[21c31t] Paul J. Lin
The feature of great virtue is to follow only Tao.
Tao is something elusive and vague!
Though vague and elusive, in it is the image.
Though elusive and vague, in it is the substance.
Obscure and dim, in it is the spirit.
The spirit is truly genuine; in it is credibility.
From ancient times until now,
Its name has never disappeared.
By this the beginning of all things is known.
How can I know the beginning of all things?

[21c32t] Michael LaFargue
The impression made by magnificent Te comes only from Tao.
Tao is a something
but elusive, but evasive.
Evasive, elusive,
inside it lies the mind's true form.
Elusive, evasive,
inside it lies something substantial.
Shadowy, dim.
Inside it lies vital energy.
This energy is very strong,
inside it lies true genuineness.
From ancient times until today
Its name has not been forgotten allowing us to see the beginnings of everything.
How do I recognize the form of the beginnings of everything?
By this.

[21c33t] Cheng Lin
The conduct of those who have attained perfection is always in accordance with the way of Truth.
Truth is vague and intangible.
Though vague and intangible, within it there is substance.
Though vague and intangible, within it there is form.
Though distant and vacuous, within it there is essence.
Its essence is real, and its validity can be proven.
It has existed from the earliest time, and only its name is new.
It is the primary origin of the whole of creation.

[21c34t] Yi Wu
The attitude of grand virtue is to follow only the Way.
The Way is like something elusive and evasive.
Within it there is image, evasive and elusive.
Within it there is matter, elusive and evasive.
Within it there is essence, dim and dark.
The essence is very real,
Within it there is evidence of reality.
From ancient times to now,
Its name has not disappeared.
By it one can see the source of all things.
How could I know the source of all things?
By this.

The demeanour of a man of great virtue is consistent with the way of Dao.
Dao, as an entity, is not tangible.
Though it is intangible, it appears to have some image.
Although it appears nebulous, it has some form.
Though inscrutable and indistinct, it appears to have some vitality.
This vitality is as real as it is creditable.
From antiquity until now, Dao has always existed.
Through following the way of Dao, one tries to understand the beginning of the world.
To understand the beginning of the universe is from the study of Dao.

[21c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One of deep virtue cherishes the subtle essence of the universe.
The subtle essence of the universe is elusive and evasive.
Though it is elusive and evasive,
it unveils itself as images and forms.
Evasive and elusive,
it discloses itself as indefinable substance.
Shadowy and indistinct,
it reveals itself as impalpable subtle essence.
This essence is so subtle, and yet so real.
It is the subtle origin of the whole of creation and non-creation.
It existed prior to the beginning of time as the single deep and subtle reality of the universe.
It brings all into being.

[21c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
That which is inherent in the great attainment (void) is the echo of Tao.
That which is Tao is indistinct and ineffable.
Ineffable and indistinct, yet therein are forms.
Indistinct and ineffable, yet therein are objects.
Unfathomable and invisible, yet therein are essences.
The essence is indeed genuine, therein is the vivid reality.
From ancient times until the present, the name of Tao has never ceased to exist.
Through it we see the beginning of all things.
How do we understand the beginning of all things?
It is through this.

[21c38t] Henry Wei
Hollow Heart
Hsu Hsin
The inherent quality of Grand Virtue (Teh)
Always conforms only to Tao.
Tao is something dreamily winking and waning.
Waning, winking, it embodies forms;
Winking, waning, it embodies things.
It may seem receding afar and darkening,
Yet within it there is an essence.

This essence is very real.
Inside is something invariably vital.
From hoary antiquity to the present time,
Its effect has never gone awry,
And serves as witness to the Creator of all things.
How do I know the way of the Creator?
Through this (witness).

[21c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The look of the great Te Follows from Tao alone.
It is Tao embodied.
How vague and dim it is!
Vague and dim -
In it are forms.
Vague and dim -
In it are things.
Deep and dark -
In it is the vital essence,
Which is most real.
In it is evidence.
From the time of old till today,
Its name has never departed.
By it you view the beginning of all.
How do I know the shape of the beginning of all?
By this.

[21c40t] Tao Huang
The marks of profound action follow only from the Tao.
The substance of Tao is boundless and unfathomable.
Unfathomable and boundless,
In its center there is form;
Boundless and unfathomable,
In its center there is an object;
Embryonic and dark,
In its center there is essence;
The essence is very pure,
In its center there is trust.
From now to the days of old,
Its name never dies,
Because it creates all things in their beginning.
How do I know the source of all beginnings?
From this.

Dao is a matter, even though it is indistinct and elusive.
It is elusive and indistinct, yet within it All Images are formed;
It is indistinct and elusive, yet within it All Things are created;
It is shadowy and obscure, yet within it All Vitalities are produced.
It's own vitality is real and valid.
Throughout the past and present the name of Dao has never been dropped.
It observes All Origins.
How do we know that All Origins are so?
By these observations.

[21c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The all-embracing quality of the great virtue follows alone from the Tao.
The thing that is called Tao is eluding and vague.
Vague and eluding, there is in it the form.
Eluding and vague, in it are things.
Deep and obscure, in it is the essence.
The essence is very real, in it are evidences.
From the time of old until now, its name (manifestations) ever remains.
By which we may see the beginning of all things.
How do I know that the beginnings of all things are so?
Through this (Tao).

[21c91t] И. И. Семененко
Все вмещается великой добродетелью, и в этом она следует лишь Дао.
Дао в смысле вещи всецело смутно и расплывчато.
И в нем, таком смутном и расплывчатом, есть образы!
И в нем, таком расплывчатом и смутном, есть вещи!
И в нем, таком глубоком и неясном, есть сгущенность!
Его сгущенность обладает высшей подлинностью.
В нем все является реальным.
Издревле и доныне не исчезает его имя.
Так оно собирает множество великих.
Откуда мне известно, каким видом обладает множество великих?
Отсюда.

[21c92t] А. А. Маслов
Облик великой Благости проистекает из Дао.
В вещах Дао неразличимо-туманно.
Неразличимо-туманное! Но в нём заключены образы.
Туманно-неразличимое! Но оно объемлет вещи.
Отдалённое и тёмное! Но оно содержит семя.
Семя это истинное, ибо оно освящено искренностью.
С древности и до наших дней имя его не высказано.
Оно известно как отец мириад созданий.
Откуда я знаю, что форма отца созданий такова?
Из него же самого.

Из пустоты Блага-Дэ Путь-Дао исходит вовне.
Дао - вещь такая: неясная и смутная, безликая и туманная.
О неясная!
О смутная!
В твоем средоточии есть образы.
О безликая!
О туманная!
В твоем средоточии есть вещи.
О загадочная!
О темная!
В твоем средоточии есть суть энергии жизни.
Эта суть энергии жизни предельно истинна, в ее средоточии сокрыто доверие.
С древности и доныне не исчезало ее имя и с помощью его обозреваю все множество множеств сущего.
Но откуда мне известно, что множество множеств сущего таково?
Из этого.

[21c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Насыщенность пустого Дэ совпадает только с Дао.
Дао есть нечто туманное, неразличимое!
О, неразличимое!
О, туманное!
Внутри Его содержатся образы.
О, туманное!
О, неразличимое!
Внутри Его содержатся вещи.
О, глубокое!
О, сокровенное!
Внутри Его содержится семя-энергия (цзин).
Это семя-энергия в высшей степени подлинно, в нем содержится вера-доверие (синь).
С древности и поныне Его имя не исчезает, в Нем вижу Отца всего тварного.
Откуда я знаю, что Отец всего тварного таков?
Из того, что сказано.

Однако в его туманности и неопределенности содержатся образы.
Оно туманно и неопределенно.
Однако в его туманности и неопределенности скрыты вещи.
Оно глубоко и темно.
Однако в его глубине и темноте скрыты тончайшие частицы.
Эти тончайшие частицы обладают высшей действительностью и достоверностью.
С древних времен до наших дней его имя не исчезает.

О, сокрытое! О, темное! А в нем есть семена.

Вот мерцание, вот трепетание.
А в сердцевине - наличие вещи.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Two

324/2593

[22c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Bent over, you'll be preserved whole;
When twisted, you'll be upright;
When hollowed out, you'll be full;
When worn out, you'll be renewed;
When you have little, you'll attain [much];
With much, you'll be confused.
Therefore the Sage holds on to the One and in this way becomes the shepherd of the world.
He does not show himself off; therefore he becomes prominent.
He does not put himself on display; therefore he brightly shines.
He does not brag about himself; therefore he receives credit.
He does not praise his own deeds; therefore he can long endure.
It is only because he does not compete that, therefore, no one is able to compete with him.
The so-called "Bent over you'll be preserved whole" of the ancients
Was an expression that was really close to it!
Truly "wholeness" will belong to him.

[22c02t] John C. H. Wu
BEND and you will be whole.
Curl and you will be straight.
Keep empty and you will be filled.
Grow old and you will be renewed.
Have little and you will gain.
Have much and you will be confused.
Therefore, the Sage embraces the One,
And becomes a Pattern to all under Heaven.
He does not make a show of himself,
Hence he shines;
Does not justify himself,
Hence he becomes known;
Does not boast of his ability,
Hence he gets his credit;
Does not brandish his success,
Hence he endures;
Does not compete with anyone,
Hence no one can compete with him.
Indeed, the ancient saying: "Bend and you will remain whole" is no idle word.
Nay, if you have really attained wholeness, everything will flock to you.

[22c03t] D. C. Lau
Bowed down then preserved;
Bent then straight;

Hollow then full;
Worn then new;
A little then benefited;
A lot then perplexed.
Therefore the sage embraces the One and is a model for the empire.
He does not show himself, and so is conspicuous;
He does not consider himself right, and so is illustrious;
He does not brag, and so has merit;
He does not boast, and so endures.
It is because he does not contend that no one in the empire is in a position to contend with him.
The way the ancients had it, 'Bowed down then preserved', is no empty saying.
Truly it enables one to be preserved to the end.

[22c04t] R. L. Wing
What is curved becomes whole;
What is crooked becomes straight.
What is deep becomes filled;
What is exhausted becomes refreshed.
What is small becomes attainable;
What is excessive becomes confused.
Thus Evolved Individuals hold to the One And regard the world as their Pattern.
They do not display themselves;
Therefore they are illuminated.
They do not define themselves;
Therefore they are distinguished.
They do not make claims;
Therefore they are credited.
They do not boast;
Therefore they advance.
Since, indeed, they do not compete, The world cannot compete with them.
That ancient saying: "What is curved becomes whole" - Are these empty words?
To become whole, Turn within.

[22c05t] Ren Jiyu
To yield is yet to be preserved wholly,
To be bent is yet to become straight,
To be hollow is yet to be filled up,
To be worn out is yet to be renewed,
To have little (knowledge) is yet to gain,
To have much (knowledge) is yet to be perplexed.
Therefore the sage takes Tao (the One) as the instrument to observe destiny under Heaven?
He does not merely rely on his own eyes,
Therefore he is wise and penetrating;
He does not consider himself always in the right,
Therefore he is able to tell right from wrong;
He does not boast of himself,

325/2593

Therefore he is given credit;
He does not think himself superior,
Therefore he is qualified for leadership.
It is precisely because he does not compete that nobody under Heaven could compete with him.
How could such old sayings be false as "to yield is yet to be preserved wholly"?
Truly they will preserve people well.

[22c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Yield and overcome;
Bend and be straight;
Empty and be full;
Wear out and be new;
Have little and gain;
Have much and be confused.
Therefore wise men embrace the one
And set an example to all.
Not putting on a display,
They shine forth.
Not justifying themselves,
They are distinguished.
Not boasting,
They receive recognition.
Not bragging,
They never falter.
They do not quarrel,
So no one quarrels with them.
Therefore the ancients say, "Yield and overcome."
Is that an empty saying?
Be really whole,
And all things will come to you.

[22c07t] Lok Sang Ho
When something is bent, it is ready to be put straight;
When someone is wronged, one is ready to be redressed;
When a container is empty, it is ready to be filled;
When something gets old, it is ready to be renewed;
When you have just a little, you are ready to get more;
When you have got a lot, you are ready to be confused.
For this reason the Sage espouses one universal formula.
Do not be prejudiced by your own views, and your will see;
Do not think that you are right, and you will know the truth;
Do not boast about your achievements, and you will achieve;
Do not be self-contented; and you will grow.
Because (in-seeking growth) one never need to struggle or to contest with others,
One will never need to fear that one's achievements will be contested away by others.
The ancient saying that "When something is bent it is ready to be straightened" certainly is not idle talk.

To be whole, just follow the one formula.

[22c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If you can bear unfairness, you can make yourself a complete person.
If you can bear overbending, you can be straightened out.
If you can bear the old, you can gain the new.
When you have too little, you will gain;
When you have too much, you will lose.
Therefore, the great men kept the DAO and made themselves the models for the world.
They were not stubborn, so they knew the right and the wrong.
They were not narrow-minded, so everyone accepted their opinions.
They did not show off, so everyone recognized their accomplishments.
They were not conceited, so they were able to lead the people.
Only because they did not fight for the credit, was no one able to claim it.
Is the old saying "bearing the unfairness makes you a complete man" an empty joke?
No, because it is completely consistent with the DAO.

[22c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INCREASING THE SMALL
Whosoever adapteth himself shall be preserved to the end.
Whosoever bendeth himself shall be straightened.
Whosoever emptieth himself shall be filled.
Whosoever weareth himself away shall be renewed.
Whosoever humbleth himself shall be exalted.
Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased.
Therefore doth the Sage cling to simplicity, and is an example to all men.
He is not ostentatious, and therefore he shines.
He is not egotistic, and therefore he is praised.
He is not vain, and therefore he is esteemed.
He is not haughty, and therefore he is honoured.
And because he does not compete with others, no man is his enemy.
The ancient maxim, "Whosoever adapteth himself shall be preserved to the end," verily it is no idle saying.
Without doubt he shall go back to his Home in peace.

[22c10t] James Legge
The partial becomes complete;
the crooked, straight;
the empty, full;
the worn out, new.
He whose (desires) are few gets them;
he whose (desires) are many goes astray.
Therefore the sage holds in his embrace the one thing (of humility), and manifests it to all the world.
He is free from self-display, and therefore he shines;
from self-assertion, and therefore he is distinguished;
from self-boasting, and therefore his merit is acknowledged;
from self-complacency, and therefore he acquires superiority.
It is because he is thus free from striving that therefore no one in the world is able to strive with him.

327/2593

That saying of the ancients that 'the partial becomes complete' was not vainly spoken:
- all real completion is comprehended under it.

[22c11t] David Hinton
In yielding is completion.
In bent is straight.
In hollow is full.
In exhaustion is renewal.
In little is contentment.
In much is confusion.
This is how a sage embraces primal unity as the measure of all beneath heaven.
Give up self-reflection and you're soon enlightened.
Give up self-definition
and you're soon apparent.
Give up self-promotion and you're soon proverbial.
Give up self-esteem
and you're soon perennial.
Simply give up contention and soon nothing in all beneath heaven contends with you.
It was hardly empty talk when the ancients declared
In yielding is completion.
Once you perfect completion you've returned home to it all.

[22c12t] Chichung Huang
"Incomplete shall be complete;
Bent shall be straight;
Hollow shall be full;
Worn shall be new;
Little shall gain;
Much shall delude."
Hence, the sage man
Took hold of One to serve
As shepherd over all under heaven:
He did not look at himself,
Therefore, illustrious;
He did not parade himself,
Therefore, clear-sighted;
He did not brag about himself,
Therefore, meritorious;
He was not conceited,
Therefore, long-enduring.
It is precisely because he did not contend

That none could with him contend.
The ancient saying:
"Incomplete shall be complete" -
Is it mere words?
Truly, it shall end up complete.

[22c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Bent, thus (tse) preserved whole,
Unjustly accused, thus exonerated (chih),
Hollow, thus filled (ying),
Battered (pi), thus renewed,
Scanty, thus receiving (te),
Much, thus perplexed.
Therefore the sage embraces the One (pao i).
He becomes the model (shih) of the world.
Not self-seeing, hence he is enlightened (ming).
Not self-justifying, hence he is outstanding.
Not showing off (fa) his deeds, hence he is meritorious.
Not boasting (ching) of himself, hence he leads (chang).
Because he is not contentious (pu cheng),
Hence no one under heaven can contend with him.
What the ancients say: "Bent, thus preserved whole,"
Are these empty words?
Be preserved whole and return (kuei).

[22c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
[The working of Tao is to bring forth the ultimate fairness, so any individual could act in harmony with Tao by performing the following tasks:]
By assisting the wronged [person] to achieve full justice [through rectification];
Through helping the twisted [people] to go straight;
Through sustaining the needy (in the manner of filling out potholes when needed);
Through shoring up (revigorating) the old and deteriorated [vitality];
Through strengthening the underprivileged with the obtainment (of essentials);
Through halting [those who already have] too much until they cease and desist.
By doing so, a Sage exemplifies to the world how to strive for Oneness (equal opportunity for all).
A person who refrains from being self-opinionated is brilliant;
A person who is not self-righteous is extraordinary;
A person who is not self-promoting is genuinely distinguished;
A person who is not self-conceit is outstanding;
It is due to the fact that a Sage [, i.e. a person with the above described virtue,] does not rival people [for fame, honor, and profit] that people of the world can not strive against him;
Is the ancient saying that Tao had helped the wronged person to achieve full justice through rectification an empty talk?
Accordingly, if one is thoroughly sincere, he will succeed in whatever he endeavors.

Bent but then whole.
Curled but then straight.

He does not boast of his ability, hence he gets his credit.
He does not brandish his success, hence he endures.
He does not compete with anyone, hence no one can compete with him.
Indeed, the ancient saying "Bent but then whole" is not an empty word.
If you have really attained wholeness, everyone will flock to you.

[22c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Malleability preserves entirety.
Mistakes teach lessons.
Empty containers can be filled.
Breakages cause replacement.
Less makes success.
Much leads to confusion.
Thus the sage believes Tao is the only law of the universe.
He does not brag himself so he can be held in great respect.
He does not assume he is always right so he can be unbiased.
He does not exaggerate so he can be right.
He is not vainglorious so he can keep making progress.
If you do not compete, then no one can compete with you in the world.
So how can the old saying, such as 'Malleability preserves entirety', be not without truth?
They all return to Tao.

[22c17t] Arthur Waley
'To remain whole, be twisted!'
To become straight, let yourself be bent.
To become full, be hollow.
Be tattered, that you may be renewed.
Those that have little, may get more,
Those that have much, are but perplexed.
Therefore the Sage
Clasps the Primal Unity,
Testing by it everything under heaven.
He does not show himself; therefore he is seen everywhere.
He does not define himself, therefore he is distinct.
He does not boast of what he will do, therefore he succeeds.
He is not proud of his work, and therefore it endures.
He does not contend,

And for that very reason no one under heaven can contend with him.
So then we see that the ancient saying 'To remain whole, be twisted!' was no idle word; for true wholeness can only be achieved by return.

[22c18t] Richard John Lynn
Stepping aside keeps one's wholeness intact.
Bending makes one straight.
Being empty makes one full.
Being worn out keeps one new.
Having little gives one access.
Having much leads one astray.
In this way, the sage embraces the One and becomes a model for all under Heaven.
He does not flaunt himself, thus he shines.
He does not insist that he is right, thus his rightness is manifest.
He does not boast about himself, thus his merit is acknowledged.
He avoids self-importance, thus he long endures.
It is because he does not contend that none among all under Heaven can contend with him.
As the ancient saying has it, "Stepping aside keeps one's wholeness intact."
How could this ever be an empty saying!
Truly, such a one will revert to it [nonexistence] with his wholeness intact.

[22c19t] Lin Yutang
FUTILITY OF CONTENTION
To yield is to be preserved whole.
To be bent is to become straight.
To be hollow is to be filled.
To be tattered is to be renewed.
To be in want is to possess.
To have plenty is to be confused.
Therefore the Sage embraces the One,
And becomes the model of the world.
He does not reveal himself,
And is therefore luminous.
He does not justify himself,
And is therefore far-famed.
He does not boast of himself,
And therefore people give him credit.
He does not pride himself,
And is therefore the chief among men.
It is because he does not contend
That no one in the world can contend against him.
Is it not indeed true, as the ancients say,
"To yield is to be preserved whole?"
Thus he is preserved and the world does him homage.

If it
Is bent, it will be preserved intact;
Is crooked, it will be straightened;
Is sunken, it will be filled;
Is worn-out, it will be renewed;
Has little, it will gain;
Has much, it will be confused.
For these reasons,
The sage holds on to unity and serves as the shepherd of all under heaven.
He is not self-absorbed, therefore he shines forth;
He is not self-revealing, therefore he is distinguished;
He is not self-assertive, therefore he has merit;
He does not praise himself, therefore he is long-lasting.
Now,
Simply because he does not compete,
No one can compete with him.
The old saying about the bent being preserved intact is indeed close to the mark!
Truly, he shall be returned intact.

[22c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Yield and overcome;
bend and be straight.
Empty out and be full;
wear out and be renewed.
Have little and gain;
have much and be confused.
Therefore,
the True Person embraces the One and becomes a model for all.
Do not look only at yourself,
and you will see much.
Do not justify yourself,
and you will be distinguished.
Do not brag,
and you will have merit.
Do not be prideful,
and your work will endure.
It is because you do not strive that no one under heaven can strive with you.
The saying of the Old Ones, "Yield and Overcome," is not an empty phrase.
True wholeness is achieved by blending with life.

[22c22t] David H. Li
Accommodate and be whole, bend and be straight;
Keep low and be fulfilled, replace old and be new;
Seek little and gain, seek plenty and be bewildered.
Thus, the sage embraces One to set an example for the people of the world.

Not self-touting, one shines;
Not self-justifying, one reassures;
Not self-aggrandizing, one accomplishes;
Not self-serving, one endures.
When one is not in competition, people in the world cannot engage him/her in competition.
Is the old saying "Accommodate and be whole" but empty words?
It can be realized fully.

[22c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
To yield is to prevail;
To bend is to straighten;
To be hollow is to be full;
To die is to regenerate.
To have little is to receive much;
To have much is to be confused.
Wherefore,
The sage embraces the complementary oneness of existence,
And sets an exemplary pattern for the rest of the world.
He does not display his ability,
Therefore his being shines forth.
He is not self-righteous,
Therefore he becomes distinguished.
He does not take credit,
Therefore he becomes recognized.
He is not self-important,
Therefore he is made a leader.
He does not contend with the world,
Therefore the world does not contend with him.
The old admonition that "to yield is to prevail" is not an empty adage.
Truly, to yield is to prevail, and in prevailing, one returns to oneness.

[22c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Be modest, and you will remain whole.
Be bent, and you will remain straight.
Be empty, and you will remain full.
Be worn out, and you will remain new.
The one who has little will receive.
The one who has a lot will be enslaved.
Therefore the sage guards the one,
And becomes a paradigm for the world.
He does not expose himself, therefore he shines.
He does not make a good name for himself, therefore he is known.
He does not praise himself, therefore he is dear to everyone.
He does not glorify himself, therefore his name is on everyone's lips.
And since he does not compete at all,
There is no one in the world who can compete with him.

The ancient ones said:
Be modest, and you will remain whole.
Can these be meaningless words?
Indeed, he will return home whole.

[22c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
Learn to yield and be soft
If you want to survive.
Learn to bow
And you will stand in your full height.
Learn to empty yourself and be filled by the Tao
... the way a valley empties itself into a river.
Use up all you are
And then you can be made new.
Learn to have nothing
And you will have everything.
Sages always act like this, and are Children of the Tao.
Never trying to impress, their being shines forth
Never saying 'this is it', people see what the truth is - Never boasting, they leave the space they can be valued in
And never claiming to be who they are, people can see them
And since they never argue, no one argues with them either ...
So the ancient ones say 'Bend, and you will rule'.
Is this a lie?
You'll find it is true.
Be true to yourself, and all will go well with you.

[22c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Bow down and you are preserved;
Bend and you can be straight;
Hollow, then full;
Worn, then new;
Seek a little and you get a lot;
Seek a lot and you get perplexed.
Thus the sage adheres to this One principle (Tao)
And regards it as the pattern of all things.
Show off yourself not and you become conspicuous;
Regard yourself not as infallible and you become illustrious;
Brag about yourself not and you gain achievement;
Boast of yourself not and you become a head.
One does not contend with others,
So nobody in the world can win him in contention.
The ancients' saying "Bow down and you are preserved"
Is surely not an empty saying,

[22c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The tortured will seek for the snug.
The bent will seek for the straight.
The hollow will seek for the full.
The worn will seek for the new.
The minor will seek for the major.
The affluent will seek for the perplexed.
Therefore the virtuous man considers unity as the only model for the world.
He does not flaunt himself, therefore he is brilliant.
He does not consider himself right, therefore he is incontestable.
He does not require his fame, therefore he is meritorious.
He does not stick to his own knowledge, therefore he grows.
Only because he does not fight can no one under Heaven fight with him.
The ancient saying 'The tortured will be made snug' is very well put.
It truly enables one to preserve the unity.

[22c28t] Liu Qixuan
What is adaptable can remain whole.
What is bendable can be straight.
What is empty can be replenished.
What is used can be renewed.
One is satisfied when one gets barely enough.
One is overburdened when one gets too much.
Therefore,
The wise keeps the humblest life style
As a basic model for the world.
Unoccupied with one's own views, one is objective.
Unoccupied with one's own merits, one is recommended.
Unoccupied with one's own deeds, one is successful.
Unoccupied with one's own superiority, one is obeyed.
One gets the most if one gets nothing for one's self.
The old saying about flexibility holds true.
One sticks to it heart and soul, and it will work.

[22c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Futility of Contention
Lao Tze says,
Be bendable, you will assure wholeness.
Be wronged, you will be proven right.
Be empty, you will be filled.
Be worn out, you will be renewed.
The scanty deserves to gain.
The superfluous becomes lost.
Thus the sage insists on recommending the true one for the world to model after.

A man sees clearly, because he doesn't claim self-righteousness.
A man gets credit because he doesn't boast his merit.
A man has longevity because he doesn't claim importance.
Therefore I say that whosoever gives up a contest, there will be no one who can compete with him.
The ancient epigram goes like this:
Be bendable, you will assure the wholeness.
Is this an airy saying?
Actually, this saying has already preserved many men.

[22c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
'Be humble, and you will remain entire.'
Be bent, and you will remain straight.
Be vacant, and you will remain full.
Be worn, and you will remain new.
He who has little will receive.
He who has much will be embarrassed.
Therefore the Sage keeps to One and becomes the standard for the world.
He does not display himself; therefore he shines.
He does not approve himself; therefore he is noted.
He does not praise himself; therefore he has merit.
He does not glory in himself; therefore he excels.
And because he does not compete; therefore no one in the world can compete with him.
The ancient saying 'Be humble and you will remain entire' -
Can this be regarded as mere empty words?
Indeed he shall return home entire.

[22c31t] Paul J. Lin
To yield is to have the whole.
To be crooked is to be straightened.
To be hollow is to be filled.
To be worn out is to be renewed.
To have a little is to get more.
To have a lot is to be confused.
Therefore the Sage sets an example for the world
By embracing the One.
By not insisting on his view, he may become enlightened.
By not being self-righteous, he may become illustrious.
By not boasting, he may receive credit.
By not being arrogant, he may last long.
And just because he does not compete, the entire world cannot compete with him.
The Ancients say: "to yield is to have the whole."
Are these merely words?
Truly the whole will return to him.

Compromised - then upright,
Empty - then solid,
old and spent - then young and sprightly.
A little - then a gain,
a lot - then confusing.
And so the Wise Person:
Embraces The One Thing,
and becomes the Shepherd of the World.
He does not show off, so he shines;
he does not promote himself, so he becomes famous;
he does not boast of himself, so he gets the credit;
he does not glorify himself, so he becomes leader.
He just does not contend and so no one can contend with him.
What the ancients said: "bent - then mature",
is this an empty saying?
This is true maturity, turn back to it.

[22c33t] Cheng Lin
The imperfect becomes perfect.

The crooked becomes straight.
The empty becomes full.
Loss means gain.
Plenitude means confusion.
Wherefore, the Sage holds fast to Truth and thereby sets an example for the world.

Because he is not self-important, he becomes illustrious.
Because he is not self-conceited, he becomes successful.
Because he is not self-assertive, he becomes supreme.
Because he himself does not strive for superiority, there is none in the world who can contend with his superiority.
There is an old saying:
"The imperfect becomes perfect."

By not being self-righteous, he becomes manifest.
By not being self-glorified, he has merit.
By not being self-satisfied, he develops well.
He alone does not compete with anyone;
so, no one can compete with him.
Is the ancient saying, "To bend is to be whole", an idle word?
Truly, the whole will return to him.

[22c35t] Han Hiong Tan
To preserve your life, you have to be pliable.
That which is bent will soon be straightened.
The lowest ground will be filled by water.
Old and tattered things will soon be replaced.
To gain real insights, you must be focused.
Dealing with too many things concurrently can only lead to confusion.
The sage embraces the essence of Dao.
He thus sets an example for others to follow.
Not trying to be prominent is why he is famous.
Not pretending to be a know-all is why he is distinguished.
Not wanting to claim credit is why he is acclaimed.
Not bragging about his ability is why he has advanced.
Because he is not contending, no one can compete with him.
The ancient saying that to be pliable is to preserve oneself is not just empty rhetoric.
It is through following the way of Dao that self-preservation is assured.

[22c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The yielding are preserved whole.
The crooked become straight.
The empty become filled.
The depleted are renewed.
What has little will gain.
What has much will become confused.
Therefore, one with a whole mind holds fast to the one essence and thereby becomes an example to the rest of the world.
Because he does not flaunt his brightness,
he becomes enlightened.
Because he is not self-important,
he becomes illustrious.
Because he does not boast of his accomplishments,
he becomes successful.
Because he is not self-assertive,
he becomes supreme.
Because he does not strive for superiority,
there is no one in the world who can contend with his superiority.
Indeed, the ancient teaching that "the yielding are preserved whole" is no empty saying.
Truly, they are preserved whole in order to attain one universal life.

[22c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
To bend is to maintain integrity.
To deviate is to be direct.
To be concave is to be convex.
To be exhausted is to be rejuvenated.
To be wanting is to be endowed.
To have much is to be deprived.
Therefore, the wise identifies opposites as one,
And sets an example for the world.
He remains in concealment and spontaneously is unconcealed.
He does not assert himself, therefore he is eminent.
He does not claim credit, therefore he receives credit.
He is not vain, therefore he is the best.
Because he does not oppose anyone in the world, no one can oppose him.
Thus, the ancient saying "to bend is to maintain integrity" is the word of truth.
Indeed, integrity is attributed to this.
Through no words,
It takes place by itself.

To be small is to gain;
To have many is to be perplexed.
Therefore the sage,
Embracing the One, becomes the model for all under Heaven.
He does not show himself, therefore his presence is bright.
He does not claim to be right, therefore his virtue shines.
He is not boastful of his act, therefore his merit is great.
He is not conceited, therefore he is long-lasting.
Only because he does not contend,
No one under Heaven can contend with him.
Can the old saying "To yield is to remain whole"
Be an empty phrase?
Truly, he remains whole, and the world returns to him.

[22c40t] Tao Huang
Yield, and retain integrity.
In the depths of whirling, there is stillness.
The hollow enables the plentiful.
The old gives way to the new.
The small allows for increase.
Excess breeds confusion.
Therefore the sage holds oneness as the shepherd of the world.
He who does not display himself is seen.
He who does not justify himself is understood.
He who does not lash out succeeds.
He who does not build himself up endures.
Therefore,
Only the spirit of noncompetition makes things noncompetitive.
So the old saying, "yield, and retain integrity," is but a few words,
But when rightly understood, integrity returns.

[22c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Through tolerance can perfection be attained.
By "indirect way" can "direct way" be reached.
Through lowness can highness be maintained.
Through old fashion can new fashion be created.
By "have less" can "have more" be possible.
By having plenty only confusion will result.
Hence one who does not show off is enlightened.
One who does not boast of himself has merit.
One who does not claim credit for himself is popular.
One who does not brandish his success thus leads all.
Because of non-struggle, therefore there is nothing under heaven which can struggle with him.
The ancient saying:
"Through tolerance can perfection be attained."
Is it an empty talk?

[22c91t] И. И. Семененко
Изогнутое цело, кривое прямо,
пустое полно,
ветхое ново,
в малом обретают,
при многом заблуждаются.
Поэтому Премудрый человек держит в объятиях единое и в этом выступает образцом для Поднебесной.
Себя не видит и поэтому находится в просвете;
не считает себя правым и поэтому заметен;
не хвастается и поэтому заслужен;
не зазнается и поэтому всех старше.
Он не соперничает и поэтому никто не может с ним соперничать.
Разве не имеют смысла сказанные в древности слова о том, что изогнутое цело?
К истинно целому и возвращаются.

[22c92t] А. А. Маслов
Склоняясь, сохраняем целостность.
Сгибаемся, затем распрямляемся.
Опустошаемся, затем наполняемся.
Стареем, чтобы потом обновиться.
Уменьшаем, дабы затем достичь завершения.
Увеличиваем - и становимся жертвой заблуждения.
Таким образом, мудрецы объемлели Единое, делая его принципом Поднебесной;
не показывали себя и потому были разумны;
не считали себя правыми, потому их правота была очевидна;
не превозносили себя, потому достигали успеха;

не хвастали, потому могли прожить долго.
И лишь потому, что они ни с кем не соперничали, никто в Поднебесной не мог соперничать с ними.
Фраза древних: "Склоняясь, сохраняем целостность", - разве это пустые слова?
Достигший целостности, вернётся к этому.

[22c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Если нечто ущербно, то оно обретет целостность.
Если нечто согнуто, то оно выпрямится.
Если нечто пусто, то оно наполнится.
Если нечто одряхлело, то оно обновится.
Если чего-то недостаток, то будет прибавлено,
Если что-то в избытке, то наступит смятение.
Поэтому совершенный мудрец объемлет Одно и становится образцом для Поднебесной.
Он не поглощен сам собой и потому умудренно-просветлен.
Он не превозносит сам себя и потому прославлен.
Он сам ни на кого не нападает и потому свершает подвиги.
Он не занимается самовосхвалением и потому долговечен.
Ведь поскольку он не враждует ни с кем, с ним также никто не враждует.
Древние говорили: "Если нечто ущербно, то оно обретет целостность", - разве это пустые слова?
Когда целостность удается обрести, существо возвращается к этому Дао-Пути.

[22c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Если есть ущербное, то есть и целостное.
Если есть кривое, то есть и прямое.
Если есть пустое, то есть и полное.
Если есть старое, то есть и новое.
Если есть недостаток, то есть и достаток,
Если есть большее, то есть и меньшее.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек берет одно-единое за образец для Поднебесной.
Не выставляет себя эрудитом, поэтому просветлен.
Не считает себя правым, поэтому просвещен.
Не прославляет себя, поэтому доблестен.
Не восхваляет себя, поэтому главенствует.
Поскольку не соперничает, постольку и в Поднебесной нет таких, кто мог бы с ним соперничать.
В древности говорили: "Если есть ущербное, то есть и целостное".
Разве это пустые слова!
Поэтому искренне приемли совершенную целостность и возвращайся к ней.

[22c95t] Ян Хин-шун
В древности говорили:
"Ущербное становится совершенным, кривое - прямым,
пустое - наполненным,
ветхое сменяется новым;
стремясь к малому, достигаешь многого;
стремление получить многое ведет к заблуждениям".

Поэтому совершенномудрый внемлет этому поучению, коему необходимо следовать в Поднебесной.
Совершенномудрый исходит не только из того, что сам видит, поэтому может видеть ясно;
он не считает правым только себя, поэтому может обладать истиной;
он не прославляет себя, поэтому имеет заслуженную славу;
он не возвышает себя, поэтому он старший среди других.
Он ничему не противоборствует, поэтому он непобедим в Поднебесной.
Слова древних: "Ущербное становится совершенным..." - разве это пустые слова?
Они действительно указывают человеку путь к [истинному] совершенству.

[22c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Из несовершенного происходит цельное.
Из кривого - прямое.
Из углубленного - гладкое.
Из старого - новое.
Если не много, то легко приобрести, а если много, то легко запутаться.
Поэтому святой муж имеет только одно, но он сделается примером для всего мира.
Он открыто не объявляет своих мыслей, поэтому он никогда не заблуждается (ясен).
Он никогда не выставляет себя, поэтому он всегда известен.
Он сам никогда не воюет, поэтому имеет заслуги.
Ничем он не гордится, поэтому он превозносится.
Ни с кем он не ссорится, поэтому вся вселенная никогда не сопротивляется ему.
Отсюда высказанные древними слова "из несовершенного происходит совершенное, из кривого - прямое" можно ли назвать лживым изречением?

[22c97t] В. В. Малявин
Что скривилось - тому быть целым.
Что согнулось - тому быть прямым.
Порожнему - быть полным.
Ветхому - новым быть.
Кто имеет мало, получит много.
Кто имеет много, тот слеп.
Вот почему премудрый держится за Единое
И так становится мерилом мира.
Не имеет "своего взгляда" и потому просветлен.
Не имеет "своего мнения" и потому всем светит.
Не рвется вперед и потому имеет заслуги.
Не хвалит себя и потому живет долго.
Он ни с кем не соперничает, и никто в мире не соперничает с ним.
Поговорка древних: "Кривому - быть целым" разве пустые слова?
Быть воистину целым только ему дано.

[22c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
От ущербности проходят к целостности.
От кривды приходят к правде.
От пустоты приходят к наполненности.
От ветхости приходят к новому.

От уменьшения происходит обретение.
От умножения происходят сомнения.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости, охватывая единое, становится моделью Поднебесной.
Не выставляет себя, потому ясен.
Не утверждает себя, потому четок.
Не гордится собой, потому имеет заслуги.
Не превозносит себя, потому существует долго.
И именно потому, что не соперничает, поэтому никто в Поднебесной не способен вступить с ним в отношения соперничества.
Разве древнее высказывание: "От ущербности приходят к целостности" - это пустые слова?
Ведь все сходится в том, кто обладает действительной целостностью.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Three

[23c01t] Robert G. Henricks
To rarely speak - such is [the way of] Nature.
Fierce winds don't last the whole morning;
Torrential rains don't last the whole day.
Who makes these things?
If even Heaven and Earth can't make these last long -
How much the more is this true for man?!
Therefore, one who devotes himself to the Way is one with the Way;
One who [devotes himself to] Virtue is one with that Virtue;
And one who [devotes himself to] losing is one with that loss.
To the one who is one with Virtue, the Way also gives Virtue;
While for the one who is one with his loss, the Way also disregards him.

[23c02t] John C. H. Wu
ONLY simple and quiet words will ripen of themselves.
For a whirlwind does not last a whole morning,
Nor does a sudden shower last a whole day.
Who is their author? Heaven-and-Earth!
Even Heaven-and-Earth cannot make such violent things last long;
How much truer is it of the rash endeavours of men?
Hence, he who cultivates the Tao is one with the Tao;
He who practices Virtue is one with Virtue;
And he who courts after Loss is one with Loss.
To be one with the Tao is to be a welcome accession to the Tao;
To be one with Virtue is to be a welcome accession to Virtue;
To be one with Loss is to be a welcome accession to Loss.
Deficiency of faith on your part
Entails faithlessness on the part of others.

[23c03t] D. C. Lau
To use words but rarely
Is to be natural.
Hence a gusty wind cannot last all morning, and a sudden downpour cannot last all day.
Who is it that produces these? Heaven and earth.
If even heaven and earth cannot go on for ever, much less can man.
That is why one follows the way.
A man of the way conforms to the way;
A man of virtue conforms to virtue;
A man of loss conforms to loss.
He who conforms to the way is gladly accepted by the way;
He who conforms to virtue is gladly accepted by virtue;
He who conforms to loss is gladly accepted by loss.

When there is not enough faith, there is lack of good faith.

[23c04t] R. L. Wing
Nature rarely speaks.
Hence the whirlwind does not last a whole morning,
Nor the sudden rainstorm last a whole day.
What causes these?
Heaven and Earth.
If Heaven and Earth cannot make them long lasting,
How much less so can humans?
Thus, those who cultivate the Tao
Identify with the Tao.
Those who cultivate Power
Identify with Power.
Those who cultivate failure
Identify with failure.
Those who identify with the Tao
Are likewise welcomed by the Tao.
Those who identify with Power
Are likewise welcomed by Power.
Those who identify with failure
Are likewise welcomed by failure.
Those who lack belief
Will not in turn be believed.

[23c05t] Ren Jiyu
Saying few words fits in with Nature.
Therefore a whirlwind does not last a whole morning,
Nor does a rainstorm last a whole day.
Whoever makes them like this?
It is Heaven and Earth.
If (the fierce force of) Heaven and Earth cannot last long,
How much less man?
Therefore he who follows Tao (should know:)
The seeker of Tao is identified with Tao,
The seeker of De is identified with De,
He who seeks the loss (of Tao) is identified with loss.
He who is identified with Tao -
Tao is also happy to have him.
He who is identified with De -
De is also happy to have him.
He who is identified with the loss -
The loss is also happy to have him.
Only when one has no faith will faithless events take place.

To talk little is natural.
High winds do not last all morning.
Heavy rain does not last all day.
Why is this? Heaven and earth!
If heaven and earth cannot make things eternal,
How is it possible for man?
He who follows the Tao
Is at one with the Tao.
He who is virtuous
Experiences Virtue.
He who loses the way
Feels lost.
When you are at one with the Tao,
The Tao welcomes you.
When you are at one with Virtue,
The Virtue is always there.
When you are at one with loss,
The loss is experienced willingly.
He who does not trust enough
Will not be trusted.

[23c07t] Lok Sang Ho
To live with sparse words is to live with nature.
Occasional winds and showers will not last through the day.
Who is responsible for this result?
Heaven and earth.
Even heaven and earth take breaks.
So certainly should men.
(Why should anyone then talk too much?)
(Rather then just talk)
Those who follow the way will find the way.
Those who live virtuously will have a virtuous life.
Those who live not seeking the way will lose the way.
For those who seek the way, the way will seek them out.
For those who seek virtue, virtue will seek them out.
For those who do not find the way,
The way will not find them either.
Some people do not believe adequately.
Some people do not believe at all.

[23c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Talking little is the way of nature.
A blustering wind cannot last a whole morning;
A downpour cannot last a whole day.
Who can control this? Only nature.
Even nature cannot make a storm last long, so how can people?

Therefore, one who believes in the DAO receives the DAO,
One who pursues the DE has the DE,
One who does not believe in anything is lost.
The one who gets the DAO will receive the blessings of the DAO,
The one who has the DE will receive the blessings of the DE,
The one who is lost will receive nothing.
If you do not have faith in the DAO, the DAO will not have faith in you.

[23c09t] Walter Gorn Old, NON-IDENTIFICATION
Moderate your speech, and preserve yourself.
A hurricane will not outlast the morning, a heavy rain will not outlast the day.
Who have the power to make these things but Heaven and Earth?
And if Heaven and Earth cannot continue them long, how shall a man do so?
If a man accords with Tao in all things, he is identified with Tao by that agreement.
A virtuous man is identified with virtue, a vicious man is identified with vice.
Whoever is identified with Tao, him do the Taoists receive with gladness.
Whoever is identified with virtue, him do the virtuous receive with gladness.
But whoever is identified with vice, him do the vicious gladly serve with vice.
For wherever confidence is lacking, it is not met with trust.

[23c10t] James Legge
Abstaining from speech marks him who is obeying the spontaneity of his nature.
A violent wind does not last for a whole morning;
a sudden rain does not last for the whole day.
To whom is it that these (two) things are owing?
To Heaven and Earth.
If Heaven and Earth cannot make such (spasmodic) actings last long, how much less can man!
Therefore when one is making the Tao his business, those who are also pursuing it, agree with him in it, and those who are making the manifestation of its course their object agree with him in that;
while even those who are failing in both these things agree with him where they fail.
Hence, those with whom he agrees as to the Tao have the happiness of attaining to it;
those with whom he agrees as to its manifestation have the happiness of attaining to it;
and those with whom he agrees in their failure have also the happiness of attaining (to the Tao).
(But) when there is not faith sufficient (on his part), a want of faith (in him) ensues (on the part of the others).

[23c11t] David Hinton
Keeping words spare: occurrence appearing of itself.
Wild winds never last all morning and fierce rains never last all day.
Who conjures such things if not heaven and earth,
and if heaven and earth can't make things last,
why should we humans try?
That's why masters devote themselves to Way.
To master Way is to become Way,
to master gain is to become gain,

to master loss is to become loss.
And whatever becomes Way, Way welcomes joyfully, whatever becomes gain, gain welcomes joyfully,
whatever becomes loss, loss welcomes joyfully.
If you don't stand sincere by your words how sincere can the people be?

[23c12t] Chichung Huang
Speechlessness conforms to the way things are.
A turbulent wind does not last a whole morning;
A torrential rain does not last a whole day.
Who does these?
Heaven and earth.
Even heaven and earth cannot last long,
How can man?
Therefore, he who pursues the Tao
Identifies with the Tao;
He who pursues virtue identifies with virtue;
He who pursues loss identifies with loss.
He who identifies with virtue -
The Tao, too, shall requite him with favor;
He who identifies with loss -
The Tao, too, shall requite him with loss.

[23c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Nature speaks (yen) little.

Therefore one who follows Tao identifies with Tao,
One who follows te (nature) identifies with te (nature).
One who follows shih (loss) identifies with shih.
One who identifies with Tao is glad to be with Tao.
One who identifies with te is glad to be with te.
One who identifies with shih is glad to be with shih.

Accordingly:
People who are aspired to Tao shall associate with [people who are already on the path of questing for] Tao;
People who seek Te shall join [people who are committed to cultivating] Te; People who are losers [of Tao and Te] shall associate with losers;
People who are aspired to Tao shall be embraced by [people who are already on the path for] Tao;

People who are lost will also be hailed by people of his kind, i.e. losers.

If it is not enough to get faith, there is no faith.

[23c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Preaching less conforms to the natural way.
A squall rarely lasts a whole morning.
A downpour rarely continues all the day.
Who makes the wind and rain?
It is the nature.
If the nature cannot have long-lasting stamina, how can people?
Therefore, those who follow Tao live with Tao.
Those who follow Te live with Te.
Those who follow nothing live with nothing.
Those who live with Tao are happy with Tao.
Those who live with Te are happy with Te.
Those who live with nothing abandon Tao.
There are people who are not whole-heartedly Tao-believer.
There are people who do not believe in Tao at all.

[23c17t] Arthur Waley
To be always talking is against nature.
For the same reason a hurricane never lasts a whole morning, nor a rain-storm all day.
Who is it that makes the wind and rain?
It is Heaven-and-Earth.
And if even Heaven-and-Earth cannot blow or pour for long, how much less in his utterance should man?
Truly,
if one uses the Way as one's instrument, the results will be like the Way;
if one uses the 'power' as one's instrument, the results will be like the power;

if one uses what is the reverse of the 'power', the results will be the reverse of the 'power'.
For to those who have conformed themselves to the Way, the Way readily lends its power.
To those who have conformed themselves to the power, the power readily lends more power.
While to those who conform themselves to inefficacy, inefficacy readily lends its ineffectiveness.
'It is by not believing in people that you turn them into liars'.

[23c18t] Richard John Lynn
The "inaudible" is a way of referring to the Natural.
Thus a whirlwind does not last an entire morning, and a rainstorm does not last an entire day.
What is it that causes them?
It is Heaven and Earth.
If even Heaven and Earth cannot make them last long, how much less can man?
Thus, to undertake things in accordance with the Dao, the man of Dao becomes one with the Dao.
The man of virtue becomes one with virtue.
The man of failure becomes one with failure.
He who becomes one with virtue, the Dao also endows with virtue;
he who becomes one with failure, the Dao also endows with failure.
If one fails to have trust, a corresponding lack of trust in him occurs.

[23c19t] Lin Yutang
IDENTIFICATION WITH TAO
Nature says few words:
Hence it is that a squall lasts not a whole morning,
A rainstorm continues not a whole day.
Where do they come from?
From Nature.
Even Nature does not last long (in its utterances),
How much less should human beings?
Therefore it is that:
He who follows the Tao is identified with the Tao.
He who follows Character (Teh) is identified with Character.
He who abandons (Tao) is identified with abandonment (of Tao).
He who is identified with Tao -
Tao is also glad to welcome him.
He who is identified with Character -
Character is also glad to welcome him.
He who is identified with abandonment -
Abandonment is also glad to welcome him.
He who has not enough faith
Will not be able to command faith from others.

If even heaven and earth cannot cause them to persist, how much less can human beings?
Therefore,

To talk little is to follow nature.
A whirlwind does not last all morning.
A sudden shower does not last all day.
Who produces these things?
Heaven and earth!
Even heaven and earth cannot make wild things last long.
How then can people hope to do so?
People of the Tao conform to the Tao.
People of Virtue conform to Virtue.
People who lose the way
conform to the loss.
Those who conform to the Tao
are welcomed into the Tao.
Those who conform to Virtue are welcomed into Virtue.
Those who conform to the loss are welcomed into the loss.
Those who do not trust enough will not be trusted.

[23c22t] David H. Li
To be reticent is natural.
Thus, a whirlwind does not last all morning,
a downpour does not last all day.
Why is this so?
Because this is the universe.
Even the universe cannot sustain; can humans?
Thus, one who follows Direction manages with Direction,
One who follows virtue manages with virtue,
One who does not follow Direction nor virtue manages with neither Direction nor virtue.
One who manages with Direction is welcome by those with Direction,
One who manages with virtue is welcome by those with virtue,
One who manages with neither Direction nor virtue is welcome by those without Direction or virtue.

[23c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
To be silent is natural, for silence alone endures in Nature.
A whirlwind does not last the whole morning;
Nor does a downpour last the whole day.
Nature cannot make her commotion last;
Nor can human beings make their commotion last.
Therefore, in enduring silence, without commotion,
The master creates harmony with all humanity,
Sharing the experience of the Tao with those who embody the Tao;
Sharing the experience of virtue with those who practice virtue;
Sharing the experience of loss with those who lose virtue.
Thereby, in sharing the experience,
Those who embody the Tao enjoy his company;
Those who practice virtue enjoy his company;
Those who lose virtue enjoy his company.
The master is silent, for he knows the Tao and trusts the universe.
Therefore, be silent, then you will be enduring;
Trust, then you will be trusted.

[23c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
It is natural to be frugal with words.
A gale will not blow for an entire morning;
Pelting rain will not fall for a whole day.
Who causes all those?
Heaven and earth.
If (the fruit of) heaven and earth cannot last forever,
How can man?
The person who follows the Tao,
Is identified with the Tao.
The person who adheres to virtue,
Is identified with virtue.
The person who adheres to vice,
Is identified with vice.
When a person follows the Tao,
The Tao looks kindly upon him.
When the person adheres to virtue,
Virtue welcomes him.
When the person adheres to vice,
Vice opens its door to him.

[23c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
It is a natural thing to talk sparingly.
And surely, this is right - because even a great wind and lashing rain do not go on forever.

And if neither can hold on to such an outpouring for long what makes people think they can?
If you follow the Tao,
all you do will belong to it.
If you act with Virtue,
all you do will have its power.
If you lose these -
then everyway you will be lost.
If you go the Way of Tao, it can only be with you.
If you go the Way of Virtue, its purity will sustain you.
But if you go the way of loss, then that will be your name;
And if you cannot trust, no one will trust you.

[23c26t] Gu Zhengkun
To be taciturn is in accordance with nature,
So much as a wanton wind
Does not last all morning,
And a sudden rain does not last all day.
Who makes it?
Heaven and earth.
If heaven and earth cannot make it last long,
How can man?
So a man of Tao conforms to the Tao;
A man of Teh to the Teh;
A man of having neither to the principle of losing both above.
He who conforms to the Tao is readily received by the Tao;
He who conforms to the Teh is readily received by the Teh;
He who conforms to the principle of losing both above is readily discarded by the principle of loss.
The lack of faith on the part of the ruler
Leads to the lack of confidence in him on the part of the people.

[23c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Nature speaks rarely.
A stormy wind cannot blow for the whole morning, a passing heavy shower cannot fall for the whole day.
Even Heaven and Earth cannot show their sudden power for ever - much less can men.
That is the reason why one who follows the Tao accords the Tao with the Tao, accords the virtue with the virtue,
accords the loss with the loss.
He who accords with the Tao is gladly accepted by the Tao.
He who accords with the virtue is gladly accepted by the virtue.
He who accords with the loss is gladly accepted by the loss.
When there isn't enough faith from he who leads the people, the people who follow him will not have good faith.

A sudden wind cannot last the whole morning.
A sudden rain cannot last the whole day.
Who produces them?
Heaven and Earth.
Since even Heaven and Earth cannot start a lasting cause,
How can mankind achieve that?
Therefore,
Those choosing the Way identify themselves with the Way,
Those choosing uses identify themselves with using,
And those choosing losses identity themselves with losing.
One identified with the Way is gladly provided by the Way.
One identified with using is gladly provided with uses.
One identified with losing suffers from the loss of the Way.
One who does not believe will find one's self not believed.

[23c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Be Less, This Is The Spontaneous Rule
Lao Tze says,
Be less, this is the spontaneous rule.
Hence a gusty wind does not persist through all morning.
A sudden downpour does not persist through a whole day.
Who makes them so?
The Heaven and the Earth.
Even the Heaven and the Earth don't like to perform a long work, what more can be expected from men?
Thus,
Whoever devotes himself to the Tao will know the Tao's essence.
Whoever devotes himself to the Teh will know the Teh's essence.
Whoever devotes to the loss will know the loss's essence.
Whoever matches the Tao's essence will find pleasure in the Tao.
Whoever matches the Teh's essence will find pleasure in the Teh.
Whoever matches the loss will find pleasure in the loss.
Those men who can't believe what I said already have disbelieving hearts.

