, crying at the same time, "O, the Prince has fallen into the water!" Hearing this, the Emperor jumped into the lake to rescue his son!
 The truth behind the Lord's incarnation Tansen then disclosed that it was only a doll and that the son was safe. He allayed the anger of Akbar by explaining that he had perforce to enact this drama in order to demonstrate the truth of the Hindu belief that God takes human form Himself, to save Dharma, without commissioning some other entity to carry out that task. Dharma is as the son, God loves it so dearly. Akbar could have ordered one among the many personnel he had on board to jump in and rescue his son; but his affection was so great and the urgency so acute that the Emperor himself plunged into the lake to pull out the "son." The decline of Dharma is so acute a tragedy; the intensity of affection that the Lord has for good men is so great that He Himself comes. The Lord is Love itself. He comes in human form so that you can talk to Him, move with Him, serve Him, adore Him, and achieve Him, so that you can recognise your kinship with Him.
 People who discard the precious wisdom of the past are doomed to disaster. That is why, when people started decrying and disregarding the Vedhas and Shaasthras, they started to decline in morality and strength, courage and confidence. One argument used to find fault with the Vedhas by these conceited critics is that the Varna (caste) system is not found in advanced countries of the West, as if there too we have no religious leaders, social guardians, traders and workers and farmers. Inevitably, human society will get itself divided into these four sections, and they tend to harden into castes, each with its own moral code.

 God is the greatest mystery What is the basic teaching of the Vedhas? It is that, to whichever economic or social or intellectual group you belong, you are child of Immortality, Amrithasya puthraah! It says that man is not a product of slime or mud; man is one who manages to live with viveka, so that he is able to attain the Divinity latent in him. Ma means 'Ajnaana' (basic ignorance), n, na means 'without.' He who is without ignorance, who is wise, who knows himself, who knows that he is immortal, is Man.
 God is the greatest mystery; the dark blue colour in which He is depicted is a symbol of the depth of that mystery. The sky and the sea are blue on account of their vast depth. Some one described the Kaalingamardhana (killing of the cobra Kaalinga) episode of Krishna as the height of mystery, for, in the dark depths of the dark Yamuna, where the dark sky was reflected, the dark Krishna was dancing on the dark hoods of the deadly dark cobra called Kaalinga! And, he blamed his eye which sought to visualise this scene as itself equipped with a dark cornea!
 Remove from the heart the darkness of vice and ignorance; then, in that white background, the Meghashyaama, (He whose colour is that of a rain-cloud) can easily be seen. Instead of this, man is further darkening his consciousness, while blaming God for evading his search. Seeking light, man's steps are moving further and further towards darkness; this is the pity. Better live a moment as hamsa (swan) on milk than live for a century as crow, feeding on carrion.
 The tongue should be used for spelling the name of the Lord, not for hissing like a serpent, or growling or roaring with intention to strike terror. That is not the purpose for which the tongue is granted to man. Speech indicates one's character, reveals one's personality, educates others, and communicates experience and information. So, be vigilant about words. Slip while walking: the injury can be repaired! Slip while talking: the injury is irreparable!

Meaning behind coconut breaking The most desirable Aishwaryam (prosperity) is Ishwara anugraha (the Lord's Grace); that is to say, the most desirable form of wealth is the Grace of God. He will guard you, even as the lids guard the eye; do not doubt this. Faith in Providence is as the very breath of life. The bliss that it bestows has been experienced by many saints and sages, who have, with faith in their hearts, withstood the onslaughts of poverty, neglect and cruelty. Instead of fixing attention on this, man fritters his energy on collecting tawdry tinsel, forgetting the diamonds he could well have. Both are available on earth; but man is led by glitter and not by worth. When you break a coconut in the temple, you should feel that your egoism is broken too. The coconut offering is not made so that God may consume the kernel! It is a symbol of the destruction of Ahamkaara (egoism), which has to split into two at one stroke, the stroke of wisdom. When do you get that effect? When does the coconut break at one stroke? When the fibrous cover of the shell is removed, is it not? So too, man must remove the fibrous matter that encases his heart--lust, anger, envy and the rest of the wicked brood. Man is the repository of vast power; he is no weakling. It is the dhur-vaasanas (vicious tendencies) that make him weak. Draw inspiration from the Divine in you and earn the glory of being good, sincere, honest, selfsacrificing, lovable. Hear good things, see good, do good, think good; then, all the evil tendencies will be uprooted. Training ground for spiritual life You can be involved in samsaara or the qualities of life. But, remember, no harm can accrue if you consider the life of a house-holder, with wife and children, as a training ground for spiritual life. You wear glasses to correct the vision, to improve the sight. So too, enter the family, society and also politics to correct the vision and improve the sight. Use the opportunities confronting you there for developing detachment and self-sacrifice. If you don't, you are like the fool who puts on wrong glasses and spoils his vision! This mike is in front of Me, obstructing Me from some of those before Me! But, you put up with it, because you can hear Me better on account of it. So also, you must put up with the body that you are encased in, for, it enables you to realise the Reality, the Divine that you are. It is a means to that glorious end. It is not an end in itself. It may be fed well, clothed well, kept well, housed well--but, yet, if you have not delved into the depths of Joy that lies in you, it will have no peace. That Joy is immeasurable, indescribable. The joy derivable from material possessions is limited, in danger of diminution or destruction. Too much of material comfort is harmful to health and happiness. Too many dishes spoil the banquet, and turn the appetite askew. There are many women present and so, I must tell them this: though they have faith and devotion, they promote ashaanthi (turmoil) by their attitudes and behaviour. They have a great responsibility which they have neglected; anxiety and worry are growing in the family and in society due to their neglecting the discipline that trains people to live self-controlled lives. They do not distinguish between a cinema hall, a market or an exhibition, but talk and chatter everywhere, even in a temple, or a holy gathering. Children learn from them and they too when they grow up lose all reverence for elders and holy places. They talk loud and long and very irreverently, and add to the ashaanthi, instead of reducing it. They were once the pillars of dharma but, now, do not know what it means, how it has to be practised in daily life. Means must be as pure as the end Once you have tasted Amrith (nectar), can you relish any other food? India has once tasted the Amrith of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion); how foolish is it then to run after foulness and frivolity? There are some cynics who spurn Sanaathana Dharma as 'out of date, meaningless, foolish, etc'. This is because that Dharma insists that the means must be as pure as the end, that every act must be done as efficiently as an act of worship, that true Love must forget all differences of status, age and wealth, that without self-control and detachment, man cannot claim humanity. A man can nowadays become a 'hero' for millions, without acquiring any virtue, being a 'zero' so far as Dharma or morals are concerned. That is the sad state of affairs. An image is seen as a stone; but, in the past, in every stone, they saw the Divine, lying latent. Now, intelligence is the handmaid of cleverness; then, it was the first step towards wisdom, which saw all things as permeated by the Divine Principle. If your wish is not fulfilled, you start blaming the God to whom you prayed; the fault lies in you, in your not having the needed qualification to earn the fulfilment. Or, it may lie in the feeling at the back of the wish. You cannot discover which. My acts are the foundations on which I am building My work, the Task for which I have come. All the "miraculous acts" which you observe are to be interpreted so. The foundation for a dam requires a variety of materials; without these, it will not last and hold back the waters. Purpose of "miraculous acts" When the Lord has incarnated, He has to be used in various ways by man, for his uplift. Krishna held aloft the Govardhana Girl, not to demonstrate His siddhi or attainment, but to protect the gopas and gopees (cowherd boys and girls) and the cattle they held dear. He had to do something which man could not accomplish. He had no intention to publicise Himself. Only inferior minds will revel in publicity and self-aggrandisement. These have no relevance in the case of Avathaars. They need no advertisement. Those who decry the superhuman are the ignorant or the wicked, that is, those who have no authority to judge the spiritual. The establishment of Dharma is My aim; the teaching of Dharma, the spread of Dharma---that is my objective. These "miracles" as you call them are just a few means towards that end. Some people remark that Raamakrishna Paramahansa said that siddhis are obstructions in the path of the saadhaka (spiritual aspirant). Of course they are; he may be led astray by siddhis; he has to keep straight on without being involved in them. His ego will increase if he yields to the temptation of demonstrating his siddhis. This correct advice, which every saadhaka should heed. Cynics carp without knowledge The mistake lies in equating Me with the saadhaka whom Raamakrishna wanted to help, guide and warn. This is merely the nature of Avathaara: the creation of things, ab initio, with intent to protect, guard and give joy, a creation that is spontaneous and lasting. Creation, Preservation and Dissolution---these three, only the Almighty can accomplish; no one else can. Cynics carp without knowledge. If they learn the Shaasthras, they can understand Me, or they should cultivate direct experience. Your innate laziness prevents you from the spiritual exercises necessary to discover the nature of Godhead. The Guru says, "Through karma, clarify your intellect." The disciple is lazy; he prefers dhyana, sitting quiet in one place. After a few attempts, he asks that some other path be laid down for him. The laziness should go out of man's nature, in whatever shape it appears. That is My mission. This is the first step in converting Maanava into Maadhava---man into God. God alone is eternal, man is a momentary flash, a tiny wavelet, that rises and falls. So, fill yourselves with vast thoughts, magnificent ideas, indefinable splendour, by reciting the Names of God, names that describe Him to your receptive consciousness. That is the main discipline for this Age. Venkatagiri, Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha, 13-12-1964 46. The human raft MAN is the victim of many a pain; to those who identify themselves with body, life is a series of trouble and misery. But to those who know that the body is but a vehicle, these cannot cause anxiety. I must emphasise this now, when I am inaugurating this Primary Health Centre. Bodily health is important, for ill-health affects mental poise and concentration. When the body is fit, mental functions too run smooth; when the body suffers, the mind too gets unsettled. So, this raft called body which is the only means of getting across the sea of samsaara (worldly life), has to be kept in good trim. Untruth, injustice, anxiety---all cause leaks and loosen the knots of the raft. With such a poor raft, it is foolish to attempt the crossing. The raft has to be cast aside when the crossing has been effected; there is no more use for it. The human raft is the most efficient, for it is built out of viveka, vichakshana and vairagya (discrimination, ability and non-attachment), hard timber that can stand the beat of wave and the sway of current. If one does not make the best use of this chance, it may not come again for a long long time. Devotion and morality are as important for physical health as they are for mental health. They free the mind from agitation, they feed it with joy and contentment; they quieten the nerves and help even bodily processes. The flowers of this garland were buds yesterday; they bloomed this morning; they have started to fade now and tomorrow they will rot and dry. But, the string that holds them together interpenetrating them, is not subject to such change; It was string yesterday, it is string now and it will be string tomorrow. The unchanging Aathma and the changing body---analyse them thus and be convinced of the eternal universal core of your being. As a thinking, discriminating human being, it is your responsibility to discharge this duty to yourself. And also to your country! For, India deserved the honour of the "World Teacher" because her people always insisted on this great responsibility and tried to discharge it. But, when Indians neglected this and attached value to physical comfort and social status, the land fell into the morass of competitive struggle. Treat your family as a sacred trust. Now, man encased in rockets takes pride in zooming round the world at terrible speeds and even racing to the moon; but he has not succeeded in penetrating even an inch into the innermost recess of his own mind and controlling the vagaries rampant there. To save yourself from being carded away by the current of change, you must swim up the river, which is a hard enterprising process, indeed. Hold all your property and wealth in trust for the Lord who gave them to you; even your family, you must treat as a sacred trust, as persons given to you by the Lord to love, foster and guide. Thus, you must elevate your attachment into worship and make it an instrument for spiritual progress. Minister Balaram Reddy expressed his wish that this Health Centre, named after Velugota Venkataraja Gopaalakrishna Yachendhra, should prosper from year to year. But a hospital's progress is to be judged, not by the number of patients coming for treatment. It must educate the people around in the principles of health and see that the area is freed from disease. And among the means to ensure health, spiritual discipline is the most important. Let your love flow towards all. You should not be ever entangled in the meshes of this world and its problems. Try to escape into the purer air of the spirit as often as you can, taking the name of the Lord on your tongue. Of the 24 hours of the day, have 6 hours for your individual needs, 6 hours for the service of others, 6 hours for sleep and 6 for dwelling in the Presence of the Lord. Those six hours will endow you with the strength of steel. Gopaalakrishna Yachendhra, the Chairman, described the green fields that surround the villages and declared that there is nothing so congenial to happiness as village life. Villages are the backbone of the nation. Cities pant for the contentment and joy of villages. Cities are lost in confusion, noise and selfish fury. The ryots who till the soil and feed the people are indeed holy men, who help their brothers and sisters in their dire need. They bear hard toil, silently and gladly. But you need not feel small. Be like gods and you can partake of Amrita (nectar), as the gods did once. If you are like Asuras (demons), you can have no share in the Divine Nectar. Let your love flow towards all; you have love but, now, it is distributed selfishly and sparingly. Or at least, do not hate other people and talk ill of them or seek to estimate their faults. Do not feel sad or hurt when others are happy; try to share their happiness and be happy yourself, when those around you are. Your speech has to be soft and sweet; do not imitate the roar of the lion or the hiss of the serpent. In a village where everybody knows everyone else and where living is so intimate and interdependent, this kind of sweet talk, motivated by love, is essential. The tongue is now the sharpest weapon in the armoury of the villager, it ruins many homes, it divides brothers and neighbours; it does more havoc than a bomb! Let not pests of greed spoil the harvest of plenty. This Health Centre will become efficient if villagers appreciate its service and co-operate with these doctors and if you do not frustrate its efforts by wrangling among yourselves. Develop love and co-operation; then villages can thrive. Otherwise, even the best of intentions on the part of the Venkatagiri Royal Family or Government Agencies will be frustrated. The presence of the Minister and of the President of the Samithi here is a sign that they will do their best for you; it now lies with you whether you will make the best use of the help that they so readily grant. If you do that, I know, the Venkatagiri Royal Family will be really happy. I have to tell you something more about this Health Centre. The Malayaala Swami who made this place famous and popular by establishing his Aashram and School was desirous that a hospital should be added to the amenities of this village. Now that this Centre is inaugurated, his wish has been fulfilled. Let not the pests of anger, lust and greed spoil the harvest of plenty that you seek through your earnestness and steadiness. Do not use your hands to harm or injure another, use them rather to beat time, when you recite the Names of the Lord, Names which are redolent with His Glory. That is my advice to you today. Yerpedu, 14-12-1964 47. You are born for your own sake

Prashaanthi 'Vidwanmahaasabha is meeting here for the second time and I am glad I am here to witness the dawn of Aanandha that is lighting up every face. I have also come to confer on you Aanandham. Really, all this misery is caused by mankind itself, not by any extraneous agency. Having all the instruments of joy and contentment in one's possession, if man is miserable, it is only due to his perverseness, his stupidity. He has been warned, over centuries, by the scriptures of all languages that he should give up greed and lust, give up the habit of catering to the senses, give the belief that he is just this body and nothing more. But, yet, he does not know the illness that is torturing him. The disease is due to 'vitamin deficiency,' as they say; the vitamins are sathya, dharma, shaanthi and prema (truth, righteousness, peace and divine love). Take them and you recover; assimilate them into your character and conduct and you shine with fine mental and physical health. The more material wealth you collect, the greater the bother and the greater the sorrow when death calls. You have no peace if you struggle to win it through the accumulation of wealth. You have come from your villages, so many thousands of you, to this place to see Sai Baba and to hear Him, is it not? Well, over and above those two aims, you must have a third one too. You must also see yourself and hear your inner voice, urging you to discover your own truth. I am prompting you to discover your Reality. That is My Mission. Save yourself by yourself. You should not be swayed by the demon of doubt. Doubt comes only from ignorance; it disappears when knowledge dawns. When a man was tiding on horseback with another carrying a bed behind him, passersby concluded that the rider was the master and the man behind was his servant. When both reached a caravanserai and when the rider was feeding the horse and the man with the bed was sleeping on it in the verandah, men thought the former was the servant and the latter, the master! Conclusions drawn on flimsy grounds are always subject to revision. You are born for your own sake, not for the sake of any one else. You have to cure yourself of the disease of ignorance, just as you have to cure yourself of the disease of hunger. No one else can save you from both. "Uddhareth aathma-na athmaanam": "Save yourself by yourself" God is in you, but like the woman, who fears that her necklace has been stolen or lost, recognises that she has it round her neck when she passes a mirror, man too will recognise that God is in him, when some Guru reminds him of it. The joy' that you then get is incomparable. Every Indian must realise that the science of self, discovery is self-heritage. He must value it and earn it. Now, there are many scholars, able to expound that heritage, but few who practise it and earn the reward. That science was explored by sages and laid down in clear and simple terms. Not to know it and not to practise it is the greatest loss that this country suffers from. Fancy for naveenam (the modem) in preference to the sanaathanam (the classical and the eternal), is the cause of this misery. Sugarcane should not be equated with any cane! Only those who do not know the taste of sugar will do so. Seek jnaanam (spiritual knowledge), which is the seat of sweetness. Get rid of the desire for sense-enjoyment, which like the pleasure you get while scratching itching eczema, only makes the complaint worse. You cannot cure it by yielding to the temptation to scratch. The more you scratch, the more you are tempted to continue, until bleeding intervenes. So, desist from that vain pursuit and concentrate on spiritual matters, or at least, move in the world with the everpresent consciousness that it is a morass, a net, a trap, into which attachment and desire will precipitate you. Be a true bhakt and become so small that you wriggle out of the shackles of the senses or be a true jnaani and become so huge, that you escape by breaking the shackles. Naayudupet, 16-12-1964 Every being needs Prema inhales and exales Prema, for Prema is the basic breath; everyone is the embodiment of Prema. Love knows no fear, so love needs no falsehood to support it. Love seeks no reward; love is its own reward. Shri Sathya Sai 48. Diagnose your own disease ON My way to this place, thousands of eager men and women stood across and insisted that I should meet them at the Sai Mandhiram. Some delay was caused thereby. I could not come here in time. I have therefore to shorten My discourse to you. Bhakthas bind Me; I have no chance to have My way when people plead so. My Aanandham as well as their Aanandham were both indescribable. On account of this delay, I know, some people left and went home. Well; yours is the luck; you stayed on. The chakora bird gulps the first rain-drops as they fall; it waits long and with profound yearning. It is content if four drops wet its parched throat.

Life is many-directional; it has many faces. But, there are some directions which are auspicious, some which are ruinous. Most of it is spent in pursuit of mirages, in building castles in the air.

Keeness to slake the thirst in the mirage-lake is never satisfied. Desire multiplies itself; the fulfilment of one leads to proliferation into many. You can never say, "That ends all my desires; I have no more wants." The love that is concentrated on oneself is as a bulb that illuminates the room only, without shedding light outside the four walls. It is confined to the senses and never opens out to others, who are your kith and kin in God.

There is another type of love, larger and deeper, which expands into the members of one's family. It is as moonlight, not strong enough to make things clear, but, enough to move about in.

It also undergoes rise and fall, increase and decrease. But the most desirable type of love is as sunlight, ever engaged in purifying, activating, illumining, knowing no distinction. This love will make man act ever in the spirit of dedication to the Lord. And, so, the acts too would be elevating and holy.

Liberation gives the highest Bliss

Dedication is different from service; in service, there is the element of ego. "I serve, He is the master, He requires my service, I am necessary for Him." But, in dedication, the I is wiped out.

There is no desire for the fruit; the joy consists in the act being done. To cultivate that attitude of dedication, every one must think of God, remember the Name of God and deepen faith in God.

University degrees will not give, riches cannot buy, kinsmen cannot hand over and teachers cannot confer the pre-requisites for Shaanthi---Faith and Devotion.

The most chronic disease of man is Ajnaana---ignorance of the undying Aathma within him. One must know the reason why he caught this aphasia and try to get cured. The general cause of this illness is infatuation for the objective world and subservience to senses. There is even a deeper cause the undue prominence given to the body, imagining it to be the touchstone of value. The body is like a temporary shelter where you reside for a short while, on your journey. The gamyam is kaivalyam---the goal is liberation. Liberation gives the highest Bliss.

Have faith in the Ocean, not the wave; believe in the Lord, not in little things. But, the tragedy is, you put your trust in little men, in wicked men, in men who you know are vicious and greedy; but you hesitate when asked to put faith in the Lord, who is more merciful than any father, more loving than any mother, more powerful than any earthly authority, more considerate than any kinsman. You do not doubt each other; but, you develop doubt regarding God. Even laymen talk long and loud when the topic for discussion is 'God!' No one asks them their credentials.

God asks for the heart, the full heart

'Doubt' is easy and faith difficult. Dwell on the Naama and its sweetness will saturate your tongue and improve your taste. Do not count the number of times you have repeated it. For, whom are you going to impress with the number? The Lord will respond even if you call Him just once from the depths of feeling; He will be deaf, even if you call Him a million times, automatically, artificially, with the tongue not with the heart. It is easy to amass figures.

When Akbar challenged his courtiers to give him the exact number of birds in Delhi, one illiterate servant offered to do it. After a few days, he came to the court and said that there were 99 lakhs 99 thousands of them! "Suppose, I have the figure verified and it is found that there are more, what punishment shall I inflict on you for your wrong calculation?" asked the Emperor.

The servant said, "Some might have flown in from the surrounding areas." "What if the total number is found to be less?" asked the Emperor. "Some birds must have flown out of the City," he replied coolly. Numbers are easy to manipulate, but Grace does not depend upon them at all.

He asks for the heart, the full heart and nothing but the heart.

If the heart has many leaks, the sweetness will be drained away and you cannot offer Him the full heart. Egoism, pride, thirst for fame--all these are leaks, if you donate something to a good cause, hoping that your name will appear in the Andhra Patrika, exulting when it is seen there, dejected when it is not found, then that charity springs a leak. Such sacrifice is superficial and selfish. The seeds will sprout only when they are well within the soil, not when they are on the surface. Karna lost his life when he recalled in despair the sacrifices he had made; they should not be counted in the memory.

"The fever of arrogant youth"

Bargaining and calculating are useless in the spiritual field. You cannot higggle with the Lord and ask for proportionate rewards. Ask for proportionate reward and you lose all. He has his own arithmetic. Food, Head, God---that is the series; eat food for developing the intelligence, the head; then, with that intelligence, realise God. The senses can inform you only of the obvious, what comes within their ken. But, the intuition of the sages as recorded in the Vedhas speaks of that which cannot be reached by the senses or intellect or imagination. To treat the Vedhas lightly is the height of foolishness.

"The fever of arrogant youth," which I call Youvana sannipaatham, fogs the intellect and makes youth ungrateful and callous. Parents are neglected; elders are dishonoured; teachers are ridiculed; scriptures are scoffed at by them. They boast that they will not bow their heads to any one; but, they have to bow their heads at least to the barber! They cause grief to the very persons to whom they owe their very life. Do not be led away by the belief that this is respectable. Have as your ideal Lakshmana or Dharmaraaja or Seetha or Meera. Strive to see good things, hear good things, speak soft and sweet, instal the Lord in the altar of your heart. Believe in the consequences of karma, done now and in the past. No one can avoid the reactions of his actions; the effects have to be consumed by the 'actor' himself. Serve to share and spread Aanandha. You are undergoing training to become better Graamasevakas (village social workers); this is a great chance that has come in your way to render seva (service) and to share and spread Aanandha. The seva that you do will become useful and lasting, provided you invite great Pandiths to the village and through them instruct the villagers to cultivate contact with the Lord' devotion to God, love towards men. I wish that you strive to provide bhajans, keerthanas and Harikathas in order to inspire them towards the higher life of the spirit.

It is now rather late; the night is already far advanced. I am going to Madras right from here, but, it does not matter to Me; I do not care about the exhaustion; but, you have to reach home and many of you have gathered from the villages around. So, I shall stop now. I feel the exhaustion only when you do not practise what I tell you. If you are determined to act according to My advice, I shall be with you all the 24 hours. Now, I ask you only to ruminate, like the cow, on the precious words you have heard and assimilate them into your life. Village Level Workers' Training Centre, Kaalahasthi, 17-12-1964

49. No srama in aashrama

I HAVE been moving about in this region for fifteen years but, this is the first occasion on which I have appeared in this charming Aashram. I need not say that this is a great chance for you, a Sumuhurtham, as they say, an event of auspiciousness. A State will have a Constitution and a set of great laws; Sanaathana Dharma is the law and the Vedhas are the Constitution of the State of Man. These were laid down by sages who "saw" them in their moments of ecstatic intuition; that is why they are called Seers. Hence the Vedhas are called A-pourusheya (not ascribable to any particular author). They are named Shruthi, that which is heard, remembered, and 'held as a treasure in the memories of men. The Vedhas are their own authority; just as the eye is the judge of what the eye reveals. You cannot smell a thing and judge its colour. So the Vedhas have robe judged by the Vedhas only; the experience of the sages has to be tested by sages who seek that experience through the processes laid down in the Vedhas; and, in every case the process is followed, the experience is won, correctly and dearly as described. The Vedhas have to be practised; that is the purpose of these revelations. Merely learning them by rote is of no use. The Uththarameemaamsa section provides the knowledge necessary to liberate oneself from bondage and blindness. That is called Brahmajnaana, for, when one reaches a certain stage in saadhana, he realises that all this is identical with Brahman, which is cause and effect, being and becoming, both.

The Bhaarithabhumi (land of Bhaarith) which is inherently Yogabhumi and Thyaagabhumi (land of godliness and sacrifice) is being dragged along the tracks of other Bhogabhumis (lands of enjoyment), and putting on the paraphernalia of worldly happiness. This is the path of ignorance, of hatred, of greed, of wickedness, and competition. What the Rishis laid down is the best, for, they trained themselves to be impartial and detached. The teachings of the Vedhas were explained and elaborated in the Raamaayana, Mahaabhaaratha and Bhaagavatha, and in the commentaries by Shankara, Raamaanuja and Madhvacharya. Even those who were the custodians of Vedhic learning have now neglected it and taken to lesser studies.

Dedicate your work as offering to the Lord Vimalaanandha, the Head of this Aashram, was in the previous status of life, at Prashanthi Nilayam for about a year. He had asked for My Blessings when he took up this responsibility and this Sanyaasi's status, on the passing away of his Guru, the Malayaala Swaami. Like the ocean calling to the river, the role of a monk was calling him; the jeeva and the Aathma are so inextricably associated. It is the devotion and saadhana of aspirants that has taken such grand shape here. Do not ascribe it to one person; he inspired, but hundreds caught the inspiration, and dedicated themselves to the task. Raama did not live in the forest, away from the cities, for the sake of its charm; he took it as an opportunity to be of service to the Maharishis doing penance there, eager to come face to face with God. He moved about so that He could give Aanandha to them. Malayaala Swaami came here to help the saadhakas and the efforts of devotees are clear in the development of this Aashram. Have a pure sense of vision and hearing People have read much; but, how much of their reading have they applied in life? They repeat that the senses are enemies of the higher life; but they continue to be their slaves. Have a pure vision; then, you will not find faults in others. Have a pure sense of healing; then, you will not relish the scandals regarding others scattered by foolish men, who do not know that they are but scandalising themselves. Care more for Sarveshwara Chintha---thought of the Lord of All; not Sareera Chintha---thought of the care and upkeep of the perishable body. Every farmer knows that good seeds must be sown for getting a rich harvest. If the seeds are bad, his efforts are fruitless. Sow the seeds called Name of God in the well-prepared field of the heart; feed it with the manure of Faith; have Discipline as the fence to keep out stray cattle. Without a fence guarding the crop, farming will be like shooting without a bullet: all sound and no game! Prayer must come from the depths of feeling; the Lord looks for bhaava (sincerity of feeling), not baahya (outward pomp). With feeling, you can make the Divine Heart bloom in joy. The Karma kaanda and the Upaasana kaanda (sections of the Vedhas dealing with rituals and worship) insist on the worship of God and devotion to Him. They sing

His Glory and instruct man how to meditate on His splendour. They say that He is known by many Names and appears under many Forms. Ekam sath, they say: only One exists; but, Vipraah bahudhaa vadhanthi---but, the same One is known and described in many different ways by the wise. To know that you are that One, and therefore Immortal, is your right, your heritage, That is why the Vedhas acclaim man as Amrithasya Puthraah: Children of Immortality. The Guru dispels darkness like the Sun Act in conformity with that ancestry, that status. The generality of people are unaware of the Glory and Grace of God; the Malayaala Swaami made every one who came to him understand the Real behind the Unreal. He had known it by study and saadhana. The Guru is the teacher of Aathma-vidhya (science of the Self); he dispels darkness, like the Sun. His sankalpa (resolve) is that this Aashram must progress in the task of spiritual enlightenment. Vimalaanandha wrote to Me, when he was selected to succeed him as head of this Aashram asking for My blessings. I wrote back "Since he has selected you, his blessings will guard and guide you and you will surely achieve Digvijaya (conquest in all directions)." He was a little nervous, not because he had no faith in the efficacy of the Guru's blessings, but because he had little experience in bearing such burdens. I am glad all those attached to the Malayaala Swaami and this Aashram have strung together their loyalties and prepared a garland for honouring Vimalaanandha. You have a committee of elders, who will also look after the affairs and come to his help. Every one should be prompted by reverence to the Guru which means not worshipping his photograph, but acting according to his orders, his commands, his Aajina. If you are right on the path laid down by him, then you can march boldly on, regardless of praise or blame. Do not doubt this. Here I must tell you something about Myself, like leaving a Visiting Card, here. My task is not merely to cure and console, remove individual misery. It is something far more important. The important task of the mango tree is to produce mango fruits. The leaves, the branches, and the trim of the tree are useful, in their own way, no doubt; but the main aim is the fruit. So also from the plantain tree, the fruit is the main gain. The leaves, the edible core of the stem, these are all incidental. So too the removal of misery and distress is incidental to My Mission.

Lord's resolve cannot be hindered

My main task is the re-establishment of Vedhas and Shaasthras in the heart of Bhaarithavarsha and the revival of knowledge about them in the people, This task will succeed; it will not be impeded by any obstacle. It will not be limited or slowed. When the Lord decides and wills, His Sankalpa (Resolve) cannot be hindered; it will not be hindered. You must have heard people say that Mine is all magic, black or white. Well, these people may also say that Krishna lifted Govardhanagiri by means of black magic, or that Raama built a bridge over the sea, by black magic!

Of course, there is magic in the world both white and black; but, the manifestation of Divine Power must not be interpreted as magic. Can the crow's egg and the cuckoo's egg be identified as belonging to one class? Magicians play their tricks for earning a livelihood. They use it for worldly fame and wealth. They are based on falsehood and they thrive on deceit and ignorance.

This Body can never stoop to that level. No; never. This Body has come through Divine Sankalpa (the Lord's Resolve), to come. That resolve is intended to uphold Sathya. Bhagavathsankalpa (God's resolve) is always Sathya-sankalpa (resolve that comes true). Everyone knows the strict discipline of Prashaanthi Nilayam; the order is "Not even a flower is to be brought!"

Due to ignorance and vicious motives they do not grasp correctly the nature of Sai Shakthi. They interpret it as something else. That shakthi (power) is unlimited; the fault lies in their vision, if they cannot see it as it is. There is nothing that Divine Power cannot accomplish.

It can transmute earth into sky and sky into earth. To doubt this is to prove that you are too weak to grasp the grandeur of the Universal.

Honour the Dharma of your profession

I have come to instruct all in the essence of the Vedhas, to shower on all this precious gift, to protect and preserve Sanaathana Dharma. Each profession has a Dharma, a set of moral restrictions and regulations guiding its exercise; if these are honoured, then the joy of the participant will go on adding itself, plus, plus, plus. There are differences of innate characteristics, impulses, attitudes, prejudices, excellences and character tendencies which mark out man from man. You do not treat all mangoes alike and buy them in a lot; some may be sour, some small, some big, some tastier, some tasteless, some juicy, some fibrous, etc. You appreciate them by their taste, is it not? You select them according to the species, the jaathi.

Of course, all are equal before the Lord; no one has any special claim for preference, except probably the miserable and the distraught. But, in human societies there must be distinction based on qualification and merit, whether it be intellectual, moral or spiritual. If all felt that the goal is the same, there will not be faction and fights on the way. The work that each does is important for the whole community; there is no high or low. It is not for this, that one has to compete with others; these earthly statuses and superiorities and inferiorities are tawdry tinsel, temporary pinpricks. Compete with others in the quickness with which you march on to God.

Years ago, this place was deserted waste; today, it has become so full of promise, so rich in spiritual potentiality. How did this happen? How did the plan of Malayaala Swami bear fruit?

Because he stuck to his ideal; his spiritual authority was respected.

Insist on discipline during student-life

You must observe strictly the karmas (duties) laid down in the Vedha, for you are teaching the Vedhas here. Men must observe the Dharma laid down for them and must be allotted the status they have to be given; women must be allotted the status allowed for them. Both are the children of God, no doubt; but, discipline demands that men and women must be allotted the spheres that are conducive to Dharmic life. Insist on discipline during student-life; only good can come out of this strictness. Let boys and girls grow as disciplined, self-restrained citizens; that is a greater contribution to the country than a number of well-read but ill-disciplined persons, who will plunge society into confusion. Those who are engaged in the game will be so immersed in its hurly-burly that they may not see it whole. The spectator will be able to give better directions for playing the game. So, respect the advice of those who come and see.

The Samaadhi (memorial structure) that you have built for your Guru, Malayaala Swami, is proclaiming the devotion you have towards Him. That devotion must be evident in every act and thought of yours; see that you follow his teachings and demonstrate that you deserve to be known as his disciples, by even the smallest act of yours being filled with the Love that a true Adhwaithin will have. The Malayaala Swaami had saturated his mind in the Geetha. He had dedicated himself to the Geetha ideal.

He placed this Aashram on the shoulders of Vimalaanandha and passed away. Now, all those who revere him must give full support to Vimalaanandha Swaami and see that the Guru's command is fulfilled. The Aajna (command) should not be neglected or ignored. I have much to speak to Vimalaanandha Swaami taking him apart. So, I shall stop now. I am happy that I came to this place and shared My Aanandha with you all. I changed the programme for today and came here in order to meet you and Vimalaanandha Swaami.

Vyaasaashram, Yerpedu, 17-12-1964

Good Conduct has to be the main key to life of men. It is the way of living the path of virtue, that keeps one in the memory of people long after death. If it is not the virtuous way, the person is as good as dead. It is often declared that knowledge is power. No, No. Character is power. Nothing can be more powerful on earth than character.

Shri Sathya Sai
50. Beacon in the dark

THE reason why this land is today plunged in various types of distress is to be sought in our own deeds, behaviour and relations with others, which deny the faith in the innate divinity within us!

Of what benefit is it to lament when stricken by disease? One ought to lament and be warned when the first false step was taken towards damaging the health. Ignorance of the rules of health, gleaned by the experience of generations, is the root cause of the illness which had laid India low. The ancients had discovered a cure for death itself and for birth which is the concomitant of death. They were votaries of Mrithyunijaya (the victor over death), not of Death which many nations worship today out of their greed for glory.

We praise our ancient seers but discard their heritage; we revere the texts they collected, but disregard their teachings. We expound their doctrines and discoveries, but decline to practise them! We are beggars living in a house of gold. The fact that it is precious metal that surrounds us is unknown. Discover it and you are saved!

This is called Praaptha-praapthi (attaining the already existing).

This mike was purchased from a shop; it was not in the possession of the man who wanted it. But, peace and joy are not like this mike. They are not available in shops; they are in the possession of the very men who are in need of these. A friend comes into your room when you are desperately in need of money and you ask him for a loan; but, just then, quite by accident, he finds inside the pages of a book from your book-shelf that he starts reading, a tenner that you had kept there and forgotten. It is your money, but you had ignored it; it was out of sight; he drew your attention to its existence and saved you from the shame of a loan. That is an example of Praaptha-praapthi.

The Guru reveals the treasure within. Spread the rules of religion. More than the Guru, the Guri (Goal) is essential for attaining the Divine. The very pursuit of the goal will evoke the Sathwa guna (quality of serenity) and weaken the hold of the inferior Rajas and Thamas (qualities of passion and inertia) in your composition.

Dhaanavathwam (fiendishness) is caused by Thamas and Maanavathwam (human nature), is stabilised by Rajas; but, Sathwa alone can guarantee the elevation into Divinity. Sathwa guna fertilises the upward tendencies of man; it cleanses the mind, removing the weeds of evil. Sathya is the very basis of Sathwa guna. Sathya and Sathkarma (Truth in word, deed and thought) are acts, which are beneficial to others.

Matham (religion), wherever it is practised, by whomsoever established, lays down the rules and regulations by which the Sathwa guna can be fostered and the impact of the two other gunas (human qualities) lessened. Therefore, it is very necessary that the adherents of religion spread the knowledge of these rules, both by precept and example. Christians and Muslims carry on this work with great enthusiasm; but the followers of Sanaathana Dharma have not got the faith in its excellence which alone can induce them to talk about it to others, and to make others listen to their talk. I find many are ashamed to accept the principles of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion), like Varnaashrama, Vigraha aaradhana (division of castes, idol worship), etc.

While western aspirants find the ancient texts of Sanaathana Dharma valuable sources of inspiration and they adore Bhaarith as a beacon in the darkness, the children of Bhaarith admire the tawdry victories in the field of material research which other countries have won. The Vedhas and the Shaasthras are the two eyes of Bhaarithamaatha; by neglecting both, her vision is dimmed and damaged. Her vision can regain its clarity and sharpness, only when the Vedhas and Shaasthras enter into the daily life of her children. Then, the children will have faith in the Supreme, and in their destiny of ultimate merger with it. This will make them true devotees, for they will then be devoted to their true Goal.

Bhaktha is the supremest creation. When Naaradha once told the Lord that the earth was the grandest in creation, doubt was raised, because the ocean occupies more than two-thirds of it. But, the ocean was drunk dry by the sage Agasthya, who is but one single star in the vast firmament. Can we then Count the sky as the grandest in creation? No, for the Lords Thrivikrama strode the sky with His one Foot! However, even the Lord, who encompasses the three regions, is imprisoned by the bhaktha in his heart.