[23c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
To be sparing of words is natural.
A violent wind cannot last a whole morning; pelting rain cannot last a whole day.
Who have made these things but heaven and earth?
Inasmuch as heaven and earth cannot last for ever, how can man?
He who engages himself in Tao is identified with Tao.
He who engages himself in virtue is identified with virtue.
He who engages himself in abandonment is identified with abandonment.
Identified with Tao he will be well received by Tao.
Identified with virtue he will be well received by virtue.
Identified with abandonment he will be well received by abandonment.

To spare words is to be natural.
Therefore a whirlwind does not last all morning,
And a sudden shower does not last all day.
Who causes this?
Heaven and earth.
If even Heaven and earth cannot last long,
What can man do?
Therefore one dealing with Tao will resemble Tao.
Dealing with virtue, one will resemble virtue.
Dealing with loss, one will resemble loss.
If one resembles Tao, Tao is pleased to accept him.
If one resembles virtue, virtue is pleased to accept him.
If one resembles loss, loss is also pleased to accept him.
By not having enough credibility,
One will not be trusted [by others].

[23c32t] Michael LaFargue
Speaking little is what is natural.
Yes:
A whirlwind does not blow a whole morning,
a downpour does not fall a whole day.
And who causes these things? -
Heaven and Earth.
If even Heaven and Earth cannot make things last very long,
how much less can man.
Yes:
One devoted to Tao:
Is a Tao man, merges with Tao;
is a Te man, merges with Te;
is a man left out, merges with What Is Left Out.
One who merges with Tao, Tao welcomes him;
one who merges with Te, Te welcomes him;
one who merges with What Is Left Out, What Is Left Out welcomes him.
When sincerity does not suffice,
it was not sincerity.

[23c33t] Cheng Lin
Boisterous gales do not continue unabated from morn till eve.
Torrential rainfalls do not continue unabated throughout the day and night.
Who is it that produces these phenomena?
Heaven and earth.
Since these phenomena cannot last for ever, how much less can the work of man!
Those who follow the way of Truth will meet in Truth.
Those who follow the way of virtue will meet in virtue.
Those who follow the way of Heaven will meet in Heaven.
Those who meet in Truth become one with Truth, and they rejoice in it.

Those who meet in virtue become virtuous, and they rejoice in it.
Those who meet in Heaven become heavenly, and they rejoice in it.

[23c34t] Yi Wu
Nature rarely speaks.
So, a whirlwind does not last all morning,
Nor does a sudden shower last the whole day.
Who causes these? Heaven and earth.
If what Heaven and earth do cannot last long,
What can man do?
Therefore, one who follows the Way is in accord with the Way.
One who practices virtue is in accord with virtue.
One who loses is in accord with loss.
To be in accord with the Way is to be accepted gladly by the Way.
To be in accord with virtue is to be accepted gladly by virtue.
To be in accord with loss is to be accepted gladly by loss.
When a man is not sincere enough
He will not be trusted.

[23c35t] Han Hiong Tan
To be reticent is consistent with the law of nature.
Usually the hurricane does not last more than half a day.
And torrential rain does not pour for a whole day.
The wind and rain are the result of the forces of nature.
Even the forces of nature do not endure for long,
So how can human efforts ever match that of nature?
Those devoted to Dao will follow Dao, and those devoted to De will follow De.
On the contrary, those who go against Dao will manifest it in their behaviours.
Following the path of Dao, Dao is glad to accept you.
Following the path of De, De is pleased to welcome you.
Following the alternative path, the alternative entity is also happy to receive you.
If the people in power have no credibility, then the ordinary people will not trust them.

[23c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The utterance of the universal subtle law is too loud to be audible.
Look at this: a squall does not last the whole morning, nor does a torrential shower last the whole day.
What determines this?
Even Nature cannot make such violence last for long.
How long, then, can the violent actions of human beings last?
Hence, one who follows gentleness becomes one with universal truth.
One who follows wholeness becomes one with universal virtue.
One who separates himself from universal nature and from universal virtue becomes separate and lost.
When one is one with universal nature, universal nature is one with him.
When one is one with universal virtue, universal virtue is one with him.

When one deviates from universal nature,
deviation keeps him from universal nature.
If one does not know and believe that the subtle law manifests in his own life, how can he have faith that it pervades the entire universe?

[23c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Nature rarely expresses itself in words.
When a hurricane occurs, it does not last all morning.
Neither does a heavy shower last the whole day.
These are actions of heaven and earth.
Thus, even heaven and earth cannot maintain their actions for long.
How can man?
Therefore, the learner of Tao identifies with Tao.
When one achieves it, one identifies with one's achievement.
When one loses it, one identifies with one's losing.
When man identifies with achievement, achievement also willingly identifies with man.
When man identifies with losing, losing willingly identifies with man.
If one does not believe enough in this identity, then it will not take place.

[23c38t] Henry Wei
Emptiness and Non-Being
Hsu Wu
Nature is brief in its speech.
Thus a tempest does not last a whole morning,
Nor does a rainstorm last a whole day.
What is it that causes the wind and rain?
It is Heaven and Earth.
Even Heaven and Earth cannot be long in their outbursts.
How much the less can man in his!
Therefore, in the pursuit of Tao,
Those tending toward Tao will identify with Tao;
Those tending toward virtue will identify with virtue;
Those tending toward failure will identify with failure.
To those identified with Tao,
Tao will gladly extend welcome;
To those identified with virtue,
Virtue will gladly extend welcome;
To those identified with failure,
Failure will gladly extend welcome.
When one's own faith is inadequate,
It will not evoke faith from other people.

[23c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Tzu-jan rarely speaks.
Therefore no windstorm lasts all morning;
No rainstorm lasts all day.

Who causes these things?
Heaven and Earth.
If even Heaven and Earth can cause nothing to last forever,
How could man?
Therefore those who follow Tao
Are one with Tao.
Those who attain Te are one with Te;
Those who lose [Te] are one with the loss.
When a man is one with Tao,
Tao also rejoices at gaining him;
When a man is one with Te,
Te also rejoices at gaining him;
When a man is one with the loss,
The loss also rejoices at gaining him.
When you don't trust others,
They will not trust you.

[23c40t] Tao Huang
Natural speech consists of few words.
Gusty winds do not last all morning,
Cloudbursts do not last all day.
What makes this so?
Heaven and earth will not last forever,
How could a human being last!
So the person who works according to Tao unites with Tao.
In the same way he unites with action.
In the same way he unites with loss.
Uniting with action, the Tao becomes action.
Uniting with loss, the Tao becomes loss.

[23c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Let us observe nature:
A heavy rain can hardly outlast the morning;
a violent hurricane can hardly outlast the day.
Who is responsible for this?
The Heaven and the earth - the Nature.
If the Heaven and the earth however can not make things great and lasting, how could a man expect to do even more?
Thus one who practices Dao is in accord with Dao.
One who is in accord with virtues thus attains virtues.
One who is not in accord with Dao loses Dao.
One who is not in accord with virtues loses virtues.
Truth alone is not enough, nevertheless some truth is not true.

[23c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Nature says few words.

For the same reason a whirlwind does not last a whole morning.
Nor does a rainstorm last a whole day.
What causes them?
It is Heaven and Earth (Nature).
If even Heaven and Earth cannot make them last long,
How much less can man?
Therefore he who follows Tao is identified with Tao.
He who follows virtue is identified with virtue.
He who abandons (Tao) is identified with the abandonment (of Tao).
He who is identified with Tao - Tao is also happy to have him.
He who is identified with virtue - virtue is also happy to have him.
And he who is identified with the abandonment (of Tao) - the abandonment (of Tao) is also happy to abandon him.
It is only when one does not have enough faith in others that others will have no faith in him.

[23c91t] И. И. Семененко
То слово самостно, что редко.
Поэтому-то вихрь не буйствует все утро, ливень не хлещет целый день.
Кто это делает?
Небо и Земля.
Коль даже Небо и Земля ничего не в силах делать вечно, то человек тем паче.
Поэтому и предаются Дао.
У кого Дао, тот ему тождествен;
добродетельный тождествен добродетели,
утративший тождествен утрате.
Кто отождествляет себя с Дао, того Дао тоже обретает с радостью;
кто отождествляет себя с добродетелью, того добродетель тоже обретает с радостью;
кто делает себя тождественным утрате, того утрата тоже обретает с радостью.
Кто не способен доверять другим, тому не доверяют.

[23c92t] А. А. Маслов
Редко пользоваться словами - значит следовать естественности.
Поэтому резкий ветер не может длиться всё утро, а проливной дождь не может хлестать весь день.
Кто делает всё это? Небо и Земля.
Если даже Небо и Земля не могут сделать что-то вечным, так что же требовать от человека?!
Поэтому он действует через Дао.
Действующий через Дао тождественен с Дао.
Обретший Благость тождественен с Благостью.
Утрачивающий тождественен с утратой.
Тождественный с Дао - радостно принимается Дао,
Тождественный с Благостью - радостно принимается Благостью.
Тождественный с утратой - радостно принимается утратой.
Тот, в ком недостаточно искренности, встретится с неискренностью.

[23c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Тот, кто мало говорит, естественности следует.

Ураган не свирепствует целое утро, ливень не льет весь день напролет.
Кто сделал так?
Небо и Земля.
Уж если Небо и Земля не могут сделать долговечным то, что ими же самими порождено, то что уж говорить о человеке!
Поэтому те люди, что все свои дела отдали Дао, - едины с Дао!
Те, что отдали все Благу-Дэ, - едины с Благом-Дэ!
Но те, кто посвятили все лишь гибели, - те с гибелью едины!
Когда некто един с Дао, Дао само радуется, обретя его.
Когда некто един с Благом, Благо тоже радуется, обретя его.
Когда некто един с гибелью, гибель тоже радуется, обретя его.
Когда человек не верен слову, то ему не станут верить!

[23c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Примолкни и следуй естественности.
Ведь порывистый ветер не дует все утро, ливневый дождь не льет весь день.
Тот, кто посылает их, - Небо и Земля.
Но Небо и Земля и те не могут делать это вечно, так куда уж человеку равняться с ними.
Вот почему:
тот, кто ведет дела в соответствии с Дао, тождествен Дао.
[Тот, кто ведет дела в соответствии] с Дэ, тождествен Дэ.
[Тот, кто ведет дела в соответствии] с утратой, тождествен утрате.
Того, кто тождествен Дао, Дао с радостью принимает его.
Того, кто тождествен Дэ, Дэ с радостью принимает его.
Того, кто тождествен утрате, утрата с радостью принимает его.
"Недоверие питает неверие".

[23c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Нужно меньше говорить, следовать естественности.
Быстрый ветер не продолжается все утро, сильный дождь не продержится весь день.
Кто делает все это?
Небо и земля.
Даже небо и земля не могут сделать что-либо долговечным, тем более человек.
Поэтому он служит дао.
Кто [служит] дао, тот тождествен дао.
Кто [служит] дэ, тот тождествен дэ.
Тот, кто теряет, тождествен потере.
Тот, кто тождествен дао, приобретает дао.
Тот, кто тождествен дэ, приобретает дэ.
Тот, кто тождествен потере, приобретает потерянное.
Только сомнения порождают неверие.

[23c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Редкие слова заключают в себе самые достоверные мысли.
Редкие изречения сами собою правдивы.
Утренний сильный ветер не продолжается до полудня; сильный дождь не продолжается целый день.

Ни небо, ни земля вечно существовать не могут.
Тем более человек.
Живущий и поступающий по Тао равен ему;
нравственный человек равен добродетели;
потерявший все равен потере.
Тао любит находить равное себе;
нравственный - равное себе;
потерявший - также равное себе.
Где вера слаба, там не будет веры.

[23c97t] В. В. Малявин
Неслышное веление - то, что таково само собой.
Сильный ветер не продержится все утро.
Внезапный ливень не продержится весь день.
Кто создает их? Небо и Земля.
Даже Небу и Земле не сотворить ничего долговечного,
Тем менее это доступно человеку!
Посему тот, кто предан Пути, един с Путем.
Тот, кто предан совершенству, един с Совершенством.
А тот, кто предан утрате, един с утратой.
Того, кто един с Путем, Путь тоже принимает.
Тому, кто един с Совершенством, Путь дает Совершенство,
А того, кто един с утратой, Путь тоже теряет.
Лишь тому, кто недостаточно доверяет другим,
Тоже не будет доверия.

[23c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Разреженность в словах - это самопроизвольная естественность.
Ураганный ветер не длится все утро.
Проливной дождь не идет до конца дня.
Кто осуществляет это?
Небо-Земля.
Даже Небо-Земля не способны сделать их долгими.
Что уж тут сравнивать с человеком?
Причинность:
Если в ситуациях действуешь, исходя из Пути, тогда отождествляешься с Путем.
Если действуешь, исходя из Потенции, тогда отождествляешься с Потенцией.
Если действуешь, исходя из потери, тогда отождествляешься с потерей.
Когда отождествляешься с Путем, тогда и Путь, радуется, обретая тебя.
Когда отождествляешься с Потенцией, тогда и Потенция радуется, обретая тебя.
Когда отождествляешься с потерей, тогда и потеря радуется, обретая тебя.
Если в тебе недостаточно веры, то бытие не верит в тебя.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Four

363/2593

[24c01t] Robert G. Henricks
One who boasts is not established;
One who shows himself off does not become prominent;
One who puts himself on display does not brightly shine;
One who brags about himself gets no credit;
One who praises himself does not long endure.
In the Way, such things are called:
"Surplus food and redundant action."
And with things - there are those who hate them.
Therefore, the one with the Way in them does not dwell.

[24c02t] John C. H. Wu
ONE on tip-toe cannot stand.
One astride cannot walk.
One who displays himself does not shine.
One who justifies himself has no glory.
One who boasts of his own ability has no merit.
One who parades his own success will not endure.
In Tao these things are called "unwanted food and extraneous growths,"
Which are loathed by all things.
Hence, a man of Tao does not set his heart upon them.

[24c03t] D. C. Lau
He who tiptoes cannot stand; he who strides cannot walk.
He who shows himself is not conspicuous;
He who considers himself right is not illustrious;
He who brags will have no merit;
He who boasts will not endure.
From the point of view of the way these are 'excessive food and useless excrescences'.
As there are Things that detest them, he who has the way does not abide in them.

[24c04t] R. L. Wing
Those who are on tiptoe cannot stand firm.
Those who straddle cannot walk.
Those who display themselves cannot illuminate.
Those who define themselves cannot be distinguished.
Those who make claims can have no credit.
Those who boast cannot advance.
To those who stay with the Tao,
These are like excess food and redundant actions
And are contrary to Natural Law.
Thus those who possess the Tao turn away.

[24c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who wants to stand higher on tiptoe is not steady;
He who wants to double his step is unable to hasten;
He who only rests on his own eyes cannot see clearly;
He who considers himself always in the right cannot tell right from wrong;
He who boasts himself will be given no credit;
He who considers himself superior is not qualified for leadership.
From the point of Tao, (all these) are nothing but remnants of food and tumours of action, which all creatures detest.
Therefore those who possess Tao will stay away from them.

[24c06t] Gia-fu Feng
He who stands on tiptoe is not steady.
He who strides cannot maintain the pace.
He who makes a show is not enlightened.
He who is self-righteous is not respected.
He who boasts achieves nothing.
He who brags will not endure.
According to followers of the Tao, "These are extra food and unnecessary luggage."
They do not bring happiness.
Therefore followers of the Tao avoid them.

[24c07t] Lok Sang Ho
He who stands on tip-toe cannot really stand.
He who takes big strides cannot really walk.
He who sees only through his own point of view cannot see clearly.
He who thinks he is always right will not see the truth.
He who boasts of his own achievements will achieve nothing,
He who is self-contented will not grow.
Such people to the Dao are like those who eat too much or do too much,
They will be fed up with what they eat or what they do.
Hence those who follow the Dao will not fall into the "too much" mode.

[24c08t] Xiaolin Yang
You cannot stand firm by standing on tiptoes.
You cannot go far by taking big steps.
If you are stubborn, you cannot know the right and the wrong.
If you are narrow-minded, no one will accept your opinions.
If you show off, no one will recognize your accomplishments.
If you are conceited, you will not be able to lead the people.
Speaking in terms of the DAO, these are useless extras that are very annoying.
Therefore, one who practices the DAO never behaves like this.

[24c09t] Walter Gorn Old, UNDESIRABLE HONOURS
By standing on tiptoe one cannot keep still.

Astride of one's fellow one cannot progress.
By displaying oneself one does not shine.
By self-approbation one is not esteemed.
In self-praise there is no merit.
He who exalts himself does not stand high.
Such things are to Tao what refuse and excreta are to the body.
They are everywhere detested.
Therefore the man of Tao will not abide with them.

[24c10t] James Legge
He who stands on his tiptoes does not stand firm;
he who stretches his legs does not walk (easily).
(So), he who displays himself does not shine;
he who asserts his own views is not distinguished;
he who vaunts himself does not find his merit acknowledged;
he who is self-conceited has no superiority allowed to him.
Such conditions, viewed from the standpoint of the Tao, are like remnants of food, or a tumour on the body, which all dislike.
Hence those who pursue (the course) of the Tao do not adopt and allow them.

[24c11t] David Hinton
Stretch onto tiptoes and you never stand firm.
Hurry long strides and you never travel far.
Keep up self-reflection
and you'll never be enlightened.
Keep up self-definition
and you'll never be apparent.
Keep up self-promotion
and you'll never be proverbial.
Keep up self-esteem
and you'll never be perennial.
Travelers of the Way call such striving too much food and useless baggage.
Things may not all despise such striving, but a master of the Way stays clear of it.

[24c12t] Chichung Huang
He who boasts cannot stand;
He who looks at himself is not illustrious;
He who parades himself is not clear-sighted;
He who brags about himself has no merit;
He who is conceited does not last long.
These, according to the Tao, are Leftover food and improper deeds
Which people all loathe.
Therefore, he who possesses the Tao
Does not accumulate.

One who tiptoes cannot stand.
One who straddles cannot walk.
One who sees himself is not enlightened (ming).
One who justifies himself is not outstanding.
One who shows off (fa) his deeds is not meritorious.
One who boasts (ching) of himself does not lead (chang).
These to a Taoist are called:
Excess nature (yü te) and superfluous actions (shui hsing),
Avoided (o) even by things.
Therefore the Taoist does not indulge (ch'u) in them.

[24c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A person who tiptoes will not be able to stand [steadily after a short while];
A person who bestrides will not [be able to] walk [a long distance in the same manner];
[Therefore:]
A person who is self-opinionated is not [truly] brilliant;
A person who is self-righteous is not [truly] outstanding;
A person who is self-conceited is not [truly] superior.
One of the old-timers on the trail of Tao said:
"[Even] Animals dislike over-eating and [carrying out] the excessive physical activities which serve no [significant] purpose."
Therefore one who pursues Tao would not commit himself [to any kind of excessiveness] either.

[24c15t] Tien Cong Tran
One on tip-toe cannot stand.
One astride cannot walk.
One who displays himself does not shine.
One who justifies himself has no glory.
One who boasts of his own work has no merit.
One who is proud of himself will not endure.
From the point of view of the Way, these things are called "unwanted food and extraneous growths," which are loathed by all things.
Hence, a man of the Way does not set his heart upon them.

[24c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
On tiptoes, one cannot stand steadily.
Astride, one cannot walk ahead.
Those who brag about themselves cannot be held in great respect.
Those who assume they are always right cannot be outstanding.
Those who go to the extreme cannot achieve goals.
Those who are vainglorious cannot keep making progress.
This is Tao.
Those behaviors, like leftover food or an overweight person, are unattractive to everyone.
Thus Tao followers avoid them.

[24c17t] Arthur Waley
'He who stands on tip-toe, does not stand firm;
He who takes the longest strides, does not walk the fastest.'
He who does his own looking sees little,
He who defines himself is not therefore distinct.
He who boasts of what he will do succeeds in nothing;
He who is proud of his work, achieves nothing that endures.
Of these, from the standpoint of the Way, it is said:
'Pass round superfluous dishes to those that have already had enough,
And no creature but will reject them in disgust.'
That is why he that possesses Tao does not linger.

[24c18t] Richard John Lynn
One up on tiptoes does not stand firm.
One who takes big strides does not move.
One who flaunts himself does not shine.
One who insists that he is right is not commended.
One who boasts about himself has no acknowledged merit.
One filled with self-importance does not last long.
In respect to the Dao, we can say about such behavior, too much food is an excrescence making the rounds.
The people always hate this, so one who has the Dao has nothing to do with it.

[24c19t] Lin Yutang
THE DREGS AND TUMORS OF VIRTUE
He who stands on tiptoe does not stand (firm);
He who strains his strides does not walk (well);
He who reveals himself is not luminous;
He who justifies himself is not far-famed;
He who boasts of himself is not given credit;
He who prides himself is not chief among men.
These in the eyes of Tao
Are called "the dregs and tumors of Virtue,"
Which are things of disgust.
Therefore the man of Tao spurns them.

[24c20t] Victor H. Mair
Who is puffed up cannot stand,
Who is self-absorbed has no distinction,
Who is self-revealing does not shine,
Who is self-assertive has no merit,
Who is self-praising does not last long.
As for the Way, we may say these are "excess provisions and extra baggage."
Creation abhors such extravagances.
Therefore,
One who aspires to the Way, does not abide in them.

[24c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The person on tiptoe is not steady.
The person with legs astride cannot walk.
Those who look only at themselves see little.
Those who justify themselves are not distinguished.
Those who brag have no merit.
The work of prideful people will not endure.
From the standpoint of the Tao,
these things are "excessive food and tumors of the body."
As they bring sickness,
followers of the Tao do not linger around them.

[24c22t] David H. Li
One who tiptoes to stand taller does not stand firm;
One who strides to walk faster does not walk long;
One who self-touts does not shine;
One who self-justifies does not reassure;
One who self-aggrandizes does not accomplish;
One who self-serves does not endure.
They, in relation to Direction, are the equivalent of leftover food and excess fat.
They are unattractive;
they are not held by those with Direction.

[24c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
A man who tiptoes cannot stand.
A man who straddles cannot walk.
A man who flaunts himself cannot shine.
A man who is self-righteous is not respected.
A man who is self-boasting is not acknowledged.
A man who is self-conceited is not promoted.
From the viewpoint of the Tao,
These behaviors are like excess food and excrescent flesh.
Creation abhors such imbalance,
And thus the man of the Tao does not abide in them.

[24c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
A person who stands on tiptoe cannot stand firmly on his feet.
A person who spreads his legs cannot walk steadily.
A person who displays himself cannot shine (like a star in the sky).
A person who praises himself will not be praised by others.
A person who glorifies himself will not be famous.
A person who makes himself mighty cannot excel.
All these, in comparison to the Tao, are called:
"A surfeit of food and an excess of action."
They will be tiresome to everyone in other things, too.
Therefore, the man of Tao is not found in their company.

All these are examples of living in a way that goes against nature.

[24c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
A man on tiptoe can't walk easily.
The man who strides on ahead is bound to tire.
The kind of person who always insists on his way of seeing things can never learn anything from anyone.
Those who always want to be seen will never help others to be.
The showman is never secretly respected by anyone.
People like these, say the Wise Ones are as useless as the left-over food at a feast:
No true follower can relate to them.

[24c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who stands on tiptoes cannot stand well;
He who walks with great strides cannot walk well;
He who shows off himself cannot become conspicuous;
He who regards himself infallible cannot become illustrious;
He who brags about himself cannot gain achievement;
He who boasts of himself cannot become a head.
From the point of view of the Tao,
These behaviours are like leftover food and superfluous excrescence,
So disgusting that a man of Tao
Never behaves like that.

[24c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
He who tiptoes cannot stand.
He who strides cannot walk.
He who sees only himself is not enlightened.
He who is self-righteous is not notable.
He who boasts about himself will have no merit.
He who praises himself will have no improvement.
The way he takes the Tao, as if eating with a full stomach and moving with excess baggage, will be disliked.
Therefore he who follows the Tao will not abide this.

[24c28t] Liu Qixuan
A long stander would not stand on tiptoe.
A far walker would not walk with long strides.
A wise observer would not observe self-preoccupations.
A true celebrity would not brag about self.
A successful doer would not show off his/her deeds.
A good ruler would not look superior to others.
It is the Way that is enabling and disabling.
Eating too much will result in obesity in form,
Which is avoided even by the public,
And is therefore not preferred by Way servers.

Those Which Are Against The Tao
Lao Tze says,
He who stands on tiptoe can't persist long.
He who walks by striding can't go far.
He who sees everything in his eyes can never be shrewd.
He who claims self-righteousness will never be exalted by others.
He who steals others' feats for himself is a worthless person.
He who boasts of his merit can't enjoy a long life.
Viewed from the Tao's standpoint, these men are like remains of a meal, or a tumor on the body, which no one would like.
Hence, a Tao-practician should not become one of them.

[24c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
A man on tiptoe cannot stand firm;
A man astride cannot walk on;
A man who displays himself cannot shine;
A man who approves himself cannot be noted;
A man who praises himself cannot have merit;
A man who glories in himself cannot excel:
These, when compared with Tao, are called:
'Excess in food and overdoing in action.'
Even in other things, mostly, they are rejected;
Therefore the man of Tao does not stay with them.

[24c31t] Paul J. Lin
Those who rise on tiptoe cannot stand.
Those who stride cannot walk.
Those who hold to their views cannot be enlightened.
Those who are self-righteous cannot shine.
Those who boast cannot receive credit.
Those who are arrogant cannot last long.
In the light of Tao, they are like left-over food and burdensome wens,
Even despised by all creatures.
So those with Tao do not want to stay with them.

[24c32t] Michael LaFargue
"A person on tiptoe is not firmly planted, a person in a rush will not go far."
One who shows off will not shine, one who promotes himself won't become famous,
one who boasts of himself will get no credit,
one who glorifies himself will not become leader.
In Tao, this is called 'stuffing oneself', 'overdoing it'.
Things seem to detest this,
so the ambitious man does not dwell here.

[24c33t] Cheng Lin
Those who raise themselves on tiptoe cannot stand firm;
those who walk with long steps cannot travel far.
Those who are self-complacent are not enlightened.
Those who are self-important are not illustrious.
Those who are self-conceited are not successful.
Those who are self-assertive are not supreme.
Those who abide by Truth say:
"When one has a surplus of food and an excess of clothing, he causes envy in other men.
Therefore, the followers of Truth eschew these."

[24c34t] Yi Wu
One who is on tiptoe cannot stand.
One who strides cannot walk.
One who is self-opinionated is not enlightened.
One who is self-righteous is not brightened.
One who is self-glorified is without merit.
One who is self-satisfied cannot develop.
To the Way, all of them are known as "Unwanted food and useless actions."
They may be despised by all things;
Therefore, one who practices the Way does not dwell on them.

[24c35t] Han Hiong Tan
He who stands tiptoed will soon fall over.
He who walks with huge strides will not go very far.
By trying to show off, you will not be eminent.
By acting like a know-all, you will not be distinguished.
If you brag about your success, you will end up with no credit.
If you are conceited, you will not make any further advancement.
From the perspective of Dao,
Even animals will find all extravagant deeds disgusting.
He who follows the path of Dao does not subscribe to these actions.

[24c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One who stands on tiptoe cannot stand firmly.
One who strides cannot walk far.
One who flaunts himself is not illumined.
One who insists that he is right is self-righteous.
One who boasts of his accomplishments undoes his merit.
One who takes pride in himself impedes his own growth.
These things are normally detested by people who nurture virtue and the truthfulness of life, for they do not set their eyes and hearts upon anything that is equal to "the greed for excessive food which fosters morbid growth."
Thus, such things are not agreeable to them.

To lift the heel is not to stand.
To take long strides is not to walk.
To show off is not to shine.
To insist that one is right is not to be distinct.
To claim credit is to have no credit.
To be proud of oneself is not to be the best.
From the point of view of Tao, all of these are extras which things themselves do not like.
Therefore, the man of Tao does not abide with them.

Bitter Favors
K'u En
He who stands on tip-toe will totter;
He who takes long strides is a poor walker.
He who likes to show off is not enlightened;
He who is prone to be self-righteous is not distinguished;
He who blows his own horn will acquire no merit;
He who extols himself is not fit to be a leader.
From the standpoint of Tao, it can be said:
"Eating excessive food or to walk with a burden
May be disgusting to creatures."
People possessed of Tao, therefore, reject them.

[24c39t] Ha Poong Kim
He who tiptoes cannot remain standing;
He who strides cannot travel;
He who shows himself has no bright presence;
He who claims to be right does not shine;

Such things may be called excess food and superfluous action.
Creatures abhor them.
Therefore the man of Tao stays away from them.

[24c40t] Tao Huang
Those who boast of themselves lose their stance.
He who displays himself is not seen.
He who justifies himself is not understood.

It results in disgust.
Those who desire will not endure.

Кичащийся собой не имеет заслуг.
Заносчивому не стать властителем.

Оставляющий отчетливые следы далеко не уйдет.
Поглощенный сам собой не станет умудренно-просветленным,
Превозносящий сам себя не будет подлинно прославлен,
Нападающему на всех не дано свершить великий подвиг,
Самовосхваляющийся не станет долговечным.
Ну а для Дао это все - протухшая еда и тягостная ноша.
Все сущее такие нравы ненавидит.
Поэтому обретший Дао-Путь так не живет.

[24c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Вставший на цыпочки не устоит прямо.
Сдвинувший ноги не тронется с места.
Кто выставляет себя эрудитом, не просветлен.
Кто считает себя правым, не просвещен.
Кто прославляет себя, не доблестен.
Кто восхваляет себя, не главенствует.
Все это, с позиции Дао, зовется избытком достатка и поведением раба.
Всяк ненавидит таких.
Поэтому тот, кто обладает Дао, с такими рядом не живет.

[24c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Кто поднялся на цыпочки, не может [долго] стоять.
Кто делает большие шаги, не может [долго] идти.
Кто сам себя выставляет на свет, тот не блестит.
Кто сам себя восхваляет, тот не добудет славы.
Кто нападает, не достигает успеха.
Кто сам себя возвышает, не может стать старшим среди других.
Если исходить из дао, все это называется лишним желанием и бесполезным поведением.
Таких ненавидят все существа.
Поэтому человек, обладающий дао, не делает этого.

[24c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Сухоногий не может встать.
Сидящий не может ходить.
Кто думает, что постиг все, тот ничего не знает.
Кто доволен самим собою, тот не может прославиться.
Кто хвастается, тот не может иметь заслуги.
Кто горд, тот не может возвыситься.
Такие люди, с точки зрения Тао, называются питающимися излишеством и творящими напрасное.
Поэтому когда они находят Тао, то оставаться в нем решительно не могут.

[24c97t] В. В. Малявин
Кто встал на цыпочки, долго не простоит.
Кто широко шагает, далеко не уйдет.
Кто имеет свой взгляд, немного сможет понять.
Кто имеет свою правду, немногих сможет убедить.

Кто рвется вперед, славы не стяжает.
Кто радеет за себя, долго не проживет.
Для Пути это только "лишнее угощение, напрасное хождение".
Для людей это только повод для ненависти.
Посему претворяющий Путь так не поступает.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Five

376/2593

[25c01t] Robert G. Henricks

There was something formed out of chaos,
That was born before Heaven and Earth.
Quiet and still! Pure and deep!
It stands on its own and doesn't change.
It can be regarded as the mother of Heaven and Earth.
I do not yet know its name:
I "style" it "the Way."
Were I forced to give it a name, I would call it "the Great."
"Great" means "to depart";
"To depart" means "to be far away";
And "to be far away" means "to return."
The Way is great;
Heaven is great;
Earth is great;
And the king is also great.
In the country there are four greats, and the king occupies one place among them.
Man models himself on the Earth;
The Earth models itself on Heaven;
Heaven models itself on the Way;
And the Way models itself on that which is so on its own.

[25c02t] John C. H. Wu

THERE was Something undefined and yet complete in itself,
Born before Heaven-and-Earth.
Silent and boundless,
Standing alone without change,
Yet pervading all without fail,
It may be regarded as the Mother of the world.
I do not know its name;
I style it "Tao";
And, in the absence of a better word, call it "The Great."
To be great is to go on,
To go on is to be far,
To be far is to return.
Hence, "Tao is great,
Heaven is great,
Earth is great,
King is great."
Thus, the king is one of the great four in the Universe.
Man follows the ways of the Earth.
The Earth follows the ways of Heaven,

Heaven follows the ways of Tao,
Tao follows its own ways.

[25c03t] D. C. Lau
There is a thing confusedly formed,
Born before heaven and earth.
Silent and void
It stands alone and does not change,
Goes round and does not weary.
It is capable of being the mother of the world.
I know not its name
So I style it 'the way'.
I give it the makeshift name of 'the great'.
Being great, it is further described as receding,
Receding, it is described as far away,
Being far away, it is described as turning back.
Hence the way is great;
Heaven is great;
Earth is great;
And the king is also great.
Within the realm there are four things that are great,
And the king counts as one.
Man models himself on earth,
Earth on heaven,
Heaven on the way,
And the way on that which is naturally so.

[25c04t] R. L. Wing
There was something in a state of fusion Before Heaven and Earth were born.
Silent, vast, Independent, and unchanging; Working everywhere, tirelessly;
It can be regarded as Mother of the world.
I do not know its name;
The word I say is Tao.
Forced to give it a name,
I say Great.
Great means continuing.
Continuing means going far.
Going far means returning.
Therefore the Tao is Great.
Heaven and Earth are Great.
A leader is likewise Great.
In the universe there are four Greatnesses,
And leadership is one of them.
Humans are modeled on the earth.
The earth is modeled on heaven.
Heaven is modeled on the Tao.

The Tao is modeled on nature.

[25c05t] Ren Jiyu

There was something undifferentiated and yet complete, which existed before Heaven and Earth.
Soundless and formless, it depends upon nothing external, operating in a circular motion ceaselessly.
It may be considered the root (Mother) of all beings under Heaven.
I don't know its name,
And call it Tao.
Inadequately giving it another name, I call it the Great.
The Great moves on,
The moving-on becomes remote,
The remote returns to the original point.
Therefore Tao is great,
Heaven is great,
Earth is great,
And Man is also great.
There are four great things in the universe,
And Man is one of them.
Man follows the way of Earth,
Earth follows the way of Heaven,
Heaven follows the way of Tao,
Tao follows the way of itself.

[25c06t] Gia-fu Feng

Something mysteriously formed,
Born before heaven and earth.
In the silence and the void,
Standing alone and unchanging,
Ever present and in motion.
Perhaps it is the mother of ten thousand things.
I do not know its name.
Call it Tao.
For lack of a better word, I call it great.
Being great, it flows.
It flows far away.
Having gone far, it returns.
Therefore, "Tao is great;
Heaven is great;
Earth is great;
The king is also great."
These are the four great powers of the universe,
And the king is one of them.
Man follows earth.
Earth follows heaven.
Heaven follows the Tao.
Tao follows what is natural.

[25c07t] Lok Sang Ho
In the beginning, before the formation of heaven and earth,
Something had already existed amid the confusion.
This lonely existence was totally independent of anything else,
And it would not change,
It only moved in its own way tirelessly.
Only it could have been the mother of heaven and earth.
I do not know its name,
I would just call it "the Dao."
I could also call it "the great something."
This great something has now about disappeared from the world as we know it.
It has been getting more and more remote from us.
It has become more and more contrary from the world as we know it.
The Dao is great,
Heaven is great,
Earth is great,
The man who knows the Dao (the Way) is great.
In the domain we know there are four "greats."
The man who knows the Dao is one of them.
The great man emulates the great Earth.
The great earth emulates the great Heaven,
The great heaven emulates the great Dao.
The great Dao emulates the great Nature.

[25c08t] Xiaolin Yang
It started in chaos, before the heavens and the earth existed.
It makes no sound and has no shape,
But it is independent and never changes.
It is always functioning and never stops,
So it can be the root of the world.
I do not know its name, so I name it the DAO,
And I will also call it the BIG.
BIG means broad, broad means far-reaching,
Far-reaching means everywhere.
Therefore, the DAO is BIG, the heavens is BIG,
The earth is BIG, and people are BIG, too.
The universe has four BIGs, and people are only one of them.
People follow the earth, the earth follows the heavens,
The heavens follows the DAO, and the DAO follows nature.

[25c09t] Walter Gorn Old, APPREHENDING THE VOID
Before Heaven and Earth existed there was in Nature a primordial substance.
It was serene, it was fathomless.
It was self-existent, it was homogeneous.
It was omnipresent, nor suffered any limitation.

It is to be regarded as the universal mother.
I do not know its name, but I call it Tao.
If forced to qualify it, I call it the boundless.
Being boundless, I call it the inconceivable.
Being inscrutable, I call it the inaccessible.
Being inaccessible, I call it the omnipresent.
Tao is supreme, Heaven is supreme, Earth is supreme, the King is supreme.
There are in the universe four kinds of supremacy, and their rulership is one.
Man is ruled by the Earth, the Earth is ruled by Heaven, Heaven is ruled by Tao, and Tao is ruled by itself.

[25c10t] James Legge
There was something undefined and complete, coming into existence before Heaven and Earth.
How still it was and formless, standing alone, and undergoing no change, reaching everywhere and in no danger (of being exhausted)!
It may be regarded as the Mother of all things.
I do not know its name, and I give it the designation of the Tao (the Way or Course).
Making an effort (further) to give it a name I call it The Great.
Great, it passes on (in constant flow).
Passing on, it becomes remote.
Having become remote, it returns.
Therefore the Tao is great;
Heaven is great;
Earth is great;
and the (sage) king is also great.
In the universe there are four that are great, and the (sage) king is one of them.
Man takes his law from the Earth;
the Earth takes its law from Heaven;
Heaven takes its law from the Tao.
The law of the Tao is its being what it is.

[25c11t] David Hinton
There was something all murky shadow, born before heaven and earth:
o such utter silence, utter emptiness.
Isolate and changeless,
it moves everywhere without fail:
picture the mother of all beneath heaven.
I don't know its name.
I'll call it Way,
and if I must name it, name it Vast.
Vast means it's passing beyond,
passing beyond means it's gone far away,
and gone far away means it's come back.
Because Way is vast heaven is vast,
earth is vast,
and the true emperor too is vast.

In this realm, there are four vast things,
and the true emperor is one of them.
Human abides by earth.
Earth abides by heaven.
Heaven abides by Way.
Way abides by occurrence appearing of itself.

There was something
That into an indistinguishable mass had wrought itself,
Born before heaven and earth.
Desolate and formless,
It stood alone, unchanging,
And may be regarded as
The mother of heaven and earth.
Not knowing its name,
I gave it the alias "Tao,"
And reluctantly named it "vast."
Vast and moving;
Moving and far-reaching;
Far-reaching and reverting.
The Tao is vast;
Heaven is vast;
Earth is vast;
The king is also vast.
In the empire, there are four vasts,
And the king constitutes one.
Man imitates earth;
Earth imitates heaven;
Heaven imitates the Tao;
The Tao imitates the way things are.

There was something nebulous existing (yu wu hun ch'eng),
Born before heaven and earth.
Silent, empty,
Standing alone (tu), altering not (pu kai),
Moving cyclically without becoming exhausted (pu tai),
Which may be called the mother of all under heaven.
I know not its name,
I give its alias (tzu), Tao.
If forced to picture it,
I say it is "great" (ta).
To say it is "great" is to say it is "moving away" (shih),
To say it is "moving away" is to say it is "far away" (yüan),
To say it is "far away" is to say it is "returning" (fan).

Therefore Tao is great,
Heaven is great,
Earth is great,

Humans follow (fa) earth,

Heaven follows Tao,

Prior to the coming-into-being of Heaven-Earth, there was the existence of something that was [highly and immensely] commixed;
It was completely silent and void;
It was self-contained and unalterable;
It rotated sweepingly and ceaselessly;
Perhaps it was the Mother (origin) of the world.
I do not know how to describe it;
I use the character "Tao" to name it and describe it perforce as "great" (big);
"Great" means that it had spreaded out so vastly that it disappeared in somewhere beyond our observation;
It is described as "moving away towards the beyond" because wherever it went to was immeasurably remote;
It is depicted as remote means [that after it completes its course] it will move back to us.
Accordingly:
Tao is great;
Universe (Heaven) is great;
Earth is great;
Kingliness (authentic) is also great;
There are four greatness within the realm we are confined to, and [authentic] kingliness is one of them!
Human beings live by the Laws of Earth (world);
The Laws of Earth (world) subordinates to the Laws of Universe;
Universe is governed by the maxims of Tao;
Tao, per se, is self-subsistent and self-contained.

There was something chaotic and yet complete in itself, born before Heaven and Earth.
Silent and empty, standing alone and unchanging, pervading everywhere and inexhaustible, it may be regarded as the mother of the world.
I do not know its name, so I simply call it "the Way".
I reluctantly call it "the great."
To be great is to go on.
To go on is to go far.
To go far is to return.
Hence, "The Way is great. Heaven is great. Earth is great. Man is great." Thus, man is one of the great four in the universe.
Man follows Earth, Earth follows Heaven, Heaven follows the Way, the Way follows Nature.

There had been a chaotic object before the universe was born.
It is quiet and intangible.
It stays alone without changing.
It moves around without stopping.
It may be the mother of the universe.
I do not know the object's name.
I have attempted to designate it Tao, and to call it great.
The great constantly moves.
Constantly moving it reaches far.
Far-reaching causes it to return.
Therefore, Tao is great, the heaven is great, the earth is great, and the human is also great.
There are four greats in the universe, and the human is one of them.
The human follows the earth, the earth follows the heaven, the heaven follows Tao, and Tao goes naturally.

[25c17t] Arthur Waley
There was something formless yet complete,
That existed before heaven and earth;
Without sound, without substance,
Dependent on nothing, unchanging,
All pervading, unfailing.
One may think of it as the mother of all things under heaven.
Its true name we do not know;
'Way' is the by-name that we give it.
Were I forced to say to what class of things it belongs I should call it Great (ta).
Now ta also means passing on,
And passing on means going Far Away,
And going far away means returning.
Thus just as Tao has 'this greatness' and as earth has it and as heaven has it, so may the ruler also have it.
Thus 'within the realm there are four portions of greatness', and one belongs to the king.
The ways of men are conditioned by those of earth.
The ways of earth, by those of heaven.
The ways of heaven by those of Tao, and the ways of Tao by the Self-so.

There is something, amorphous and complete, that was born before Heaven and Earth.
Obscure, oh, and, immaterial, oh, it stands alone, unchanged.
It operates everywhere but stays free from danger, thus we may consider it the mother of all under Heaven.
We do not know its name
So style it "Dao" [Way].
Forced to give it a name, we call it "great."
"Great" refers to the way it goes forth.
"Goes forth" describes how it is far-reaching, and "far-reaching" describes its reflexivity.
Thus the Dao is great, Heaven is great, Earth is great, and the king is also great.
Within the realm of existence there are the four greats,

THE FOUR ETERNAL MODELS
Before the Heaven and Earth existed
There was something nebulous:
Silent, isolated,
Standing alone, changing not,
Eternally revolving without fail,
Worthy to be the Mother of All Things.
I do not know its name
And address it as Tao.
If forced to give it a name,
I shall call it "Great."
Being great implies reaching out in space,
Reaching out in space implies far-reaching,
Far-reaching implies reversion to the original point.
Therefore:
Tao is Great,
The Heaven is great,
The Earth is great,
The King is also great.
These are the Great Four in the universe,
And the King is one of them.
Man models himself after the Earth;
The Earth models itself after Heaven;
The Heaven models itself after Tao;
Tao models itself after Nature.

Everything comes from it, and then it is the Mother of Everything.
I do not know its name.
So I call it TAO.
I am loath to call it 'greater than everything', but it is.
And being greater, it infuses all things moving far out and returning to the Source.
Tao is Great,
Tao, the Great!
It is greater than Heaven,
Greater than the Earth -
Greater than the king.
These are the four great things, and the ruler is the least of them.

It is capable of being the mother of the world.

Being great it receded.
Receding, it became remote.
Having become remote, it turns back.
Therefore,
the Tao is great,
the Heaven is great,
the Earth is great,
and the Kingship is also great.
In the universe there are four elements that are great, and the Mankind is one of them.
The Mankind takes his law from the Earth,
the Earth takes its law from the Heaven,

The law of the Tao is its being what it is.

It exists alone and it is permanent.
It moves around a circle unceasingly.
It is the mother of the universe.
I do not know its name and I have decided to call it Dao.
Arbitrarily, I describe it as great.
So great that it begins to permeate everywhere.
Permeating outwards, it goes farther and farther away.
Nevertheless, it will soon return to its original state again.
Therefore, Dao is great.
Heaven is great.
Earth is great.
Humanity is great.
In the universe, humanity is one of the four greats.
Man models earth;
Earth models heaven;
Heaven models Dao.
And Dao models nature.

[25c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Before Heaven and Earth are born, there is something formless and complete in itself.
Impalpable and everlasting,
silent and undisturbed,
standing alone and unchanging,
it exercises itself gently,
and generates itself inexhaustively in all dimensions.
It may be regarded as the Mother of all things.
Far beyond humankind's relative conception,
it cannot be referred to by a specific name,
yet it may be identified as the subtle essence of the universe.
In the absence of an accurate word,
I shall call it "the Great."
Being great, it extends itself without limit.
Extending itself without limit, it is far-reaching.
Being far-reaching, it ultimately reverts to itself,
returning to its self-sufficient origin.
Indeed, it had never really left itself!
This indefinable subtle energy flow is truly the greatest of all.
Expressing its integral nature,
the universal subtle essence remains intangible, yielding, and uncontrollable:
the ultimate expression of the cosmos.
As an expression of its unceasing creativeness,
it manifests as the spaciousness of the sky.
As an expression of its receptiveness,
it manifests as the great massiveness of galaxies, stars, and planets.
As an expression of harmonious reintegration,
it manifests as human life.

Thus, in the natural flow of energy transformation, human life becomes one of the four great expressions of the subtle essence of the universe.
It is the way of universal subtle integration.
Humankind conforms to Earth.
Earth conforms to the sky.
The sky conforms to the Subtle Origin.
The Subtle Origin conforms to its own nature.
These are the four peaks of manifestation from the great transformation of one universal subtle energy.
Taking an individual human life as example, the intangible body with its fluids and nervous system construct a field of intangible, but functioning mind and super consciousness.

But label it Tao,
And arbitrarily name it Great.
Great means going incessantly;
Going incessantly means reaching far;
Reaching far means completing the cycle.
Therefore,
Tao is Great;
Heaven is Great;
Earth is Great;
Kingliness is Great.
In the cosmos there are four Greats,
And Kingliness constitutes one of them.
Man patterns after Earth;
Earth patterns after Heaven;
Heaven patterns after Tao;
Tao patterns after Innate Freedom.

[25c39t] Ha Poong Kim
There is something undifferentiated
That precedes the birth of Heaven and Earth.
Silent and still,
It stands by itself and never changes -
All-pervading and never in danger.
One may regard it as the mother of Heaven and Earth.
I don't know its proper name;
I address it as Tao.
Were I forced to name it, I would call it Great.
"Great" means "to go."
"To go" means "far away."
"Far away" means "to return."
Therefore Tao is great,
Heaven is great,
Earth is great,
The king is also great.
In the universe there are four greats.
King is one of them.
The measure for man is Earth;
The measure for Earth is Heaven;
The measure for Heaven is Tao;
The measure for Tao is tzu-jan.

[25c40t] Tao Huang
Matter is formed from chaos.
It was born before heaven and earth.
Silent and void.
Standing alone, without territory,

Able to be mother to the world.
I do not yet know its name,
I call it Tao.
With reluctance I deem it to be Great.
Great refers to the symbol.
The symbol refers to what is remote.
What is remote refers to returning.
Tao is great.
Heaven is great.
Earth is great.
Kingship is great.
These are the four great things in the world,
Kingship is one of them.
Humankind takes its origin from earth.
Earth takes her origin from heaven.
Heaven takes its origin from Tao.
Tao takes its origin from Nature.

[25c41t] Tang Zi-chang
There was something unique manifesting from chaos before the birth of Heaven and Earth.
Remotely!
It stands alone without deviation!
Cyclically!
It moves without an end!
It may be called the mother of the Heaven and the Earth.
We do not know its eternal name but give it the name Dao.
Constrained to give a name, it may be called "Movement".
After moving it is called "Departure".
After departing it is called "Extreme".
To avoid remaining in the extreme, it may be called "Return".
Dao is superior;
the universe is superior;
the world is superior;
and the ruler is superior.
There are four superiors in existence among which the ruler is one.
Thus, the ruler should follow the law of the world.
The world should follow the law of the universe.
The universe should follow the law of Dao.
Dao follows its own law - the law of Nature.

[25c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
There was something undifferentiated and yet complete,
Which existed before heaven and earth.
Soundless and formless, it depends on nothing and does not change.
It operates everywhere and is free from danger.
It may be considered the mother of the universe.

I do not know its name, I call it Tao.
If forced to give it a name, I shall call it Great.
Now being great means functioning everywhere.
Functioning everywhere means far-reaching.
Being far-reaching means returning to the original point.
Therefore Tao is great.
Heaven is great.
Earth is great.
And the king is also great.
There are four great things in the universe, and the king is one of them.
Man models himself after Earth.
Earth models itself after Heaven.
Heaven models itself after Tao.
And Tao models itself after Nature.

[25c91t] И. И. Семененко
Существует одна вещь, совершенная по смеси.
Она родилась прежде Неба и Земли.
О, как она безмолвна и бесформенна!
Стоит одна и неизменна, ходит кругом, и ей ничто не угрожает.
Она может быть для Поднебесной матерью.
Мне не известно ее имя.
Наделяю эту вещь прозванием "Дао" и через силу отыскиваю для него имя "Великое".
Великим называю уходящее, уходит - значит далеко находится,
а далеко находится - значит возвращается.
Поэтому-то Дао и велико, велико Небо, велика Земля, велик и царь.
Во вселенной пребывают четверо великих, и место одного из них занимает царь.
Примером для людей является Земля, для Земли примером служит Небо, для Небес примером выступает Дао,
Дао свой пример находит в самости.

[25c92t] А. А. Маслов
Существует нечто, из Хаоса возникшее, рождённое прежде Неба и Земли.
Беззвучно-пустотное, одиноко-неизменчивое.
Двигаясь по кругу, не устаёт и способно быть матерью Неба и Земли.
Я не знаю его имени, а иероглифом обозначу это "Дао".
Через силу назову его ещё и "Великим".
Великое назову скоротечным.
Быстротечное назову отдалённым.
Отдалённое назову обращающимся вспять.
Поэтому Дао - велико.
Небо - велико.
Земля - велика.
Человек также велик.

Во Вселенной пребывают эти четыре великих, и человек - одно из них.
Человек следует Земле.
Земля следует Небу.
Небо следует Дао.
Дао же естественно.

[25c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Вот Вещь, в Хаосе свершившаяся, прежде Неба и Земли родившаяся!
О безмолвная!
О безвидная!
Одиноко стоишь и не меняешься, окружаешь все сущее и не гибнешь!
Тебя можно назвать Матерью Поднебесной.
Я не знаю твоего имени, но, обозначая знаком, называю тебя Путем-Дао.
Делая усилие, называю тебя Великим.
Великое называю уходящим, уходящее называю далеким, далекое называю возвращающимся.
Поэтому Дао велико, Небо велико, Земля велика, Монарх также велик.
Таким образом, в мире четверо великих, но Монарх из них - на первом месте.
Человек берет за образец Землю.
Земля берет за образец Небо.
Небо берет за образец Дао.
А Дао берет за образец свою самоестественность.

[25c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Есть нечто, хаос образующее, прежде Неба и Земли живущее.
Беззвучное!
Пустое!
Одиноко стоит, не изменяется, в себе самом вращается без устали.
Можно считать его Матерью Поднебесной.
Я не знаю его имени.
Даю ему прозвище - называю Дао.
Подбираю для него имя - называю Великим (Высоким).
Великое называю уходящим, уходящее называю удаляющимся, удаляющееся называю возвращающимся.
Поэтому Дао велико, Небо велико, Земля велика, Ван-царь тоже велик.
Среди границ есть четверо великих, и Ван-царь один из них.
Человек берет за образец Землю.
Земля берет за образец Небо.
Небо берет за образец Дао.
Дао берет за образец естественность (цзы жань).

Ее можно считать матерью Поднебесной.
Я не знаю ее имени.
Обозначая иероглифом, назову ее дао; произвольно давая ей имя, назову ее великое.
Великое - оно в бесконечном движении.
Находящееся в бесконечном движении не достигает предела.
Не достигая предела, оно возвращается [к своему истоку].
Вот почему велико дао, велико небо, велика земля, велик также и государь.
Во вселенной имеются четыре великих, и среди них - государь.
Человек следует [законам] земли.
Земля следует [законам] неба.
Небо следует [законам] дао, а дао следует самому себе.

[25c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Вещество произошло из хаоса.
Есть бытие, которое существует раньше, нежели небо и земля.
Оно недвижимо, бестелесно, самобытно и не знает переворота.
Оно идет, совершая бесконечный круг, и не знает предела.
Оно одно только может быть матерью (самкой) неба и земли.
Я не знаю его имени, но (люди) называют его Тао.
Могущество его называется величием;
величие его - безграничным;
безграничное - бесконечным;
бесконечное - возвращением.
Тао велико, небо велико, земля велика, и, наконец, царь велик.
Итак, в мире существуют четыре величия, одно из которых составляет царь.
Земля несет людей; небо несет землю; Тао несет небо, и, наконец, естественность несет Тао.

[25c97t] В. В. Малявин
Есть нечто, в хаосе завершенное,
Прежде Неба и Земли рожденное.
Пустотное! Безбрежное!
Само в себе пребывает и не меняется.
Растекается повсюду и не знает преград.
Можно считать это Матерью Поднебесной.
Я не знаю, как называть его.
Давая ему прозвание, скажу: "Путь".
Если придется дать ему имя, скажу: "Великий".
"Великое" значит "распространяющееся повсюду",
"Распространяться повсюду" значит "уходить далеко",
"Уходить далеко" значит "возвращаться".
Воистину:
Путь велик,
Небо велико,
Земля велика
И Господин человека тоже велик.
Во вселенной есть четыре великих, и Господин человека - один из них.