Therefore, it was decided that the bhaktha is the supremest in creation. Such is the glory of the bhaktha, a glory that is conferred by his close study and practise of the Shaasthras.

The Shaasthras are now kept at a distance, because people are unaware of the sweetness and light that they can acquire through them. They are condemned as outdated, as kill joys, as unduly restrictive and reactionary. But, all this is simply the patient's condemnation of the doctor and the drug that can cure him. The patient is suffering from anxiety, fear, despair, cowardice, greed, envy and the consequent weakness of mind and body. The Shaasthras can confer on him peace, courage, confidence, contentment and friendliness, if only he would take the first step of obeying their dictates. For, the very first lesson they teach is the Immanence of God. God is in the heart of every being, and so, one has to love another, as one loves God. God is residing in one's own heart and so there is no need to fear or despair. How can you hate another, when the God you adore is in him too? How can you covet his wealth? Or compete with him? Or be deaf to his entreaty?

Scholars should not feel scholarship as burden. The body is the tabernacle of God, the chariot in which He is seated in all majesty. Do not identify yourself with it and its modifications and transformations. You are the Aathma and so, you are above these affections of the body. Cleanse your mind of the temptations and tenets of ignorance; make it free from dust, so that God may be reflected therein. God cares more for the motive behind the deed, the ideal that prompts the effort---the bhaava (depth of feeling), not the baahya (outer pomp). The goldsmith who is purchasing the golden idol offers equal sums for every gram of gold, whether the gold is the crown, the foot or the head of the idol. God too says, "I care for the depth of your thirst for Me. I do not care what Form you select for your adoration."

This Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha has been formed to teach men this path and this endeavour, revive this pilgrimage which is fast being overwhelmed by the pressure of paltry journeys into the waste-land. The Vidwaans (scholars) are fast declining in numbers and influence. They must be revered and fostered. Do not say that this is a difficult assignment. I am not asking you to improve their material standard of living more and more; what I want you to do is to remove their fear that their scholarship is a burden. Use them, to learn the essentials of Sanaathana Dharma and they will feel happy and contented. Their estimate of themselves will then be proved true. They will live in peace, if not in plenty.

Any good deed done with sincerity will be rewarded. Do not have an eye on the reward when you do it, that is enough. It is natural that you are agitated by the gathering of clouds over the Indian sky,, but, prayer to God and the constant remembrance of His Grace will remove all anxiety. There is no other support in times of dire need than God. To know Him, to cling to Him, to merge in His immeasurable splendour---that is the highest goal of man. The Governor, the Chief Minister and other officers who are here plan and execute schemes to keep bodies free from disease, brains sharp and skilled; but the mind has to be tended by ourselves.

It is easy to conquer anger through love, attachment through reasoning, falsehood through truth bad thoughts through good and greed through charity.

Shri Sathya Sai
 51. Travel Light
 THE number of those who talk pleasantly is legion; because, they need only cater to the desire of man for pleasure. But the number of those who talk usefully, profitably, beneficially is small for, few know what is really useful, profitable and beneficial for man.

 Most people are concerned only with the short run. The doctor who prescribes dietary and other restrictions and regimen is generally disliked by the patients. They gnash their teeth at such orders. But a doctor should ignore such responses and do his duty. He should insist on the prohibitions and preferences, even risking the consequent unpopularity.
 At the present time, the learned and the scholarly in every field suffer from a dire disease, namely, "under-development of the moral tissue." No emphasis is laid on the growth of virtue in the plans for national development; the virtuous man is laughed at as an "ignoramus" who does not know the art of getting on in the world. But, as the Karma kaanda in the Vedhas proclaims, all acts must contribute to the elevation of character, the purification of the emotions, passions and impulses that infest the mind, the broadening of the vision and the strengthening of man's bonds with the Universal, of which he is a part. Arjun is addressed in the Bhagavadh Geetha by Shri Krishna as "Kurunandhana"; kuru means karma; the expression means that one is the product of one's karma or activities. One is shaped inevitably by the words and deeds and thoughts which one indulges in. So long as one has a trace of Ajnaana (spiritual ignorance) one is kurunandhana; so, Krishna addresses Arjuna thus in order to entice him into the realm of bhakthi and jnaana, from the region of karma. The immortal spark in Man can be discovered Man can be certified as healthy, only when he is fully conscious of his reality and is gladly striving to reach it. Now, he is the child of Immortality (Amrithaputhra), swirling along helplessly towards Death! What a pitiable fate is this? The little ego in him is fed into a huge conflagration by the mind and the senses and he is caught in the fire of distress. Egoism makes him see glory in petty achievements, happiness in trivial acquisitions, joy in temporary authority over others. But, the Immortal in him is awaiting discovery to confer bliss and liberation from birth and death.
 There is a definite technique by which that Immortal spark can be discovered. Though it may appear difficult, each step forward makes the next one easier and a mind made ready by discipline is able to discover the Divine basis of man and of Creation in a flash. There is no short-cut to this consummation. One has to give up all the impediments which one has accumulated so far and become light for the journey. Lust, greed, anger, malice, conceit, envy, hate, all these pet tendencies have to be shed. It is not enough if you hear the discourses of Sai Baaba and count the number that you have listened to. Thousands are here before Me now; but, that figure has no significance. Only those who practise at least one of the things I emphasise, count.

 The Lord appeared before Bheeshma after the Mahaabhaaratha war, for, Bheeshma was praying to have Him before his eye when he left this world. The bhaktha yearns for Bhagavaan, but, believe Me, Bhagavaan also yearns for the bhaktha. That is why He assumes human form and moves among them. He derives as much Aanandha as the bhaktha derives when He moves with him. In fact, when the bhaktha takes one step towards Him, He takes ten towards him. That is the measure of His Grace and His Aanandha. The Lord is everywhere, in the house, outside it, before, behind, beside the bhaktha; but, men do not recognise Him or realise the value of so recognising Him.
 God is the mainspring of your life The Lord is the unseen foundation on which your life is built. He is the source, sustenance and strength. Without His Will, no leaf can turn, no blade of grass can quiver. What firmer foundation can you desire than this? Once you know that the Lord, the Omnipotent Power, is the mainspring of your life, there will be no fear any more. When you suspect the strength of the foundation of a house, you are afraid to enter it; when you suspect the skill of the manufacturer, you are nervous to ride in the car. Bheeshma and other bhakthas as well as Shankara and other Inaanis knew that the Lord is the Aadhaara (basis), and so they had no fear at all. But, that faith has not taken root in men today and so, this has become an Age of Fear and Anxiety, of Ashaanthi (absence of peace).
 Gandhi relied on the Lord's Grace and the Lord's Might and he won.
 The atom bomb will only recoil with all its deadly potentialities on the very nations that trust in it. You know the story of Bhasmaasura, how he won from the gods the deadly boon by which he could turn to ashes all the things and beings upon which he placed his hand! In an unguarded moment, he placed his hand on his own head and the boon proved to be a bomb that finished him.

How to purify the mind?
Know the Aathma which is your Reality; know that it is the same Inner Force of this Universe.
Let your intelligence penetrate into the truth. Analyse yourself and discover the several layers of Consciousness---the physical, the sensory, the nervous, the mental, the intellectual--and arrive at the very core of even the last layer, the layer of joy. The five sheaths have to be transcended, so that you may attain your truth, which is Aathma.
The Aathma can be grasped only by a sharpened intellect and a pure mind. How to purify the mind? By starving it of the bad food it runs after, namely, objective pleasures, and feeding it on the wholesome food, namely, thought of God. The intellect too will be sharp if it is devoted to discrimination between the transient and the eternal. Let your thoughts be concentrated on God, His Name and His Form; you will then find that you are always with the Pure and the Permanent; you will then derive pure and permanent joy. That is the reason why I attach so much importance to Naamasmarana as a Saadhana.
Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha: 2nd Day Hyderabad 8-12-1964
52. Anna and amritha
You must all be getting very tired by this long sitting though I know you are benefitting by these discourses since three days. To reach the goal, one must know where it is, how glorious it is, and what the obstacles are, and what the preparatory discipline is. A little tiresomeness is inevitable, in the attempt to know these. These Pandiths explained the statements of the Vedhas and the Shaasthras, which reveal these points and you must be grateful to them for the care they have taken to preserve such valuable wisdom.
The first requisite for the seeker is the quality of detachment, of Vairagya, a quality that is the product of deep discrimination on the nature and characteristics of the senses, the mind and the intellect, besides the nature of the objects around us. Think deeply of the relative validity of experiences during the waking, the dream and the deep sleep stages and of the 'I' or Self that is the witness of these experiences.
That witness is you, the real you, a spark of the Eternal Universal Witness. How then can you, with such a grand' heritage and such a grand destiny, run after mean ends and short-lived successes? It is by such discrimination that you get established in detachment. When you know that the 'diamond' which you treasured so carefully is just a piece of glass, you need no persuasion to cast it out. Employ yourself usefully; earn, but do not clasp the riches with fanatic zeal. Be like a trustee, holding things on trust, on behalf of God, for purposes which He likes and approves.

A headmaster when transferred from one school to another, goes to the new place, unconcerned and carefree, leaving behind him the laboratory, library, the furniture, the desks and boards which he cherished and loved; he knew even when he cherished them and loved them for their usefulness, that they were only in his custody for some time, that he held them on trust, and that a day may come sooner or later when he will have to leave them and go. Develop the same attitude towards the riches you accumulate and adore. Then, you can die in peace and live in contentment.
Today Man is sliding into paltry pomp One great temptation for weak minds nowadays is the opportunity for publicity. Even a gift of five rupees to some charitable organisation is announced in thick banner headlines! Conceit is thus encouraged and man slides into paltry pomp. Kindness has to be fostered in the silence of the mind. The seed should not be scattered on the rocky surface, it has to be embedded in the depths, so that it can germinate.
Life nowadays lays before man many a handicap, in his march towards God. All around, the forces of evil lie in wait to drag him down in the quest. Faith in God and in His Omnipresence has to be unshakable so that man can win. Cynicism is such a force, cynicism in conversation, in judging works of art, the achievements of science, the attainments of adventure, the heights of saadhana, the pronouncements of the wise. "If you sit in one place, reciting God's Name--- Raama, Krishna, Govindha, etc." they ask "can they get food and clothing?" They do not know that God can give such men not merely Anna (food) but Amritha (Divine Nectar). The Name is enough; it has all the potentiality needed. A single gasp, a tiny gesture, an anguished cry, an agonised shriek, is enough to win the answer of God.
I Surrender the ego, dedicate every moment and every movement to Him; He has assured mankind that He will ensure liberation from pain and evil. When asked where God is, people point towards the sky or some far distant region; that is why He is not manifesting Himself.

Realise that He is in you, with you, behind you, before you and all around you; and He can be seen and felt everywhere. Realise also that He is all mercy, eager and anxious to fulfil your prayers, if they arise from a pure heart.

Pray to God to illuminate your mind He who tells you of this all-pervasive God is the real Guru; not he who promises you salvation if you place a purse at his feet. Do not be misled by such worldly men full of greed and egoism.

Pray to God to illumine your mind, awaken your intelligence and be your Guru. He will surely guide you allright, from the altar of your own heart. For many a Guru today, the fence is more essential than the crop, so he emphasises the restrictions and rules, to the detriment of the saadhana, which they were designed to protect. So they insist fanatically on the observance of out-dated regulations and checks, while the very purpose of the regulations is allowed to decay.

They magnify the role of Fate, and of the consequence of karma, without at the same time, consoling man by describing the overpowering might of God's grace.

If there is an iron law of Karma which binds man hand and foot, why do the Shruthi and the Smrithi extol the earnest efforts and penance of aspirants? Those efforts and that penance can surely transmute the evil consequence of karma, and save man from the fate that he has woven for himself. The story of Maarkandeya, whose date with Death was cancelled, is an instance in point. His thapas achieved that victory, by drawing down the Grace of God. There are countless instances in the earthly careers of all Avathaars to show that Grace is greater than garnered karma.

God has no likes and dislikes Whatever God grants is for your good, for your liberation, not for your fall or bondage. A God who does evil is no God at all. God had no likes and dislikes; he is above and beyond all traits and characteristics. He is Gunaatheetha (beyond all gunas). So, how can He be hating or revengeful? He is Love. He is Mercy. He is Goodness, He is Wisdom, He is Power. He gives you what you ask; (so be careful what you ask). Learn to ask the really beneficial boons. Do not go to the Wish-fulfilling tree and come back in glee, with a towel that you asked and got!

I do not prescribe elaborate Japam and Dhyaanam for you to win Grace. Control your tongue, make it sweet and soft, do not yield to the whims of the senses, dwell always in the thought of God, remind yourself always of the glory and majesty of God---that is enough religious discipline for you. Spend all the time that you can command in the recitation of His name--that is sufficient Saadhana for you.

Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha: 3rd Day Hyderabad 8-12-1964
Sathya Sai Speaks
Sathya Sai Speaks: yes! And, listening to that Voice Man crawls from off the slime, in every clime!
Those who do not rise, for they yearn to be raised.
Feet buoyant, light, equipped with wings---they rise!
The blind do see; the deaf do hear the mighty melody.
They spend many years the in the pit of night But, when they hear the Voice--- They shed the shame and bathe in Light; They re free from womb and tomb!

Sathya Sai speaks; yes! And, listening to that Voice.
Man splits the manacle of hate;
He sees himself as all the roles In this nine-days' play; all the flow in this turgid stream!
This play written in blood and tears
By a just and joyful God, Man knows.

Sathya Sai speaks; yes! And, listening to that Voice Hearts get churned and yield soft butter!
Minds do fade as mist, free from ego dust.
Brains are bright and the goal is clear.
Tongues enjoy the fragrant taste Of the sacred splendid Name.
Eyes discard the cataract, of craving for this and that.
Spines are straightened, gaits erect.
Hands are cleansed, heads get shrunk Zeroes transformed to hero bands.

Sathya Sai speaks; yes! And, listening to that Voice Seekers have found; and those that climb do reach!
Hesitation halts and courage dawns; Conviction's Roots do feed the tree of Faith.
Sages have felt the thrill.
Of God Himself, so kind, so light, Speaking to Save and Salve.

N. Kasturi
1. Close the windows and save the lamp The Mukkoti Ekaadhashi, which happens today, is also known as Vaikuntha Ekaadhashi (day sacred to Lord Vishnu). The two speakers who addressed you described the traditional legend of the Samudramanthana (churning of the ocean), with all the details found in the Bhaagavatha of the Ksheerasaagara (ocean of milk), the Kurma avathaara (Vishnu's incarnation as tortoise), the Mandara mountain, Vaasuki (venomous serpent), the asuras and suras (demons and celestials) and the various articles and things that appeared from the ocean, culminating in the amritha (nectar that gives immortality)! That legend has great value for you, because you too have to churn the ocean of your heart and win the nectar for yourself. The legend is only a reminder, a cue, a call.

The heart full of sathwaguna (quality of purity and poise) is the ocean of milk. The steady contemplation of the Divine, either as your own reality or as the ideal to be reached, is the Mandara mountain plated in it as the churning rod. Vaasuki, the serpent that was wound round the churning rod as a rope, is the group of the senses, emitting poisonous fumes during the process of churning and nearly frightening the Asuras who held the head. The rope is held by the good and the bad impulses and both struggle with the churning process; eager for the results which each has set its heart on.

The lesson of the legend
The Grace of God is the Tortoise incarnation, for the Lord Himself comes to the rescue, once He knows that you are earnestly seeking the secret of Immortality: He comes, silently and unobserved, as the tortoise did, holding the manana (reflection) process unimpaired and serving as the steady base of all spiritual practice. Many things emerge from the mind, when churned, but the wise wait patiently for the appearance of the guarantor of Immortality, and seize upon it with avidity. That is the lesson of the legend. It is a summary of Aathmaavidya (science of the Self).

The song that the Doctor sang at the beginning of this meeting, Bhajagopaalam (be attached to Krishna, the Divine cowherd), carries the same message, perhaps in a simpler and easier form.

Remembrance of the Lord's name is the method of crossing over the ocean of the worldly life for this age; remembering the Lord by means of His Name is enough to save man. The Lord is Aanandamaya (of the nature of Bliss); He is also Aananda (divine bliss), which is to be tasted through the Name. It is Sath-Chith-Aananda (Being-Awareness-Bliss Absolute). You may doubt whether such a small word like Raama or Sai or Krishna can take you across the boundless sea of worldly life. People cross vast oceans on a tiny raft; they are able to walk through dark jungles with a tiny lamp in their hands. The Name, even the Pranava (Om) which is smaller, has vast potentialities. The raft need not be as big as the sea.

The recitation of the Name is like the operation of boring, to tap underground water; it is like the chisel-stroke that will release the image of God imprisoned in the marble. Break the encasement and the Lord will appear; cleave the pillar, as Prahlaadh (Lord Vishnu's devotee) asked his father to do, and the Lord who is ever there will manifest Himself. Churn and you bring the butter, latent in the milk, into view. That is the experience of every mother that every daughter learns; in the spiritual field, you learn that spiritual practice from yogis, who have gained and offered that navaneetham (fresh butter) to Krishna.

Curing the infection of Samsaara
There are many who ridicule these yogis (God-centred men) and scoff at them. They call them selfish, anti-social, self-centred idlers who run away from their obligations and seek asylum in solitude and silence. But, being near does not ensure usefulness. Being far does not imply hatred or fear of company or uselessness. Viruses enter the very blood stream and surely, nothing can be nearer to you; yet, they are mortal enemies. Members of the same family are envious and suspicious of one another; those born as brothers or sisters fight in courts of law and fill the pockets of lawyers. Even twins seldom love each other. It is not being near that counts.

These yogis moved out into lonely spots and sought teachers of the inner path, much as young technicians do today, going to Japan or America or Russia in order to learn skills that will help to build a better India. They do not give up kith and kin and all chances to make a fortune, because they are afraid of facing the hard realities of life; they do not flee from loss or defeat. They go, to seek the secret of eternal joy; they win it for themselves; and, by their lives, they inspire others to win the precious secret, by treading the path they have found useful.

No one calls the man who has gone abroad to equip himself better, as an engineer or doctor, selfish; why then should the man who undergoes greater deprivations to equip himself better as an engineer of the mind, utilising its undoubted powers, not for bondage, but, for liberation, be tarred as ego-centric? This only shows ignorance of true values.

There are isolation hospitals where patients suffering from chronic infectious diseases are treated and cured. The hermitages in the forests are such hospitals, where people who want to be cured of the infection of worldly life can undergo the treatment and come out free in order to serve other patients.

Ajnaani sees the same Self in all

Today is the Day when during the Saagaramathana (churning of the ocean), Amritha (nectar) emerged and was distributed to the Gods. The Gods had slid into the calamity of losing their immortality! Man too is the child of immortality; that is the reason why he cannot force himself into the conviction that he would die. He sees his neighbour die, but believes that he would somehow escape it. The man of realisation (jnaani), however, is ever ready to east off this encumbrance and escape from the prison of name and form. Emperor Janaka was such a person of realisation. He never lost the consciousness of the Oneness.

Once, Sulabha, the celebrated woman dialectician, visited his court and during the discussion, she challenged Janaka to treat her also as his queen, for, "as a jnaani, you should make no difference between persons," as men of realisation see the 'same self in all. But, Janaka retorted, "As a jnaani, you should recognise Oneness; there is no validity in talking of men and women as distinct." Thus he taught her real jnaana, the highest wisdom.

Mere drinking the Nectar which I create will not confer immortality on you. Everything that is born must die; everything that is constructed will disintegrate. But you can escape death, by not being born again. When you know that you are the limitless aathman (self or the soul which is the infinite consciousness), then you are no longer subjected to the limitation of birth. That is the secret. How to know that? It is the result of a long process of sharpening the intellect and purifying the emotions and the impulses. You may do the most rigorous japa (repetition of holy name or symbols) or practise the direst, of austerities, but if you are not virtuous, all of it is sheer waste.

You are the limitless Aathman

You may have the best of vegetables, you may be the most capable cook, but, if the copper vessel in which you prepare the vegetable soup is not tinned, the concoction you cook will be highly poisonous! So "tin" your heart with sathya, dharma, shaanthi and prema (truth, right conduct, peace and divine love), it will then become a vessel fit for repeating holy name or symbols, meditation, religious vows, pilgrimage, ritualistic worship and the other dishes that you prepare in it.

It is an uphill task: to reform one's tendencies and character. A man may study all the text-books of spiritual practice, all the scriptures, and he may even lecture for hours on them; but he will slip into error when temptation confronts him. Like land that is parched, the heart may appear to be free from any crop of evil; but when the first showers fall, the seeds and roots underneath the soil change the waste into a carpet of green.

There was a wandering mendicant once who refused to reveal his caste or creed, origin or destination. A shrewd housewife discovered it quite easily; she fed him well and when he lay fast asleep snoring, she applied a red-hot rod on the sole and the man shrieked "Allah" The real core can never be altered, or hidden, or suppressed.

But, what is the real core ? It is not the particular religious belief or the name or the language that one has learned from the mother's lap. It is the Absolute Reality which you are. You know in the very depths of your being that 'you are and will be,' that is the characteristic of Sath (Existence Being). All beings have it. You are also eager to 'know', 'to expand by knowledge,' 'to reach out.'

All beings have it, this urge for expression. That is the characteristic of Chith (Awareness). You seek 'joy'; all beings do so. That is the characteristic of Aananda (Divine Bliss). The aananda in you seeks its kin everywhere, in everything. That is why it is said, sath-chith-aananda is the link between Thath and thwam, the particular and the universal. Everything is asthi (exists), for, it is sath; it is bhaathi (expressing itself), because it is chith; it is priya (pleasant), because it is aananda.

If you are able to equip your mind with this consciousness you are a Person of Realisation. Else, you are a masquerader. There are three types of minds: (1) minds like ginned cotton, ready to receive the spark of highest wisdom and to give up in one instant blaze, the weakness and prejudices of ages, (2) minds--like dry wood, who succeed but only after some little time, and (3) minds, like green logs, which resist the onslaught of the fire of jnaana with all their might.

The little game that Lord plays Herds of cattle run towards a mirage to slake their thirst, but you ought to be wiser. You have discrimination (viveka), and renunciation (vairaagya); you can detach yourselves consciously from pursuits which you discover as deleterious. Sit quiet for a few minutes and ponder over the fate of those who run towards the mirage. Are they happy? Have they the strength to bear distress and distinction, with equanimity? Have they a glimpse of the Beauty, the Truth, the Grandeur of the Universe, the Handiwork of God? Have they the vision of themselves as the centre of the Universe? You have read that the Lord, melted and moved when one performed acute penance, comes and asks, softly and sweetly, "My dear child! What is it you need?" He has manifested Himself to give but, yet, consider the Grace which induces Him to ask, "What is it you need?" He wants you to express in words what you have yearned for and ask the Lord whom you have brought before you through the exercise of silence. That is the little game He plays. And sometimes He wills that the question is answered in the way His plan demands!

Raavana's brother Kumbhakarna was blessed with a timely twist of the tongue: so, he asked for nidhra (the power to sleep), instead of nigraha (the power to slaughter)!

The see-er should not attach himself to the seen; that is the way to get free. The contact of the senses with the object arouses desire and attachment; this leads to effort and either elation or despair; then, there is the fear of loss or grief at failure and the train of reactions lengthens. With many doors and windows kept open to all the winds that blow, how can the flame of the lamp within survive? That lamp is the mind, which must burn steadily unaffected by the dual demands of the world outside.

Complete surrender to the Lord is one way of closing the windows and doors, for, then, in that stance of Sharanaagathi (complete surrender to God), you are bereft of "ego" and so, you are not buffeted by joy or grief. Complete surrender makes you draw upon the Grace of the Lord for meeting all the crises in your career and so, it renders you heroic, more stalwart, better prepared for the battle.

Resolve on this auspicious day to enter upon the quest of Truth.

Uththaraayana is Uththama kaala (the best time). For the morning of this day the great Bheeshma waited long on his bed of arrows, the morning when the Sun turns North, the direction of the Gods, where Shiva resides.

The Sun is the deity that controls the eye, the vision of man, and so these six months, when the Sun is proceeding Shiva-ward, are very propitious for man too, to do likewise.

The real Heavenly Nectar There are some dealers in timber in the East Godaavari district here. They know that logs are floated down the Godaavari during the high floods and they are retrieved from the waters after miles and miles of journey, at Rajahmundry or some such place. Railway sleepers are floated down from the Himalayan forests through the Ganga and caught at Haridwar in thousands. Join the flood, the flowing stream and the journey becomes easier. So too, if you practise spiritual discipline to attain the Lord, when the Deity of Vision is moving towards the Divine Region, you get the benefit of the momentum. Today, it is also Vaikuntha Ekaadhashi. Many of you expect Me to go to the Chithravathi riverbed and create nectar and give it to all. Well, on the road to the river, you meet herds of cattle that move to the river and return. You have earned this Vaagamritham (word-nectar), from this discourse, which you can treasure in your minds and act upon. This is the real Heavenly Nectar; know its worth, do not allow it to be wasted, garner it to become Godly.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 13-1-1965

Supari is brown, paan is green, chunam is white but when these are chewed together the colour is red.

When the three gunas, Sathwa, Rajas and Thamas, are equated in Saadhana the result is Shaanthi.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

2. The sun at your doorstep

A man in great distress clamoured for a ticket at the booking office of the railway station, but the clerk within was helpless, because the man did not know where he wanted to go. He was anxious only to get away; he had had enough of the place. All men, sooner or later, behave like this; even if one lives a hundred years, he has no desire to continue, for he finds all his kith and kin, his near and dear, have dropped on the roadside and he has been deserted, by death. Life is no unmixed good. No one is happy if he is immersed in worldly life. Man is tossed about on the waves of joy and grief, he is buffeted by fortune, good or bad; he is the target of brickbats or bouquets; the evil around him affects his peace; anxiety robs him of sleep and quiet. It is as if one attempted to sleep on a bug-infested cot. Therefore, man tries to escape from all this, into some thing, some where; he is not sure, which or where!

The spiritual teacher (guru) can guide you where to go, which place to seek; but, he cannot make you reach it. You have to trudge along the road yourself. The teacher might take special classes and give special coaching; but, learning has to be accomplished by the pupil himself. There are two kinds of accomplishments: apraaptha praapthi and praaptha praapthi. The acquisition of something which you did not have is apraaptha praapthi; if you do not have a mike, you go and purchase one or hire one. It is praaptha praapthi if you become aware of a thing that you had with you, but imagined that you did not have. A friend comes and asks a loan of ten rupees from you, you are sorry that you have not got the tenner and that you are not able to come to his rescue when he is in dire need. An hour later, when you sit down and open the pages of the Geetha, you discover a ten rupee note that you had placed between the leaves long ago and forgotten, How happy you are at this! The ten rupees are so good as newly earned.
The Guru asks you to search between the leaves of the book of your heart, and, lo, the treasure is there ready to render you rich beyond compare. Purpose of human effort Krishna did not remove the delusion of Arjuna by His resolve, in a trice, as He doubtless could have done; He made him go through all the steps of hearing, reflection and concentration himself. The patient must take the medicine, not the doctor; the doctor only prescribes and persuades. One thing too must be said. The aspiring disciple must have an inkling already of the Truth; or else, he cannot master the secret. The telegram is sent in the Morse Code; so the man who sends as well as the man who receives must be aware of the code.
The doctor spoke of people who come to Me with various aims; yes; but when some of them do not get exactly what they want, they blame Me and not themselves for wanting things that are not conducive to their progress or for not deserving to get them from Me.
Why blame the Sun that he does not illumine your room ? Open the doors and the Sun, who has been waiting at the doorstep for just that moment, floods the room with light. You must use your intelligence to deserve the Grace of God. That is the purpose of human effort.

The disciple washed the clothes of the guru and they were hung for drying on a line in the hermitage. The guru wanted them dried quickly, but the disciple could not avoid delay! He had hung them folded into four; human intelligence must have inspired him to hand them in single fold, so that they would have dried quicker. Likewise, one should use his intelligence in the spiritual field and carry on his spiritual practice unimpaired. After all, the quickest way to dry clothes, the best way to prepare a tasty dish, these are secondary skills; the primary one is the skill to overcome the temptations of the senses, to journey inward into the region of the impulses and give them a higher purpose. Of what use is it to cleanse and polish the exterior of a drinkingcup?
Cleanse the interior, instead.
Use the stick of intelligence Remembrance of the Lord's Name is the best detergent for the mind.
It is the means of crossing the sea. The Name is the raft that will take you safely across. The Name will remove the veil of illusion, that now hides the Universal from the Individual. When that veil fades out, man finds Himself before himself; he beholds the Universe that he is.
Man has infinite power and infinite potentiality, for he is a wave of the Ocean of Infinity. You can be aware of this, if you only dare reason a bit. The fruit won't drop if you mumble manthras (sacred formulae) under the mango tree; you will have to take a heavy stick and throw it at the bunch. Use the stick of intelligence and throw it at the problem of "you and the world"; that will yield fruit.
That is why I insist on your seeking, and remaining, in good company, the association with the holy. Being in the midst of such spiritual heroes, you can fight against evil with greater chance of success. Once when Garuda (the celestial bird of Lord Vishnu), the sworn enemy of snakes, went to kailasa (Abode of Lord Shiva), he saw the snakes that Shiva wore round His neck, His arms, His waist and Feet; the snakes were safe now and they hissed with their puffed hoods at the celestial bird which could not do them any harm, since they were in such Divine Company.
Garuda said, "Well! Glide down from that Body and I shall kill every one of you!" That is the value of being in good company, for the spiritual practitioner. For the one who has reached success also, holy company is valuable, for it is like keeping a pot of water inside a tank of water; there will not be any loss through evaporation. If the spiritually advanced person (yogi) lives among worldly men, the chances of his yoga (union with God) evaporating into bhoga (enjoyment) are very great. Value of good company Being in company of the holy is like the bit and bridle for the wanton steed, the anicut and canals for the raging flood. The value of holy places, consists in just this; kindred spirits congregate there and contribute to the deepening of spiritual yearning. You can take sweet and sustaining counsel together in such places and strengthen your faith and devotion. If in any place, you do not find such an atmosphere, avoid it and move on, until you secure it. You must be careful about the food you take; for, the jihva (tongue) and the guhya (organ of generation) are the two great foes of man; the cravings of hunger and sex drag you into perdition. Desist from catering to the tongue and its greed; do not be a victim of lust or taste. Have pure food and eat it in company of the pure. Be moderate in food and keep the senses strictly under control. Also, have an eye on the number and volume of your desires. Discriminate and discard superfluous attachments and acquisitions. A fakir (holy man) is one who has no fikr (worry). What is the root of worry? Wants; and the efforts to fulfil them; and the fear of not succeeding to the extent desired. Reduce wants and you reduce worry. You congregate here in the Nilayam verandah, seeking personal interview with Me, with a load of wishes in your heart, wishes that you want Me to fulfil. Why carry all the load? Carry only one load, the desire to win the Grace of God; He will confer what is best for you. Leave the rest to Him. You have to choose between God and Nature There was a grandchild once who sat on the lap of his grandfather and asked him the very plain query, "Grandpa, do you love me?" and the old man immediately replied, "I do". The child asked next, "Do you love God?" for which too the old man said, "Yes." Then, the child retorted, "If you love God also, then, you cannot be loving me; if you love me, you cannot be loving God at the same time, or to the same extent." That is true. You have to choose. Love Nature and you have to ignore God; love God and you will realise that Nature is but His Raiment. Perform action, but do not hanker after the fruit. Do not complain that you did not get public recognition for the donations you gave to some Trust. Fruits, whether good or bad, you yourself have to consume; so the best means of liberating yourself from the consequences is to ignore the fruit and do perform action, for the sake of action only. You will not be burdened with either sin or merit if you act so. If you crave for the profit, you will have to be prepared to accept the loss also. If you construct a well where four roads meet expecting to get merit for slaking thirst of men and cattle, you cannot shirk the demerit you will be credited with, when some one falls into it and gets drowned. If you fan a person out of love, you can leave off when you must; but a servant accepting wages for fanning his master has to continue whether he likes or not. Give up the desire for remuneration and you are free; accept it or ask for it and you get bound. That is the secret of "renunciation of the fruit of action" (karmaphala-thyaaga). Life is unreal as a dream Above all get convinced that life is as unreal as a dream; do not get attached to it beyond reasonable limits. A man once suddenly gave up hearth and home and went out of the village, because he was too poor to maintain his wife and children. On his leaving, conditions became even worse and the poor woman had to witness the death of their little child, due to starvation. The next day, the husband happened to come back and when the wife reported the sad news and wept; he said, "Woman! Last night, I slept in a choultry and I had a dream. I was a very rich man, with a fine bungalow and a happy family of six buxom children; I had fine swings and posh chairs in the garden, plenty of servants to order about. When I woke up, I lost all of them. For whom am I to weep now? For the six children I lost in the morning or the child that was lost yesterday? Those six will never play again; this one too cannot run about. When I dreamt, the child was nonexistent; when I awoke those six are non-existent. What exists is only the perceiver of both the dream and the waking state the "I." Know that I, know that I is the same as "HE". You can know it only by intense spiritual discipline that is not marred by anger, envy and greed---vices that sprout from the ego. When you get angry, you act as if you are possessed by an evil spirit; your face becomes ugly and frightful. As a matter of fact, like the red bulb winking when danger is approaching, the eyes and face become red as a warning. Heed that signal and betake yourself to a quiet lonely spot; do not give free vent to wicked vocabulary. Envy and greed also emanate from the ego and have to be carefully watched and controlled. Like the tadpole's tail, the ego will fall away when one grows in wisdom. It must fall away; if it is cut, the poor tadpole will die. So, don't worry about the ego; develop wisdom, discriminate, know the ephemeral nature of all objective things; then, the tail will no longer be evident.

Each one from ego takes his birth and clad in ego dies and comes and goes, gives and receives and earns and spends, and deals in lies or speaks the truth, in ego all the while Those who do away with their ego attain salvation.

Remove the roots of egoism from the field of your heart. That is enough

SHRI SATHYA SAI

3. Follow His footprints

Shastry described the Bhaagavatha thathwa to you. This Bhaagavth is so called because it deals with the Leela, Mahima and Upadesha (divine sport, greatness and instruction) of the Lord, as manifested during His various appearances in history. The career of the Lord, whenever He appears, is made up of two strands, one earthly and the other Divine--one external and the other, inner. You heard just now of the breaking of butter pots by the infant Krishna. The outer meaning is that the child broke the mud pots wherein the milkmaids of Brindavan kept the butter they had prepared. The inner meaning is that Krishna broke the material casement in which their souls were imprisoned and liberated them from temporary attachments. He then appropriated to Himself what always belonged to Him---the butter of Faith. This butter is the result of the churning of the mind, the spiritual discipline of self-purification.

The Lord will manifest Himself only when the pillar is split in twain, with the sword of yearning.

Hiranyakashipu did it and immediately, the Lord appeared from within that pillar. He had not hidden Himself there, anticipating the contingency. He is everywhere; and, so, He was there also.

The lesson that Hiranyakashipu learnt was that the deha-thathwa must be split as under if the dehi-thathwa must reveal itself. That is to say, the "I-am-body" consciousness must go, if the "Iam- embodied" consciousness, must emerge. So long as you are in the dehi (I-am-embodied) consciousness, no pain or grief, pride or egoism can tarnish you. It is like sea water. Take a small quantity of sea water and keep it separate in a bottle; it will get foul in a few days. But, so long as it was in the sea, nothing could foul it. Be in the sea, as part of it; do not separate yourself, do not individualise yourself, do not feel that you are the deha (body), apart from the dehi ('I').

Unflinching discipline is essential

This must be your deeksha (steady pursuit). And, the deeksha must express itself in actual practice, as nishtha and sikshana. Nishtha means discipline, control; sikshana means training of the senses, the emotions etc. Naashta (food) should be subordinated to Nishtha. The deha is but an instrument to realise the dehi. Yoga is explained as chiththaviriththi nirodha---the curbing of mental agitations. It also means the Union which is possible when mental agitations are curbed and equanimity is achieved. Every chapter of the Geetha is called a yoga, in order to lay stress on this aspect of the Teaching.

Bhakthi or jnaana or karma must all lead to the achievement of equanimity; otherwise, they are simply pseudo. Water as such or fire as such cannot move a train; they must both co-operate to produce a third thing, steam. The steam moves the engine forward. The curbing of the mind takes you to the winning post. Kerosene oil and air must both unite to form the gas which ignites in the petromax lamp to give light.

To cross safely the flood of "birth-death-continuum" the bridge called nishtha or discipline of an unflinching kind is essential. It must be a sturdy safe bridge. Or else, you will fall into the raging waters and be drawn into the sea, infested with sharks---lust and anger. See how great heroes like

Prahlaada did not loosen their hold on the Lord, in spite of heavy odds. Prahlaada never gave up the repetition of the Name of the Lord, though he was tortured, twisted and burnt. One must have that determination and that faith. Sorrows and disasters are as the clouds that flit across the sky; they cannot injure the blue depths of space. Your duty is to strive on, from this very moment. Do not vacillate or postpone. Who knows when death will knock? May be, he may knock this very night, this very moment! Therefore, do not delay. Do not postpone for tomorrow the dinner of this day? Feed the spirit as scrupulously as you now feed the body.

Seek God with one-pointed attention

Detach yourselves from the senses; then, only can the Aathma shine. I do not mean that you should destroy the senses. The mind must be withdrawn from its present comrades, the senses; it must be loyal to its roal master, the intellect or buddhi. That is to say, you must separate the grain from the chaff, through the exercise of viveka and then, fix your desire on the things that last and nourish, rather than on things that are flashy and corroding. Keep a lamp in a room with all its five windows open; the wind will blow it out, for the flame is swayed from all directions. To keep the flame burning straight, close the windows. The senses are the windows; the flame is the mind concentrating on the single purpose of God-realisation. What do the outward-bound senses know of that sweetness? They are like the frogs that hop about on the petals of the lotus; they are unaware of the nectar in that flower. Only the intellect can reveal that to you.

The Shastri said that Yashoda reached the place where the child Krishna had hidden himself, by following the footprints he had left behind him, with his curd-besmeared feet. He could not be caught when she attempted to tie a rope round his waist and drag him to herself. That rope was the rope of ego; how can the Lord be bound by your ego? It was found to be always short, two finger breadths short, every time! What does that indicate? It means that there were two virtues short---and that explains why every rope, however long, was too short. The two virtues were: Dharmanishtha and Brahmanishtha, steadiness in rectitude and in aspiration. It is enough if you seek him, through one-pointed attention and devotion, through his footprints: beauty, strength, truth, morality, love, sacrifice, goodness in Nature and in the heart of Man.

The great mystery of Adhwaitha Adhwaitha means, all this is Aathma; then, why this apparent variety? Variety is the picture drawn by the delusion that you are the body, that you are the 'character' the drama has cast on you! In the drama, you sing and speak, weep and laugh, always aware that you are yourself and not what the apparel and acting make you appear to be.

Chandramathi bursts into tears when her 'son' dies of cobra bite; the spectators weep at her plight, but the person who acts so well is untouched by grief. The reflection of the Moon in the lake is broken into bits but the Moon above is unaffected. Do not yield to grief because the reflection is broken; it is due to the weakness of the medium, water. So too, when you think you are the body, which grows and withers, is elated or disheartened, you see the reflection as broken; but the genuine thing, the Reality is unaffected.

You must have heard the beggar at the door calling out in his crude jargon, "I am anaadhi" meaning "I am anaatha". He wants to tell you that he has none to support him but, his words mean, "I am beginningless." Yes, he is revealing to you the Great Mystery that makes all beings his kin! And then, when he says, "bhikshaam dehi," you take him to mean, "Give me alms." Just consider the word he uses for 'give'. He calls out "dehi" meaning also, he who is the owner of this body, he who resides in this body, the Aathma. He is teaching you that you are really the Aathma, wearing the apparel of the body and so, you and he are One. Bhakthi is not a matter of beads

Dwell always on high thoughts. When air fills a football, it takes the form of the ball. When it fills a balloon, it takes the form of the balloon, oval, sausage shaped, spherical or spheroid. The mind assumes the form of the objects with which it is attached. If it gets fixed on small things, it becomes small; if on grand things, it becomes grand. The camera takes a picture of whatever it is pointed at: so take care before you click. Discriminate before you develop attachment. If you have attachment towards wife and children, land and buildings, bank accounts and balances and when these decline, you will come to grief. Develop attachment towards the Universal and you too will grow in love and splendour.

That attachment must be sincere and steady. Bhakthi is not a matter of beads and beards; nor does worship consist of flowers and camphor; to address people immersed in these as "bhakthas" (devotees) is blasphemy. With crooked vision, character, thoughts and feelings---how can bhakthi sprout or bloom? Do not be led away by bell ringing or incense-smoke. The field must be cleared of bush and thorns; it must be ploughed and furrowed; watered and dampened to depth; then the seeds have to be planted into the earth; scattered on the surface, they do not germinate. Plant the seeds, water the field, remove the weeds; keep away stray cattle, manure the plants; dust them with pesticides, and then, you can collect the crop.

Saadhana (spiritual discipline) means and includes all these steps. You are judged by your spiritual discipline; not by the number of temples you have gone into or the quantity and cost of the offerings you have made in those shrines. Do not calculate the length of time you have spent in the company of the Lord's Name, and exult. Calculate rather the length of time you have wasted, away from that contact, and repent. Have that name ever in your thoughts and you can brave any calamity. Remember how Seetha braved the taunts, insults and tortures of the aggressors in Lanka; what was it that gave her the mental stamina? It was Raamaanaama and nothing else. Kaama and krodha cannot co-exist with Raamaadhyaana (meditation on Raama). Bad karma will spoil saadhana. The action of Raama dhyaana will remould your mind. The most tasty dish will become uneatable if a drop of kerosene falls on it. One bad karma will spoil the spiritual discipline. Siddhaartha, who was kept long inside the palace grounds, away from the world of grief, asked for a chance to go into the city and when, during that ride through the carefully cleaned streets, he saw one after the other the harrowing scenes of illness, old age and death and the tonic sight of a monk, his buddhi (intellect) was corrected in a trice. Buddhih karmaanusaarini---intellect follows action---it is said. The efforts of his father to keep him isolated and happy were foiled; Truth dawned on him in a moment; and the train of events which his father dreaded for 22 years did happen. Siddhaartha left his wife and child and sought to find the secret of Liberation for all mankind. Kamsa was himself driving the chariot whereon his newly wedded sister and her husband sat; he was riding on the crest of a wave of unmixed joy; just then, he heard a celestial Voice chiding him for that joy. It said, her eighth child would slay him. That sentence transformed him into a monster of hate. That one karma affected him so much. Engage yourselves in action that will direct your intellect and mind along divine and sublime channels. Win Grace through karma; do karma that will win Grace. If the lamp does not burn, it proves that you have not lit it. The Lord is neither benignant nor malignant; your progress is reflected back as Grace; your decline is reflected back as its absence. The mirror just reflects. It has no partiality or prejudice. Immerse yourself in meditation Always have the meaning and purpose of life in view. And experience that purpose and that meaning. You are That; that is the truth. You and the Universal are One; you and the Absolute are One; you and the Eternal are One. You are not the Individual, the Particular, the Temporary. Feel this, know this. Act in conformity with this. Some one came to Ramanamaharshi and asked him thus' "Swaami! I have been doing intense dhyaana for the last 18 years; but I have failed to realise the Ideal on which my dhyaana is concentrated. How many more years should I continue thus?" Ramana answered, "It is not a question of a certain number of years. You have to continue dhyaana until the awareness that you are doing dhyaana disappears. "Forget the ego; let it melt and merge, with all its layers of consciousness. There are some who, while meditating, strike at the mosquitoes that pester them! No, Immerse yourselves in dhyaanam until you transcend all physical and mental urges and impulses. Vaalmeeki was covered by the ant-hill that grew over him; people discovered him by the sound of Raama naama that emanated from that mound. Ignore the deha (body) so that you may discover the dehi (indweller); do not get engrossed in outer finery but delve deep and discover the inner splendour. What does the saadhana of ignoring the body imply? It means turning aside from the temptations of the sense, the overcoming of the six enemies: desire, anger, greed, attachment, pride and malice (kaama krodha, lobha, moha, madha and maatsarya). Anger turns a man into a drunken brute. The other impulses are equally vicious. Seek only salutary karma; eat only saathwik food--food that will not disturb the equanimity you earn through your saadhana. Do not break the even tenor of your spiritual practice. Remember how Raamadas never gave up his Naama saadhana in spite of jeers and jail. You can be really healthy and happy only when you are immersed in the Universal. If you are in aathma thathwa (essential nature of the Self), you will be fresh, happy and healthy. When you separate, and feel that you are in deha thathwa (principle of body), you start declining. Offer God the fragrance of your virtue The Bhaagavatha says that Krishna was stealthily eating the butter that was stored in the houses of the gopees. What is the significance of this behaviour? Did he go about stealing butter because he had no butter at home? It is not butter that he coveted; it is the cream of virtue kept in the (heart) pot that he wants. That cream is the genuine Aathma, secured after vigorous churning,

And, was it 'stealing' that he did? He is 'Hari', He who robs, who appropriates. He sees all,

Himself unseen. As soon as He enters, you awake, your inner consciousness is alerted. You offer

Him the fragrance of your virtue, the courage of your heart, the wisdom of your experience. That is the kind of thief He is! Cultivate love towards Him. Likes and dislikes are more the products of habit and training. The senses drag you away from Him; but, do not yield; they will lie low soon. Sincere yearning born of steady discrimination--this alone can help you. I bless you that you may grow in these from day to day. I won't keep you longer. Sing a Naamaavali or two and then, you can disperse.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 29-1-1965

4. Kare kankanam

You heard the discourse on Krishna thathwa, based on the famous dialogue between Krishna and Rukmini, as the text. That dialogue appears very worldly, but the transcendent can be understood by the common man only through the language of the transitory. The unknowable has to be hinted at through the crude landmarks of the already known. Take the hymn that describes Krishna as, "Kasthuri thilakam". Outwardly, it delineates the beautiful form and describes the ornaments and appurtenances of the Lord. But each of these words has a deeper significance which should not be missed.

The thilakam or dot of kasthuri or musk on the forehead of Krishna is the symbol of the Eye of Wisdom, the Inner Eye, the inward-directed vision, like the third eye on the forehead of Shiva.

Kasthuri means jnaanam or supersensual knowledge or wisdom. Then the hymn speaks of kowsthubha gem on the chest. It indicates the aananda in the heart, the untarnished aananda of the Lord who is Aananda swaruupi (bliss personified). Next in the poem is the shining pearl on Krishna's nose-ring. Well, the Navamoukthikam on His naasaagra (nose-tip) is indicative of the success that attends one-pointed concentration on His Glory for which the tip of the nose is considered by adepts in yoga as a point of help. And, the pearl is, in Hindu mythology, produced out of the rain drop, from the first, pure, unsullied showers that is swallowed by the oyster that has been waiting long for the precious gift from the heavens. It indicates the transforming effect of yearning and the natural thirst for the pure and the true which irks the human heart.

Take the next item in the description' the Flute in the hand. That reminds all of the need to make oneself into a hollow reed, with no trace of the pith of material greed. Become straight, empty yourself of all obstructing desires and the Lord's breath will flow through you, making sweet music that awakens every soul.

The three vows of Lord Krishna

And the kankana, in the description, 'kate kankana'. That does not mean 'bangles', which is the meaning given in the lexicon. Kankana is the word for dedicatory armlet, worn when a person resolves on a vow. You may wonder what the vows are which Krishna took upon Himself! I shall tell you what they are. They are mentioned in the Bhagavad Geetha for all humanity to read, know, and believe. There are three vows in all:

(1) Parithraanaaya saadhoonaam, vinaasayacha dushkrithaam, dharma samsthaapanaarthaya sambhavaami yuge yuge---"For the protection of the good and the punishment of the bad, for the establishment of the Moral Order, I shall concretise Myself, age after age".

(2) Ananyaaschinthayantho maam ye janaah paryupaasathe theshaam nithya-abhiyukthaanaam yoga kshemam vahaamyaham---"Whoever is wholly immersed in My contemplation, with no other thought, I shall be ever with Him- and I shall bear the burden of his welfare".

(3) Sarvadharmaan parithyajya maamekam saranam vraja aham thwaa sarva paapebhyo mokshayishyaami, maasucha---"Surrender unto Me, giving up all other duties and obligations; I shall liberate you from all sin; do not grieve." These are the three vows that Krishna has taken, and the armlets are reminders of these tasks on which He is set.

Feel the truth with subtle intelligence

The poem goes on to another item, the Harichandana (yellow sandalpaste) that He has applied over all His limbs. He wears yellow robes and has the fragrant yellow sandal all over. The yellow is the symbol of Prakrithi, which He wears as His outer apparel and attraction. In fact Prakrithi or Nature is what He is pleased to wear or appear in; He can don it or doff it at will. It is His Aathma maaya. The poem ends with the beautiful Name by which Krishna is addressed.

Gopaala choodaamani, the Crest Jewel of the cowherds! What are the cows? The 'go's? 'Go' means the 'jeevi', the individual soul, of which He is the paala, protector; the Lord fosters the cows and leads them into safety and peace. 'Go' also means the indriyas or senses that roam about to graze in the external world and Gopaala is the Lord, who curbs and guides the senses into safe secure paths. This meaningful description was the product of the experience of a Yogi, who had the vision in his spiritual ecstasy; so, there is no suggestion of the sensual in the entire poem.

The Bhaagavatha epic is related to King Pareekshith by Shuka, the greatest of the sages who was planted in unshakable Brahmacharya; this is enough guarantee that no trace of the sensual has infiltrated into it. This dialogue between Krishna and Rukmini has also to be considered in the same worshipful attitude.

You should cultivate an attitude of inseparable attachment to the Lord, who is your very self. If He is a flower, you should feel yourself a bee that sucks its honey; if He is a tree, be a creeper that clings to it; if a cliff, then feel that you are a cascade running over it; if He is the sky, be a tiny star that twinkles in it; above all, be conscious of the truth that you and He are bound by Supreme Love. If you feel this acutely, not with the gross intelligence, but with the subtle intelligence, then, the journey will be quick and the goal can be won.

The sthula buddhi (gross intelligence) keeps you walking but, the subtle intelligence flies you to the destination. The gross is too much weighed down by the body; the subtle transcends the body and lightens the burden.

Free yourself from wish and will

The Shastry mentioned the axiom, Ekamevaad-witheeyam. One only, not Two. If it is not two, it may be three; so, it is defined also as One only. It is the inner motivator of all (Sarvaantharyaami), like the string running through all the beads. If it is inside all, why is it not observable in all, you may ask. Picture a rosary of several types of beads' coral, pearl, tulsi, rudraaksha, crystal or conch, etc. The string passes through each and holds all the beads together, no doubt; but it is only in the transparent beads that it is visible. So too, you have to make yourself transparent, free from wish and will, that hide or befog; then only, can the Inner Motivator be seen. You cannot argue that since it is not seen, it is not there. To earn transparency, purity of intention, impulse and instinct is essential; that is achieved by systematic and sincere spiritual discipline.

A ladder has to be as tall as the height you want to reach; your saadhana has to be as long as the time taken to reach the goal. When the walls are completed, the scaffolding is removed; when the Vision of the Reality is attained, japa, vratha, puja, archana, sravana, keerthana---forms of spiritual discipline can be dispensed with. You must be watching for every chance to dwell on noble thoughts, do elevating tasks, curb the downward pull of the ego.

Let Me give one instance. Take your own name. The name must be resonant of the real Self, not a description of the body, as Nallaiah or Kempiah or Kariyappa---the Black man, the Fair man or the Dark man. Have names that are saturated with divinity, like Raama or Krishna or Lakshmana or Bharatha. And know and follow the implications of the name. Live up to your name

A son named Raama nowadays files a suit against the father for his share of the property! A son called Lakshmana is the leader of a faction against the elder brother! Live up to the name you are known by. Do not shorten the names and behead them into lifeless corpses, like V. D. Rao, for Vasudeva Rao, or V. A. Dani for Vishweshwara Avadhaani. Keep them as they are, so that you as well as others can have the precious chance of uttering the name of the Lord at least when they accost you. It is a crime against your parents and ancestors to defile the name that they have handed down to you, live it yourself and hand it on to your children, and children's children, unimpaired.

For all types of spiritual discipline, congenial company is very necessary. Man is shaped by the company he keeps; so, be ever vigilant of the air you breathe; it is fouled by the foul thoughts of the men among whom you move. The pure water that falls as rain from the sky is changed into a hundred tastes and colours by the soil on which it falls. But, even the slimy slush of the gutter has some hope of turning into pure water again; for, when the Sun shines, it can rise as vapour into the clouds and regain its pristine nature. To cleanse the mind, prayer is the water and repentance is the soap. Mere water or Vim cannot do the job; repentance must be followed by resolute determination not to repeat the wrong. You must pray for help in saadhana, through Grace.

Where there is duality, there is fear

Guard the wisdom gained from the snares of attachment and aversion---this must be the theme.

For, where there is duality, there is fear, there is decline and death.

Victory, at the polls ensures power for only five years: when that period ends, the M.L.A. has once again to seek the votes.

Good acts done with attachment ensure Heaven, from where one has to come again to Earth, when the deposit is spent out.

A man landing at Madras with a thousand rupees is master of all the bazaars, cinema houses, hotels, taxis to the extent of that sum, but, when his purse is rendered empty he has to escape back into his village, perhaps as a ticketless traveller, harassed by policemen at every halt. No, heaven is no solution for the hunger of the soul! The river must reach the sea, not the desert sands; the waters have to merge with water. That is the consummation, named Kaivalya, or Saayujya. To keep that goal ever in focus, have the wavering mind continuously in leash. When the Sun is in the sky, the Moon is blazed out of sight. Buddhi, the sharpened intellect, is the Sun; the pale satellite, waxing and waning, the Moon, is the Mind. So, give intelligence full prominence; let the mind subserve the dictates of reason, not of passion.

Become the ruler of the senses, not their slave. Hrishikesa, an appellation of Krishna, means Master of the senses; Gudaakesa, an appellation of Arjuna, also conveys the same sense. That is the reason why they two became comrades. The senses drag you into the jungle of nature; so, what use is it for you to flee into the jungle, with the senses wild with hunger? Why did the sages go into the jungle? To sink their minds in the silent calm of the forest; to dwell ever in the thought of God whose voice is heard when all other voices cease. If you close the windows that bring in the other voices, then, your home can be transformed into a Forest of Freedom, a Hermitage of thapas (penance.) "Where Raama is, Ayodhya is" said Sumitra to Lakshmana.

Instal Raama in your heart, it becomes Ayodhya, that is to say, 'invincible,' 'incapable of being captured by foes.'

Reduce contacts to a minimum

Be silent yourself; that will induce silence in others. Do not fall into the habit of shouting, talking long and loud. Reduce contacts to the minimum. Carry with you an atmosphere of quiet contemplation, wherever you happen to be. There are some who live in a perpetual hullabaloo, in a tornado of noise. Whether they are in an exhibition or a fair or a hotel, or a temple or the Prashaanthi Nilayam, they wag their tongues and will not stop.

These will not proceed far on the Godward road.

There are others who relish disputes and arguments; they are never content with obvious facts; they must create doubts where none existed before, and shake faith.

They dispute whether Raama is superior to Krishna, or whether Krishna is a fuller or a lower incarnation of Godhead! People who have not touched the outskirts of the Capital City dare dispute about the appearance and glory of the Emperor, who resides in the Palace in the heart of the City! That is the pitiable state of scholarship today.

The Maharaajah of Burdwan once held a Conference where the excellences of Shiva and Vishnu were considered. The Panchaakshari (five-letter) manthra of Shiva and the Ashtaakshari (eightletter) manthra of Vishnu were expounded by rival Pandits and extolled. The Maharaajah refused to offer exclusive loyalty to either Shiva or Vishnu; he wanted the Chief Priest of his palace, who was a great scholar and Saadhaka, to pronounce his judgement. He said that none of the Pandits had seen Shiva or Vishnu, though they were all prepared to argue on behalf of them. He declared that any one who had seen either will be silent about not only what he had seen, but even of what he had not seen. That declaration put an end to the quarrels, and every one returned home rather shamefaced at their inexperience!

The first step of the spiritual discipline

Winnow the real from the apparent. Look inside the event, for the kernel, the meaning. Dwell over on your Aathmic reality; you are pure, you are indestructible; you are unaffected by the ups and downs of life; you are the true, the eternal, the unchanging Brahmam, the entity which is all this. A mere five-minute inquiry will convince you that you are not the body, or the senses, the mind or the intelligence, the name or the form, but that you are the Aathma itself, the same

Aathma that appears as all this variety. Once you get a glimpse of this truth, hold on to it; do not allow it to slip. Make it your permanent possession.

As a first step towards the acquisition of this viveka (wisdom) and vairagya (detachment), enter from now on into a discipline of Naamasmarana---the incessant remembrance of God through the Name of the Lord. A fashionable excuse that is trotted out by those who do not like this discipline is 'want of time!' It does not need any special time or extra allotment of time; it can be done always, in the waking stage, whether you are bathing or eating, walking or sitting. All the hours now spent in gossip, in watching sports or films, in hollow conversation can best be used for silent contemplation of the Name and Form, and splendour of the Lord.

Now, you complain of want of appetite for God. You have lost appetite because you have eaten unwholesome food, not because you have had a surfeit of good food. You have no knowledge of which food is wholesome, what are its components, etc. You believe that the unwholesome food you get, through the impure gateways of the senses, will keep you healthy! Learn this lesson from here and return, better equipped, to your places. If you fail to learn this, then you have wasted money and time coming and staying here.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 30-1-1965

Purify the heart by being good and kind to all. Do not attempt to find fault with others.

Look upon all with love, with respect, with faith in their sincerity. I would ask you to treat your servants kindly.

Do not entertain hatred or contempt in your heart; show your resentment if you must, through words, not action.

Repent for the errors that you commit and decide never to repeat them; pray for strength to carry out your resolutions.

5. The pleasant and the profitable

Last year too I happened to be here in this town (Penukonda) in the month of February; now I am here again, four days after the year is over! This does not satisfy Me, this annual visit. My mission is to spread Aananda and so I am ready to come among you, not once but twice or thrice, as often as you want Me. The drill and gymnastics exhibited by the boys and girls of this School pleased the eye, by the patterns and the quick skill shown. The songs provided a pleasant background, and I must speak a word in appreciation of the Physical Education Expert, who arranged this show. He is so eager to promote the physical education of the students that he has asked again and again for a first class stadium for the school. He is eager to put this school at the head of all the schools of the State, so far as his field is concerned. Such enthusiasm is commendable. I bless his efforts.

You probably think that, since people from all parts of India even from countries outside India pass through your town in continuous flood towards Prashaanthi Nilayam at Puttaparthi, they must be pouring their contributions into the coffers of the Nilayam.

Let Me declare the truth to you; I do not take anything from any one, except their love and devotion. For the last 29 years, this has been My consistent practice. The people who come there are giving Me just the wealth that you have all given Me today, the wealth of Faith, Devotion and Love, that is all.

To understand any one, you must be with them and near them; you must approach them, not with hatred or anger, but in friendship and love. So too in My case. How can you know Me, if you do not come near Me and unto me?

Students! You must win a fair name for yourself, your parents and school by your earnestness in study and enthusiasm to serve others. Your parents are bearing great hardships to keep you here in comfort; they are toiling in the fields, in the sun and rain, and sending you hard earned cash, expecting you to study well and support them. First, pay back the debt of love to them; do not behave in such a way that they repent the day when they put you to school. All other debts come later, even the debt to the motherland or mother-tongue, of which so much is heard now, all over the country.

Meet obstacles with courage

I find that the students of this School have been calm, while all round a storm is raging over this problem of language which is best left to the elders of the land. I am glad you are carrying out this programme of School Day so joyfully and nicely. When such storms brew, parents are overcome by anxiety, for they are in the dark about the movements and activities of their children. Keep them free from worry; show them the gratitude they deserve; return them the Love they pour freely into your hearts. Remember always that it is easy to do what is pleasant; but it is difficult to be engaged in what is beneficial. Not all that is pleasant is profitable. Success comes to those who give up the path strewn with roses, and brave the hammer-blows and swordthrusts of the path fraught with danger. As a matter of fact, no road is strewn with rose petals.

Life is a battlefield, a Dharmakshethra, where duties and desires are always in conflict. Smother the fiery fumes of desire, of hatred and anger that rise up in your hearts; it is sheer cowardice to yield to these enemies that turn you into beasts. When obstacles come, meet them with courage.

They harden you, make you tough.
Steps that lead to Self-knowledge The best way to get rid of weakness is to strike at the very taproot of the tree---the mistake that you are the body, with this name and this form, these senses, this intelligence and this mind.

These are all the luggage you carry. Don't you say, my nose my mind, my hand, my reason, just as you say, my book, my umbrella? Who is this I that calls all these 'mine'? That is the real 'you'.

It was there when you were born, when you were sleeping forgetful of all else, forgetful even of your body with all its equipment, internal and external. That I cannot be harmed; it does not change, it knows no death or birth. Learn the discipline that makes you aware of this Truth and you will be ever free and bold. That is real vidya, the Aathmavidya, which the sages have gathered for you. The thousands who come to Puttaparthi are coming there for this precious wealth; you too must, one day or the other, learn this and save yourselves. All men have to reach the goal, travelling along the path of wisdom.

This knowledge comes as soon as you look into yourselves and analyse your own experience.

But, in order to get the craving for that analysis, you have to educate yourselves into the attitude.

Developing good habits, avoiding bad ones, mixing in the company of the pious, being active in good deeds, serving those in distress---these are all steps that will lead you into the glorious path of Self-knowledge. You can, even now, take to this discipline and save yourselves from grief and distress. I bless that you may get the will to do so and to persist in the saadhana, till success is won.

School Day, Zilla Parishad Higher Secondary School, Penukonda, 20-2-1965

It is dedication to the Lord that sanctifies all activities.

He is the raison d'etre for all activity.

He is the prompter, the executor, the giver of the required strength and skill, the enjoyer of the fruit thereof

So, dedication must come naturally to you, for, all is His and nothing is yours/

Your duty is to believe

He is the impeller of your activities, and draw strength from that belief.

Until the wound heals and the new skin hardens, the bandage must protect the place.

So too, until reality is realised, the balm of faith, holy company and holy thoughts must be applied to the ego-affected mind.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

6. The burden of the badge

I have called all of you here today so that I may tell you something about the attitude you must cultivate while doing volunteer service at the Nilayam. I Myself have selected you for this and that itself is a rare privilege. There are so many among the thousands who have come for the Upanayanam and Shivaraathri Festivals who are pleading with all their heart to be given the chance; but you have caught My eye and you alone have been picked. I must tell you that volunteering is not just a momentary spurt; it cannot be done well, without deep discipline, long training and humility. You cannot be ready for that role all of a sudden, as soon as the badge is pinned on your shirt.

First, you must be conscious of the value of aajna, (the command), which so far as I am concerned, is more a Direction, than an Order. The Geetha was the aajna of Krishna, though Krishna supplemented it with copious explanations of the why and the wherefore. Arjuna admitted that he was a prapanna, that he had surrendered to His Will. So, there was no need for Krishna to argue with him or to see that he was convinced of the correctness of His Command.

Still, in order that Arjuna might fight with a full heart, He gave him the reasons which supported the course He laid down for him. Likewise, I too want you to know why I desire that you should act in a particular manner and why I do not like you to behave in another manner.

Next, you must develop prema (love) for all. Do not think that a volunteer is a superior person, more devoted than the rest; do not look down upon the rest, as disturbances and nuisances. If you have prema towards Me, you will have prema towards all, since Sai is in every one. You sing at the bhajana (congregational chant), Anthaa Sai mayam; ee jagamantha Sai mayam---"All this is Sai-full; this World is Sai-full". So, how can you have love for this Sai alone? You have on the walls of this Prayer Hall many pictures of Swaami; you revere the pictures; you take each of them to be Me. If someone speaks ill of any of them you do not like it, do you? You stand before the picture and exclaim in joy, "O! Swaami!" Remember every human being is My Picture. Why, every being is Me. Anthaa Savi mayam, isn't it? So, when you treat any one harshly, you are treating Me harshly. When you are insulting any one, you are insulting Me.

The six duties of every householder

This is your home and all those who have gathered for these Festivals are athithis (guests) or your kith and kin. There are six duties that every grihastha (householder) has to perform every day: snaana, sandhya, japa, homa, puja and athithiaa sathkaar, meaning bath, worship during morning, noon and evening, recitation of the Name of the Lord, offering ritual articles in the sacrificial fire, ritual worship of the Lord, and hospitality to guests.

You are to see that the guests are treated in that spirit of hospitality. You are sevaka, dedicated to service. Whether the people whom you serve thank you or traduce you, you must gladly do the task allotted to you. For, you are serving yourselves, not them, remember. Bouquets or brickbats, receive them with equal calm. It is only those who identify themselves with the body that are exulted or pained; you must feel that you are the dehi, not the deha (the self, not the body), that will give you the strength to serve best.

While doing your work do not argue that this particular bit is your jurisdiction and that other one is not; do not be sticklers for boundaries and limits. Support each other, supplement each other in joyful co-operation; strengthen each other. Act as an ideal sathsanga (spiritual gathering), infusing into each other energy and enthusiasm. That does not mean that you should carry a greater burden than that allotted to you. Do not interfere wildly with what other people are doing; or, criticise others sullenly. Be worthy of the status of persons connected with the Prashanthi Nilayam. There should be no place in your hearts for malice or envy or even competition. Spread around you the atmosphere of Prashanthi (tranquillity); do not rush about, falling on all and sundry, discovering faults where none exists. That is misdirected enthusiasm.

Observe the rules of Prashanthi Nilayam

Do nothing to disturb the calm of others; for, you know how valuable calmness and quietness are in your own case. I hope you know it. Behave towards others as you wish them to behave towards you. That is the measure of your love. Seek out the old, sitting in the sun or darkness, outside the auditorium, for, they are too weak to push to the front lines; seek out those who are of defective vision or hearing; and bring them gently near the dais making room for them, by asking younger persons to vacate their seats. You should not claim any special privilege for your badges, in the Bhajana Hall or at the Auditorium. Those who come first have the first chance; don't argue and create a scene. Let people sit quietly, wherever seats are available, when they arrive; each must earn his or her place and claim it, not in the Auditorium, but in My heart; do not claim it in these brick and mortar halls.

In the rules of the Prashanthi Nilayam, it is laid down that those who come after the bhajan or discourse starts, must not distract the attention of those who are immersed in it by striding up to the front lines or to some vacant space in the front. See that this is observed strictly. Nothing should be done by any one to distract attention, once the programme has started. You have come here, away from kith and kin, eager to uplift yourself and progress in the spiritual field; why then should you slide into old habits that breed egoism and hate?

Volunteers must not wait for chances of service to come to them; they must be on the look-out for them, alert and ready. Then, they can find them all around. It is the heart of stone that blinds the eye to the pain that others endure.

Look out for chances to serve

I have directed all residents of the Colony to inquire of their neighbours, as the first task of the day, whether they are well. This is not just a courtesy call, but a genuine token of love. Among the thousands who have gathered here, there are many who would be thankful for some help.

Some kind hand that will lead them to food or shelter, the river or the Mandhir, the auditorium or the hospital. Speak to them gently and offer to be of use to them.

Do you not see Me and hear Me, moving among them? I speak softly and endearingly; for, I love them ardently, in spite of all their faults. Why then should you be harsh and rude? There is no kinship so dear as the kinship forged by spiritualities. Family relationships are not so firmly based on identity of aims and sameness of effort. You are bound by bonds that are more longstanding and pleasant. Let these people return home and exult in the discovery that, at Prashanthi Nilayam, they have kith and kin who respect them and love them, as no relative has done so far.

Volunteers should give up life of comfort
 You must realise now that this badge which I gave you is not a passport for easy life; it means strenuous routine, the giving up of comfort, the acceptance of hard toil, sleeplessness and sacrifice. If you are used to a soft life, you are useless as a volunteer, or for anything else.
 Reduce your wants to the minimum; do not yield to the temptation of carrying a transistor radio and listening to all that enervating stuff. Examine your room, your table, your wardrobe, your box and find out how many superfluous things you have accumulated. You have acquired them because you saw some one having them and you felt that unless you too possessed them you will look small in their company.
 A foolish desire to be esteemed up-to-date, to keep up with fashion, has made you gather needless habits and needless articles. Man can be happy with much less equipment than you seem to think essential. When some article is with you for some little time, you feel it is indispensable and you do not know how to live without it. Like the silkworm, you weave a cocoon for yourself, out of your fancy. Do not allow costly habits to grow, costly from the monetary as well as the spiritual point of view. Watch your likes and dislikes with a vigilant eye and discard anything that threatens to encumber your path.
 Detachment is generally called vairaagya, or the absence of raaga. It is a precious spiritual quality, which, if it must sustain you, must be based on inaana. Now, you have here this silver figure of Shirdi Sai Baba; when you think of the silver, its fineness, its cost, etc., there is no Sai; when you think of Sai, His Mahima, His Leela (miracle power and divine play), there is no silver!
 Volunteer's role is a call for personal improvement At Thirupathi, when you stand before the Venkateshwara idol, if you think about the stone, its colour, its geological structure, its weight, etc., there can be no Venkateshwara in your mind; fill yourself with the thoughts of the Lord of the Seven Hills, and then, there is no stone before you!
 So also, see everywhere, in this carpet, this towel, this vessel, this wall, the basic Brahmam (the Eternal Absolute), and you will be filled with spiritual knowledge, inaana. There will be no attachment; this is the "San/am Brahmayam" (All filled with Brahmam) finale of all saadhana (spiritual practice). Do not despair; practice it from now on, step by step; at least see everything as His; offer everything to Him; do everything, as for Him, leave everything to Him. Be an instrument; an instrument has no likes and dislikes; be just a tool; be an efficient tool.

 Spread joy at all times. Do not pour into others' ears your tales of woe and worry; carry a smile on your face so that every one who sees you can catch that exhilaration. When you tell others of your success, your purpose is to create envy in them. You must not only love others, but you must be so good that others too may love you. Try to console, encourage, strengthen, and enlighten those who are miserable, downhearted, weak or ill-informed. Get yourselves equipped for this role. That is the role into which you are ushered now. This chance that I have given you, to move about as a volunteer here, is a call for personal improvement and saadhana. When thousands are thirsty for this chance, imagine how lucky you are and how great is the responsibility.
 When you assist some eager aspirant to do meditation undisturbed, you earn not only gratitude, but, even a share of the merit. For example, a mother may hasten into the hall, when the bell strikes at 4.30 a.m. for the Pranava (Primal Cosmic sound, OM) recital, leaving her child sleeping in the shed. If the child awakes meanwhile and starts screaming, a lady volunteer can, without calling the mother out, herself take the child on her lap and pacify it with a soft lullaby, until the mother arrives. Serve others gladly; do not serve with an air of superiority or the sour face of disgust. Let people know that you are genuinely glad at the chance to help.
 Serve others gladly Do not pretend or patronise. If you simply say, "Do not talk aloud" or give some such blank direction, you are patronising and treating people with disdain. They deserve to be told why. Tell them that silence is the very first rung of the ladder of saadhana; that it is the hall-mark of Prashaanthi Nilayam; that they must learn to make every place where they are, a Prashaanthi Nilayam; that loud talk disturbs those who practise Naamasmarana (remembrance of Lord's name) or dhyana (meditation) or japam (recitation); that noise breeds further noise. This is a workshop, where damaged minds and hearts come for repair or overhaul. In the workshops, there will be the din of hammer, the clang of wheel, the whirr of engine and the clatter of chains. In this workshop, there must be heard only the whisper of the Name of God. With new parts fitted and new coats of paint, cars emerge out of the workshop as good as new and they run smoothly, without trouble, for miles and miles. People must find this place also as a workshop for persons, who are travel-worn, weary, or about to enter upon a long journey.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 24-2-1965

7. Recruits for my Army

The samskaara (purifying ritual) of Upanayanam (investiture of sacred thread) is beneficial not only to the boys who were initiated, but, for every one of you, who witnessed it and drew inspiration from it. The learned Pandit from Delhi spoke to you now of the meaning of this samskaara; it has made all these lads "twice born", "dwithiyam mounji bandhanaath" he said.

The belt of munja grass has given them that status, he said. The Upanayanam---the ceremony of leading the lad to the teacher---and the recital by the initiate of the Gaayathri manthra (sacred formula) which prays for clear intellect, are the first steps towards the ultimate Realisation of the Reality. Pandit Raamasaran explained how the Gaayathri is the essence of the Rig, Yajur and Saama Vedhas and how the traditional conception of the Gaayathri Devatha embodies a harmonious blending of the five divinities---Vishnu, Surya, Maheshwari, Ganapathy and Ishwara, representing the Five Elements---and how prayer to Gaayathri confers the material and spiritual needs of man.

Every man is burdened with one body and four births! He is born a Sudra; for, as a child he has no sense of cleanliness or definite ideas of right and wrong. By the rite of initiation into spiritual life, that is to say, when he is taken as a pupil by a guru, who takes up the responsibility of leading him to the Goal of Human Life, he becomes dwija, twice-born, entering into the second chapter of his human career. When he has finished the spiritual disciplines and studied the scriptures, he becomes a Vipra (the wise); at last, when as a result of those practices and experiences, he visualises Brahman as immanent in all, he is a Braahmana. A Vipra attains Brahmajnaanam and becomes a Braahmana. This is therefore the first step, but the most important step, in the process of self-realisation.

Aim of all human effort

The parents endow you with the material body, the deha; the Guru points out to you the Dweller within the Body, the dehi. So, he is entitled to be honoured as a God, say the Vedhas. Maathru Devo bhava, 'Pithru Devo bhava; Aachaarya Devo bhava (Honour mother, father, teacher, each as God). To make gold more amenable to the operations attendent on ornament making, it is alloyed by the addition of a little silver or copper; so too in order to manifest the multiple variety of Nature, the Brahmathathwam (essential nature of Brahman) is converted into an alloy, with the addition of a little egoism or Mamakaaram; the Guru teaches you to regain the pure unalloyed Brahmam by the processes of sravanam, mananam, and nididhyaasa (listening to, recapitulating and concentrating on God's glories) in the crucible of the intellect. The jeevathathwam and the Brahmathathwam (essential nature of the self and Brahman) are then clearly understood as facets of the same entity.

The aim of all human effort is to achieve this One (Ekam), that lies behind all this plurality.

Without achieving it, man can have no peace, within or without. No amount of repetition of the shaanthi manthra is capable of granting him that. The Guru reveals to the disciple the invisible current that activates the many seemingly distinct instruments, like the bulb, the mike, the fan, the refrigerator, the tape-recorder, the stove, etc. He deserves your gratitude. He is like the stranger who entered the cottage of a poor man and announced that underneath the floor of that hovel, there lies hidden a precious treasure which he can take and own, by a few minutes of digging! The sage Vishwaamithra devised the Gaayathri manthra as a fine drug for the spiritual aspirant; he is also to be revered, for the drug awakens your buddhi and confers upon you viveka, vichakshana and vairaagya---(wisdom, discrimination, and non-attachment)---the three distinguishing marks of humans, elevating them far above other animals.