Человеку образец - Земля.

Вещь в наличии формируется из бесформенного завихрения.
Рождается прежде Неба-Земли.
В беззвучности, в безмятежности.
Стоит независимо, не изменяясь.
Движется в циклах, не погибая.
Так можно осуществлять порождающее начало в Поднебесной.
Сущность моя не знает этому имени.
Обозначим его знаком "Путь".
Постараясь подобрать ему имя, определим его как "великое".
Великое определим как преходящее.
Преходящее определим как далекое.
Далекое определим как обратное.
Причинность:
Путь - великий.
Небо - великое.
Земля - великая.
Человек - тоже великий.
Средь сфер есть четыре "великих", а человек из них занимает первое место.
Для человека образец - Земля.
Для Земли образец - Небо.
Для Неба образец - Путь.
Для Пути образец - самопроизвольная естественность.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Six

400/2593

[26c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The heavy is the root of the light;
Tranquility is the lord of agitation.
Therefore the gentleman, in traveling all day, does not get far away from his luggage carts.
When he's safely inside a walled-in [protected] hostel and resting at ease - only then does he transcend all concern.
How can the king of ten thousand chariots treat his own person more lightly than the whole land?!
If you regard things too lightly, then you lose the basic;
If you're agitated, you lose the "lord."

[26c02t] John C. H. Wu
HEAVINESS is the root of lightness.
Serenity is the master of restlessness.
Therefore, the Sage, travelling all day,
Does not part with the baggage-wagon;
Though there may be gorgeous sights to see,
He stays at ease in his own home.
Why should a lord of ten thousand chariots
Display his lightness to the world?
To be light is to be separated from one's root;
To be restless is to lose one's self-mastery.

[26c03t] D. C. Lau
The heavy is the root of the light;
The still is the lord of the restless.
Therefore the gentleman when travelling all day
Never lets the heavily laden carts out of his sight.
It is only when he is safely behind walls and watch-towers
That he rests peacefully and is above worries.
How, then, should a ruler of ten thousand chariots
Make light of his own person in the eyes of the empire?
If light, then the root is lost;
If restless, then the lord is lost.

[26c04t] R. L. Wing
Gravity is the foundation of levity.
Stillness is the master of agitation.
Thus Evolved Individuals can travel the whole day Without leaving behind their baggage.
However arresting the views,
They remain calm and unattached.
How can leaders with ten thousand chariots
Have a light-hearted position in the world?

If they are light-hearted, they lose their foundation.
If they are agitated, they lose their mastery.

[26c05t] Ren Jiyu
The heavy is the root of the light,
The tranquil is the master of the hasty,
Therefore the sage travels all day, without leaving his baggage wagon.
Although enjoying a magnificent and comfortable life, he does not indulge himself in it.
How is it that a lord with ten thousand chariots belittles his own importance under Heaven?
Lightness necessarily leads to the loss of root,
Hastiness necessarily results in the loss of mastery.

[26c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The heavy is the root of the light;
The still is the master of unrest.
Therefore the sage, traveling all day,
Does not lose sight of his baggage.
Though there are beautiful things to be seen,
He remains unattached and calm.
Why should the lord of ten thousand chariots act lightly in public?
To be light is to lose one's root.
To be restless is to lose one's control.

[26c07t] Lok Sang Ho
We keep our weight, so we will not lose our roots.
We keep our serenity, so we will not lose our poise.
For these reasons when the Sage travels all day,
he does not part from his heavy luggage wagon.
He sits quietly, untouched by the magnificent views.
What a pity it is then to see the lord of ten thousand chariots losing his weight in front of his people!
If one loses one's weight, one also loses one's base.
If one loses one's serenity, one also loses one's poise.

[26c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Heaviness is the base of lightness,
Peace is the master of commotion.
Therefore, when the great men traveled,
They never let their carriages out of sight.
No matter how beautiful and entertaining the scenery was,
They acted as though they did not even see it.
How can the rulers of today behave more carelessly than anyone?
Lightness will cause the loss of the base,
Commotion will cause the loss of the master.

[26c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF GRAVITY
Weight underlies lightness, quiescence underlies motion.

401/2593

Therefore the Sage never loses his gravity and quiescence from day to day.
Though glorious palaces should belong to him, he would dwell in them peacefully, without attachment.
Alas that a king with many chariots should conduct himself with frivolity in the midst of his kingdom!
By levity he loses his ministers, and by inconstancy his throne.

[26c10t] James Legge
Gravity is the root of lightness;
stillness, the ruler of movement.
Therefore a wise prince, marching the whole day, does not go far from his baggage waggons.
Although he may have brilliant prospects to look at, he quietly remains (in his proper place), indifferent to them.
How should the lord of a myriad chariots carry himself lightly before the kingdom?
If he do act lightly, he has lost his root (of gravity);
if he proceed to active movement, he will lose his throne.

[26c11t] David Hinton
Heavy is the root of light,
and tranquil the ruler of reckless.
A sage traveling all day is never far from the supplies in his cart, and however spectacular the views he remains calm and composed.
How can a lord having ten thousand chariots act lightly in governing all beneath heaven?
Act lightly and you lose your source-root.
Act recklessly and you lose your rule.

[26c12t] Chichung Huang
Heaviness is the root of lightness;
Stillness is the sovereign of restlessness.
Hence, the gentleman journeyed all day
Without leaving his luggage vans.
Though having imperial guards,
In leisure, he was as clear as day.
How could a ten-thousand-chariot king
Conduct himself lightly over all under heaven?
Light, he would lose his root;
Restless, he would lose his sovereignty.

[26c13t] Ellen M. Chen
The heavy (chung) is root (ken) to the light (ch'ing);
The tranquil (ching) is master (chün) to the agitated (tsao).
Therefore the sage travels all day,
Without leaving (li) his baggage wagon (tzu chung).
Although he has glorious palaces (yung kuan),
He avoids its sumptuous apartments (yen-ch'u).
How could the Lord of ten thousand chariots,
Conduct himself lightly in the world?
One who acts lightly loses his foundation (pen);

One who is agitated loses his master (chün).

[26c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org

If a person is serious-minded, it would hold down [his penchant for] flippancy [like roots are holding down upward growing plants];
[A person's] Serenity controls [his inclination for] impetuousness;
Therefore, a gentleman is weighted down with Tao, day and night, like an army, burdened with its full load of [well-prepared] supplies, when it marches [for battles];
Even if he is being tempted by grandeur, he shall still [adhere steadfastly to Tao and] stay aloof [on a morally high ground] as a swallow who nests high above the ground.
Does it make any sense, if a ruler of a country of ten thousand war-wagons takes the task of governing light-heartedly, only because he loves his physical self?
[A person's being] Light-hearted (frivolous) will result in the loss of his roots;
[A person's being] Impetuous will lead to the loss of his ability to master [even himself].

[26c15t] Tien Cong Tran

The heavy is the root of the light.
The still is the master of the active.
Therefore, the sage, travelling all day, never separates himself from the baggage-wagon.
Though there are splendid sights to see, he stays quiescently in his own place.
Why should a king of ten thousand chariots display his lightness to the world?
To be light is to be separated from one's root; to be active is not to be master.

[26c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang

Prudence is more stable than frivolity.
Rationality is superior to impatience.
Therefore, the sage always behaves prudently and rationally.
Even when successful, he is not carried away.
How could the king of a big kingdom rule without prudence?
Frivolity results in the loss of stability.
Impatience leads to the loss of superiority.

[26c17t] Arthur Waley

As the heavy must be the foundation of the light,
So quietness is lord and master of activity.
Truly,
'A man of consequence though he travels all day
Will not let himself be separated from his baggage-wagon,
However magnificent the view, he sits quiet and dispassionate'.
How much less, then, must be the lord of ten thousand chariots
Allow himself to be lighter than these he rules!
If he is light, the foundation is lost;
If he is active, the lord and master is lost.

[26c18t] Richard John Lynn

The heavy is the foundation of the light, and quietude is the sovereign of activity.

This is why the sage travels throughout the day yet does not separate himself from his retinue.
So despite the presence of glorious scenery, he remains relaxed and detached.
How could one be the master of ten thousand war chariots and yet treat his own person lighter than all under Heaven!
If he treats it lighter, he will lose his foundation.
If he engages in activity, he will lose his sovereignty.

[26c19t] Lin Yutang
HEAVINESS AND LIGHTNESS
The Solid is the root of the light;
The Quiescent is the master of the Hasty.
Therefore the Sage travels all day
Yet never leaves his provision-cart.
In the midst of honor and glory,
He lives leisurely, undisturbed.
How can the ruler of a great country
Make light of his body in the empire?
In light frivolity, the Center is lost;
In hasty action, self-mastery is lost.

[26c20t] Victor H. Mair
Heavy is the root of light;
Calm is the ruler of haste.
For these reasons,
The superior man may travel the whole day without leaving his heavy baggage cart.
Though inside the courtyard walls of a noisy inn,
he placidly rises above it all.
How then should a king with ten thousand chariots conduct himself lightly before all under heaven?
If he treats himself lightly,
he will lose the taproot;
If he is hasty,
he will lose the rulership.

[26c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The solid must be the root of the light.
The still must be the master of the restless.
Therefore,
wise people when traveling all day do not lose sight of their baggage cart.
Although there are beautiful scenes to see, they remain quietly in their own place.
Should a lord of ten thousand chariots appear more frivolous than a simple traveler?
To be light is to lose the root.
To be restless is to lose the master.

[26c22t] David H. Li
Earnestness is the foundation of frivolity;
serenity is in control of rashness.

Thus, a gentleman, in the course of a day, does not depart from serenity and earnestness.
He refrains from extravagance [in public] and lives plainly at home.
Why would the sovereign of a ten-thousand-carriage state govern the world with frivolity?
Frivolity loses foundation; rashness loses control.

[26c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Heaviness is the center of lightness.
Stillness is the master of commotion.
For this reason,
The sage may travel the whole day,
Yet stays centered, without leaving his heavy baggage cart.
Or he may enjoy a splendid view,
Yet stays serene, calmly transcending all outward pleasures.
Why should the lord of ten thousand chariots behave lightly before all under Heaven?
One who behaves lightly loses one's center.
One who behaves agitatedly loses one's mastery.

[26c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Heaviness is the basis of lightness,
The passing is the basis of movement,
Therefore the sage, even when traveling all day long,
Never abandons the baggage wagon,
Therefore the sage, even when surrounded by splendor and luxury,
Is shrouded in indifference that stems from serenity.
How can this great emperor, with a thousand chariots,
Move easily throughout his kingdom?
If he is light, he will lose his basis,
If he is hasty, he will lose his serenity.
Wang-Pi comments:
The light cannot bear the heavy; the small cannot contain the large; the sedentary controls the moving, the one who does not move from his place controls the one who moves from his place.
Therefore heaviness is the basis of lightness, and serenity is the secret of control.

[26c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
What holds, what you can trust
Is the same as this quietness -
And it is light-hearted.
This quiet light-hearted silence
Is the key to being free from emotion.
The sage never abandons the Tao,
He never lets its weight out of his sight.
He may live in a fabulous house
But he never gets caught up wanting to -
And though there are always temptations,
He stays unswayed, and smiles.
So why is it that our rulers

Seem so bright, but are glib and insubstantial?
Losing the weight of the Tao
Means you lose your root;
And when you can't sit still
You lose the source.

[26c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Heaviness is the root of lightness.
Tranquillity is the lord of movement.
That is why the sage is always accompanied by his heavily laden cart
When he travels all day long.
Though he has a luxurious life to enjoy,
He never indulges himself in it.
Why should a ruler of ten thousand chariots
Take reckless action to govern the empire?
Lightness leads to the loss of the root;
Restlessness leads to the loss of the lord.

[26c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The heavy is the root of the light.
Stillness is the sovereign of restless movement.
Therefore a virtuous man will not lose sight of his impedimenta during the whole day.
Although he has splendour, he stands aloof.
Unfortunately the great ruler of ten thousand chariots governs the country indiscreetly.
To act abruptly is to lose the trust of his officials.
To act restlessly is to lose his respect as a sovereign.

[26c28t] Liu Qixuan
Weight anchors lightness, and peace controls turmoil.
Thus, the wise person travels always with heavy provisions,
Is indifferent, like a swallow, to all the glory and grandeur.
What if a king treats the world lightly?
Being light, he will lose his root in the world.
Being changeable, he loses peace for the society.

[26c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Gravity and Serenity
Lao Tze says,
Gravity is the root of lightness.
Serenity is the ruler of hastiness.
Hence the sage practices the Tao all day long,
leaving no serene mind and heavy attitude.
Though a king can have seraglios and harems, he has to avoid approaching them.
Regretful are kings nowadays, they are very powerful, having ten thousand chariots and riders;
yet their attitude is light before the eyes of the people.
Light attitude will cause the loss of their subordinates;

hasty mind will cause the loss of their thrones.

[26c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Heaviness is the basis of lightness;
Calmness is the controlling power of hastiness.
Therefore the Sage, though travelling all day long,
Never separates from his baggage-wagon;
Though surrounded with magnificent sights,
He lives in tranquillity.
How is it, then, that a king of ten thousand chariots
Should conduct himself so lightly in the empire?
To be light is to lose the basis;
To be hasty is to lose the controlling power.

[26c31t] Paul J. Lin
Heaviness is the foundation of lightness.
Serenity is the lord of rashness.
Therefore the Sage who travels the whole day never leaves his heavily covered carts.
Though there are spectacles of splendor, he stays composed and aloof.
Why as a ruler of ten thousand chariots would he treat himself lightly in the world?
Lightness will lose the foundation.
Rashness will lose the lord.

[26c32t] Michael LaFargue
Heaviness is the root of lightness;
Stillness is the master of agitation.
And so the Wise Person:
Travels all day, not departing from the heavy baggage wagon
although there are grand sights, he sits calmly aloof.
Why is this?
A 10,000-chariot lord, mindful of his self, takes the world lightly.
Light, then lose the Root;
agitated, then lose the mastery.

[26c33t] Cheng Lin
That which is weighty has its source in that which is light.
That which is tranquil can subdue that which is disquiet.
Wherefore, the Sage always conducts himself gravely and tranquilly.
Though he may be surrounded by splendour and comfort, he is always reposeful and disinterested.
When the ruler conducts himself lightly, he loses the respect of his ministers.
When he conducts himself with disquietude, he loses the support of his people.

[26c34t] Yi Wu
Heaviness is the root of lightness.
Tranquility is the master of restlessness.
Therefore, the sage travels all day without parting from his baggage wagon.

Although there are splendid palaces,
he lives transcendentally at ease.
Why would a ruler of ten thousand chariots treat himself so lightly in the world?
Being light, one would lose one's foundation.
Being restless, one would lose one's mastery.

[26c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Frivolity should be anchored to solemnity.
Tranquillity should keep a tight rein on agitation.
Therefore, the sage carries out his daily tasks with gravity and equanimity.
He is oblivious to the honour that has been bestowed upon him.
Although he lives in luxury, he is unaffected by all the trappings.
How could any national leader behave in a cavalier fashion in governing the country?
In fickle frivolity, he will lose the foundations.
In great haste, he will lose control.

[26c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Centeredness is the cure for impulsiveness.
Serenity is the master of restlessness.
Knowing this, one of universal nature is placid and never departs from the center of his own being.
Though he may move about all day,
he never loses his poise.
Though he may be surrounded by splendor and comfort,
he is always dispassionate and undistracted.
For one with great responsibility,
to conduct himself lightly is perilous.
In frivolity, one's root is lost.
In restlessness, one's self-mastery could go with the wind!

[26c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
The weighty is the origin of the weightless.
Stillness is the fountain of restlessness.
Therefore, the ruler journeys from morning until night and never separates himself from his heavy supply cart.
Although he is in a glorious atmosphere, he remains quiescent and above it.
How can a leader "with ten thousand chariots" take himself lightly before the world?
To take himself lightly is to lose the origin.
Restlessness means that the fountain is lost.

[26c38t] Henry Wei
Gravity as a Virtue
Chung Teh
Heaviness is the root of lightness;
Quiescence is the master of hastiness.
Thus the Sage traveling all day
Will not stay away from his loaded cart.

Though glorious prospects are in view,
He remains serene in a transcendental atmosphere.
For what reason should it be
That a weighty person like the lord of ten thousand chariots
Would consider himself lighter than worldly vanities?
In making light of himself, he loses his ministers;
In being hasty, he loses his kingly command.

[26c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The heavy is the root of the light;
Stillness is the lord of bustle.
Therefore the prince,
Traveling all day,
Never parts with his baggage-wagon.
Even at a magnificent sight,
He remains at ease, unmoved.
How could the lord of ten thousand chariots
Regard his own body more lightly than all under Heaven?
If you act lightly, the root is lost;
If you bustle, the lord is lost.

[26c40t] Tao Huang
The heavy is the root of the light.
Tranquility is the master of the restless.
Thus, the noble person will travel all day without leaving his seat.
Though the center of the highest authority,
And surrounded by luxury,
He remains clear-minded.
How could the king of myriad chariots treat his body with less care than he gives the country?
Being careless loses the foundation.
Being restless loses mastery.

[26c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Heaviness is the cause of lightness.
Serenity is the effect of restlessness.
Therefore, a commanding officer does not risk parting with his supply trains even for a single day journey.
Even though he had honors and respect from others, he stayed at ease and on high.
How could a ruler of "ten thousand chariots" (the King), take a risk lightly before the world?
To be light will then lose the effect.

[26c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The heavy is the root of the light.
The tranquil is the ruler of the hasty.
Therefore the sage travels all day
Without leaving his baggage.
Even at the sight of magnificent scenes,

He remains leisurely and indifferent.
How is it that a lord with ten thousand chariots
Should behave lightheartedly in his empire?
If he is lighthearted, the minister will be destroyed.
If he is hasty, the ruler is lost.

[26c91t] И. И. Семененко
Тяжесть составляет корень легковесности, покой есть государь поспешности.
Вот почему Премудрый человек, даже когда он целый день идет, не разлучается с тяжелою поклажей.
И даже разместившись в царственных чертогах, он остается беззаботен и далек от мира.
Да и как может властелин десятка тысяч колесниц относиться к себе легковеснее, чем к Поднебесной?
При легковесности утрачивают корень, из-за поспешности теряют государя.

[26c92t] А. А. Маслов
Тяжёлое - это корень лёгкого.
Покой - это правитель движения.
Поэтому мудрец, странствуя повседневно, не отходит от гружёной повозки.
Хотя он владеет роскошными дворцами, в своём умиротворении он отстранён от них.
Может ли властитель десяти тысяч колесниц пренебрегать Поднебесной ради себя?
То, что лёгко, - не имеет корней.
То, что пребывает в движении, - утрачивает правителя.

[26c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Тяжелое - корень легкого.
Покой - властелин поспешности.
Поэтому совершенномудрый весь день в движении пребывает, не покидая той телеги, что в обозе.
Хотя бывает так, что он живет средь роскоши и блеска, он непременно выше их и их не замечает.
Так может ли правитель царства, в коем десять тысяч колесниц, пренебрегать покоем Поднебесной во имя собственного блага?
Если он пренебрежет - потеряет подданных.
Если он поспешит - потеряет правление.

[26c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Тяжелое есть основа легкого.
Покой есть господин беспокойного.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек, шагая весь день, не отходит от груженой повозки.
Хотя его и зовут во дворцы, он селится подобно свободно гнездящейся ласточке.
И что тут поделать, если хозяин десяти тысяч колесниц сам облегчает Поднебесную?
Если облегчает, то теряет основу.
Если спешит, то теряет царственность.

[26c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Тяжелое является основой легкого.
Покой есть главное в движении.
Поэтому совершенномудрый, шагая весь день, не отходит от [телеги] с тяжелым грузом.

Хотя он живет прекрасной жизнью, но он в нее не погружается.
Почему властитель десяти тысяч колесниц, занятый собой, так пренебрежительно смотрит на мир?
Пренебрежение разрушает его основу, а его торопливость приводит к потере власти.

[26c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Тяжелое лежит в основании легкого.
Тишина господствует над движением.
Хотя мудрец бывает занят целый день, но относится к своим делам внимательно и с большой осторожностью.
Хотя ему будет слава и внешнее великолепие, но он никогда не прельстится ими, ибо он стоит выше их.
Что случится с тем царем, который, имея 10 000 колесниц, презирает заботу о своей стране и думает только о своем удовольствии?
Презирающий заботу о своей стране потеряет лучших слуг - опору государства.
Где легкомысленное движение в народе, там царь легко упразднится.

[26c97t] В. В. Малявин
Тяжелое - корень легкого.
Покой - господин подвижности.
Вот почему мудрец, проведя в странствии целый день,
Не отлучится от своей поклажи.
Даже обладая прекрасным дворцом,
Он сидит безмятежно, воспаряя привольно над миром.
Как может господин тысяч колесниц
Относиться к себе легкомысленнее, чем к царству?
Кто легкомыслен, лишится корня.
Кто спешит, потеряет в себе господина.

[26c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Тяжелое является корнем легкого.
Покой является владыкой подвижности.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости в движении до конца дней не забывает о связи легкого и тяжелого.
Хотя есть шикарные перспективы, живет спокойно, минуя их все.
Отчего же хозяин десяти тысяч колесниц считает, что для тела его Поднебесная легка?
Легкость ведет к потере основы.
Подвижность ведет к потере владыки.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Seven

412/2593

[27c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The good traveler leaves no track behind;
The good speaker [speaks] without blemish or flaw;
The good counter doesn't use tallies or chips;
The good closer of doors does so without bolt or lock, and yet the door cannot be opened;
The good tier of knots ties without rope or cord, yet his knots can't be undone.
Therefore the Sage is constantly good at saving men and never rejects anyone;
And with things, he never rejects useful goods.
This is called Doubly Bright.
Therefore the good man is the teacher of the good,
And the bad man is the raw material for the good.
To not value one's teacher and not cherish the raw goods -
Though one had great knowledge, he would still be greatly confused.
This is called the Essential of the Sublime.

[27c02t] John C. H. Wu
GOOD walking leaves no track behind it;
Good speech leaves no mark to be picked at;
Good calculation makes no use of counting-slips;
Good shutting makes no use of bolt and bar,
And yet nobody can undo it;
Good tying makes no use of rope and knot,
And yet nobody can untie it.
Hence, the Sage is always good at saving men,
And therefore nobody is abandoned;
Always good at saving things,
And therefore nothing is wasted.
This is called "following the guidance of the Inner Light."
Hence, good men are teachers of bad men,
While bad men are the charge of good men.
Not to revere one's teacher,
Not to cherish one's charge,
Is to be on the wrong road, however intelligent one may be.
This is an essential tenet of the Tao.

[27c03t] D. C. Lau
One who excels in travelling leaves no wheel tracks;
One who excels in speech makes no slips;
One who excels in reckoning uses no counting rods;
One who excels in shutting uses no bolts yet what he has shut cannot be opened;
One who excels in tying uses no cords yet what he has tied cannot be undone.
Therefore the sage always excels in saving people, and so abandons no one;

Always excels in saving things, and so abandons nothing.
This is called following one's discernment.
Hence the good man is the teacher the bad learns from;
And the bad man is the material the good works on.
Not to value the teacher
Nor to love the material
Though it seems clever, betrays great bewilderment.
This is called the essential and the secret.

[27c04t] R. L. Wing
A good path has no ruts.
A good speech has no flaws.
A good analysis uses no schemes.
A good lock has no bar or bolt,
And yet it cannot be opened.
A good knot does not restrain,
And yet it cannot be unfastened.
Thus Evolved Individuals are always good at saving others;
Hence no one is wasted.
They are always good at saving things;
Hence nothing is wasted.
This is called Doubling the Light.
Therefore a good person is the teacher of an inferior person;
And an inferior person is the resource of a good person.
One who does not treasure a teacher, or does not cherish a resource,
Although intelligent, is greatly deluded.
This is called Significant Subtlety.

[27c05t] Ren Jiyu
One who is skilled at travelling leaves no traces of his wheels or footsteps;
One who is skilled at speaking says nothing that can be found fault with;
One who is skilled at counting uses no tallies;
One who is skilled at closing needs no bolts, while it is impossible to open what he has shut;
One who is skilled at binding has no strings, while it is impossible to undo what he has bound.
Therefore the sage is always skillful at saving men,
And so no man is uselessly cast away.
(The sage) is always skillful at saving things,
And so nothing is uselessly cast away.
This is called the hidden wisdom.
Therefore the good man is the teacher of the bad,
And the bad man is the material from which the good man learns.
He who does not honour his teacher and who does greatly care for the material is greatly confused though he thinks himself wise.
Such is called yao-miao (subtle).

A good walker leaves no tracks;
A good speaker makes no slips;
A good reckoner needs no tally.
A good door needs no lock,
Yet no one can open it.
Good binding requires no knots,
Yet no one can loosen it.
Therefore the sage takes care of all men
And abandons no one.
He takes care of all things
And abandons nothing.
This is called "following the light."
What is a good man?
A teacher of a bad man.
What is a bad man?
A good man's charge.
If the teacher is not respected,
And the student not cared for,
Confusion will arise, however clever one is.
This is the crux of mystery.

[27c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Perfect deeds leave no tracks behind it.
Perfect speech leaves no flaws to find fault with.
Those adept in counting do not require counting chips.
Those adept in sealing require no door latches,
yet what is sealed cannot be opened.
Those adept in tying need produce no knots,
yet the strings cannot be untied.
The Sage who is adept in saving people will abandon no one.
He is adept in saving creatures and will abandon no creature.
This is known as the Tradition of the Light.
The perfect man is the teacher of the imperfect.
The imperfect man is the assets of the perfect.
Those who do not value their teachers,
And those who do not take good care of their own assets,
However clever they are, they are really lost.
This is a key point that is often not understood.

[27c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Skillful driving leaves no tracks.
Skillful talking contains no blunders.
Skillful calculating needs no instruments.
Skillful securing requires no lock, but cannot be opened.
Skillful tying uses no knots, but cannot be untied.
Therefore, the great men were always good at making all people useful, so no one was left out;

They were very good at making all other things useful, so nothing was wasted.
This is why they were considered to be genuinely wise.
So, the kind are the teachers of the unkind;
The unkind are the resources of the kind.
If a person does not value the teachers or the resources,
No matter how smart he is, he is completely lost.
Therefore, this is an extremely important wisdom.

[27c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE USE OF SKILL
The good walker makes no dust after him.
The good speaker incurs no discussion.
The good reckoner needs no arithmetic.
The good keeper needs no bolts or bars, and none can open after him.
The good binder needs no rope, and none can loose after him.
The wise man is a constant and good helper of his fellows. He rejects none.
He is a continual good preserver of things. He disdains nothing.
His intelligence is all-embracing.
Good men instruct one another; and bad men are the materials they delve in.
Whoever, therefore, does not honour his teacher and cherish his material, though he be called wise, is yet in a state of delusion.
This is no less important than strange.

[27c10t] James Legge
The skilful traveller leaves no traces of his wheels or footsteps;
the skilful speaker says nothing that can be found fault with or blamed;
the skilful reckoner uses no tallies;
the skilful closer needs no bolts or bars, while to open what he has shut will be impossible;
the skilful binder uses no strings or knots, while to unloose what he has bound will be impossible.
In the same way the sage is always skilful at saving men, and so he does not cast away any man;
he is always skilful at saving things, and so he does not cast away anything.
This is called 'Hiding the light of his procedure.'
Therefore the man of skill is a master (to be looked up to) by him who has not the skill; and he who has not the skill is the helper of (the reputation of) him who has the skill.
If the one did not honour his master, and the other did not rejoice in his helper, an (observer), though intelligent, might greatly err about them.
This is called 'The utmost degree of mystery.'

[27c11t] David Hinton
Perfect travels leave no tracks.
Perfect words leave no doubts.
Perfect accounts need no counting.
Perfect gates close without locks and so cannot be opened.
Perfect knots bind without rope and so cannot be loosened.
A sage is always perfect in rescuing people and so abandons no one,
always perfect in rescuing things and so abandons nothing.
This is called the bequest of enlightenment,

so one who possesses this perfection is a teacher of those who don't,
and those who don't possess it are the resource of one who does.
Without honoring the teacher and loving the resource,
no amount of wisdom can prevent vast confusion.
This is called the essential mystery.

[27c12t] Chichung Huang
A good traveler leaves neither ruts nor footprints;
A good speaker makes neither slips nor errors;
A good calculator uses neither wooden chips nor bamboo chips;
A good door-shutter has neither latch nor lock,
Yet, the door he shuts cannot be opened;
A good knot-tier has neither rope nor string,
Yet, the knot he ties cannot be untied.
Hence, the sage man
Was constantly good at rescuing men
So that there were no cast-off men;
As for things,
There were no cast-off goods.
This is called surpassing insight.
Hence, good men are good men's teachers;
Evil men, good men's wealth.
He who neither values his teachers,
Nor cherishes his wealth,
Though crafty, is but a big fool.
This is called subtle essence.

[27c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Good (shan) running leaves no tracks,
Good speech has no flaws,
Good counting uses no counters,
A good lock uses no bolts yet cannot be opened,
A good knot uses no rope yet cannot be untied.
Hence the sage is always good at saving people,
Therefore no one is rejected.
He is always good at saving things,
Therefore nothing is rejected.
This is called following the light (ming).
Therefore the good person,
Is the not-good (pu-shan) person's teacher.
The not-good (pu-shan) person,
Is the good person's capital.
One who does not honor (kuei) the teacher,
Or love (ai) the capital,
Is greatly confounded though knowledgeable (chih).

This is called the important mystery (miao).

[27c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org

A carriage which rides excellently does not leave any trace of wheel tracks;
A superior talk (speech) leaves no room for fault-finding and accusation;
An efficient strategy does not involve ostentatious planning;
A marvelously closed door, which though was not bolted, yet cannot be opened;
Splendidly fastened together ropes, with which though no knot was tied, yet cannot be disconnected.
For this reason;
A Sage is so proficient at saving people that he abandons nobody;
He is so efficient at saving creatures and things that he forsakes no one;
This is called "to glow with the brilliance" [of Tao].
Therefore:
Good people serve as both teachers and models for people who are not good;
People who are not good are the stocks (capitals) for good people [to work with];
The person, who does not respect his teachers, as well as the person who does not value his capitals, despite their cleverness, will still remain grossly perplexed.
The above fact illustrates how subtly and amazingly exact [Tao] works.

[27c15t] Tien Cong Tran

Good walking leaves no track behind it.
Good speech leaves no mark to be picked at.
Good calculation makes no use of counting-slips.
Good shutting makes no use of bolt and bar, and yet nobody can undo it.
Good tying makes no use of cord, and yet nobody can untie it.
Hence, the sage is always good at saving men, and therefore nobody is forgotten; always good at saving things, and therefore nothing is wasted.
This is called illumination.
Hence, good men are teachers of bad men.
Bad men are the property of good men.
Not to revere one's teacher, not to cherish one's property, is to be on the wrong road, however intelligent one may be.
This is called the essential and the mysterious.

[27c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang

An able driver leaves no ruts and tracks.
An eloquent speaking is flawlessly fluent.
A smart counter uses no tools.
A superb lock cannot be opened, yet it has not bolts.
A good tie cannot get loose, yet there is no rope used.
The sage constantly saves people, so nobody is abandoned;
And constantly saves things, so nothing is wasted.
This is intelligent.
Thus, able people can be the teachers of incompetent people.
The failure of incompetent people can serve as lessons for the able people.
Ignoring the teachers and neglecting the lessons make even the smart people blunder.

This is an extremely important point.

[27c17t] Arthur Waley
Perfect activity leaves no track behind it;
Perfect speech is like a jade-worker whose tool leaves no mark.
The perfect reckoner needs no counting-slips;
The perfect door has neither bolt nor bar,
Yet cannot be opened.
The perfect knot needs neither rope nor twine,
Yet cannot be untied.
Therefore the Sage
Is all the time in the most perfect way helping men,
He certainly does not turn his back on men;
Is all the time in the most perfect way helping creatures,
He certainly does not turn his back on creatures.
This is called resorting to the Light.
Truly, 'the perfect man is the teacher of the imperfect;
But the imperfect is the stock-in-trade of the perfect man'.
He who does not respect his teacher,
He who does not take care of his stock-in-trade,
Much learning though he may possess, is far astray.
This is the essential secret.

[27c18t] Richard John Lynn
One good at traveling leaves no tracks or prints.
One good at words says nothing flawed or blameworthy.
One good at reckoning does not use bamboo tallies.
One good at locking up has no lock yet what is locked cannot be opened.
One good at tying up has no cord yet what is tied cannot be untied.
This is how the sage is always good at saving people, so no one is discarded,
Always good at saving things, and so nothing is discarded.
This is what is known as maintaining the light.
Thus the good man is the teacher of men who are not good.
Men who are not good are material for the good man.
But if they do not value their teacher, and he does not cherish his material, no matter how wise, one will become greatly lost.
This is called the "profoundly subtle."

ON STEALING THE LIGHT
A good runner leaves no track.
A good speech leaves no flaws for attack.
A good reckoner makes use of no counters.
A well-shut door makes use of no bolts,
And yet cannot be opened.
A well-tied knot makes use of no rope,

And yet cannot be untied.
Therefore the Sage is good at helping men;
For that reason there is no rejected (useless) person.
He is good at saving things;
For that reason there is nothing rejected.
This is called stealing the Light.
Therefore the good man is the Teacher of the bad.
And the bad man is the lesson of the good.
He who neither values his teacher
Nor loves the lesson
Is one gone far astray,
Though he be learned.
Such is the subtle secret.

[27c20t] Victor H. Mair
He who is skilled at traveling leaves neither tracks nor traces;
He who is skilled at speaking is flawless in his delivery;
He who is skilled in computation uses neither tallies nor counters;
He who is skilled at closing things tightly has neither lock nor key, but what he closes cannot be opened;
He who is good at binding has neither cord nor string, but what he binds cannot be untied.
For these reasons,
The sage is always skilled at saving others and does not abandon them, nor does he abandon resources.
This is called "inner intelligence."
Therefore,
Good men are teachers for the good man,
Bad men are foils for the good man.
He who values not his teacher
and loves not his foil,
Though he be knowledgeable,
is greatly deluded.
This is called "the wondrous essential."

[27c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
A skillful traveler leaves no track.
A skillful speaker makes no slip.
A skillful reckoner needs no counting rod.
A skillfully made door requires no bolts,
yet it cannot be opened.
A skillful binding has no cords or knots,
yet it cannot be untied.
Therefore,
the True Person is skillful in assisting people, and abandons nobody;
Is skillful in assisting things, and abandons nothing.
This is called "Following the Inner Light."
Therefore,

the skillful person is the teacher of the person without skill.
The person without skill is the material for the skillful person.
If you do not respect the teacher,
if you do not care for the material,
you are on the road to confusion and your cleverness will not save you.
This is an essential principle.

[27c22t] David H. Li
A good traveler leaves no trails;
A good speaker allows no slips;
A good planner needs no tallies;
A good carpenter needs no bolts in securing a door from opening;
A good packager needs no strings in preventing a knot from untying.
Thus,
the sage cares for everyone and abandons no one,
cares for everything and abandons nothing.
This is unrevealed wisdom.
Thus,
a good person serves as the teacher to a not-so-good person;
a not-so-good person serves as the mirror to a good person.
One who neither respects one's teacher nor cares for one's mirror, even if wise, will be bewildered.
This is the innermost intricacy.

[27c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The master in his action is so complete that he leaves no trace behind.
The master in his conversation is so balanced that he leaves no discord behind.
The master in his thinking is so original that he depends on no external authority.
The master in protecting people is so skillful that, without any visible means, he renders all attempts for invasion ineffectual.
The master in uniting people is so adept that, without any visible means, he renders all efforts for disunity ineffectual.
Thus, the master, without abandoning anyone, is always good at empowering people
And, without abandoning anything, is always good at utilizing things.
This is the all-embracing wisdom of the Tao.
Hence, the virtuous is the teacher of the non-virtuous,
While the non-virtuous serves as the lessons for the virtuous.
If you value not your teacher or cherish not your lessons,
No matter how intelligent and informed you are, you are greatly deluded.
This is the essential, subtle truth of the Tao.

The good speaker leaves no doubt,
The good accountant needs no abacus,
The good builder needs no lock and bolt,
And the door he closes will not open behind him.
The good fastener needs no ropes or knots,
And it is still impossible to untie after him.
Even if people are bad, why should they be rejected?
Therefore the sage is always the good savior of the people,
And nobody will reject him.
He is good to all creatures,
He spurns nothing.
This state is called "to see and to come to the light."
Therefore, good people are guides to bad people,
And many people are like matter in good people's hands.
And the person who does not appreciate his guide,
And the person who does not love the matter in his hand,
All their success comes from blindness.
This is the main principle of the secret.

[27c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
The sage who goes by the way leaves no traces
The sage who speaks the true law never slips up -
He never calculates what profit he can make from what he does.
He keeps out thieves with wisdom!
He's never robbed -
He makes sure the rules are binding, then no one can undo them;
He is aware of everyone, leaving no one uncounted;
He cares like a parent, and wastes nothing.
This is the essence of harmony.
So, a good man is a model for a bad one
And, misguided, he is touched by his goodness.
Not to follow a teacher here
Or to love his precious message
Is to lose the Way, however clever you are -
This is the essence of the matter.

And abandoning nothing.
This is called the intrinsic wisdom.
Thus the good man is the bad man's teacher;
The bad man is the material from which the good draws lessons.
If honouring not one's teacher,
Or loving not one's material,
One is a big fool though he seems clever.
Here lies the vital secret.

[27c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
He who knows how to travel does not leave any trace.
He who knows how to use words does not make any errors.
He who knows stratagems needs not any plans.
He who knows how to lock uses no bolts, yet what has been locked cannot be opened.
He who knows how to tie uses no rope, yet what has been tied cannot be released.
Therefore the sage always knows how to take care of people, and so no one is abandoned.
He knows how to take care of all things, and so no thing is abandoned.
This is what is called following discernment.
That is why good men are the teachers of bad men, and bad men are the sources of warning of good men.
Not to value the teacher, not to care for the sources, this reveals foolishness, however clever one may be.
This is the essential secret.

A good walker leaves no trace.
A good speaker uses no blasphemy.
A good calculator uses no counting aids.
A good door-keeper needs no bars.
A good knot uses no strings.
Similarly,
A wise saver will part with no one.
A wise user will waste nothing.
It is the subtle insight that gives such abilities.
The wise person will be seen as the teacher for the unwise.
The unwise will be regarded as the resources for the wise.
One may be a mental genius,
But if he appreciates no teacher or other resources,
He is only a blundering fool.
The key is such teaching/learning.

the skillful closer needs no bolts, while it is impossible to open what he has shut;
the skillful binder uses no strings or knots, while it is impossible to loosen what he has bound.
In the same way the sage is always skillful at saving men, and there is no rejected person;
he is always skillful at saving things, and there is no rejected thing.
This is called 'procuring enlightenment.'
Therefore the man of skill is a master of he who has no skill;
and he who has no skill is the servant of he who has skill.
If one does not value his master, and the other does not love his servant, intelligent as they are, they might be perplexed.

Excellent traveling: no tracks or traces.
Excellent speaking: no blemish or blame.
Excellent counting does not use counting slips.
Excellent locking: no bolt or bar, but the door cannot be opened.
Excellent tying: no cord or rope, but the knots cannot be undone.
And so the Wise Person:
Always Excels at rescuing people,
and so does not turn anyone away.
Always Excels at resolving things,
and so does not turn away from anything.
This is called 'being clothed in Clarity'.
The Excellent person is the teacher of the person who is not Excellent.
The person who is not Excellent is material for the Excellent person.
Not to treasure one's teacher,
not to love one's material,
though 'smart', is a great mistake.
This is an important secret.

Good conduct leaves behind no traces.
Good words afford no room for criticism.
Good mathematicians require no calculating apparatus.
Good lids need no bolts, and they cannot be opened.
Good fasteners need no cords, and they cannot be released.
The Sage, by his abiding goodness, saves mankind because he spurns no one.
He, by his abiding goodness, saves the inanimate creation because he spurns nothing.
This is called mutual understanding.
Wherefore,
the good man should be the teacher of the bad man;
the bad man should serve as a lesson for the good man.
When one fails to esteem his teacher, or the other fails to value his lesson, each is under a great illusion, though each may possess erudition.

Good tiers use no rope, but their knots cannot be untied.
Therefore, the sage is constantly good at saving people; no one is forsaken.
He is constantly good at saving things; nothing is abandoned.
This is called inherent enlightenment.
Therefore, good men are teachers of men who are not good;
Men who are not good are the good man's materials.
He who does not respect his teacher nor love his materials,

A good traveller leaves no tracks.
A good debater never makes a slip.
A good strategist does not require chips to formulate a plan.
A good leader does not confine his men to ensure that they stay.
A good employer does not need rope to bind his men to their jobs.
Therefore, the sage always assists but never abandons people.
He always aids all creatures and he never forsakes them.
This is called "covert enlightenment".
While a good person could be a bad person's teacher,
A bad person could provide a salutary lesson to a good person.
A learned person remains a befuddled one if he neither values the teacher nor learns from this salutary lesson.
The subtlety of Dao can only be appreciated by an intuitive mind.

[27c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One who is good at running leaves no tracks.
One who is good at talking has no flaws in his speech.
One who is good at calculating makes no use of counting tools.
One who is good at shutting things makes no use of bolt and bar, yet no one can open what he has shut.
One who is good at tying makes no use of cords and knots, yet no one can untie what he has fastened.
One of natural, integral virtue is good at helping all people impartially.
Thus, no one is abandoned.
Because he is good at protecting and preserving all things,
nothing is ever thrown away.
This is called "embodying the light of the subtle truth."
Hence, the people on the Universal Integral Way are teachers of those off the Way.
However, if the student does not value the teacher, and the teacher does not tend the student well,
though they both may be intelligent enough,
this leads only to further separation.

Therefore, the sage is good at his earnest demands upon people.
So no one is left out.
No talent is wasted.
This is called being in the tow of enlightenment,
And it ensures the good person.
For everything that is good is the teacher of the good person.
Everything that is bad becomes a resource for the good person.
No need to honor the teachers.
No need to love the resources.
Though knowing this is a great paradox,
It is the subtle principle.

[27c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The perfect traveler does not need a trail.
The perfect speaker does not leave any argument.
The perfect planner does not need a sketch.
The perfect door does not need a latch.
The perfect binder does not need string.

and always perfectly saved things, thus nothing was wasted.
This is called "blocking enlightenment".
The good person is the teacher of the bad person.
A bad person is a lesson for the good person.

Умелая езда не оставляет следа,
от умелых слов не остается крапин,
умея сосчитать, не прибегают к счетным биркам;
когда умело запирают дверь, не применяют никаких замков, но ее не отпереть;
когда с умением завязывают узел, не используют веревки, но его не развязать.
Так и Премудрый человек проявляет неизменное умение спасать других, и потому нет брошенных людей;
умеет с неизменностью спасать вещи, и потому они не брошены.
Это зовут внезапно набегающим просветом.
Поэтому-то добрый человек недоброму наставник,
недобрый же для доброго опора.
Когда не дорожат своим наставником и не щадят своей опоры, то пусть бы были даже и умны, но пребывают в тяжком заблуждении.
В этом заключается вся суть и тайна.

Умеющий путешествовать не оставляет колеи.
Умеющий говорить не делает оговорок.
Умеющий считать не пользуется счётными палочками.
Умеющий закрывать двери не пользуется засовами, а то, что он закрыл, невозможно открыть.
Умеющий связывать не использует верёвок, а то, что он завязал, невозможно распутать.
Поэтому мудрецу часто удаётся спасать людей, не оставляя ни одного из них.
Это зовётся сокрытой мудростью.
Поэтому добрый человек - учитель злых людей.
Злой человек - материал для добрых людей.
Если не ценить учителей, если не любить материала для них, то даже умудрённые впадут в величайшие заблуждения.
Это зовётся глубочайшей утончённостью.

Ходить умеющий следов не оставляет,
В речах хороших не бывает оговорок,
Не пользуется палочками тот, кто хорошо считать умеет,

Тот, кто связывает умело, веревки не возьмет, но его узел не развяжешь.

Поэтому-то совершенномудрый готов всегда к спасению людей и потому никогда не теряет людей.
Поэтому-то совершенномудрый всегда готов спасать существ и потому никогда не теряет существ.
И это его глубокой просветленной мудростью зовут.
Поэтому хороший человек - учитель дурных людей, а дурные люди - сокровище хорошего человека.
Если человек не ценит свое сокровище, то даже если он многомудр, все ж пребывает в великом заблуждении.
Это называется важнейшей тайной.

[27c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Искусный в передвижении не оставляет колеи и следов.
Искусный в речах не допускает изъянов и ошибок.
Искусный в счете не пользуется счетными таблицами.
Искусный закрывать не запирает на ключ, но открыть невозможно.
Искусный связывать не вяжет веревкой, но развязать невозможно.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек искусностью постоянства (постоянным добром) спасает людей и таким образом не отвергает людей;
искусностью постоянства (постоянным добром) спасает вещи и таким образом не отвергает вещи.
Это и есть практическое осуществление просветленности.
Вот почему искусные люди - учителя неискусных людей,
неискусные люди - ученики искусных людей.
Не почитайте своих учителей, не любите своих учеников.
Хотя это и разумеют как большое заблуждение, в действительности [оно] есть требование сокровенно-тайного [Дао].

[27c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Умеющий шагать не оставляет следов.
Умеющий говорить не допускает ошибок.
Кто умеет считать, тот не пользуется инструментом для счета.
Кто умеет закрывать двери, не употребляет затвор и закрывает их так крепко, что открыть их невозможно.
Кто умеет завязывать узлы, не употребляет веревку, [но завязывает так прочно], что развязать невозможно.
Поэтому совершенномудрый постоянно умело спасает людей и не покидает их.
Он всегда умеет спасать существа, поэтому он не покидает их.
Это называется глубокой мудростью.
Таким образом, добродетель является учителем недобрых, а недобрые - ее опорой.
Если [недобрые] не ценят своего учителя и добродетель не любит свою опору, то они, хотя и [считают себя] разумными, погружены в слепоту.
Вот что наиболее важно и глубоко.

[27c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Нравственный человек не оставляет после себя никаких следов.
Красноречивый не сделает ошибки в своих речах.
Победоносный полководец не употребляет никакой хитрости.

Если что крепко связано, то (оно), хотя и без замысловатых узлов, не развязывается.

Умеющий считать не пользуется счетами.
Умеющий запирать не пользуется засовом, а запертое им не отпереть.
Умеющий связывать не пользуется веревкой, а связанное им не развязать.
Вот почему премудрый человек всегда спасает людей и никого не отвергает.
Всегда спасает вещи и ничего не отвергает.
Это зовется "сокрытое преемствование просветленности".
Посему добрый человек - учитель недоброму человеку,
А недобрый человек - орудие доброму человеку.
Не чтить учителя, не любить орудие -
Тут и великий ум впадет в заблуждение.
Вот что такое предел утонченности.

[27c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Совершенствование в движении - в отсутствии колеи и следа.
Совершенствование в речи - в отсутствии заминок и оговорок.
Совершенствование в числах - в отсутствии бирок и фишек.
Совершенствование в запорах - в отсутствии замка и щеколды, а открыть не смогут.
Совершенствование в завязывании - в отсутствии веревок и узлов, а распутать не смогут.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости постоянно совершенствуется, помогая людям, поэтому не отвергает людей.
Постоянно совершенствуется, помогая вещам, поэтому не отвергает вещи.
Это определяется:
Преемственность ясности.
Причинность:
Совершенствующийся человек является наставником для несовершенствующегося человека.
Несовершенствующийся человек является средством для совершенствующегося человека.
Если не чтят своих наставников и не любят свои средства, то даже обладая знаниями, пребывают в великом заблуждении.
Это определяется:
Сущностная тайна.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Eight

431/2593

[28c01t] Robert G. Henricks

When you know the male yet hold on to the female,
You'll be the ravine of the country.
When you're the ravine of the country,
Your constant virtue will not leave.
And when your constant virtue doesn't leave,
You'll return {to} the state of the infant.
When you know the pure yet hold on to the soiled,
You'll be the valley of the country.
When you're the valley of the country,
Your constant virtue is complete.
And when your constant virtue is complete,
You'll return to the state of uncarved wood.
When you know the white yet hold on to the black,
You'll be the model for the country.
And when you're the model for the country,
Your constant virtue will not go astray.
And when your constant virtue does not go astray,
You'll return to the condition which has no limit.
When uncarved wood is cut up, it's turned into vessels;
When the Sage is used, he becomes the Head of Officials.
Truly, great carving is done without splitting up.

[28c02t] John C. H. Wu

KNOW the masculine,
Keep to the feminine,
And be the Brook of the World.
To be the Brook of the World is

To live the abundant life of Virtue,
And to return again to Primal Simplicity.
When Primal Simplicity diversifies,
It becomes useful vessels,
Which, in the hands of the Sage, become officers.
Hence, "a great tailor does little cutting."

[28c03t] D. C. Lau
Know the male
But keep to the role of the female
And be a ravine to the empire.
If you are a ravine to the empire,
Then the constant virtue will not desert you
And you will again return to being a babe.
Know the white
But keep to the role of the black
And be a model to the empire.
If you are a model to the empire,
Then the constant virtue will not be wanting
And you will return to the infinite.
Know honour
But keep to the role of the disgraced
And be a valley to the empire.
If you are a valley to the empire,
Then the constant virtue will be sufficient
And you will return to being the uncarved block.
When the uncarved block shatters it becomes vessels.
The sage makes use of these and becomes the lord over the officials.
Hence the greatest cutting does not sever.

By becoming the world's pattern, The Power will never falter.
This is returning to Limitlessness.

The Power will be sufficient.
This is returning to Simplicity.
When Simplicity is broken up,
It is made into instruments.
Evolved Individuals who employ them,
Are made into leaders.
In this way the Great System is united.

[28c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who knows the masculine but keeps to the feminine, is ready to be the ravine under Heaven.
Being the ravine under Heaven, he is not parted from constant "De" (Virtue),
He returns to the simple state, like an infant.
He who knows the white (glory) but keeps to the black (obscure), is ready to be the (divination) instrument of under Heaven.
Being the instrument of under Heaven, he rests upon constant "De,"
He returns to the ultimate truth.
He who knows glory but keeps to disgrace, is ready to be the valley under Heaven.
Being the valley under Heaven, he will have plenty of the eternal "De,"
He returns to simplicity.
When the simplicity is broken up, it is turned into concrete vessels.
By using the breaking up of simplicity, the sage sets up government and leadership.
Therefore the perfect government does not arise out of artificiality.

[28c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Know the strength of man,
But keep a woman's care!
Be the stream of the universe!
Being the stream of the universe,
Ever true and unswerving,
Become as a little child once more.
Know the white,
But keep the black!
Be an example to the world!
Being an example to the world,
Ever true and unwavering,
Return to the infinite.
Know honor,
Yet keep humility!
Be the valley of the universe!
Being the valley of the universe,
Ever true and resourceful,
Return to the state of the uncarved block.
When the block is carved, it becomes useful.
When the sage uses it, he becomes the ruler.
Thus, "A great tailor cuts little."

[28c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Keep one's place however humble, while knowing one's real strength.
Stay low, like the rivers that gather water from the higher grounds.
Be that lowly river:
Depart not from the eternal virtue,
Emulate the unpretentiousness of infants.
Keep one's color, though it be black,
while knowing about the white.
Be an example for the world.
Be an example for the world,
Do not disgrace the eternal virtue,
Emulate the Eternal.
Take the blames from the world without complaint,
Yet never forgetting the need for honor,
Be the lowly valley of the world.
This way, the eternal virtue is fulfilled.
And simplicity is restored.
Simplicity is valuable.
From simple substances we have all our useful tools.
When simple men are used by the Sages,
They become great statesmen.
Great people never go out of their way to make themselves great,
Just as the great artists will not do superfluous things to draw the attention of others.

[28c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Knowing you can be strong, but choosing to be weak,
Is like being the creeks and streams of the world.
If you can be the creeks and streams of the world,
The DE will never leave you, and you will return to the natural state of a newborn.
Knowing you can be bright, but choosing to be dull,
Is like being the model of perfection for the world.
If you can be the model of perfection for the world,
The DE will not stray from you, and you will return to the unlimited state.
Knowing you can be glorious, but choosing to be humiliated,
Is like being the valleys and canyons of the world.
If you can be the valleys and the canyons of the world,
The DE will always be sufficient for you, and you will return to the plain and simple state.
Being simple and relaxed makes things useful, so the great men used it to lead the people.
Therefore, a great system is one that does not hurt anything.

[28c09t] Walter Gorn Old, BECOMING A CHILD
He who, being a man, remains a woman, will become an universal channel.
As an universal channel the eternal virtue will never forsake him. He will re-become a child.
He who, being in the light, remains in obscurity, will become an universal model.
As an universal model the eternal virtue will not pass him by. He will go back to the all-perfect.
He who, being glorious, continues in humility, will become an universal valley.

As an universal valley the eternal virtue will fill him. He will revert to the first essence.
This first essence is that which, being differentiated, gives rise to innumerable vessels of life.
A wise man, by embracing it, becomes the wisest of governors.
A liberal government is that which neither disregards nor hurts anyone.

[28c10t] James Legge
Who knows his manhood's strength,
Yet still his female feebleness maintains;
As to one channel flow the many drains,
All come to him, yea, all beneath the sky.
Thus he the constant excellence retains;
The simple child again, free from all stains.
Who knows how white attracts,
Yet always keeps himself within black's shade,
The pattern of humility displayed,
Displayed in view of all beneath the sky;
He in the unchanging excellence arrayed,
Endless return to man's first state has made.
Who knows how glory shines,
Yet loves disgrace, nor e'er for it is pale;
Behold his presence in a spacious vale,
To which men come from all beneath the sky.
The unchanging excellence completes its tale;
The simple infant man in him we hail.
The unwrought material, when divided and distributed, forms vessels.
The sage, when employed, becomes the Head of all the Officers (of government);
and in his greatest regulations he employs no violent measures.