Subtle power of Gaayathri manthra Samskaara involves double actions, removing dirt and applying paint, when the word is used with reference to a house. This Gaayathri has the subtle power of removing evil tendencies and implanting virtuous habits, and so, the Upanayanam is a unique samskaara. Man is Divine; he has the Lord dwelling in his heart, but yet he is bound, miserable, limited, weak, agitated. Why?

He is ignorant of his reality. He imagines himself weak, limited, bound and he is so shaped by the mind, which is the source of that imagination. How then can you be freed? How are you to overcome this bhrama or delusion? If you desire to overtake a train, you must speed in a car or board a plane. No vehicle slower than the train will help. So too, if you intend to overcome the delusion, you must establish yourself in God; the delusion of Maanavasakthi (man-power) can be overcome only by the attainment of Daivasakthi (God-power). The Gaayathri promotes the acquisition of Daivasakthi. Gaayathri means 'that which saves, when repeated'! It is the torch of inaana, given into the hands of these lads venturing into the regions of intellectual inquiry and sensory restrictions. As paddy is treated to a process of pestling and winnowing and cleaning in order to get rice that can be cooked and eaten, these boys have to de-husk the individual, discover the Aathma hiding inside the five sheaths of physical matter, vital energy, mind, intelligence and bliss (Annamaya, Praanamaya, Manomaya, Vijnaanamaya and Aanandamaya Kosas). The Sandhyaavandana rite they are enjoined to do, three times a day, from this very day, is part of this process of dehusking. Time must be found, time can be found, provided they have the will and they get encouragement from the elders. Supplying the calories for the spirit is as necessary a process for happy living as supplying calories for the body; breakfast, lunch and dinner, Praathas sandhyaa (morning worship), Maadhyaahnika (noon worship), and Saayamsandhyaa (evening worship), all six are equally essential. You miss any one of the six at your peril. Inner cleanliness should be the first aim. Dear boys, you have today got the Gaayathri, the milk from the four teats called four Vedhas of the udder of the Cow that is Godhead; it has in it the sustenance that will make you shine with spiritual health. You must now carefully use it for your good; do not spill it or spoil it; boil it, make curds out of it, churn it and get the butter that is immanent in it. It will become curds by means of your contemplation on the Lord, (Bhagavathchinthana); with the churning-rod of discipline, collect the butter of aananda (bliss). You were initiated in this holy Presence, remember, the Presence that so many thousands covet; so, you have a special responsibility to fulfil your Brahmacharya (the path of celibacy and learning), that leads to Brahmajnaana

(knowledge of the Supreme Being). The body is fundamentally unclean, but yet it craves to achieve both cleanliness and Godliness, because its nature is purity and holiness. Inner cleanliness should be your first aim. Which do you cleanse more in a drinking vessel? The interior or the exterior? You may have fine vegetables, excellent tamarind juice, chillies, salt, dal; the cook may be a master of the art; the oven may be the perfect type; but, if the copper vessel is not tinned, the 'saambaar' (soup) will be turned into dangerous stuff that cannot be taken. It will act as poison to those that eat it. Sathkarma (virtuous deeds) and sadaachaara (good habits) act to protect the saambaar from contact with copper. For you the Gaayathri and the Sandhyaa rites, three times a day, will act as the 'tin' for the Hridayapaathra (the heart-vessel), where emotions, impulses and instincts are cooking. The discipline of Sandhya will tame all instincts even as the mahout's goad subdues the might of the elephant and trains it to perform tricks in the circus ring. Do not fail to make the best of this chance. Efficacy of unseen merit As many as 450 boys have had this chance today. Some persons at Prashaanthi Nilayam felt that, this being the examination season for school boys, many may not be able to come and get initiated in this sacred presence; but, see how, on account of strikes and consequent disturbances, schools were closed, examinations were postponed and almost all who had written about their desire to come are here before Me! This is another reminder of the efficacy of unseen merit; the rain falls on barren land and all the seeds hidden underneath the land sprout, making a green carpet to cover the area! No one knew, except Myself, that there were these seeds of earned merit awaiting the showers of Grace in the heritage of these boys. For the revival of Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion) these boys will be efficient instruments. They will replenish the glory of Bhaarithavarsha. They are today recruited into My army. I am achieving the re-establishment of Dharma, the restoration of the Vedhas, and it is with that in view that I am initiating in My Presence every year boys from all parts of India. This samskaara is fast losing its significance; the recital of the Gaayathri and the performance of the Sandhya rite are both being neglected; so, they have to be restored to their pristine glory. This is an important step. Until you see the Akshara (the Unchanging), you must practise the kshara (the changing), which helps you to transcend it. When once you are able to pronounce 'cat', you can give up reading the word as 'c-a-t'. The Gaayathri will help you to reach the Akshara; practise it, three times a day, in the Sandhya rite. The Deha-maatha (the mother who bore the body), the Loka-maatha (the Mother who sustains the Universe) and the Gaayathri-maatha (the Mother who saves you from bondage and ignorance)---all three deserve your devotion and worship.

Upanayanam Day, Prashaanthi Nilayam, 25-2-1965.

Desire is a storm, greed is a whirlpool, pride is a precipice, attachment is an avalanche, egoism is a volcano.
Keep these away so that, when you recite the name of God or do meditation, they do not disturb the equanimity.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

8. Shiva in shava

Today, when from the Himaalayan ranges down to Kanyaakumaari Cape, the entire land is resounding with the declaration, Shivoham, Shivoham, it is indeed your good fortune that you have been able to come here and be with Me. On all such days set apart by tradition for the contemplation of one's innate Divinity, you must examine your own equipment and decide on what to discard and what to retain. All qualities, attitudes, habits that remind you of the Absolute into which you have to merge, have to be retained and developed; all that draw you away into the relative world of Time and Space, have to be discarded or at least recognised as having but temporary value. All the joy you crave for, is in you; but, like a man who has vast riches in the iron chest, but, who has no idea where the key is, you suffer. With proper directions, dwelling upon them in the silence of meditation, it is possible to secure the key, open the chest and be rich in joy. The flames of anger, pride, hatred, envy are more devastating than other fires; they arise in the mind stealthily and in spurts; they are ever demanding more and more to feed upon. Fire is called anala in the Geetha, for anala means, "not enough!" Fire never says, "Enough" or "I am satisfied." You dread fire when it leaps at a distance; what then is to be said when it is inside your very self? How to put out these awful flames? Well, Sanaathana Dharma (the ancient spiritual code) has certain extinguishers tested by experience and guaranteed by sages. They are Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema. Saturate your heart with these and you are rendered fireproof. You seek joy and earn pain. Like the frog caught and held in the mouth of a cobra which, unaware of its fate, flicks its tongue at a fly, you too are unaware of Death which holds you in its fangs. You seek joy and earn pain, hunt for pleasure and bag grief. You attach yourselves to the body that decays and let go the God that lasts. Of course, a thousand wise men have poured this into your ears, but their words have fallen on hard ground and 'refused to sprout. Had they fallen on the soft soil of your heart and been watered by the tears of contrition, certainly they would have germinated and grown. A clean Consciousness is as a lamp; pour into it the oil of Grace; place in it the wick of Selfcontrol; keep in position the chimney of Naamasmarana, so that the gusts of Joy and Grief might not scotch the flame. Light the lamp, with some Mahaavaakya (Great Statement), like Aham Brahmasmi (Self is Brahman) or Thath thwam asi (Thou art That). Then, you will not only have Light; you will be a source of Light. The Flag I am hoisting now is a call to light your own lamps. The symbol on it is here on the ground, represented elaborately and clearly for all to see and learn. These concentric circles round the Lotus Pillar mark the stages of the progress of the spiritual aspirant to the Goal. He has to pull himself across the sandy waste of Desire, up the blood-red steps of Anger and Hatred, through the cool green spaces of Bliss, to attain the vast silence of Yoga (union with God). There he must get well established in meditation, like an erect Pillar. You will notice that there are six rings on that Yoga-danda or Pillar in the centre of the Circle. They are the Chakras (energy centres), up which the Kundalini Shakthi (the Serpent Power) of the saadhaka passes towards the Goal. And what is the Goal? The blossoming of the Lotus of the Heart and the emanation of inaana-iyothi (light and wisdom) from it, consuming all delusion and making the Individual Splendour merge in the Universal Splendour. Three gates of Prashaanthi Nilayam You will also notice that the Prashaanthi Nilayam has three gates but, no wall around, or even fence! Some sage has asked' For Him who has the Universe as His residence, which is the front door? Here too, we have entrances everywhere, nothing to keep people out! The first gate is Thamoguna (quality of inertia) and if you enter it, you aloe drawn by the garden, the decorations, the festoons, and the music into stepping across the Rajoguna (quality of activity) gate, and pass on to the Hall, where Sathwaguna (quality of poise and serenity) prevails. There is a meaning in whatever I do or speak; I never indulge in significance-less acts. These gates too have a lesson for you.

Do not treat a holy day like Shivaraathri as a holiday, set apart for picnic, cinema, card-game, revelry, rivalry and fun. The rishis (sages) fixed these clays in the calendar for the contemplation of God and the service of God in man, for the removal of the weeds of vices and weakening habits. Contemplate the Aathma-linga (spirit of the soul), the Iyothi-linga (the effulgent form), which this day emerges from Me; be convinced that the Linga is in every one of you, for it is a mark of the Shiva that resides in the shava (body shell). Allow the vision of the Aathmalinga to enter into your inner consciousness and elevate it into Divine heights; do not waste the few days that you are bent on spending at the Prashaanthi Nilayam, into days of hectic chatter, vain disputation, idle curiosity or restless wandering' learn the discipline of the place and limit your talk, your association, your comfort, so that you may live in thoughts Divine, not merely in this atmosphere but later, in your own homes. Take delight in the shaanthi (peace) of this place; do not disturb it by thought, word or deed. Utilise this rare chance, this unique opportunity, secured by the merit of many births, for self-improvement.

Prashaanthi Nilayam: Mahaashivaraathri: 8 a.m.

Flag Hoisting Ceremony, 1-3-1965

Each one from ego takes his birth and clad in ego dies and comes and goes, gives and receives and earns and spends, and deals in lies or speaks the truth, in ego all the while.

Those who do away with their ego attain salvation.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

9. Deathless though dead

Shivaraathri is the day on which Maheshwara takes up the Linga form for the benefit of spiritual seekers; what they have to seek from Maheshwara is Inaana (spiritual wisdom). "Inaanam Maheswaraa dhichched." --- It is inaanam that makes manifest the Divinity latent in man. It is the final achievement of all thapas (penance), all yoga and yaaga. You cannot get that joy or even a fraction of that joy, pursuing earthly pleasure. To cure you of the bite of a cobra in a dream, you have to be awakened, that is all. 'Waking' is the acquisition of inaana. That inaana (knowledge) is got by ceaseless dhyaana (meditation) of the glory and potency of the Almighty.

Two things are essential for happy life. Dhaanya and Dhyaana. Dhaanya (grains) for the sustenance of the Body and dhyaana (contemplation) for entering the temple of the Lord and merging in His Glory. It was said by Shastri that sages retired into the silence of the forest and by means of hard mental toil won for mankind the great treasure of spiritual experience and inspiration. He gave many examples of such seers; but, there are some who condemn this retirement from the jostling crowds and call these heroes, cowards afraid to face the stern demands of life! They label them as selfish, desirous of their own salvation, regardless of the rest.

The real reason for their taking refuge in lonely places is to learn the secret of liberation for the benefit of humanity. It is like the young man who goes abroad now for higher technical training; you cannot condemn him as a coward or socially useless individual, when the very purpose is to sharpen and deepen experience and become more useful! The purpose of the sages is only to keep the senses away from things that delight and deviate, to escape the infection that will damage the springs of joy.

Passions are only apparent

The Aathmaavidya that they specialise in when they are in the ashramas and thapovans (hermitages) of the forest brings salvation to all those who later come in contact with them. Their calmness and joy will inspire others too. You find fault with them for leaving you; but what good does the man who stays, achieve? People behave in the same family, though living together, as snakes and scorpions to each other. Many a home reminds you of a menagerie rather than a cosy abode of joy and peace!

This morning, I spoke of anger, hatred, envy and pride as flames of fire consuming the mind.

Now, the Shastri from Delhi said that such passions are only apparent and that the real You are not bothered by them! This reminds Me of a story. A boy offered to label the names of the articles contained in tins and cans and pots in the kitchen of his house and his mother agreed; he wrote and pasted correctly on all except the sugar tin. Upon that he placed the label, RED

CHILLIES! When reprimanded, the boy said it was only to deceive the ants, which will not swarm over a red chillies tin! Superficial Vedhaantha (Vedhic philosophy) will not keep the fire away.

Of course these qualities are useful sometimes like the hiss of the cobra to keep the disturbers away. Anger and hatred can be used to ward off the evil that stalks the saadhaka (aspirant); be angry at things that hamper you; hate the habits that brutalise you.

Cultivate inaana (Supreme Knowledge) and visualise the Lord in things and activities. That makes this human birth worth while, Do not seek faults in others; for the others are but manifestations of the Lord you are seeking to realise. It is your own fault that you see in others. There are only two things in this world, one apparent, the other, real; the kshethra and the kshethrajna. The kshethra is the deha (body) and the Kshethrajna is the Dehi (Self). The loka (world) is the Form of the Lokesha (Lord of the world); the World is the Body of God.

Make death a sublime act of liberation

You are awake when you feel that you have full knowledge; but, when awake, you are aware only of the many, not of the One. It is only when you are in deep sleep that all the multiplicity vanishes; then you are not aware of the world and of your deluded picture of it. Examine even while awake the stages of dream and deep sleep and realise that wakefulness is a handicap to the seeker of Truth; the senses are deceptive; they are inefficient instruments. Ramakrishna

Paramahansa once shocked everyone by slapping Rani Rasmani on the cheek, while she was praying before the shrine at Dakshineswar, for he knew that she was asking the Mother not liberation, but bondage! Make use of the chance given to set yourself free; do not foolishly let it go.

Perhaps, when you return to your village, you too will tell people,
"There were thousands and thousands of people from all parts of India and even some from foreign countries, at Puttaparthi.

There was a big rush to have Baba's darshan (sight), etc." That is not what you should take back from here. There was a lady once who attended the musical recitation of a Puranic story; she sat through all the long hours; she described the gathering, the noise, the lights, the mike, the loudspeakers, but, what the story was which the reciter expounded, she had no idea at all! Learn from here the value of silence, of naamasmarana, of bhajana, of japa, of dhyaan, of singleminded remembrance of the Lord, of the association with spiritually kin.

These will stand you in good stead, when distress assails you.

The master of the house was dying and when the wife and children pestered him with their anxiety, "What is to happen to us, when you leave us?" the dying man turned to them in equal despair; "What is to happen to me, when I leave you?" he asked and died. Do not move helplessly on to that doom of despair. Do not die in spirit, though the body may fall away. Know that the real "You" is deathless; make death a sublime act of liberation.

The three Nishthas of spiritual pursuit

Such knowledge can come only through a life devoted to Dharmanishtha (steady pursuit of the moral code) and Karmanishtha (steady devotion to the duties of one's stage of life). These two must end in the evolution of a third Nishtha like fire and Water producing steam to haul the train of wagons, or, like oil and air producing gas in the engine to haul the car. The third Nishtha is Brahmanishtha---the steady contemplation of the One Basis of all this seeming multiplicity, namely, Brahmam. The Nishtha becomes steady by practice that your separate individual existence is merged in the great Deluge of Wisdom, which merges you in Him, restores you to Him, rather.

Many thousands have come today to this Prashanthi Nilayam and joined this unique satsanga

(holy gathering). Many who were coming regularly for all Shivaraathris to witness and be elevated by the sight of the Aathmalin-godbhavam (Oval shaped Form of Self) have not come today; many who have not come so far have had the good fortune to be present. It is not mere chance. In the spiritual field, why, in all fields, there is no chance at all.

Such fortune is due either to Grace or spiritual practice. Enter into prayerful silence and be blessed by the Great Vision of the Emergence of the Aathmalinga.

Prashaanthi Nilayam Mahashivaraathri, 1-3-1965

Mind does not have any powers.

The only power is Aathma Shakthi, the power of Aathma.

Mind has no form.

Mind can be said to be woven of desires.

The Aathma shines on the heart, whether the heart be pure or impure.

If the heart is purified and if the strongest desire is for God, that is the best.

10. Root or rope?

In the discourse you heard just now on the methods by which the Shaastras have asked man to pay his debt to the gods, the sages and the ancestors, you heard how Sanaathana Dharma has laid down a "thornless path" for the progress of man, from humanity to divinity! Thornless or thornful, each has to tread the path, alone and in full confidence.

Arjuna was the brother-in-law of Krishna; they were great friends too; there was obviously no time to lose, in elaborate explanations and questionings while on the battlefield. Besides, Krishna had undoubtedly the power to transform in a trice the way-ward mind of his kinsman into an illumined instrument for resolute action. But, Krishna did not use the power! He only prescribed the medicine and the regimen; Arjuna had to swallow the drug and follow the regimen himself, in order to be saved. He said, "You are My friend, you are My kinsman, you are now so near to Me that I am now your charioteer, you are also in great distress; I agree that the delusion which has overpowered you must be removed quickly; but, your ajnaana (ignorance) must fall off through your own efforts, not through some miracle of My design."

Truth that is won by one's own struggle with untruth will be lasting treasure; the struggle strengthens one to treasure the treasure, for not all can bear the revolutionary consequences of that possession.

Unsteady mind can be tamed Arjuna confessed to Krishna that the mind is ever agitated and restless; he said he had failed to calm it. He said it was like the wind, blowing where it listeth. There is a fine story about Karna which I shall tell you. He was applying oil to his head, preliminary to bath, from a jewelled cup.

Karna had taken the oil in his right hand and robbed it well into his hair, when Krishna appeared and when Karna rose to revere Him, He said He had come to demand the cup from him as a gift!

'I am surprised that You, the Master of the Universe, have a desire for this paltry thing, but who am I to ask you questions? Here is the cup; I gift it to You,' he said, and placed it in the Lord's right hand with his left hand. Krishna took him to task for that error in Dharma, offering a gift with the left hand. But, Karna said, "Pardon me, O Lord ! My fight hand is smeared with oil; I was afraid that if I take time to wash the hand and make it fit to give the cup, wayward mind, which now has agreed to the gift, might discover some argument not to accede to your request; I might therefore be deprived of the unique good fortune, by the fickle mind with which I am burdened. This is the reason why I acted on the moment and passed it on to you, regardless of the breach of a rule of etiquette; please sympathise with me and pardon me", Karna pleaded. Karna knew that the mind was unsteady. But, as Krishna advised Arjuna, it can be tamed by detachment and discipline.

The mind must become the servant of the intellect, not the slave of the senses. It must discriminate and detach itself from the body. Like the ripe tamarind fruit, which becomes loose inside the shell, it must be unattached to this shell, this casement called body. Strike a green tamarind fruit with a stone and you cause harm to the pulp inside; but, strike the ripe fruit and see what happens. It is the dry rind that falls off; nothing affects the pulp or the seed. The ripe saadhaka (aspirant) does not feel the blows of fate or fortune; it is the unripe man who is wounded by every blow. The secret of liberation

A king was once out hunting in the forest and while pursuing a fleeing stag, he fell into a forsaken well which was very deep, No one of his retinue knew of his plight, for the stag had taken him far away into the woods, before his men could get trace of him. Luckily, even as he fell, he grasped the root of a tree that was hanging aloof from the side of the well, and thus escaped the death that yawned underneath. After a few agonising hours, he heard some one reciting aloud the names of the Lord, near the mouth of the well. It was a holy man and when he caught the faint echo of the unfortunate king's cry, he let down a rope and called out to the King to hold on to it tight, so that he might be pulled up into safety. The question now before the King-was Root or Rope?

Of course the root helped him to survive, but, it had value only until the rope was offered. It would be folly to stick to the root even after the rope was ready to save. The root must be appreciated, but, thankfulness should not be exaggerated into attachment. Samsaara or worldly existence is like the root; the rope is the secret of liberation, through some Mahaavaakyaa (sacred utterance of Truth), that discloses in a flash the Truth.
Liberation is just the awareness of Truth, the falling off of the scales of delusion from the eye. It is not a special suburb of select souls; it is not a closed monopoly of expert saadhakas. Like the Godaavari losing its form, its name and its taste in the sea, liberation dissolves the name and form, aptitudes and attitudes. You are no more a separate, particular, individual. The rain drop has merged in the sea, from where the drop arose. Of course there was no bondage, at any time, and no prison; there was only a fixation in the mind that one was bound, that one was in prison, that one was limited and finite!
Caution to be observed regarding food To purify the mind and the intellect for the correct reflection of the Truth, the first caution is in regard to food. Indeed, this is a very serious matter for saadhakas.
There lived in Malur, Mysore State, a pious Brahmin who was a great scholar. He had an equally pious wife, He was always intent on puja and japa-dhyaana and was known far and wide for his virtuous character. One day, a sanyaasin (mendicant) called Nithyaananda came to his door seeking alms; so, he was happy beyond measure. He invited the monk to take dinner with him the next day so that he might honour him with due hospitality. He hung green festoons over his doors and made elaborate arrangements for the reception.. But, at the eleventh hour physical impurity rendered his wife unfit to prepare food for the honoured guest or for any one else. A neighbour volunteered to cook the meal and she was brought in and introduced into the kitchen.
Everything went off well and all were happy as they could be, under the circumstances. Only, the monk was wrung during meals by an overpowering desire to steal the silver cup which the host had placed near his plate. In spite of his best efforts, the evil idea won and the monk hurried to his abode with the cup hidden in the folds of his robe. He could not sleep that night, for his conscience pricked him so. He felt he had brought disgrace on his Guru, and on the rishis (sages) whom he invoked by the manthras he recited. He could not rest until he ran back into the Brahmin's house and, falling at his feet, restored the article with tears of repentance trickling down his cheeks.

Every one wondered how such a saint could stoop so low; then, some one suggested it might be the fault transmitted to the food he ate, by the person who cooked it.
And, when they examined the history of the neighbour, they found that she was an irrepressible thief! The thieving tendency had by subtle contact affected the food she prepared. This is the reason why spiritual aspirants are advised to live on fruits and tubers only when they reach a certain stage of spiritual achievement.
Wants of man are neverending
The saadhaka must welcome obstacles, for, they are but challenges, opportunities to prove one's mettle, to help one in overcoming attachment to the body. Shivam has no fear; only shavam (corps) fears. This is Shivaraathri, the Night of Fearlessness, of Auspiciousness, of Mangalam.
You are happy you have come on pilgrimage here' but let Me tell you one thing: unless you control the stream of desire that springs in the mind, this is just wasted opportunity. If your wish if fulfilled, you revere Me; if it is not, you revile Me. That is how desire debases you.
When one wish is fulfilled, ten rise in its place. For, there is no dearth of want; the same person has come to Me seeking success at the examination, then, a job, then a father-in-law, then a child, then a rise in the salary, a transfer to a cheaper place, a seat in the Medical College for the son--a never-ending series of wants, until at last, he comes seeking My Grace for an end to worldly pursuits and for initiation into the path of spiritual liberation! Chintha (anxiety) is what such people dwell on. Chintha means, in Telugu, the tamarind tree.
They dwell on the tamarind tree, the Chintha tree; but, My tree is the 'Santhosha tree, the 'Tree of Joy'.
Man is worse than even a dog, for he forgets favours received; he denies his master; he trusts the ear, even though the eye belies the ear. He behaves as if he has two tongues; whom he praises to the sky today, he belittles and disbelieves the next. The dog knows its master, whatever role he may put on in the play---king, servant, clown. It is grateful for the leavings on your plates, which it is allowed to lick after your dinner. But, man has no gratitude even for the amritha he gets.

Give up attachment and be free
No one can liberate you, for no one has bound you. You hold on to the nettle of worldly pleasure and you weep for pain. The kite is pursued by crows so long as it carries the fish in its beak; it twists and turns in the sky trying to dodge the crows who seek to snatch the fish; tired at last, it drops the fish. That moment it is free. So give up the attachment to the senses, then grief and worry can harass you no more. The kite sits on a tree, preening its wings, enjoying its happiness. You too can be so happy, provided you drop the fish you have in your beak.

When you know that thieves have broken into your neighbour's house, you become extracautious and every night, before you retire, you examine every lock and bolt in the house. When you know that death has carried away a victim from the house next door, why do you not examine yourselves, whether you are equipped to meet it when it comes for you? Why do you immerse yourselves in distractions like building houses, piling bank-balances, celebrating picnics, contesting elections? Engage yourselves rather in things that will make you immortal, serve your best interests by service to the world. Seek your own reality? That is what a wise man should do.

Prashaanthi Nilayam, 2-3-1965

11. Aspire for the nobler role The body is the temple of the Self; the world is a structure raised on one strong pillar, "I". For, when this "I" is dormant during deep sleep, there is no world, so far as you are concerned. You are alone, when you sleep. Before you were born, there was no world for you. After you die, there is no world of which you are conscious. To get this jnaana (knowledge) fixed, you have to pass through the preparatory schools of karma and upaasana. Karma (dedicated activity) helps to cleanse the heart of egoistic impulses; upasaana (contemplation) helps to focus attention on the Universal and the Absolute. Then jnaana emerges. This is what the Shastri referred to as the conjunction of three rivers, in the poem he read now. Once you win that jnaana, you are the equal of the wisest, for there is nothing more to know.

Karma and upaasana depend upon the dharma of the particular stage of your life, as well as the guna that rules you. Even amritha will be harmful to life, if it is drunk through the nose. There is a way of life, a method of uplift, a path of progress, distinct for every seeker, different from those of others. The true Guru knows which suits you best. It does not mean that the Guru is partial or prejudiced; it only means that he is kind and considerate. For, he does not insist on all men wearing the same straitjacket. A washerman had a dog and a donkey; the donkey to carry the clothes to the river and back, the dog to watch the clothes hung to dry. One day, the dog refused to bark, for it was illtreated that morning by the master; it was mum even when a thief was bundling up the clothes. So, the donkey decided to bray in order to warn the washerman. But he mistook it as sheer impertinence and so, without pursuing the thief, he belaboured the poor beast for all its pains! Each must do only one's allotted task; or else, confusion will arise and multiply. Let God's will prevail When dharma (which means, that which is worn, the apparel, clothes) was sought to be removed from the wearer, the Lord blessed Dhroupadi, with the grant of an unending series of saris. Today, the Sanaathana Dharma which is the robe of Bhaaratha maatha (Mother India) is sought to be taken away by her unworthy and deluded sons and so, the Lord has come to grant solace and strength. You will see splendid saris pouring into her lap from every door of the Durbar Hall, where she is being insulted. You will witness this great miracle, by the Avathaar (God incarnate) come to protect her honour, her heritage of Aathmic treasure. The whole secret lies in detachment or vairagya. The tongue has oil, fat and greasy substances rolling over it; but, it is unaffected by these; it does not become greasy. The eye is unaffected by the collyrium. The mind too must be unaffected by the experiences of success and failure, of gain and loss, of well-being and illness; it must be surrendered at the Feet of the Lord. Let His Will prevail. What profit does your little will bring you? Just close your eyes for five minutes and think of the profit your efforts have won for you. One wish leads to another; one bond brings about ten others. You marry; you get a daughter who has to be given in marriage; you struggle to finish your education; you struggle to finish your son's education; he struggles to finish his son's. Thus it goes on, like a never-ending chain. 'This one wish if fulfilled will be enough, I won't ask for anything more', you say; but I know you will come and ask for something else, which is the consequence of that wish. It is in the very nature of human desire; for, the joy one gets through its satisfaction is imperfect, limited, temporary, pregnant with grief. You sow bitter seeds and pray for a harvest of sweetness. You wail over the soil, the plant, the rain. What can they do? The seeds themselves are diseased, defective. Truth will always win. The Vedhic injunction, given through the sages, is "Sathyam vada; Dharmam chara"---Speak the Truth; walk in the path of Virtue. Harischandra knew the authority behind that injunction. He respected that authority and followed that injunction whatever the consequences. He lost his kingdom, his honour, his everything. He sold his wife and son as slaves; himself, he had to sell for cash! He was reduced from being the occupant of the Imperial Throne to watching over the cremation of corpses and collecting fees therefor. He had to refuse the fight of being burnt, to his own dead son and insist on the fees being paid by his own helpless Queen! But, he stuck to Truth and won. Truth will win, whatever the obstacle; otherwise, the Vedhas would not have commanded man to stick to it. The Lord has to take the Form that is suitable for the task He has to fulfil. To catch a gang of dacoits, the Police Officer has to move among them as a dacoit. That is why the human form has been taken. But, who, challenged with impunity by their own wives, dare challenge the Avathaara and ask for proofs! Of course, if you desire to understand, you are welcome; be near, watch, learn and believe. Put on the role if you have the courage and the conviction that you can enact it well. Are you not tired of playing the parts of beggar and clown, in scene after scene, birth after birth? Aspire for the nobler role, at least now, in this birth. Have intense craving for God's Grace. The Shastri while describing the various forms of bhakthi mentioned that the bhaktha is like the needle which is always drawn towards the magnet. But the needle has to be near enough; it has also to be clean enough. You stay far away and complain that Grace has not come! You do not scrape off, by the process of repentance, the mud and rust that prevent attachment. You come near for some time and stray away into the distance. I don't mean physical distance at all. You may be physically far, but mentally by My side. I do not measure distance in miles or metres; I am with you, in you, beside you, ever; only you have to be aware of Me and make use of My Presence. You must become an Aartha, torn by intense suffering to sense the Lord. Suffer the pangs of distress. You must realise that mere suffering is fruitless, without the knowledge of the path to attain the Lord. That is to say, you have to be transformed into a ijinaasu, a seeker. Analyse the four Purusharthas (four goals of life) and realise that Moksha (Liberation) is the goal, the culmination. Start craving for that, as an Artharthi, the lover of the truest gain. Seek that which, when secured, all else is secured. Finally, when you realise that your true 'Nature is the Aathman, you become a inaani. But, this is an arduous path and so, many who are attracted to it leave off and lose themselves. Then, like the winner of a cash prize, who revels in some city like Calcutta or Poona or Madras or who dwells in some place of pilgrimage like Shirdi or Rishikesh until the entire prize money is spent, later they are harassed by the police for loitering in public places for want of a place to rest their heads. Heaven too is like this! a place where you can stay, until your last pie, but only until then! Moksha alone is unchanging, eternal. Develop Sath-Guna to earn Grace. You come to Puttaparthi, secure a picture, and taking it home, begin worshipping it every day or every Thursday; but, all that is simply sathkarma (good activity). They won't take you far. You must also develop sath-guna, virtues, good habits, good attitudes, good characteristics, a good character. Otherwise your life is a chain of pluses and minuses, one cancelling the other out, totalling up to a mere zero. When you say, Thath thwam asi (Thou art that), you must have the traits of that which you claim to be. You say, "that and this" are the same; then, reviling that or revering 'that' is the same as reviling 'this' or revering this. There are many who pray to Me to give a name to their children, or to feed them with the first morsel of rice. These are two rites prescribed by the Shaasthras. Hence the rite requires that the child be given the Name of God, Panduranga, Venkatesha, Srinivasa, Sathyanaaraayana, Lakshminaraayana, etc. But, you curtail it into L.N. and you forget what the L is for or the N. A

'Raama' does not try to live up to the name he bears; he files a suit against his father and gives his father great misery. A Lakshmana assaults his brother, a Seetha applies for divorce. It is better to be born a boulder than as man with such a character.

Why is it that the world reveres Raama and revolts at Raavana? Raama is not its uncle's son or Raavana, its stepmother's child! It is the kinship of the spirit, your innate goodness, responding lovingly, adoringly to the goodness in Raama and reacting revoltingly to the wickedness of Raavana. It is not enough, nor is it essential that you should repeat the name of Raama loudly; respect it in the fullness of love and admiration. If you have no spring of Love in you, dig into your heart with external instruments like pujas, sthotra (worship and adoration), etc. and it will start to flow.

Welcome problems and suffering From tomorrow, I shall be seeing you, one by one, the ailing, the old and the sick first, and the others later. Many of you have come with problems of health or mental worry of some sort or other. They are mere baits by which you have been brought here, so that you may contact the Grace, and strengthen your faith in the Divine. Problems and worry are really to be welcomed as they teach you the lessons of humility and reverence. But, not all continue the attachment they are able to establish; they lose the fortune that has fallen into their hands. You will see the day when the Chithravathi sands alone can accommodate the gatherings that assemble here from all parts of the world; when the sky alone can provide a roof for them all. Many hesitate to believe that things will improve, that life for all will be happy and full of joy, that the Golden Age will ever recur. Let me assure you that this Dharmaswaruupa (Righteousness personified) has not come in vain. It will succeed in averting the crisis that has come upon Humanity.

Prashanthi Nilayam, 3-3-1965 No one has right to advise others, unless he is already practising what he preaches.

SHRI SATHYA SAI 12. Dharma and dharmaashaala Bhaarithavarsha (Indian subcontinent) knew that the secret of peace lay in service and love towards all beings. The culture of this land proclaimed that the best form of service is to foster the practitioners of the good life, the sages and spiritual aspirants. Do not decry the servants of God; do not obstruct the charity of the generous; do not discourage the study of the scriptures even if you cannot positively promote any of these; that is the lesson taught in this land.

Peace cannot be ensured by the piling up of atom bombs, the systematic amassing of weapons.

Without removing hatred from the heart and planting love therein, mere terror and counter-terror cannot establish cordiality and harmony. "You purchase a bean and demand a gourd as an extra."

Your effort is so microscopic: your expectation of fruit is gigantic. How can this wish for peace be realised? Little is done to cleanse the mind of hate, but every one expects international peace tomorrow at dawn.

At present, every one is after sukha (happiness). The hunt for comfortable jobs and positions of influence, the founding of banks and business houses, the growth of bungalows--all this is evidence of the eagerness to live in happiness. But, there is no eagerness to live in shaanthi (peace). Sukha (happiness) is confused with shaanthi; sukha is taken to be the same as shaanthi.

No one of the rich or well placed or prosperous or powerful has peace. You can investigate and find out for yourselves the truth of this. Peace is not found in the pass book or many-roomed bungalow or godown or iron safe. Your whole attitude is topsy-turvy. It is as absurd as putting the cart before the horse. The physical is subordinate to the spiritual.

The body is the cart and the spirit, the horse. Of course, the cart should be kept in good condition; vice ruins the body and makes it unfit for the journey of life. The mind is the horse and that is neglected and not groomed for the journey. It is starved. In this land where Meera, Jayadeva, Valmeeki, Thyaagaraaja, Raamadas and Tukaaram, by their intense yearning and fortitude, showed the path of achieving lasting joy, precious years of life are thrown away in silly adventures.

"I am the holy" attitude breeds grief The four Mahaavaakyas (great truths) which the Vedhas proclaim, announce that all this is Brahmam, one unitary uniform substance, appearing only to the diseased eye as many. Aham Brahmaasmi---"I am Brahman"---you must assert; then, you transmute yourself into sons of Immortality; (Amrithasya Puthraah); now, since you bleat aham dehaasmi---I am the body (the combination of five elements, that one day splits into those elements)---you degrade yourself into Amrithasya Puthraah---sons of Illusion. That attitude breeds grief; it is the root of discontent.

People who stay in air-conditioned rooms have no coolness in their heart; people who resided in the caves of the forest had it. It is not external temperature that counts; it is the inner temper.

Here, the Mahaasakthi (Supreme Power) in the Name and Form of Chengalamma is established and evident. And, this foundation stone for a dharmashaala (choultry) for the pilgrims who come to adore Her is being laid by Me. It is significant, for I never do any casual act. Every single act has a deep significance. This temple and this dharmashaala are bound to serve mankind more and more. That is the meaning of prathishtha, the establishment of temples and the institutions of service related to them.

Dharma leads you to God

This building is named a Dharmashaala, a Hall of Dharma, a School of Dharma. It should not be merely a free lodging house for pilgrims. It should have an atmosphere of dharma, which the pilgrims must inhale and get inspired thereby. The temple will inspire Aathmadharma, leading the pilgrim into himself, to search for the Mahaasakthi that is behind the Icchaasakthi, the Kriyasakthi and the Jnaanasakthi (power of the will, the work and the wisdom) that man is endowed with.

The Dharmashaala must inspire him to deepen faith in the Vriththidharma, (the moral code that regulates and enriches his profession), the Varnadharma, (the restrictions and regulations that strive to canalise his impulses and instincts, into fields that are special to his place in society), Aashramadharma (disciplines laid down for the blossoming of the spiritual consciousness during the four stages of life as student, as householder, as a recluse, and as asceric), Viseshadharma (code of conduct in special situations) and Saamaanyadharma (code of conduct common to all).

That will make the name Dharmashaala really appropriate. Dharma is the path by which the Mahaasakthi in the temple of your heart can be tapped, experienced and realised; without adherence to dharma, it can never happen.

Dharma (virtuous conduct) purifies the mind and leads you to God. It creates a taste for the Name and the Form of God. When you love the Name and Form of Krishna, you will naturally respect and obey the command of Krishna, which is found in the Bhagavad Geetha. Have the Name on the tongue and the Form in the eye and the demon called aasha (unending desire), will fly from your mind, leaving joy and content therein. This kind of constant dwelling on the indwelling God will promote in you love for all beings. You will then see only good in others.

You will strive only to do good to others.

Do your duties with God as the witness

Now, all things have gone up in value; man alone has become cheap. Endowed with the costly gems of Reason, Discrimination and Detachment, man has allowed them to slip away and he is beset with dire poverty, as a consequence. He has become cheaper than animals; he is slaughtered in millions without any qualm, because of the terrific growth of anger, hate and greed; he has forgotten his unity with all men, all beings, and all worlds. The contemplation of that unity alone can establish .world peace, social peace and peace in the individual. All other efforts are like pouring sweet-scented rose water on a heap of ash, ineffective and foolish. I bless all efforts made by each of you to build shaanthi (peace), on this foundation of Aathmajnaana, knowledge of Aathmic unity.

Gatherings like this must be arranged to spread the message of the Prashaanthi

Vidwanmahaasabha in order that you may know the truth about yourself and seek to experience it. As Kumaararaaja said in the beginning, try to practise in your daily life at least one or two of the things. I spoke to you now. Do all daily duties, with God in your heart, as the witness. This gathering is like a flood that has come from all the four quarters; it gives an assurance that Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion) will certainly rise in splendour in this land. It teaches man to investigate the truth about himself and the world. Is that not the most proper thing for man to do? What is wrong in prompting man to engage himself in the task? It is mere ignorance that keeps you away from this task. Start now, with the first step, Naamasmarana, (remembrance of the Name of the Lord, the Universal Indweller); that will lead you on to the further steps, until the goal is reached.

Changalamma Temple, Sulurpet, 22-3-1965

Whenever there is a vacuum in any heart, love flows into it and is glad that it can fill the emptiness.

It is never held back; it is offered in abundance without guile or deceit. it does not wear the cloak of falsehood, flattery or fear.
The tendrils of love aspire to cling only to the garments of God.
It senses that God resides in His splendour, in every heart to discover that the seat of God is real devotion.

13. The voice of thunder

I must exhort you to make the best use of the fine chance that you have now got, with the opening of the Sai Baba Temple by Me in this town, where you are now struggling in the sea of worldly confusion and anxiety. The chance must be used for the best profit; that is the sign of the intelligent man. As the heart is to the body, so is the temple to a village or community. Building of temples, installation of idols therein, celebrating various festivals in connection with worship there---are all sath karmas (good deeds); they provide training in service. They give opportunities for sacrifice, detachment. They are a form of thapas (penance). So, I am glad this temple has come up, through the penance of the people. Of late, this is deteriorating into a fashion, this building of temples and mandhirs. First, people must instal the Lord in their hearts. Then they become entitled to engage themselves in building temples for the Lord. Again, the construction of new mandhirs and temples has led to the neglect of old ones, which is a very wrong thing to do. The old temples have been built in strict accordance with Shaastraic rules and many generations of devotees have filled them with their piety and prayer. It is a sacrilege to pave the way for their decline. Moreover, this has become a new type of business, this multiplication of temples. In order to raise new ones, (and hasten the ruin of the existing temples), people start collecting funds and in the process, many enrich themselves, at the cost of the gullible public. When there is the anguished cry for food and shelter, money is spent on temples, where they exist in plenty already. This is not to be encouraged; the same Lord is worshipped everywhere, and you need not build a temple for every new Name or Form. Tell people to see in all Forms and under all Names the same God. That is the training they need. Multiply virtues, not buildings. The search for Truth, the fostering of morality---these have been the ideals of India, and these were considered essential for the realisation of Godhead. That is the reason why into this narrow sector, on this long narrow road and along the bye-lanes and cross-lanes, this flood of humanity has poured itself. I suggest to this Committee that they should change the venue of the meeting tomorrow so that people may sit comfortably and listen to the discourses. Seeing your devotion and patient suffering, those who doubt the description of the devotion of the Gopaas and Gopees of Brindavan in the Bhaagavatha can be convinced that the Bhaagavatham is right. It is to slake this thirst that you all have for spiritual inspiration and knowledge, that the Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaasabha, about which Patrudu spoke, has been established by Me. It will perform this duty all over the Country. In past ages, many sages, kings and ascetics left home and dwelt in the solitude of the forests and having earned unlimited Aananda themselves, they taught others the source of their bliss, namely, the Divine that is encased in the human. Remove the vices of lust and hatred and put out the raging flames of anger and greed; then, they said, the innate shaantham and soukhyam (tranquillity and happiness), the swaruupam and swabhaavam (one's own form and nature) of Man, will manifest unhindered. Shaantham is the swaruupam, soukhyam is the swabhaavam of Man. Individual reconstruction is much more important than the construction of temples. Multiply virtues, not buildings; practise what you preach, that is the real pilgrimage; cleanse your minds of envy and malice, that is the real bath in holy waters. Of what avail is the name of the Lord on the tongue, if the heart within is impure? Injustice and discontent are spreading everywhere due to this one fault in man: saying one thing and doing the opposite, the tongue and the hand going in different directions. Man has to set himself right and correct his food, his recreation, his method of spending his leisure as well as his habits of thought. World is the 'middleman' between 'I' and 'You' There are only two entities at first: "I" and "You", Thath and Thwam, Aham and Brahma. But a third, this Prakrithi (world), has come between, or rather deludes us as being in between. You know some people who go about carrying proposals of marriage, the middlemen. They go to the bride's parents and suggest a certain groom and they praise him to the skies and create a desire for securing him in marriage for the daughter; then they move on to the bridegroom's village and persuade that party to insist on a large sum as groom-price before agreeing to accept the daughter of the first party; when at last the marriage is concluded, they disappear. Prakrithi is like this middleman. When "I" and "You" have united, Prakrithi disappears. Its role is to reveal the "you" to the "I"---that is all.

As a matter of fact, the "I" is of the same nature as "You," like the river and the sea, or like the wave and the sea. That is the reason why I always address you as Amritha-swaruupulaara---You, whose nature is immortality! Prema-swaruupulaara---You, whose nature is Love? Shaanthaswaruupulaara---You, whose nature is Tranquillity!. No one addresses a gathering as Dushtulaara---O you wicked ones! or Durmargulaara---O you vile ones! For such words are not true, they do not describe man's real nature, which is love, tranquillity, goodness, immortality.

This wickedness, vileness and vice are errors of judgement, straying away during the pilgrimage, through ignorance, delusion, confusion, etc.

The various brakes operating on man

Go straight along the path of karma (action) and dharma (virtue) towards Brahma (the Supreme Reality); this is your destiny. Karma has to be done, there is no turning away. Each has his allotted task, according to the status, taste, tendency and earned merit. Do it, with the fear of God and of sin, deep in your heart. Welcome pain and grief so that you take both success and failure as hammer strokes to shape you into a sturdy saadhaka. Inner content is more important than outer prosperity.

Dharma is the moral code, the experience of sages, the controlling discipline which checks the mind and the senses. There are many such brakes operating on man' Vyakthi dharma (controls affecting the individual, as such), Sahaja dharma (controls affecting the nature of man, as man), Aashrama dharma (controls affecting the stage of life, like student householder, ascetic), Vama dharma (controls pertaining to the duties cast upon man as a limb of the community), etc. All these brakes are complementary, they do not cause confusion, they help progress, each in its own way. Krishna reminded Arjuna of his Vama dharma as a Kshatriya, and also of his Sahaja dharma as a jeevi (an instrument in the hands of the Lord). Besides these, there is also the Visesha dharma (obligations on special occasions or when faced with special situations). You must therefore walk warily towards the Goal.

This temple is but brick and mortar. This idol is but stone. But, you are determined to see in it the Divine Principle. If you can penetrate behind the stone and see the Divine Basis, how much easier it is to see the Lord who resides in the heart of every living, every human being? Try to realise that first, so that your faith in this idol and this temple can be well settled. Revere Man; that is the first step towards reverence for God; for, Man is prathyaksha (perceptible), God is paroksha (imperceptible). Recognise that you are Shiva

The Upanishads say that thunder teaches Da, Da, Dha...Daya (compassion) to the ogres, Dama (self-control) to the gods and Dharma to men. Now, since man is all three---part ogre, part god, part man---he must practise all three himself; daya (be kind to all), dama (be the master of your mind and the senses) and dharma (be constantly alert on the path of fight); that is the advice given from the sky in the voice of thunder. The journey of every man is towards the cemetery; every day brings you nearer to the moment of death. So, do not delay the duty you must carry out for your own lasting good. Recognise that you are Shiva (God), ere you become a shava (corpse); that will save you from further deaths.

The very first thing you have to do, to impress upon your mind the reality, is to recite the Name of God and dwell on His Glory in the mind, so that the tongue will not stray into lesser topics or the mind drag you away into inferior fields. I shall therefore make you sing a few names now.

Kaakinada, 24-3-1965.

14. Awake! Arise!

You must tread the spiritual path with an uncontrollable urge to reach the Goal; you must cultivate the yearning for liberation from all this encumbrance. Remember that you have to dwell in a house built on four stout pillars: dharma, artha, kaama, and moksha (righteousness, wealth, desire and liberation); Dharma supporting artha, and moksha being the only kaama or desire. However much you may earn either wealth or strength, unless you tap the springs of aananda (bliss) within you, you cannot have peace and lasting content. There is Sathyathwa, Nithyathwa (reality of truth and eternity) in you; you need not earn them from any one else. The four pillars of Purushaarth (goals of human effort) are made firm and stable by fixing them on the bedrock of the Nithya Sathya Thathwa (reality of eternal truth) in every man, the Divine in fact, on which the human is superimposed.

Maanava (man) means a person who has no trace of ignorance! And so, if you seek to deserve that name, you must remove it by incessant activity, moved by good impulses. But, while your efforts are little, your expectations are great. Your achievement is little, your boast is great.

When some one asked a water carrier whether his leather bag was clean, he replied, "It is cleaner than the bag into which you pour the water." Look to the inner purity rather than the outer one.

Examine yourself, do not venture to judge others. Search for the pearl, not the shell; the gem, not the tinsel.

Everyone can achieve Moksha

You must have heard of people seeking moksha (liberation) and getting moksha; many may be under the impression that it is some rare honour that only a few secure or that it is some area like Paradise or a Colony of the Elect or a Height that some heroic souls alone can climb up to. No;

moksha is something which all must achieve, whether they are heroic or not; even those who deny it have to end by realising it. For, every one is even now seeking it when he seeks joy and peace; and, who does not seek joy and peace? Moksha is when you have lasting joy and lasting peace. Tired with temporary joys and transient peace, man will at last endeavour to know the secret of permanent joy and peace, that is to say, of Moksha. Liberation from the cycle of birth and death.

If only men knew the path to permanent joy and peace, they will not wander distracted among the bye-lanes of sensual pleasure. Just as the joy felt in dreams disappears when you wake, the joy felt in the waking stage disappears when you wake into the higher awareness, called Jnaana.

So, the Upanishads say, "Get up, arise, awake"; time is fleeing fast. Use the moment while it is available, for the best of uses, the awareness of the Divine in all. When you die, you must die not like a tree or a beast or a worm, but, like a Man who has realised that he is Maadhava (God).

That is the consummation of all the years you spend in the human frame.

This essential teaching is absent in modern curricula; men and women live many years without knowing the secret of joyful, peaceful living. The educated are today more discontented than the uneducated, whereas they ought really to be calmer and less subject to agitations of the mind.

Education today is a thin veneer that heightens egoism and hypocrisy.

All are travellers to God

Some one was found writing "pepper" on a tin of sugar and when asked the reason, he said, "It is only to cheat the ants"! The label "education" on the present system of teaching and training the young cannot cheat any thinking person, who looks for the real purpose of education: the unfolding of the Divine in human personality. Humility and an attitude of reverence are essential for man. They are not promoted by the educational process of today; the processes recommended in the Upanishads ensured these two.

"Revere the mother as Divine; revere the father as Divine; revere the teacher as Divine; revere the guest as Divine", they exhorted. Every one has the Divine in him; so no one should be slighted or neglected. The parents who gave you this wonderful chance to realise the reality and the teacher who opened your eyes to the treasure within you, the guest who gave you the splendid chance to render service to the living embodiment of God right in your very home, all have to be revered, and served with humility. The educated man is like the man who asks for a ticket at the booking office of a railway station, but does not know to which place he is going!

But all men are travellers, pilgrims rather, to God, who is drawing them to Him.

Kaakinada, 25-3-1965

Never be afraid of death. Never forget God,

Never take this World as real.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

15. The three-day fair

Man did not come here to sleep and eat; he has come to manifest, by disciplined processes, the divine in him. That is why he is called vyakthi, he who makes vyaktha (clear) the Shakthi

(power) that is in him---the Divine energy that motivates him. For this purpose he has come endowed with this body and the intelligence needed to control it and divert it to useful channels of activity. You must achieve this by Dharma-nishtha and Karma-nishtha---steady pursuit of morality and good deeds.

You have been yearning for My coming among you, steadily for over six years now, I have therefore come today to cool your hearts and give you joy. When you suffer from the burning sun, you are refreshed by a dip in the Godaavari river. When your hearts are parched by the burning desire for equanimity, you must dip in the cool company of the spiritually great. Have a time-table for spiritual sustenance, just as you have now for physical sustenance. A breakfast of pious repetition of Lord's name (japa) and meditation (dhyaana), a lunch hour of ritual worship of the Lord (puja), 'tea and snacks' of reading scriptures or sacred books (pravachana) in the afternoon and a light dinner of devotional music (bhajana) in the early hours of the night. If you follow this regimen, you can sleep soundly and wake up refreshed. Feel that you are born with the dawn of every new day; that you nestle in the lap of death when your eyes close in sleep. For, what happens in deep sleep? The body, the senses, the mind, the intelligence, all are negated and there is not a trace of awareness of the world.

All human beings are part of His Glory

If you do so, there will be no accumulation of the consequences of acts, from day to day; the accounts of every day will be closed with 'death,' at the end of that day, especially since you dedicate every act to Him who motivated it and surrendered the fruits thereof to Him who consummated it. If you plan to give joy to others, you will yourself be joyful. Who are these others? Even when the Lord has come with a definite human body, all human beings that you come across are but parts of His glory and His splendour.

Ishwarassarvabhuthaanaam hriddese

Arjuna thishathi---"O ! Arjuna, the Lord dwells in the region of the heart in all beings", says the Lord in the Bhagavad Geetha.

You may ask how can we find time for all this, when we have to toil every moment for feeding and clothing ourselves? But you forget that the Lord will grant you these material things, and even immortality, if only you place full reliance on Him. Whatever you do, have the name, Raama or Krishna or Shiva or Haft, on your tongue; no extra time or energy is needed for that.

When you rise in the morning, rise with the Name on your tongue, slide into sleep with the Name on your tongue.

You know a story of Naarada, I believe. Vishnu once chided him and said a farmer had greater devotion than Naarada. The sage felt annoyed and wanted to verify it for himself. He went to that village and sought out the ryot and observed his life for some days.

The man repeated the name of the Lord only thrice a day (!), once as he rose from sleep, a second time when he started taking his only meal of the day at noon and a third time when he laid himself down to sleep.

Naarada felt he was badly insulted by being pronounced inferior in devotion to this casual reciter of Names. He returned to Vishnu and presented his report and hoped that Vishnu would correct

His estimate of the ryot's devotion.

The Lord asked Naarada to undergo a test which at first appeared to be a mere whim. With five pots placed one over the other balanced on his head, He wanted Naarada to walk around His Residence. Naarada had to comply; he walked warily, slowly, with his entire attention fixed on the five pots uneasily resting on his head, and managed to come safe to the sacred presence, with all the pots intact!, He was surprised when Vishnu asked him, "Now, tell Me, how many times did you remember My Name while walking round?" Naarada had to confess that he had cleanly forgotten the Name and did not pronounce it at all. Then, Vishnu declared, "Do you realise now that that farmer, who is carrying the five pots of fortune and misfortune, right and wrong, and attention concentrated on Nature and her vagaries, is really superior because he recites the Name at least thrice a day?"

Consider the cultivation for the spirit

You clear the field of thorny plants and bushes, you plough it and water it, you sow select seeds, you pluck out the weeds, you fence it to keep out cattle, you spray the crops with insecticides and at last, you reap the harvest for which all this struggle was undergone by you. But, you must get busy with another type of cultivation too, for the spirit. Consider the condition of the field of your heart; it is overgrown with the thorn and bush of lust, anger, greed and envy. Remove them, root and all. Do not allow the land to lie fallow. By continuous good works, plough the field and fill the field with the water of prema. Select the naama (divine name)---seed that appeals to you-- -and sow it on the field; discipline is the fence which will guard the growing crop against cattle; virtue is the pesticide. Fostering the field with great care you can bring home the precious harvest of Aananda, in due course, provided you do not hurry or get desperate.

Life is a three-day fair

Do not divert all your energy to the cravings of the body, which ages every minute and is fast moving towards the burial ground. Life is a three-day fair; it is like a flower' that fades by eventide. Old age, when physical charm is lost and when you have to depend on others for everything, will soon be upon all. Prepare then for death, have the equipment to meet it calmly, joyfully, with quiet resignation to the Will of the Lord. You cannot get it in a trice, when you want it; it is the result of long years of practice. See the hand of God in everything that happens; then, you will not exult or grieve. Then your life will be one continuous puja or dhyana.

I want all of you to develop brotherliness, the feeling of cooperation, of love and respect of each for the rest. Then, this village will be without parallel. Why foul the atmosphere with hatred and envy, when each of you ploughs his own land and eats his own food? You get into all this bother because you do not know how to fill your time with beneficial activities. In order to promote harmony, the first rule you must follow is control of the tongue. Do not give all your thoughts immediate expression; select, ponder, and then, speak out. Speak softly, sweetly, without malice in your heart; speak as if you are addressing the Sai who resides in every one. 'Use the tongue to recite the Name Of the Lord; use the feet to go on pure and holy errands; use the heart to contain pure thoughts and feelings.

Today, towns and cities with their noise and glare are attracting every one towards them; but, villages are far more desirable. Reverence for holy things, for elders, for moral codes are still strong in the villages; in the towns, men have become as quarrelsome as dogs. Their speech, thought and feeling have all been standardised into patterns. There man is considered to be an animal that has to be petted or tamed, fed and clothed and housed and humoured. The Divinity of Man, the fact that Maanava is but Maadhava (man is but Divine), is ignored in the rush and worry of town life.

Sign of the genuine devotee

So, learn to be happy and content where you are; do not run towards towns hoping to secure happiness and contentment there; have inner riches, not outer acquisitions. Make your home the seat of virtue, of morality, of love. Control anger and greed. That is the sign of the genuine bhaktha, not unrestricted speech and movements. You may claim to be a devotee and declare yourself as such, when you speak; but, unless your egoism has gone and you love all equally, the Lord will not acknowledge your devotion! From this day, keep all personal animosity away from your conduct. Feel that you are kith and kin of each other belonging to the same family bound together by love and cooperation. Live amicably, live joyfully, undisturbed by faction and hatred; for, some day or other, you have to give up all that you hope to gain through these factions and these hatreds. Listen to the advice of the elders of the village' they have your welfare in their minds.

Keep this Aananda of today in your hearts and develop it by means of manana or rumination. Do not run about excitedly and fall on the car as I move out, causing injuries to women, old men, and children. Bhakthi must be disciplined and controlled. It is because you have that disciplined bhakthi (devotion) that I have come to your place.

16. Types of road to God

This vast sea of aspirants who seek darshan and yearn to learn about spiritual matters may be a new experience to the organisers of this function; and even to the authorities in this city; but, let me tell you, it is nothing strange to me. Nor is the message I bring anything new! It is the message of the Vedhas, tested by time and guaranteed by the experience of many who put it into practice. This precious message is being forgotten and neglected for want of persons who continue to bring it to your attention; man is busy with so many trivialities that he has ignored the essential purpose of his sojourn here. The very hands that should have cherished this message that can save man in India as well as in all countries of the world, those very hands are trying to crush it and deny it.

This is the very reason that the people of India have lost the peace and joy that is their heritage; they have lost the key and are suffering. Like the rest of humanity, they are struggling in despair, to squeeze a little joy out of the objective world which is subject to change and chaos. How can joy result from adharma, out of the neglect of morality and virtue?

Dharmo rakshathi rakshithaha---Righteousness guards its guardian.

Without the control of the senses, man is like a horse without blinkers, he is like a bull that refuses to yield to the yoke; his saadhana is a waste of time and energy. The special feature of man's composition is that he has discrimination, detachment and synoptic intellect; he can discover Truth and be fixed in it, and gain unshakable Peace. Three stages one has to go through

The Vedhas have three sections Karma, Upaasana and Inaana. Karma is the section dealing with the activities that strengthen and purify faith and devotion; Upaasana is the section dealing with worship of the personal God, the dedication Of all acts to the Highest, the Inner Witness, the surrender of all skills and experiences unto the Immanent Power--these two endow man with one-pointedness, ekaagratha. As a result of these two, consciousness is able to recognise in a flash inaana (knowledge)- --the fact of its being Divinity itself. All these three stages have to be gone through. The seed has to be sown, the sapling protected, and the fruit tasted. Instead of this one-pointedness, we have many-pointedness now: one-pointedness for coffee, another for the cinema, a third for the radio and so on! This has led to undue care being bestowed on hollow unrealities, and to the neglect of things which feed and foster the sense of holy discipline.

This is the reason why irreverence, injustice and corruption stalk the land. Every one condemns this state of affairs. The very persons who accuse others are ready to commit those wrongs when they get the chance. They are not toughened enough to resist the temptation. No one stands firm for they have not found the rock of the Aathma; they have no knowledge of their Aathmic reality.

The teaching of all the scriptures and of all the sages and saints is to recognise the Aathma within and to build life upon that bedrock.

What is required for the discovery of that bedrock? You must be able to withdraw into yourself and meditate on your own true nature, and the truth of Nature. It is the privilege of every child of India to know the science of this inquiry and to practise it. It is the right of every seeker from every land. This is the wealth that will really save man from misery; all the rest are mere shadows, mirages, castles in the air, they drop with the body that valued them.

Acts that promote irreligion

Really speaking, it is the so-called aasthikas (believers, religious people) who by their conduct are promoting naasthikam (un-belief, irreligion) in the land. They revel in finding faults in holy men, in telling tales against elders, in cynical criticism and hollow ritualism. All this recoils on them. Whether it is Raama, Krishna, Raamakrishna, Sai Baba, Meher, Haranath or Sathya Sai, do not revile, even if you cannot revere! This flood of hatred and blind criticism is caused by the craving for fame, for followers, for pomp and display, for imposing buildings and rich devotees.

Where love alone should be evident, hatred prevails. In Kaakinada, I know there is rivalry between one Sai Baba temple and another. There is competition for collecting funds and celebrating festivals. By these, you are fouling the sacred name itself. You must have observed that I do not mention in any place about your worshipping Sai Baba. On the other hand, I strongly discourage attempts to build temples in My Name. I ask them, instead, to renovate and utilise the temples existing all over the country. This "Mandhir Construction Scheme" has become a profitable spiritual business. People go about with lists of likely victims and squeeze donations out of them in My Name. In this business, a great deal of back-biting, malice, envy and greed are generated and it ends with factions blaming each other in every place.

Why go about doing Sainatha publicity or Meher publicity or Haranath publicity? Pushing your master's name forward easily degenerates into tarnishing the name of the other man's Guru or God and this leads to defaming both master and disciple. No short-cuts in the spiritual field

Do not believe if any one comes to you and declares, "Sathya Sai Baba came to me in my dream and commissioned me to do publicity for him. Please help me as far as you can". I do not commission any one for such work, either in dream or while he is awake. Such men are cheats; treat them as such, without mercy. There are others who show you something and say, "Sathya Sai Baba likes me much; He gave this," and then, they beg for help. This is an insult to the Divine Principle itself.

There are no short-cuts in the spiritual field. As a matter of fact, bhakthi is even more difficult than inaana; for, to get the attitude of "Thou" not "I" one has to surrender completely to the Higher Power, personified as the Lord. The ego has to be fully curbed; the faith that "not even a blade of grass can shake in the wind without His being aware of it and thus having caused it".

has to be implanted in the mind. Bhakthi is not a leisure time job. Erase sensual desire; clear the heart of all blemish; then, the Lord will be reflected therein as in a mirror.

Spiritual discipline is very necessary; it is not enough if you place charcoal over the cinders; you must fan vigorously, so that the charcoal too is changed into burning cinders. It is not enough if you are at Puttaparthi. You have to engage in saadhana to win My Sankalpa (resolution). You may ask why the burden of the consequences of acts done in previous births cannot be easily brushed away; no, they can be destroyed, as a heap of cotton is burnt by a spark of fire.

Inaanaagni dagdha karmaanam---the spark of inaana will destroy the effect of karma, in a trice.

These consequences are like the cloud of dust that follows a bus, when it runs on a fair-weather road; when the bus reaches the gravel road or the metalled road, the dust is less, but it is still there. When at last it enters the tarred road there is no dust. The mud track is karma; the metalled road is upaasana; the tarred dust-free road is inaana. By human skill and effort it is possible to reduce the burden of past karma.

There is no higher wealth than Peace

You do not wait with folded hands for the cup of coffee to cool down to the required warmth; you ask for an extra cup and you start pouring the coffee from one cup to the other, is it not? The same anxiety, the same saadhana has to be shown in spiritual matters also, to take in the beverage of Divine Grace. Subbarao spoke of Jesus now in his speech. Jesus was great because He showed the value of saadhana and the equanimity that can come through spiritual discipline.

There is no higher duty than truth, no higher wealth than shaanthi. Give up the senseless pursuit of western fashions and western moral codes that are demeaning the Divinity of Man. Cultivate the virtues of reverence and humility. Now, I must close, because since three hours so many thousands of you have been sitting in this hot sun, without even a stir or a whisper. This is Prashaanthi; this is real devotion. In spiritual matters, the more we subject ourselves to discipline, the more joy and peace we are able to enjoy.

The Principal of the Engineering College made all arrangements for this vast gathering at a very short notice; the students of the College have under his leadership served you in a very disciplined manner. For their tireless activity and for the aananda they helped you to derive today, you must be thankful to them. Really, among present day Colleges, this Kaakinada College has impressed Me by the spiritual urge evident among the students. Students are the real promoters of the prosperity of future India. They must cultivate strong virtues and be courageous, enthusiastic helpers of society. If their future is planned well, in both material and spiritual fields, they will shine and earn a great name for the country. Kaakinada, 26-3-1965

Life is a market. In life, giving and taking, bargaining and speculating, is a part of the game. Life has its ups and downs, its profits and losses, its joys and sorrows, depreciations and appreciations and balance sheets. But the giving of bhakthi (devotion) exchanging for mukthi (liberation) is the most powerful business for all.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

17. This joy and that

This ancient fort is a reminder of the evanescence of earthly glory and the essential futility of all efforts to achieve worldly glory and conquests. These walls and bastions were once the symbols of power and wealth; now, they are symbols of the fickleness of fortune. They have themselves become pathetic ruins, teaching you that Time is the greatest conqueror. Everything material undergoes change; nothing can remain the same. Today merges into tomorrow; it is itself the consequence of yesterday. It is a constant flux, samsaara, the flow of Time, the flood of change.

Really speaking, this Fort built centuries ago for purposes of defence and aggrandizement has realised its goal today, when this vast gathering of eager seekers meets under the shadow of the walls to hear from Me the message of Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema. The kings of Pithapuram have clone many meritorious acts of charity, encouraging the study of the Vedhas, Shaasthras and scriptures, constructing and maintaining houses of worship and temples. Acts such as these will never go unrewarded; good seeds sown must sprout and yield. Many scholars have flourished here and I must reveal to you that I came here today primarily because of the Prema that Vaaranaasi Subrahmanya Shastri bears towards Me and that I bear towards him. The fact that in spite of the very short notice of My arrival at this place on my way to Yelamanchilli, you have come here in thousands, is to be ascribed to your yearning for the higher life and your earnestness to contact the Divine. I know this already. This too is a reason for my stopping here for some hours.

My message of Prema

The beaming joy on the faces of this vast multitude is the food that I live upon; I am refreshed when you are happy and content. My thirst is quenched by the joy which lights up your eyes.

Your aananda is My aahaara (food). I do not feel like talking to you at all, for I desire only to communicate to you My Joy and to get into communion with your Joy. This mutual fulfilment is the essential thing; talking and listening are subsidiary. Moreover, this visit was thought of just while we were starting from Kaakinada and you have all gathered at this late hour of night; so, I am not quite pleased at this hurried affair. I shall certainly come again and be with you longer and confer on you more Joy.

I shall leave one message for you to ruminate upon, that is the message of Prema. Love is God, God is Love. Where there is Love, there God is certainly evident. Love more and more people, love them more and more intensely; transform the love into service, transform the service into worship; that is the highest saadhana. There is no living being without the spark of love; even a mad man loves something or somebody intensely. But, you must recognise this love as but a reflection of the Premaswaruupa (the embodiment of Love) that is your reality, to the God who is residing in your heart. Without that spring of Love that bubbles in your heart, you will not be prompted to love at all. Recognise that spring, rely on it more and more, develop its possibilities, try to irrigate the whole world with it, discard all touch of self from it, do not seek anything in return for it from those to whom you extend it. In your daily affairs, do not create factions, or revel in harted. See the good in others and the faults in yourselves. Revere others as having God installed in them; revere yourself also as the seat of God. Make your heart pure so He can reside therein.

The best and the simplest karma

The consequence of karma can be wiped out only through karma, as a thorn can be removed only by means of another. Do good karma to assuage the pain of the bad karma which you have done and from which you suffer now. The best and the simplest karma is the repetition of the Name of the Lord; be ever engaged in it. It will keep out evil tendencies and wicked thoughts. It will help you radiate love all round you.

The sages of ancient times divided karma into vikarma (that is intentionally done) and akarma (that is done without any intention to gain the consequence). Follow the latter and you will save yourselves from suffering. All other activities---the earning of wealth, of reputation, of fame and publicity--result in suffering. Gain internal peace, internal joy; that can be done only when you act without an eye on the gain. The act must be its own reward; or rather, the act must be according to the prompting of the God within, so that its consequence is left to Him. Practise this attitude consistently and you will find great Peace welling within you and around you.

Be in the World
But let not the world be in you.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

18. Maanasa Sarovar

For three years the people of Yelamanchili have been persuading Me to come to their village and give darshan to the people of this area, and at last, their wish has been fulfilled. I see about fifty thousands have gathered here. This chance to grant you joy has come this day; for, everything has its proper time and cause (kaalam and kaaranam).

The Pandit spoke of 'matham' and how it has become quite frequent for people to change their religion, from one to another, without knowing the principles of either or even without any attempt to follow the principles of the one they already know.

Matham means opinion, conclusion, point of view. "Iti me matham," (this is my religion) it is often said by disputants, in Suthra literature. So, when mathi (intelligence) changes or grows or deteriorates, matham also suffers a change. That is only natural. Even among the followers of one matham or religion, since mathi and its standards are different, all are not endowed with the same faith. So, there is no use following reason; very often reason follows the dictates of prejudice or predilictions; one must follow the dictates of the rishis who were above all pettiness and egoism. They say, Iti Vedhaanusaasanam: "this is what Vedha enjoins." They do not even claim it to be their discovery. Chithshakthi (Grace), revealed to them the basic truths for the progress of man.

The same God who revealed, out of His Grace, the Vedhas, has to come again and again, whenever people seek to pitch their petty intelligences against the Eternal Intelligence. The petty intelligences are but the bond-slaves of the senses; they lead man astray, fascinated by the 'will-of-the-wisp' of sensual pleasure. The Vedhas, on the other hand, beckon them towards eternal, undiminishable joy; but man does not pay heed. He wanders in the dark, seeking in the outside world what he has lost in the inner world of the spirit!

Spiritual food given by the Vedhas

The scriptures lay down various stages of spiritual development and the rigour of the discipline for each stage is tuned to the level reached by the aspirant. As a child is fed on breast milk for some months and then, on cow's milk, and later given bread and crisp bitable bits when the teeth have grown---so too, man is given by the Vedhas spiritual food suited to digestive development.

In the early stages, the inaana of the Unity (which is misread as Diversity) cannot be grasped. So bhakthi or upaasana is recommended. Bhakthi comes naturally for it is only the expansion of the love that is inherent in man. To get grounded in bhakthi, good activity, good company, good listening and good behaviour are essential.

Look at the self-control and humility of Lakshmana. When the ornaments (thrown over by Seetha while being carried through the sky by Raavana) were placed before him by Raama and he was asked to identify those whom he could recognise as Seetha's own, Lakshmana could recognise only the 'toe-rings' of his sister-in-law! He said he used to see them when he fell at her feet in reverence, as the first duty of the day. As regards the other personal ornaments and jewels of Seetha, he could not say anything, for he had never lifted his head and looked at her. How many brothers can claim today that depth of reverence towards their sisters-in-law? Now, young men behave rudely, they peer at girls insultingly, they follow them along the roads and make life miserable for the girls. Or look at Dharmaraaja, who preferred the life of a step-mother's son to the life of either Bheema or Arjuna (!) when the Yaksha offered to grant him the life of any one of the four who were dead--Bheema, Arjuna or the stepmother's children, Nakula and Sahadeva; his magnanimity saved the lives of all four! Who will act so today when faced with such a choice?

The essence of Vedhic teaching

There is now no love among even uterine brothers and sisters, what to speak of step-brothers?

This high moral standard once ensured individual progress and social cohesion. Now, both are missing. The body---the tongue, the ear, the eye---are all being misused by man. Only wild beasts inflict terror; only cattle get frightened; man is neither and so he should not do either. Man is truly incapable of fear, he is the embodiment of Love; he is a child of Immortality, he is the temple of God. That is the essence of Vedhic teaching, as found in the Upanishads.

Love has first to gladden the home. There is no love now between the elders and the youngsters in the home; children do not revere parents. This moral decline will certainly undermine unity and strength. Moral decline is worse than military decline; it will lead to greater disaster. If you always repeat the idea of "naadhi, naa" ("mine, mine"), how can you be useful to others?

Sacrifice is the 'salt' of life; yaaga or thyaaga is the secret of peace and joy. 'Go' means "indriya" or the senses; so, the word 'Go-paala' means, he who controls the senses. And, why should they be controlled? So that they may not stand in the way of thyaaga or sacrifice. All the senses are self-centred, egoistic. They must be educated to be "inward-directed", towards the Aathma which is Universal. That is gained by trusting to Go-paala by entrusting the senses to Him. Every one must pass through sath-karma or good deeds, into the realm of expanding Love and from Love he learns the lesson of sacrifice, of dedication, of surrender to the One Overlord. This takes him on to faith in the supremacy of Godhead, everything else being but His shadow, His being the

One and Only Reality.

I ask for purification of hearts only

Since such things have happened in this region, i must tell you one thing more. There are many Swaamis and Gurus who go round from place to place, with the avowed object of collecting money from their devotees. This is a heinous act, especially for Sanyaasins (renunciates) to engage in. Many persons have also started using My name for the purpose of collecting money for various purposes or material. If such men come to you, send them back with the admonition that they are doing wrong. I ask for bhakthi, shraddha, saadhana (devotion, faith and spiritual discipline)---purification of hearts--that is all. Only beggars ask for money; I will never associate Myself with the temporary, the tarnished, the tawdry, and the mean.

Then, there are some who proclaim that I am "coming upon some one" and speaking through them! They pretend to be My mouthpieces and communicate to others My advice and My suggestions, as if I have 'authorised' them or as if I am Myself telling so through them. Now hear this. I never speak through another; I never possess another or use another as a vehicle of expression. I come direct, I come straight, I come as I am, to confer peace and joy.
I do not accept from you flowers that fade, fruits that rot, coins that have no value beyond the national boundary. Give Me the lotus that blooms in your Maanasasarovara---the clear pellucid waters of the lake---of your inner consciousness; give Me the fruits of holiness and steady discipline. I am above all this worldly etiquette, which enjoins you to see elders with some fruit or flower in your hand. My world is the world of the spirit; there, values are different. If you are happy, with faith in God and fear of sin, that is enough "service", enough kainkaryam for Me. It pleases Me so. In the East Godaavari District and hereabouts, persons who claim to be "possessed" by Me are appearing recently in large numbers, with their own gangs of brokers and agents. Order them out, wherever you come across them. Do not yield to their tactics and lower your own dignity as devotees of the Lord.

SHRI SATHYA SAI
19. Pandits have the keys This region is called Konaseema, the Delta, the Endland; it is famous as the home of traditional scholarship in the Vedhas and the Shaasthras; it has a large number of Sanskrit Schools even today and the number of pandits versed in Vedhic lore still following the rigorous discipline laid down by the Dharmashaasthras (religious scriptures) is large enough to win the respect of the people of this country. When the region has won fame as the repository of spiritual learning, it must also be taken to be the teacher of detachment from the pursuit of artha and kaama

(wealth/power and sense pleasure), both of which have to be restrained and regulated by dharma, the first among Purusharthas. It is indeed a great misfortune that, in this Kali Age, India which upheld the Adhyaathmic (spiritual) ideal for centuries and stuck to it, in spite of economic and political upheavals, is entering the competitive struggle for existence, irrespective of the moral code which the ancients laid down.
Dharma is the swaruupa (form) of India; Sathya is its swabhaava (innate quality). But most people today feel that happiness is to be sought for, by whatever means. This evil doctrine has caused discontent among all classes, and in the attempt to relieve the discontent, further adharmas is being resorted to. This is the situation that prompted Me to found the Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha; many pandits of this region are members of this Sabha. They have now this great chance to use their talents in the service of humanity and to spend life in fruitful activity.
Activity results in either joy or grief, due to the attachment with which it is done. I and "mine" are the two fangs of the serpent; pluck them out, then, you can safely handle it and play with it.
You need not give up activity. As a matter of fact, you have to be intensely active. In this Karmabhumi, it is only through karma that you can transcend karma. Birds and beasts are not aware of this secret; man alone can select and accept the karma that is most profitable for liberation from the chain of karma. If he seeks happiness by satisfying the demands of the sense, he learns that happiness won by that search is inseparably mixed with misery.
Function of the science of Yoga You know from experience that deep sleep gives you maximum happiness. Think over it for a while; have you ever, in the waking stage, experienced that degree of calm; of quiet, of equanimity, of happiness? That is why nidhra is said to be the nearest approximation to samaadhi. If even the impulses and instincts and thought-waves dormant during sleep disappear, then, the joy becomes perfect and full. This happens when the Sun of jnaana illumines you. That drives away even the minutest speck of darkness; in fact, darkness is just the absence of light.
There are three principles that have to be overcome before knowledge (jnaana) can dawn: the Physical (Dehathathwam); the Sensory (Indriyathathwam) and the Mental (Manasthathwam).