When uncarved wood is split apart

But when a sage is employed

[A pursuer of Tao] would, as a rule, keeps himself docile and accommodating, even though he is not ignorant of [advantages] of being valiant and intrepid;
Because he is [aimed at being a civil] servant of the world;
Since he strives to make himself useful to the world, the perpetual Te will always be with him;
Thenceforth, he is able to return to the infant-like [purity and clarity, i.e. the disposition of being totally unassuming and unbiased].
[One who pursues Tao] shall settle for the commonly undesirable status of obscurity, even though he is not unaware of the popular desirability of being distinctive;
Because he wants to set an example to the world;
By setting a [proper] example to the world means that his adherence to the perpetual Te is steadfastly whole-hearted;
[In this manner] he will return to the state of [pre-creation] nothingness (Tao).
[Tao pursuers] were not unaware of the grandeur [of being prominent], still they chose to settle in obscurity;
They intended to do services for the world like downstream valleys [accommodating abundant waterways];
Each of them accumulated Te [humbly] like a downstream valley receiving waterways, so such individual would consequently cultivate perpetual Te sufficiently;
Thenceforth, [this individual will have adequate Te] to return to Simplicity (the true Tao).
When Simplicity (Tao) emerges [in the world] it develops into a device (instrument);
When a Sage applies it, it serves well in governing people;
Accordingly, the great laws of a government shall not be truncated [for private uses].

Knowing what nobility is, the sage stays with the lowly, as if the creek of the world.
As the creek of the world he flows without leaving the general Te until he reaches a status as innocent as a baby.
Knowing what cleanliness is, he does not mind staying dirty, He acts as the norm of the world.
As the norm of the world, he makes no mistakes, until he approaches Tao.
Knowing what honor is, he tolerates insults.
He acts as the valley of the world.

He who knows the white, yet cleaves to the black
Becomes the standard by which all things are tested;

Develop the strength of a man, but live as gently as a woman.
Become a brook and receive all things under heaven.
If you are such a brook then Virtue will constantly flow into you and you will become a simple child again.

One becomes the stream of life to which other streams conjoin.
In thus becoming the stream of life for the world,
One comes to embody perennial virtue,
And returns to pristine innocence.
Knowing the purity of kosmic harmony,
Yet remaining in the impurity of worldly discord,
One becomes the standard of life by which other people can live.
In thus becoming the standard of life for the world,
One comes to reaffirm perennial virtue,
And returns to inner infinity.
Knowing the glory of public acclaim,
Yet remaining in the obscurity of personal humility,
One becomes the valley of life in which other people can repose.
In thus becoming the valley of life for the world,
One comes to fulfill perennial virtue,
And returns to undivided simplicity.
Undivided simplicity is reduced to mere usefulness through division.
Remaining undivided, the sage makes masterful use of the divided,
And is made the leader of an organization.
Thus, the great organization led by a sage is undivided and whole.

Will be a channel that draws the entire world through it,
And, being a channel for the entire world, will not lack eternal heroism,
And can then return to the purity of his childhood.
The person who holds on to white, but also preserves black
Will be a sign and an example for the world,
And, being a sign and an example for the world, will not lack eternal heroism,
And can then return to the infinite absolute.
The person who holds on to honor but also preserves humility
Will be a valley that absorbs the whole world into it,
And, being a valley that absorbs the whole world into it, will not lack eternal heroism,
And can then return to fundamental perfection.
Fundamental perfection, when divided up, will become vessels of many uses,
And these will be used by the sage, officers, and ministers.
However, in order to be great and ruling and supreme, there is no need for division.

Be a channel for the energies here -

You are ready to play the role of female
And content to be a stream in the world.
Content to be a stream in the world,

Be a model under Heaven and the constant virtue will not fade away.
One will return to the infinite.
Recognize the glory, guard the disgrace.
Be a valley under Heaven.
Be the valley under Heaven and return again to the uncarved block.
When the block is carved up it is transformed into useful wares.
The sage will use them with equal heart.

Therefore the great law will not crumble.

[28c28t] Liu Qixuan
One keeps weakness while knowing what strength is,
And serves as the humblest brook for the world.
Being the humblest, one can receive best
Until one returns to be the weakest infant.
One keeps black while knowing what white is,
And serves as a basic model for the world.
Being the basic model, one can receive properly
Until one returns to the oneness without polar opposition.
One keeps disgrace while knowing what glory is,
And serves as the lowest valley for the world.
Being the lowest, one can receive enough
To return to the most original simplicity.
Followed by people, this simplicity can shape the world
The wise use it as the example for the government.
The big system is, therefore, an indivisible simple whole.

[28c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Keeping to Pristine Simplicity
Lao Tze says,
He who has manhood's strength and takes upon him the female's feebleness;
his inclusiveness is worthy of being looked up to as the world's dale.
Being the world's dale, absolute virtue will not leave him;
further he will enter into a baby's attribute.
He who has the reputation of the pure, and takes upon him the reputation of the unclean;
he is worthy of being looked up to as the world's model.
Being the world's model, absolute virtue will not be in short, further he will be able to attain extreme bliss.
He who has a glorious status, and takes upon himself a humble situation; is worthy of being looked up to as the world's valley.
Being the world's valley, absolute virtue is sufficient in him;
he will enter into the state of pristine simplicity.
When pristine simplicity is broken off, it turns to appear in various utensil's shapes.
The sage who realizes the importance of pristine simplicity thereby selects the officers.
Therefore the great perfection shouldn't be cut into pieces.

[28c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
He who knows the masculine and yet keeps to the feminine
Will become a channel drawing all the world towards it;
Being a channel of the world, he will not be severed from the eternal virtue,
And then he can return again to the state of infancy.
He who knows the white and yet keeps to the black
Will become the standard of the world;
Being the standard of the world, with him eternal virtue will never falter,
And then he can return again to the absolute.

He who knows honour and yet keeps to humility
Will become a valley that receives all the world into it;
Being a valley of the world, with him eternal virtue will be complete,
And then he can return again to wholeness.
Wholeness, when divided, will make vessels of utility;
These when employed by the Sage will become officials and chiefs.
However, for a great function no discrimination is needed.

[28c31t] Paul J. Lin
Knowing the male and keeping the female,
One will become the river of the world.
Being the river of the world,
One will not digress from constant virtue,
And will return to being a baby.
Knowing the white and keeping the black,
One will become a model of the world.
Being a model of the world,
One will not deviate from constant virtue,
And will return to the infinite.
Knowing honor and keeping disgrace,
One will become the valley of the world.
Being the valley of the world,
One will be content with constant virtue,
And return to the unhewn wood.
Unhewn wood when scattered will become vessels.
The Sage makes use of them to become the chief officer.
Therefore the great system will not be cut apart.

[28c32t] Michael LaFargue
Be familiar with Masculinity, but watch over Femininity -
and become the Valley of the World.
Being the Valley of the World,
invariant Te will not leave you.
Turn back to being an infant.
Be familiar with what is pure and white,
but watch over what is dark and black - and become the Pattern for the World.
Being the Pattern for the World,
your invariant Te will be constant.
Turn back to being limitless.
Be familiar with what is praiseworthy,
but watch over what is disgraceful -
and become the Valley of the World.
Being the Valley of the World,
your invariant Te will be sufficient.

Turn back to being an Uncarved Block.
When the Uncarved Block is cut up then it becomes a government tool.
When the Wise Person instead uses it then it becomes head of the government.
Yes:
A great carver does no cutting, a great ruler makes no rules.

[28c33t] Cheng Lin
When a man, though aware of his manly strength, abides by a womanly meekness, he is content to occupy the most humble position in the world.
When he is content to occupy the most humble position in the world, and when he always abides by his true nature, he becomes again like a new-born babe.
When a man, though aware of his own purity, does not spurn the impure, he is content to dwell in the lowest place in the world.
When he is content to dwell in the lowest place in the world, and when he always abides by his true nature, he reverts to the natural simplicity.
The original qualities are destroyed when a thing is turned into some useful vessel.
The Sage, by preserving the original qualities, becomes the supreme ruler.
Hence, the great institutions are those which do not violate the nature of man.

[28c34t] Yi Wu
Knowing the male and keeping to the female,
One will be the stream bed of the world.
To be the stream bed of the world,
One will not depart from the constant virtue
But will return again to infancy.
Knowing the white and keeping to the black,
One will be the pattern of the world.
To be the pattern of the world,
One will not deviate from the constant virtue
But will return to the non-ultimate.
Knowing the honor and keeping to the mean,
One will be the valley of the world.
Being the valley of the world,
One's constant virtue is complete;
One returns to simplicity.
When the uncarved block is divided, it becomes vessels.
The sage uses it to become a leader.
Therefore, the great system will not cut apart.

[28c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Knowing the excitement of proactivity, you settle for quietude.
Everyone will converge to you like water flowing towards the valley.
Thus, you are like the valley to the world.

Holding fast to the "absolute virtue" (Dao),
You try to return to the pristine innocence of an infant.
You know the benefit of the limelight, but choose to be anonymous.
You set this example for others to follow.
Holding fast to the "absolute virtue" unerringly,
You hope to return to the path of Dao.
Knowing the lure of fame and glory, you choose humility instead.
By your taking a low profile, everyone converges to you like water flowing towards the ravine.
Thus, you are the ravine to the world.
The "absolute virtue" is bountiful.
Finally, it returns to the naturalness of a raw timber.
The natural block once carved becomes useful utensils.
The sage utilises them as leaders.
The system set up by the sage should cause no harm.

[28c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Know that you possess the strong masculine principle, yet abide by the meek, feminine principle.
Thus, become the flowing stream of the world.
As the flowing stream of the world,
never swerve from your true nature.
In this way, you return to the originality of a newborn babe.
Know the bright, yet keep to the dark.
Never wavering from the subtle truth,
you will conform to the pattern of an integral being.
In this way, you return again to the infinite.
Know how to be honored and glorified,
yet maintain unadorned plainness.
Thus, become the abundant valley of the world.
As the abundant valley of the world,
you realize the sufficiency of the constant, subtle virtue of the integral universe.
In this way, you return to the original simplicity of an uncarved block of wood with undamaged potential.
An integral individual, by preserving the original qualities of his being, maintains his supreme, integral nature.
When the uncarved block is shaped into various single tools and vessels, its original qualities are destroyed.
This is called "the great Oneness that cannot be divided."

[28c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
To be aware of the positive, yet to abide in the negative is to be the abyss of the universe.
To be the abyss of the universe is to not deviate from real attainment and to remain like an innocent child.
To be aware of the white, yet to abide in the black is to be the chasm of the universe.
To be the chasm of the universe is to have sufficient real attainment, and to remain in the state of original non-differentiation.
When original non-differentiation is differentiated, things are produced.
Yet when the wise makes use of original non-differentiation, he becomes the leader of the people.

And yet holds on to the Female,
Becomes the ravine of the world.
Being the ravine of the world,
He is always in union with Eternal Virtue,
And returns to the state of the new-born babe.
He, who knows the white (Yang)
And yet holds on to the black (Yin),
Becomes a model for the world.
Being a model for the world,
His Eternal Virtue becomes unerring,
And he returns to the Infinite.
He, who is aware of glory
And yet holds on to ignominy,
Becomes the valley of the world.
Being the valley of the world,
His Eternal Virtue becomes sufficient,
And he returns to the state of virgin wood (simplicity).

When the uncarved block scatters, it turns into vessels.
When the sage uses them,

Understanding the male and holding onto the female
Enables the flow of the world.
This being the flow of the world, the eternal action abides.
Knowing that the eternal action abides is to return to childhood.
Understanding the pure and holding on to the impure
Enables the cleansing of the world.
With the cleansing of the world, ongoing action suffices.
When ongoing action suffices, it returns to simplicity.
Understanding the white and holding on to the black
Enables the formation of the world.
Being the formation of the world, ongoing action does not stray.
When ongoing action does not stray, it returns to the infinite.
This simplicity takes shape as a mechanism.
The sage makes it the head ruler.
Great ruling never divides.

[28c41t] Tang Zi-chang

Кто, зная о своем мужском начале, сберегает в себе женское, становится ущельем Поднебесной?
А став ущельем Поднебесной, не разлучается с незыблемою добродетелью и возвращается к младенцу.
Кто, зная, что он светел, сберегает свою темноту, становится для Поднебесной образцом.
А став для Поднебесной образцом, не вносит изменения в незыблемую добродетель и возвращается к бескрайности.
Кто, зная что он славен, сберегает свою опозоренность, становится долиной Поднебесной.
А став долиной Поднебесной, преисполняется незыблемою добродетелью и возвращается к тому, что первозданно.

Познав белое, сохраняй и чёрное, становясь образчиком Поднебесной.
Будь образчиком Поднебесной, - тогда в постоянной Благости не будет недостатка, и вернёшься к Беспредельному.
Познав славу, сохраняй безвестность, становясь долиной Поднебесной.
Будь долиной Поднебесной, - тогда постоянная Благость будет в избытке, и вернёшься к изначальной простоте.

Кто знает свою славу, хранит свой позор, становится руслом Поднебесной.
Ставшим руслом Поднебесной постоянное Дэ овладевает во всей полноте и возвращает в духовную простоту (пу).
Духовная простота рассеивается и становится правилом-предметом.
Совершенномудрый человек использует его и становится чиновным вождем.

Кто, зная праздничное, сохраняет для себя будничное, тот становится примером для всех.
Кто стал примером для всех, тот не отрывается от постоянного дэ и возвращается к изначальному.
Кто, зная свою славу, сохраняет для себя безвестность, тот становится главным в стране.
Кто стал главным в стране, тот достигает совершенства в постоянном дэ и возвращается к естественности.
Когда естественность распадается, она превращается в средство, при помощи которого совершенномудрый становится вождем и великий порядок не разрушается.

[28c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Тот, кто знает свою силу и сохраняет свою слабость, сделается долиной вселенной.
Когда он будет долиной вселенной, то в нем будет пребывать вечная добродетель.
Человек вторично возвращается в состояние младенца (Тао).
Кто знает глубину своего просвещения и остается в невежестве, тот сделается примером всего мира.
Кто будет примером всего мира, тот не изменит вечной добродетели и возвратится к совершенству (Тао): он познает славу Его.
Находясь в презрении, он сделается долиной вселенной.
Кто долина вселенной, тот будет доволен только добродетелью и возвратится в совершенную простоту.
Когда эта простота будет удалена, то из него выйдет превосходный сосуд.
Если святый муж употребит его, то сделается начальником.
Вот почему великое установление никогда не уничтожится.

и станешь руслом ручья для нисхождения Небес.
Став руслом ручья для нисхождения Небес, не будешь терять связь с Потенцией постоянства; вернувшись, придешь в состояние ребенка.
Осознавая белое в себе, руководствуйся черным в себе, - станешь моделью для нисхождения Небес.
Став моделью для нисхождения Небес, не допустишь чрезмерности в Потенции постоянства; вернувшись, придешь в состояние Отсутствия пределов.
Осознавая благородное в себе, руководствуйся низким в себе, - и станешь долиной для нисхождения Небес.
Если станешь долиной для нисхождения Небес, тогда Потенции постоянства будет достаточно; вернувшись, придешь в состояние необделанного куска дерева.
В результате воздействия на целостную простоту дерева получается утварь.
Применяя это, человек мудрости становится властителем функций.
Причинность:
В большом порядке нет разделения.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Twenty-Nine

[29c01t] Robert G. Henricks
For those who would like to take control of the world and act on it -
I see that with this they simply will not succeed.
The world is a sacred vessel;
It is not something that can be acted upon.
Those who act on it destroy it;
Those who hold on to it lose it.
With things - some go forward, others follow;
Some are hot, others submissive and weak;
Some rise up while others fall down.
Therefore the Sage:
Rejects the extreme, the excessive, and the extravagant.

[29c02t] John C. H. Wu
DOES anyone want to take the world and do what he wants with it?
I do not see how he can succeed.
The world is a sacred vessel, which must not be tampered with or grabbed after.
To tamper with it is to spoil it, and to grasp it is to lose it.
In fact, for all things there is a time for going ahead, and a time for following behind;
A time for slow-breathing and a time for fast-breathing;
A time to grow in strength and a time to decay;
A time to be up and a time to be down.
Therefore, the Sage avoids all extremes, excesses and extravagances.

[29c03t] D. C. Lau
Whoever takes the empire and wishes to do anything to it I see will have no respite.
The empire is a sacred vessel and nothing should be done to it.
Whoever does anything to it will ruin it;
whoever lays hold of it will lose it.
Hence some things lead and some follow;
Some breathe gently and some breathe hard;
Some are strong and some are weak;
Some destroy and some are destroyed.
Therefore the sage avoids excess, extravagance, and arrogance.

[29c04t] R. L. Wing
Those who would take hold of the world and act on it, Never, I notice, succeed.
The world is a mysterious instrument,
Not made to be handled.
Those who act on it, spoil it.
Those who seize it, lose it.
So, in Natural Law

Some lead, some follow;
Some agitate, some remain silent;
Some are firm, some are weak;
Some carry on, some lose heart.
Thus, Evolved Individuals Avoid extremes, Avoid extravagance, Avoid excess.

[29c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who desires to govern under Heaven and build up achievements will not succeed, which I assert.
"The under Heaven," which is a queer thing, cannot be handled arbitrarily.
He who acts arbitrarily will harm it,
He who holds on to it will lose it.
Therefore of all creatures (in themselves)
some lead and some follow,
some breathe and some blow,
some are strong and some weak,
some are baffled and some destroyed.
For this reason, the sage should discard the extremes, the extravagant and the excessive.

[29c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Do you think you can take over the universe and improve it?
I do not believe it can be done.
The universe is sacred.
You cannot improve it.
If you try to change it, you will ruin it.
If you try to hold it, you will lose it.
So sometimes things are ahead and sometimes they are behind;
Sometimes breathing is hard, sometimes it comes easily;
Sometimes there is strength and sometimes weakness;
Sometimes one is up and sometimes down.
Therefore the sage avoids extremes, excesses, and complacency.

[29c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Someone who sets out to win the world and contrives to make his way will never make it.
The world is holy, and is beyond contrivance and possession.
He who contrives to win will only lose.
He who only aspires to possess will be dispossessed.
The Sage never contrives to do anything and so he fails in nothing.
He never possesses anything and so he never loses anything.
Among the living things, some lead, while others follow.
Some sigh, while others shout.
Some display their strengths, while others show their weaknesses.
Some lend support, while others destroy.
In contrast, the Sage will discard the excessive, the extravagant, and the extreme.

[29c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Whoever wants to fiddle with the world for his own purposes,

I expect that he will fail.
The world is something sacred that cannot be fiddled with.
Whoever fiddles with it will ruin it, whoever obtains it will lose it.
Therefore, among the things in the world, some go first,
some follow behind;
Some are slow, some are fast;
Some are strong, some are weak;
Some are helpful, some are destructive.
So, the great men removed the excess, the extra, and the extreme.

[29c09t] Walter Gorn Old, NON-ACTION
When a man who wishes to reform the world takes it in hand, I perceive that there will be no end to it!
Spiritual vessels are not fashioned in the world.
Whoever makes destroys; whoever grasps loses.
For perforce if one advances another is left behind; if one blows hot another will blow cold; if one be strengthened another will be weakened; if one be supported another will be undermined.
Therefore the Sage gives up all enthusiasm, levity, and pomp.

[29c10t] James Legge
If any one should wish to get the kingdom for himself, and to effect this by what he does, I see that he will not succeed.
The kingdom is a spirit-like thing, and cannot be got by active doing.
He who would so win it destroys it;
he who would hold it in his grasp loses it.
The course and nature of things is such that
What was in front is now behind;
What warmed anon we freezing find.
Strength is of weakness oft the spoil;
The store in ruins mocks our toil.
Hence the sage puts away excessive effort, extravagance, and easy indulgence.

[29c11t] David Hinton
Longing to take hold of all beneath heaven and improve it...
I've seen such dreams invariably fail.
All beneath heaven is a sacred vessel,
something beyond all improvement.
Try to improve it and you ruin it.
Try to hold it and you lose it.
For things sometimes lead and sometimes follow,
sometimes sigh and sometimes storm,
sometimes strengthen and sometimes weaken,
sometimes kill and sometimes die.
And so the sage steers clear of extremes, clear of extravagance, clear of exaltation.

[29c12t] Chichung Huang
He who wishes to win all under heaven,

And act upon them -
In my view, he cannot prevail.
All under heaven are sacred vessels
That cannot be acted upon.
He who acts upon them ruins them;
He who holds on to them loses them.
For people -
Some walk; some follow;
Some blow warm; some blow cold;
Some are strong; some weak;
Some safe; some in danger.
Hence, the sage man
Abandoned excessiveness;
Abandoned arrogance;
Abandoned extravagance.

[29c13t] Ellen M. Chen
One who desires to take the world and act (wei) upon it,
I see that it cannot be done.
The world (t'ien hsia) is a spirit vessel (shen ch'i),
Which cannot be acted (wei) upon.
One who acts (wei) on it fails,
One who holds on to it loses (shih).
Therefore things either move forward or follow behind;
They blow hot or blow cold;
They are strong (ch'iang) or weak;
They get on or they get off.
Therefore the sage gets rid of over-doing,
Gets rid of extravagances,
Gets rid of excesses.

[29c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
If there is someone who aspires to conquer the world in order to manipulate it, I have seen enough to declare that he will never succeed;
Because the world is a device for the manifestation of the heavenly greatness;
There is no room for any tampering;
It is not a device for personal possession;
Those who attempt to tamper with it will fail;
Those who try to possess it will lose.
[Therefore, in handling world affairs a Sage adopts the following measure:]
He may either lead or follow [depending on the circumstance];
He may either keep his lips tight or blow out air (speak up) [according to the need];
He may either strengthen (build-up) or weaken (bring down) someone's standings [depending on the situation];
He may either support or abandon some proceedings [whichever he deems proper].
In summary:

A Sage would expel all elements of excessiveness, extravagance and exorbitance.

[29c15t] Tien Cong Tran
If anyone wants to take the world and directs it at his will, I do not see how he can succeed.
The world is a sacred vessel, which cannot be directed at one's will.
To direct it is to fail.
To grasp it is to lose it.
Some things go ahead, some follow, some breathe slowly, some breathe fast, some are strong, some are weak, some grow in strength, some decay.
Therefore, the sage avoids "very", "too" and "extreme".

[29c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
To conquer and rule the world, I think, is not achievable.
The world is like a sacred utensil, which cannot be taken and held.
Whoever tries to conquer it will fail.
Whoever tries to hold it will lose it.
Thus, the sage does not try this, so he can avoid failure.
The sage does not try to own the world, so he loses nothing.
Things can be fast or slow, warm or cool, strong or weak, light or heavy.
The sage avoids the excessive, extravagant, and grandiose.

[29c17t] Arthur Waley
Those that would gain what is under heaven by tampering with it - I have seen that they do not succeed.
For that which is under heaven is like a holy vessel, dangerous to tamper with.
Those that tamper with it, harm it.
Those that grab at it, lose it.
For among the creatures of the world some go in front, some follow;
Some blow hot when others would be blowing cold.
Some are feeling vigorous just when others are worn out.
Some are loading just when others would be tilting out.
Therefore the Sage 'discards the absolute, the all-inclusive, the extreme'.

[29c18t] Richard John Lynn
As for those who would like to take all under Heaven and act on it, the way I see it, such action would never end, because all under Heaven is the numinous vessel,
Which cannot be acted on.
One who acts on it will destroy it;
one who tries to grasp it will lose it.
Thus some people tend to lead and some follow;
some breathe in through the nose and some blow out through the mouth;
some are strong and some weak;
and some are energetic and some lazy.
As this is so, the sage rids them of extremism, extravagance, and complaisance.

There are those who will conquer the world
And make of it (what they conceive or desire).
I see that they will not succeed.
(For) the world is God's own Vessel
It cannot be made (by human interference).
He who makes it spoils it.
He who holds it loses it.
For:
Some things go forward,
Some things follow behind;
Some blow hot,
And some blow cold;
Some are strong,
And some are weak;
Some may break,
And some may fall.
Hence the Sage eschews excess, eschews extravagance, eschews pride.

[29c20t] Victor H. Mair
Of those who wish to take hold of all-under-heaven and act upon it,
I have seen that they do not succeed.
Now,
All-under-heaven is a sacred vessel,
Not something that can be acted upon;
Who acts upon it will be defeated,
Who grasps it will lose it.
Of creatures,
some march forward, others follow behind;
some are shiveringly silent, others are all puffed up;
some are strong, others are meek;
some pile up, others collapse.
For these reasons,
The sage
rejects extremes, rejects excess, rejects extravagance.

[29c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Whoever wishes to take over the world will not succeed.
The world is a sacred vessel and nothing should be done to it.
Whoever tries to tamper with it will mar it.
Whoever tries to grab it will lose it.
Hence,
there is a time to go ahead and a time to stay behind.
There is a time to breathe easy and a time to breathe hard.
There is a time to be vigorous and a time to be gentle.
There is a time to gather and a time to release.
Therefore,

the True Person avoids extremes, self-indulgence, and extravagance.

[29c22t] David H. Li
One who plans to govern the people in the world with coercion is,
in my view, unlikely to succeed.
The people in the world are revered specimens,
They cannot be coerced; they cannot be dominated.
One who seeks to coerce is defeated;
One who seeks to dominate loses.
The sage practices laissez-faire.
Thus, the sage will not be defeated, the sage will not lose.
Among matters,
some lead and others follow;
some breathe slowly and others fast;
some are robust and others slim;
some play safe and others blast.
Thus,
the sage discards extremes, discards extravagances, discards excesses.

[29c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Those who want to take control of the world by force can never succeed,
For the world is a sacred vessel of dynamic energy, not meant to be controlled.
Those who try to forcibly control it will ruin it.
Those who try to forcibly keep it will lose it.
Because life is not a static entity but a dynamic process,
Sometimes one moves ahead and sometimes follows behind.
Sometimes one works hard and sometimes takes rest.
Sometimes one grows strong and sometimes grows weak.
Sometimes one is supported and sometimes is unsupported.
Wherefore, the sage, knowingly moving with the dynamic flow of life,
Avoids extremes, avoids extravagance, and avoids excess.

[29c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
When a person undertakes to hold and mold the world,
I see that he will fail in this task.
Since the world is an instrument of God:
It cannot be molded,
It cannot be held.
He who tries to mold it damages it,
He who insists on holding it loses it.
Therefore the sage does not mold it, and therefore he does not damage it,
He does not try to hold it, and therefore he does not lose it.
With all things, some move forward while others lag behind,
Some hold their tongues, while others speak a lot,
Some are strong, while others are weak,
Some are on the wagon, while others fall off.

Therefore the sage avoids excess, extremism, haughtiness, lust, and arrogance.

[29c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
If a ruler behaves as if he's invented the world,
He will do no good at all.
The earth is a sacred vessel - and it cannot be owned or improved.
If you try to possess it, you will destroy it;
If you try to hold on to it, you will lose it.
Some are leaders, then, and others follow.
Some drift like the wind, and others drive hard.
Some are thick-skinned, and others have no armour.
And some are the destroyers, and others they destroy.
So now you know why the sage abandons greed, all false charm - and every last iota of pride.

[29c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who wants to gain the kingship by force
Can never be successful, I think.
The kingship is so sacred
That cannot be obtained through force.
Those who try to obtain it by force will ruin it;
Those who keep it by force will lose it.
Because things are different:
Some go ahead or follow;
Some breathe gently or hard;
Some are strong or weak;
Some are in safety or in danger.
Hence the sage does away with extremity, extravagance and excess.

[29c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
To rule the country with force is a matter that cannot be avoided - as I see.
Yet to hold the land under Heaven with force cannot be done.
Whoever does it will fail.
Whoever tries to control it will lose it.
If there is something that goes in the front, there will be something that follows behind.
If there is something that makes warmth, there will be something that cools it down.
If there is something that creates strength, there will be something that makes it weak.
If there is something that reaches its goal, there will be something that breaks it.
Therefore the sage stays away from opposing the rule of Nature, from seeking luxuriousness, from doing what is against his own duty.

[29c28t] Liu Qixuan
A willful doer cannot, as I see it, win the world,
The world cannot be willfully manipulated or controlled.

One who tries to control it will lose it.
The wise does nothing to manipulate or control
And will, therefore, neither destroy nor lose.
For there are forever subtle changes in the world.
People walk either in front or behind.
They are either inhaling or exhaling,
Either strengthening or weakening,
And doing either good or harm.
That is why the wise will never desire too much.

Warning Against Interference
Lao Tze says,
If there is a king who wishes to take over the world and establishes a man-made order, I can predict that he will not make it at all.
For the world is of divine entity and it can't be subjugated to a man-made order.
Whoever wants to try will result in failure.
Whoever insists on his point of view will plunge in loss.
Because,
when one wishes to march forward, others just follow reluctantly;
when one wishes to breathe making a thing warm, others blow it cold;
when one wishes to strengthen it, others wish to weaken it;
when one wishes to sustain it, others wish to destroy it.
Hence the sage puts away excessive effort, extravagance, and easy indulgence.

[29c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
When a man is to take the world over and shape it,
I see that he must be obliged to do it.
For the world is a divine vessel:
It cannot be shaped;
Nor can it be insisted upon.
He who shapes it damages it;
He who insists upon it loses it.
Therefore the Sage does not shape it, so he does not damage it;
He does not insist upon it, so he does not lose it.
For, among all things, some go ahead, while others lag behind;
Some keep their mouth shut, while others give forth puffs;
Some are strong, while others are weak;
Some are on the cart, while others fall off.
Therefore the Sage avoids excess, extravagance and indulgence.

[29c31t] Paul J. Lin

To seize it is to lose it.
So the things
Either lead or follow;
Either whistle or blow;
Either are strong or weak;
Either defeat or fall.
That is why the Sage abandons the excessive, the extravagant, and the extreme.

[29c32t] Michael LaFargue
When someone wants to take over the world and do some work on it, I can see he won't be able.
The world is a spirit-thing, it can't be 'worked' on.
One who works ruins,
one who grasps loses.
Yes, things:
Sometimes they will go ahead, sometimes follow after;
sometimes they will be snorting wildly, sometimes breathing easily;
sometimes they will be strong, sometimes weak;
sometimes they will break, sometimes destroy.
And so the Wise Person:
Avoids excess, avoids extravagance, avoids being grandiose.

[29c33t] Cheng Lin
When one desires to win over an Empire by action, I find that he will never have a moment of rest.
The possession of an Empire is something ordained by the gods.
It cannot be gained by action, or held.
Those who try to gain by action are sure to fail;
those who try to hold are sure to lose.
As regards the things of this world, they are constantly alternating:
they lead, they follow;
they inhale, they exhale;
they are strong, they are weak;
they rise, they fall.
Wherefore, the Sage eschews that which is excessive, extravagant, or superfluous.

[29c34t] Yi Wu
If one wants to possess the world and act upon it,

The world is a sacred vessel;

Some destroy, some are destroyed.
Therefore, the sage avoids the extreme,
The extravagant, and the excessive.

[29c35t] Han Hiong Tan
If you want to rule the world according to your own whims,
It is unlikely to be successful.
Governing a country is a sacred mission.
You must not be meddlesome or intransigent.
He who is meddlesome will flounder in his job.
He who is rigid and foolhardy will lose the plot.
It takes all sorts to make the world.
Some are leaders and some are followers.
Some are highly excitable and some are calm.
Some are strong and some are weak.
Some feel secure and some feel threatened.
Nevertheless, the sage forsakes excess, extravagance and arrogance.

[29c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Those who want to conquer the world and make it conform to their own desires will never have success, for the sovereignty of the world is a subtle thing.
He who tries to shape it spoils it.
He who tries to hold it loses it.
The things of the world are constantly changing.
There is a time for things to move ahead,
and a following time for things to retreat;
a time to withdraw internally,
and a following time to expand externally;
a time to grow luxuriantly,
and a following time to decay;
a time to rise up,
and a following time to sink down low.
Therefore, one who does not separate his being from the deep nature of the universe avoids all extremes, extravagance and excess.

[29c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
If one undertakes the task of governing the kingdom and engages in governing it,
I see that he cannot lead it anywhere.
A kingdom is a spiritual vessel and should not be manipulated.
Manipulating it leads to failure.
To grasp it is to miss it.
Because the natures of things vary, one acts, another copies;
One breathes lightly, another breathes heavily;
One is vigorous, one is meek;
One carries on, another fails.
Thus, the wise is not excessive, overindulgent, or extreme.

Non-Action
Wu Wei
One might wish to get hold of the world,
And wilfully interfere with it.
In my view, this is bound to fail.
The world is a Divine Vessel.
It cannot be interfered with.
He who interferes with it spoils it;
He who grasps it loses it.
For among the creatures of the world,
Some are leaders, some are followers;
Some tend to condone, some to condemn;
Some are strong, some are weak;
Some are forward-looking, some are downcast.
The Sage, therefore, eschews the excessive,
Eschews the extravagant, and eschews the extreme.

[29c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Do you wish to conquer all under Heaven and rule it?

Whoever seizes it loses it.
Therefore, among the creatures,
Some go, some follow;
Some breathe lightly, some blow hard;
Some are strong, some are weak;
Some break, some fall.
Therefore the sage
Shuns extremes,
Shuns extravagance,
Shuns vanity.

Either strengthens or weakens,
Either enhances or destroys.

So the sage abandons extremes, extravagance, multiplicity.

[29c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Will anybody want to lead the world according to his selfish design?
I see that he will never attain his end.
The sacred instrument of the world cannot be grasped or intervened:
one who intervenes will be defeated;
one who grasps will lose it.
Among things:
some are moving ahead, others are following behind;
some are breathing in air, others are breathing in water;
some are strong, others are weak;
some are still carried on and some are dropped.
Therefore, a Sage ruler avoided:
Extreme, Extravagance and Indulgence.

[29c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
When one desires to take over the empire end act on it (interfere with it), I see that he will not succeed.

Кто вознамерится взять Поднебесную и ею заниматься, на мой взгляд, это ему не удастся.
Поднебесная - чаша душевная, и сформовать ее нельзя.
Формуя, ее только портят, владея же, утрачивают.
Средь сущего одни ведут, другие следуют;
одни выдыхают медленно, другие - быстро;
одни становятся сильны, другие чахнут;
одни поднимаются, другие гибнут.
Именно поэтому Премудрый человек отбрасывает крайность, отвергает неумеренность, отказывается от излишества.

[29c92t] А. А. Маслов
Тому, кто хочет править Поднебесной и при этом предается деяниям, я думаю, не достичь успеха.
Поднебесная - это священный сосуд, с которым ничего нельзя сделать.
Действующий - потерпит неудачу.
Желающий обрести это - утратит.
Поэтому одни существа идут впереди, другие следуют за ними.
Одни выдыхают через нос, другие дуют ртом.
Одни разрушают, другие уничтожаются.

Вот почему мудрец сторонится избыточности, избегает чрезмерности и отбрасывает бахвальство.

[29c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Если кто-либо возжелает овладеть Поднебесной, то я знаю, что он не возьмет ее.
Поднебесная - божественный сосуд, и нельзя воздействовать на нее.
Воздействующий на нее потерпит поражение, и хватающий ее потеряет ее.
Поэтому среди существ есть такие, которые идут вперед, есть и такие, что идут следом за ними;
бывают существа, которые молчат, бывают существа, которые кричат;
бывают сильные, бывают слабые;
бывают надежно защищенные, бывают беззащитно обнаженные.
Поэтому совершенномудрый уходит от чрезмерности, уходит от избытка, уходит от излишества.

[29c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
[Положим, некто] одержим страстью овладеть Поднебесной и воздействовать на нее.
А мне ясно: у него ничего не получится.
Поднебесная - это духовный сосуд, на него нельзя воздействовать.
Тот же, кто будет воздействовать, разрушит его.
А тот, кто будет удерживать, потеряет его.
Ведь искони устроено так:
из существ одни идут, другие следуют за ними,
одни фыркают, другие трубят,
одни усиливаются, другие истощаются,
одни хищники, другие жертвы.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек отказывается от излишеств, отказывается от роскоши, отказывается от расточительности.

[29c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Если кто-нибудь силой пытается овладеть страной, то, вижу я, он не достигает своей цели.
Страна подобна таинственному сосуду, к которому нельзя прикоснуться.
Если кто-нибудь тронет [его], то потерпит неудачу.
Если кто-нибудь схватит [его], то его потеряет.
Поэтому
одни существа идут, другие - следуют за ними;
одни расцветают, другие высыхают;
одни укрепляются, другие слабеют;
одни создаются, другие разрушаются.
Поэтому совершенномудрый отказывается от излишеств, устраняет роскошь и расточительность.

[29c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Кто действует, сильно желая завладеть вселенной, тот никогда не достигнет желаемого, потому что вселенная есть божественное орудие, поэтому распоряжаться ее судьбою никто не вправе.
Отсюда, кто покушается на это, тот нарушает порядок мира;
кто хочет завладеть им, тот немедленно потеряет его.
Вообще вещи идут вперед или назад; воют или дуют; сильны или слабы; несутся или же останавливаются на одном месте.
Поэтому мудрец избегает всякой крайности, роскоши и великолепия.

Когда кто-то хочет завладеть миром и переделать его,
Я вижу, что он не добьется своей цели.
Мир - божественный предмет, переделать его нельзя.
Кто будет его переделывать, погубит его;
Кто будет держаться за него, потеряет его.
Среди вещей одни действуют, другие следуют,
Одни пышут жаром, другие источают холод,
Одни сильны, другие слабы,
Одни расцветают, другие клонятся к упадку.
Вот почему премудрый человек отвергает крайности, отвергает излишества, отвергает роскошь.

[29c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский

Если заранее стремишься взять себе Поднебесную и осуществляешь это, то для сущности моей очевидно, что не обретя, прекратишь.
Поднебесная - божественная утварь.
Нельзя осуществлять.
Нельзя удерживать.
Кто осуществляет - потерпит поражение.
Кто удерживает - потеряет ее.
Причинность:
Для вещей существует чередование - движения и следования, вдоха и выдоха, усиления и ослабления, возвышения и падения.
Эта дает:
Человек мудрости отвергает крайность, излишество, полноту.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty

467/2593

[30c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Those who assist their rulers with the Way,
Don't use weapons to commit violence in the world.
Such {deeds easily rebound}.
In places where {armies} are stationed, thorns and brambles will grow.
The good [general] achieves his result and that's all;
He does not use the occasion to seize strength from it.
He achieves his result but does not become arrogant;
He achieves his result but does not praise his deeds;
He achieves his result and yet {does not} brag.
He achieves his result, yet he abides with the result because he has no choice.
This is called achieving one's result [without] using force.
When things reach their prime, they get old;
We call this "not the Way."
What is not the Way will come to an early end.

[30c02t] John C. H. Wu
HE who knows how to guide a ruler in the path of Tao
Does not try to override the world with force of arms.
It is in the nature of a military weapon to turn against its wielder.
Wherever armies are stationed, thorny bushes grow.
After a great war, bad years invariably follow.
What you want is to protect efficiently your own state,
But not to aim at self-aggrandisement.
After you have attained your purpose,
You must not parade your success,
You must not boast of your ability,
You must not feel proud,
You must rather regret that you had not been able to prevent the war.
You must never think of conquering others by force.
For to be over-developed is to hasten decay,
And this is against Tao,
And what is against Tao will soon cease to be.

[30c03t] D. C. Lau
One who assists the ruler of men by means of the way does not intimidate the empire by a show of arms.
This is something which is liable to rebound.
Where troops have encamped
There will brambles grow;
In the wake of a mighty army
Bad harvests follow without fail.
One who is good aims only at bringing his campaign to a conclusion and dare not thereby intimidate.

Bring it to a conclusion but do not boast;
Bring it to a conclusion but do not brag;
Bring it to a conclusion but do not be arrogant;
Bring it to a conclusion but only when there is no choice;
Bring it to a conclusion but do not intimidate.
A creature in its prime doing harm to the old
Is known as going against the way.
That which goes against the way will come to an early end.

[30c04t] R. L. Wing
Those who use the Tao to guide leaders Do not use forceful strategies in the world.
Such matters tend to recoil.
Where armies are positioned,
Thorny brambles are produced.
A great military always brings years of hunger.
Those who are skillful Succeed and then stop.
They dare not hold on with force.
They succeed and do not boast.
They succeed and do not make claims.
They succeed and are not proud.
They succeed and do not acquire in excess.
They succeed and do not force.
Things overgrown will always decline.
This is not the Tao.
What is not the Tao will soon end.

[30c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who assists the rulers with Tao does not dominate under Heaven by force.
The use of force will soon incur requital.
Wherever armies are stationed, briers and thorns grow wild.
Great wars are always followed by famines.
Content yourselves with your success and stop.
Do not seek to dominate under Heaven by force of arms.
Succeed but don't boast about it,
Succeed but don't brag about it,
Succeed but don't be arrogant,
Succeed and take it as you have to do,
Succeed and don't attempt to dominate.
Things must grow old after reaching their prime, which is contrary to Tao.
Whatever is contrary to Tao will soon perish.

[30c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Whenever you advise a ruler in the way of Tao,
Counsel him not to use force to conquer the universe.
For this would only cause resistance.
Thorn bushes spring up wherever the army has passed.

Lean years follow in the wake of a great war.
Just do what needs to be done.
Never take advantage of power.
Achieve results,
But never glory in them.
Achieve results,
But never boast.
Achieve results,
But never be proud.
Achieve results,
Because this is the natural way.
Achieve results,
But not through violence.
Force is followed by loss of strength.
This is not the way of Tao.
That which goes against the Tao comes to an early end.

[30c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The person who through the Dao helps a ruler
Will advise against using sheer military force to conquer the world.
Such military activity will invite its own counter-effects.
For where the military force goes,
farmlands will give way to thorns and brambles.
In the wake of military conquest,
A year of misfortune inevitably follows.
Good results are the natural outcome of good deeds.
They are not achieved by force or contrivance.
In the face of good results,
One must not indulge in conceit;
Nor must one boast about one's success;
Nor must one succumb to pride.
Remember that good results follow the natural law.
Good results are not brought about by forcing the course of events.
Anything that has seen the prime of its age will soon get old.
Going past the prime is going against the Dao.
Going against the Dao, one soon perishes.

[30c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Those who use the DAO to assist their monarchs do not rely on force to conquer the world.
If you use force, it so easily comes back and haunts you.
Thorns will grow where the army camped,
A year of starvation will follow a big war.
A person who understands war will only fight to win a war,
Not to use force to conquer the world.
After winning a war, do not be self-satisfied.
After winning a war, do not show off.

After winning a war, do not be conceited.
After winning a war, treat it like you were forced to fight.
After winning a war, do not use force to conquer the world.
When things become too strong, they start to decay,
Which is against the DAO.
Being against the DAO will lead to an early destruction.

[30c09t] Walter Gorn Old, DECLINING FROM STRIFE
The man who aids the King by the use of Tao forces the people into submission without resort to the use of arms. He will not regard the fruit of his actions.
Prickly briars and thorns flourish where battalions have quartered.
Bad years follow on the heels of armies in motion.
The good soldier is brave when occasion requires, but he does not risk himself for power.
Brave is he when occasion requires, but he does not oppress.
Brave is he when occasion requires, but he does not boast.
Brave is he when occasion requires, but he is not haughty.
Brave is he when occasion requires, but he is not mean.
Brave is he when occasion requires, but he does not rage.
Things become old through excess of vigour. This is called Non-Tao; and what is Non-Tao is soon wasted!

[30c10t] James Legge
He who would assist a lord of men in harmony with the Tao will not assert his mastery in the kingdom by force of arms.
Such a course is sure to meet with its proper return.
Wherever a host is stationed, briars and thorns spring up.
In the sequence of great armies there are sure to be bad years.
A skilful (commander) strikes a decisive blow, and stops.
He does not dare (by continuing his operations) to assert and complete his mastery.
He will strike the blow, but will be on his guard against being vain or boastful or arrogant in consequence of it.
He strikes it as a matter of necessity;
he strikes it, but not from a wish for mastery.
When things have attained their strong maturity they become old.
This may be said to be not in accordance with the Tao: and what is not in accordance with it soon comes to an end.

[30c11t] David Hinton
If you use the Way to help a ruler of people you never use weapons to coerce all beneath heaven.
Such things always turn against you:
fields where soldiers camp turn to thorn and bramble, and vast armies on the march leave years of misery behind.
The noble prevail if they must, then stop: they never press on to coerce the world.
Prevail, but never presume.
Prevail, but never boast.
Prevail, but never exult.

Prevail, but never when there's another way.
This is to prevail without coercing.
Things grown strong soon grow old.
This is called losing the Way: Lose the Way and you die young.

[30c12t] Chichung Huang
Use the Tao to assist your sovereign lord;
Do not use military power
To flaunt your strength over all under heaven.
Such things are apt to boomerang:
Where an army has encamped,
Brambles and thorns grow.
A good commander stops
Once his end is achieved,
And does not thereby seek military superiority.
His end achieved, he is not arrogant;
His end achieved, he is not conceited;
His end achieved, he does not brag;
His end achieved, he accepts it reluctantly.
This is called
Achieving the end without seeking military superiority.
Something ages while still in its prime
Is contrary to the Tao;
What is contrary to the Tao perishes early.

[30c13t] Ellen M. Chen
One who assists the ruler with Tao,
Does not overpower (ch'iang) the world by military conquests.
Such affairs have a way of returning (huan):
Where armies are stationed,
Briars and thorns grow,
After great campaigns,
Bad years are sure to follow.
The good person is resolute (kuo) only,
But dares not (kan) take the path of the strong (ch'iang).
Be resolute (kuo) yet do not boast (ching),
Be resolute yet do not show off (fa),
Be resolute yet do not be haughty,
Be resolute because you have no choice,
Be resolute yet do not overpower (ch'iang).
When things are full grown, they age.
This is called not following Tao.
Not following Tao they perish early.

its military might;
[If military action is deemed necessary] he should think hard [about consequences and weighing non-violent alternatives];
Because, weeds and thistles grew wild every time after armies march through the land,
Every time there was a big military operation, [several] years of famine followed afterwards.
An excellent military man only seeks [all in all] the effect [of deflating the enemy's aggression];
After having achieved the result [of defeating the enemy] he would not be self-pleased;
He would not glorify his victory;
He would avoid being arrogant;
Nor would he intimidate [the losing side].
Because he has acted out of necessity, he does not dare [to take advantage of the situation] to terrorize the beaten party.
When a living thing starts turning rigid and inflexible, it is a sign of its approaching old age;
This is what I describe as acting against Tao;
Those who proceed on courses leading away from Tao will perish prematurely.

[30c15t] Tien Cong Tran
He who knows how to guide a ruler in the path of the Way does not try to override the world with force of arms.
It is in the nature of arms to turn against its wielder.
Wherever armies are stationed, thorny bushes grow.
After a great war, bad harvests follow.
After victory, to protect efficiently one's own state, one should not to rely on force.
Victory without claiming ability.
Victory without claiming success.
Victory without being proud.
Victory but saying it is not one's will.
Victory with no longer relying on force.
A thing at its strength begins to become old; this is against the Way; what is against the Way will soon cease to be.

[30c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Those who aid the ruler with Tao do not use military power to win the world.
This is because such action is likely to backfire:
Where armies camp, thorny problems arise,
Where troops march, fatal years follow.
The competent general stops when the goal is reached, and never flaunts.
Never be vainglorious when the goal is achieved.
Never be haughty when the goal is achieved.
Never be arrogant when the goal is achieved.
Never do more than necessary when the goal is achieved.
Never flaunt when the goal is achieved.
It is not following Tao if things wilt while still in their prime.
Not following Tao results in an untimely end.

He who by Tao purposes to help a ruler of men
Will oppose all conquest by force of arms;
For such things are wont to rebound.
Where armies are, thorns and brambles grow.
The raising of a great host
Is followed by a year of dearth.
Therefore a good general effects his purpose and then stops; he does not take further advantage of his victory.
Fulfils his purpose and does not glory in what he has done;
Fulfils his purpose and does not boast of what he has done;
Fulfils his purpose, but takes no pride in what he has done;
Fulfils his purpose, but only as a step that could not be avoided;
Fulfils his purpose, but without violence;
For what has a time of vigour also has a time of decay.
This is against Tao,
And what is against Tao will soon perish.

[30c18t] Richard John Lynn
One who would assist the ruler of men in accordance with the Dao does not use military force to gain power over all under Heaven.
As for such matters, he is wont to let them revert.
Where armies deploy, there thistles and thorns grow.
The aftermath of great military operations is surely a year of famine.
One good at this desists when result is had and dares not use the opportunity to seize military supremacy.
Have result but do not take credit for it;
have result but do not boast about it;
have result but do not take pride in it;
have result but only when there is no choice;
have result but do not try to gain military supremacy.
Once a thing reaches its prime, it grows old.
We say it goes against the Dao, and what is against the Dao comes to an early end.

(For) things age after reaching their prime.
That (violence) would be against the Tao.
And he who is against the Tao perishes young.

[30c20t] Victor H. Mair
One who assists the ruler of men with the Way does not use force of arms against all under heaven;
Such a course is likely to boomerang.
Where armies have been stationed, briars and brambles will grow.
A good general fulfills his purpose and that is all.
He does not use force to seize for himself.
He fulfills his purpose, but is not proud;
He fulfills his purpose, but is not boastful;
He fulfills his purpose, but does not brag;
He fulfills his purpose only because he has no other choice.
This is called "fulfilling one's purpose without using force."
If something grows old while still in its prime,
This is called "not being in accord with the Way."
Not being in accord with the Way leads to an early demise.

[30c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
If you would assist leaders of people by way of the Tao, you will oppose the use of armed force to overpower the world.
Those who use weapons will be harmed by them.
Where troops have camped only thorn bushes grow.
Bad harvests follow in the wake of a great army.
The skillful person strikes the blow and stops,

Bring it to a conclusion but do not be vain.
Bring it to a conclusion but do not be boastful.
Bring it to a conclusion but do not be arrogant.
Bring it to a conclusion but only when there is no choice.
Bring it to a conclusion but without violence.
When force is used, youthful strength decays.
This is not the way of Tao.
And that which goes against the Tao will quickly pass away.

One guided by Direction does not use military power to subdue the people in the world.

Reach objective, but boast not;
reach objective, but tout not;
reach objective, but show arrogance not;
Reaching objective is because there is no alternative;
Reaching objective does not call for flaunting power.
Matter withers after saturation.
This is not in line with Direction.
Not in line with Direction, early demise is the expectation.

[30c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Those who assist national leaders by means of the Tao,
Never use military force to make their nations world powers.
No action is ever without a repercussion:
Wherever an army is stationed, there grow briars and brambles.
Wherever a battle is fought, there follows a famine.
A good general in the direst necessity of a war
Achieves his purpose of winning the war,
But never seeks to gain power over others.
Therefore,
achieve your purpose, but only if it is called for;
Achieve your purpose, but never be haughty;
Achieve your purpose, but never be boastful;
Achieve your purpose, but never be supercilious;
Achieve your purpose, but never be overpowering.
Whenever something reaches an extreme in strength, it will inevitably decline.
This is called the way against the Tao.
The way against the Tao always leads to an early demise.

[30c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The person who helps a ruler of men with the Tao
Does not force the world with weapons.
He aims only to redeem the Tao,
And does not attempt to force his strength on others.
Bringing redemption, he does not attribute it to himself,
He does not boast much, he is not proud,
He thinks that it is his obligation to do so.
This is how redemption will be, without force.
When things reach their full power,
They begin their process of aging.
This goes against the Tao.
Whatever goes against the Tao will quickly come to an end.

it can only result in revenge.
After troops have tramped by only weeds and nettles grow in the broken ground.
There can be no harvest,
and everyone is left starving.
If you need to take action, only do what is necessary.
Never abuse your power.
And if you're successful, don't be smug;
If you are a success, don't trumpet it -
If you think you've won, never overdo it -
Those who use force soon end up without it -
And this is not the Way.
And if you do not follow the Way, you will die.

[30c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who assists the ruler by means of the Tao
Does not conquer other countries by the military force.
Military actions usually invite retaliatory aftermath:
Wherever armies station,
Thistles and thorns grow;
A great war is always followed
By a great famine.
He who is well versed in the art of war
Only uses the force to win the war,
And not to bully or conquer other countries.
Win the war but do not boast;
Win the war but do not brag;
Win the war but do not show arrogance;
Win the war but do know it is out of necessity;
Win the war but do not thereby bully and conquer other countries.
Whatever is in its prime is bound to decline;
For, being in prime is against the Tao;
Whatever goes against the Tao
Will come to an early end.

The ruler who rules his people with Tao need not show his force with an army.
If he who rules does so with the force of an army the others will return with the force of an army.
Wherever armies have marched,
thistles and thorns grow.
Whenever a great war has begun,
crop failure and famine follow.
That is why a good ruler would not dare to flaunt the power of his army.
He would not use the force to glory in the force.
He uses the army, yet with reserve and dignity.

He uses the army, yet with politeness.
He uses the army just because he is forced to do so.
That is what 'to show consideration and not force' means.
A strong army is like a creature in its prime:
it will only grow older.
This is the rule of Tao and that is the reason why one should not oppose the Tao.
He who opposes the Tao will meet an early end.

[30c28t] Liu Qixuan
Those who aid a government with the Way
Will not threaten the world with military power,
And are therefore returned with kindness in all affairs.
Where armies have stayed will grow only thorns and bush.
When military force dominates, an inauspicious year follows.
Wise leaders prefer natural results than uses of force.
And win victories that would result naturally.
They win without boasting about their valor,
Or feeling proud of their victories,
Or looking triumphant everywhere.
They win but feel guilty as if they were forced to it.
They win without military reinforcement.
Things that have become strong will begin to weaken.
That which weakens is against the Way.
What is against the Way cannot last long.