Even the mind has to be overcome before the One can be cognised; for, the mind seeks variety and change; it revels in the contact with the objective world called vrittis. The prevention of these vrittis in the mind, of the ever-widening circles in the Maanasa- Sarovara (the Lake of the Mind), whenever a wish or thought or a resolution is dropped into it--that is the function of the science called Yoga, Union. Union of what, with which? Union of "Thath" with "thwam", of you and the rest, resulting in the One, without a Second. Make your mind cling to God. You have met here in such huge numbers so that you may learn from these Pandits and from Me that "Yoga is desirable and possible." The path can be known by a little reasoning and thereafter, it can be trodden step by step until the goal is reached. You have come in hundreds of thousands from all the villages and towns for miles around, spending time, money and exertion. Take back this lesson from here, retain at least this much of knowledge, that attachment causes pain and detachment results in joy. But, you cannot easily detach yourself from activity; the mind clings to some thing or other. Make it cling to God, let it do all things for God and leave the success or failure of the thing done to God, the loss and the profit, the elation or the dejection. Then, you have the secret of Shaanthi and contentment. To get this attitude of surrender, of dedication, you must have Faith in God. This world is His play; it is not an empty dream; it has purpose and use. It is the means by which one can discover God; see Him in the beauty, the grandeur, the order, the majesty of Nature. These are but shadows of His Glory and His Splendour; that is why, the Vedhas have three sections or Kaandaas: Karma, Upaasana and Inaana. Karma leads to the consciousness of the ever-present, immanent, all-powerful God. Upaasana (adoration of that God), leads to the knowledge that He is in all; when you experience that there is no Second, that is Inaana! In the past, when people were observing the discipline which gave them shaanthy and soukhyam (peace and contentment), they were happy; they could not be swept off their feet by fear or disappointment. But, M.A.'s and B.A.'s are today unable to get jobs suited to their standards; the income is too poor for their own sustenance. They are helpless and unhappy; they do not help their parents or make them happy.

Devotees should improve their behaviour. The Vedhic scholars themselves have fallen victims to this rash for jobs and degrees, for their children too run after the glittering tinsel of a degree, which does not fill their stomachs or fulfil the cravings for peace and calm. They have lost faith in the Vedhas themselves; else, why should they discard them so fast, in exchange for a few rupees? Nevertheless, there are some, in Andhra Pradesh also, who preserve their faith and who are serene in the face of everything. They are not known to newspapermen, they are not news; they live apart and happy. Nobody worries about them and they do not worry any one. People, nowadays, know the history of film stars, while they are profoundly ignorant of their own history. Pay attention to your real needs; cultivate virtues that will add joy to you and others, not habits that ruin your health and empty your purse and lower you in the estimation of others. I want bhaktas (devotees) to improve their behaviour and character. It is no good attending the temple and sharing loudly, with cymbals in your hands, in the singing of devotional songs there. They are but external signs of enthusiasm. God watches the bhaavam, not the baahyam--the thought power behind, not the pomp above. The two injunctions of the Vedhas are: Sathyam Vada, Dharmam chara--Speak the Truth, practise righteousness. Sathkarma (good deed) is the tree, Sad-bhaava (good intention) is the root. The Sadbhaava is that which serves your best interests, viz. lasting happiness, final liberation from the cycle of birth and death. Take the mind off the sensory pleasures and fix it upon God; then, bhaava gets pure; whatever you think or say or feel will be for the good of yourself and others. Some people laugh at spiritual aspirants and call them idle visionaries who seek something that is not tangible, that cannot be weighed and valued! How can any one ignore the foundations and be content with the knowledge of the walls and the terrace? You can be free from fear only when you are confident of the strength of the foundation. You do not see your breath or weigh it; but, breath is the very sustenance of life. The unseen is the basis of the seen. If you are caught up in the meshes of the seen, you cannot know the importance of the unseen. India is the Guru of Humanity. This ought to be known to every one, not the mountains of information that is filling the head now. The key for liberation is contained in the Vedhas and these Pandits have it. That is the reason why Bhaarith lays claim to be the Guru of Humanity. If that claim is to be respected, Indians must themselves live the life. Every one must be immersed in Shaanthi (peace), derived from dedicated work, work offered as worship, work done with no desire or attachment for the benefit therefrom. But, what do we see today? There is no peace in the home or in the mind, no cordiality between brothers, no reverence for parents, no love between partners. You must first achieve victory at home; you can then call on others to strive for victory. Mere devotion is not enough. It must be regulated by reason and discrimination. Or else, it will not flow along sane lines. Reason makes devotion a sharp instrument. Reason out the purpose of your sojourn on the earth, the purpose of the intelligence with which you have been endowed. Then, devotion will encourage you to fill your days with steady, controlled activity, towards Liberation.

Amalaapuram, 28-3-1965

20. Undernourishment and the cure

We hear many people lamenting the state of affairs and talking of the spread of injustice and falsehood, of cruelty and hatred in the world and in this country. This is like shouting for a drug after the illness has set in; prevention is much more beneficial than cure; sometimes, the cure is rendered more difficult on account of the complications due to long neglect.

The present decline in morality is due to decreasing faith in the Vedhas, Shastraas and Upanishads in our country. Some people are in the habit of condemning all those who do not believe in the Vedhic Dharma as atheists; but, there are no atheists at all among men. An atheist, when he declares "There is no God," is first affirming. "There is", and then, denying something that he has affirmed. Though he may deny God, he does not deny Love or Reverence or Wonder or Awe; these are all expressions of theistic faith. The 'atheists' too yearn for a goal; they remember a place from where they came, though like all others they are unable to locate it. They know they are proceeding to a place where they get full happiness; they pine for it; they dream about it; they have their plans for reaching it. They have like all others the hunger, the pain, the discontent.

Just as the doctor diagnoses the origin of the pain, the aspirant goes to a guru who is an expert in the different forms of mental yearning for the goal. Every one feels the urge to see and know

Unity, where there is multiplicity; this knowledge is contained in the Brahmasuuthra, which like a string penetrates all the different beads of the same rosary.

There are different approaches to God

All the thousands of individuals here before Me now are so many thousand flowers, strung on that one thread, Brahman. In Brahman, you all find unity, the unity you have missed, because you were engrossed in your own separateness. That is the truth; all else is delusion; you have let this unity go un-noticed, because the men who know it are neglected, their declarations are dismissed as depraved! There is no dearth of sustaining spiritual food in our country; but, yet, we have this pitiable spectacle of a people starving in the midst of plenty.

The ills of the country are due to under-nourishment; not so much under-nourishment of the body, but under-nourishment of the spirit, want of spiritual exercise, neglect of spiritual regimen.

Allowing the malady the fullest scope, people are engaged in reciting the names of the drugs in the pharmacopoeia! They do not make any attempt to take the drug in. The means of conveying into every home and village the life-giving waters of the spirit have all dried up or got choked up. That is the reason why undernourishment, with all its attendant symptoms of debility, nervous disorder and mania is so rampant today.

'Matham' is a matter of mathi---religion is a matter of the intelligence. Unless you are able to equalise intelligence, you cannot equalise religions. There are different approaches to God for different mathis, suited to the likes and dislikes of individual temperaments. Some are work minded; some are contemplative, some are exterior-oriented; some are prone to examine the inner consciousness, more than the external.

There are disciplines suited for each of them in the Sanaathana (ancient) scriptures: Bhakthi, Inaana, Karma, Upaasana, Yoga, etc. The milk in which butter is immanent, implicit in every particle, in every molecule, is the One. The curd into which it is broken by fermentation has the butter separate, but yet as part; that is the One, with the Second, as an integral part of it, Vishishta - adwaita (qualified non-dualism). The churning separates the butter clearly and it is rolled into a ball, it is kept floating in the liquid from which it has been taken. The two have become clearly distinguishable; they are spoken of as two, dwaitha (dualism). These are but three names for three stages of the same substance. People should strengthen the hands of Pandits. The One is the reality. It is not to be found exclusively in one place only, however hoary the place. Neither Arunachalam, nor Thirupathi nor Kedaaram can claim to be the place where It is to be found. Its address is given in the 61st shloka of the 18th chapter of the Bhagavad Geetha: "in the heart of all."

Pandits who are versed in the sacred scriptures of this land are the real leaders of the people, for, they can show the path of self-realisation, which is the highest duty of man. They must, as the sages and scholars of old used to do, counsel the rulers and guide them in the path of Dharma. But now, the rulers keep them afar, while the people shower ridicule on them! If they now cater to the low demands of the rulers, they will degrade the ideals which they must cherish and promote. It requires a great deal of integrity and courage for them to escape the temptations of the situation and stand firm on the principles laid down for them in the Shaastras. Hence, there is not much hope of the Pandits being used by the rulers. There is every chance of the Pandits themselves losing their grip over fundamentals, if they approach the rulers for patronage. So, the people themselves have to take up the task of strengthening the hands of the Pandits and of deriving the utmost benefit out of these repositories of ancient learning. Faith in Almighty is the strongest foundation. The Pandits themselves are a divided lot; they have lost the capacity for united effort. I am speaking so plainly here, for this Kona Seema is the nursery of many learned Pandits. My task is to bring together the Pandits and make them aware of their noble heritage and their still nobler duty, to develop contact with the rulers who will benefit by the impartial wisdom of the Shaastras and the Upanishads and the Vedhas, seen and recorded by masters of detachment and thus establish peace and harmony in the world. I will certainly succeed; only, you have to be patient for some time. The mansion called life must be built on strong foundations; the pursuit of artha, and kaama---of wealth and welfare, of all desirable objects---must be regulated by the standard of Dharma.

Dharma fosters those who foster it--"Dharmo rakshathi rakshithah." The strongest foundation is ever-present Faith in the Almighty. Some may ask, "If He is Almighty, why then is he not patent?" Well He reveals Himself only to the person who yearns for the answer, not the one who puts questions out of impudence or ignorance. He will be patent only in the transparent heart, the heart that is not clouded by egoism or objective attachment. The string of the rosary is patent only in the sphatika or the crystal beads, not on the coral or rudraaksha beads. Though the string runs through these latter also, it can be seen only by splitting those beads; that is the meaning of the story of Hiranyakashipu who split the pillar; when he did that, he could see for himself the Lord who is the core of every object and being. Coconut-breaking is symbol for destroying the ego. Try to break the coconut, as it comes from the tree; the shell is covered compactly by a coat of fibre. You cannot break the nut by hitting with a crow-bar even; take off the fibrous armour; breaking it is very easy. When you take a coconut to be offered in the temple, you take it, after removing the fibre; then, you offer it to God, breaking it into two halves. This is the symbol for destroying the ego and surrendering to the Lord. So you have to remove the fibre of desire for sense-objects and then, go before the Lord devoid of kaama, and krodha (desire and anger); there you declare that you are ego-less by breaking the coconut into two. You will be accepted then, not before. This conquest of the ego is a very hard task; years of persistent effort are needed to get success in this endeavour. For getting a Degree you struggle in the University for a number of years, poring over books night and day; how much more difficult is this examination, success in which guarantees lasting happiness, and escape from the weary round of birth and death. Some people have their minds and senses like cotton balls and a spark of inaana will set them ablaze and they achieve victory! Some others have them like dried faggots; they take longer time, but, victory is certain. Most have minds and senses like green fuel and even the raging fire of inaana may be put out by the onslaught of the moisture contained in them. Make your mind and senses like clean finely ginned cotton. How can you do this? By contact with scholars and those who have experience in spiritual practice, like these pandits here. Listen to them; revolve their teachings in the depths of your memory; practise what they advise; yield gladly to their guidance. Start now. Scholarship starts with the alphabet; learn A and B, C and D and go on until the end. The margosa fruit may taste bitter at first but, there are many who enjoy eating it, for, steady practice makes them sweet to the tongue, especially when you get convinced that they are good for curing illness. Success or failure is your own making. For example, when you sing Naamaavalis (songs containing Lord's names) try to roll on your tongue the sweetness of the meaning also. On the basis of the material you can ascend to the spiritual; only, you must know that it is possible, and develop the faith that removes all hesitation. When you sing of Raadha, as you did just now, "Raadhaa maadhava nanda laala!" do not imagine that Raadha is a woman and Krishna, a man. You can become Raadha, now, here, if only you know what Raadha represents. She is the basis (aadhaara), which is worshipped (aaradh) as everflowing stream (dhaara); she is the very basis of the world, which is another name for God Himself. Have it as a dhaara (flowing from your tongue), the Name of the Lord; avoid all lesser talk. On the Ocean of Milk, (the Ksheerasaagara) of the Pure Mind, plant the peak of Mandara, steady faith, in the unity of creation; take the serpent, Grace of the Lord (Ishwaraanugraham), and use it as a rope to churn the ocean; churn it through meditation and spiritual discipline (dhyana and saadhana); then, you are able to acquire the Nectar---the essence of Vedha, of spiritual knowledge, of spiritual experience. The Lord is impartial; you punish yourself, you reward yourself. A young student who was nervous about the examination in the English language went to a temple and prayed to God for making the questions easy for him. He promised in exchange a Thanks giving Feast. It happened so, and he could answer all the questions to his entire satisfaction in half the time allotted for the purpose. He did not give in the answer sheets immediately; he called for extra sheets and wrote down a list of articles he must purchase for offering the Thanksgiving Feast to God: jaggery, rice, cardamom, ghee, etc. He had many more minutes at his disposal; he noted down the cost and finding it beyond him, he revised the list and found many items which he could score off.

While busy with this flippant assignment, the bell rang and the supervisor ran up to him to collect the answer sheets. In the hurry of the moment, he handed over the sheets whereon he had written the list of articles and through sheer miserliness, scored out most of the items! So, the young man failed; it was all his doing. God is impartial; He is like the thermometer that cannot misinterpret, or exaggerate or falsify. Success or failure is your own making, you decide your destiny; the Lord has no share in deciding it. You have the appetite for spiritual truth. It is already very late, you have to go to your places. There are many old people, women and children among you. I can understand the trouble you have undergone out of your Love for Me, coming long distances, walking or journeying by boat or bullock cart, denying yourselves food, sleep and rest, struggling even for drinking water and a little shade under a tree. Seeing this vast ocean of humanity, one gets assured of the value, the continuing value of the heritage of Bhaarithavarsha. You have moved enmasse from your villages like ants from ant-hills. Why? Because you have the hunger for God, the appetite for spiritual truth. I must tell you one thing now, for this has grown into quite a sensation, especially in East Godaavari, around Amalaapuram! I am not blaming any one or laughing at any one; but the truth must be made public. There are quite a few who declare that I am coming "upon them" (!), possessing them rather, and they sway, shake and shiver and say all kinds of things, claiming that I am speaking through them or that they are under My Influence. They answer questions and 'foretell' things and perform many tricks to collect money or things from people who do not know Me and My reality. All this is sheer deceit; it is a disease that is spreading. Do not encourage it; nip it whenever you see cases of people suffering from it. Such people have agents and brokers; scotch them first and their puppets will disappear. They wear the dress of holiness, but their greed announces them as vile. People say 'Baba appeared to me in a dream and commanded me to do this and that, to you, to collect so much from you etc., etc. Do not give heed to such cheats; punish them in the way they deserve. That is the advice I have to give you. Amalaapuram, 29-3-1965. It is easy to conquer anger through love, attachment through reasoning, falsehood through truth, bad thoughts through good, and greed through charity.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

21. The rare chance

The one advice that I give you is this: Do not foul a single moment of your precious life. Spend it in the most useful manner, to earn joy for yourself and others unsullied joy. You have come in lakhs from all the villages of this Delta to this Amalaapuram. There are many among you who are too old to come to Puttaparthi to have My darshan (audience) and many are suffering from bodily ills, which do not allow them to push forward to the front lines here. Have some consideration for them; stand where you are; do not push and try to rush forward. I am on this high terrace; wherever you are, you can see Me.

There is work now only for the eye and the ear; not for the tongue.

When you have the chance, it is wise not to miss it. I have come in order to confer aananda (bliss) on you. I am prepared to stand here, until all of you have your fill of aananda. Why then should you raise this clamour?

God can be felt and experienced only in the deepest silence. All noise must subside; then, His Voice can be heard clearly.

The tongue is the token of true breeding. "Hey! you clout! Did you hear soldiers march this way?" a man asked a blind farmer. Minutes later, another person accosted him, "Blind man!

Open your mouth and tell me whether you heard the noise of soldiers marching this way." Later, a third voice approached him, "Sir, did you hear some soldiers marching along this path?" At last, another person came near and placed his hand upon his shoulder, "My tear man, please tell me whether you heard men marching along this road?" The blind man correctly described his interrogators later in the order of their appearance as a soldier, a Captain, a Minister and the King himself. The words reveal the breeding of the speaker.

The silent man has no enemies

The tongue is the armour of the heart; it guards one's life. Loud talk, long talk, wild talk, talk full of anger and hate--- all these affect the health of man. They breed anger and hate in others; they wound, they excite, they enrage, they estrange. Why is silence said to be golden? The silent man has no enemies, though he may not have friends. He has the leisure and the chance to dive within himself and examine his own faults and failings. He has no more inclination to seek them in others. If your foot slips, you earn a fracture; if your tongue slips, you fracture some one's faith or joy. That fracture can never be set right; that wound will fester for ever. Therefore, use the tongue with great care. The softer you talk, the less you talk, the sweeter you talk, the better for you and the world.

When you crowd so thick and rush round, pushing people forward and backward, it is a good chance for thieves and pick-pockets. You stand lost in your own luck; your attention is concentrated on Me, while the attention of those others is concentrated on your purse or golden necklace.

I know the agitations of your heart and its aspirations, but you do not know My Heart. I react to the pain that you undergo, to the joy that you feel; for, I am in every heart. I am the dweller in that temple. You must know Me better, for how can a telegram sent in Morse code be understood by the receiving office, when the receiver does not know Morse? The prema (love) that you give is of the same Morse Code, as the aananda (bliss) I give you.

Bhakthi must be directed along the channels laid down by reason.

Your bhakthi is making you behave wildly like the furious flood of a river. You crowd round this place where I am residing, night and day, in sun and rain and raise lais (cries of victory), to persuade Me to come and give darshan. This is not correct, My dears! This is not bhakthi; this is not prema. Of course, even without your making all this noise, I gladly come on to the terrace and give you the darshan you ask for, in your heart of hearts. That is the voice I hear most; not the voice coming out of your throats.

Use your life to spread joy, not grief

Most of the clamour that you cause is due to wrangling for space, the stronger ones insisting on their rights and even robbing others of their rights. This is a place where you must try to help, not hinder; this is the atmosphere of perfect peace, prashanthi. Do not behave here as you do when you gather elsewhere. There is no scope here for envy or malice, hate or competition. When kaama (intense desire), and krodha (anger) are rising in hot flames from the heart, how can the cool rays of shaanthi (peace), sathya (truth), ahimsa (non-violence) and prema (love) emanate therefrom? This human birth is a rare chance! Use it for spreading joy, not grief. Of course, it is natural for man to resent, to grow angry. But you should not allow anger free and furious scope.

The raging floods in the Godaavari have to be restrained by bunds, anicuts and dams, so that the water may reach the sea, without scouring the fields on either bank. You too must set limits to your own anger and hate, and honour those limits. You know that first you have to plough the land, feed it with water; then, sow the seed, pluck out the weeds, guard the crop by a fence from cattle and goats and wait patiently for harvest time. So also, the heart has to be ploughed by means of virtues fed with the water of Divine love, before the seeds of Divine Name are sown; later, the field has to be watched and weeds have to be destroyed it is best to prevent the cattle of unsteadiness and doubt, by putting up the fence of Discipline; then, the Name of the Lord will flower into Meditation and the rich harvest of Knowledge can be reaped. Now, you are allowing the precious fertile field to lie fallow; the field of the heart is infested with thorns and weeds; it yields no joy to any one. Cultivate the heart and garner the grain of Aathma-aananda. That aananda is your heritage; it is yours for the asking. But, you do not know how or whom to ask. Ask grief to quit and aananda is patent, as the very basis of your "I-ness", your Sath (existence) and Chith (consciousness) It is very simple. Grief will disappear as soon as you discover its real origin, for it has arisen out of ignorance only. Amalaapuram, 9.30A. M. 29-3-1965

Let no one suffer the slightest pain as a result of your thought, word or deed. Let this be your saadhana. SHRI SATHYA SAI

22. The code of correct conduct Indescribable joy and glory come within the reach of man when the Universal Immanent Principle decides to assume human form. You are all standing in the scorching sun for hours and so, you can realise what it is to be offered a cool drink when you get parched in the heat. The Avathaar comes to offer this cool comforting drink to parched humanity. Mere repetition of the words, Sathya, Dharma, Shaanthi and Prema will not quench the thirst; the words rice, curry and rasam (soup) will not satisfy hunger. How can you get aanandam from words? Practise them, that is the message that the Avathaar brings, with all the authority that It can wield. What you have heard and seen must be spoken out, without exaggeration or abridgement; that is sathya or truth speaking. Of course, when the mind is controlled, the intelligence is sharpened and purified; you see only the one everywhere, in everything, at all times; then that one becomes the only Truth, which you see, hear and speak of---for, there is nothing else to see or hear.

"Sathyaannaasthiparo dharmah" --- "There is no duty higher than Truth."

Some people raise the question, "How can we make a living if we adhere to Truth?" Well, you cannot escape death, whatever way you spend your days. It is far better to die, adhering to Truth, than die, sliding into falsehood. Do this duty to yourself first; then, consider the rights of others. Falsehood looks easy and profitable; but, it binds you and pushes you into perdition. Purify your feelings and impulses; do not worry that others are not doing similarly. Each man carries his destiny in his own hands. You will not be bound, because others are not freed. You should strive for your salvation, at your own pace, from where you started when you were born into this chance. One coconut garden may have a thousand fruits; the neighbouring garden which belongs to you may have only eight hundred. But, you are rich only to the limit of the number that grew in your garden. You have no right to the fruits grown on another's tree. Earn yourself, for yourself. Two people may have two acres each in the same village; but, they reap different quantities of grain, depending on the skill and attention they bestow, and the quality of the soil, the seeds and the manure they use. Do not give up your code of duties. For each person, there is a code of conduct laid down in the Shaastras (scriptures), according to age and status, the profession adopted, the stage of spiritual attainment reached, the goal of life accepted, etc. Do not carp at the behaviour of others, or at the efforts they make, to get consolation and courage amidst the turmoils of life, for the path that one has chosen, the Name and the Form of God he prefers! Also do not give up your code of duties and take up that recommended for some one else. Arjuna was overcome by human sympathy when he refused to slaughter his kith and kin and seek regal luxury through such sinful means; he preferred being a mendicant. Then, Krishna had to remind him of other levels of dharma, which override the purely natural dharma. They were: (i) the Varnadharma of a

Kshatriya, which insisted on his fighting the forces of evil and which branded withdrawal from the battlefield as a heinous sin;

(ii) Aathmadharma, which urges you to concentrate on the Aathmic reality, and not worry about defeat or success, fame or dishonour, but be an instrument in the hands of the Lord.

Along the lines already familiar to you, continue the worship of the God of your choice; then you will find that you are coming nearer and nearer to Me; for, all Names are Mine and all Forms are Mine. There is no need to change, after you have seen Me and heard Me. That is what I wanted to tell you, since the Shastri spoke to you of Avathaars and their significance.

You have stood too long in the hot sun: if I speak longer to you, I would only be adding to the misery; so, I shall stop now. Go to your several places now, without rushing or pushing, causing trouble and confusion. There are children, old persons and many sick people among you. So, be careful.

23. Rope round the neck

This land is the Karmakshetra, the land where all activities are sublimated into saadhana

(spiritual practice) and the goal of merging in the Absolute is ever held before the particular, individualised man. But, this land has started pursuing the mirage of sensory pleasure and worldly happiness, forgetting that only spiritual success can give peace. Though people discover soon that no one can be happy fully, by getting rich or becoming an expert in any science or master of any art, or building up a healthy physique, still, they seek happiness through these means alone. What has to be done is to develop detachment step by step, dwelling on God and fixing attention on His grace, power and wisdom.

The Vedhas have three sections karma, upaasana and jnaana. Karma or activity engaged in with a dedicatory attitude, regardless of the benefit it may result in, builds up purity of mind.

Upaasana or systematic worship of God contemplating on the glory and splendour and His manifold expressions equips you with concentration. These two lead to a clear grasp of the Reality, that is to say, you acquire jnaana (spiritual wisdom); the veil of delusion drops and glory stands revealed. Now, these three are neglected and even scoffed at. Know that no object is per se pleasing or joygiving. It is you that find it so, the joy is in you. You pour it on the object and ascribe it to the object, by the trick of projection. If an object itself is capable of producing joy, it must be welcomed by all at all times and places. This is not the case so far as any object is concerned; the joy is only projected on it by the mind of the individual.

The innermost core of man is pure Delusion has to die; then only does the cycle of change end. Then only is man liberated from the bonds of birth, life and death. Call it saavyujyam (reaching the goal, or merging in the Absolute or Universal), or Brahmasaakshaathkaaram or Aikyaanusandhaanam (becoming one with Infinite)-

--the names may differ, but the finish is the same' Every mortal must attain immortality; for he is Amrithasya puthrah, a child of Immortality. That is why I dislike people condemning themselves as sinners, 'born in sin, living in sin, fundamentally sin itself'.

I always remind such people that it is treason to their inner reality to heap such stark falsehoods upon their own heads. This becomes clear when you address any one of these people as, "Hey!

Sinner!" they will turn round in anger and threaten you with hard pounding. Why? Because that word 'sinner' wounds their innermost core, which is Nirmala, Nischala, Nithya and Nisswaartha (Pure, Fixed, Eternal, and selfless). If you hit a tamarind fruit when it is green, the seed too will get the impact; but, hit it with a stone or hammer when it is ripe, the seed will not get hurt. Be like the seed in the ripe fruit; feel that you are unaffected by the blows of fate; when you get the jnaana that you are not the body (deha) but the Self (dehi), then, no blow can hurt you.

The Shaastri versed in Vedha spoke of Yama, the God of Death, having kaama and krodha, as the leader of the army with which he attacks mankind. But Yama is not an identifiable person riding on a buffalo, with a noose in his hand for roping in the souls of those whom he wants to drag to his realm. No. The God of Death is called Kaala. Time. Time is the God of Death; time knows no mercy; when the time is over, you have to leave; each day, your span is shortened by 24 hours. He is as omnipresent and omnipotent as Time. He does not run a rope factory to drag into his home all the millions who die. The dying person has the rope already spun and twisted round his neck. He has only to come and pull! He spins the rope by every act of his, during all the years of his life, now or in the past. All acts done with egoism, self-interest, an eye on the beneficial consequences, the fruits, give a little more length, a stronger twist, to that rope.

Know the true values of yaaga and yajna Good deeds done in a dedicatory spirit do not add to the length or strength of the rope. They give shaanthy and santhosha (peace and happiness) in plenty. Why, you had a very good illustration of this just today. The final offering of sacred objects in the sacrificial fire of the Rudrayaaga was done here at 10 a.m. and, there was a welcome downpour of unexpected rain at 10-05 a.m.!

Those who do not know the true values of yajna (Vedhic ritual of sacrifice) and yaaga (ritual of worship) ridicule these rites and shout that they involve the loss of precious ghee and fuel, which could be put to better use. They do not realise that the food they themselves consume is a colossal waste, for, they do no good to the world or for themselves.
Their cigarettes are a waste, indeed, a dangerous waste; their bush coats, the films they, saw, the hours they listened to the radio are all waste.

You see a sculptor working away at a rock with his chisel and you condemn his work of chipping pieces as waste of precious time and valuable stone. You do not know that one day a form of Divine beauty will emerge. You see the ryot scatters valuable seeds on the mushy field; you blame him for wasting eatable stuff! You do not realise that he will harvest it a hundredfold in a few months. Your criticism is born of ignorance and shortsight. The rain that fell this morning and surprised everyone did not surprise Me, for it is the inevitable consequence of the yaaga. It is a special science, which these Pandits know; honour them for it.
There are many who talk cynically of even Sathya (truth), Dharma (virtue), Shaanthy (peace) and Prema (love). They say that if you stick to truth nothing can be got done, that a little lie helps much; that Dharma is what suits the need of the moment; that if you practise Shaanthy, you will only receive all the blows on your own back; that if you become famous as a man of prema, the entire village will squat on you and share your hard-earned wealth.
Therefore, they conclude, you will be a fool if you decide to practise these four virtues.

Practising what you preach is Dharma But, just think a little and you will find out the absurdity of the criticism. It is the lie that requires intelligent bolstering, clever avoidance and deeper memory! It is much easier to speak the truth and be done with it. What you have seen or heard or done, speak about these just as you saw or heard or did! And, what is Dharma? Practising what you preach, doing as you say it has to be done, keeping precept and practice in line. Earn virtuously, yearn piously; live in the fear of God, live for reaching God---that is Dharma.

Minister Narasinga Rao quoted in his speech some officer-friend who spoke to him about the dangers that lurk in a community that suddenly gets a lift in the standard of living, due to some dam or industry being established in their home land. He said planners must first pay attention to the control of the recklessness and the spirit of bravado and crime that accompany sudden access to riches. Of course, this is a universal experience, this association of vice with wealth, of madha with dhana. The poor are rich in devotion to God; Kunthi prayed that her difficulties may continue, for they keep the Lord ever in her mind. Riches are a great handicap in the path of spiritual progress. So, though you may be rich, do not cultivate attachment to the bank account or to the mansions, cars and comforts you command. Have them as if they are given to you on trust by the Lord.

Listen to the epics and correct yourself The Vedhas are called Sruthi, because they have to be heard with attention. Sravanam (listening) implants ideas: it inspires you to take stock of your condition, to note your deficiencies and failings and even your excellences and merits. The ear has great potentiality to correct, reform and guide. Listen to the Raamayana and the Mahaabhaaratha; it is a chance that many are losing now. Then discover for yourselves the greatness of Raama, Krishna, Meera and Raadha. Dwell on their lives, the example they place before you; correct your habits, your outlook, your attitude to the world, to society, to yourself. That way lies salvation. The ear fills the head; the head directs the arm; the arm acts. So, hear good things; do good things; share good things. That gives joy and contentment.

Speak softly, kindly; that is dharma. Give generously, wisely; wipe the tear and assuage the sigh and the groan; that is dharma. Do not simply throw money at the needy; give with respect and reverence', give with grace. Give also with humility. Try to live with others harmoniously. This is called Kaliyuga (the Iron Age), but it has become worse. It has become Kalahayuga, the Age of Factions! Factions in the family, the village, the community, the country, the nation, the world. The root cause of all this is the emphasis on the ego and the desire for cheap and temporary pleasure.

Earn the riches of inaana, as Janaka did, through association with the great sages of the day, as Dasharatha did from Vasishtha. These Brahmins, scholars in the Vedhas, have in them the inaana you need; they have preserved them in spite of poverty and neglect. They have been scorned by the rulers and the ruled, the people and the politicians. Their knowledge heaped in their 'godowns!' is fast getting useless through not seeing the light. You might be wondering why I am taking them with Me from place to place and even sympathising with Me for the task that I have taken upon My back, for, in your opinion, it is a lost cause. No; it is not lost; the Avathaar has come to see that it is retrieved and restored. I derive Aanandam through them and with them.

To condemn all is unjust
Do not judge them by their dress or their exterior. There may be among them a few who do not live up to the high standard they profess; that percentage is like the few small stones found in a bag of rice, small in quantity and easily recognisable. Do not condemn the clouds which shower sheets of pure water, because after it falls to the ground some water gets dirty. To condemn all is unjust, untrue and unkind. Take My own instance. I never exult when I am extolled, nor shrink when I am reviled. Few have realised My purpose and significance; but I am not worried. When things that are not in Me are attributed to Me, why should I worry? When things that are in Me are mentioned, why should I exult? "Sayeeeki Sarvamu yes, yes, yes," (for Sayee it is always s.s.s.). If you say, "Yes; you are the Lord," I am the Lord to you, if you say "No", I am No to you.

I am Anaanda, Shaantham, Dhairyam (Bliss, Equanimity and Courage). Take Me as your Aathmathathwam (Reality of Aathma); you won't be wrong. Resolve from this day to see only the good in others, to develop the good in yourselves. That is the best saadhana. Discard anger, hate, envy and greed; do it by dwelling always on the Name that summarises and signifies the Glory of God. Nurturing anger and hatred in the heart is like carrying a pot with many holes for bringing water.

Foster depositories of ancient wisdom During these days when I am going about in the East Godaavari District, people have witnessed the devotion and sincerity of lakhs of men and women. Spiritual thirst is present in a large measure; the tendency to run towards the. Divine is here. It is latent, but strong. Just as when the showers of rain come, the bare plains become green with grass, since the rain feeds the roots underground, My presence has made the spiritual yearning lying dormant in your hearts, sprout in profusion. That yearning has made you ignore the importunities of hunger and thirst, and given you great joy and contentment.

.Foster these repositories of our ancient dharma and wisdom, the Pandits. You run to them only when you need a priest for. marriages or other ceremonies. You never care whether they are fed or clothed, whether they have enough opportunities to study the scriptures, to teach their children, to live as teachers and guides of society. Honour them, make full use of them.

Life is just a chance to see for yourself your beginning and your end..

SRI SATHYA SAI
24. Be above and beyond
The seed grows slowly into a huge spreading tree; so, too, through tiny acts, soft words and kind deeds, man elevates himself into a Divine Being! The worst action is to do the opposite of what you preach' to deny by the hand what you dole out of your mouth. If you cannot act up to your declarations, keep quiet; do not go about advising and advertise that you are hypocrites. Do not preach dharma (virtue) while decrying it in deed. Dharma is steady, unchanging; it can never decline. What happens is: those who have to practise dharma decline in faith and steadfastness.

By practice is a man judged; not by the precepts that he pours forth. One speaker was just now giving a list of sages and saints who were born in this District in the past; but, you must ask yourself the question: "What use have we made of their experience? How have we benefited?"

When that list is being elaborated upon, you have to hang down your heads and lament the decline in spiritual development! You have to ask, "How have we deserved this heritage?"

The President quoted an English poet who said that life is like a pastime for God, who crushes a butterfly, after playing with it for some time. "They kill us for their sport"; "Life is a tale told by an idiot", he quoted. He said what Western poets spoke of Fate as blind and cruel and had recently developed despair regarding human progress, in spite of technical and technological advances. This only reveals that they have no deep experience, no illumination.

Separate yourself from the grief

The experience of saints in this country is different. They have known (and you have also to know) that the body, with a form and a name, is just a temporary habitation. Form and name make anything temporary. You hear of the Lord giving darshan (audience) in the temple, wearing a diamond-set hastham (hand) ! That means the Lord is conceived as having a Name and a Form, which are limitations and therefore, temporary, attached to a particular manifestation only. Form and Name are needed for experiencing sukha (pleasure) and sukha involves dukkha (grief) also; they are the obverse and the reverse of the same coin, this side and the other side of a sheet of paper.

Grief is caused, as joy is caused, by the attachment of the senses to objects; once you know that you are not the senses or the mind, but He, who operates the senses and wields the mind, you cross the bounds of pleasure and pain. The President of India had a recent domestic bereavement; but he did not import that grief into his role as President, did he? No. The duties of the President were performed without any hindrance or loss of interest. Separate yourself from the grief; you are the President of your Realm. The senses and the mind, with all the attendant impulses, desires, attitudes, etc., are your servants, instruments that have to carry out your orders.

The Vedhas teach you this truth. Once, as part of a marriage procession, an elephant was also pushed along: a wicker-elephant, life-size. People looked at it in wonder and some even dared to find fault with it, saying the legs were too short, the ears were inadequate, etc. But, the thing was filled with crackers and, in a few moments, when it was lit, the whole contraption exploded in a blaze of brilliantly-coloured shooting stars with a tremendous bang. Why should there be so much criticism of a thing which, like the body, will soon go up in flames? The body is but an instrument for a high purpose, the realisation of the Glory that fills the Universe, of which you are a fraction!

Road to God is filled with immense hardships

Use all the talents of your senses, the intelligence and memory, for this purpose. Transform values, sublimate desires; let the higher always overrule the lower. Like the ass that carries sandalwood, without knowing anything more than its weight, man too carries the burden of wordly worries, without being aware of the fragrance which he can really get from the very burden on his back. The senses will drag him away from the higher purpose, so they must be kept under strict control by rigorous training. Without this mastery over the senses, all the elaborate puja (ritual worship), all the long hours of dhyaana (meditation), all the vows you observe, are mere mummerly.

True devotion must not get dispirited; nor elated or satisfied with lesser gains. It must fight against failure, loss, calumny, calamity, ridicule and against egoism and pride, impatience and cowardice. Read the lives of Jayadeva, Thukaraam, Raamdass and Sakkubai; go through the stories of how the Gopees calumniated Raadha; then, you will realise the immensity of the hardships they underwent, when they travelled on the road to God. You find now a number of people who open their mouths wide in admiration of Western countries who prepare rockets to travel to the moon and go round the earth. They may circle lakhs of miles in space, but, they know not how to proceed half an inch more towards their neighbour, or brother; they do not dare explore their inner reality, though they are eager to explore the outer illusion!

The Truth that is in all beings is also in you. Search for that; discover that unity; that source of courage, of love, of wisdom. You do not realise that it is He who digests the food that you consume, for, as He says, in the Geetha, "I am the Vaishwaanara--- fire that is in the bodies of all beings and digests the four types of food they eat." That fire digests food, but, it is careful not to destroy the stomach itself! He is the basis of all activity, though Himself unconcerned.