Warning Against The Use of Force
Lao Tze says,
If the king assists himself with the Tao, he will not assert his mastery in the world by force of arms.
He always seeks a consummate result.
Whenever a host has encamped, there will be briars and thorns grown.
In the sequences of great armies there are sure to be bad years.
The skillful ruler knows to attain a good result, he doesn't dare continue his operations to complete his mastery.
In anticipating a good result, being self-opinioned is not appropriate.
In anticipating a good result, take action only when there is no alternative course.
In anticipating a good result, being masterful is not appropriate.
When things have attained strong maturity, they become old.
This may be said to be not in accordance with the Tao.
And what is not in accordance with the Tao soon comes to an end.

And he will think that he was obliged to do it.
So it comes that relief is done without resorting to force.

Those who aid the ruler with Tao do not use military force to conquer the world.
Because this will invite retaliation.
Where the army stays, briers and thorns grow.
After a great war comes the year of adversity.
The good man stops after getting results.
Without daring to conquer.
He achieves results without bragging,
Achieves results without exalting,
Achieves results without arrogance,
Achieves results with reluctance,
Achieves results without conquering.

This is not Tao.
Not being Tao, it is sure to die early.

Those who act contrary to Truth are sure to perish early.

[30c34t] Yi Wu
One who aids the ruler with the Way
Does not use military force to be strong in the world.
It brings retribution.
Where an army is stationed,
Briers and thorns grow.
After a great war,
A bad year invariably follows.
The good one gets a result and stops;
He dares not attribute it to his strength.
He gets results but does not brag, gets results but does not boast,
gets results but is not arrogant,
gets results but does not make choices,
gets results but does not use force.
Anything that grows strong grows old.
This is called, "Not being with the Way".
Whatever is not with the Way will die early.

[30c35t] Han Hiong Tan
An enlightened minister prefers applying the principles of Dao to assist his sovereign in governing.
He is extremely reluctant to use force to subjugate others.
Using force always has repercussions.
Wherever the army passes through, the land is laid to waste and brambles grow.
After a major battle, there will be a famine the following year.
A moral person will only accomplish his task.
He will not be heavy-handed.
Achieving success, he is not ostentatious.
Accomplishing his task, he does not gloat.
Scoring victory, he is not arrogantly intransigent.
He goes to war in order to achieve his objective, only when he has no other choice.
Even after winning, he does not brutalise the vanquished.
Whenever anything reaches its peak, it starts to decline.
Moreover, excessive use of force is not in accordance with Dao.
Anything that goes against Dao will suffer an early demise.

[30c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One who assists a leader with the subtle truth of the universe advises him not to use the force of arms to try to conquer the world, for such things will always rebound.
It is generally the nature of weapons to turn against their wielders.
Whenever armies touch the land,

they turn it into a wasteland.
Moreover, plague and death invariably follow in the wake of a great war.
Therefore, a leader should be allowed to effect only a right purpose and not rely on the force of arms once his goal has been achieved.
He effects his right purpose,
but does not take pride in it.
He effects his right purpose as a regrettable necessity.
He effects his right purpose,
but does not delight in violence,
for he knows that to be excessively strong is to hasten decay and that violence is against the integral nature of the universe.
Whoever goes against the nature of the universe will soon perish.

[30c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Aiding in governing the kingdom through Tao means not depending on the superiority of arms.
Depending on the superiority of arms creates consequences.
Wherever there are armies, disorder occurs.
After a great battle, there is a year of deprivation.
Victory is merely the outcome of a contest.
One should not dare to claim superiority of power.
As victory is merely an outcome, one should not boast about it.
As it is merely an outcome, one should not show off because of it.
As it is merely an outcome, one should not be proud of it.
As it is merely an outcome, one cannot help but have it.
As it is merely an outcome, one should not claim superiority of power.
Claiming to be strong leads to decay.
This violates Tao.
That which violates Tao will not last long.

[30c38t] Henry Wei
Moderate Use of Force
Chien Wu
He who uses Tao to assist the ruler of a people
Will not employ armed force to dominate the world.
For such a scheme is apt to boomerang.
Where armies are quartered,
Briers and brambles abound.
After a great war, famine inevitably happens.
Therefore,
A good-natured man attains his objective and stops;
He dares not grab by violence.
He wants to attain his objective,
But does not extol it,
Nor brag about it, nor take pride in it.
He attains his objective as if it could not be helped,
And does not use it to practice violence.

For things, after their prime, will begin to decay.
Decay indicates disregard of Tao.
Whatever disregards Tao soon vanishes.

[30c39t] Ha Poong Kim
He who assists the ruler by Tao
Does not resort to arms to dominate all under Heaven by force.
This thing loves to rebound.
Where troops have encamped,
Brambles grow;
After the raising of great armies
A famine follows invariably.
A good man merely lets it bear fruit;
He does not seek to force it.
He lets it bear fruit; he is not vainglorious.
He lets it bear fruit; he is not boastful.
He lets it bear fruit; he is not arrogant.
He lets it bear fruit, out of necessity.
He lets it bear fruit and does not force it.
When a thing reaches its prime, it becomes old.
Forcing is called contrary to Tao.
What is contrary to Tao expires early.

[30c40t] Tao Huang
Using the Tao as the rule for governing the people,
Do not employ the army as the power of the world.
For this is likely to backfire.
Where the army has marched, thorns and briars grow.
Being good has its own consequence,
Which cannot be seized by power.
Achieving without arrogance,
Achieving without bragging,
Achieving without damage,
Achieving without taking ownership.
This is called achieving without force.
Matter becomes strong, then old.
This is called "Not-Tao."
Dying young is "Not-Tao."

[30c41t] Tang Zi-chang
A ruler who is in accord with Dao will never use military force to override the world,
Because this kind of affair ensures reciprocal killing.
Once an army has operated in the field there is nothing left growing but thorny bushes.
Once a great war is over, invariably there are horrible years following.
The perfect fighter is decisive, yet he does not allow himself to be violent.
Decisive but not proud;

Кто помогает государю на основе Дао, не подминает Поднебесную оружием.
В противном случае лишь ожидает крах.
Где стоит войско, там растут колючие кустарники.
После прохода большой армии настают голодные годы.
У искусного сбывается, и только!
Он не смеет брать оружием и подминать.
У него сбывается, и он не зазнается;
сбывается, и не кичится;
сбывается, и не гордится;
сбывается как неизбежное;
сбывается при том, что он не подминает.
На смену возмужалости, когда находятся в расцвете сил, приходит старость.
Это значит действовать вопреки Дао.
А тому, кто действует вопреки Дао, конец приходит рано.

Он не смеет прибегать к принуждению.
Он достигает цели и не восхваляет себя;

То, что противоречит Дао, сгинет до срока.

Тот, кто, обладая Дао-Путем, оказывает как советник помощь государю, оружие не применяет, дабы силой взять Поднебесную, ибо к нам возвращаются плоды деяний наших.
Там, где прошли войска, родится только терновник да репей колючий, а по пятам за войском следуют голодные годы.
Благому следующий полководец лишь цели должной достигает, и все.
Не смеет брать он то, что взять лишь силой можно.
Он достигает только должной цели и не гордится этим.
Он достигает только должной цели и не воюет более.
Он достигает только должной цели и не кичится этим.
Он достигает только должной цели и не более того.
Он достигает только должной цели и не творит насилий.
Когда живое существо сильно и крепко, но вдруг дряхлеет, говорят, что это результат утраты Дао.
Кто истинный теряет Дао-Путь, тот гибнет рано.

Добился успеха и не бахвалится.
Добился успеха и не карает.
Добился успеха и не своевольничает.
Добился успеха и не взимает.
Добился успеха и не прибегает к насилию.

Он побеждает и не гордится.
Он побеждает потому, что к этому его вынуждают.
Он побеждает, но он не воинствен.

Кто помогает царю по Тао, тот не будет заботиться о процветании страны посредством военной силы:
что бы вы ни сделали людям, они тем же воздадут вам.
Где войско стоит, там будет расти колючая трава (вместо хлеба).
После великой войны бывает неурожайный год.
Отсюда когда нравственный человек управляет (страной), то никогда не прибегает к грубой силе, не ищет тщеславия, не воюет, не гордится ничем, не останавливается нигде и не усиливается.
Когда вещь дойдет до полноты своего развития, то она ослабеет и дряхлеет.
То, что не Тао, быстро уничтожается.

[30c97t] В. В. Малявин
Тот, кто берет Путь в помощь господину людей,
Не подчиняет мир силой оружия:
Ибо это навлечет скорое возмездие.
Где стояло войско, там вырастут бурьян и колючки,
Где прошла война, там будет голодный год.
Искусный [стратег] ценит только плод
И не пользуется случаем, чтобы стать сильнее.
Одержав победу, не кичится;
Одержав победу, не бахвалится;
Одержав победу, не гордится.
Он побеждает словно поневоле.
Он побеждает - и не показывает силы.
Кто накопил силу, быстро одряхлеет,
Это означает "противиться Пути".
А кто противится Пути, скоро погибнет.

Если с мотивацией Пути помогаешь правителю людей, то не будешь посредством оружия усиливать Поднебесную.
В таких делах сильно воздаяние.
Там, где стоят войска, вырастают колючки и тернии.
За большими ратями следуют годы неудач и бедствий.
Наилучшее - добившись успеха, устраниться.
Не старайся через это получить силу.
В успехе не гордись.
В успехе не хвастай.
В успехе не возносись.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-One

486/2593

[31c01t] Robert G. Henricks
As for weapons - they are instruments of ill omen.
And among things there are those that hate them.
Therefore, the one who has the Way, with them does not dwell.
When the gentleman is at home, he honors the left;
When at war, he honors the right.
Therefore, weapons are not the instrument of the gentleman -
Weapons are instruments of ill omen.
When you have no choice but to use them, it's best to remain tranquil and calm.
You should never look upon them as things of beauty.
If you see them as beautiful things - this is to delight in the killing of men.
And when you delight in the killing of men, you'll not realize your goal in the land.
Therefore, in happy events we honor the left,
But in mourning we honor the right.
Therefore, the lieutenant general stands on the left;
And the supreme general stands on the right.
Which is to say, they arrange themselves as they would at a funeral.
When multitudes of people are killed, we stand before them in sorrow and grief.
When we're victorious in battle, we treat the occasion like a funeral ceremony.

[31c02t] John C. H. Wu
FINE weapons of war augur evil.
Even things seem to hate them.
Therefore, a man of Tao does not set his heart upon them.
In ordinary life, a gentleman regards the left side as the place of honour:
In war, the right side is the place of honour.
As weapons are instruments of evil,
They are not properly a gentleman's instruments;
Only on necessity will he resort to them.
For peace and quiet are dearest to his heart,
And to him even a victory is no cause for rejoicing.
To rejoice over a victory is to rejoice over the slaughter of men!
Hence a man who rejoices over the slaughter of men cannot expect to thrive in the world of men.
On happy occasions the left side is preferred:
On sad occasions the right side.
In the army, the Lieutenant Commander stands on the left,
While the Commander-in-Chief stands on the right.
This means that war is treated on a par with a funeral service.
Because many people have been killed, it is only right that survivors should mourn for them.
Hence, even a victory is a funeral.

It is because arms are instruments of ill omen and there are Things that detest them that one who has the way does not abide by their use.
The gentleman gives precedence to the left when at home, but to the right when he goes to war.
Arms are instruments of ill omen, not the instruments of the gentleman.
When one is compelled to use them, it is best to do so without relish.
There is no glory in victory, and to glorify it despite this is to exult in the killing of men.
One who exults in the killing of men will never have his way in the empire.
On occasions of rejoicing precedence is given to the left;
On occasions of mourning precedence is given to the right.
A lieutenant's place is on the left;
The general's place is on the right.
This means that it is mourning rites that are observed.
When great numbers of people are killed, one should weep over them with sorrow.
When victorious in war, one should observe the rites of mourning.

[31c04t] R. L. Wing
The finest weapons can be the instruments of misfortune,
And thus contrary to Natural Law.
Those who possess the Tao turn away from them.
Evolved leaders occupy and honor the left;
Those who use weapons honor the right.
Weapons are instruments of misfortune
That are used by the unevolved.
When their use is unavoidable,
The superior act with calm restraint.
Even when victorious, let there be no joy,
For such joy leads to contentment with slaughter.
Those who are content with slaughter
Cannot find fulfillment in the world.

[31c05t] Ren Jiyu
Weapons are instruments of evil,
They are disdained by everyone.
Therefore those who possess Tao stay away from them.
When at home jun-zi honours the left;
When at war he honours the right.
Weapons are the instruments of evil, not the instruments of jun-zi.
When he uses them unavoidably, he maintains an indifferent attitude.
Even when he is victorious, he doesn't think himself praiseworthy.
If he praises his victory, he is the man delighting in the slaughter of people.
He who delights in the slaughter of people will not succeed under Heaven.
On happy occasions, the left is honoured,
On unhappy occasions, the right is honoured.
The lieutenant-general stands on the left,
The senior general stands on the right.
That is to say that the arrangement of war affairs follows that of funeral ceremonies.

The war will slaughter the multitude of people,
So we should go to the battleground with sorrow and grief.
Even if it is won, we observe the occasion with funeral ceremonies.

[31c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Good weapons are instruments of fear; all creatures hate them.
Therefore followers of Tao never use them.
The wise man prefers the left.
The man of war prefers the right.
Weapons are instruments of fear; they are not a wise man's tools.
He uses them only when he has no choice.
Peace and quiet are dear to his heart,
And victory no cause for rejoicing.
If you rejoice in victory, then you delight in killing;
If you delight in killing, you cannot fulfill yourself.
On happy occasions precedence is given to the left,
On sad occasions to the right.
In the army the general stands on the left,
The commander-in-chief on the right.
This means that war is conducted like a funeral.
When many people are being killed,
They should be mourned in heartfelt sorrow.
That is why a victory must be observed like a funeral.

[31c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Fine weapons are ominous objects
And are detested by all living things.
For this reason the man who follows the Dao will stay away from them when possible.
The refined man respects life in his daily life.
(he "follows the left").
If he should resort to military force, he unavoidably destroys life (he "follows the right").
Weapons are ominous objects and are never the instruments of a refined person.
If ever he cannot avoid using them,
he must not make a big thing out of it.
Even if he wins the war,
he must not glorify the victory.
He who glorifies military victories takes pleasure in killing.
He who takes pleasure in killing will not win the support of the world.
Auspicious events are symbolized by the left;
Ominous events are symbolized by the right.
The next-in-command should take the left seat;
The chief-in-command should take the right seat.

This is to say that a military victory should be treated like a ceremony to honor the dead.
For those who kill, let us shed our tears upon them.
Upon winning a war, let us pay tribute to those who die with the rites of mourning.

[31c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Weapons are not auspicious, but very annoying.
So, people who follow the DAO do not use them.
Noble men value their left side in daily life and their right side in battle.
Weapons are not auspicious, not something noble men like to use.
They use them only when they have to, and they treat them like they do not matter.
After winning a war, do not be delighted.
Those who are delighted love to kill.
The people who love to kill cannot be allowed to control the country.
At celebrations, the left side is respected; at funerals, the right side is respected.
In a war, the subordinate is on the left side and the commander is on the right side.
Therefore, a war should be talked about like a funeral.
When many are killed, people should cry to show sadness.
Winning a war should be treated like a funeral.

[31c09t] Walter Gorn Old, CEASING FROM WAR
Weapons, however ornamental, are not a source of happiness, but are dreaded by all.
Therefore the man of Tao will not abide where such things are.
A respectable man at home sets the place of honour at his left hand; but the warrior on going forth to battle gives honour to the right hand. For weapons are things of ill omen, and the man of enlightenment does not use them except when he cannot help it.
His great desire is peace, and he does not take joy in conquest.
To joy in conquest is to joy in the loss of human life.
He who joys in bloodshed is not fit to govern the country.
When affairs are prosperous the left side is preferred, but when things are adverse the right is esteemed.
The adjutant-general is therefore on the left side, while the general-in-chief is on the right.
This I perceive is the manner also observed at a funeral!
He who has occasion to kill many people has cause for deep sorrow and tears.
Therefore a victorious army observes the order of a funeral.

[31c10t] James Legge
Now arms, however beautiful, are instruments of evil omen, hateful, it may be said, to all creatures.
Therefore they who have the Tao do not like to employ them.
The superior man ordinarily considers the left hand the most honourable place, but in time of war the right hand.
Those sharp weapons are instruments of evil omen, and not the instruments of the superior man;
- he uses them only on the compulsion of necessity.
Calm and repose are what he prizes;
victory (by force of arms) is to him undesirable.
To consider this desirable would be to delight in the slaughter of men;
and he who delights in the slaughter of men cannot get his will in the kingdom.
On occasions of festivity to be on the left hand is the prized position;

on occasions of mourning, the right hand.
The second in command of the army has his place on the left;
the general commanding in chief has his on the right;
- his place, that is, is assigned to him as in the rites of mourning.
He who has killed multitudes of men should weep for them with the bitterest grief;
and the victor in battle has his place (rightly) according to those rites.

[31c11t] David Hinton
Auspicious weapons are the tools of misfortune.
Things may not all despise such tools,
but a master of the Way stays clear of them.
The noble-minded treasure the left when home and the right when taking up weapons of war.
Weapons are tools of misfortune, not tools of the noble-minded.
When there's no other way,
they take up weapons with tranquil calm,
finding no glory in victory.
To find glory in victory is to savor killing people,
and if you savor killing people you'll never guide all beneath heaven.
We honor the left in celebrations and honor the right in lamentations, so captains stand on the left and generals on the right.
But use them both as if conducting a funeral:
when so many people are being killed
it should be done with tears and mourning.
And victory too should be conducted like a funeral.

[31c12t] Chichung Huang
Weapons are inauspicious instruments
Which people all loathe.
Therefore, he who possesses the Tao
Does not accumulate.
The gentleman ordinarily honors the left;
At war, he honors the right.
Therefore, weapons are not the gentleman's instruments.
Weapons being inauspicious instruments,
If you cannot but use them,
It is best to cover up their sharp blades;
Do not relish them.
If you relish them,
It means you enjoy killing men.
He who enjoys killing men
Cannot be allowed to prevail in the empire.
Hence, on auspicious occasions,
Precedence is given to the left;

In mourning,
Precedence is given to the right.
Hence, a lieutenant general stands left;
A senior general stands right,
Meaning it is handled with mourning rituals.
If the number of men killed is multitudinous,
Preside over it in grief.
After winning a war,
Handle it with mourning rituals.

[31c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Military weapons are implements (ch'i) of ill omen,
Avoided (o) even by natural creatures (wu).
Hence the Taoist does not indulge (ch'u) in them.
The princely person (chün-tzu) in dwelling honors the left,
In military campaigns honors the right.
Hence military weapons are not implements of a princely person.
Military weapons, being implements of ill omen,
Are to be employed only in dire necessity.
Better to regard them with lack of interest.
Do not admire (mei) them.
If one admires (mei) them,
One would be rejoicing in the killing of people.
But whoever rejoices in the killing of people,
Will not be successful (chih) in the world.
Therefore in joyful affairs the left is honored,
In mournful affairs the right is honored.
The Second-in-Command takes the place of the left,
The Commander-in-Chief takes the place of the right,
Meaning that this is his place in the funeral rite.
When many people have been killed,
Wail them with sorrow and lamentations.
When victorious in battle,
Mark the occasion with the rite (li) of funeral.

Excellent armaments and proficient armies are ominous instruments, even animals detest them [because of their violent disposition];
Therefore a person who quests for Tao shall not make much use of them [unless it is the last resort].
[By decree of the traditional Propriety Ritual (Li)] In court:
In times of peace, the left side of the king is considered the superior placement;
But, in times of battles, the right side of the king is deemed superior.
Military devices are ominous instruments, so they are not instruments for gentlemen;
A Gentleman only employs them when he has exhausted all other options, even so he would still struggle hard to avert the situation;
He does not celebrate victory, for the glorification of victory would condone the killing of people;

Whoever endorses killing of people can never become a leader of the world.
[According to the traditional Propriety Ritual (Li):]
Ceremonies for fortunate (happy) occasions designates the left side as superior, whereas ceremonies for unfortunate (unhappy) occasions assigns the right side as superior.
However, for military ceremonies [the representation is reversed]:
[the inferior] deputy (strategic) generals are placed on the left side, while the leading (combating) generals are placed on the right side;
[After each battle the commander-in-chief] must cry out with moan and tears to mourn the dead in the ceremony, because many people were killed.
Accordingly, even the [happy] ceremony for celebrating the victory was modeled after the rituals of funerals.

[31c15t] Tien Cong Tran
Good weapons are instruments of evil.
Even things seem to hate them.
Therefore the man of the Way does not set his heart upon them.
A superior man prefers the left side when at home, prefers the right side when in war.
Weapons are instruments of evil.
They are not the instruments of the superior man.
He uses them when he has no choice.
He prefers peace and quiet.
To him victory is not beautiful.
To glorify a victory is to rejoice over killing men.
If one rejoices over killing men, one will not conquer the will of the world.
Many people have been killed, one should weep over them with sorrow.
A victory is also a funeral.

[31c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Weapons are destructive.
They are generally disliked.
Therefore, Tao-followers avoid them.
At home, Gentlemen are happy in left seats.
When in war, gentlemen prefer to the right.
Since weapons are destructive, they are not gentlemen's tools.
They are used as a last resort.
It is better to be cautious.
After winning, one should not glorify the victory.
By glorifying war, one takes delight in killing.
Those who take delight in killing will not win the world.
In joyful events the left is honored.
In funerals the right side is honored.
The lieutenant commander positions to the left.
The command-in-chief positions to the right.
This is following funeral convention.
When casualties are heavy, honor the deaths with grief.
Treat victory as if it is a funeral.

Fine weapons are none the less ill-omened things.
That is why, among people of good birth, in peace the left-hand side is the place of honour, but in war this is reversed and the right-hand side is the place of honour.
The Quietist, even when he conquers, does not regard weapons as lovely things.
For to think them lovely means to delight in them, and to delight in them means to delight in the slaughter of men.
And he who delights in the slaughter of men will never get what he looks for out of those that dwell under heaven.
A host that has slain men is received with grief and mourning; he that has conquered in battle is received with rites of mourning.

[31c18t] Richard John Lynn

Weapons are instruments of ill omen.
The people always hate them, so one who has the Dao has nothing to do with them.
When the noble man is at home, he honors the left and, when employing troops, honors the right.
Weapons are instruments of ill omen;
they are not the instruments of the noble man, who uses them only when there is no choice.
It is best to be utterly dispassionate [tiandan] about them, and, even if they bring victory, one should not praise them.
Nevertheless, to praise them means that one delights in slaughtering people, and one who delights in slaughtering people, of course, can never achieve the goal of ruling all under Heaven.
For auspicious matters, one honors the left, and, for inauspicious matters, one honors the right.
A deputy general takes his place on the left, but a general-in-chief takes his place on the right, where mourning rites are observed.
When masses of people are slaughtered, one should weep for them with utmost sadness, so, when victorious in war, one should observe it with mourning rites.

WEAPONS OF EVIL
Of all things, soldiers are instruments of evil,
Hated by men.
Therefore the religious man (possessed of Tao) avoids them.
The gentleman favors the left in civilian life,
But on military occasions favors the right.
Soldiers are weapons of evil.
They are not the weapons of the gentleman.
When the use of soldiers cannot be helped,
The best policy is calm restraint.
Even in victory, there is no beauty,
And who calls it beautiful
Is one who delights in slaughter.
He who delights in slaughter
Will not succeed in his ambition to rule the world.
[The things of good omen favor the left.
The things of ill omen favor the right.

Now,

Therefore,
A deputy general stands on the left,

In a place where armies are stationed, only thorns and thistles grow.
Years of misery always accompany great wars.
When the man of Tao stays at home,
His left is his place of honor,
And when using weapons,
His right is his place of honor.
He uses weapons
Only when he cannot avoid doing so.
He does not rejoice in his conquests.
If he rejoices in his conquests,
It means that he enjoys killing and slaughter.
The person who enjoys killing people,
Cannot realize his aspirations in the world.
In matters of bringing honor, the place of honor is on the left;
In the opposite matters, the place of honor is on the right.
The adjutant-general takes his place on the left,
The general's place is on the right,
And this means that it is a funeral procession.
The slaughter of many people leads to deep and protracted mourning.
Victory in battle is immortalized in a funeral procession.

The guide who walks the Way
Never resorts to violence.
The sage goes to the left side of the Emperor;
while the man of war goes to the right.
Weapons are terrible things -
and no sage will have anything to do with them, unless there is no alternative.
The sage wants peace and quiet.
No victory is free of grief,
and so to celebrate one is to glory in the death of innocent people.
No one who revels in death like this can be true to the Way
or is fit to rule in our world.
At glad times, the place of honour is on the left:
after disaster, it is on the right.
So in the army, the officers stand to the left while the general stands to the right.
So the whole thing is staged like a funeral.
When a war kills many, we must mourn for them -
And if you win the war, you must grieve it.

The gentleman usually favours the left,
But when being at war, he favours the right.
Arms are tools of ill omen,
Not the instruments of the gentleman.
Even if compelled to use them,
The gentleman does not use them with pleasure.
Even if being the victor,
The gentleman does not glorify the victory.
He who glorifies the victory
Is such one as takes delight in killing.
He who takes delight in killing
Can never be successful in winning the empire.
On occasions of auspicious celebration the left is favoured;
On occasions of mourning the right is favoured.
A lieutenant's position is on the left;
A general's position is on the right.
That is to say, mourning rites should be observed in military operations.
War brings about heavy casualties,
So one should take part in it with deep sorrow.
When winning the victory, victors should treat the dead by observing the rites of mourning.

Weapons are cursed instruments.
They are something to hate.
Therefore he who holds the Tao will not use them.
A virtuous man keeps to the left position in his daily life, but values the right in times of war.
Weapons are cursed instruments and not made for virtuous men.
He who uses them against his will will handle them with great concern.
One should regard victory as something ugly.
He who regards it as beautiful enjoys killing and will not achieve his ambition under Heaven.
A lucky event is honoured by the left position, an unlucky event by the right.
In preparation for war, a lieutenant stands on the left,
a general stands on the right.
This means that the matter is treated as a funeral.
Cry with sorrow when many people are killed.
Regard it as a period of mourning when the battle is won.

Having achieved a victory, one should not beautify it.
Those who beautify wars like killing.
Those who like killing cannot be accepted by the world.
The left is valued on auspicious occasions.
And the right on inauspicious occasions.
On the battle field, the assistant general is on the left.
And the general on the right.
Such positioning treats the war as a burial ceremony.
The wise person mourns when too many have died,
Holds a burial ceremony rather than victory celebration.

The Unlucky Emblem
Lao Tze says,
The strong military force is an unlucky emblem to the state, thus all living creatures would abhor it.
The Tao practicians should not promote it too.
The upright man ordinarily considers the left hand the most honorable place, but in time of war the right hand.
The military force is an unlucky emblem, it is not the emblem for the upright man.
It is manipulated on the compulsion of necessity.
Calm and repose should be prized;
victory is not regarded as a beautiful work.
Whoever regards victory as a beautiful work, he is one who takes delight in killing men.
Whoever likes to kill men will not succeed in his ambition to rule the world.
On occasion of rejoicing, precedence is given to the left;
on occasion of mourning, precedence is given to the right.
The second in command of an army has his place on the left;
the chief commander has position of the right;
this says: a funeral is taking place.
The lamentation is observed for the numerous dead who were killed on the battlefield.
Thus, a victory ceremony is being held in the funeral rite.

[31c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
So far as arms are concerned, they are implements of ill-omen.
They are not implements for the man of Tao.
For the actions of arms will be well requited; where armies have been quartered brambles and thorns grow.

The man of Tao when dwelling at home makes the left as the place of honour, and when using arms makes the right as the place of honour.
He uses them only when he cannot avoid it.
In his conquests he takes no delight.
If he take delight in them, it would mean that he enjoys in the slaughter of men.

All things are likely to hate them.
So those with Tao do not want to deal with them.
The gentleman who stays at home values the left;
In war, he values the right.
Weapons are the tools of evil,
not the tools of the gentleman.
When he uses them unavoidably, he is most calm and detached
And does not glorify his victory.
To glorify means to relish the murder of people,
Relishing the murder of people,
One cannot exercise his will in the world.
Happy occasions prefer the left.
Sorrowful occasions prefer the right.
The lieutenant-general is placed on the left.
The general-in-chief is placed on the right.
This means observing this occasion with funeral rites.
Having killed many people, one should lament with sorrow and grief.
Victory in war must be observed with funeral rites.

glorify them.
To glorify them means taking delight in the killing of men.
Those who take delight in the killing of men cannot win the approval of the whole Empire.
The weapons of war are the implements of disaster, and they are detestable.
Therefore they are spurned by the followers of Truth.
Ordinarily the ruler esteems the left hand, but in war he esteems the right hand.
On joyful occasions, the left-hand side is the place of honour, but on mournful occasions, the right-hand side is the place of honour.
The general second in command is seated on the left-hand side, and the general-in-chief is seated on the right-hand side.
All these indicate that war should be regarded as a mournful occasion.
When many people are killed, it should be an occasion for the expression of bitter grief.
Even when a victory is scored, the occasion should be regarded as lamentable.

[31c34t] Yi Wu
Fine weapons are things of ill omen.
All beings may dislike them;
Therefore, one who follows the Way does not live with them.
Ordinarily, a superior man values the left side;

Weapons are things of ill omen, not a superior man's things.
He uses them only when unavoidable.
He regards contentment as best.
Even if he wins, victory is not beautiful.
To find a victory beautiful is to rejoice at killing people.
One who rejoices at killing people can never attain his will in the world.
On fortunate occasions, the left side is elevated;
On unfortunate occasions, the right side is elevated.
The lieutenant-general stays on the left;

Only during war does the right side become the preferred choice.
A weapon is an instrument of bad omen.
It is never the favourite object of the man of virtue.

No bloodthirsty person has ever won universal respect or approval.
The left side represents good auspices.
The right side augurs bad omen.
The second-in-command resides on the left side, whereas the commander-in-chief resides on the right.
In conducting the war, the mood is as dark and solemn as that of a funeral rite.
During the conflict, you should still mourn for the heavy casualties you have inflicted.
In victory, you should bury the dead with appropriate ceremony.

[31c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Weapons are instruments of killing and destruction, which are contrary to the nature of life.
Thus, they are avoided by those who follow the subtle Way of the universe.
According to ancient social custom, in times of peace a gentleman regards the left side, the soft hand, as the place of honor;
in times of war, the right side, the strong hand, is considered the place of honor.
Because weapons are inauspicious,
they are not the instruments of a gentleman.
Only when one has no other choice may one resort to using them, and, if their use is necessary, one must employ calmness and restraint, for peace and quiet are the normal nature of universal life.
Even in victory there is no cause for excitement and rejoicing.
To rejoice over a victory is to delight in killing and destruction.
He who delights in killing and destruction cannot be expected to thrive for long in the world.
Therefore, on happy occasions the left side has precedence, while on sad occasions, it is the right side.
When this rite was applied in the army, the lieutenant-commander stood at the left, while the commander-in-chief stood on the right.
This indicates that war is treated as the equivalent of a funeral service.
Because many people have been caused an unnatural death in war,
it is only right that the survivors should mourn them.
Even when a victory is won,
the occasion should be regarded as lamentable.

Fine weapons are inauspicious instruments.
They are probably detested by the people.
Therefore, he who is possessed of Tao rejects them.
The superior man honors the left in time of peace;
In time of war he honors the right.
Weapons are inauspicious instruments;
They are not instruments for the superior man.
He uses them only under dire necessity,
And in this case priority is given to moderation.
He does not consider victory a fine thing.
Those who consider victory a fine thing
Are those who delight in slaughtering people.
Those who delight in slaughtering people
Can never gratify their ambition to win the world.
Therefore, the left is favored for felicitous occasions;
For mournful occasions, the right is favored.
The second-in-command stands on the left,

Mass slaughter is to be bewailed with grief and sorrow.
Victory is to be mourned with funeral rites.

The army is the mechanism of bad luck.
The elements of the world may oppose.
So those who have ambitions cannot rest.
Therefore the nobleman takes his place on the left side,
And the commander on the right side.
So the army is not the nobleman's weapon.
As a mechanism of bad luck,
He uses it only as the last resort.
Then the best way is to use it quickly and destructively.
Do not enjoy this.
To take delight in it is to enjoy killing people.
Those who enjoy killing people do not attract the favor of the world.
The good inclines to the left,
The bad inclines to the right.
Thus the intelligent officer stays on the left,
The army commander stays on the right.
Speaking in an image of sadness,
After killing the people, every one stands in mourning.
Victory is celebrated as a funeral service.

War is an unlucky instrument.
It is hated by everything!
Thus a man of Dao will never resort to use it.

the position taken by a war conductor is on the left - less honorable side.
War is an unlucky instrument, it is not the instrument of a gentle ruler.
They are obligated to die and utilized by the authority.
To keep calm and have peace of mind is to be superior.
Victory of war is not delightful:
if one delights in war, he delights in killing people;
if one delights in killing people, it will never be possible for him to be at peace with the world.
Thus on happy occasions the right side is honored.
On sad occasions the left side is honored.
During a war, many people are killed,
It should be taken mournfully.
Even a victory should be treated as a funeral.

[31c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Fine weapons are instruments of evil.
They are hated by men.
Therefore those who possess Tao turn away from them.
The good ruler when at home honors the left.

When at war he honors the right.
Weapons are instruments of evil, not the instruments of a good ruler.
When he uses them unavoidably, he regards calm restraint as the best principle.
Even when he is victorious, he does not regard it as praiseworthy,
For to praise victory is to delight in the slaughter of men.
He who delights in the slaughter of men will not succeed in the empire.
In auspicious affairs, the left is honored.
In inauspicious affairs, the right is honored.
The lieutenant general stands on the left.
The senior general stands on the right.
This is to say that the arrangement follows that of funeral ceremonies.
For the slaughter of the multitude, let us weep with sorrow and grief.
For a victory, let us observe the occasion with funeral ceremonies.

[31c91t] И. И. Семененко
Отличное оружие - несчастья инструмент.
Его, кажется, никто не любит.
И им не ведает, у кого Дао.
Благородный муж обычно самой ценной стороной считает левую,
когда же он берется за оружие, то ценит правую.
Оружие - несчастья инструмент,
и благородный муж его своим не признает.
Он пользуется им лишь по необходимости.
Считает наилучшим сохранять невозмутимость и не восторгаться победой на войне.
Ведь ею восторгаться - значит радоваться убиению людей.
А кто радуется убиению людей - не может быть главою Поднебесной.
В праздничной обрядности дорожат левой стороной, в траурной предпочитают правую.
Подчиненные военачальника находятся на левой стороне, сам он занимает место справа.
Значит, они размещаются согласно погребальному обряду, и им при множестве убитых следует оплакивать их с горечью и скорбью.
Победа на войне заслуживает погребального обряда.

[31c92t] А. А. Маслов
Оружие - инструмент зла.
Даже вещи - и те ненавидят его.
Поэтому ему нет места у того, кто овладел Дао.
Благородный муж, будучи дома, предпочитает левую сторону, а отправляясь в поход - правую.
Оружие - инструмент зла, а не орудие благородного мужа.
И он не пользуется им, пока его к этому не принудят;
а главное - делает это в равнодушии к славе и выгоде, побеждает, но не стремится к славе.
Стремящийся же к славе получает удовольствие, убивая людей.
Тот, кто получает удовольствие, убивая людей, никогда не сможет повелевать Поднебесной.
В случае радостного события обращайся влево, в случае печального события - вправо.
Место помощника полководца - слева, место полководца - справа.
Это значит, что приходит время погребальных обрядов.
Когда гибнет великое множество людей, кто-то должен оплакивать их, скорбя.

Даже когда достигнута победа в сражении, должно найтись место и погребальным обрядам.

[31c93t] Е. А. Торчинов

Оружие недоброго знамения вестник.
Поэтому все существа оружие и брань всем сердцем ненавидят.
Поэтому тот муж, что Дао обладает, его не применяет никогда.
Муж благородный, пребывая дома, ценит левую сторону, а применяя оружие, предпочитает правую.
Оружие недоброго знамения вестник.
Оно не есть орудие благородных мужей.
И только если нет иного выбора, его возможно применить.
Муж благородный ценит всего превыше мир и покой.
И даже коль в войне он побеждает, тому не радуется он нимало: ведь радоваться ей - то же самое, что наслаждаться убиением людей.
А тот, кто наслаждается смертоубийством, неспособен направить свою волю на благо Поднебесной.
Ведь когда празднуют нечто хорошее, то выбирают левую сторону, а когда оплакивают и скорбят, то выбирают правую.
Вот почему генерал-адъютант слева, а главнокомандующий войском справа.
Их расположение соответствует траурному ритуалу.
В войне погибло много людей, о них надо скорбеть, печалиться и плакать.
А победу в войне достойно отмечать лишь погребальным ритуалом.

[31c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов

Превосходное войско - орудие несчастья, любой из людей ненавидит его.
Поэтому обладающие Дао не состоят в нем.
Если благородный муж на мирной службе, то поддерживает левых.
Если на военной службе, то поддерживает правых.
Войско - орудие несчастья и не орудие благородного мужа.
Если вопреки желанию приходится все-таки использовать его,
то сверх всего ставь равнодушие к славе и выгоде.
Одержав победу, не считай это прекрасным.
А если сочтешь это прекрасным, то, значит, радуешься убийству людей.
Кто радуется убийству людей, тот не сможет добиться своих целей в Поднебесной.
Служение счастью относится к левому.
Служение злу относится к правому.
Противостоящие командующим войсками занимают позицию левых.
Идущие в командующие войсками занимают позицию правых.
Правильно говорят, что следует встречать их (войско) похоронным ритуалом.
Всех убитых людей следует горестно и скорбно оплакивать.
Военную победу нужно встречать похоронным ритуалом.

[31c95t] Ян Хин-шун

Хорошее войско - средство, [порождающее] несчастье, его ненавидят все существа.
Поэтому человек, следующий дао, его не употребляет.
Благородный [правитель] во время мира предпочитает быть уступчивым [в отношении соседних стран] и лишь на войне применяет насилие.
Войско - орудие несчастья, поэтому благородный [правитель] не стремится использовать его, он применяет его, только когда его к этому вынуждают.

Главное состоит в том, чтобы соблюдать спокойствие, а в случае победы себя не прославлять.
Прославлять себя победой - это значит радоваться убийству людей.
Тот, кто радуется убийству людей, не может завоевать сочувствия в стране.
Благополучие создается уважением, а несчастье происходит от насилия.
Слева строятся военачальники флангов, справа стоит полководец.
Говорят, что их нужно встретить похоронной процессией.
Если убивают многих людей, то об этом нужно горько плакать.
Победу следует отмечать похоронной процессией.

[31c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Благоустроенное войско есть нечестивое орудие, есть предмет по своему существу злой.
Мудрец предпочитает левую сторону правой, ибо употребляющие войско предпочитают правую сторону левой.
Войско есть нечестивое орудие, поэтому оно не может быть орудием для (истинно) мудрых.
Отсюда, оно и употребляется только в неизбежных случаях.
Хотя война ставит, быть может, целью спокойствие, но она несомненное зло.
Если б она была добро, то нужно было бы радоваться ей, но радуется ей лишь любящий убивать людей.
Любящий убивать людей не может осуществить свой добрый замысел в мире.
При добром деле левая сторона предпочитается правой, а при беде - правая левой.
Подчиненные генералы останавливаются на левой стороне, а начальствующие - на правой.
Когда сделается известной победа, то следует встретить эту весть с траурным обрядом, ибо на войне очень многие погибают.
Так как на войне очень многие погибают, то следует оплакивать войну.
Когда война окончится победою, следует объявить всеобщий траур.

[31c97t] В. В. Малявин
Доброе оружие - зловещее орудие.
Многим вещам оно ненавистно,
И тот, кто имеет Путь, его не держит.
Благой государь в своем доме чтит левое,
А, идя войной, чтит правое.
Оружие - зловещее орудие, благородный муж его не держит,
Применяют его, только если к тому принудят,
И применять его нужно сдержанно и бесстрастно.
Одержав победу, не гордись содеянным,
Кто гордится победой, тот радуется убийству.
А кто рад убийству, тот не преуспеет в мире.
В счастливых событиях ценится левое,
В несчастных событиях ценится правое.
Младший полководец стоит слева,
Старший полководец стоит справа:
Значит, они стоят как на похоронах.
На убийство множества людей откликайтесь скорбным плачем,
Победу на войне отмечайте траурным обрядом.

Даже самое хорошее оружие - это инструмент, который не предвещает блага.
Любая вещь может пострадать от него.
Причинность:

применяя оружие, ценит правое.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Two

508/2593

[32c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The Tao is constantly nameless.
Though in its natural state it seems small, no one in the world dares to treat it as a subject.
Were marquises and kings able to maintain it,
The ten thousand things would submit to them on their own,
And Heaven and Earth would unite to send forth sweet dew.
By nature it would fall equally on all things, with no one among the people ordering that it be so.
As soon as we start to establish a system, we have names.
And as soon as there are set names,
Then you must also know that it's time to stop.
By knowing to stop - in this way you'll come to no harm.
The Way's presence in the world
Is like the relationship of small valley [streams] to rivers and seas.

[32c02t] John C. H. Wu
TAO is always nameless.
Small as it is in its Primal Simplicity,
It is inferior to nothing in the world.
If only a ruler could cling to it,
Everything will render homage to him.
Heaven and Earth will be harmonized
And send down sweet dew.
Peace and order will reign among the people
Without any command from above.
When once the Primal Simplicity diversified,
Different names appeared.
Are there not enough names now?
Is this not the time to stop?
To know when to stop is to preserve ourselves from danger.
The Tao is to the world what a great river or an ocean is to the streams and brooks.

[32c03t] D. C. Lau
The way is for ever nameless.
Though the uncarved block is small
No one in the world dare claim its allegiance.
Should lords and princes be able to hold fast to it
The myriad creatures will submit of their own accord,
Heaven and earth will unite and sweet dew will fall,
And the people will be equitable, though no one so decrees.
Only when it is cut are there names.
As soon as there are names
One ought to know that it is time to stop.

Knowing when to stop one can be free from danger.
The way is to the world as the River and the Sea are to rivulets and streams.

[32c04t] R. L. Wing
The Tao of the Absolute has no name.
Although infinitesimal in its Simplicity,
The world cannot master it.
If leaders would hold on to it,
All Things would naturally follow.
Heaven and Earth would unite to rain Sweet Dew,
And people would naturally cooperate without commands.
Names emerge when institutions begin.
When names emerge, know likewise to stop.
To know when to stop is to be free of danger.
The presence of the Tao in the world
Is like the valley stream joining the rivers and seas.

[32c05t] Ren Jiyu
Tao has no name forever.
Though the simplicity seems small, it may be subordinated to nothing under Heaven.
If kings and princes can preserve it, all creatures would submit of themselves to them.
(Yin and Yang between) Heaven and Earth unite to drip sweet dew,
Without the command of the people, it drips evenly over all.
Once there was government, there were names appearing.
Once there were names, one has to know where and when to stop.
By practising moderation one can be free from danger.
Everything under Heaven is embraced by Tao, just like every river or stream running into the sea.

[32c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The Tao is forever undefined.
Small though it is in the unformed state, it cannot be grasped.
If kings and lords could harness it,
The ten thousand things would naturally obey.
Heaven and earth would come together
And gentle rain fall.
Men would need no more instruction and all things would take their course.
Once the whole is divided, the parts need names.
There are already enough names.
One must know when to stop.
Knowing when to stop averts trouble.
Tao in the world is like a river flowing home to the sea.

[32c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Dao has always been nameless and simple.
Though humble, it is never subservient to anyone under heaven.
Still, if kings and barons would follow the Dao steadfastly

All the living things on earth would benefit and pay them homage.
It is the interaction of heaven and earth that brings rain to all the living things.
Heaven and earth are not at the command of anyone.
Yet all living things benefit from their actions.
Humans since the beginning of time have established all kinds of traditions and have named names.
Should they then not know when to stop?
Those who know when to stop know no death.
Just as the rivers and valleys bring water to the sea,
So the Dao brings all living things to the Ultimate.

[32c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The DAO has no name, but it is always present.
It is simple and small, but no one can conquer it.
If the kings are able to practice it, everybody will come and obey by themselves.
The heavens and the earth will be in harmony,
And rain will pour down from the sky.
People will take care of themselves without need of the law.
Since there were names, everything got its own place.
People should know when to stop;
If they know when to stop, they can avoid disasters.
The world comes to the DAO like every stream and river comes to the ocean.

[32c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INTELLIGENT VIRTUE
Tao the absolute has no name.
But although insignificant in its original simplicity, the world does not presume to bemean it.
If a king could lay hold on it, the world would of itself submit to him.
Heaven and Earth would conspire to nourish him.
The people without pressure would peacefully fall into their own places.
If he should dispose them by titles and names, he would be making a name for himself.
Yet he would wisely stop short of the name, and thus avoid the evil of distinctions.
Tao is to the world what the streams and valleys are to the great rivers and seas.

[32c10t] James Legge
The Tao, considered as unchanging, has no name.
Though in its primordial simplicity it may be small, the whole world dares not deal with (one embodying) it as a minister.
If a feudal prince or the king could guard and hold it, all would spontaneously submit themselves to him.
Heaven and Earth (under its guidance) unite together and send down the sweet dew, which, without the directions of men, reaches equally everywhere as of its own accord.
As soon as it proceeds to action, it has a name.
When it once has that name, (men) can know to rest in it.
When they know to rest in it, they can be free from all risk of failure and error.
The relation of the Tao to all the world is like that of the great rivers and seas to the streams from the valleys.

Way is perennially nameless, an uncarved simplicity.
Though small,
it's subject to nothing in all beneath heaven.
But when lords or emperors foster it,
the ten thousand things gladly become their guests,
heaven mingling with earth sends down sweet dew,
and the people free of mandates share justice among themselves.
When a governing blade begins carving it up, names arise.
Once names arise,
know that it's time to stop.
Knowing when to stop, you can avoid danger.
Way flowing through all beneath heaven:
it's like valley streams flowing into rivers and seas.

[32c12t] Chichung Huang
The Tao is constant and nameless.
The unhewn log, though tiny,
None under heaven dare subjugate.
If marquises and kings can adhere to it,
The ten thousand things will submit to them spontaneously.
When heaven and earth integrate
To drip sweet dew,
Without anyone ordering them,
It is evenly distributed spontaneously.
With the first cutting,
Names emerged.
Names having emerged,
One should also know where to stop.
Knowing where to stop
Will thereby exempt one from peril.
The Tao's relation to all under heaven
Is like small valley streams
To a river or an ocean.

[32c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Tao everlasting (ch'ang) is the nameless uncarved wood (p'u).
Though small,
Nothing under heaven can subjugate it (mo neng ch'en).
If kings and barons can abide by (shou) it,
All creatures will arrive as guests (pin) to a banquet.
Heaven and earth unite,
To send down the sweet rain.
Without being commanded by the people (mo chih ling),
It falls evenly (chün) by itself.
At the beginning of institution names come to be.

Once there are names,
One must know when to stop (chih chih).
One who knows when to stop does not become exhausted (pu tai).
Tao in the world is like
Valley streams flowing into rivers and seas.

[32c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Tao [in its entirety] is always indescribable;
Simplicity (the fundamental Truth) is though too subtle [to be detectable], yet nobody on earth can afford not to subject to its command;
If kings and lords can maintain it (Tao), myriad things and creatures will subordinate to them voluntarily as [acquiescent] visitors;
If Heaven and Earth (human world) are corroborating harmoniously, then [like the legend had described], there will be "sweet [timely] dews befall on Earth";
[In other words, a proper society thus formed is impelled by principles of seeking] "fairness and equal opportunity for all the people even though people did not call out for it."
Originally, the initiation of our system (government) is [necessitated by practical need which is] describable;
Since there is justification [of government's existence] we shall draw a line to limit [its power];
In spite of the fact that we recognize the necessity for the limitation of [power of government and each system of government has its limitation], we still should not let it suspend [our quest for eking out better systems].
This illustrates that Tao is to be manifested in this world [little by little gradually], like numerous [tiny] streams and waterways converged together [one by one] to form huge rivers and seas.

[32c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The Way is always nameless.
Small as it is in its uncarved block, it is inferior to nothing in the world.
If only a king or a prince could abide with it, all things in the world will render homage to him.
Heaven and Earth are in harmony and send down sweet dew.
Without being commanded to do so, the people live in peace and order.
When the original diversifies, different names arise.
When names arise, one should know it is time to stop.
To know when to stop is to be free from danger.
The Way is to the world what a great river or an ocean is to the streams and brooks.

[32c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Tao does not have a name and is simple.
It is small, but no one can rule it.
If kings and nobles can follow it, the people themselves would be submissive.
When heaven and earth work together, rain is produced.
Nobody gives the order, it is produced naturally.
When a regulation is initiated, it should have a reason.
When there is a reason, we need to know where to stop.
If we know where to stop, we may avoid failure.
Tao to the world is like the sea to the rivers.

[32c17t] Arthur Waley

Tao is eternal, but has no fame (name);
The Uncarved Block, though seemingly of small account,
Is greater than anything that is under heaven.
If kings and barons would but possess themselves of it,
The ten thousand creatures would flock to do them homage;
Heaven-and-earth would conspire
To send Sweet Dew,
Without law or compulsion, men would dwell in harmony.
Once the block is carved, there will be names,
And so soon as there are names
Know that it is time to stop.
Only by knowing when it is time to stop can danger be avoided.
To Tao all under heaven will come
As streams and torrents flow into a great river or sea.

[32c18t] Richard John Lynn

The Dao in its constancy is "nameless."
Although the uncarved block is small, none under Heaven can make it his servitor [chen], but, if any lord or prince could hold on to it, the myriad folk would submit spontaneously.
As when Heaven and Earth unite to send down sweet dew, though not one of the people are ordered to do so, they live in harmony of their own accord.
When the cutting of it starts, names come into existence.
Once names exist, one should know to stop.
It is by knowing to stop that danger can be avoided.
As an analogy, the relationship between the Dao and all under Heaven is similar to the way streams and tributaries respond to the river and the sea.

[32c19t] Lin Yutang

TAO IS LIKE THE SEA
Tao is absolute and has no name.
Though the uncarved wood is small,
It cannot be employed (used as vessel) by anyone.
If kings and barons can keep (this unspoiled nature),
The whole world shall yield them lordship of their own accord.
The Heaven and Earth join,
And the sweet rain falls,
Beyond the command of men,
Yet evenly upon all.
Then human civilization arose and there were names.
Since there were names,
It were well one knew where to stop.
He who knows where to stop
May be exempt from danger.
Tao in the world
May be compared to rivers that run into the sea.

The Way is eternally nameless.
Though the unhewn log is small,
No one in the world dares subjugate it.
If feudal lords and kings could maintain it,
The myriad creatures would submit of themselves.
Heaven and earth unite to suffuse sweet dew.
Without commanding the people,
equality will naturally ensue.
As soon as one begins to divide things up, there are names;
Once there are names, one should also know when to stop;
Knowing when to stop, one thereby avoids peril.
In metaphorical terms,
The relationship of all under heaven to the Way is like that of valley streams to the river and sea.

[32c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The Tao is forever nameless.
Though the Uncarved Block is small,
it is not inferior to anything under heaven.
If leaders could keep hold of it,
the ten thousand things would submit to them freely.
Heaven and earth would unite and sweet dew would fall.
The people would live in harmony without any law or decree.
Only when the Block is carved are there names.
As soon as there are names it is time to stop.
Knowing when to stop prevents trouble.
All under heaven will return to the Tao
as brooks and streams flow home to the sea.

[32c22t] David H. Li
Direction frequently needs no name.
It is simple.
It is small.
Still, it submits to nothing in the world.
Were a Duke or a Prince to embrace Direction, myriad matters would submit on own volition.
With the cosmos and the earth in harmony, sweet dew accrues.
It self-regulates without the need of intervention.
As the system begins, names are assigned.
When names are assigned, know when to stop.
Knowing when to stop averts danger.
Direction in relation to people of the world is like the sea to rivers.

As undivided simplicity,
If it resides in an ordinary person,
nobody in the world can subjugate him;
If an influential person abides by it,
everybody in the world will be drawn to him.
When heaven and earth come together in harmony,
Showering the world equally with the sweet rain of undivided simplicity,
People cooperate voluntarily without any governing rules.
When simplicity is divided, names come into existence.
When names are already there, the process of further division should stop,
For to know when to stop is to avoid the danger of complexity.
The Tao is to the world
what the ocean is to the rivers of the earth.

[32c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The Tao was always nameless.
When it was expressed for the first time,
It was given a name.
And once it has already been given a name, it is necessary to stop.
The knowledge of where to stop makes a person immune to any danger.

[32c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
The Tao has no name it is a cloud that has no shape.
If a ruler follows it faithfully,
then every living thing under heaven will say yes to him.
Heaven and earth make love,
And a sweet dew-rain falls.
The people do not know why,
But they are gathered together like music.
Things have been given names from the beginning.
We need to know when we have enough names: this is wisdom.
At the beginning of time
The sage gave names to everything - seen, and unseen.
A ruler who walks the Way
Is like a river reaching the sea
Gathering the waters of the streams into himself, as he goes.

[32c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The Tao is nameless for ever.
Though it is very small,
It is subject to no one in the world.
If lords and kings can keep it,
They can bring all things in the world under subjection.
When the Yin and Yang between heaven and earth unite,
Sweet dew will fall, so equally scattered down

Without any interference on the part of the people.
The administration of the empire demands names;
Names are once given,
Limitations are thereby known.
The knowledge of limitations helps avoid danger.
The Tao is to the world what the river and the sea
Are to the countless streamlets.