Do not allow the world to get into you

Be like the lotus, unattached to the slush where it is born and the water in which it is bred; the merits and demerits earned in past births is the slush, where the jeevi is born; maaya or the enticing illusion called world is the water, which sustains; but do not allow that enticement to affect you. Be above and beyond the earthly attachments like the lotus. Know that though you may be in it, you should not allow the world to get into you and affect your sense of values.

It is the stilted sense of values that makes you carry a radio receiver strapped to your shoulder, even when you come here! This has become a fashion; sons-in-law now try to extract a transistor radio from their fathers-in-law, as quickly as possible. There was a young man in a big town; it so happened that his father arrived on a visit and was received at the railway station by the son himself. They were going home in an auto-rickshaw when the father, already confused by the roar and noise of the traffic, noticed some one carrying a small rectangular box, strapped on his shoulder. He saw many more such boxes, carried proudly by young men, fashionably attired and walking in a strut, with nonchalant gaze. He asked his son what they charged in the town for a shave and when the son answered, a half-rupee, he was surprised that it was so cheap. "These barbers going about with those boxes strapped on their shoulders are so well dressed and rich looking that I thought they must be charging five rupees at least," he said. The poor man thought the transistor radio sets were barber's boxes. In fact, many who carry them and tune in do not know the A B C of music, eastern or western, nor do they know an iota of geography or history or politics to appreciate the news. They carry watches on their wrists, but do not know what hour it is, they have to stretch their wrists before those sitting next to them! They cannot read a watch, nor have they any engagement to keep. All this is but needless multiplication of misery! Know that which, if known, makes known everything that has to be known. This was the advice given to Uddalaka by his Guru, as mentioned in the Upanishads. You are the core, the centre of your world. Without you there is no world for you. Unless you know yourself, you cannot know the world which is your creation. Now, you ask every one you meet, "How do you do?" But have you ever asked the question to yourself, "How do I do?" You ask every third person, "Who is he?" But, have you asked the first person, "Who am I" and searched for the answer? That is what the Vedhaantha teaches, that is what these Pandits are eager to tell you.

Steady enquiry is essential

Some of you may ask, what is the use of telling all this to such vast gatherings, things that have to be whispered in the ears of ardent seekers only. Well, how do you know that there are not many such here? I know there are many who will treasure what they have heard to-day; they will ruminate over it; perhaps they will remember it, when the need for it becomes urgent and acute; they will then say to themselves, "Ah, Baba told us this that day when we heard Him at Rajahmundry." Nothing that is experienced will go to waste. It will shape the course of events; it will change attitudes and habits; it will purify and clarify situations and outlooks. That is why I want you to read the Bhagavad Geetha; this learning of the Geetha is like learning eetha (swimming). Eetha saves you from drowning. Geetha saves you from drowning in the trecherous flood of worldly desire. The Geetha is the real purpose for which the Avathaara of Krishna was undertaken.

Man's four main duties

The Geetha is His command; how can you earn the Master's Grace if you do not carry out the Master's Commands. If the son says, "Leave me to myself. I need no instructions from you", how can he expect the father to give him a share of the property? The Geetha also helps you to recognise the incarnations of God. Usually, when the Lord appears with Form, man is pestered by doubts and he actually loses the precious chance. He asks himself and all those whom he meets "Is it true? Can it be true?" and before his doubts are removed, he deserts the quest and wanders into the wilderness. Of course, steady inquiry is essential; do not be led by others; awaken your own reason, amass your own experience; and, decide for yourself your own path.

Then only can you get joy in treading it; if you are forced to take a path by others or persuaded into it by some one else, then, when the first obstacle turns up, you will get dispirited and turn back.

What exactly is your duty? Let Me summarise it for you. First, tend your parents with love and reverence and gratitude. Second, Sathyam vadha, Dharmam chara' Speak the truth and act virtuously. Third, whenever you have a few moments to spare, repeat the Name of the Lord, with the Form in your mind. Fourth, never indulge in talking ill of others or try to discover faults in others. And, finally, do not cause pain to others, in any form.

Now, the only thing that is cheap is "man." All else have gone up in value. Man is the thing most defamed, most neglected. The Minister was saying yesterday that when costly projects are planned and finished, when the area becomes rich and prosperous the inevitable result is an unfortunate increase in crime and vice, because there is no plan to build up the moral stamina of the human community the project is intended to benefit! The community can be really happy only if it has fine health, steady peace of mind and intelligence valued and directed to the service of others. The recognition of the evanescence of the body and all things material must over-rule the tendency towards pride and pomp, and check avarice and ambition.

Means have to be as noble as the end

Whatever happens, the path of virtue should not be given up. When Hanumaan saw Seetha in the Ashoka Vana at Lanka, surrounded by ogresses, forlorn and helpless in the midst of her captors, he fell into such overpowering agony that he said to himself, "The whole world is sunk in sorrow since this Mother is grieving; I shall take her on my shoulder and leaping across the sea, restore her to Raama and make her happy." He invited Seetha to accept his proposal. But, listen to what Seetha replied. She resisted the temptation to escape from captivity, to reunite with her Lord, to rejoin her people, her kith and kin. She struck to the path of Dharma; "I should not, out of my own will, touch any male other than my Lord. Besides, it will detract from the glory that awaits my Lord, who will certainly liberate me by the prowess of his arm. If you carry me back now, you will be repeating the act for which we now condemn Raavana." The means are as important as the goal; the end does not justify the means; it has to be as noble as the end.

The President referred to the Prashaanthi Vidwanmahaa-sabha as having been founded by Me, but remember, any institution or individual engaged in feeding the roots of Dharma are Mine; I am in every one who does good, speaks good, and thinks good.

Rajahmundry, 31-3-1965

If the place you must reach is very near, you can just step across; if the distance is more, you may need a vehicle, bullock- drawn or horse-drawn; for longer distances, you may require a car or a plane. But, the Lord is nearest to you. Slide ajar the door of delusion; part the curtain of ignorance; open the closed eye; He is right there, before you. The fog of sensual pleasure is hiding Him from you. Switch on the light; the darkness disappears and He becomes visible.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

25. Plenty of holy men

Matters of the spirit are matters of experience. Devoid of the underground stream of steady striving for experience, man's innate divinity and holiness are fast forgotten and ignored. This can be regained by means of Vedhaantha (philosophy based on Vedhas) and a proper study of the Shaastras. Some people carp at Vedhaantha and say that it makes men lazy and encourages them to run away from their responsibilities; but, the first responsibility of every one is to himself; he is the source and centre of all his attention.

This kind of cynical criticism has become a fashion nowdays; it only reveals the ignorance and egoism of the critic. They say that the Sanyaasins (monks) are like mistletoes fattening on the toils of others, a set of idle parasites. But, to condemn the institution of Sanyaas on the basis of a few individuals is wrong. Who can judge the inner urges, except the Lord? You may be misled by the quantity, variety and cost of flowers, or the tears flowing from the eyes, or the hymns sung by the tongue, or the hours of listening to divine stories that a man might have to his credit; but it is the resident within who knows the genuineness of the feeling. There are countless numbers of such devoted men and women in this country, even now. I know, because, I am with them.

The person who spoke on Saint Thyaagaraaja lamented that such saints are now so rare. They are not rare. There are many now, alive and happy. Those who seek will be able to discover them.

Seek the company of the good, the seekers, the aspirants, the detached. Then, you will see the light. Listen to holy discourses; read sacred books. Your effort and the atmosphere of the place, these two will lead you to success. Holy place, holy river, holy company, holy day---when these conjoin, it is the chance of a lifetime; make the fullest use of it. Be ever in contact with God

Now, holy days have become holidays when you make merry, eat your fill, go out on picnics and hikes, and generally indulge in sensual pleasures, which end in dejection, disease and discord.

The place has a subtle and powerful influence on the man.

Maarkandeya held tight the Shivalinga and so, Yama's noose bound both himself and Shiva; that was the reason the boy was saved. The story teaches you to be ever in contact with God, for you do not know when the noose will be thrown. Attach yourself to the Highest, call it by any name, conceive it in any form. But, remember, without Dharma you cannot attain it. Don't be led away into the by-paths; keep to the highway.

If you yield to alpabuddhi (inferior thoughts), you will be losing the akhanda-thathwa (principle of the Universal). Never give ear to slander, ridicule or praise. They are all bubbles on the surface. They are mere manipulations of words, the magic of vocabulary, the tamash of style, the dance of phrases. Learn the means of winning Grace and earning purity from those who know; the elders, the scholars who have put their learning into practice. Don't despair; don't hesitate.

Grace can wipe off the past; Sath-prayathna, Sath-sanga and Sadaachara (good self- effort, good company, good practices) can ensure happiness in future. The three cardinal principles of the Hindu faith are: Belief in a series of births: belief in Avatharas of the Lord for the reestablishment of Dharma and the transformation of those who have strayed from it; and belief in karma, the fact of every activity having its inevitable consequence and of human destiny being shaped by cumulative effect of all these consequences. Karma is the cause of births, the jeevi (soul) being compelled to undergo another ordeal for clearing its accounts and becoming free of both credit and debit.

Develop the inner joy that is everlasting

You might ask, "How is it, then, that, while in this life, we do not remember any single event that happened to us in previous lives?" It is something like a man knowing too many languages; when he speaks in Tamil, no Telugu word will come to his mind; when he speaks in English, his thoughts will be framed in that language only. If you forget this birth, and concentrate on the other, then you can know. But, you seldom give up the attachment to this life!

A volcano throws up its lava on the screen of the picture house; a dam bursts and the flood waters it had impounded roar along towards the sea, submerging vast states; but the screen is not burnt, nor does it get wet in the least. The screen is the truth; the film is an illusion, however realistic it was, however genuine the feelings it aroused. Know this and so direct your life that this knowledge is the background of all your actions. Thus, you will have great peace and great joy.

With a mind full of egoism and hatred, you can never hope to have peace and joy. A tree that bore plenty of fruits dried quickly; some one attributed it to the evil eye of the passers-by. Others said, perhaps it was not watered; but, the owner asserted he was watering it adequately. No one could diagnose the reason, except a forest officer, who said, "The roots have been affected by a pest," There was a bhaktha coming to the previous sarira (body) called Raadhika at Shirdi; he was always suffering misery, but, only for those who observed his external movements. At heart, he was supremely happy. Develop that inner joy; it is everlasting, full. The seed of the Lord's name has been sown

It is now two years since the Prashanthi Vidwan-mahaasabha was started. So, it is natural that the question is asked, "What has it achieved?" You will be wrong if you thought I am having all these Pandits about Me and that I am going from place to place with them to get publicity for Myself or for them. I do not need any publicity, nor do they. They have to know themselves and they have to help you to know yourselves, that is all. The Vedhas and the Shaastras speak only of this. But, you must admit, because it is patent everywhere, that a great change has come as a result of the Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha. Hitherto, even in these parts, the audience for spiritual talks could be counted on the fingers of one hand, one could easily tick off the names of the persons who usually attend. But, look at the flood of eager humanity that gathers now! The appetite for spiritual knowledge has increased tremendously. This is some progress. The seeds have sprouted; they have become evident in the hearts of the people. Now, by careful fostering, the harvest can be won. The seed of the Lord's name has been sown in lakhs of hearts; the poshana (fostering) is your duty; its rakshana (protection) is My pleasure. Fostering the saplings is your duty; protecting them from harm is My pleasure. The Pandits too, must share with the hungry and the thirsty the knowledge that they have, the inspiration that they alone can give.

Rajahmundry, 1-4-1965

26. Matham and mathi Matham is a matter of mathi; 'religion' is based on the urge that moves the 'mind'; if the urge is divine, we have a divine religion; if it is bestial, then, the things held lovable and desirable will be bestial too. Join the particular with the universal, the limited with the unlimited, the river with the sea. This is the process called Yoga. This can be achieved through Bhakthi or Karma or Inaana.
 You must develop this attitude of 'merging' with the divine in all that you do, this attitude of dedication, of surrender to His Will. This is the best means of realising Him. The Geetha, about which all the four Pandits whom you are honouring today spoke, was itself the result of Arjuna's surrender, his prapaththi. The Geetha does not prescribe the same remedy for all; each must get himself diagnosed by an experienced doctor of the spirit and then follow his advice, until he reaches a state of health, when he can restore equanimity to himself by his own effort. You need not learn all the shlokas (verses) and all the commentaries by heart and exhibit your scholarship, engaging in contest with other scholars. It is enough if you put into practice one shloka, the one that suits your spiritual stage, that appeals to you most. That first step will itself take you nearer the second step, the second will make the third easier and so on until the end.
 If the cow is the representative of Dharma, then, the four Vedhas are the teats in its udder, where the life-giving milk is stored; the Gopaala (Krishna) milked the cow and gave it to the world, as the Geetha. It has to be taken into the heart. Of what avail is "medicine" if it is poured into the ear? It has to be taken in, so that it might act and strengthen the blood-stream. So too, there is no use in listening for hours to discourses on the Geetha; take the lesson in. Put it into practice: apply it in daily life. Realise the divinity in you, that is the lesson. Observe truth and justice in every act There are two statements in the Geetha, both complementary:
Shraddhaavaan labhathe jnaanam (the man with steady faith wins wisdom) and samsayaathmaa vinasayathi (he who doubts perishes). The doubt that overpowered Arjuna was removed by the teaching of Krishna and the necessary shraddha was inculcated. As a matter of fact, the Geetha is a conversation between the jeeva and Brahman, the limited or, rather 'the idea of the limited', with the Unlimited. The dehavasthra is worn by the dehi: the body is but a vesture of God, who is eternal and permanent.

 Seeing one's own reality is the opening of the doors of liberation; for this, the mirror of the heart has to be prepared, by coating the back of the heart with sathya and dharma. Otherwise, the image will not appear. In every act of yours, if you observe truth and justice, then you can see your own reality revealed. You may say that the burden of past acts and their inevitable consequences have to be borne; but, the Grace of the Lord can burn that burden in a flash; the revelation of reality will, in a flash, save you from that burden. If you see yourself in all and all in you, then, you have known the reality, says Krishna in the Geetha. Therefore, you have to develop the same quantity and quality of Love that you have for Me, towards all others. When you are the Universal, where can you say, your street is or your house is? You are then no longer an individual; you are the Universal. Get that idea fixed in your mind. The Lord will be easily moved; He is like butter, a little warmth is enough to melt His heart. When Prahlada approached Him, the ferocity of the Narasimha Form of the Lord cooled down.
 Consider the welfare of humanity as a whole
 The three Pandits you have honoured today are preserving and propagating these vital truths of our culture for the last thirty or forty years; there are many more men of this calibre still to be recognised and honoured. Many people condemn Brahmins as a class and charge them with trying to promote their caste interests, writing the Shaastras (scriptures) and trying to have a monopoly of the Vedhas. But, have you considered how difficult the Shaastras have made the life of a Brahmin? No one will willingly impose such restrictions on so many of his own acts and movements, but these people have done it and tried to live accordingly for centuries, and their chief inspiration for subjecting themselves to this restriction has been not power or pomp, but "the welfare of humanity!" Consider this.
 That is the outlook of Indian culture, the welfare of humanity as a whole. That is also the reason why it has survived, while all its contemporaries of the past have sunk into oblivion, some without a trace of theft influence on posterity. This culture has stood firm because it is built upon the Vedhas, the authentic experience of the seers. It is only those who are obsessed by doubt that lose those precious jewels of spiritual wisdom; there are some who hesitate to accept good and useful things that others suggest, though these same people are daily taking countless other facts on trust!

Imagine the enormous efforts of these seers, as a result of which the path of spiritual progress has been cleared by them for the good of all! Why do you not proceed along it? If you take the very first step, you will immediately recognise that their experience is authentic. What is the use of blaming them, instead of trying their prescription? But, you must be aware, of course, of your illness and long for a cure.

Develop confidence in yourself

The Geetha must be carried by this Samaaj to the villages and its message must be instilled into the daily lives of our people. In order that you may get the authority to do this, you must yourselves follow the Geetha in your daily life. Develop confidence in yourself and in the culture you have grown up in. There is no advertisement needed for it, it has its own inherent value and the proof of its value is in the shaanthi it confers and the courage it implants.

I am sorry these Pandits, who are great scholars, did not speak longer because they wished Me to address you for a longer time. Whether they speak or I speak, the subject is essentially the same; liberation from delusion and escape from darkness, by the recognition of the light that is effulgent within.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

27. Uplift of villages

The very first function in the New Year Vishwaavasu is this vast gathering at Sathyavada, a veritable ocean of humanity, formed by rivers and streams from miles around, an ocean of joy, rather than an ocean of humanity! Man is born for the attainment of that joy, not for sheer eating and revelling. Real and lasting joy can be won only by a life led along the path of Dharma.

Dharma makes the inherent Divinity of Man shine forth; that illumination is the purpose of Life, of the recurring sequence of birth and death. Man has in him the spark of Divinity, which is omnipresent, omniscient, omnipotent and immanent in the entire Universe; in order to become ever aware of this innate Reality, man must learn the technique laid down by the scriptures, revealed by the same Divinity.

The very first lesson in the primer of this spiritual text is "the control of speech." Speech is the armament of man; other animals have fleetness of foot, sharpness of claw, fang, horn, tusk, beak, talon. But, man has sweetness of speech, which can disarm all opposition and defeat all the designs of hatred. Sweetness makes you Pashupathi, (Divine); harshness makes you Pashu (bestial). Mere outward politeness or sweetness is hypocrisy! Sincere speech must flow from real sweetness of heart, a heart full of love. Remove all evil from the Maanasa sarovara, (the pellucid Lake of your Mind), and make it a fit abode of Godhead.

Dedicate the deed and its consequence to God

De not aspire to be a servant of God, working for wages; you reduce yourself to that level if you ask for this and that from Him in return for the praise that you offer or the sacrifice you undergo;

even if you do not ask, if the bargaining attitude is in your mind, or, if you feel disappointed that God did not give you desirable objects in return for all the trouble you took to please Him. Do not calculate profit; do not count on returns; do not plan for the consequence; do, since you have to do, since it is your duty. That is real puja. Dedicate the deed as well as the consequence to Him. Then you become His own, not a cooly, demanding wages. That is the highest level a bhakt can reach through saadhana. That is the reason why nishkaama karma (desireless action) is so highly extolled in the Geetha by Krishna.

The heart has the precious treasure of Aananda, but man does not know the key to open the lock; that key is Naamasmarana---the repetition of the Name of the Lord--with a pure heart. Purify the heart with the four instruments' sathya, dharma, shaanthi and prema. Always endeavour to do good to others, to think well of them and to speak well of others. This endeavour will wear away your egoism and attachment to things that cater to your pleasures. Do not behave like birds and beasts, always engaged in earning a living or rearing a family. Struggle for higher things; use the higher talents with which you are endowed.

I am glad this village has responded so well to the call of the higher things in life! All villages must awaken to this Vision of the Supreme. Do not be dispirited; it will happen soon. As a matter of fact, humility and reverence are fast disappearing in the towns; uppishness and irreverence are becoming the fashion there. The fear of sin has faded; there is no faith left in the towns, either in God or in themselves. But, these virtues---humility, reverence, dread of sin, faith in the victory of truth and the efficacy of virtue, the existence of an eternal everpresent witness---these are still existing and flourishing in the villages. People who have themselves fallen, are now attempting to "uplift" the villages; people who are suffering from the mania to imitate strange cultures are talking of preserving and propagating the genuine culture of India which villages are still nourishing, and planning for the same. Man becomes a prisoner of his own desires. Some consider themselves great because they have vast territory, some because they have finance, some because they have arms, some because they have vast populations; but, the real wealth, real greatness is virtue which earns the Grace of God. The Kauravas had everything that the world honoured and envied; arms, ambition, friends, allies, forces, riches. But, God was not on their side, for, they were wicked; and they reaped disaster and disgrace. All things that people pride themselves on having, give aanandam only when they come, but they have grief when they disappear, as they must some day or other. But the Grace of God is Sathya, that is to say, persisting without change at all times and at all places; it is Nirmala, uncontaminated by any blemish, full, complete, almighty; it is Nischala, unaffected by modifications. Instead of earning that Grace and the Aananda that flows from it, man spins a cocoon around himself from the sticky fluid of objective attachment and becomes a prisoner of his own desires. "I" and "Mine" are the two poison fangs of the cobra of worldly life. Pluck them from your make-up and you are no longer dangerous to society, and to yourself. Discover the prime purpose of human life. I know that you have to lead an exacting life in the villages, waking with the cock-crow and sleeping when the birds start sleeping. Of course, you have to work for your food, raiment and housing and for your family, to keep all those depending on you happy and comfortable. But, I want to ask you a question: Is this all? Does this complete the task? What has happened to the prime purpose of human life, which you have earned after ages of struggle? Of what avail is all the long years spent in this body if you have not discovered the answer to the essential question:

"who am I?" Know that, become masters of your own realm, the realm of the senses, the intellect, the feelings, the impulses, the instincts, the attitudes, the prejudices. Then only can you claim to have Swaraajya. When in your own household, the sons rebel against the parents and brother harbours hatred against brother, how can you call yourself 'master'? So, too, when your senses drag you in one direction and your intellect in another, how can you claim to have Swaraajya? I must warn you against two infectious diseases that are rampant in the country now; selfishness and the habit of reviling others. Investigate, examine, and then you have the right to pronounce judgement. Investigate, examine and then, you will realise that the self is better served by serving others; you will realise that there are far more useful ways of spending time, the little time that you have here in this life than reviling others or praising them. Rather than, concerning yourselves with the faults and excellences of others, care more earnestly for your faults; foster more carefully your own excellences. That is My advice to you today. Sathyavada, 4-4-1965

28. The bird on the swinging bough

The New year is called Vishwaavasu and you must take it as a call to strengthen your Vishwaasa (Faith); faith in your own Aathma, your own Divinity, which manifests itself as Love, as desire for immortality, as detachment, as admiration of virtue, the awe and wonder that Nature provokes. But, man is neglecting a grand opportunity, the opportunity of imbibing his own genuine grandeur. He prefers to burn the sandalwood trees for sale as charcoal, for, he does not know the value of the wood. The Divine he takes to be just human; the goal he has set before himself is the winning of sukha and shaanthi; that is the proper thing to do, but, he stops after a few steps, mistaking the pseudo for the real, that is the tragedy. He believes that if he gets two full meals a day, a few yards of cloth to wear, and a roof over his head, with a few sundry superfluities, he has reached the goal; but the joy he derives is paltry, mixed with grief, easily turning into pain, harmful to others, full of pride, envy, malice, greed and other harmful ingredients. The body that is sustained on food which will not keep fresh for even a few hours, how can it be fresh for long? That which is made and marred cannot for that very reason be truth; for, truth cannot be made and marred. It is, was and will be, without any modification.

What is the immortal part of man? Is it the wealth he has accumulated, the residences he has built, the physique he has developed, the health he has acquired, the family he has reared? No, all that he has done, developed or earned are destroyed; he has to leave them all to the ravages of time. He cannot take with him even a handful of earth, the earth he loved so much. If only the dead could take with them a handful each, earth would have become so scarce that it should have been rationed by now! Discover the immortal 'I' and know that it is the spark of God in you; live in the companionship of the vast measureless Supreme and you will be rendered vast and measureless.

Consider all objects that you collect here as given on 'trust' to be used in this caravanserai, during your pilgrimage, in this Karmakshetra (the field of action). You have to return them when you leave; they belong to another. When you hold a currency note in your hand and say proudly, "This is mine" that note laughs at you, for, it says, "O, how many thousand persons have I known, who have prided themselves like this!" The body is but a tent. Don't fondle that delusion; part for the dehi (indweller), He who resides therein and makes it active, makes it ponder and conclude and act.

The body is but a tent for the pilgrim
As the carpenter shapes the wood, the blacksmith shapes iron, the goldsmith shapes gold, so the Lord shapes in His own way, as the fancy suits Him, Prakrithi or the Created Universe, the Manifold, woven of Space and Time and Guna. Know that the Lord is the basis; and lose all fear.

The tiny sparrow sits on the storm-tossed bough, because it knows that its wings are strong; it does not depend upon the tossing bough to sustain it. So too, rely on the Grace of God; earn it and keep it. Then, whatever the strength of the storm, you can survive it without harm.

Discriminate; discriminate all the time; use viveka and vijnana (spiritual knowledge) and experience of the waking stage, the dream stage and the stage of deep sleep. In the dream stage the senses are negated; buddhi (intellect) does not work; only the mind is the master: it creates its own 'world'. A tiger mauls you in the dream; a snake strikes deep into your leg. You feel all the pain and all the fear. How do you cure the unhappy man? There is no need to bring a doctor or a magician with his charms. Wake him; he is cured! He knows that there was no tiger or snake or bite or pain. So too, inaana will immediately remove all the dual experiences of joy and grief, derived from these non-real objects.

Sanctify every moment by holy thoughts
You say, "I was awake," "I dreamt," "I slept soundly". Now who is this "I"? Who is this "I" that has none of the three stages, that persists from birth to death, that deals with the body and all the organs and senses, all the various feelings, impulses and experiences as 'its', 'its possessions', 'its instruments'? That 'I' is the thing to be known and once known, you must not allow your mind to stray away from it.

An empty iron box gets valued when it contains jewels; the body is honoured when it contains the jewel of consciousness and the valuables called virtues. Life has to be lived through, for the sake of the chance to unfold the virtues. Otherwise, man is a burden upon the earth, a consumer of food. Whether you like it or not, the length of your life is being clipped every day; the Sun takes a day off it when He sets. You have to pay Him this tribute. You cannot get it back, however hard you pine for it or promise to put it, if given back, to better use' once gone, it is gone for ever. And how can you be sure of the day ahead? You may not live to see it. So, sanctify every moment by holy thoughts, words and deeds.

Even if you have no steady faith in God or in any particular Name or Form of that Immanent Power, start by controlling the vagaries of the mind, the pulls of the ego, the attractions of senseattachment.

Be helpful to others; then, your conscience itself will appreciate you and keep you happy and content, though others may not thank you. Life is a steady march towards a goal, it is not a meaningless term of imprisonment or a stupid kind of picnic. Be patient, humble; don't rush to conclusions about others and their motives.

You have six fires raging in you When fire rages, you try to put it out by throwing sand or water, and you keep a stock of these in readiness. But, you have six fires raging inside 'you'---lust, anger, greed, attachment, pride and hatred. What have you in store to put them out? Keep ready sathya; shaanthi, dharma and prema. They will help you to scotch the flames; they are effective extinguishers.

Each one eats to assuage his own hunger; so too each one must discover the best way to appease his own spiritual hunger. Do not be led away by the scorn of others or by the recommendation of others. Contact your own reality in the silence that you create by quietening the senses and controlling the mind. There is a Voice that you can hear in that silence. The true witness of your having listened to that Voice is your behaviour. A tree is held and fed by the roots that go into the silent earth; so also, if the roots go deep into the silence of your inner consciousness, your spiritual blossoming is assured.

Yesterday, a very large number of old men, women and children were put to great trouble, since there was great rush and jostling for space. Since all were moved by prema towards Me, I felt responsible for all that. I sometimes feel that I should not thus move out to places, for when lakhs of people come, quiet becomes difficult. The loudspeakers too joined in adding to the confusion by going out of action. You must learn not to lose patience, but to wait and put the chance to the best use.

Repalle, 6-4-1965

You are the whole, the infinite, the all.

You as body, mind and soul are a dream;

but what you really are is Existence, Knowledge and Bliss. You are the God of Universe.

You are creating the whole Universe and drawing it in.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

29. The immortal guide to immortality

These days when anxiety casts its shadow over the land, the recollection of the birth and achievements of Raama acts as armour to the agitated mind. Raama is in truth the Vedhas personified. He is Vedhadharma in human form. Today, what you celebrate is not the birth of the son of Dasharatha, called Raama, but of the birth of Dharma itself. You must be happier at that thought; it is a double birthday. When Dharma declines, and the joy of practising it and living it and saturating thoughts and deeds with it, is no longer sought after, when that joy is forgotten and even denied, the Lord incarnates, according to the assurance He has vouchsafed. That is the way of the Lord.

The arena of life is raised on four pillars' Dharma, Artha, Kaama and Moksha (Righteousness, Wealth, Desire and Liberation). They sustain and support. When the arena loses two and struggles to stand on the remaining two, viz., artha and kaama, naturally, anxiety, pretence, grief and greed afflict mankind. Each pillar must co-operate and complement the parts that the other three play. Dharma must sublimate artha, that is to say, through moral means alone should the means of living be obtained. Artha must be won through dharma and used in dharma. Kaama must be primarily for moksha; that is to say, desire must be directed to liberation from bondage, not to the forging of new chains or the addition of further links in the chain of birth and death.

The first of the four, Dharma, must interpenetrate and strengthen the next two, so that the fourth may be attained. Devoid of the first and the last, mankind is reduced to the level of beasts and birds.

Dharma subsumes all stages of life

Artha and kaama should not be sought after, in isolation. The fact that today there is fear and anxiety in all sections of the people and in all stages of life, shows that men are pursuing only artha and kaama and neglecting dharma and moksha. It was once the pride of India that it was a land of peace and fearlessness, of spiritual effort and adventure, which guaranteed social and individual content. Now, Indians must again dedicate themselves to the revival of that way of living, of Dharma which subsumes all the stages of life. In this campaign, it is the duty of every individual, irrespective of caste, creed, sex or extent of possessions or learning, to join enthusiastically. For, it comes quite naturally to an Indian since it has drawn out the best in him for centuries and the yearning for it is in his blood.

How are you to adopt Dharma in the process of living? That is laid down by the Avatharaas like Raama. That is the purpose of His coming. Dasharatha had four sons of whom Raama was the foremost. They represent the four Purusharthas, Dharma being the foremost; the other three serve and are strengthened by Raama, who is described as Vigrahavaan Dharmah: the very image of Dharma.

The difference between man and demon (maanava and daanava), is just this' Maanava or man has or ought to have dharma, dhama and dhava---morality, self-control and charity. The daanava or demon does not have these nor does he consider them as desirable qualifications. He spurns them and pays no heed to their promptings. These three Dha's are essential components of humanness. There are as many stages of maanavathwam proceeding towards Maadhavathwam as there are hearts; for, all are pilgrims from daanavathwam or demonhood to maanavathwam or humanhood and thence, to Maadhavathwam or Godhood. The pilgrims move at their own speed and with the Name-Form that inspires them.

Religion is a mode of the mind

There are some who talk of unifying religions; but religion is a mode of the mind and there are as many religions as there are minds. If you can unify minds, you can unify religions; but, it is an impossible task. Unless the altars of all hearts are made uniform, this attempt is bound to fail.

And it is not worthwhile. Jeevo devassanaathanam (the self and God are eternal), said the Pandit, now. Yes. The Brahmathathwam or the Universal Principle is nirmala and nischala (pure and immovable) but the Deva imagines itself to be the Jeeva.

Brahman feels bound to Name-

Form and so, it has to regain the lost awareness. This is done through Dharma.

Samartha Raamadas appeared before Shivaji, with his usual call for alms: Bhavathi Bhikshaam Dehi, Shivaji realised that the Guru is God; so, he wrote something on a piece of paper and deposited it reverentially in the alms bag of Raamadas. "For the relief of hunger how can paper suffice?" asked Raamadas. Shivaji prayed that the paper may be read. The paper recorded a gift of the entire kingdom and all that Sivaji owned to the Guru.

Samartha Raamadas replied: "No,

My dharma is Dharmabodha, the teaching of dharma, instructing the people in the right way of life; Kshatriyas like you must follow the dharma of ruling the land, ensuring peace and content to the millions under your care." Sage Yaajnavalkya too once refused a kingdom, because he cared more for the Kingdom of Moksha, the realm of eternal freedom. Sage Vasishta is also said to have renounced a kingdom, offered him by Raama.

That was the ideal in the past; it is only now that men pursue paths that lead them away from Dharma. You have allowed the treasure that the sages gave you to drop from your grasp. Though the medicinal root that you so badly need is lying across your path and has actually tripped your step, you have no eyes to recognise it and realise the value. What a pity, this!

Look at the way Raama refused to accept the kingdom out of which he had willingly come, to carry out the wish of his mother, and the plighted word of his father, when Bharatha entreated him piteously to take it from him. Raama taught that artha and kaama should not be allowed to over-rule dharma and the discipline of moksha. For, fundamentally, the objects of the world are incapable of conferring joy.

Good deeds will wipe out the tracising of bad

Once when Naarada was proceeding to Vaikuntha, the abode of the Lord, he espied a yogi who was engaged in severe ascetic practices. The yogi prayed to Naarada to bring back from Vaikuntha information about the date of his becoming entitled to entry there-into. Naarada promised to do so. When he stood in the presence of God, he pleaded on behalf of the yogi and asked that he may be informed of the date. The Lord replied, "Tell him that he will be coming here after as many more births as there are leaves on the tree under which he is doing penance."

Naarada felt sad and dispirited when he thought of the grief into which the yogi would be thrown on hearing this disheartening news. But he mustered courage to announce it nevertheless, for, the yogi insisted on hearning the news that he had promised to bring.

When at last Naarada broke the news, the yogi was transported with joy; he was not dispirited at all. He jumped and danced in glee. He was lost in the thrill of his hope being so near fulfilment.

All consciousness of the world disappeared from his joy-filled mind. So, the Lord himself appeared before Him and offered him Vaikuntha immediately. But, the Yogi said, he would bide his time, for, he did not like the Lord's word, which Naarada had brought, to be falsified! The Lord had to convince him that good deeds and thoughts and feelings will wipe out the tracings of bad; so, he had by his enthusiastic acceptance of the Lord's will got over the consequences of past actions.

The law of karma is not an iron law; by dedication, by purification, which invites benediction, its effects can be modified, and its rigour mitigated. Do not despair; do not lose heart. When vices hold sway over your heart it becomes foul and sooty. The flames of kaama, krodha and lobha

(desire, anger and greed) char the heart. Grace is proved by the quenching of these flames. Grace confers aanandam, which kaama, krodha and lobha can never confer.