[32c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The Tao has no name, like an uncarved block.
But no one under Heaven dares claim its allegiance.
Should lords and princes be able to hold fast to it,
the myriad creatures will submit to their own accord.
Heaven and Earth will unite and the sweet dewdrop will fall.
People will live in peace, even though no one is seeking for it.
When the block is carved it will be named.
It will also be time to stop.
Knowing to stop in time avoids danger.
The Tao runs under Heaven as the river and the water of the valley run into the sea.

[32c28t] Liu Qixuan
The eternal Way has no name.
The earliest simplicity has no significance,
But its function is supreme.
If kings and officials can keep the Way,
The whole world will become their guest.
Harmony between heaven and earth creates rains and dews,
Which all share equally without laws or rules.
With the growth of the earliest system,
There appeared names, which are therefore conventional.
Knowing what is conventional,
One can also understand where and when to stop.
Knowing where and when to stop,
One will never meet with countering forces.
The Way is to the world what rivers are to the ocean.

[32c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Tao Is Like The Sea
Lao Tze says,
The Tao is not designated as a certain type.
The pristine simplicity is just a small display of the Tao.
Though it is small, whoever in exercise of this method, will make no man in the world daring to treat him as a servant.
If the duke or the king knows to exercise this method; all existence will express obedience and loyalty to him.
Heaven and Earth unite and send down sweet dew which without the direction of men, reaches equally everywhere as of its own accord.

As soon as it proceeds to action, it has a way.
When it once has that way, men can know to rest in it.
When they know to rest in it, they can be free from all risk of failure and error.
The relation of the Tao to all the world is like that of great rivers and sea to streams and valleys.

[32c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Tao was always nameless.
When for the first time applied to function, it was named.
Inasmuch as names are given, one should also know where to stop.
Knowing where to stop one can become imperishable.

[32c31t] Paul J. Lin
Tao is constantly nameless.
Though the unhewn wood is small,
No one in the world dares to subjugate it.
If dukes and kings can keep it,
All things will become guests by themselves.
Heaven and earth conjugate in dropping sweet dew;
People without being ordered are fair to each other.
In the beginning of creation, all were given names.
Having names, they know their limits.
Knowing their limits keeps them from danger.
Thus Tao is to the world
As brooks and valleys are to rivers and seas.

[32c32t] Michael LaFargue
Tao will always be nameless, an Uncarved Block, although it is a thing of no account,
no one in the world can make it his subject.
If the princes and kings could watch over It,
the thousands of things would on their own be as deferential as guests.
Heaven and Earth would join together to send sweet dew.
The people on their own would share equally,
without anyone giving orders.
When you begin making decisions and cutting it up,
rules and names appear.
And once names appear, you should know to stop.
Knowing to stop, you can be without fear.
A comparison:
Tao's presence in the world,
is like the relation of small river valleys to the Yang-tze and the ocean.

[32c33t] Cheng Lin
Truth is the name given to that which was originally nameless and simple.
Though small, the whole world cannot subjugate it.
When the rulers abide by it, all animate creation will of their own accord become their servants.

Because heaven and earth are one with Truth, they produce rains and dews which benefit all mankind alike without their asking.
The name was fabricated by man.
Since it has been given a name, the rulers ought to know it.
When they know it, they will be free from danger.
Truth is to the universe as rivers and seas are to the earth.

[32c34t] Yi Wu
The Way constantly is nameless.
Although its simplicity makes it seem trivial,
No one can subjugate it.
If dukes and kings can keep to it,
All things will naturally behave as guests.
Heaven and earth will unite with each other,
And sweet dew will fall.
People, without being commanded,
Will be equal to each other.
In the beginning of creation,
All things were given names.
When names are given,
One must know when to stop.
Knowing when to stop,
One will be free from danger.
The Way is to the world
As the great rivers and oceans
Are to streams in the valleys.

[32c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Dao is often referred to as "the nameless".
Although this "pristine simplicity" (Dao) appears to be insignificant,
Nothing in the world can subjugate it.
If a ruler can follow the way of Dao,
Everyone will naturally come to join him.
When Yin and Yang harmonise, rain begins to fall.
Similarly, people will live in harmony without any coercion.
Whenever a system is set up, new terminology appears.
(A new system will bring about new disputes.)
However, it is important to simplify the system.
Knowing when to stop, you can avert a calamity.
What Dao is to the people is similar to what the ocean is to the rivers.

[32c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The universal subtle essence is unnameable and omnipresent.
Although it appears even in the plainest and most ordinary of things, it is inferior to nothing.
It maintains itself as a model of indivisible integrity.

If people would embrace it as their own true nature, everything would settle down in right order and peace of its own accord.
Harmonious relationship can be illustrated by the cycle of the seasons which produces rain and dew at exactly the right times.
People do not need to do anything to insure the harmony between Heaven and Earth.
All names were given for the purpose of distinction when the original simplicity was diversified.
When one departs from simplicity, the result is perplexity.
When one returns to simplicity, one is saved from destruction by confusion.
The universal subtle essence is to human beings what the great ocean is to the rivers and streams of the earth.

[32c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Tao is real, yet unnameable.
It is original non-differentiation and invisible.
Nevertheless, nothing in the universe can dominate it.
If rulers and lords were able to abide with it, all things in the universe would yield to them naturally.
Heaven and earth are unified and rain the dew of peace.
Without being ordered to do so, people become harmonious by themselves.
When discrimination begins, names arise.
After names arise, one should know where to abide.
When one knows where to abide, one is never exhausted.
To abide with Tao in the world is to be the same as mountain streams flowing to the rivers and to the sea.

[32c38t] Henry Wei
Holy Virtue
Sheng Teh
Tao is eternal and has no name.
Though P'u (Simplicity) may appear puny,
Yet the world dare not dominate it.
If kings and nobles can preserve it intact,
The ten thousand things will gladly pay them homage.
Heaven and Earth unite in harmony
To pour down showers of sweet dew,
To benefit all mankind graciously and evenly.
Institutions once begun, names come into being.
Names having come into being,
One should know where to rest.
To know where to rest is to forestall peril.
Tao differentiated in the world (will return to One),
Like streams and rivers flowing to the sea.

[32c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Tao is forever nameless.
Though the uncarved block is small,
No one under Heaven can make it his subject.
If kings and princes hold fast to it,

The ten thousand things will submit of their own accord;
Heaven and Earth will unite to send sweet dew;
The people will be fair of themselves, without being ordered.
When the cutting begins, names come to be.
As soon as names appear,
Know that it's time to stop.
By knowing this, you will be free from danger.
To draw an analogy, the working of Tao under Heaven
Is like streams and rapids flowing into great rivers and seas.

[32c40t] Tao Huang
Tao is eternally nameless.
Though simplicity is small,
The world cannot treat it as subservient.
If lords and rulers can hold on to it,
Everything becomes self-sufficient.
Heaven and earth combine and allow sweet dew.
Without rules, people will naturally become equal.
At the outset, the rule must be expressed.
Once it exists, stop speaking of it.
The result of not speaking of it is to eliminate danger.
In a manner of speaking, Tao is to the world
As the rivers are to oceans and seas.

[32c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The eternity of Dao has no name:
Even though Pure Matter is infinitely small, its function is so superior that it is next to none,
If rulers can follow the model of nature, everything under the heaven will render homage to them,
Then the people would automatically be equally sufficient without being directed.
It was named after the initiation of regulations, when names were given,
Then one will know how to rest.
To know how to stop will not reach a perilous end.
The application of Dao to the world is like the relation of oceans to rivers.

[32c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Tao is eternal and has no name.
Though its simplicity seems insignificant, none in the world can master it.
If kings and barons would hold on to it, all things would submit to them spontaneously.
Heaven and earth unite to drip sweet dew.
Without the command of men, it drips evenly over all.
As soon as there were regulations and institutions, there were names.
As soon as there are names, know that it is time to stop.
It is by knowing when to stop that one can be free from danger.
Analogically, Tao in the world may be compared to rivers and streams running into the sea.

Дао, будучи незыблемым, не имеет имени.
И хоть первозданное ничтожно, никто под Небесами его сделать своим подданным не в силах.
Если владетели и царь смогут ему следовать, все десять тысяч вещей сами сочтут себя гостями, Небеса с Землей соединятся и снизойдет сладчайшая роса.
Народ, не получив ни от кого приказа, сам меж собою уравняется.
С началом кройки возникает имя;
а возникает имя, узнают, когда остановиться.
Узнав, когда остановиться, можно избежать опасности.
Дао Поднебесной напоминает горную долину со стремящимся по ней в реку к морям потоком.

[32c92t] А. А. Маслов
Дао неизменно и безымянно.
Хотя простота и мала, никто в Поднебесной не может править ею.
Если бы правитель и князья могли придерживаться её, мириады существ сами повиновались бы ей.
Когда Небо и Земля взаимосочетаются, то выпадают сладкие росы и народ безо всяких указов умиротворяется.
Когда начинается управление, - возникают и имена.
Коль скоро возникают имена, - муж должен знать, что настало время остановиться.
Знающий, где надо остановиться, избежит гибели.
Дао в Поднебесной подобно рекам и морям, куда впадают долинные ручьи.

[32c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Дао-Путь постоянно и безымянно.
Хотя оно столь просто и так мало, никто в Поднебесной не смеет сделать его своим слугой.
Если князья и цари смогут блюсти его, все сущее упокоится и умиротворится.
Тогда Небо и Земля в согласии и гармонии пребудут, с небес прольется сладкая роса и весь народ без всякого приказа сам обретет равновесие.
Когда все вещи обрели раздельное существование, тогда установились имена.
С тех пор как появились имена, необходимо Поднебесной познать, где следует остановиться в своих стремлениях.
И зная, где остановиться, мы избегаем гибели и бедствий.
Ведь Дао-Путь для Поднебесной - как море-океан для всех ручьев и рек.

[32c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Дао постоянно и безымянно.
(Вариант перевода: Дао именуется постоянным небытием.)
Духовное естество хотя и младенчески слабое (маленькое), никто в Поднебесной не может подчинить [его] себе.
Если хоу и ваны смогут блюсти его, то мириады вещей сами покорятся.
Небо сочетается в браке с Землей, ниспадая сладкой росой.
Людям никто не приказывает, и все само по себе уравновешивается.
С началом насильственного правления появились имена.
И поскольку имена уже есть, постольку нужно знать, как пресечь (искоренить) [их].
Зная то, как пресечь [имена], можем избежать гибели.
Тому пример: когда Дао находится в Поднебесной, это подобно стоку ручьев и рек в Цзян и Море.

[32c95t] Ян Хин-шун

Дао вечно и безымянно.
Хотя оно ничтожно, но никто в мире не может его подчинить себе.
Если знать и государи могут его соблюдать, то все существа сами становятся спокойными.
Тогда небо и земля сольются в гармонии, наступят счастье и благополучие, а народ без приказания успокоится.
При установлении порядка появились имена.
Поскольку возникли имена, нужно знать предел [их употребления].
Знание предела позволяет избавиться от опасности.
Когда дао находится в мире, [все сущее вливается в него], подобно тому, как горные ручьи текут к рекам и морям.

[32c96t] Д. П. Конисси

Вечное Тао не имеет имени.
Оно незначительно, как щепка, но мир не может подчинить его себе.
Когда цари и князья заботятся о защите (своей страны), то сама природа сделается помощницей их.
Когда небо совокупляется с землей, то спускается роса на землю, чего человек не в состоянии устроить.
Когда Тао разделилось на части, то получило имя.
Если имя известно, то нужно воздерживаться.
(Каждому) следует знать, где ему нужно оставаться.
Кто соблюдает во всем воздержание, тот не будет знать (нравственного) падения.
Это - Тао, которое существует во всей вселенной.

[32c97t] В. В. Малявин

Путь вечно безымянен;
Цельный Ствол хотя и невелик,
В мире над ним никто не властен.
Если князья и цари смогут держаться его,
Все вещи им покорятся сами,
Небо и Земля в согласии соединятся и породят сладкую росу,
И та сама, без приказания, извергнется поровну на всех.
Где есть порядок, есть и имена.
Как только появляются имена,
Надобно знать, где в знании остановиться.
Кто знает, где остановиться в знании,
Сможет избежать большой беды.
Великий Путь для мира
Все равно что полноводная река и море для ручья.

[32c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский

Постоянство Пути - в отсутствии имени.
Первозданную целостность даже и в малом никто в Поднебесной не может заставить служить себе.
Удельные князья и правители если способны руководствоваться этим, тогда мириады сущностей сами стремятся следовать их воле.
Образуется контакт меж Небом и Землей, в результате чего выпадают медовые росы.
Начало систематизации - это наличие имен.

Имя и есть приближение к наличию.
И здесь нужно уметь вовремя останавливаться.
Умеешь останавливаться - тем самым не подвергаешься опасности.
Чтобы образно определить Путь в пространстве Поднебесной, уподобим его потокам в долинах, стремящимся в пространство рек и морей.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Three

524/2593

[33c01t] Robert G. Henricks
To understand others is to be knowledgeable;
To understand yourself is to be wise.
To conquer others is to have strength;
To conquer yourself is to be strong.
To know when you have enough is to be rich.
To go forward with strength is to have ambition.
To not lose your place is to last long.
To die but not be forgotten - that's [true] long life.

[33c02t] John C. H. Wu
HE who knows men is clever;
He who knows himself has insight.
He who conquers men has force;
He who conquers himself is truly strong.
He who knows when he has got enough is rich,
And he who adheres assiduously to the path of Tao is a man of steady purpose.
He who stays where he has found his true home endures long,
And he who dies but perishes not enjoys real longevity.

[33c03t] D. C. Lau
He who knows others is clever;
He who knows himself has discernment.
He who overcomes others has force;
He who overcomes himself is strong.
He who knows contentment is rich;
He who perseveres is a man of purpose;
He who does not lose his station will endure;
He who lives out his days has had a long life.

[33c04t] R. L. Wing
Those who know others are intelligent;
Those who know themselves have insight.
Those who master others have force;
Those who master themselves have strength.
Those who know what is enough are wealthy.
Those who persevere have direction.
Those who maintain their position endure.
And those who die and yet do not perish, live on.

[33c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who knows others can be called wise,

He who knows himself is enlightened.
He who conquers others can be called physically strong,
He who conquers himself is mighty.
He who is content is rich,
He who acts with persistence has will,
He who does not lose his root will endure,
He who dies physically, but preserves Tao will enjoy a long life.

[33c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Knowing others is wisdom;
Knowing the self is enlightenment.
Mastering others requires force;
Mastering the self needs strength.
He who knows he has enough is rich.
Perseverance is a sign of will power.
He who stays where he is endures.
To die but not to perish is to be eternally present.

[33c07t] Lok Sang Ho
He who knows others is wise,
He who knows himself is wiser.
He who conquers others is strong.
He who conquers himself is stronger.
He who knows what is adequate lives a rich life.
He who overcomes difficulties knows what he wants.
He who will not lose his place endures.
He who dies and yet lives lasts.

[33c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If you can understand others, you are wise;
If you can understand yourself, your mind is clear.
If you can overcome others, you are powerful;
If you can overcome yourself, you are strong.
If you can be satisfied, you are rich;
If you can be persistent, you are determined.
If you never lose your goals, you can last long;
If you die but you are not forgotten, then you live forever.

[33c09t] Walter Gorn Old, DISCERNING VIRTUE
He is wise who knows others.
He who knows himself is enlightened.
He is strong who conquers others.
He who conquers himself is mighty.
He is rich who is well satisfied.
He walks fast who has an object.
He who fills his place remains secure.

He who dies without being corrupted enjoys a good old age.

[33c10t] James Legge
He who knows other men is discerning;
he who knows himself is intelligent.
He who overcomes others is strong;
he who overcomes himself is mighty.
He who is satisfied with his lot is rich;
he who goes on acting with energy has a (firm) will.
He who does not fail in the requirements of his position, continues long;
he who dies and yet does not perish, has longevity.

[33c11t] David Hinton
To know people is wisdom,
but to know yourself is enlightenment.
To master people takes force,
but to master yourself takes strength.
To know contentment is wealth, and to live with strength resolve.
To never leave whatever you are is to abide,
and to die without getting lost - that is to live on and on.

[33c12t] Chichung Huang
He who knows others is crafty;
He who knows himself is clear-sighted.
He who overcomes others has strength;
He who overcomes himself has stamina.
He who knows content is rich;
He who practices strenuously achieves his aspiration;
He who does not lose his base is long-enduring;
He who dies without forgetting is long-lived.

[33c13t] Ellen M. Chen
One who knows (chih) others is knowledgeable (chih);
One who knows (chih) the self is enlightened (ming).
One who overcomes others has physical might;
One who overcomes the self (tzu sheng) is strong (ch'iang).
One who knows contentment (chih tsu) is rich;
One who acts strongly (ch'iang) has will power (chih).
One who does not lose where one belongs lasts long;
One who dies without perishing (wang) has longevity.

[33c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A person who understands others is intelligent;
A person who knows himself is brilliant;
A person who exceeds others is powerful;
A person who has self-control is strong;

A person who knows what is properly sufficient is [morally] rich;
A person who is diligent has will power;
A person who never loses his roots has endurance;
A person who dies but [whose deeds] will not perish has longevity.

[33c15t] Tien Cong Tran
He who knows men is intelligent.
He who knows himself has insight.
He who conquers men is strong.
He who conquers himself is vigorous.
He who knows how to be enough is rich.
He who goes on assiduously is a man of steady will.
He who does not lose his dwelling endures long.
He who dies but perishes not has a long life.

[33c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Knowing others is smart.
Knowing oneself is clearheaded.
Winning others is forceful.
Winning oneself is powerful.
Content people are rich.
Diligent people are of high purpose.
Those, who stay their grounds, stand out.
Those, who die without being forgotten, are perpetual.

[33c17t] Arthur Waley
To understand others is to have knowledge;
To understand oneself is to be illumined.
To conquer others needs strength;
To conquer oneself is harder still.
To be content with what one has is to be rich.
He that works through violence may get his way;
But only what stays in its place
Can endure.
When one dies one is not lost; there is no other longevity.

[33c18t] Richard John Lynn
One who knows others is wise, but one who knows himself is perspicacious.
One who conquers others has strength, but one who conquers himself is powerful.
One who knows contentment is rich.
One who acts with power has his goal fulfilled.
One who does not lose his place lasts long.
One who dies but is not destroyed has longevity.

He who knows others is learned;
He who knows himself is wise.
He who conquers others has power of muscles;
He who conquers himself is strong.
He who is contented is rich.
He who is determined has strength of will.
He who does not lose his center endures,
He who dies yet (his power) remains has long life.

[33c20t] Victor H. Mair
Understanding others is knowledge,
Understanding oneself is enlightenment;
Conquering others is power,
Conquering oneself is strength;
Contentment is wealth,
Forceful conduct is willfulness;
Not losing one's rightful place is to endure,
To die but not be forgotten is longevity.

[33c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Knowing others is to be clever.
Knowing yourself is to be enlightened.
Overcoming others requires force.
Overcoming yourself requires strength.
To know that you have enough is to be rich.
Push through and you may get your way, but return home and you will endure.
Live out your days and you have had a long life.

[33c22t] David H. Li
Knowing others is wisdom;
knowing self is discernment.
Winning over others shows prowess;
winning over self shows strength.
With contentment, one is wealthy.
With persistence, one shows determination.
Holding on without losing ground, one is strong;
Dying without giving up Direction, one lives long.

[33c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
To know others is wisdom;
To know one's self is enlightenment.
To conquer others is power;
To conquer one's self is strength.
One who knows what is enough is wealthy;
One who does what is required is committed.
One who stays in one's destiny endures;

One who dies without perishing lives forever.

[33c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The person who knows others is wise,
The person who knows himself is enlightened.
The person who conquers others is strong,
The person who conquers himself is powerful.
The person who knows his lot is rich.
The person who maintains his path with energy has a strong will.
The person who does not stray from his proper place will have a long life.
The person who dies but does not perish will exist forever.
Feo-tzu says:
"The difficulty in knowing is not learning others, but learning ourselves.
Therefore, the person who learns himself is enlightened."

[33c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
When you know the true being of another,
You can judge -
And if you truly know the Tao you will be in the light.
It takes force to control people:
but if I am humble, I can never be overcome.
If you know what you have is enough you will be satisfied.
But if you think you don't have enough then you will never have enough!
If you follow the Tao, what you are will last.
You will live, and live, and outlive yourself again.

He who knows others is intelligent, while he who knows himself is enlightened.
He who conquers others has the power of muscles, but he who conquers himself is strong.
He who knows contentment is rich, but he who is determined has strength of will.
He who does not leave the resource will endure, but he who knows to keep as still as a dead body but remain dynamic will enjoy longevity.

[33c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
He who knows others is wise;
He who knows himself is enlightened.
He who conquers others is strong;
He who conquers himself is mighty.
He who knows contentment is rich.
He who keeps on his course with energy has will.
He who does not deviate from his proper place will long endure.
He who may die but not perish has longevity.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Four

535/2593

[34c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The Way floats and drifts;
It can go left or right.
It accomplishes its tasks and completes its affairs, and yet for this it is not given a name.
The ten thousand things entrust their lives to it, and yet it does not act as their master.
Thus it is constantly without desires.
It can be named with the things that are small.
The ten thousand things entrust their lives to it, and yet it does not act as their master.
It can be named with the things that are great.
Therefore the Sage's ability to accomplish the great
Comes from his not playing the role of the great.
Therefore he is able to accomplish the great.

[34c02t] John C. H. Wu
THE Great Tao is universal like a flood.
How can it be turned to the right or to the left?
All creatures depend on it,
And it denies nothing to anyone.
It does its work,
But it makes no claims for itself.
It clothes and feeds all,
But it does not lord it over them:
Thus, it may be called "the Little."
All things return to it as to their home,
But it does not lord it over them:
Thus, it may be called "the Great."
It is just because it does not wish to be great
That its greatness is fully realized.

[34c03t] D. C. Lau
The way is broad, reaching left as well as right.
The myriad creatures depend on it for life yet it claims no authority.
It accomplishes its task yet lays claim to no merit.
It clothes and feeds the myriad creatures yet lays no claim to being their master.
For ever free of desire, it can be called small;
Yet, as it lays no claim to being master when the myriad creatures turn to it, it can be called great.
It is because it never attempts itself to be great that it succeeds in becoming great.

[34c04t] R. L. Wing
The Great Tao extends everywhere.
It is on the left and the right.
All Things depend on it for growth,

And it does not deny them.
It achieves its purpose,
And it does not have a name.
It clothes and cultivates All Things,
And it does not act as master.
Always without desire, It can be named Small.
All Things merge with it, And it does not act as master.
It can be named Great.
In the end it does not seek greatness, And in that way the Great is achieved.

[34c05t] Ren Jiyu
The great Tao is like a river overflowing,
It can go left, it can go right.
All things owe their existence to it,
But it never interferes with them.
When its work is accomplished, it is unable to say where its credit is.
It protects and nourishes all, but it does not claim to be master over them.
Always without its desire, it may be called small.
All things come to it as to their home,
And yet it does not pose as their master,
It may be called great.
It is precisely because it never claims to be great, that it can achieve its greatness.

[34c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The great Tao flows everywhere, both to the left and to the right.
The ten thousand things depend upon it; it holds nothing back.
It fulfills its purpose silently and makes no claim.
It nourishes the ten thousand things,
And yet is not their lord.
It has no aim; it is very small.
The ten thousand things return to it,
Yet it is not their lord.
It is very great.
It does not show greatness,
And is therefore truly great.

[34c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Great Dao is all-encompassing.
Its influences pervade all directions.
All living things depend on it.
But the Dao works quietly.
It accomplishes yet makes no claims.
It provides clothing and nourishments yet does not take command over anything.
Ever aspiring for non-existence,
It can be called little.
Providing a home to all the living things yet claiming no ownership,

536/2593

It can be called great.
Exactly because the Dao never takes itself as great,
It is truly great.

[34c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The big DAO is like a flood, going everywhere.
Everything depends on it to grow, but it never refuses to help.
When things are accomplished, it never claims credit.
It nurtures everything, but never tries to control them.
It never has desires, so it can be called the SMALL.
Everything depends on it, but it never tries to be their master, so it can be called the BIG.
Only because it never wants to be the BIG, so it becomes the BIG.

[34c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE PERFECT CONDITION
Mighty Tao is all-pervading.
It is simultaneously on this side and on that.
All living things subsist from it, and all are in its care.
It works, it finishes, and knows not the name of merit.
In love it nurtures all things, and claims no excellence therein.
It knows neither ambition nor desire.
It can be classed with the humblest of things.
All things finally revert to it, and it is not thereby increased.
It can be mentioned with the greatest of things.
Thus does the wise man continually refrain from self-distinction.

[34c10t] James Legge
All-pervading is the Great Tao!
It may be found on the left hand and on the right.
All things depend on it for their production, which it gives to them, not one refusing obedience to it.
When its work is accomplished, it does not claim the name of having done it.
It clothes all things as with a garment, and makes no assumption of being their lord;
- it may be named in the smallest things.
All things return (to their root and disappear), and do not know that it is it which presides over their doing so;
- it may be named in the greatest things.
Hence the sage is able (in the same way) to accomplish his great achievements.
It is through his not making himself great that he can accomplish them.

[34c11t] David Hinton
Way is vast, a flood so utterly vast it's flowing everywhere.
The ten thousand things depend on it:
giving them life and never leaving them it performs wonders but remains nameless.
Feeding and clothing the ten thousand things
without ruling over them,
perennially that free of desire,

it's small in name.
And being what the ten thousand things return to without ruling over them,
it's vast in name.
It never makes itself vast and so becomes utterly vast.

[34c12t] Chichung Huang
How the Tao overflows!
It may be found left and right.
The ten thousand things relying on it for their living,
It does not decline;
Having scored successes,
It claims no possession;
Clothing and feeding the ten thousand things,
It does not assume masterdom;
Meaning it is constantly lustless,
And may be named among the tiny.
When the ten thousand things return,
They do not know who their master is;
Hence, it may be named among the vast.
That is why the sage man
Was able to achieve vastness.
As he never assumed vastness,
He was able to achieve vastness.

[34c13t] Ellen M. Chen
The great Tao floods over,
To the left, to the right.
Ten thousand beings live by it,
And it does not reject them.
Work is accomplished (ch'eng), yet it has no name.
It clothes and nourishes ten thousand beings,
But does not lord over them.
Always without desire,
It may be named the small;
Ten thousand beings return (kuei) to it,
Yet it does not lord over them,
It may be named the great.
Because it never considers itself great,
Therefore it can accomplish (ch'eng) its greatness.

[34c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
When the great Tao runs its course, it moves forcefully like floods;
Nothing can resist its power and must flow with it, right or left,
Everything relies on it to survive, and it never fails to sustain their needs;
It does not claim merit for deeds it has accomplished;

538/2593

It shelters and nourishes everything, yet it shuns away from domination.
[Tao] never has any [selfish] intentions, so we may describe it as small [as far as its ego is concerned];
[On the other hand:]
Despite the fact that myriad things and creatures must comply [with its rule],
It does not [take advantage of the situation to] dominate them;
Furthermore, it never manifests [its magnificence],
We may therefore describe it as great.
For this reason,
A Sage seeks greatness not for [the vain splendor of] greatness, [but for the substantial accomplishment of good deeds],
He thenceforth achieves [the genuine] greatness.

[34c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The great Way is all-pervading, it can reach the right or the left.
All things depend on it, and none is excluded.
It does its work, but it makes no claims for itself.
It clothes and feeds all things, but it makes no claims to be their master.
Because it does not have desire, it may be called "the little."
All things return to it as to their home, but it does not lord over them: Thus, it may be called "the great."
It is just because it does not attempt to be great that its greatness is fully realized.

[34c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Tao is everywhere.
It can be guidance.
Everything lives depending on it without exception, With such accomplishment, it claims none.
Providing clothing and food to everything, it does not govern them: this is called lowliness.
Guiding everything, it does not master, this can be called greatness.
Because it does not proclaim to be great, it can actually be great.

[34c17t] Arthur Waley
Great Tao is like a boat that drifts;
It can go this way; it can go that.
The ten thousand creatures owe their existence to it and it does not disown them;
Yet having produced them, it does not take possession of them.
Tao, though it covers the ten thousand things like a garment,
Makes no claim to be master over them,
And asks for nothing from them.
Therefore it may be called the Lowly.
The ten thousand creatures obey it,
Though they know not that they have a master;
Therefore it is called the Great.
So too the Sage just because he never at any time makes a show of greatness in fact achieves greatness.

[34c18t] Richard John Lynn
The way the great Dao floods, oh, it can go left or right.
The myriad folk rely on it for life, but it does not tell them to do so.

It achieves success but enjoys no reputation for doing so.
It clothes and feeds the myriad folk but does not become their master.
It is always without desire and so can be named among the small.
The myriad things return to it, but it does not become their master, so it can be named among the great.
Therefore it is because he himself never tries to be great that he fulfills his greatness.

[34c19t] Lin Yutang
THE GREAT TAO FLOWS EVERYWHERE
The Great Tao flows everywhere,
(Like a flood) it may go left or right.
The myriad things derive their life from it,
And it does not deny them.
When its work is accomplished,
It does not take possession.
It clothes and feeds the myriad things,
Yet does not claim them as its own.
Often (regarded) without mind or passion,
It may be considered small.
Being the home of all things, yet claiming not,
It may be considered great.
Because to the end it does not claim greatness,
Its greatness is achieved.

[34c20t] Victor H. Mair
Rippling is the Way, flowing left and right!
Its tasks completed, its affairs finished,
Still it does not claim them for its own.
The myriad creatures return to it,
But it does not act as their ruler.
Eternally without desire,
It may be named among the small;
The myriad creatures return to it,
But it does not act as their ruler;
It may be named among the great.
For these reasons,
The sage can achieve greatness,
Because he does not act great.
Therefore,
He can achieve greatness.

[34c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The great Tao covers everything like a flood.
It flows to the left and to the right.
The ten thousand things depend upon it and it denies none of them.
It accomplishes its task yet claims no reward.
It clothes and feeds the ten thousand things yet it does not attempt to control them.

Therefore,
it may be called "the little."
The ten thousand things return to it,
even though it does not control them.
Therefore,
it may be called "the great."
So it is that the True Person does not wish to be great and therefore becomes truly great.

[34c22t] David H. Li
The Grand Direction permeates, left and right.
With myriad matters depending on it for growth, it declines none.
Accomplishing much, it accepts no limelight.
Nurturing myriad matters without claiming, it may be labeled Small;
Receiving myriad matters without claiming, it may be labeled Grand.
By not self-claiming Grand, it is thus Grand.

[34c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The Great Tao overflows everywhere in the universe.
It suffuses with life all beings that depend on it for their existence.
It accomplishes everything while remaining nameless.
It nurtures everything while claiming no mastership.
It desires nothing for itself, and is therefore called the Small.
It is the source whereto everything returns, and is therefore called the Vast.
Thus, the sage never thinks of claiming greatness for himself,
Yet, for this very reason, achieves true greatness.

[34c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The great Tao is in everything, both on the left and on the right.
Through it, all things come into being, and it does not abandon them.
When its work is completed, it does not possess them.
It loves and nurtures all things,
But does not rule them.
It never exists, so it can be called small, apparently.
All things return home to it,
And it does not claim to own them,
So it can be called great, apparently.
It never aspires to greatness,
And therefore it accomplishes greatness.

[34c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
The Great Tao goes everywhere past your left hand and your right - filling the whole of space.
It is breath to every thing, and yet it asks for nothing back.
It feeds and creates everything, but it will never tell you so.
It nurtures all things without lording it over anything.

It names itself in the lowest of the low.
It holds what it makes,
Yet never fights to do so:
that is why we call it Great.
Why?
Because it never tries to be so.

[34c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The great Tao is felt everywhere
Extending in all directions.
All things grow on it and it never declines them.
It accomplishes its great task without claiming to merit.
It breeds all things without claiming to be their master;
It can be called the Small.
All things finally return to it
And it never claims to be their master;
And it can be called the Great.
It becomes the Great
Because it never claims to be the Great.

[34c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The Tao is floating everywhere, to the left and to the right.
The lives of the myriad creatures depend on it, no one can live without it.
It accomplishes its task, yet claims no honour.
It nourishes the myriad creatures, yet claims no possession.
It is always free from desire;
it can be called small.
The myriad creatures turn to it, yet it does not master them; it can be called great.
That is why the sage never boasts to be the great one, therefore he is the great one.

[34c28t] Liu Qixuan
The Way extends and expands.
One is in it wherever one is.
By trusting it, all beings grow and develop.
The Way enables successes but possesses no name.
It provides for all but rules over nothing.
It is free of personal desires
And can therefore be named as insignificant.
It is obeyed by all, though it has no political power.
Therefore, it can be named as the greatest.
One who never wants to be great can therefore grow great.

There is no discrimination of what is the right and what is the left.
All existence lives up to it, and it denies no one.
It doesn't claim credit, though there is achievement.
It loves and nourishes all existence but does not lord over them.
It appears ambitionless and is regarded as less important.
All existence returns to it, and it doesn't dominate them.
Certainly this is great.
This is the reason that the sage never regards himself as great,
thus he deserves to be titled as great.

[34c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
The great Tao pervades everywhere, both on the left and on the right.
By it all things came into being, and it does not reject them.
Merits accomplished, it does not possess them.
It loves and nourishes all things but does not dominate over them.
It is always non-existent; therefore it can be named as small.
All things return home to it, and it does not claim mastery over them; therefore it can be named as great.
Because it never assumes greatness, therefore it can accomplish greatness.

[34c31t] Paul J. Lin
The great Tao overflows, able to move left and right.
All things rely on it for life,
But it does not dominate them.
Completing its task without possession,
Clothing and feeding all things,
Without wanting to be their master.
Always void of desire,
It can be called Small.
All things return to it
Without its being their master;
It can be called Great.
Just because the Sage would never regard himself as great,
He is able to attain his own greatness.

[34c32t] Michael LaFargue
Great Tao drifts - it can go right or go left.
The thousands of things depend on it for life,
it rejects nothing.
It achieves successes,
but does not hold tight to the fame.
It clothes and feeds the thousands of things,
but does not act the ruler.
Always:
Desiring nothing, it can be called 'of no account'.
The thousands of things turn back to it, but it does not act the ruler - it can be called 'Great'.

Because in the end,
it does not insist on its own greatness, yes, it is able to achieve its full greatness.

[34c33t] Cheng Lin
The great Truth is all-pervasive and may be found everywhere.
It gives life to all animate creation, and yet it does not claim lordship over them.
It accomplishes all things, and yet it does not claim anything for itself.
It embraces all things, and yet it has no fixed abode.
It abides by inaction, and may be considered minute.
It is the ultimate destiny of all animate creation though it is not conscious of it, and it may be considered great.
Because it is never conscious of its greatness, it becomes truly great.

[34c34t] Yi Wu
The great Way is universal,
It exists on the left and the right.
All things rely on it for life,
And it does not refuse them.
It achieves without possessing.
It clothes and feeds all things
Without being their master.
Constantly desireless, it may be called "the small".
All things return to it,
But it is not their master.
It may be called "the great".
Because it does not consider itself great,
It is able to be great.

[34c35t] Han Hiong Tan
The great Dao flows everywhere.
It goes to the right and it goes to the left.
Myriad beings depend on it to survive,
But it does not interfere with them.
It facilitates but does not gloat.
It nourishes everything, but does not exert control.
Dao has no goal and appears to be insignificant.
Nevertheless, everything relies on it for sustenance, but it exerts no control.
Such action seems to be magnificently great.
Dao has no intention to be great, yet it attains greatness.

[34c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The subtle essence of the universe is omnipresent.
It may go to the left or the right.
All things derive their life from it,
and it holds nothing back from them,

yet it takes possession of nothing.
It accomplishes its purpose,
but it claims no merit.
It clothes and feeds all,
but has no ambition to be master over anyone.
Thus it may be regarded as "the Small."
All things return to it, and it contains them,
yet it claims no authority over them.
Thus it may be recognized as "the Great."
The wise one who never attempts to be emotionally great and who accomplishes each small task with full devotion, as if it were the greatest of tasks, is naturally recognized as great.

[34c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
The magnificent Tao is all-pervading.
It may penetrate to either this side or that side.
All creatures abide with it and grow; none are excluded from it.
When its work is done, it does not demand merit.
It nurtures all things, but does not rule them.
When it is without intention, it may be called lesser.
When all things return to it, yet it does not possess them, it may be called greater.
Therefore, the wise does not endeavor to be great.
Hence, his attainment is great.

[34c38t] Henry Wei
Natural Perfection
Ren Ch'eng
The Great Tao is all pervasive;
It could be on your right or on your left.
The ten thousand things depend on it for growth,
And it never lets them down.
It achieves success but is not possessive.
It enfolds and nourishes the ten thousand things,
Yet it does not claim ownership.
Always desireless and covetous of nothing,
It could be termed small.
But as the ten thousand things return to it,
And it does not care to be their lord,
It could be termed great.
Thus the Sage never in life tries to be great,
And for this very reason becomes truly great.

[34c39t] Ha Poong Kim

It clothes and nurtures the ten thousand things, yet it makes no claim to be lord over them.
It is always free of desire.
It may be called small.
The ten thousand things return to it, yet it makes no claim to be lord over them.
It may be called great.
Because it never regards itself as great,
It can accomplish its greatness.

[34c40t] Tao Huang
As the Tao is all-pervading,
It operates on both the left and the right.
Success is consequent to all affairs.
It does not proclaim its own existence.
All things return.
Yet there is no claim of ownership,
So it is forever desireless.
This can be called small.
All things return.
Yet there is no claim of ownership,
This can he called great.
The sage accomplishes greatness in not acting great.
Thus can he accomplished what is great.

[34c41t] Tang Zi-chang
How all-pervading the superior Dao is!
It could be on the left, it could be on the right.
Upon it the life of all things depends and it does not deny anyone.
It accomplishes merits but it does not possess fame.
It shields and nourishes All Things but it does not lord over them.
It may be called the Superior.
Hence, a Sage ruler never wishes to be superior.
Therefore he eventually became superior.

[34c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The Great Tao flows everywhere.
It may go left or right.
All things depend on it for life, and it does not turn away from them.
It accomplishes its task, but does not claim credit for it.
It clothes and feeds all things but does not claim to be master over them.
Always without desires, it may be called The Small.
All things come to it and it does not master them, it may be called The Great.
Therefore (the sage) never strives himself for the great, and thereby the great is achieved.

Опираясь на него, вещей родится десять тысяч.
И от них он не отказывается.
Но его заслуги не приносят ему славы.
Дает одежду, пищу всем вещам, но не становится их господином.
У него незыблемо отсутствие желаний, и он может находиться в унижении.
Все вещи к нему возвращаются, но он не становится их господином и может получить имя великого.
Он потому может осуществить свою великость, что не признает себя великим.

[34c92t] А. А. Маслов
Великое Дао всеохватно и распростёрто и влево, и вправо.
Мириады созданий опираются на него, а оно порождает их и не отрекается от них, но достигая успеха, остаётся безвестным.
Оно одевает и вскармливает мириады созданий, не правя ими.
Неизменно остаётся свободным от желаний и может быть названо Малым.
Мириады созданий возвращаются к нему, и посему оно может быть названо Великим.
В силу того, что оно никогда не считает себя великим, ему удаётся достичь величия.

[34c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Великий Путь, безбрежное Дао, повсюду растекается оно.
Вот оно слева, но оно и справа.
Все сущее, опираясь на него, рождается, но Дао им не обладает.
Благие качества и свойства свои оно не выставляет напоказ для прославления, оно питает, пестует все сущее, но не становится над сущим властелином.
Когда мудрец в бесстрастии все время пребывает, он Дао даже в самом малом созерцает.
Все сущее к нему стремится возвратиться, но не становится оно над ним владыкой.
Его поэтому назвать Великим можно!
Поэтому и совершенномудрый до самого конца к величию нисколько не стремится.
Поэтому он может стать поистине великим!

[34c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Великое Дао разлито повсюду, оно может быть и слева и справа.
Мириадам вещей оно служит опорой и, порождая [их], не уклоняется от этого;
успешно завершает и остается безвестным;
одевает и пестует мириады вещей и не становится их властелином.
[Оно] постоянно остается бесстрастным,
(Вариант перевода: [Оно] стремится к постоянному небытию,) можно назвать его маленьким.
Мириады вещей возвращаются к нему и не считают его властелином,
можно назвать его великим.
Оно вообще не считает себя великим,
поэтому и может возвышаться в своем величии.

[34c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Великое дао растекается повсюду.
Оно может находиться и справа и слева.
Благодаря ему все сущее рождается и не прекращает [своего роста].

Оно совершает подвиги, но славы себе не желает.
С любовью воспитывая все существа, оно не считает себя их властелином.
Оно никогда не имеет собственных желаний, поэтому его можно назвать ничтожным.
Все сущее возвращается к нему, но оно не рассматривает себя их властелином.
Его можно назвать великим.
Оно становится великим, потому что никогда не считает себя таковым.

[34c96t] Д. П. Конисси
О, беспредельно великое Тао!
Оно справа и слева.
Вся тварь появилась на свет, благодаря ему; оно не отталкивает ее от себя.
Заслуги Тао велики, но оно ими не хвалится.
Оно промышляет о всех вещах с любовью, но не желает быть господином их.
Так как оно не имеет никакой страсти, то оно называется ничтожным.
Его можно назвать маленьким, ибо мельчайшая вещь возвращается в него.
Все существа подчиняются ему, но оно не считает себя господином их;
поэтому его можно назвать великим.
Мудреца нельзя назвать великим, хотя он совершает великие дела.
Причина того, что святой легко достигает величия, заключается в том, что он не величает самого себя.

[34c97t] В. В. Малявин
Великий Путь разливается привольно!
Он может быть и слева, и справа.
Все вещи опираются на него, чтобы жить,
И он их не отвергает,
Во всем достигает успеха,
И не имеет славы.
Он одевает и кормит все вещи,
Но им не хозяин,
Вечно лишенный желаний -
Его можно причислить к тому, что мало.
Все вещи вверяют себя ему,
А он все же им не хозяин -
Его можно причислить к тому, что велико.
Оттого, что он никогда не считает себя великим,
Он и может воистину быть велик.

[34c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
В разливе великого Пути можно быть и слева, и справа.
Мириады сущностей, отождествляясь с этим, рождаются-живут, не облекаясь при этом в слова.
Успех дела - не в прославлении наличия.
Одевай и вскармливай мириады сущностей, но не осуществляй роль хозяина.
Устремляясь к постоянству отсутствия, можешь прославиться в малом.
Мириады сущностей приходят, но не осуществляй роль хозяина.
Можешь прославиться в великом.
Так как до конца не возвеличиваешь себя в осуществлении.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Five

550/2593

[35c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Hold on to the Great Image and the whole world will come to you.
Come to you and suffer no harm; but rather know great safety and peace.
Music and food - for these passing travelers stop.
Therefore, of the Tao's speaking, we say:
Insipid, it is! It's lack of flavor.
When you look at it, it's not sufficient to be seen;
When you listen to it, it's not sufficient to be heard;
Yet when you use it, it can't be used up.

[35c02t] John C. H. Wu
HE who holds the Great Symbol will attract all things to him.
They flock to him and receive no harm, for in him they find peace, security and happiness.
Music and dainty dishes can only make a passing guest pause.
But the words of Tao possess lasting effects,
Though they are mild and flavourless,
Though they appeal neither to the eye nor to the ear.

[35c03t] D. C. Lau
Have in your hold the great image
And the empire will come to you.
Coming to you and meeting with no harm
It will be safe and sound.
Music and food
Will induce the wayfarer to stop.
The way in its passage through the mouth is without flavour.
It cannot be seen,
It cannot be heard,
Yet it cannot be exhausted by use.

[35c04t] R. L. Wing
Hold fast to the Great Image,
And all the world will come.
Yet its coming brings no harm, Only peace and order.
When there is music together with food,
The audience will linger.
But when the Tao is expressed,
It seems without substance or flavor.
We observe and there is nothing to see.
We listen and there is nothing to hear.
We use it and it is without end.

[35c05t] Ren Jiyu
Whoever holds fast to the great image will become that one to whom all people under Heaven will come.
(Even if all people under Heaven) come to him they will not hinder each other,
And all enjoy comfort, peace and health.
Music and dainties will make passing guests stop,
(But) Tao, if spoken out, will be insipid and tasteless.
Being looked at, it is imperceptible,
Being listened to, it is inaudible,
Being utilized, it is inexhaustible.

[35c06t] Gia-fu Feng
All men will come to him who keeps to the one,
For there lie rest and happiness and peace.
Passersby may stop for music and good food,
But a description of the Tao
Seems without substance or flavor.
It cannot be seen, it cannot be heard,
And yet it cannot be exhausted.

[35c07t] Lok Sang Ho
He who holds the great sign
Attracts a great following.
He who helps the followers avoid harm
Enjoys great peace.
Music and good food can stop passers-by on their way.
The Dao, on the contrary, offers only a bland taste.
It can hardly be seen or heard.
Yet if one uses it, it is inexhaustible.

[35c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If you have the DAO, everything will come to you.
They come to you because they will not be hurt anymore, and they will become secure and peaceful.
Pleasant music and tasteful food will make even the passerby stop.
When being talked about, the DAO is tasteless.
When you look at it, you will not see it; when you listen to it, you will not hear it;
However, when you use it, it will never run out.

[35c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF BOUNTY
Attain to the Great Idea, and all the world will flock to you.
It will flock to you and will not be hurt therein, for it will rest in a wonderful peace.
Where there is a festival the wayfarer will stay.
To the palate the Tao is insipid and tasteless.
In regarding it the eye is not impressed.
In listening to it the ear is not filled.
But in its uses it is inexhaustible.

[35c10t] James Legge
To him who holds in his hands the Great Image (of the invisible Tao), the whole world repairs.
Men resort to him, and receive no hurt, but (find) rest, peace, and the feeling of ease.
Music and dainties will make the passing guest stop (for a time).
But though the Tao as it comes from the mouth, seems insipid and has no flavour, though it seems not worth being looked at or listened to, the use of it is inexhaustible.

[35c11t] David Hinton
Holding to the great image all beneath heaven sets out:
sets out free of risk, peace tranquil and vast.
Music and savory food
entice travelers to stop,
but the Way uttered forth
isn't even the thinnest of bland flavors.
Look at it: not enough to see.
Listen to it: not enough to hear.
Use it: not enough to use up.

[35c12t] Chichung Huang
Take hold of the great image,
And all under heaven will flock to you.
Once there, unharmed,
They will settle down in peace and prosperity.
Music and pastries
Make the wayfarers pause.
Therefore, when the Tao utters words,
They say: "How bland and tasteless!
Looked at,
It is not worth seeing;
Listened to,
Not worth hearing."
When used, however,
It is inexhaustible.

[35c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Hold aloft the Great Image (hsiang),
The whole world will go to it.
Going to it, they will meet with no harm,
Only safety, peace, and contentment (an p'ing t'ai).
When music and dainty dishes are offered,
The passers-by stop.
Tao, when it is uttered by the mouth,
Is so bland it has no flavor.
When looked at, it is not enough to be seen.
When listened to, it is not enough to be heard,
When used (yung), it is inexhaustible.

If someone is successful in capturing the grandest phenomenon [of cosmos with his description];
He may then be the right man for the world to follow;
Furthermore, if the world is processing [on this right course] unobstructed;
The world will enjoy peace, justice and prosperity.
The pleasure of listening to good music, and eating delicious food, were as transient as travelers passed by;
[When Tao was discussed]:
As far as mouth was concerned, the discussion gave off nothing more than tastelessness;
As far as eyes were concerned, the discussion offered nothing worthwhile to look at;
As far as ears were concerned, the discussion rendered nothing [musical which] deserves our making an effort to listen to it.
Nevertheless, when comes to the utilizations of discussions [about Tao], we shall discover that their applications are inexhaustible.

[35c15t] Tien Cong Tran
He who holds the great image will attract all things to him.
They flock to him and receive no harm, for in him they find peace, security and happiness.
Music and dainty dishes make a passing guest pause.
But being said in the words, the Way is tasteless, flavorless, not seen, not heard, but it cannot be used up.

[35c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Those who grasp Tao will be followed by the whole world.
Following without worries, the world becomes secure, peaceful, and prosperous.
Music and banquet make the travelers stop by.
But when Tao is said, it is plain and flavorless.
It is invisible when it is looked at.
It is inaudible when it is listened to.
It is inexhaustible when it is utilized.

[35c17t] Arthur Waley
He who holding the Great Form goes about his work in the empire
Can go about his work, yet do no harm.
All is peace, quietness and security.
Sound of music, smell of good dishes
Will make the passing stranger pause.
How different the words that Tao gives forth!
So thin, so flavourless!
If one looks for Tao, there is nothing solid to see;
If one listens for it, there is nothing loud enough to hear.
Yet if one uses it, it is inexhaustible.

[35c18t] Richard John Lynn
Grasp the great image, and all under Heaven will turn to you.
Turning to you means not harm but safety and peace in great measure.
Music and fine food make the passing visitor stay.

When the Dao is spoken of, how bland: it has no flavor at all!
We look for it, but not enough is there to see anything.
We listen for it, but not enough is there to hear anything.
We try to use it, but not enough is there to use up.

[35c19t] Lin Yutang
THE PEACE OF TAO
Hold the Great Symbol
And all the world follows,
Follows without meeting harm,
(And lives in) health, peace, commonwealth.
Offer good things to eat
And the wayfarer stays.
But Tao is mild to the taste.
Looked at, it cannot be seen;
Listened to, it cannot be heard;
Applied, its supply never fails.

[35c20t] Victor H. Mair
Hold fast to the great image and all under heaven will come;
They will come but not be harmed, rest in safety and peace;
Music and fine food will make the passerby halt.
Therefore,
When the Way is expressed verbally,
We say such things as
"how bland and tasteless it is!"
"We look for it, but there is not enough to be seen."
"We listen for it, but there is not enough to be heard."
Yet, when put to use, it is inexhaustible!

[35c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Hold on to the Great Image
and all under heaven will approach you.
Coming to you and not being harmed,
they will find rest, peace, and security.
A passing guest will pause at the sound of music and the smell of fancy food.
By comparison the Tao is mild and flavorless.
It is not solid enough to be seen,
nor loud enough to be heard.
Yet, it lasts forever.

[35c22t] David H. Li
Whoever embraces the Grand Image attracts people in the world.
Attracting but not discriminating, they live in peace.
Hearing music and seeing food, visitors linger.
Direction, [as a subject] for discussion, is plain and flavorless.

Looking at it, it is invisible;
Listening to it, it is inaudible;
using it, it is inexhaustible.

[35c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
From the great formless imagining the world emerges into existence,
Without obstruction, but with balance, harmony, and peace.
Music and feast provide fleeting pleasures in this ephemeral world.
The Tao in its utterance brings no such pleasures to the senses.
The Tao, when looked at, cannot be seen by the eye.
The Tao, when listened to, cannot be heard by the ear.
Yet, when used, it is forever inexhaustible.

[35c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The person who holds the great thing
Will go through a whole world.
He will go along the path straightforwardly without seeing danger,
But finds tranquillity, friendship, and equality.
The sounds of a tune and the scent of delicacies will cause the stranger passing by to stop.
But Tao, when it is expressed in words, is pure, devoid of all taste.
When someone looks at it, he won't see it.
When someone listens to it, he won't hear it.
However, when someone uses it, it is everything.

[35c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
Everyone will gather to the man
Who rules in the light of the One.
To trust such a being is to live
In true happiness and healing.
Good food and sweet music
May make you stop -
You listen, in passing.
But the Tao: how does it seem?
Oh, tasteless and shapeless by comparison.
You cannot even hear it.
Is it even worth trying to?
Yes, my friend because it is unending.

[35c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who holds the great image (Tao)
Attracts all the people to him.

Is tasteless.
It cannot be seen,
It cannot be heard,
But when using it, you can never exhaust its use.

[35c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Embrace the appearance of Tao.
Everyone under the great Heaven will follow it,
yet no one tries to cause harm to it.
Peace and safety and equality will arise.
Banquets and delicacies are like passing guests: they cannot last.
The Tao passes the mouth, it cannot be tasted.
The Tao passes the eyes, it cannot be seen.
The Tao passes the ears, it cannot be heard.
Yet it can never be exhausted by use.

[35c28t] Liu Qixuan
The owner of the biggest image attracts the whole world.
When all who come have been safely settled,
The world will then be peaceful.
Melodious music and delicious food
Can only attract passers-by.
But the Way is, when put into one's mouth, tasteless,
When looked at, colorless,
When listened to, uninteresting,
And, when used, limitlessly bountiful.

[35c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Peace In The Tao
Lao Tze says,
When the king of men holds the great image, the whole world's people turn to rally round him.
When people turn to rally round him, and do not commit loss and harm, then the world shall become peaceful and secure.
He who takes delight in the Tao, and enjoys it, the true one will stay with him.
The Tao's teaching is as dry as a course of tasteless dish.
It cannot be seen, nor can't be heard.
However, it will never be exhausted in its application.

[35c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
To him who holds to the Great Form all the world will go.
It will go and see no danger, but tranquillity, equality and community.
Music and dainties will make the passing stranger stop.
But Tao when uttered in words is so pure and void of flavour;
When one looks at it, one cannot see it;
When one listens to it, one cannot hear it.
However, when one uses it, it is inexhaustible.

Hold on to the great image
And the whole world will follow.
Following without harm, in safety, peace, and comfort.
Music and viand will cause the traveler to stop.
But Tao spoken by mouth is flavorless and bland.
Looked at, it cannot be seen.
Listened to, it cannot be heard.
Used, it will never be exhausted.

[35c32t] Michael LaFargue
Grasp the Great Image and the world will come,
it will come and not be harmed - a great peace and evenness.
For music and cakes, passing strangers stop,
Tao flowing from the lips - flat.
No taste to it.
Look for it: you will not be satisfied looking;
listen for it: you will not be satisfied listening;
put it into practice: you will not be satisfied stopping.

[35c33t] Cheng Lin
He who abides by the great Simulacrum (Truth) finds the people of the whole world eager to follow him.
By following him they are rendered free from harm, and peace prevails.
Like music and baits, he attracts all passers-by.
The utterance of Truth is insipid.
It cannot be seen with the eyes;
it cannot be heard with the ears;
it cannot be exhausted from constant use.

[35c34t] Yi Wu
He who holds to the great image

Dao is tasteless, invisible and inaudible,
But its use is inexhaustible.

[35c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
When the subtle Way of the universe is taught, people know where to go and what to learn, because they know that they will not be harmed but will receive great peace.
The teacher of the universal Way is like one who gives real food to people.
He does not feed them colorful bait with the intention of catching them.
The subtle Way of the universe is flavorless, with nothing much to offer the mouth.
Neither does it offer much to be enjoyed by the eyes or entertain the ears, yet its usefulness is inexhaustible.

[35c37t] Chang Chung-yuan

One deals with the world without harming it.
Instead, one makes the world serene, tranquil, and peaceful.

Listen to it, nothing can he heard.
Employ it, it cannot be depleted.

It has no flavor at all.

He who holds fast to the superior model, the whole world may follow him without ado.
They follow him without harm, but with comfort, equality and prosperity.
Musical temptation and food's flavor can stop a traveler on the road.
When Dao is tasted by mouth, it is mild and without flavor.
When it is looked at, it cannot be entirely seen;
when it is listened to, it cannot be entirely heard;
and when it is taken, it cannot be eaten.

К тому, кто овладел Великим образом, приходит Поднебесная.
Приходит - и устраняются бедствия, наступают умиротворение и покой.
Музыка и изысканная пища остановят уходящего путника.
Когда "Дао" исходит изо рта, оно не имеет запаха, не видимо и не слышимо, но в использовании неисчерпаемо.

[35c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
К тому, кто держит великий образ, стекается вся Поднебесная.
Стекается, и ничто не причиняет ей вреда; она в покое, мире и благоденствии великом пребывает.
Всюду радость и обильные яства, что путника влекут остановиться и их вкусить.
Когда Дао-Путь исходит из наших уст, он пресен и лишен вкуса.
Смотришь на него - и не можешь узреть.
Слушаешь его - и никак не услышать.
Используешь его - и никак не исчерпать его возможностей.

[35c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
К тому, кто держит Великий Образ, приходит вся Поднебесная.
Приходит и не испытывает вреда, находит благополучие, мир, уважение, радость и угощение;
забредший путник и тот остается.
Дао выходит изо рта, пресное, оно без вкуса.
Смотришь на него и не можешь увидеть.
Слушаешь его и не можешь услышать.
Используешь его и не можешь исчерпать.

[35c95t] Ян Хин-шун
К тому, кто представляет собой великий образ [дао], приходит весь народ.
Люди приходят, и он им не причиняет вреда.
Он приносит им мир, спокойствие, музыку и пищу.
Даже путешественник у него останавливается.
Когда дао выходит изо рта, оно пресное, безвкусное.
Оно незримо, и его нельзя услышать.
В действии оно неисчерпаемо.

[35c96t] Д. П. Конисси

Ходит, но не делает никакого вреда.
От удовольствия, спокойствия, тишины и величия дает ему (миру) пищу.
Проходящий пришелец остановился.
Когда он говорит о Тао, то как просты его слова!
(Когда) они произнесены, (то бывают) без всякого вкуса.

Держись Великого Образа,
И Поднебесная к тебе придет,
Придет - и знать не будет зла,
Всюду будет царить великий мир,
Где музыка звучит и яства на столе,
Там всякий путник мимо не пройдет.
Но слово, которое исходит от Пути,
Так блекло! Различишь его едва ли.
Смотришь на него - не можешь его видеть.
Слушаешь его - не можешь слышать.
Пользуйся им - за целый век не исчерпаешь.

Смотреть на него недостаточно, чтобы увидеть.
Слушать его недостаточно, чтобы услышать.
Использовать его недостаточно, чтобы исчерпать.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Six

[36c01t] Robert G. Henricks
If you wish to shrink it,
You must certainly stretch it.
If you wish to weaken it,
You must certainly strengthen it.
If you wish to desert it,
You must certainly work closely with it.
If you wish to snatch something from it,
You must certainly give something to it.
This is called the Subtle Light.
The submissive and weak conquer the strong.
Fish should not be taken out of the depths;
The state's sharp weapons should not be shown to the people.

[36c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHAT is in the end to be shrunken,
Begins by being first stretched out.
What is in the end to be weakened,
Begins by being first made strong.
What is in the end to be thrown down,
Begins by being first set on high.
What is in the end to be despoiled,
Begins by being first richly endowed.
Herein is the subtle wisdom of life:
The soft and weak overcomes the hard and strong.
Just as the fish must not leave the deeps,
So the ruler must not display his weapons.

[36c03t] D. C. Lau
If you would have a thing shrink,
You must first stretch it;
If you would have a thing weakened,
You must first strengthen it;
If you would have a thing laid aside,
You must first set it up;
If you would take from a thing,
You must first give to it.
This is called subtle discernment:
The submissive and weak will overcome the hard and strong.
The fish must not be allowed to leave the deep;
The instruments of power in a state must not be revealed to anyone.

[36c04t] R. L. Wing
In order to deplete it,
It must be thoroughly extended.
In order to weaken it,
It must be thoroughly strengthened.
In order to reject it,
It must be thoroughly promoted.
In order to take away from it,
It must be thoroughly endowed.
This is called a Subtle Insight.
The yielding can triumph over the inflexible;
The weak can triumph over the strong.
Fish should not be taken from deep waters;
Nor should organizations make obvious their advantages.

[36c05t] Ren Jiyu
In order to contract it, it is necessary to expand it for the time being.
In order to weaken it, it is necessary to strengthen it for the time being.
In order to destroy it, it is necessary to promote it for the time being.
In order to grasp it, it is necessary to give to it for the time being.
This is called profound insight (and also the reason why) the soft and weak overcome the hard and strong.
(Just like) fish cannot be taken away from deep water,
Effective weapons of the state cannot be easily displayed to others.

[36c06t] Gia-fu Feng
That which shrinks
Must first expand.
That which fails
Must first be strong.
That which is cast down
Must first be raised.
Before receiving
There must be giving.
This is called perception of the nature of things.
Soft and weak overcome hard and strong.
Fish cannot leave deep waters,
And a country's weapons should not be displayed.

[36c07t] Lok Sang Ho
In order to fold, one must first unfold;
In order to weaken, one must first strengthen;
In order to banish, one must first establish;
In order to deprive, one must first provide.
The following is called refined understanding:
That the weak will outperform the strong.
Just as fish should stay inside their deep pools.

So the best gadgets and tools of a country should not be displayed in front of others.

[36c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If it wants to shrink something, it always first expands it.
If it wants to weaken something, it always first strengthens it.
If it wants to get rid of something, it always first promotes it.
If it wants to take something, it always first gives it away.
These are delicate wisdoms, which is that the weak overcome the strong.
Big fish cannot leave deep water;
National security secrets cannot be shown to outsiders.

[36c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE COVERT AGREEMENT
When Nature is about to withhold a thing it is first sure to increase it.
When about to weaken it is first sure to strengthen.
When about to debase it is certain first to exalt.
When about to deprive it is first sure to give.
This is what I call the covert agreement.
The soft and the weak overcome the hard and the strong.
As a fish out of water is in danger, so a nation is in peril when its armaments are revealed to the people.

[36c10t] James Legge
When one is about to take an inspiration, he is sure to make a (previous) expiration;
when he is going to weaken another, he will first strengthen him;
when he is going to overthrow another, he will first have raised him up;
when he is going to despoil another, he will first have made gifts to him:
- this is called 'Hiding the light (of his procedure).'
The soft overcomes the hard;
and the weak the strong.
Fishes should not be taken from the deep;
instruments for the profit of a state should not be shown to the people.

[36c11t] David Hinton
To gather
you must scatter.
To weaken
you must strengthen.
To abandon
you must foster.
To take you must give.
This is called dusky enlightenment.
Soft and weak overcome hard and strong.
Fish should be kept in their watery depths:
a nation's honed instruments of power should be kept well-hidden from the people.

That which shall contract
Must have long expanded;
That which shall weaken
Must have long strengthened;
That which shall depart
Must have long partaken;
That which shall take
Must have long given.
This is called subtle insight.
Softness and weakness overcome strength:
Fish cannot leap out of deep water;
So cannot the state's sharp weapons
Be displayed to men.

[36c13t] Ellen M. Chen
What is to be reduced,
Must first be expanded.
What is to be weakened,
Must first be made strong (ch'iang).
What is to be abolished,
Must first be established.
What is to be taken away,
Must first be given.
This is called the subtle illumination (wei ming).
The soft and weak overcome the hard and strong.
Fish must not leave the stream.
Sharp weapons (ch'i) of a state,
Must not be displayed.

[36c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
[Machination is often played out with following preemptive measures:]
In order to dwindle [an enemy], a predator would induce the targeted victim to bloat up his illusory assessment of himself;
In order to weaken [an enemy], a wrecker would make it utterly convincing that [he is too feeble] to confront him;
In order to eliminate [a rival], a schemer would make him believe that [the schemer's work would enhance] his rival's prosperity;
In order to take [power or possession away from someone], a conspirator would use favors and gifts to win the trust of his targeted victim [first to win his confidence];
All of the above exemplifies what I called "the subtle and veiled brilliance" [which explains why the weak ones will eventually prevail over the strong ones].
People who are pliable (flexible) will [ultimately] excel people who are rigid (obstinate);
A person who [regards himself] weaker [than he actually is] will [eventually] prevail over a person who [considers himself] stronger [than he truly is];
Fish should not surface from the depth of the abyss [for the sake of safekeeping];
Efficient instruments (weaponry) of a country should not be shown to [unreasonable] people.

Must begin by being made strong.
What is to be overthrown
Must begin by being set up.
He who would be a taker
Must begin as a giver.
This is called 'dimming' one's light.
It is thus that the soft overcomes the hard
And the weak, the strong.
'It is best to leave the fish down in his pool;
Best to leave the State's sharpest weapons where none can see them.'

[36c18t] Richard John Lynn
If you would like to gather him in, you must resolve yourself to let him aggrandize himself.
If you would like to weaken him, you must resolve yourself to let him grow strong.
If you would like to nullify him, you must resolve yourself to let him flourish.
If you would like to take him, you must resolve yourself to let him have his way.
Such an approach is called subtle and perspicacious.
Softness and pliancy conquer hardness and forcefulness.
Fish must not be allowed to escape to the depths.
The sharp instruments of the state may not be disclosed to the people.

[36c19t] Lin Yutang
THE RHYTHM OF LIFE
He who is to be made to dwindle (in power)
Must first be caused to expand.
He who is to be weakened
Must first be made strong.
He who is to be laid low
Must first be exalted to power.
He who is to be taken away from
Must first be given.
This is the Subtle Light.
Gentleness overcomes strength:
Fish should be left in the deep pool,
And sharp weapons of the state should be left
Where none can see them.

[36c20t] Victor H. Mair
When you wish to contract something,
you must momentarily expand it;
When you wish to weaken something,
you must momentarily strengthen it;
When you wish to reject something,
you must momentarily join with it;
When you wish to seize something,
you must momentarily give it up.
This is called "subtle insight."
The soft and weak conquer the strong.
Fish cannot be removed from the watery depths;
The profitable instruments of state cannot be shown to the people.

[36c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
That which is to be shrunk must first be stretched out.
That which is to be weakened must first be strengthened.
That which is to be cast down must first be raised up.
That which is to be taken must first be given.
There is wisdom in dimming your light.
For the soft and gentle will overcome the hard and powerful.
Fish are best left in deep waters.
And, weapons are best kept out of sight.

[36c22t] David H. Li
Before contracting [an object], let it expand;
Before weakening [an object], let it solidify;
Before abandoning [an object], let it flourish;
Before seizing [an object], let it aggregate.

This is discernment at its micro best.
Tenderness overcomes bruteness.
Fish cannot survive away from water.
A state does not boast her weaponry before the people.

[36c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
What is ultimately to be compressed must first be expanded.
What is ultimately to be weakened must first be strengthened.
What is ultimately to be discarded must first be promoted.
What is ultimately to be taken away must first be given.
This is the subtle light of wisdom.
The soft overcomes the hard.
The weak overcomes the strong.
The fish should never leave the water.
The formed should never leave the formless.

[36c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
In order to reduce something, it must first be expanded.
In order to weaken something, it must first be strengthened.
In order to drop something, it must first be lifted.
"In order to take, a man must first give."
This is what is called the wisdom of light.
The soft and weak can overcome the hard and strong.
Just as the fish should not leave the depths,
The sharp instruments of control should not leave their hiding-place.

[36c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
What is going to be diminished
Must first be allowed to inflate.
Whatever you want to weaken
Must first be convinced of its strength.
What you want to overcome
You must first of all submit to ...
What you want to take over
You must first of all give to -
This is called discerning.
You see, what is yielding and weak
Overcomes what is hard and strong:
(And just as a fish can't be seen when he stays down in the deep don't show your power to anyone).

[36c26t] Gu Zhengkun
If you want a thing to contract,
You should stretch it first;
If you want a thing weakened,
You should strengthen it first;

You should promote it first;
If you want a thing taken away,
You should give to it first.
These are called subtle wisdom.
The supple and weak overcomes the rigid and strong.
Fish should not be allowed to leave the deep water;
The instruments of power of a state
Should not be shown to the public.

[36c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
To gather things, one must first disseminate them.
To weaken things, one must first strengthen them.
To abolish things, one must first prevail upon them.
To seize things, one must first grant them.
That is what 'profound understanding' means.
The soft will overcome the hard.
The weak will overcome the strong.
The fish shall not leave deep waters.
The weapons of a country should not be displayed in public.

[36c28t] Liu Qixuan
To compress something, one must first prop it.
To weaken something, one must first strengthen it.
To stop something, one must first advocate it.
To take something, one must first give it.
Subtle wisdom depends on the Way
In enabling the weak to defeat the strong killers.
A fish cannot go out of deep water for its existence.
A nation's effective system should be kept unknown.

[36c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Doctrine of Reversion
Lao Tze says,
A man who wants his opponent to become a greedy man should allow him the chance to expand his benefit first.
He who wants to weaken his competitor should let his ambitions grow first.
He who wants to demolish his adversary should let him achieve first.
He who wants to plunder his enemy should let him have the storage place first.
These are subtle but effective stratagems.
The feeble will overcome the strong.
But fishes shouldn't leave the deep; a state's strategy shouldn't be shown to any person who is not concerned with it.

[36c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
In order to contract a thing, one should surely expand it first.
In order to weaken, one will surely strengthen first.

In order to overthrow, one will surely exalt first.
'In order to take, one will surely give first.'
This is called subtle wisdom.
The soft and weak can overcome the hard and strong.
As the fish should not leave the deep
So should the sharp implements of a nation not be shown to anyone.

[36c31t] Paul J. Lin
About to shut it, let it first be opened.
About to weaken it, let it first be strengthened.
About to destroy it, let it first be advanced.
About to snatch it, let it first be given away.
This is called the subtle wisdom.
The soft overcomes the hard;
The weak overcomes the strong.
As fish cannot be separated from deep water,
The state's sharp weapons cannot be shown to the people.

[36c32t] Michael LaFargue
When you want to shrink something,
you must always enlarge it.
When you want to weaken something,
you must always strengthen it.
When you want to neglect something,
you must always involve yourself with it.
When you want to deprive something,
you must always give to it.
This is called 'Subtle Clarity'.
Softness and Weakness overcome what is hard and strong.
"The fish must not leave the depths;
the state's 'sharp weapons' must not be shown to others."

[36c33t] Cheng Lin
When one wishes to expand, one must first contract.
When one wishes to be strong, one must first be weak.
When one wishes to rise, one must first fall.
When one wishes to take, one must first give.
This is called mere truism.
Meekness can overcome hardness, and weakness can overcome strength.
Fishes cannot survive after leaving deep waters.
The State must not leave the weapons of war in the hands of the people.

If it wants to take away anything, surely it will first give it.
This is called the subtle enlightenment.
The soft and the weak win over the hard and the strong.
Fish cannot leave the deep water.
The state's sharpest weapons cannot be shown to people.

[36c35t] Han Hiong Tan
If you want to contract something, you must first stretch it.
You must first strengthen his power before you can weaken him.
Similarly, you have to build up something first before you can demolish it.
You can only take something away from somebody after they have possessed it.
This sort of platitudes is known as "subtle discernment".
The soft and the weak can overcome the hard and the strong.
Just like the fish should not leave the deep,
The machination in politics must not be revealed to the public.

[36c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
If you hope to expand, you should first contract.
If you hope to become strong, you should first weaken yourself.
If your ambition is to be exalted, humiliation will follow.
If you hold fast to something, it will surely be taken away from you.
This is the operation of the subtle law of the universe.
The law of the universe is subtle, but it can be known.
The soft and meek can overcome the hard and strong.
The strength of a country must not be displayed.
Just as fish cannot leave the deep,
one must never stray from one's true nature.

[36c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
That which is to be condensed must first be dispersed.
That which is to be enervated must first be vitalized.
That which is to be devastated must first be produced.
That which is to be obtained must first be yielded.
This is called invisible illumination.

The weak overcomes the strong.
Just as fish stay deep in the pond,
The best arms in the nation are those that remain invisible.

One must first set it up;
Wishing to take from anything,
One must first supply it.
This is called Faint Light.

When you want to rob it,
You must first give it.
This is called subtle light.
The soft and weak prevails over the hard and strong.
The fish may not leave the depths.
The sharp instrument of the state

This is called the Fine Light.
The weak overcomes the strong.
Fish cannot live away from the source.

Прежде чем что-либо сжать, следует сначала его растянуть;
прежде чем что-либо ослабить, следует сначала его укрепить;
прежде чем что-либо низринуть, следует сначала дать ему подняться;
прежде чем у кого-либо отнять, следует сначала ему предоставить.
Это зовут неуловимым крошечным просветом.
Мягкое и слабое одерживает верх над твердостью и силой.
Рыбе не годится выплывать из глубины.
Бразды правления не следует показывать.

[36c92t] А. А. Маслов
Желая что-то сжать, сначала растяни его.
Желая что-то ослабить, сначала усиль его.
Желая что-то уничтожить, позволь этому сначала расцвести.
Желая что-то отнять, сначала дай это.
Это и зовётся утончённо-искусным просветлением.
Мягкое и слабое одолевают твёрдое и сильное.
Рыба не может покинуть глубину.
Равно и государству нельзя показывать инструменты управления народу.

[36c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Если хочешь нечто сжать - прежде растяни его.
Если хочешь нечто ослабить - прежде усиль его.
Если хочешь нечто погубить - прежде дай расцвести ему.
Если хочешь нечто отнять - вначале нечто дай.
Это и называют утонченной просветленностью:
Ведь мягкое и слабое побеждает сильное и крепкое.
Острое оружие Поднебесной ни в коем случае нельзя показывать людям.

Чтобы нечто сжать, необходимо прежде расширить его.
Чтобы нечто ослабить, необходимо прежде усилить его.
Чтобы нечто уничтожить, необходимо прежде взрастить его.
Чтобы нечто отнять, необходимо прежде дать его.
Это и называется сокровенно-глубокой просветленностью.
Мягкое и слабое побеждает твердое и сильное.
Как рыбе нельзя уйти из глубин, так и методам управления государством не должно обучать людей.

[36c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Чтобы нечто сжать, необходимо прежде расширить его.
Чтобы нечто ослабить, нужно прежде укрепить его.
Чтобы нечто уничтожить, необходимо прежде дать ему расцвести.
Чтобы нечто у кого-то отнять, нужно прежде дать ему.
Это называется глубокой истиной.
Мягкое и слабое побеждает твердое и сильное.
Как рыба не может покинуть глубину, так и государство не должно выставлять напоказ людям свои совершенные методы [управления].

[36c96t] Д. П. Конисси
То, что сжимается, - расширяется.
То, что ослабевает, - усиливается.
То, что уничтожается, - восстановляется.
То, что лишается всего, - имело все.
Все это называется то скрытым, то ясным.
Мягкое побеждает твердое, слабое - сильное.
Как рыба не может покинуть глубины, так страна не может оставаться без орудия.
Сильное орудие правления не должно быть показываемо народу.

[36c97t] В. В. Малявин
Если хочешь сжать,
Прежде нужно растянуть.
Если хочешь ослабить,
Прежде нужно усилить.
Если хочешь развалить,
Прежде нужно возвеличить.
Если хочешь отнять,
Прежде нужно дать.
Вот что зовется "опережающим прозрением".
Мягкое и слабое одолеет твердое и сильное.
Рыбе лучше не покидать глубины,
А то, что приносит царству благо, нельзя показывать людям.

[36c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Стремишься сжать - необходимо сильно растянуть.
Стремишься ослабить - необходимо сильно укрепить.
Стремишься разрушить - необходимо сильно возвысить.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Seven

576/2593

[37c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The Tao is constantly nameless.
Were marquises and kings able to maintain it,
The ten thousand things would transform on their own.
Having transformed, were their desires to become active,
I would subdue them with the nameless simplicity.
Having subdued them with the nameless simplicity,
I would not disgrace them.
By not being disgraced, they will be tranquil.
And Heaven and Earth will of themselves be correct and right.

[37c02t] John C. H. Wu
TAO never makes any ado,
And yet it does everything.
If a ruler can cling to it,
All things will grow of themselves.
When they have grown and tend to make a stir,
It is time to keep them in their place by the aid of the nameless Primal Simplicity,
Which alone can curb the desires of men.
When the desires of men are curbed, there will be peace,
And the world will settle down of its own accord.

[37c03t] D. C. Lau
The way never acts yet nothing is left undone.
Should lords and princes be able to hold fast to it,
The myriad creatures will be transformed of their own accord.
After they are transformed, should desire raise its head,
I shall press it down with the weight of the nameless uncarved block.
The nameless uncarved block
Is but freedom from desire,
And if I cease to desire and remain still,
The empire will be at peace of its own accord.

[37c04t] R. L. Wing
The Tao never acts, And yet is never inactive.
If leaders can hold on to it,
All Things will be naturally influenced.
Influenced and yet desiring to act,
I would calm them with Nameless Simplicity.
Nameless Simplicity is likewise without desire;
And without desire there is harmony.
The world will then be naturally stabilized.

[37c05t] Ren Jiyu
Tao invariably does nothing,
And yet there is nothing left undone.
If kings and princes can preserve it,
All things will submit to them spontaneously.
(After their) submission if any desires occur,
I should subdue them with the nameless simplicity.
The nameless simplicity is nothing but eradication of desires.
Eradication of desires will lead to quietude,
Thus the world will naturally find its equilibrium.

[37c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Tao abides in non-action,
Yet nothing is left undone.
If kings and lords observed this,
The ten thousand things would develop naturally.
If they still desired to act,
They would return to the simplicity of formless substance.
Without form there is no desire.
Without desire there is tranquillity.
And in this way all things would be at peace.

[37c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Dao neither contrives to do something nor abstains from doing anything.
If only the kings and barons would follow the Dao,
all the living things would be transformed.
If the transformed living things should contrive to do anything,
I would restrain them with the natural simplicity of the Unnamed.
I would have them freed from desires.
Freedom from desires is achieved by stilling the mind.
Everything under heaven will then fall back into their natural places.

[37c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The DAO always practices WUWEI, but there is nothing that it cannot do.
If the kings can use the DAO, people will take care of themselves.
When people get freedom, they begin to have desires;
I will then use this nameless and simple DAO to guide them.
This nameless and simple DAO will make them have no desires.
Without desires, they will be peaceful, and the country will keep stability by itself.

[37c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE ART OF GOVERNMENT
Tao remains quiescent, and yet leaves nothing undone.
If a ruler or a king could hold it, all things would of their own accord assume the desired shape.

If in the process of transformation desire should arise, I would check it by the ineffable simplicity.
The ineffable simplicity would bring about an absence of desire, and rest would come back again.
Thus the world would regenerate itself.

[37c10t] James Legge
The Tao in its regular course does nothing (for the sake of doing it), and so there is nothing which it does not do.
If princes and kings were able to maintain it, all things would of themselves be transformed by them.
If this transformation became to me an object of desire, I would express the desire by the nameless simplicity.
Simplicity without a name
Is free from all external aim.
With no desire, at rest and still,
All things go right as of their will.

[37c11t] David Hinton
Way is perennially doing nothing so there's nothing it doesn't do.
When lords and emperors abide by this the ten thousand things follow change of themselves.
Desire drives change,
but I've stilled it with uncarved nameless simplicity.
Uncarved nameless simplicity is the perfect absence of desire,
and the absence of desire means repose:
all beneath heaven at rest of itself.

[37c12t] Chichung Huang
The Tao is constant and nameless.
If marquises and kings can adhere to it,
The ten thousand things will live and grow spontaneously.
While they live and grow spontaneously,
If lusts arise,
I shall fill them with the nameless unhewn log.
Being filled with the nameless unhewn log,
They shall become lustless.
Lustlessness leads to stillness;
Heaven and earth shall turn aright spontaneously.

[37c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Tao everlasting (ch'ang) does not act (wu wei),
And yet nothing is not done (erh wu pu wei).
If kings and barons can abide by (shou) it,
The ten thousand things will transform by themselves (tzu hua).
If in transforming desire (yü) is aroused,
I shall suppress it by the nameless uncarved wood (p'u).
With the nameless uncarved wood,

578/2593

There shall be no desire (wu yü).
Without desire there is thus quietude (ching).
The world shall be self-ordered (tzu ting).

[37c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Tao does not intervene [with the natural course of events],
Still its predominance is on all phases of every thing (events);
If kings and lords can hold on to natural courses, everything [on Earth] will go his way spontaneously;
However, if kings and lords, after they have gained the subordination [of the world], would entertain the idea of tampering with Tao in order to satisfy their improper demand], I must warn them about the power of the inexplicable Simplicity (Tao);
Simplicity (Tao), though difficult to describe, is learned through the elimination of [subjective and selfish] desires;
The elimination of [subjective and selfish] desires leads to Serenity;
A [serene] world shall embark on the course of righteousness (peace and nobility).

[37c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The Way does not do, but does do (does not do nothing).
If kings and princes can cling to it, all things will change by themselves.
When they change and tend to stir, it is time to keep them in their place by the aid of the nameless uncarved.
It is the uncarved that curbs the desires.
Without desires, there will be stillness; the world will be in peace by itself.

[37c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Tao normally does not interfere, yet it plays a role everywhere.
If the kings and nobles can follow it, everything would become submissive.
If rebellion is attempted, I will use Tao's extreme honesty to suppress it.
Using Tao's extreme honesty to suppress it, people would have no ambition.
With no ambition, people would be peaceful.
Thus, the world would go back to normal.

[37c17t] Arthur Waley
Tao never does;
Yet through it all things are done.
If the barons and kings would but possess themselves of it,
The ten thousand creatures would at once be transformed.
And if having been transformed they should desire to act,
We must restrain them by the blankness of the Unnamed.
The blankness of the Unnamed
Brings dispassion;
To be dispassionate is to be still.
And so, of itself, the whole empire will be at rest.

[37c18t] Richard John Lynn
The Dao in its constancy engages in no conscious action,

Yet nothing remains undone.
If any lord or prince could hold on to it, the myriad folk would undergo moral transformation spontaneously.
Once nurtured, should desire arise, I would press down on it with the nameless uncarved block.
With the nameless uncarved block, they too would stay free of desire.
Achieving tranquillity by keeping them free of desire, all under Heaven would govern themselves.

[37c19t] Lin Yutang
WORLD PEACE
The Tao never does,
Yet through it everything is done,
If princes and dukes can keep the Tao,
The world will of its own accord be reformed.
When reformed and rising to action,
Let it be restrained by the Nameless pristine simplicity.
The Nameless pristine simplicity
Is stripped of desire (for contention).
By stripping of desire quiescence is achieved,
And the world arrives at peace of its own accord.

[37c20t] Victor H. Mair
The Way is eternally nameless.
If feudal lords and kings preserve it,
The myriad creatures will be transformed by themselves.
After transformation, if they wish to rise up,
I shall restrain them with the nameless unhewn log.
By restraining them with the nameless unhewn log,
They will not feel disgraced;
Not feeling disgraced,
They will be still,
Whereupon heaven and earth will be made right by themselves.

[37c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The Tao never strives,
yet nothing is left undone.
If leaders were able to adhere to it the ten thousand things would develop of their own accord.
If after they have developed they experience desires to strive, they can bury those desires under the nameless Uncarved Block.
The nameless Uncarved Block can protect against desire.
When desires are restrained there will be peace,
and then all under heaven will be at rest.

[37c22t] David H. Li
Direction is laissez-faire at all times; it is all-permeating.
Were a Duke or a Prince to govern with Direction,
Myriad matters would develop on own volition.

As self-development degenerates into avarice in complexity,
I suppress it with Direction's simplicity.
Suppressing with Direction's simplicity,
avarice disappears.
Without avarice, serenity visits with ease;
The world self-governs in peace.

[37c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The Tao does nothing,
Yet it leaves nothing undone.
If the leaders of the world abide by it,
All beings of their own accord will transform themselves.
If in the course of self-transformation discordant desires arise,
Calm them with the unnameable simplicity of the Tao.
If calmed with the nameless simplicity of the Tao,
Discordant desires of their own accord will disappear.
If discordant desires disappear and quietude is restored,
The world of its own accord will order itself.

[37c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Tao is never active, but there is nothing it does not do.
If princes and kings could hold onto it, all things would develop by themselves.
When they develop, the desire in them would emerge,
I would restrain them with simplicity,
So simple that it does not even have a name,
In order to liberate them from desire.
Free of desire, they would be soaked in tranquillity,
And thus the world would attain purity and virtue.
Simplicity, however unimportant it may be,
Cannot be subdued even by the entire world.
If princes and kings could hold onto it,
Everything in the world, of its own accord, would pay homage.
Heaven and earth would unite to sprinkle dew, sweeter than honey, on the ground.
Without anyone ordering them to do so, people would attain harmony by themselves.
With the mission accomplished and the objectives achieved,
People would see themselves as following in nature's footsteps.

[37c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
The Tao goes on forever wu-wei - doing nothing
And yet everything gets done.
How?
It does it by being,
And by being everything it does.
If people and rulers go by this then every living thing will be well.
And if parts still want to separate the true leader will use the centrifugal weight of this original unnameable Oneness.

It is simple:
If no one wants anything for themselves then there can be peace and all things will know peace the way music ends in peace.

[37c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The Tao always remains inactive,
Yet it acts upon everything in the world.
If lords and kings can keep it,
All creatures will grow and develop naturally.
When desires are kindled in the growth and development,
I can suppress them with the nameless Simplicity of the Tao.
Once I do so
Desires will be repressed.
Once desires are repressed,
The whole world will be naturally at peace.

[37c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The Tao always does nothing but nothing remains undone.
If the ruler observes this the myriad creatures will act of their own accord.
After their metamorphosis, desire will arise.
It will press them down with the power of the uncarved block, the Tao.
The nameless uncarved block is free from desire.
Absence of desire will lead to stillness and the world under Heaven will be harmonized by itself.

[37c28t] Liu Qixuan
The eternal Way serves everything by doing nothing.
If the kings can keep the model,
A natural order will appear in the world.
Should something undesirable grow after that,
Prevent it with the nameless simplicity.
By saying "the nameless simplicity,"
I mean the reduction of vain desires.
Vain desires can be reduced by serenity of mind,
And the world can then be back in the Way.

[37c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The World In Peace
Lao Tze says,
The Tao's accomplishment is constantly made through acting without the intent to control fate, yet leaving nothing undone.
If the king of men insists on practicing the Tao, all existence will transform themselves in their natural courses.
When they transform and go out of their way, the king of men should guide them back to a pristine simplicity which was unknown to the world before.
Namely, the pristine simplicity of being desireless.
To be desireless is cultivated by being still.

It is by this stillness that this world is settled down in peace naturally.

[37c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Tao is ever inactive, and yet there is nothing that it does not do.
If princes and kings could keep to it, all things would of themselves become developed.
When they are developed, desire would stir in them;
I would restrain them by the nameless Simplicity,
In order to make them free from desire.
Free from desire, they would be at rest;
And the world would of itself become rectified.
However insignificant Simplicity seems, the whole world cannot make it submissive.
If princes and kings could keep to it,
All things in the world would of themselves pay homage.
Heaven and earth would unite to send down sweet dew.
The people with no one to command them would of themselves become harmonious.
When merits are accomplished and affairs completed,
The people would speak of themselves as following nature.

[37c31t] Paul J. Lin
Tao is always inactive.
But it leaves nothing undone.
If dukes and kings can keep it,
Then all things will be naturally transformed.
If transformation raises desires,
I would suppress them with nameless simplicity.
Nameless simplicity means being without desires.
Being without desires and with tranquility,
The world will keep peace by itself.

[37c32t] Michael LaFargue
Tao invariably Does Nothing,
and nothing remains not done.
If the princes and kings can watch over it,
the thousands of things will change by themselves.
If they change, and become desirous and active,
I will restrain them with the Nameless One's Simplicity.
Restraining them with the Nameless One's Simplicity will cause them no disgrace.
Not being disgraced, they will be Still.
The world will order itself.

[37c33t] Cheng Lin
Truth abides by inaction, and yet nothing is left undone.
If the rulers abide by Truth, all animate creation will of their own accord come under their influence.
When they of their own accord come under their influence, and if selfish desires arise, I would tranquillize them with the nameless simplicity (Truth).
Once tranquillized by the nameless simplicity, they will again be free from selfish desires.

Thus free from selfish desires, they will be calm, and the world will of its own accord become peaceful.

[37c34t] Yi Wu
The Way is constantly in non-action,
But it leaves nothing undone.
If dukes and kings can keep to it,
All things will be transformed by themselves.
But, in transforming, desires arise.
I will subdue them by the nameless simplicity;
With nameless simplicity,
There will be no desires.
Being desireless is to be tranquil.
All the world will become calm by itself.

[37c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Dao always sticks to non-action, yet everything develops spontaneously.
If the rulers could follow the way of Dao,
Everything under the sun will function properly.
If desire begins to creep in during the developing process,
It should be constrained by the "nameless simplicity".
The "nameless simplicity" has no designs.
Without designs, it will not create any disturbance.
Hence, peace will again prevail in the world.

[37c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The subtle essence of the universe is always unoccupied,
yet it leaves nothing undone.
If the people of the world were wise enough to plant the root of their lives deep within the Subtle Origin, then the worldly affairs of life would coherently follow their own natural course, and harmony would abound of its own accord.
When confusion takes place in one's surroundings,
it can be dissolved with the power of undisturbable Simplicity.
When life is ruled by undisturbable Simplicity, desire and passion naturally fall away and reveal people's true, original nature.
Then the peaceful order of the universe prevails and unity manifests again of its own accord.

[37c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Tao is real and free from action, yet nothing is not acted upon.
If rulers abide with it, all things transmute by themselves.
If, in the process of transmutation, intention emerges, it must be overcome by the original non-differentiation of the nameless.
To experience the original non-differentiation of the nameless, one should also be free from intending to have no-intention.
To be free from intending to have no-intention is to be quiescent.
Thereby, the world is naturally led to tranquillity.

Desirelessness will tend to quiescence,
And the world will set itself on the right course.

[37c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Tao never does,

The nameless, uncarved block
Brings desirelessness.
With desirelessness comes stillness,
And all under Heaven will be at peace by itself.

[37c40t] Tao Huang
Tao is eternally nameless.

Дао, будучи незыблемым, находится в бездействии, но оно при этом непременно действует.
Если владетели и царь смогут ему следовать, то десять тысяч вещей сами же преобразуются.
Когда они, преобразовываясь, пожелают возрасти, я их укрощу посредством приведения к безымянной первозданности.
В состоянии безымянной первозданности не появится желаний.
А при отсутствии желаний и в покое Поднебесная сама придет к стабильности.

[37c92t] А. А. Маслов
Дао извечно пребывает в недеянии, но нет того, чего бы оно ни совершало.
Если правители и князья могли бы соблюдать его, мириады существ обрели бы самопреображение.
Если же после того, как они обретут преображение, родятся желания, то я погашу их безымянной простотой.
Безымянная простота свободна от желаний.
И если, избавясь от желаний, я обрету спокойствие, то Поднебесная сама придёт в порядок.

[37c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Дао-Путь постоянен, в недеянии он пребывает, но нет ничего, не сделанного им.
И если князья и цари умеют его блюсти, все сущее будет изменяться само по себе.
Но если изменяясь, оно возжелает творить самочинно, я буду давить на него простотой первозданной.
После того как я надавлю на него простотой первозданной, оно желать перестанет.
Без вожделений оно обретет покой, и тогда Поднебесная исправится сама собой.

[37c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Дао постоянно не деяет и не не-деяет.
Если хоу и ваны смогут блюсти его, то мириады вещей будут сами собою развиваться.
[Но если кто] наравне с развитием вдруг возжелает еще и мастерить, я обуздаю того безымянным духовным естеством (пу).
Само же безымянное духовное естество по-прежнему останется бесстрастным.
[Его] бесстрастие приведет к покою, и Поднебесная сама собою утвердится.

[37c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Дао постоянно осуществляет недеяние, однако нет ничего такого, что бы оно не делало.
Если знать и государи будут его соблюдать, то все существа будут изменяться сами собой.
Если те, которые изменяются, захотят действовать, то я буду подавлять их при помощи простого бытия, не обладающего именем.
Не обладающее именем - простое бытие - для себя ничего не желает.
Отсутствие желания приносит покой, и тогда порядок в стране сам собой установится.

Тао ничего не делает, но нет того, чего бы оно не сделало.
Если царь и князья хорошо будут управлять страной, то все существа преобразуются так, как они желают.
Если все существа придут в сильное движение, то я удержу их посредством безымянной простоты.
Безымянная простота не имеет страсти.
Когда (в мире) не будет страстей, то будет спокойствие повсеместное и на всей земле будет правда.

[37c97t] В. В. Малявин

Путь вечно в недеянии,
А в мире все делается.
Если князья и цари смогут блюсти его,
Вещи сами себя претворят.
Если потом они возымеют желание действовать,
Я сдержу их безымянной простотой.
Безымянная простота не таит никаких желаний.
Когда в покое не родится желаний,
Поднебесный мир выправится сам собой.

[37c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский

Постоянство Пути - в отсутствии осуществления.
В результате отсутствует не-осуществленное.
Если удельные князья и правители способны придерживаться этого, тогда мириады сущностей сами стремятся к преобразованиям.
Если в преобразованиях желают действовать, то сущность моя удержит их посредством первозданной целостности отсутствия имен.
Состояние первозданной целостности отсутствия имен также ориентирует на отсутствие стремлений.
Когда состояние отсутствия стремлений осуществляется посредством покоя, тогда выправление Поднебесной будет происходить само собой.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Eight

[38c01t] Robert G. Henricks

The highest virtue is not virtuous; therefore it truly has virtue.
The lowest virtue never loses sight of its virtue; therefore it has no true virtue.
The highest virtue takes no action, yet it has no reason for acting this way;
The highest humanity takes action, yet it has no reason for acting this way;
The highest righteousness takes action, and it has its reasons for acting this way;
The highest propriety takes action, and when no one responds to it, then it angrily rolls up its sleeves and forces people to comply.
Therefore, when the Way is lost, only then do we have virtue;
When virtue is lost, only then do we have humanity;
When humanity is lost, only then do we have righteousness;
And when righteousness is lost, only then do we have propriety.
As for propriety, it's but the thin edge of loyalty and sincerity, and the beginning of disorder.
And foreknowledge is but the flower of the Way, and the beginning of stupidity.
Therefore the Great Man
Dwells in the thick and doesn't dwell in the thin;
Dwells in the fruit and doesn't dwell in the flower.
Therefore, he rejects that and takes this.

[38c02t] John C. H. Wu

HIGH Virtue is non-virtuous;
Therefore it has Virtue.
Low Virtue never frees itself from virtuousness;
Therefore it has no Virtue.
High Virtue makes no fuss and has no private ends to serve:
Low Virtue not only fusses but has private ends to serve.
High humanity fusses but has no private ends to serve:
High morality not only fusses but has private ends to serve.
High ceremony fusses but finds no response;
Then it tries to enforce itself with rolled-up sleeves.
Failing Tao, man resorts to Virtue.
Failing Virtue, man resorts to humanity.
Failing humanity, man resorts to morality.
Failing morality, man resorts to ceremony.
Now, ceremony is the merest husk of faith and loyalty;
It is the beginning of all confusion and disorder.
As to foreknowledge, it is only the flower of Tao,
And the beginning of folly.
Therefore, the full-grown man sets his heart upon the substance rather than the husk;
Upon the fruit rather than the flower.
Truly, he prefers what is within to what is without.

[38c03t] D. C. Lau

A man of the highest virtue does not keep to virtue and that is why he has virtue.
A man of the lowest virtue never strays from virtue and that is why he is without virtue.
The former never acts yet leaves nothing undone.
The latter acts but there are things left undone.
A man of the highest benevolence acts, but from no ulterior motive.
A man of the highest rectitude acts, but from ulterior motive.
A man most conversant in the rites acts, but when no one responds rolls up his sleeves and resorts to persuasion by force.
Hence when the way was lost there was virtue;
When virtue was lost there was benevolence;
When benevolence was lost there was rectitude;
When rectitude was lost there were the rites.
The rites are the wearing thin of loyalty and good faith
And the beginning of disorder;
Foreknowledge is the flowery embellishment of the way
And the beginning of folly.
Hence the man of large mind abides in the thick not in the thin, in the fruit not in the flower.
Therefore he discards the one and takes the other.

[38c04t] R. L. Wing

Superior Power is never Powerful, thus it has Power.
Inferior Power is always Powerful, thus it has no Power.
Superior Power takes no action and acts without motive.
Inferior Power takes action and acts with motive.
Superior philanthropy takes action and acts without motive.
Superior morality takes action and acts with motive.
Superior propriety takes action and there is no response;
So it raises its arm to project itself.
Therefore, lose the Tao and Power follows.
Lose the Power and philanthropy follows.
Lose philanthropy and morality follows.
Lose morality and propriety follows.
One who has propriety has the veneer of truth
And yet is the leader of confusion.
One who knows the future has the luster of the Tao
And yet is ignorant of its origins.
Therefore those with the greatest endurance
Can enter the substantial,
Not occupy its veneer;
Can enter reality,
Not occupy its luster.
Hence they discard one and receive the other.

[38c05t] Ren Jiyu

The superior virtue does not show itself in formal virtue,

589/2593

Underdog_way.pdf, revision 8, sanmayce@hotmail.com, a corpus of 50(42 english, 8 russian) proofed(many originals' bugs crushed) translations of 老子道德經 or Lao Zi Dao De Jing

In this way it really possesses virtue.
The inferior virtue rigidly sticks to formal virtue,
In this way it loses virtue.
The superior virtue takes no action to show itself, and need not do so purposely.
The inferior virtue takes action to show itself, and does so purposely.
The superior benevolence takes action to show itself, and does not do so on purpose.
The superior righteousness takes action to show itself, and does so on purpose.
The superior propriety takes action to show itself,
And when it gets no response, it will stretch its arms and retaliate.
Therefore, only when Tao is lost does De arise,
Only when De is lost does benevolence arise,
Only when benevolence is lost does righteousness arise,
Only when righteousness is lost does propriety arise.
The thing that is called propriety is really the want of loyalty and faithfulness and the beginning of disorder.
The thing that is called foresight is really the ornament of Tao and the beginning of ignorance.
For this reason the great man dwells in the thick and keeps away from the thin,
He dwells in plainness and keeps away from the ornament.
Therefore he rejects the latter and accepts the former.

[38c06t] Gia-fu Feng
A truly good man is not aware of his goodness,
And is therefore good.
A foolish man tries to be good,
And is therefore not good.
A truly good man does nothing,
Yet leaves nothing undone.
A foolish man is always doing,
Yet much remains to be done.
When a truly kind man does something, he leaves nothing undone.
When a just man does something, he leaves a great deal to be done.
When a disciplinarian does something and no one responds,
He rolls up his sleeves in an attempt to enforce order.
Therefore when Tao is lost, there is goodness.
When goodness is lost, there is kindness.
When kindness is lost, there is justice.
When justice is lost, there is ritual.
Now ritual is the husk of faith and loyalty, the beginning of confusion.
Knowledge of the future is only a flowery trapping of the Tao.
It is the beginning of folly.
Therefore the truly great man dwells on what is real and not what is on the surface,
On the fruit and not the flower.
Therefore accept the one and reject the other.

[38c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The refined virtuous never attempts to be virtuous.
For this reason they are truly virtuous.

Underdog_way.pdf, revision 8, sanmayce@hotmail.com, a corpus of 50(42 english, 8 russian) proofed(many originals' bugs crushed) translations of 老子道德經 or Lao Zi Dao De Jing

The unrefined virtuous always adheres to what is virtuous.
For this reason they are not really virtuous.
The refined virtuous will not contrive to do anything and do not act for gain.
The unrefined virtuous contrives to act
and does so for gain.
The refined kindly man lives a kindly life not for benefit.
The refined fair man acts fairly and does so for benefit.
The refined gentlemanly person acts gentlemanly and expects to be so treated.
If he is not treated the way he expects,
he would push away and thrust aside his counterpart.
The man who has lost the Dao finds refuge in being virtuous.
The man who has lost the virtuous way of life finds refuge in being kindly.
The man who has lost the kindly way of life
finds refuge in being fair.
The man who has lost the fair way of life finds refuge in being gentlemanly.
Ceremony and gentlemanly behavior is the result of the thinness of faith and trust, and is the origin of many ills.
Learning to tell what is "virtuous" and "fair" is merely the showy flower(not the fruit) of the Dao.
It could be the beginning of folly.
The fully grown person chooses a life that offers substance and satisfaction, not one that is thin and superficial.
He knows what he opts for and what he gives up.

[38c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The people who have high DE do not purposely show the DE, but ultimately have the DE.
The people who have low DE are always afraid of not showing the DE, but ultimately lose the DE.
The people who have high DE practice WUWEI, but ultimately get everything done.
The people who have low DE do things purposely, but ultimately fail in many things.
The kind people do not do things purposely, but get everything done well.
The highly righteous people do things purposely, but ultimately fail in many things.
The people who follow courtesy and orders do everything purposely, but when no one follows them, they rudely force people to do so.
Therefore, when the DAO is lost, charity appears;
When charity is lost, righteousness appears;
When righteousness is lost, courtesy and order appear.
Courtesy and order have little loyalty and faith, and they are the source of chaos.
Therefore, they are the end of the DAO and the beginning of a dark age.
Noble men always stay sturdy, not shallow; solid, not flimsy.
So one should keep the former and get rid of the latter.

[38c09t] Walter Gorn Old, OF VIRTUE
The superior virtue is not recognised as such, and it is therefore the very essence of virtue.
The inferior virtue has the distinction of virtue, and therefore it lacks the essence.
The superior virtue is spontaneous, and makes no claim to merit.
The inferior virtue is designing, and lays claim to recognition.
The higher benevolence acts without pretension to merit.
The inferior justice acts, and also makes pretensions.
The inferior expediency is designing, and therefore no one honours it.
Therefore does it bare its arm and assert itself by force.
Thus it transpires that when virtue is lost, benevolence takes its place.
When benevolence is lost, justice ensues.
When justice is lost, then expediency follows.
But expediency is the mere shadow of what is right and true, and is portentous of confusion.
Superficial virtue is the mere tinsel of Tao, and the fool makes use of it.
But the truly great man establishes himself on that which is solid, and will not lean upon a shadow.
He keeps to the real, and avoids display.
He rejects the one, and takes the other with both hands.

[38c10t] James Legge
(Those who) possessed in highest degree the attributes (of the Tao) did not (seek) to show them, and therefore they possessed them (in fullest measure).
(Those who) possessed in a lower degree those attributes (sought how) not to lose them, and therefore they did not possess them (in fullest measure).
(Those who) possessed in the highest degree those attributes did nothing (with a purpose), and had no need to do anything.
(Those who) possessed them in a lower degree were (always) doing, and had need to be so doing.
(Those who) possessed the highest benevolence were (always seeking) to carry it out, and had no need to be doing so.
(Those who) possessed the highest righteousness were (always seeking) to carry it out, and had need to be so doing.
(Those who) possessed the highest (sense of) propriety were (always seeking) to show it, and when men did not respond to it, they bared the arm and marched up to them.
Thus it was that when the Tao was lost, its attributes appeared;
when its attributes were lost, benevolence appeared;
when benevolence was lost, righteousness appeared;
and when righteousness was lost, the proprieties appeared.
Now propriety is the attenuated form of leal-heartedness and good faith, and is also the commencement of disorder;
swift apprehension is (only) a flower of the Tao, and is the beginning of stupidity.
Thus it is that the Great man abides by what is solid, and eschews what is flimsy;
dwells with the fruit and not with the flower.
It is thus that he puts away the one and makes choice of the other.

High Integrity does nothing
and has no motives.
Low Integrity does something
and has sure motives.
High Humanity does something
and has no motives.
High Duty does something
and has sure motives.
High Ritual does something,
and when no one follows along it rolls up its sleeves
and forces them into line.
Lose Way, and Integrity appears.
Lose Integrity, and Humanity appears.
Lose Humanity, and Duty appears.
Lose Duty, and Ritual appears.
Ritual is the thinning away of loyalty and sincerity, the beginning of chaos, and prophecy is the flowery semblance of Way, the beginning of folly.
This is why a great elder inhabits thick rather than thin, fruitful substance rather than flowery semblance,
always ignores that and chooses this.

The man of supreme virtue
Claimed no virtue,
Hence, he possessed virtue;
The man of the lowest virtue
Would not lose virtue,
Hence, he possessed no virtue.
The man of supreme virtue did not act,
And had no intention to act;
The man of supreme humanity acted,
But had no intention to act;
The man of supreme righteousness acted,
And had the intention to act;
The man of supreme rituals acted,
And as none responded to him,
He rolled up his sleeves to drag them along.
Hence, only when the Tao was lost
Did virtue emerge;
Only when virtue was lost
Did humanity emerge;
Only when humanity was lost
Did righteousness emerge;
Only when righteousness was lost

Did the rituals emerge.
Now, the rituals represent
The thinness of wholehearted sincerity and truthfulness
And the beginning of chaos;
Foresight represents
The flower of the Tao
And the beginning of folly.
Hence, the great man abided by its thickness,
And not its thinness;
He abided by its substance,
And not its flower.
Therefore, he abandoned that and chose this.

A person of high te is not te,
Therefore such a person has te;
A person of low te does not lose (shih) te,
Therefore such a person has no te.
A person of high te does not act (wei),
For such a person has no cause for action;
A person of low te acts,
For such a person has cause for action.
A person of high jen (humanity) acts,
Yet such a person has no cause for action;
A person of high i (righteousness) acts,
For such a person has cause for action.
A person of high li (propriety) acts,
Yet finding no response,
Proceeds to bare the arms and throw a rope.
Therefore when Tao is lost (shih), then there is te.
When te is lost, then there is jen (humanity).
When jen is lost, then there is i (righteousness).
When i is lost, then there is li (propriety).
As to li, it is the thin edge of loyalty and faithfullness,
And the beginning of disorder;
As to foreknowledge (ch'ien shih), it is the flowering of Tao,
And the beginning of stupidity (yü).
Thus a great person, abiding in the thick,
Does not dwell in the thin;
Abiding in the kernel,
Does not dwell in the flower.
Therefore such a person leaves that and takes this.

They are individuals who really have [bona fide achievement of] Te;
People, who focus on not losing their [overt] possession of Te,
They are individuals who possess Te of the lowest rank, that is not Te [in truth but in appearances];
A person of superior Te does not interfere [with other people's affairs], yet he has strong sense of responsibility and never dodges [other people's] problems;
A person of inferior Te takes actions [to publicize his appearance of being responsible and diligent], whereas he is unwilling to execute any project [which could not have the benefit of enhancing his public image].
A noble act of kindness is carried out solely for being kind, not for any other purposes;
A regal effort for justice is performed only for the purpose of maintaining justice, it should not be used for any other ends;
If [even] excellent observations of [the social formality] Li (Propriety Ritual) were practiced, the expected result [of maintaining social order] was not realized, then we should roll up sleeves and cast it (Li) far away.
Therefore, Te becomes important after Tao is lost [in society];
If Te is lost, then compassion turns out to be the best [cohesive force in society];
If compassion is lost, then [the principle of] justice becomes the most important [unifying force in society];
If [the principle of] justice is lost, then Li (Propriety Ritual) is promoted as the device [to maintain orders in society]!
Li (Propriety Ritual) is the peripheral (superficial formality) of loyalty and trust, it signalizes the onset of a chaotic society;
Those talks about predicting the future are also but splendorous [and unsubstantiated idle] discussions about Tao;
They are principle factors leading to stupidity (imposture)!
Therefore a man of nobility settles with the substantiated [knowledge] and avoids superficial [theories];
He seeks facts and is uncomfortable with flowery explanations;
[In other words] He accepts this (the substantiated theories) and rejects that (haughty and idle speculations).

The man of high virtue has no virtue; therefore he is virtuous.
The man of low virtue never loses virtue; therefore he is not virtuous.

The man of high benevolence does, and has nothing to do.
The man of high righteousness does, and has something to do.
The man of high propriety does and is not responded, therefore he rolls up his sleeves and forces people to follow him.
Hence, losing the Way, man resorts to Virtue.
Losing Virtue, man resorts to benevolence.
Losing benevolence, man resorts to righteousness.
Losing righteousness, man resorts to propriety.
Propriety is the merest husk of faith and loyalty, and the beginning of disorder.
Foreknowledge is the flower (outside beauty) of the Way, and the beginning of foolishness.
Therefore, the great man sets his heart upon the thick rather than the thin, upon the fruit rather than the flower.
Hence, he drops what is without and keeps what is within.