Practise the discipline laid down by Raama

The word Raama itself indicates Aanandam. Raama is Aanandaswaruupa. In every being, He is the Aananda in the innermost core, the Aathmaaraama. How then are you being affected by grief? Because you ignore the core, you identify yourselves with the shell, the body. Today, the holy day of Raamanavami, you should immerse yourself in the Aathma as Dharmaswaruupa, as the motivator of the moral life. There is no place where Raama is not; no being to whom He denies Grace. He does not arrive or depart; He is immanent, eternal. So, to celebrate a Day as the day on which He was born, is itself a sacrilege. Raama for you should mean the Path He trod, the Ideal He held aloft, the Ordinance He laid down. The path, the ideal and the ordinance are eternal, timeless. Follow the Path, stick to the Ideal, obey the Ordinance---that is the true celebration. Then alone does your life become fruitful. Now, you worship His Form, you repeat His Name; but, you ignore His Orders. This is no real Prema at all. Without actual practice of the discipline laid down by the Lord to purify the mind so that He may be reflected therein, all else is mere show, empty ritual. Godhood can be reached and realised. Running after momentary joy, people exile themselves from the Kingdom of God. The value of human birth consists in this; it is only from humanhood that Godhood can be reached and realised. Contemplate on this unique good luck today, use it not for feasting but plan your future so that the goal is quickly attained. Such days must be fully dedicated to thoughts of God, thoughts that elevate and inspire. People spend holy days as holidays, when they revel in picnics and hikes, watch films, play games, gamble and quarrel over a game of cards. This is entirely wrong. Days like Gokulaashtami, Shivaraathri, etc., must be welcomed as opportunities to broaden the heart, deepen faith and enlarge sympathy with fellow beings. To tarnish them by indulging in sensory pleasures is to insult the hoary tradition. I have heard many complain that it is difficult to achieve ekaagratha (one-pointedness); even some so-called great men have told me so. But the fault is not with the times, it is in themselves; they have no adequate shraddha---faith and steadiness. The steadiness they exhibit in the pursuit of worldly goods and worldly comfort they do not transfer to the pursuit of inner calm. They complain of lack of time, as if all their waking hours are now utilised for worthwhile purposes! I must also condemn the absence of gratitude, which is rampant today. Ingratitude is the hallmark of wild beasts, not of man. Man today is all humility, all obedience until his wish is fulfilled. Once it is satisfied, he tries even to ruin the person who helped him realise it. This does not befit man. He must be conscious of benefits derived and eager to repay the debt, or at least, eager to avoid causing harm to the person who saved him while in distress. Maanava means "an individual without a trace of ignorance." But, man by his pomp and pride, his egoism and conceit reveals that he is ignorant of his reality and therefore undeserving of that name. Ingratitude does not befit man. As far as lies in your power, do good to others. Do not sow fear in others' hearts; do not inflict pain on others; do not promote anxiety or grief. If you take pleasure in the pain of others, you only scotch the divinity in you and bring to light the demonic nature. "Ishwarassarvabhoothaanaam"---the Lord resides in all. He is in you as much as in the 'other' whom you try to harm. Know this and give up all efforts to ruin others. You cannot help another; you can only help yourself by that act; you do not harm another, you harm yourself by that wicked act. The attachments are different; but the inner reality is the same in you and "other." You will understand this when you distinguish values, the value of vishaya indriya aanandam and Vtshweshwara Aanandam, that is to say, the joy derivable from senses and objects and the joy derivable from the contemplation of the glory and the grace of God. Raama strove to uphold Sathya as the main plank of dharma. Whatever the trial, however hard the travail, He did not give up Truth. Sathyam is Dharmam. Dharmam is Sathyam---the two are irrevocably intertwined. Sathyam Vadha, Dharmam Chara, say the Upanishads. Raama will be remembered so long as mountains raise their heads and the oceans exist, because of this strict adherence to Sathyam and Dharmam. If he had argued, "Why should I be bound by the word of my father?" he would not have earned this Immortality. The Immortal had come in the form of Raama to show the way to Immortality. Seetha too kept up the Dharma of women. She declined to return to Raama on the shoulders of Hanumaan for she said, she would not of her own will contact another male; nor would she deny Raama the chance of proving his prowess by destroying the wicked person who stealthily carried away His Consort. That is the dharma of a pathivratha (chaste woman). These ideals have weakened now; women as well as men are tempted to yield to the convenience of the moment; they do not attach importance to the deeper springs of righteousness. Tree shade or tent, what we want is sleep, they seem to say. The end justifies the means, that is the philosophy. Fair ends through foul means, how can this be right? He who has to instal Raama in his heart is sheltering a beast therein. What a tragedy! Trait which man should learn from Raama Kausalya counselled Raama at the start of his exile in the forest, 'The dharma which you are so scrupulously observing will guard you.' That was the farewell she gave, not a banquet of tasty dishes. The ten-headed Raavana who held the Gods in chains could not stand up to Raama, who had dharma as His sword and shield. Raama was happy when others were happy. He grieved when others were in grief. That is the trait which He wanted man to learn. So, while avoiding pain from others, be vigilant not to cause pain to others, too. Then, you attract the Grace of the Lord, not when you contrive by tricks to harm others, or revel in the misery of others, or concentrate on your own happiness and progress, irrespective of the injury you cause to others. The grief you cause to others will suffocate you after getting hardened into hatred. It will recoil on your own head, with tenfold force. If you are established in Aathmatha-thwam (Reality of Self), you need not fear. Of course you must be afraid of wrong, of injustice, of cruelty, of sin. But why fear when you have the security granted by Sathyam, Dharmam, Nyaayam and Premam---Truth, Righteousness, Justice and Love? I had no intention to speak today, but I was pressed to speak for five minutes at least. I have spoken for fifty! I shall now give you a chance to sing a few Naamaavalis (divine names). Venkatagiri, 10,4-1965 Darkness and light cannot exist at the same time and in the same place; they cannot continue together, Dhanam (riches) and Daivam (God) cannot be joint ideals. When riches are sought God cannot be achieved. If both are sought by man what he will achieve, will be neither Dhanam nor Daivam but the Devil. SHRI SATHYA SAI 30. The basic hypocrisy This day, as well as yesterday, Pandits spoke to you about Sanaathana Dharma (Eternal Religion) and its greatness. I too shall speak only about that, for there is nothing more important than that Dharma for material and spiritual happiness. Sanaathana Dharma calls on you to revere the Aacharya, for he is seeking to save you from disaster, the flood of birth and death into which you are slipping, through ignorance. You have to learn eetha (swimming) to escape from the swollen river; Geetha or the Lord's teaching you have to learn to escape from the swirling torrent of birth-death. The guru points out the guri (goal) to you; he reveals the Aathma thathwam (Reality of Self). A man struggling in a bog cannot be saved by another who is also caught in its slime. Only one standing on firm ground can pull him out. So the guru must have a secure footing, above and beyond the slush of samsaara (worldly way). The rishis or sages struggled with themselves and elevated themselves into the purer regions of thought, to discover their own truth. They felt the thrill of that discovery and sang of the freedom they gained. These songs serve as sign-posts and all who derive benefit therefrom have to acknowledge the debt. How to repay the rishi-rna, the debt of the rishis? By study, by reflection on what they have sung of their liberation, by practising the saadhana they adopted, by proving them right out of your own experience. The three debts to be discharged There are also three other Rnas (debts), mentioned in the scriptures--Pithr-rna, Maath-rna and Deva-rna---the debt to the father, to the mother and to the Gods. Once there was a great sage named Uddaalaka, famous for his scholarship. He had a son, Shwethakethu, and a daughter Sujaatha. Among his disciples was Kaholaka, a young man who was well behaved, virtuous, devoted to the teacher and earnest in his studies. But he could not keep pace with the other bright lads and so became the target for taunts. The Guru loved him all the more on account of this. Sympathy with his lot grew into Grace; Grace resulted in the Guru offering his own daughter in marriage to Kaholaka! While Sujaatha was pregnant, Kaholaka recited the Vedhas as laid down in the Disciplinary Rules, but within hearing of the child growing in the womb. It heard the recitation but, since it was already aware of the correct pronunciation of every syllable, whenever Kaholaka spelt a syllable wrong, it squirmed in distress. So, when the baby was born, it had eight bends, crooked in eight places, in fact! Naturally, he was named Ashtaavakra. (Eight Bends)

When Ashtaavakra was still in the womb, Sujaatha had persuaded her husband to seek some monetary help from King Ianaka to relieve their dire poverty and when Kaholaka went to Mithila, in the midst of a big yaaga (ceremonial sacrifice) which the king was celebrating, he had to stay on till it was finished; later, he was forced by circumstances to join a competitive disputation with a celebrated scholar called Vaanadena, and accept the terms laid down by the challenger, namely, whoever gets defeated in argument was to be thrown into the sea.

Meanwhile, Ashtaavakra, in spite of his physical deformity, became an erudite Pandit full of intricate scholarship, even while in his teens. His father's fate was kept from the lad by both Sujaatha and Shwethakethu for many years, but, one day, he was taunted by some one as one who was ignorant of his father's fate and the sad tale was revealed to the son. Immediately, he proceeded to Mithila and sought entrance into the audience-hall of King Ianaka. The guards laughed when he wanted them to report to the King that a Vedhic scholar eager for disputation with the court pandits had come. They slighted him for his tender age, but he said that age was no criterion. At last, he pleaded that his deformity, at least, entitled him to hospitality and sympathy.

Parents should encourage their sons by good example Ianaka was struck by the boy's persistence and courage; he ordered that he should be admitted and arranged for the disputation the boy sought! If I start telling you the absurd questions that the court pandits teased him with and the replies with which Ashtaavakra sparred them with, it will take so much time that perhaps we will have to sit beyond Shivaraathri even! Ianaka tried his best to dissuade him; he told him that he was too young to risk death in the sea. But, Ashtaavakra argued that Aathmaavidya does not take account of the deha thathwam, the physical principle of the body. Vaanadena entered the fray with the deformed lad resplendent with spiritual scholarship; to the great astonishment of all, the boy gained the upper hand; the aged pandit squirmed under the questions; he failed; he had to be thrown into the sea; the deformed son of Kaholaka had triumphed over the victor who had consigned his father to the waves. The mother was delighted that her son had discharged the debt, and retrieved the honour of the line.

The father must encourage the son by example more than by precept. Prahlaada told his father that only the parent who directs his progeny to God deserves obedience and respect. All others are, so far as the sons are concerned, human ogres like Hiranyakashipu. There are some parents who are sorry that their sons are coming to Puttaparthi and who dread that they would start doing puja or japam or Naarnasmana, and give up the habits of smoking or drinking or gambling, which they have learnt from their fathers! Such people do not know the value of sathsanga (spiritual company), for peace and happiness. They fail to equip their children or themselves with armour against the blows of fate or fortune. Dive deep into your own Divinity

The Gaayathri manthra develops the dheesakthi (power of discrimination) and, so its consequence will be the giving up of evil company, and the seeking of kindred souls. If sathsang is not available, you can keep company with your own higher impulses and noble thoughts. Dive deep into your own divinity. The crocodile is happy and unharmed and it is undefeatable, in the depths of the lake or river. Once it sprawls on land, it becomes the plaything of man, an easy target for death. The depths: they are your refuge; the source of your strength. Do not stray into the shallows or the sands.

You know that the Garuda bird feeds on snakes. Well, once the Garuda went to Mount Kailasa to pay respects to Shiva, who wears snakes on His head, arms, wrists, neck, waist and ankles. When the snakes saw Garuda, they were unafraid; they even dared put out their forked tongues at Garuda and challenged it to come near them. That was the extent of the courage lent to them by the place where they had established themselves. So, establish yourselves in the Aathma; no worry or grief or pride can harm you then.

Several types of prema were spoken about today, but all types are based on the 'I' feeling; it is like a drama in a film story, a plot within a plot. You must feel that all this is just a passing show, that you are the central figure, the only figure, the entire figure.

Thathwam asi: That thou art.

That is this. The external world is fundamentally One, is really Brahmam, appearing as many.

Thwam is you, yourself. And, what does the experience of all the sages tell him? What is the profound discovery embodied in the wisdom of the Vedhas? Thath is thwam, thwam is Thath;

there is no second, there is only One.

Play your role as the puppet does

If you act or feel or talk contrary to your nature you demean yourself; you deny your reality. The Brahmathathwam (Reality of Brahmam) is Vimalam, Achalam-- .Pure, Unshakable; be pure and unshakable. It is thriguna rahitham, devoid of the three qualities: dull, active or balanced; it is pure consciousness. You too must not be agitated by the storms of feeling, or the fog of dullness and sloth. Play your role, as a puppet does; the unseen Director unfolds the drama, which He has willed.

Once it happened that a village drama, Harishchandra, was put on boards, with Harishchandra and his son, Lohithaasya, selected from one of the two rival factions and Chandramathi being acted by a man from the other! Lohithaasya fell dead, bitten by a cobra, as required by the drama and Chandramathi the mother had to wail. Every one expected the actor to do that very realistically; but, since the boy belonged to the rival party, Chandramathi refused to weep! This led to a minor riot. The 'puppets' had deluded themselves into attachment. They had failed to remember that they were acting 'roles'. This is the basic hypocrisy; claiming to be a character in the play, but, not speaking the lines; exhibiting emotions, going through the movements and not making the role a success.

Many pandits claim to be exponents of the Vedhas and Shaastras, but it is not what they teach that tells, but how they live. Many sing the glory of the Lord, but, few live in His constant Presence and in the constant awareness of that Glory that fills the Universe. Udipi Krishna!, they sing; but, they don't make their hearts Udipi, so that Krishna may come and be installed therein.

Revere all human beings as your Lord

There are certain special hours when you have to perform Sandhya and repeat Gaayathri. This is very good discipline. Just before the Sun rises, the morning rite has to be gone through.

Ionnalagadda Sathyanaaraayanamurthy described very poetically the calmness, the colour, the eloquent silence of those hours, the waking birds and flowers, the earth that thrills to the touch of dew---that is the time when you too should acclaim the rising Sun with the Gaayathri.

Yesterday, one speaker described the Gaayathri as equal to Raama naama, today another Shastry said it was the elaboration of Krishna naama and the Bhaagavatha. I ask you to fix your mind on any name of the Lord that brings up into your consciousness the Glory and the Grace of the Lord. Also, train your hands to do acts that serve the Lord that is shining in every being. All men are He; He shaves as the barber, He makes pots as the potter; He starches and irons clothes as the dhobi. He prompts, He inspires, He devises, He fulfils. You take a sheet of paper on which My Form is printed, as Myself; you revere It; you fall to the ground before It in reverence; why cannot you then revere all human beings, believing that I am in each of them, in an even clearer Form?

The Gaayathri is a prayer for the development of your Intellect, so that you might reach this Vision. So let Me advise the elders who are here, this. You have brought your sons or grandsons or wards for Upanayanam and Gaayathri upadesham here to My presence. You are happy at their fortune; but, they will repeat the Manthra only if you too repeat it, sincerely. And it is good for you also. Repent, therefore, that you have given up taking that priceless drug; start from today the Sandhyaavandanam (worship of Sun God).. Learn it from your son or grandson, keeping aside your sense of superiority. When you have the royal road to reach the Goal, why scramble through thorny jungle tracks? Do the Sandhya as prescribed, and you will not be shaken by any storm. You need not flee to a Himalayan valley; you can make your heart that Valley, by the discipline of the Sandhya.

It will surely help you to achieve the goal

Every religion looks for God and they look far and wide, but man should know that God is Omnipresent and resides in the heart of man.

31. The wheels: outer and inner

It is a happy sign that so many thousands of you who are caught up in the noisy waves of worldly pursuits in this city, teeming with distractions and amusements that cater to the senses, have come here today, to listen to the deliberations of this Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha. This is a sea of eager faces that I see before Me. You are eager to spot the lighthouse that will show you where the harbour lies, to take refuge from the stormy sea. That light is the Aathmajyothi (light of self) which the sages proclaim as existing in every one. Some deep visual defect has hidden that light from men and so they struggle in the darkness. It is not enough if one has the human form or even the basic human equipment---physical, mental and emotional. With the help of the discriminating intellect, one must bring it to perfection, as a sculptor does, after the stone is brought to crude shape. Man must be aware of his kinship with God, of the Divinity latent in him, of his immense potentiality. This he can know by the exercise of his viveka and vairaagya (discrimination and dispassion). Only he among all the animals is capable of this. The royal road to this awareness is shown by the Guru; not every one of the five lakhs of saadhus claiming this status are entitled to it. For, the word Gu-ru means, he who has no darkness in him. (Gu-darkness; ru-without). Most of the Gurus now answer only to the other meaning of the word, which implies weight, heaviness. Most of them, by their weight, are a burden to the earth; that is all the effect they produce by their existence. They are a burden upon their disciples too, for they continuously extend their palms for cash and they have no illumination with which to lighten the burden of others. Leave these gurus to themselves and concentrate on the task of uplifting yourself. When you are earnest about it, the Lord Himself will guide you, either from within or from without, through some one He will send or through illumination from within. Do not despair; march bravely on. Try to fill every moment with thoughts of God, in some form or other. Place the mind completely at God's service Repeat Soham (I am He), with every breath: 'So' when you take in and 'ham', when you exhale, 'So' means He and 'ham,' means I and when you complete the inhalation and exhalations, feel that 'So' namely, the Lord, and 'ham', namely, 'I' i.e., (you) are One. Later, after long practice, the idea of He and I as two separate entities will disappear and there will be no more So and ham.

Those sounds will be reduced to Q and M, that is to say, it will be Om or the Pranava. Repeat that sound afterwards with every breath and that will save you from bondage to birth and death, for it is the Pranavopaasana (contemplation on Pranava) recommended in the Vedhas. This Soham-recitation is a good means of restraining the mind from running away with you. Let the mind be ever attached to the Lord; then, it will not flee, as it fancies, towards all directions. That is the meaning of the exhortation of Krishna: "Sharvadharmaan parithyaiya maam ekam sharanam vraja"---"Giving up all other activities, surrender fully to me." Place the mind completely at His service. Then, He will save you from falling.

Be master of your feelings and impulses

Do not pay more attention to the outside world than necessary; but, concentrate more on the inner springs of joy. In a car, the wheels that are underneath are the outer wheels; pay more attention to the wheel inside; the wheel that guides and turns the outer wheels! The driver of the car is inside; you, too, must care more for the inner motivator. If you are master of your feelings and impulses, you can be anywhere, engaged in any profession. You will have peace. Some one visited Kabir in his home and asked him whether the householder's life promoted spiritual development. Kabir did not answer. He called out to his wife and asked her to bring a lamp so that he may fix a broken piece of yarn. It was about midday and the room was well lit. But, the wife did not question or doubt or disobey. She brought the lamp well lit, and held it for Kabir to repair the yarn. Then, he asked her to leave. Kabir then turned his questioner and said, "When you have a wife like this woman, adhering strictly to her dharma, the householder's life will be the best training ground for spiritual development."

There was a man who had a wife and a son both of whom did not see eye to eye with his charitable and hospitable character. One day when he brought a guest and was preparing to feed him, the wife and son thought of a strategem. When the master went out to the shop at the corner of the street to get a leaf-plate for him, the wife put the guest into great terror saying, "What a pity, you of all people fell into his trap today! My husband is daily bringing some poor fellow as if for lunch, but, what he does is to give each one a sound thrashing with a stick, just when they prepare to eat the meal served by me. He believes this will be compensation for some injustice done to him in past births by some one". The guest thought that it was best he ran away from his fate; even while he was fleeing around the corner of the street, the man came home with the leafplate.

The wife told him that the guest was a very peculiar man, for he wanted a stick to go to the well for washing his feet and before she could bring it to him, he lost his temper and went out in a huff. So, the master took hold of a stick and with that in his hand, he pursued the guest and called out to him "Stop, Stop." This confirmed the impression of the guest that he was to be beaten and so he ran faster and faster and was soon out of sight.

Women today do not appreciate the goodness of their partners or encourage them in the good life. They prove as obstacles rather than helpmates. They should promote Vaasudeva dhyaanam (meditation on Lord Vaasudeva) in the family; and, discourage Vasudeva dhyaanam (meditation on Vasu---wealth).

The mind binds and liberates

The Minister was telling you to attend the discourse on Geetha but there is no good in that, if you lean on to a pillar of the Hall and doze off. It is not the sound but it is the meaning that matters; it is not the ear but it is the heart that must drink in the Geetha. He wanted you to seek: and enjoy Sathsangam (good company); along with that sangam, there must be self-examination also, how much you have succeeded in escaping from the senses and nearing the Lord. Mana eva manushyaanaam kaaranam bandha mokshayoh---"the mind binds and the mind liberates". So train the mind and win. It is a wild elephant, which can be tamed with the goad of Soham. Do not feed it with conceit, hate, envy and greed. Let the name of the Lord echo ever in the ear and it will be tamed.

When this meeting started and for some time later, there was imminent fear of rain, which came threatening up to this very place. But, let Me tell you, prayers and Grace combined to drive it off.

Tomorrow, also, I shall give you the food that will sustain and save. Malleswaram, 22-5-1965

When the heart is pure, the Lord is revealed. He is the judge; He cannot be bamboozled. The doctor may assure you that you have no fever, but the thermometer cannot lie. The doctor may say so to save you from panic, but the thermometer declares the truth.

God knows and God will deal with you as you deserve. Have the faith. Repent for all the wrongs done, and resolve not to repeat the mistake; then God will extend His grace.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

32. The new year of faith

The Krodhi year has gone and Vishwaavasus has come; and, people are happy at the New Year.

Well, how many Krodhis have gone and how many Vishwaavasus have come, since the years were named and even before that, how many centuries and millennia have elapsed in the history of man! There is no use turning back and watching the road traversed; one's duty is to watch the road ahead and march on towards the goal. Krodhi is related to krodha or anger and Vishwaavasus is related to vishwaasas or faith. It is want of faith that causes one to lose temper and fly into fits of anger; want of faith in oneself and in others. If you see yourself as really the undefeatable Aathma and others as reflections of yourself, as the Shaastras declare them to be, then there can be no provocation to get krodha or anger. What you must resolve upon for the New Year is to manifest your reality, more and more; that is to say, to reveal your Divinity more and more.

Karma is the seed out of which the individual emanates; the jeevi feels separate and limited, on account of the illusion created by karma or activity. As the karma, so the consequence. If it is good, the consequence will tend to attract you towards the means of liberation, that is, towards saadhana and Sharveshwara chintha (spiritual efforts and Godly thoughts). Just as three younger brothers followed the footsteps of the eldest, Raama, so too the other three Purusharthas (Aims of Man) must subserve the demands of the eldest, the first, Dharma. Practise what you preach

The one dharma that subsumes all else is: the deed must be in conformity with the word. Don't speak one thing and act another; don't advise others to do a thing which you yourself do not practise. Do not start prachaara without aachaara---preaching without practice. There was a man called Ranjodh once, who went about expounding the Geetha, extolling it as the authentic word of God; at the end of his discourse, he sent round a plate for collecting their contributions in cash; suddenly, one man rose from the gathering challenging him and reminding him that the Lord has spoken against parigraha, or acceptance of help from others. Yes; the Geetha recommends aparigraha, non-acceptance of offerings and those who send round subscription lists and donation lists for Geetha discourses or bargain for fees for the same are all behaving against the express orders of the Lord whose words they propose to explain! This is hypocrisy, indeed.

Only those who feel that God is the highest have the right to build a temple for Him; if he is a servant of the Raaja and if he bows before him and deals with him as his master, he should build a temple for the Raaja and not for God, who does not get his full loyalty. First fix your devotion exclusively on God; then, think of serving Him. If you collect money from all and sundry and get a Minister to open the temple, then, you are only revealing yourself as a worldly man engaged in a low worldly trick. Get firm in mind; then, your reason also will not deviate. Without that equanimity or shaanthi, you can get no soukhyam (happiness), as saint Thyaagaraaja sang from experience. Many people who give Geetha discourses have themselves no shaanthi; they revel in controversies and challenge their rivals to come and contest with them; they parade their victories and their titles, they flaunt their triumphs in the face of all possible rivals. It is all so egoistic; these people have not mastered even the primer of spiritual saadhana. And yet, they expect people to sit at their feet and learn the secret of saving themselves from bondage, these weaklings who are themselves bound.

Let God manifest in and through you

Whatever else you may or may not do, do at least this: know the Lord that resides in you.

Recognise Him, let Him manifest Himself in and through you. This is what Vaaranasi Subrahmanya Shastri meant when he spoke of punya and dharma--good deeds and right conduct. He said that the grihastha (the householder) who is the pillar of society, has forgotten his responsibility and his opportunities and so, the entire structure of society has crumbled. Of course, his estimate is correct; but, I must add that the fourth Order, the Order of Sanyaasins (monks) has deteriorated badly, so badly that the reverence that once was the natural right of the sanyaasin has now disappeared. The sanyaasin has to live rigorously and with great self-control; but he has fallen from that height and so, has lost respect. Of course there are even now many who adhere strictly to the rigorous rules and are models of ascetic life. Only, they have to be sought after and discovered. The sanyaasins who seek you and your patronage are more worldly minded than yourself!

Fundamentally, the fault lies in not understanding that this body and all things connected with it are not permanent. When Bharthrhari the King was lamenting the death of his queen, and weeping over her grace, an old man appeared before him in great distress, weeping as loud as the King himself. His tragedy was that a mud pot he had with him for long had broken. Bharthrhari told him that there was no use weeping over a broken pot; no quantity of tears would ever make it whole. The old man, who was no other than his Chief Minister, said that a person who believed that weeping could bring the dead back to life had no right to tell him that his pot would not be made whole again. This drove some sense into the King's head and he became sane again! When you weep for the dead you are only announcing your colossal ignorance.

Underlying faith should be in the Unity of all

You must use your intelligence to discover what is best under the circumstances and in the situation, considering the status and the profession which you have won. The barber should not treat all things equal and use his razor to peel vegetables, cut pencils and paper, bamboos and beards. Each instrument has its own special uses and purposes; each man has some special skills and responsibilities. The Raaja has to be treated as a Raaja and the ryot as a ryot. Fish can live only in water and not in milk; keep fish in water and do not put them in milk, on the plea that milk is thicker and costlier!

Though in principle all is Brahmam, in dealing with them in the Vyaavahaarik stage (day-to-day activity), you cannot follow the adhwaitic line. There should be Bhaava-adhwaita, not Karmaadhwaita, that is to say, the underlying faith should be in the Unity of all, though the outer activity may be different for different entities. The activity must not leave any scar on the faith in Unity. There is no scar on the sky, though clouds and stars, the sun and moon, all appear to streak across it. So too, let a thousand ideas streak across the mind; but, let it remain unaffected and serene. Kabir had no food for three days; he thanked God that he got the coveted chance of observing a ritual fast. Raamadas was confined in jail; he thanked

God that he got a place where he could meditate on God without disturbance. That is the attitude of the saint, the beloved of God. Shivaji brought a palanquin for Saint Tukaaraam, but he refused the honour, saying that he was not yet ready to be carried on the shoulders of four men!

Virtues or sadgunaas are like cows yielding health-giving milk. Vices are tigers that fall upon the cows and tear them to pieces. If you build a barricade of Naama, a fort with the Name of the Lord, the tiger cannot harm you, or your virtues.

Bangalore is the capital of the Kannada people and Malleswaram is as the head for this city. Here this Bhajana Mandali is being run and it is celebrating the functions in connection with the Prashanthi Vidwanmahasabha, Kannada Branch. Make the best use of this chance, all of you.

Beware of some who use My Name for collecting money and for activities that tarnish their claim to be devotees. Do not believe such; where money is asked and offered, I have no place.

Malleswaram, 23-5-1965

The harder the circumstances, the more trying the environment, the stronger are the men who come out of those circumstances.

outside troubles and anxieties.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

33. Pappu and uppu

In the Garudapurana, Sri Hari instructs Garuda about the daily decline of human life, and the attacks that Death deals on him, with His army of diseases, accidents and natural calamities. You have earned this human body by the accumulated merit of many lives as inferior beings and, it is indeed very foolish to fritter away this precious opportunity in activities that are natural only to those inferior beings. Life moves so quick that people often wonder how they grew so old so soon. It appears only yesterday that they were in college or playing in the streets; but they have grandchildren playing about them! While life is carrying people forward towards death so fast, pride makes them force others to fall before them; humility does not induce them to fall before the Almighty!

Since New Moon, the whole country is celebrating the Festival of Raamajananam and today is the actual Raamanavami, the day on which Raama was born.

Raama is Dharma, Dharma is Raama. The four ideals of man as laid down in the Vedhas are Dharma, Artha, Kaama and Moksha; Dharma is the very base. If that is given up or disregarded, sorrow will persist. Raama considered Dharma as all-important. When his brother Bharatha overpowered by grief at his father's death, his mother's greed, and his brother's exile, sought him in the forest and, meeting him, rolled at his feet in terrible anguish. Raama lifted him gently and asked---What do you think he asked?---He asked him, "Are you maintaining Dharma in the Kingdom of Ayodhya, respecting the subjects, the poor, the elders, the scholars, the saints and the sages?" Even when the direst calamity overtakes man, he should not stray away from the path of morality and justice. Raama was wakening Bharatha from the sleep of ignorance; the poor fellow was overcome by his own grief, as if the father, mother, brothers, kingdom, power and position--- these mattered, as if they were real, eternal. Raama reminded him that they are all but instruments one must utilise for the exercise of dharma.

In spiritual matters, faith is the very essence

Just as the wild elephant roaming in the forest as the head of the herd is trapped and trained to sit on a three-legged stool in the circus ring, the mind of man too has to be trained by systematic processes of discipline shama, dhama, uparathi, thithiksha; shraddha and samaadhaana (inner and outer sense control, endurance, steady faith, equipoise) so that it may subserve the best interests of man. To go before a magistrate and plead, one has to pass the LL.B degree examination; to be able to prescribe medicine to a sick man, you must pass the M.B.B.S. degree examination. You have to obtain a licence or have your name entered in the Register of Medical Practitioners. Everywhere for every profession or post they ask you your qualification. How much more is the need for proper qualifications in the spiritual field, for winning the Grace of God? You aim high, but, you make no effort to reach that height.

In spiritual matters, faith is the very essence. Doubt shakes the foundations of saadhana and is therefore, to be avoided. Have faith in the wisdom of the ancients; do not pitch your tiny little brain against the intuitions of the saints and their discoveries. For example take the question of offering food in the fire, on the anniversary days of the death of parents, what is called pinda pradaan. Nowadays, smiles of scorn are cast when such rites are mentioned. "How can the food placed here reach there? The dead man must have taken birth somewhere long ago and his present address is not known. Can a meal given one day in the year satisfy the accumulated hunger of 365 days?" they ask. "Let your father sit on the terrace of your house; then place food for him on the ground floor. Can he reach the food or can the food rise up to him, however many manthraas you repeat?" they laugh. "Why are dead men given food, when living men suffer?" they argue.

There is a science of the spirit
 You post a letter in the box, and it goes straight to the addressee, wherever he is, however far.

Does it mean that the postmaster is your friend, or that he is so sympathetic to your anxiety to correspond with the addressee? If the address is written correct and clear and if the necessary postage is paid in stamps that are valid at the time, the letter is carried by men, by car and bus, train and plane and steamer, right up to the doorstep of the person whose name is on it. The ritual fire is the authorised post box; the fire is the postal authority, the manthraas are the stamps.

There is a science of the spirit, as there is a science of matter; it has its own categories; its own modus operandi; its own experts and authoritative theses.

Only by saadhana can the secrets of either matter or mind be known, grasped and used for one's benefit. In the Vivekachuudaamani, Shankara says, "If the Nikshepa or Treasure that is embedded in the bowels of the earth must be brought up, mere calling it up by name will not help. You must know exactly where it is, through the advice of experts; you have to excavate the spot; you have to move away rock and stone and sand that come in the way; you have to grasp it and heave it up to the ground". So, too, the reality of the "self" has to be first learnt by means of instruction from a knower of Brahman; then the processes of manana, dhyaana, nididhyaasana (refelction, meditation and concentration) have to be gone through; finally when, in a flash, the Truth is revealed, the Self must be firmly established in the Aananda of that moment.

Leave it to Him, let His Will prevail
 The Brahmasuuthra begins with the statement, Athaatho Brahmajijnaasa---"After this the consideration of Brahmam". After what? What are the preliminary steps? When does a person become entitled to participate in the discussion and study of Brahman? We have two other texts which have to be studied earlier, one which says, "Athaatho Karma jijnaasa", "after this consideration of Karma, activity", and the next one begins with, Athaatho Dharma jijnaasa "after this, the consideration of Dharma (righteousness)". So, man becomes entitled to the knowledge of the Universal Principle that is the very substance of everything since eternity, only after his mind is purified by karma and dharma.

It is only after you place a morsel on your tongue that you discover whether the salt in it is enough or whether it has not been salted at all. Pappu (dhal) requires uppu (salt); that is to say, the boiled dhal must have salt in it for taste. So too, it is only when you have moved in the world and taken a share in its activities according to a moral code, you discover that without the salt of inaana it does not taste well; take it with a sprinkling of the salt of inaana, the knowledge that you are not the body but the resident of the body, that you are but the witness of the everchanging panorama of Nature and you feel happy and peaceful. Slowly, step by step, confirm yourself in the thought of the Unity of the World in Brahman. Then, even without praying and pleading, everything worthwhile will be added unto you. That is why Thyaagaraaja sings "Adigiukhamulewaranubhavinchiri?"---"Who experienced joy and happiness, by means of praying to you?" Leave it to Him, let His Will prevail, do not ask for this or that other thing. He knows best. Did Sabari pray for anything? Did Jataayu call out for His Presence? Did Guha plead that Raama may come to him? Revival of Dharma is close at hand

Each of you must follow the moral code prescribed for the profession you are engaged in and the age and status which you have reached. Once the King of a large State asked a sanyaasin whether it is possible for a man to live up to the height of the code. Some time later, the King died and, according to custom, they sent the Royal elephant round with a garland to choose the successor. The elephant put the garland round the neck of the sanyaasin (monk). But, he was resisting the importunities of the people and running towards the forest. He reached the innermost recesses and was happy that he was safe from the calamity that had encompassed him!

These moral codes are given in the Shaastras and the Prashanthi Vidwanmahaasabha has been formed to tell people in simple language their main duties. It is not a limited group of scholars with a limited scope; it is every one's right to utilise the scholars and get the result of their learning for themselves. There is no other motive behind the formation of the Sabha. It is for you all, for all places. It was in connection with the activities of this Sabha that I recently visited several places in East and West Godaavari Districts and other areas. It was a triumphal march, resounding with the devotion, the faith and the Aananda of the lakhs of people who attended.

The enthusiasm of the people to listen to the message of Sanaathana Dharma which I carried was most inspiring to those who came with Me. The scenes reminded one of the Kritha, Thretha and Dwaapara yugas, not the Kali Yuga. The pages of the Bhaagavatha became alive before us.

A twelve-acre expanse of land was found too small for the gathering that assembled in one place.

At another place, every tree had many adventurous men clinging to the trunk and branches, even the flail "drumstick tree!". These are all signs that the revival of Dharma is close at hand.

Welcome hardships to realise the Lord

Only you must have the staunch determination to use this chance to the full. You are near and those who are far are so only with reference to space, not with reference to My Prema. To realise the Lord, you must welcome hardships, trials, and sufferings. You must dwell on the Name and Form steadily and with faith. You must discard all inferior sources of joy. When a son is born, worry too is born with him---worry that he should grow up healthy and pure, learned and good, famous but humble, bringing a fair name to his parents and elders. As a matter of fact, I would advise you to postpone the celebration of the birth of a son until the day when he brings sathkeerthi (good fame) to the lineage and the country. So also, celebrate the accumulation of wealth when it is spent justly and with love, on beneficial and deserving purposes. A tree is justified by fragrant flowers bringing forth sweet fruits. If, on the other hand, its leaves get dry and its flowers fade and the fruits refuse to grow, an agriculturist will examine the roots and discover that they are eaten up by pests or white ants. So too, the roots of Divinity must have been destroyed or harmed if a man's virtues do not blossom and yield sweet fruits. Envy, greed, malice---these pests destroy the roots quickly.

By moderating and modulating habits of eating and drinking, one can lay the foundation for spiritual life. One must prefer Saathwick to Raajasik foods. By drinking intoxicating stuff, one loses control over the emotions and passions, the impulses and instincts, the speech and movements, and one even descends to the level of beasts. By eating flesh one develops violent tendencies and animal diseases. The mind becomes more intractable when one indulges in Raajasik food; it can never be remoulded if Thamaasik food is consumed with relish. To dwell in

Raama thathwa (Raama principle) constantly, one has to be vigilant about food and drink consumed by both body and mind.

Raama thathwa is essentially Aananda thatwa. Raama means "He who pleases", "He who fills with Aananda", "He who is the spring of Aananda in every heart." So, when you repeat Raama naama, you are but touching the very source of Aananda, the Aathmaa-Raama (God as self). Just as you have come by various routes from various villages and towns, all persons have to reach that Source for, there alone can they get the Aananda without which there is no peace.

SHRI SATHYA SAI

34. The spring of joy

This is a sacred day. It is the day when we honour Sage Vyaasa, who gave mankind the precious gem of Saguna worship (worship of God with Form) and the hope and assurance that Maanava

(man) can become Maadhava (God), that Nara can become Narayana, that Jeewa can become Brahmam, or rather that Jeewa (individual soul) is Brahmam (Universal soul). The Bhaagavatha and the Brahmasuuthra are the great texts which hold forth these valuable doctrines.

Man is a mixture of two strands of the same substance, maaya and Maadhava, moha and Raama, deha and dehi, jada and chith, sareeram and sareeri, jeewa and Brahmam (Divine illusion and God, delusion and God, body and soul, inert matter and consciousness, body and the embodied, individual soul and the Supreme Soul). Like the two circular stones of the grinding mill, the Brahmam one is stable, the Jeewa one is revolving. The stable is the base; the revolving is the 'dependent'. The Guru is the Teacher who removes the fundamental ignorance, which hides the knowledge of this truth from us. The Pournami or the Full Moon Day has been fixed for revering him, for, the effect of the knowledge is to put an end to scorching agony and to shed cool comfort instead, on the mind of man. Vyaasa is revered as Naaraayana Himself, for who but God can inspire such Illumination? If your loyalty is to the family, you are a servant of the family; if it is to God, you are a servant of God. But, do not pay heed to the wages He gives. Do not argue and bargain for wages or reward. Only hired labourers clamour for wages and declare they are poor. Be a kinsman, a member of the family, a scion of God, then it behoves Him to maintain you in comfort. Try to be near God, as near as His own kin, do not calculate the number of hours you have spent in serving Him, and pine that He has not compensated you. Be ever in His service, that is to say, in doing good and being good. Connect yourself with God by the cable of Smarana Karna knew that death is ever round the corner and so, whenever any one came to him seeking some favour, be it however hard, he satisfied them on the spot, without any delay, for, as he said, "My mind may change, my life may end." People ask each other when they meet, "Kshemamaa?" (Is all well?). The other man repeats automatically, "Quite well, thank you", without noting that his life span has become a day shorter. He has no kshema (well-being); he has undergone only ksheena (decline). So, arise, and resolve to make the best of your days. The guru is the person who discovers that you have fallen into a wrong road that leads to further and further darkness. For, he knows the right road and he is full of love for all who strive to escape the travails of the night, without lamps to light their steps. This is a day when the First of Gurus is remembered with gratitude. He is called Naaraayana, because Naaraayana is the reality and if you do not get a Guru from outside yourself, if you pray, the Naaraayana inside you will Himself reveal the road and lead you on. It is always preferable to be prompted by that inner Guru, because most of those who claim to that status are themselves rolling in objective pleasure or are bound by greed, envy or malice. Guru also means 'heavy'; many have only the qualification of physical weight, not of spiritual height! If you must bring the power from the power-house to your residence to illumine your place, you have to put up poles at regular intervals and connect the house with the power house with cables. So too, if you must win the Grace of God, do saadhana at regular timings and connect yourself with God by the cable of smarana (remembering the Lord). Discover the fountain of joy within The charavakas (the materialists) argued that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush. They said that the pleasure you now have should not be given up in the hope of something promised later on, if this is given up. But, the happiness of renunciation can be enjoyed here and now, and is much more sustaining and inspiring than the happiness derived from grabbing and attachment. Besides, there is a certain joy in being the master of the senses, rather than in being their slave. Now, you are slaves of the coffee habit. Resolve not to cater to that attachment and stick to that resolution for three days continuously. You become the master and the tongue is your slave. Coffee cannot hold sway over you any longer. If coffee is capable of conferring joy, all should get it equally from that beverage. But, some prefer tea and many find it distasteful. Some delight in taking it without sugar and others without milk. So, it is the mind that gives delight, not the coffee; it is not the object that caters to the senses. The secret is, discover the fountain of joy within; that is a never-failing, ever-full, ever-cool fountain, for it rises from God. What is the body? It is but the Aathma encased in five sheaths, the Annamaya (the one composed of food), the Praanamaya (the one composed of vitality), the Manomaya (the one composed of thought), the Vijnaanamaya (the one composed of intelligence) and the Aanandamaya (the one composed of bliss). By a constant contemplation of these sheaths or koshas, the saadhaka attains discrimination to recede from the outer to the inner and the more real. Thus, step by step, he abandons one kosha after another and is able to dissolve away all of them, to achieve the knowledge of his unity with Brahmam. Keep Truth and Love as your guides Most of you hear me say these things over and over again, year after year. But few take even the first step in saadhana. You ask that I should go on speaking and you take down notes of what I say for the purpose of reading them again. But, without practice, all