High Te is Te because it is not showy.
Low Te is not Te because it is showy.
People with high Te do not force their way but they have their way.
People with low Te have no way except to force their way.
Top benevolence standard has its way without forcing it.
Top moral conduct has its way with efforts.
Top ritual rules have their way with rare response.
Then force is used to make people comply.
Therefore, when Tao is lost, Te is established.
When Te is lost, a benevolent standard is established.
When the benevolent standard is lost, moral conduct is established.
When moral conduct is lost, ritual rules are established.
So-called ritual rules do not advocate honesty and trustworthiness.
Thus, they are the source of disorder.
Boasting scholars are the flashy decorations of Tao; they are the origin of stupidity.
Consequently, great men stay with profoundness, avoid superficiality.
They stay with substance, avoid flashy superficies.
That is, they take former and avoid latter.

The man of highest 'power' does not reveal himself as a possessor of 'power';
Therefore he keeps his 'power'.
The man of inferior 'power' cannot rid it of the appearance of 'power';
Therefore he is in truth without 'power'.
The man of highest 'power' neither acts nor is there any who so regards him;
The man of inferior 'power' both acts and is so regarded.
The man of highest humanity, though he acts, is not so regarded;
Whereas a man of even the highest morality both acts and is so regarded.
While even he who is best versed in ritual not merely acts, but if people fail to respond
Then he will pull up his sleeves and advance upon them.
That is why it is said:
'After Tao was lost, then came the "power";
After the "power" was lost, then came human kindness.
After human kindness was lost, then came morality,
After morality was lost, then came ritual.
Now ritual is the mere husk of loyalty and promise-keeping,
And is indeed the first step towards brawling.'
Foreknowledge may be the 'flower of doctrine',
But it is the beginning of folly.
Therefore the full-grown man takes his stand upon the solid substance and not upon the mere husk,
Upon the fruit and not upon the flower.
Truly, 'he rejects that and takes this'.

A person of superior virtue is not virtuous, and this is why he has virtue.
A person of inferior virtue never loses virtue, and this is why he lacks virtue.
A person of superior virtue takes no conscious action and so acts out of nothing.
A person of inferior virtue takes conscious action and so acts out of something.
When a person of superior benevolence takes action, he acts out of nothing.
When a person of superior righteousness takes action, he acts out of something.
When a person of superior propriety takes action and no one responds, he pushes up his sleeves and leads them to it.
Therefore one resorts to virtue only after losing the Dao, resorts to benevolence only after losing virtue, resorts to righteousness only after losing benevolence, and resorts to propriety only after losing righteousness.
Propriety consists of the superficial aspects of loyalty and trust and is thus the beginning of disorder.
Foresight consists of the flower of the Dao and is thus the origin of duplicity.
This is why the really great man involves himself with its substance and not with its superficial aspects.
He involves himself with its fruit and not with its flower.
Therefore he rejects the one and takes the other.

A ritualist acts and, when no one responds, rolls up a sleeve and marches.
When we lose the Tao, we turn to Virtue.
When we lose Virtue, we turn to kindness.
When we lose kindness, we turn to morality.
When we lose morality, we turn to ritual.
Ritual is the mere husk of good faith and loyalty and the beginning of disorder.
Knowledge of what is to come may be a flower of the Tao,
but it is the beginning of folly.
Hence,
the well-formed person relies on what is solid and not on what is flimsy,
on the fruit and not the flower.
Therefore,
such a person lets go of that without and is content with this within.

By not displaying one's high virtue, one is virtuous;
By parading one's little virtue, one is not virtuous.
One with high virtue follows laissez-faire with carefree ease;
One with little virtue follows laissez-faire to parade one's virtue.
One with high nobleness practices nobleness with carefree ease;
One with high righteousness practices righteousness to parade one's righteousness.
One with high Conduct decrees;
With no followers, one uses force to twist others into following.
Thus,
virtue comes to the fore when Direction is not in evidence,
nobleness comes to the fore when virtue is not in evidence, righteousness comes to the fore when nobleness is not in evidence,
Conduct comes to the fore when righteousness is not in evidence.
Conduct comes to the fore when loyalty and trustworthiness lack;
it brings about confusion.
Foreknowledge addresses but Direction's superficialities;
it initiates folly.
Thus,
a great man seeks fullness, not lack;
seeks substance, not facade.
He forsakes the latter [Conduct and foreknowledge] and accepts the former [loyalty, trustworthiness, and Direction].

Inauthentic virtue is a matter of doing, not of being.
Therefore, the person of inauthentic virtue makes claims for his virtuous action.
Superior benevolence is a matter of doing.
Yet the person of superior benevolence makes no claims for his benevolent deeds.
Superior rectitude is a matter of doing.
And the person of superior rectitude makes claims for his righteous deeds.
Superior etiquette is a matter of doing.
But the person of superior etiquette,
If people do not conform to his standard,
Will pull their elbows and force them to conform.
When the Tao is lost, then comes virtue.
When virtue is lost, then comes benevolence.
When benevolence is lost, then comes rectitude.
When rectitude is lost, then comes etiquette.
Etiquette is but the attenuation of probity and the beginning of disorder.
Prescience is but a flower of the Tao and the beginning of nescience.
For this reason,
The person of character dwells in the depths within, not in the shallows without.
He dwells in the fruitful substance within, not in the flowery embellishment without.
He thus chooses the inner and discards the outer.

[38c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Superior virtue is not aware of being a superior virtue,
So it has virtue.
Inferior virtue never discards the virtue,
Therefore it has no virtue.
Superior virtue seems inactive, but it does everything.
Inferior virtue operates, but ultimately its work is incomplete.
Superior love operates without motive.
Superior justice operates without motive.
The superior system operates, even though nothing responds to it at first,
And gradually people raise their arms and join it.
Thus, when the Tao is lost, virtue is lost.
If virtue is lost, love is lost.
If love is lost, justice is lost.
If justice is lost, the superior system comes into being.
The superior system, therefore, is the expression of impatience and disloyalty, the result of confusion of the senses.
Knowledge that contains no knowledge is only the flower of Tao and the beginning of folly.
Therefore, the truly great person keeps the concrete and rejects the transient,
He keeps the fruit and does not take the flower.
Therefore he rejects the flower and takes the fruit.

And that is what he rules with.
The lesser man brags about how good he is -
And isn't much good, I can tell you.
A Man of Te rules by wu-wei
Doing nothing for himself or of himself.
The lesser man acts from his ego
And what he wants is gratification.
A man who rules with compassion
Acts through it - and no one even realizes.
A legal man acts judiciously
But he is still serving his own ends.
And the rigid man uses laws
And if people don't like it, force.
If the true Tao is lost then morality takes its place.
If that fails, we have 'conscience'.
When that fades, we get 'justice'.
When that disappears, we have the status quo.
Confusion reigns.
No one knows what's going on.
Forecasts and prophecies abound - and they are merely a gloss on the Tao,
they are the root of all twisted guidance.
So the sage only looks at what is really real.
He doesn't just look at the surface -
He blows away the dust and drinks the water ...
He doesn't just go for the flower
But also for the roots and the fruit.
Blow away the dust, now:
Come to the living water.

Justice comes after the loss of benevolence;
Rites come after the loss of justice.
Thus rites result from the lack of loyalty and good faith,
And function as the beginning of the great disorder.
Foresight is only the flowery embellishment of the Tao
As well as the beginning of ignorance.
Hence the true man sets store by the thick rather than by the thin,
And values the fruit rather than the flower.
That is why he takes the former and discards the latter.

[38c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen

A man of great virtue is not aware of virtue; that is the reason why he has virtue.
A man of little virtue does not miss virtue; that is the reason why he has no virtue.
The great virtue is when one does not do anything, yet everything is done.
The little virtue is when one does everything, yet something remains undone.
A man of great humanity acts, yet he acts without purpose.
A man of great justice acts, yet he acts with purpose.
A man of great courtesy acts, and if no one responds he rolls up his sleeves and tries to persuade them to respond.
That is why when the Tao is lost, virtue appears.
When virtue is lost, humanity appears.
When humanity is lost, justice appears.
When justice is lost, courtesy appears.
Courtesy is the superficial form of faith and trust; it is the beginning of disorder.
A man of much knowledge results in the flourishing of the Tao; it is the beginning of foolishness.
Therefore a true man lives with magnanimity, renounces the frivolous, lives with simplicity, renounces the luxuriant.

Degeneration

Lao Tze says,

The superior Teh is not conscious of virtue, thus it matches the essence of virtue.
The secondary Teh is conscious of virtue, thus it leaves the essence of virtue.
The man of the superior Teh works by acting without the intent to control fate; the people think he has done nothing else.
The man of the secondary Teh does work by acting with the intent to control fate and the people think he has done a lot of work.
The man of benevolence has done a lot of work, but through acting without the intent to control fate.
The man of righteousness has done a lot of work, this is through acting with intent to control fate.
The man of ritualism has done a lot of work, however he can't get the resonance of approval, thus he would force others to express their appreciation.
Therefore,
when the Tao is not in use, they seek benevolence;
when the benevolence is not in use, they seek ritualism.
However, the ritualism is the production of the lack of the loyalty and the faith, and it is even the beginning of confusion.
The above mentioned men understand Tao's extravagance only.
They are the founders of stupidity.
Henceforth, a true great man should choose Tao's abundance instead of Tao's deficiency.
He should choose Tao's essence instead of Tao's extravagance.
Thus, a Tao practician should learn to choose the former, and despise the latter.

[38c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao

The superior virtue is not conscious of itself as virtue;
Therefore it has virtue.
The inferior virtue never lets off virtue;
Therefore it has no virtue.
The superior virtue seems inactive, and yet there is nothing that it does not do.
The inferior virtue acts and yet in the end leaves things undone.
The superior benevolence acts without a motive.
The superior righteousness acts with a motive.
The superior ritual acts, but at first no one responds to it;
Gradually people raise their arms and follow it.
Therefore when Tao is lost, virtue follows.
When virtue is lost, benevolence follows.
When benevolence is lost, righteousness follows.
When righteousness is lost, ritual follows.
Ritual, therefore, is the attenuation of loyalty and faith and the outset of confusion.
Fore-knowledge is the flower of Tao and the beginning of folly.
Therefore the truly great man keeps to the solid and not to the tenuous;
Keeps to the fruit and not to the flower.
Thus he rejects the latter and takes the former.

[38c31t] Paul J. Lin

He with the highest virtue
Does not display his virtue
And so has virtue.
He with the lowest virtue
Does not let go of virtue
And so has no virtue.
He with the highest virtue does not act
And nothing is left undone.
He with the lowest virtue acts
And has intent to act.
He with the highest human-heartedness acts
And has no intent to act.
He with the highest righteousness acts
And has intent to act.
He with the highest propriety acts
And if there is no response,
Bares his arms to apply force.
Therefore,
When Tao is lost, virtue appears.
When virtue is lost, human-heartedness appears.
When human-heartedness is lost, righteousness appears.
When righteousness is lost, propriety appears.
Propriety is the thinness of loyalty and honesty,
And the beginning of disorder;
Foreknowledge is the ornament of Tao,
And the beginning of ignorance.
Therefore, great gentlemen stay in the thick, and not in the thin.
They stay with the substance, and not with the ornament.
So they reject that to prefer this.

[38c32t] Michael LaFargue

The finest Te is not Te-like, so it is Te;
the poorest Te never leaves off being Te-like, so it is not Te.
The finest Te: no working at it, no goal in mind;
the poorest Te: people work at it, with a goal in mind.
The finest Goodness: people work at it, but with no goal in mind;
the finest Morality: people work at it, with a goal in mind;
the finest Etiquette: people work at it, and, when none pay attention, they roll up their sleeves and go on the attack.
Yes:
Losing Tao, next comes Te;
losing Te, next comes Goodness;
losing Goodness, next comes Morality;
losing Morality, next comes Etiquette.

And now Etiquette is loyalty and sincerity spread thin,
and the first sign of disorders.
Foreknowledge is the flower of Tao,
and the beginning of folly.
And so the great man:
Resides with the substance,
does not stay with what is thin.
Resides with the fruit,
does not stay with the flower.
Yes:
He leaves 'that' aside and attends to 'this'.

[38c33t] Cheng Lin
The most virtuous is not conscious of being virtuous, and therefore he attains virtue.
The least virtuous is always afraid of losing virtue, and therefore he fails to attain virtue.
The most virtuous abides by inaction, and nothing is left undone.
The least virtuous is always employed with action, and much is left undone.
When benevolence is most highly esteemed, people practise it for its own sake.
When righteousness is most highly esteemed, people practise it for their own good.
When propriety is most highly esteemed, people practise it because they are compelled to.
Thus,
virtue becomes fashionable when people fail to follow Truth;
benevolence becomes fashionable when people fail to attain virtue;
righteousness becomes fashionable when people fail to practise benevolence;
propriety becomes fashionable when people fail to practise righteousness.
The rules of propriety are brought about by the lack of loyalty and sincerity, and by the prevalence of confusion.
Learning is pushed to the fore when Truth is disregarded as a matter of no importance, and when hypocrisy begins to prevail.
Therefore the truly great men dwell in what is fundamental, and shun what is trivial;
they abide by what is real, and discard what is ornamental.

[38c34t] Yi Wu
One with supreme virtue is not attached to virtue, so has virtue.
One with lower virtue does not lose virtue, so has no virtue.
One with supreme virtue is in non-action and acts without purpose.
One with lower virtue is in action and has purpose in his actions.
One with high humanity is in action but acts without purpose.
One with high righteousness is in action and acts with purpose.
One with high propriety is in action but, if people do not respond,
He raises armies to draw others to him.
Therefore, when people lose the Way, they resort to virtue.
Losing virtue, they resort to humanity.
Losing humanity, they resort to righteousness.
Losing righteousness, they resort to propriety.
Propriety marks the lack of loyalty and trust

And the beginning of disorder!
The man with foreknowledge is only an ornament of the Way
And the beginning of stupidity.
Therefore, the great man dwells on the thick but not on the thin.
Dwells on the substance, but not on the ornament.
So, he renounces that and takes this.

[38c35t] Han Hiong Tan
The ruler with great virtue never reveals his virtue.
Hence, he truly possesses real virtue.
An ordinary ruler deliberately tries to show off his virtue.
He therefore does not possess any real virtue.
The ruler with great virtue goes with the flow.
His action encapsulates the essence of wu-wei.
The ordinary ruler deliberately tries to go with the flow.
He thus achieves the antithesis of wu-wei.
The ruler with great compassion rules benevolently without ulterior motives.
He thus captures the essence of wu-wei.
The ruler of righteousness deliberately sets out to rule benevolently.
He thus misses the essence of wu-wei.
The ruler of propriety (rites) imposes rules and regulations.
When the people do not conform, he responds with punitive measures.
Therefore, when Dao is in decline, virtue supplants it.
When virtue is in decline, benevolence replaces it.
When benevolence fails, righteousness takes its place.
When righteousness does not prevail, rites begin to exert their authority.
The prevalence of rites is the sign that loyalty and trust are wearing very thin and that serious trouble is brewing.
Clever people with prescience to foretell events represent the superficiality of Dao.
This heralds the beginning of ignorance.
Therefore, a man of substance is unsophisticated but not shallow.
He resides on the fundamental but not on the superficial.
He thus embraces the substance and rejects the trimmings.

[38c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One of subtle universal virtue is not conscious of being virtuous, therefore, he is truly virtuous.
One of partial virtue attempts to live up to an external standard of virtue, therefore, he is not truly virtuous.
One of whole virtue does not need to do anything in order to be virtuous, because virtue is the very essence of one's true nature.
But, one of partial virtue believes that something must be done in order to prove that he is virtuous.
Thus, partial virtue becomes prevalent when people fail to follow their own true nature.
Benevolence becomes prevalent when people fail to be naturally kind.
Etiquette becomes prevalent when people fail to be righteous and considerate.
When people find no response with etiquette, they roll up their sleeves and force others to respond to them.

When people stray from the subtle way of universal nature,
they can no longer perceive their own true nature.
Thus, they emphasize relative virtue.
When natural virtue is lost,
society depends on the doctrine of humanism.
When humanity becomes corrupted,
social and religious teachings appear and become powerful forces.
When social and religious teachings become corrupted, what is left behind is the empty shell of superficial ceremonies and artificial etiquette.
When etiquette is emphasized,
it is because people lack the simple qualities of fairness and kindness.
This is the starting point of people of confusion.
All of these man-made, partial virtues are merely superficial flowers, a false nature.
When people begin to move away from their own true nature,
it is the beginning of hypocrisy.
Therefore, one who integrates his own individual being with the deep nature of the universe sets his heart upon the root of reality rather than the husk, and upon the nourishment of the fruit rather than the fleeting beauty of the flowers.
Truly, he cherishes what is deep within rather than what is shallow without.
Knowing this, he knows what to accept and what to reject.

[38c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
The highest attainment (Tê) is free from attainment.
Therefore, there is attainment.
The lowest attainment is never free from attainment.
Therefore, there is no attainment.
The highest attainment never acts and is purposeless.
The lowest attainment acts and is purposeful.
The highest benevolence (jen) acts and is purposeless.
The highest righteousness (yi) acts and is purposeful.
The highest propriety (li) acts and no one follows it.
One bares one's arms and throws one's opponents away.
Therefore, when Tao is lost, we have attainment.
When attainment is lost, we have benevolence.
When benevolence is lost, we have righteousness.
When righteousness is lost, we have propriety.
Propriety is due to a lack of trustworthiness and is the beginning of disorder.
Anticipated knowledge is the superficiality of Tao and is the beginning of foolishness.
Hence, the great man chooses reality and not superficiality.
He acts according to reality and not appearance.
Thus, he grasps the one and foregoes the other.

Superior virtue is not virtue-conscious,
Therefore it has virtue.
Inferior virtue never forgets virtue,
Therefore it has no virtue.
Superior virtue does not interfere,
And has no motive to interfere.
Inferior virtue interferes,
And has a motive to interfere.
Superior benevolence interferes without motive;
Superior righteousness interferes from motive;
Superior propriety interferes,
And failing to evoke any response,
Lifts its arm and resorts to violence.
Therefore,
After the loss of Tao, virtue appears;
After the loss of virtue, benevolence appears;
After the loss of benevolence, righteousness appears;
After the loss of righteousness, propriety appears.
Propriety is a mere veneer of loyalty and sincerity,
And constitutes the prime cause of confusion.
Traditional knowledge is the flower (outward show) of Tao,
And has become the origin of folly.
Therefore, men of the heroic type abide by depth,
And stay away from shallowness;
Abide by the fruit and stay away from the flower.
Forsooth, they reject this and adopt that.

[38c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The man of superior virtue [te] is not virtuous;
Therefore he has virtue.
The man of inferior virtue never fails to be virtuous;
Therefore he has no virtue.
A man of superior virtue never acts;
He seeks nothing through action.
A man of inferior virtue acts;
He seeks [virtue] through action.
A man of superior humaneness [jen] acts;
Yet he seeks nothing through action.
A man of superior righteousness [i] acts;
He seeks [righteousness] through action.
A man of superior ritual propriety [li] acts;
And when others fail to respond accordingly,
He stretches his arm and charges at them.
Therefore, when Tao is lost, virtue appears;
When virtue is lost, humaneness appears;
When humaneness is lost, righteousness appears;

When righteousness is lost, ritual propriety appears.
Truly, ritual propriety means
The thinning of loyalty and truthfulness,
And the origin of disorder.
Foresight
Is the flower of Tao,
The beginning of folly.
Therefore the great man
Dwells in the thick,
Not in the thin,
In the fruit,
Not in the flower.
Therefore he discards that and takes this.

[38c40t] Tao Huang
Eminent action is inaction,
For that action it is active.
Inferior action never stops acting,
For that reason it is inactive.
Eminent action is disengaged,
Yet nothing is left unfulfilled;
Eminent humanness engages,
Yet nothing is left unfulfilled;
When eminent righteousness engages,
It reduces the results of engagements;
Eminent justice engages, but does not respond adequately to situations.
For that reason it is frustrated.
When Tao is lost,
It becomes Action;
When Action is lost,
It becomes benevolence;
When benevolence is lost,
It becomes justice.
When justice is lost,
It becomes propriety.
Propriety is the veneer of faith and loyalty,
And the forefront of troubles.
Foresight is the vain display of Tao,
And the forefront of foolishness.
Therefore, the man of substance
Dwells in wholeness rather than veneer,
Dwells in the essence rather than the vain display.
He rejects the latter, and accepts the former.

[38c41t] Tang Zi-chang
When conduct is of high virtue, one is unconscious of virtue, thus he can accomplish virtue.

When conduct is of low virtue, one is conscious of virtue, thus he cannot accomplish virtue.
High virtue does not contrive and has no desire for gain.
Low virtue also does not contrive but has desire for gain.
High benevolence does contrive yet it has no desire for gain.
High righteousness does contrive and also has desire for gain.
High ritual does not only contrive and desire, but is also violent:
if it finds no response at all, it resorts to fighting its way out with stretched arms.
Hence when Dao is losing, then its virtues are losing.
When virtues are losing, benevolence is encouraged.
When benevolence is losing, the righteousness is encouraged.
When righteousness is losing, then rituals are encouraged.
Rituals stand for the lack of loyalty and reliability and are the beginning of disorder.
Divination stands for the emotional performance of Dao and is the beginning of stupidity.
Therefore the superior man prefers to possess few things rather than an abundance, to have insight rather than to see superficially.
Thus he prefers insight to superficiality.

[38c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The man of superior virtue is not (conscious of) his virtue,
And in this way he really possesses virtue.
The man of inferior virtue never loses (sight of) his virtue,
And in this way he loses his virtue.
The man of superior virtue takes no action, but has no ulterior motive to do so.
The man of inferior virtue takes action, and has an ulterior motive to do so.
The man of superior humanity takes action, but has no ulterior motive to do so.
The man of superior righteousness takes action, and has an ulterior motive to do so.
The man of superior propriety takes action,
And when people do not respond to it, he will stretch his arms and force it on them.
Therefore:
When Tao is lost, only then does the doctrine of virtue arise.
When virtue is lost, only then does the doctrine of humanity arise.
When humanity is lost, only then does the doctrine of righteousness arise.
When righteousness is lost, only then does the doctrine of propriety arise.
Now, propriety is a superficial expression of loyalty and faithfulness, and the beginning of disorder.
Those who are the first to know have the flowers of Tao but are the beginning of ignorance.
For this reason the great man dwells in the thick, and does not rest with the thin.
He dwells in the fruit, and does not rest with the flower.
Therefore he rejects the one, and accepts the other.

Верх добродетели - ее не проявлять и потому быть добродетелью проникнутым.
При низшей добродетели стараются ее не упустить и потому не обладают добродетелью.
При высшей добродетели бездействуют и лишены намерения действовать.
При низшей добродетели берутся за дела и преисполнены намерения действовать.
При высшей человечности берутся за дела, но лишены намерения действовать.
При высшей справедливости берутся за дела и преисполнены намерения действовать.

При высшей ритуальности берутся за дела, и если не встречают отклика, то тащат с пылом за собой.
Поэтому с утратой Дао и обретают добродетель;
с утратой добродетели овладевают человечностью;
с утратой человечности усваивают справедливость;
с утратой справедливости вверяют себя ритуалу.
Ритуальность составляет мелочь в проявлении преданности и доверия.
В ней заключается начало смуты.
Различать заранее - это цветок Дао и начало глупости.
Именно поэтому великий муж довольствуется сутью и не гонится за мелочами, предпочитает плод цветку, отбрасывает то и берет это.

[38c92t] А. А. Маслов
Человек высшей Благости не проявляет свою Благость, и потому он обладает Благостью.
Человек низкой Благости не отклоняется от Благости, и потому он не обладает Благостью.
Человек высшей Благости пребывает в недеянии и не имеет намерения действовать.
Человек низкой Благости погружён в деяния и к тому же имеет намерение действовать.
Человек высокой гуманности действует, и нет того, чего бы он ни сделал.
Человек высокой справедливости действует, но всё же остаётся то, что ещё надо сделать.
Человек высоких ритуалов погружён в деяния, но когда он не достигает желаемого, то закатывает рукава и прибегает к силе.
Поэтому, когда утрачивается Дао, - приходит Благость.
Когда утрачивается Благость, - приходит гуманность.
Когда утрачивается гуманность, - приходит справедливость.
Когда утрачивается справедливость, - приходят ритуалы.
Ритуалы - это тончайшая ширма для преданности и искренности и предвестник смуты.
Предзнание - это цветок Дао и начало невежества.
Поэтому великий муж пребывает в плотно-возвышенном и отвергает тонко-ничтожное.
Он принимает плоды и отвергает цветы.
Поэтому он отказывается от первого ради второго.

[38c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Высшее Благо не благо, и благодаря этому оно наделено благом.
Низшее Благо не теряет блага, и благодаря этому оно лишено блага.
Высшее Благо пребывает в недеянии, и ему незачем действовать.
Низшее Благо деятельно, и оно имеет цель для своих деяний.
Высшее милосердие деятельно, но ему незачем действовать.
Высшая справедливость деятельна, и она имеет цель для своих деяний.
Высшее ритуальное благоговение деятельно, но ему не соответствует ничего во всем мире;
поэтому следующие ритуалу тогда закатывают рукава до плеч и силой принуждают народ идти за ними.
Поэтому люди утрачивают Дао-Путь и обретают Благо;
теряют Благо и обретают милосердие;
теряют милосердие и обретают справедливость;
теряют справедливость и обретают ритуальное благоговение.
Но ритуальное благоговение - свидетельство того, что у людей оскудевают преданность и верность слову.

Поэтому оно - начало смуты.
Предвидение будущего - не только цвет Дао-Пути, но и начало глупости.
Поэтому великий муж пребывает в том, что обильно, а не в том, что скудно.
Он не пребывает в цветущих верхушках сущего.
Отбрасывая то, берет он это.

[38c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Верхняя Дэ не Дэ, поэтому обладает Дэ.
Нижняя Дэ не теряет Дэ, поэтому не обладает Дэ.
Верхняя Дэ не деяет и не обладает деянием.
Нижняя Дэ деяет и обладает деянием.
Верхняя Жэнь деяет и не обладает деянием.
Верхняя И деяет и обладает деянием.
Если верхняя Ли что-то деяет, но никто ей не откликается, то засучи рукава и выброси ее.
Вот почему после потери Дао следует Дэ;
после потери Дэ следует Жэнь;
после потери Жэнь следует И;
после потери И следует Ли.
Ли - это ничтожность преданности Синь (Доверию) и начало смуты.
Только что представленная [вам норма Ли] - это цветок Дао и начало тупости.
Поэтому великий муж там, где Дао обильно, а не там, где ничтожно;
там, где плод, а не там, где его цветок.
Вот почему отбрасывает одно, избирает другое.

[38c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Человек с высшим дэ не стремится делать добрые дела, поэтому он добродетелен;
человек с низшим дэ не оставляет [намерения] совершать добрые дела, поэтому он не добродетелен;
человек с высшим дэ бездеятелен и осуществляет недеяние;
человек с низшим дэ деятелен, и его действия нарочиты;
обладающий высшим человеколюбием действует, осуществляя недеяние;
человек высшей справедливости деятелен, и его действия нарочиты;
человек, во всем соблюдающий ритуал, действует, [надеясь на взаимность].
Если он не встречает взаимности, то он прибегает к наказаниям.
Вот почему дэ появляется только после утраты дао;
человеколюбие - после утраты дэ;
справедливость - после утраты человеколюбия;
ритуал - после утраты справедливости.
Ритуал - это признак отсутствия доверия и преданности.
[В ритуале] - начало смуты.
Внешний вид - это цветок дао, начало невежества.
Поэтому [великий человек] берет существенное и оставляет ничтожное.
Он берет плод и отбрасывает его цветок.
Он предпочитает первое и отказывается от второго.

нравственность.
Люди низшей нравственности не в состоянии потерять свою нравственность и поэтому безнравственны.
Люди высшей нравственности, находясь в бездеятельности, не делают ничего.
Люди низшей нравственности делают то, что делают.
Люди высшего человеколюбия, находясь в бездеятельности, совершают дела, но не признают их (за свои).
Люди высшей справедливости делают то, что делают.
Люди высшей почтительности уважают других, но другие не уважают их, поэтому они принудят их к почтению.
Отсюда когда потеряно Тао, то является нравственность;
когда нравственность забыта, то является человеколюбие;
когда человеколюбие оставлено, то является справедливость;
когда справедливость покинута, то является почтительность.
Вот почему почтительность есть последствие ослабления верности и преданности (господину) и начало всякого рода беспорядков в стране.
Поэтому великий человек держится существенного и оставляет ничтожное.
Он все делает по правде, но никогда не будет опираться на законы.
Берите первое и бросьте последнее.

[38c97t] В. В. Малявин
Высшее совершенство не хочет совершенства,
Вот почему в нем есть совершенство.
Низшее совершенство хочет совершенства,
Вот почему в нем нет совершенства.
Высшее совершенство ничего не делает и не имеет на то причин.
Низшее совершенство действует и имеет на то причины.
Высшая человечность действует, но не имеет на то причин.
Низшая человечность действует и имеет на то причины.
Высшая справедливость действует и имеет на то причины.
Высшее благочестие действует, и, если отклика нет,
Оно засучит рукава и принудит к покорности.
А посему:
Когда утратили Путь, появилось совершенство;
Когда утратили совершенство, появилась человечность;
Когда утратили человечность, появилась справедливость;
Когда утратили справедливость, появилось благочестие.
Благочестие - истощенье преданности и доверия и начало всякой смуты.
Знать наперед - это только цветочки Пути и начало невежества.
Вот почему великий муж находит приют в глубоком и не живет мелким,
Он находит приют в корне и не живет цветочками.
Он не принимает второе и берет первое.

Направляя вверх контактность, осуществляют ее при отсутствии мотивов осуществления.
Направляя вверх осознание, осуществляют его при наличии мотивов осуществления.
Направляя вверх ритуал, осуществляют его, но никто ему не соответствует.

Утрачивают Потенцию, и следует контактность.
Утрачивают контактность, и следует осознание.
Утрачивают осознание, и следует ритуал.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Thirty-Nine

615/2593

[39c01t] Robert G. Henricks

Of those in the past that attained the One -
Heaven, by attaining the One became clear;
Earth, by attaining the One became stable;
Gods, by attaining the One became divine;
Valleys, by attaining the One became full;
Marquises and kings, by attaining the One made the whole land ordered and secure.
Taking this to its logical conclusion we would say -
If Heaven were not by means of it clear, it would, I'm afraid, shatter;
If the Earth were not by means of it stable, it would, I'm afraid, let go.
If the gods were not by means of it divine, they would, I'm afraid, be powerless.
If valleys were not by means of it full, they would, [I'm afraid] dry up.
And if marquises and kings were not by means of it noble and high, they would, I'm afraid, topple and fall.
Therefore, it must be the case that the noble has the base as its root;
And it must be the case that high has the low for its foundation.
Thus, for this reason, marquises and kings call themselves "The Orphan," "The Widower," and "The One Without Grain."
This is taking the base as one's root, is it not?!
Therefore, they regard their large numbers of carriages as having no carriage.
And because of this, they desire not to dazzle and glitter like jade,
But to remain firm and strong like stone.

[39c02t] John C. H. Wu

FROM of old there are not lacking things that have attained Oneness.
The sky attained Oneness and became clear;
The earth attained Oneness and became calm;
The spirits attained Oneness and became charged with mystical powers;
The fountains attained Oneness and became full;
The ten thousand creatures attained Oneness and became reproductive;
Barons and princes attained Oneness and became sovereign rulers of the world.
All of them are what they are by virtue of Oneness.
If the sky were not clear, it would be likely to fall to pieces;
If the earth were not calm, it would be likely to burst into bits;
If the spirits were not charged with mystical powers, they would be likely to cease from being;
If the fountains were not full, they would be likely to dry up;
If the ten thousand creatures were not reproductive, they would be likely to come to extinction;
If the barons and princes were not the sovereign rulers, they would be likely to stumble and fall.
Truly, humility is the root from which greatness springs,
And the high must be built upon the foundation of the low.
That is why barons and princes style themselves "The Helpless One," "The Little One," and "The Worthless One."
Perhaps they too realize their dependence upon the lowly.

Truly, too much honour means no honour.
It is not wise to shine like jade and resound like stone-chimes.

[39c03t] D. C. Lau
Of old, these came to be in possession of the One:
Heaven in virtue of the One is limpid;
Earth in virtue of the One is settled;
Gods in virtue of the One have their potencies;
The valley in virtue of the One is full;
The myriad creatures in virtue of the One are alive;
Lords and princes in virtue of the One become leaders in the empire.
It is the One that makes these what they are.
Without what makes it limpid heaven might split;
Without what makes it settled earth might sink;
Without what gives them their potencies gods might spend themselves;
Without what makes it full the valley might run dry;
Without what keeps them alive the myriad creatures might perish;
Without what makes them leaders lords and princes might fall.
Hence the superior must have the inferior as root;
The high must have the low as base.
Thus lords and princes refer to themselves as 'solitary', 'desolate', and 'hapless'.
This is taking the inferior as root, is it not?
Hence the highest renown is without renown,
Not wishing to be one among many like jade
Nor to be aloof like stone.

[39c04t] R. L. Wing
From old, these may have harmony with the One:
Heaven in harmony with the One becomes clear.
Earth in harmony with the One becomes stable.
Mind in harmony with the One becomes inspired.
Valleys in harmony with the One become full.
All Things in harmony with the One become creative.
Leaders in harmony with the One become incorruptible in the world.
These were attained through Oneness.
Heaven without clarity would probably crack.
Earth without stability would probably quake.
Mind without inspiration would probably sleep.
Valleys without fullness would probably dry up.
All Things without creativity would probably die off.
Leaders without incorruptible ways would probably stumble and fall.
Indeed, the high-placed stem from the humble;
The elevated are based upon the lowly.
This is why leaders call themselves
Alone, lonely, and unfavored.
Is this not because they stem from the humble and common?

Is it not?
Therefore, attain honor without being honored.
Do not desire to shine like jade; wear ornaments as if they were stone.

[39c05t] Ren Jiyu
From of old those that attained one principle (Tao) -
Heaven attained the One and became clear,
Earth attained the One and became tranquil,
Spirits attained the One and became divine,
Valleys attained the One and became full,
All things attained the One and became luxuriant,
Kings and princes attained the One and became heads of the Kingdom.
What they strove to achieve was fulfilled by the principle (the One).
If Heaven couldn't have become clear it would soon crack.
If Earth couldn't have become tranquil it would soon be shaken.
If spirits couldn't have become divine they would soon perish.
If valleys couldn't have become full they would soon be exhausted.
If all things couldn't have become luxuriant they would soon be extinct.
If kings and princes couldn't have maintained their majesty and nobility they would soon lose their kingdoms and states.
Therefore the noble takes the humble as its root,
And the high takes the low as its ground.
Just for this reason kings and princes call themselves the orphaned, the solitary and the unworthy.
Is it not regarding the humble as the root of the noble?
Is it not so?
Therefore to seek too much honour means to lose honour wholly.
So neither the noble jade, nor the humble rocks should one strive to be.

[39c06t] Gia-fu Feng
These things from ancient times arise from one:
The sky is whole and clear.
The earth is whole and firm.
The spirit is whole and strong.
The valley is whole and full.
The ten thousand things are whole and alive.
Kings and lords are whole, and the country is upright.
All these are in virtue of wholeness.
The clarity of the sky prevents its falling.
The firmness of the earth prevents its splitting.
The strength of the spirit prevents its being used up.
The fullness of the valley prevents its running dry.
The growth of the ten thousand things prevents their dying out.
The leadership of kings and lords prevents the downfall of the country.
Therefore the humble is the root of the noble.
The low is the foundation of the high.
Princes and lords consider themselves "orphaned," "widowed," and "worthless."

Do they not depend on being humble?
Too much success is not an advantage.
Do not tinkle like jade
Or clatter like stone chimes.

[39c07t] Lok Sang Ho
There is one universal formula that always works:
The sky had followed the universal formula,
and it became clear.
The earth had followed the universal formula,
and became calm and safe.
The gods follow the universal formula,
and they have become effective.
The valleys follow the universal formula,
and they now harbor copious vegetation and creatures.
The living things follow the universal formula,
and they live;
When barons and kings follow the universal formula,
they become the object of emulation by their peoples.
All these achievements are due to the universal formula.
If the sky were not clear it could be torn apart.
If the earth were not calm and safe
it could burst into chaos.
If the gods were not effective
they could wear out.
If the valleys were not copious
they could become empty.
If the living things could not live
they would be doomed.
If barons and kings could not keep their high and respected positions,
they could be toppled.
The noble must be based on the ignoble.
The highly positioned must be buttressed by the lowly.
Barons and kings call themselves the "lonely one" the "widowed one", or the "under provided one".
Don't these practices demonstrate loud and clear that it is through the lowly that kings and barons hold their positions?
Merely counting the number of carriages will not give you any carriage.
It is no use showing the shiny look of jade
if the substance is merely an ordinary stone.

When the earth becomes ONE, it is peaceful;

When the spirits become ONE, they grant all wishes;
When the riverbeds and valleys become ONE, they fill with water;
When all living things become ONE, they grow;
When the kings become ONE, they can govern their countries.
This is because of the DAO.
If the sky is not clear, it will collapse;
If the earth is not peaceful, it will explode;
If spirits cannot grant wishes, they will disappear;
If all living things cannot grow, they will die;
If kings cannot govern their countries, they will be overthrown.
Therefore, the cheap is the base of the noble; the low is the foundation of the high.
So the kings always called themselves bad names like the single, the widower, and the unkind.
Is this proof that the cheap is the base of the noble? Is it not?
Therefore, pursuing fame will get you no fame.
Do not be like a beautiful jade; be instead like a plain stone.

[39c09t] Walter Gorn Old, TRACING THE SOURCE
Certain things have, by unity, lasted from most ancient times, namely:-
The transparency of Heaven;
The steadfastness of Earth;
The incorporeality of spirits;
The watery plenitude of valleys;
The life of all creations;
The government of kings and princes;
All these endure by unity.
But for the cause of its transparency Heaven would be in danger of obscuration.
But for the cause of its steadfastness the Earth would be in danger of disintegration.
But for the cause of their incorporeality spirits would be in danger of decease.
But for the cause of their plenitude the valleys would be in danger of sterility.
But for the cause of their vitality all creations would be in danger of destruction.
But for the cause of their honour and greatness princes and kings would be in danger of an overthrow.
Herein we see how honour is derived from that which is without distinction; and how greatness rests upon, and is sustained by, that which is insignificant.
Hence do princes and kings call themselves "orphans," "solitary men," and "chariots without wheels."
Do they not thereby acknowledge their authority to be vested in, and supported by, their superiors?
Who can deny it?
Surely "a chariot without wheels" is no chariot at all!
It is as hard for a man to be isolated like a single gem as to be lost in the crowd like a common pebble.

[39c10t] James Legge
The things which from of old have got the One (the Tao) are - Heaven which by it is bright and pure;
Earth rendered thereby firm and sure;
Spirits with powers by it supplied;
Valleys kept full throughout their void;
All creatures which through it do live;

Princes and kings who from it get
The model which to all they give.
All these are the results of the One (Tao).
If heaven were not thus pure, it soon would rend;
If earth were not thus sure, 'twould break and bend;
Without these powers, the spirits soon would fail;
If not so filled, the drought would parch each vale;
Without that life, creatures would pass away;
Princes and kings, without that moral sway,
However grand and high, would all decay.
Thus it is that dignity finds its (firm) root in its (previous) meanness, and what is lofty finds its stability in the lowness (from which it rises).
Hence princes and kings call themselves 'Orphans,' 'Men of small virtue,' and as 'Carriages without a nave.'
Is not this an acknowledgment that in their considering themselves mean they see the foundation of their dignity?
So it is that in the enumeration of the different parts of a carriage we do not come on what makes it answer the ends of a carriage.
They do not wish to show themselves elegant-looking as jade, but (prefer) to be coarse-looking as an (ordinary) stone.

Ancients who realized primal unity:
Heaven realized primal unity
and so came to clarity.
Earth realized primal unity
and so came to tranquility.
Gods realized primal unity
and so came to spirit.
Valleys realized primal unity
and so came to fullness.
The ten thousand things realized primal unity
and so came to life.
Lords and emperors realized primal unity
and so came to rectify all beneath heaven.
It's their very existence:
without clarity heaven cracks open,
without tranquility earth bursts forth,
without spirit gods cease,
without fullness valleys run dry,
without life the ten thousand things perish,
without high nobility lords and emperors stumble and fall.
Nobility is rooted in humility,
and high founded on low.
This is why true lords and emperors call themselves orphaned, destitute, ill-fated.
Isn't this rooted in humility?

Long, long ago, those that acquired One were:
Heaven, which acquired One
And thereby became clear;
Earth, which acquired One
And thereby became tranquil;
Spirits, which acquired One
And thereby became miraculous;
Valley streams, which acquired One
And thereby became full;
Marquises and kings, who acquired One
And thereby became chieftains over all under heaven.
Going to the extreme would mean:
If heaven were excessively clear,
It would crack;
If earth were excessively tranquil,
It would quake;
If spirits were excessively miraculous,
They would cease to be so;
If valley streams were excessively full,
They would go dry;
If marquises and kings were endlessly noble and high,
They would collapse.
Therefore, the noble must take the humble to be their roots;
The high must take the low to be their basis.
Hence, marquises and kings call themselves "The inadequate one," "the deficient one" and "the unworthy one."
This means taking the humble to be their roots,
Does it not?
Therefore, the highest praise is no praise.
Hence, do not wish to be as noble as jade,
Nor as high as a mountain rock.

Earth, without that which renders it peaceful, might explode,
Spirits, without that which makes them efficacious, might cease,
Valleys, without that which replenishes them, might become empty,
Ten thousand beings, without that which sustains them in existence, might become extinct,
Barons and kings, without that which exalts them to high positions, might be toppled.
Therefore the exalted is rooted in the humble,
The high has the low for foundation.
Therefore barons and kings call themselves orphaned, widowed and unworthy.
Is this not taking the humble for one's root?
Is it not?
Therefore the most famous has no fame.
Do not tinkle like jade,

[39c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
In the past it did happen that Oneness was achieved:
When Oneness was realized in Universe, there was pure Serenity;
When Oneness was materialized on Earth, there was peace;
When Oneness was apprehended by Spirits, they became efficacious;
When Oneness was incorporated in valleys (life-support resources), they were fully filled [with water];
When Oneness was attained by [myriad] creatures and things, their lives were perpetuated;
When Oneness was absorbed by kings and lords, they led the world on the right course.
The importance of striving for Oneness is because:
If Heaven cannot maintain pure and entire Serenity, it may crack;
If Earth cannot maintain unification, it may burst with cracks;
If spirits are not efficacious, their existence may be threatened;
If valleys are not filled, they will soon dry up;
If [myriad] creatures and things can not obtain proper support for existence, they will vanish;
If kings and lords cannot set on the right course, their institution will stumble [and collapse].
Therefore, nobility must be built up from lowliness;
A high position must be supported by something of lower position;
That is why kings and lords used to refer to themselves [as documented in ancient records] as: "I, the misfit", "I, the morally light-weight" and "I, the good-for-nothing individual";
Doesn't this exemplify "Nobility is built up from lowliness"?
You still disagree?
To be called a misfit, a morally light-weight or a good-for-nothing person are all undesirable, but kings and lords addressed themselves as such [to indicate that they are willing to carry the unpleasant burden of these miserable people].
Therefore, people who seek reputation for the sake of fame really are in truth the people who have no sense of honor;
[A truly honorable person] would neither present himself as a piece of rare jade;
Nor would he be satisfied to be [as morally mediocre as] a one of the colossal of [undistinguished] ornamental stones.

Attaining the One, heaven is clear.
Attaining the One, earth is calm.
Attaining the One, God is holy.
Attaining the One, the cave is full.
Attaining the One, ten thousand creatures come into life.
Attaining the One, kings and princes become sovereign rulers of the world.
All of them are what they are by virtue of the one.
If heaven were not clear, it would fall to pieces.
If earth were not calm, it would quake.
If God were not holy, he would cease from being.
If the fountain were not full, it would dry up.
If ten thousand creatures did not come to life, they would perish.
If kings and princes were not supreme, they would stumble and fall.
Hence, humility is the root of greatness.
The high is built upon the foundation of the low.
That is why kings and princes style themselves "the solitary one," "the little one," and "the worthless one".
Is this not enough to prove that humility serves as root?
Therefore extreme honor means no honor.
Do not wish to shine like jade and be aloof like stone.

[39c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Previously those who have integrity are as follows:
Heaven has integrity, so it is clear.
Earth has integrity, so it is peaceful.
Gods have integrity, so they are responsive.
Valleys have integrity, so they are full.
All living creatures have integrity, so they can live.
Kings and lords have integrity, so they can govern normally.
Why is it so?
If Heaven is not clear, it could split.
If Earth is not peaceful, it could collapse.
If Gods are not responsive, nobody would worship.
If valleys are not full, they could be depleted.
If living creatures cannot live, they would become extinct.
If Kings and lords cannot govern normally, they would fall.
Therefore, humbleness is the root from which nobleness grows.
Low is the foundation on which high is built.
It is because of this, kings and lord call themselves lonely persons, friendless persons, and worthless persons.
This is for the sake of being humble, is it not?
The extremely honorable is the one without being honored.
They do not want to be like glittering jades, but like solid rocks.

Earth remains steady,
The spirits keep their holiness,
The abyss is replenished,
The ten thousand creatures bear their kind,
Barons and princes direct their people.
It is the Whole that causes it.
Were it not so limpid, the sky would soon get torn,
Were it not for its steadiness, the earth would soon tip over,
Were it not for their holiness, the spirits would soon wither away,
Were it not for this replenishment, the abyss would soon go dry,
Were it not that the ten thousand creatures can bear their kind,
They would soon become extinct.
Were the barons and princes no longer directors of their people and for that reason honoured and exalted, they would soon be overthrown.
Truly,
'The humble is the stem upon which the mighty grows,
The low is the foundation upon which the high is laid.'
That is why barons and princes refer to themselves as 'The Orphan', 'The Needy', 'The Ill-provided'.
Is this not indeed a case of might rooting itself upon humility?
True indeed are the sayings:
'Enumerate the parts of a carriage, and you still have not explained what a carriage is', and
'They did not want themselves to tinkle like jade-bells, while others resounded like stone-chimes'.

[39c18t] Richard John Lynn
As for those who obtained the One long, long ago,
Heaven is pure by having obtained the One;
Earth is stable by having obtained the One;
the gods have their spiritual power by having obtained the One;
valleys can be filled by having obtained the One;
the myriad things live by having obtained the One;
lords and princes provide constancy to all under Heaven by having obtained the One.
This is how they attain to these states.
If Heaven had not this means to be pure, it would, we fear, deteriorate.
If Earth had not this means to be stable, it would, we fear, disintegrate.
If the gods had not this means to have spiritual power, they would, we fear, terminate.
If valleys had not this means to achieve fullness, they would, we fear, dry up.
If the myriad things had not this means to live, they would, we fear, expire.
If lords and princes did not have this means to achieve loftiness and nobility, they would, we fear, collapse.
Thus it is that nobility uses humility as its roots and loftiness uses lowliness as its foundation.
This is why lords and princes refer to themselves as "the orphan," "the widower," or "the unworthy."
Is this not using humility as the roots?
Is this not so?
Therefore the ultimate number of praises amounts to no praise, so one wants neither "he glows with luster like the jade" nor "he is as hard as hard can be like the stone."

UNITY THROUGH COMPLEMENTS
There were those in ancient times possessed of the One:
Through possession of the One, the Heaven was clarified,
Through possession of the One, the Earth was stabilized,
Through possession of the One, the gods were spiritualized,
Through possession of the One, the valleys were made full,
Through possession of the One, all things lived and grew,
Through possession of the One, the princes and dukes became the ennobled of the people.
That was how each became so.
Without clarity, the Heavens would shake,
Without stability, the Earth would quake,
Without spiritual power, the gods would crumble,
Without being filled, the valleys would crack,
Without the life-giving power, all things would perish,
Without the ennobling power, the princes and dukes would stumble.
Therefore the nobility depend upon the common man for support,
And the exalted ones depend upon the lowly for their base.
That is why the princes and dukes call themselves "the orphaned," "the lonely one," "the unworthy."
Is it not true then that they depend upon the common man for support?
Truly, take down the parts of a chariot,
And there is no chariot (left).
Rather than jingle like the jade,
Rumble like the rocks.

In olden times, these attained unity:
Heaven attained unity, and thereby became pure.
Earth attained unity, and thereby became tranquil.
The spirits attained unity, and thereby became divine.
The valley attained unity, and thereby became full.
Feudal lords and kings attained unity, and thereby all was put right.
Yet, pushed to the extreme,
It implies that,
If heaven were ever pure, it would be likely to rend.
It implies that,
If earth were ever tranquil, it would be likely to quake.
It implies that,
If the spirits were ever divine, they would be likely to dissipate.
It implies that,
If the valley were ever full, it would be likely to run dry.
It implies that,
If feudal lords and kings were ever noble and thereby exalted, they would be likely to fall.
Therefore,
It is necessary to be noble, and yet take humility as a basis.
It is necessary to be exalted, and yet take modesty as a foundation.
Now, for this reason,

Feudal lords and kings style themselves
"orphaned," "destitute," and "hapless."
Is this not because they take humility as their basis?
Therefore,
Striving for an excess of praise, one ends up without praise.
Consequently,
Desire not to be jingling as jade nor stolid as stone.

From ancient times these things have arisen from the One:
Heaven is clear because of the One,
The earth is firm because of the One,
The Spirit is strong because of the One,
The valley is full because of the One,
The ten thousand things reproduce because of the One,
Leaders are able to lead because of the One.
All of this comes from the One.
If heaven were not clear it would soon split.
If the earth were not firm it would soon bend and break.
If the Spirit were not strong it would soon wear out.
If the valley were not full it would soon dry up.
If the ten thousand things did not reproduce they would soon die out.
If leaders could not lead they would soon fall.
Therefore, greatness has its source in the little.
The low is the foundation of the high.
Princes call themselves "alone," "helpless," "worthless."
Is this not acknowledging a humble root?

humbleness is the root of esteem;

Spirits without divinity would dissipate.
Valleys without fullness would desiccate.
Beings without aliveness would perish.
Leaders without magnanimity would fall.
Humility is the basis of magnanimity.
Modesty is the fundament of exaltation.
Those in high position call themselves powerless, unworthy, or destitute.
Is this not because they take humility as the basis of magnanimity?
There is no honor in displaying your honor.
Desire not either to be jingling like jade or to be stolid like stone.

[39c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Among things, these are the ones that received the One in ancient times:
Heaven, that is made clear by the One,
Earth, that is stabilized by the One,
The soul, that is made spiritual by the One,
The valley, that is made full by the One.
Through the One, all things came into being and were realized,
Princes and kings, through the One, became rulers of the world.
If heaven were not clear, it could tear,
If earth were not stable, it could collapse,
If the soul were not active, it could dissolve,
If the valley were not full, it could dry up.
If things did not exist, they would be as if they had never been,
If princes and kings did not rule,
They would be thrown from their thrones.

The nobleman must measure himself in terms of the humble and simple man,
The dignitary must use the lowly as his basis.
Therefore, princes and kings call themselves "ignorant," "cowardly," "worthless."
Does that not mean that they consider humility to be the root of their nature?
For what does a person hate more than "ignorant," "cowardly," or "worthless"?
Yet princes and kings still choose these words to describe themselves.
Therefore there is no exaltation in this dignitary.
Thus kings rise by lowering their value,
And disappear by raising their value.
It is not good to be conspicuous, like a single gemstone,
Or monotonous and invisible like one of the countless stones in a field.

[39c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
From its first days, the universe came from the One:
The heavens are one, and clear, and round because of it;
The earth is one, and is its firm infused foundation;
The spirit force is one, with all it brings into being;
The valley is a oneness, and so it flows and renews all things;
Everything is one - every living thing is one, and alive!
Kings and lords are one in a kingdom that is one and they can only rule truly because of the One.
If Heaven wasn't clear, then the sky would fall down;
If the earth cannot be peaceful, it will tear itself apart;
If the Spirit cannot bless, then no one will believe in it;
If the valley can't rebirth, then the valley will run dry;
If life can't be itself, then life will be nothing;
And if the king is nothing, then the world will be at war.
Everything has both yin and yang in it -
and from their rise-and-fall-coupling comes new life.
The highest authority needs the basement as its base,
And the depths are the foundation of the heights.
That is why rulers call themselves lonely, like souls in a wilderness who have no home.
And, in doing so, don't they see then that their roots lie with the people?
To see yourself as extraordinary is to stand out like jade among ordinary stones;
but what people ignore - the lonely, and the worthless - is the rock a true leader finds himself on.
You see, you win by losing - and you lose by succeeding.

[39c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Among the ancient holders of the One:
Heaven that holds the One becomes clear and bright;
Earth that holds the One becomes steady;
Gods that hold the One become efficacious;
Valleys that hold the One become full;
All creatures that hold the One become alive;
Lords and leaders who hold the One become leaders of the human world.
By inference Heaven might split without what makes it clear and bright;
Earth might shake without what makes it steady;

Gods might disappear without what makes them efficacious;
Valleys might go dry without what makes them full;
All creatures might die out without what makes them alive;
Lords and kings might fall without what makes them leaders.
That is why the humble is the root of the noble,
And the high is based on the low.
That is why lords and kings call themselves "the solitary", "the few" and "the unkind".
Does not this take the humble as the root (of the noble)?
Does this not?
Hence the highest honor does not need honoring.
It is better, therefore, to be a hard stone than a beautiful piece of jade.

[39c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Since ancient times, what comes into possession is the 'One'.
Heaven in possession of the 'One' is clear.
The Earth in possession of the 'One' is tranquil.
The gods in possession of the 'One' are efficacious.
The valley in possession of the 'One' is full.
The myriad creatures in possession of the 'One' are alive.
The rulers in possession of the 'One' are faithful to their country.
Although they are different, they are the same 'One'.
When Heaven is not clear, it risks cracking.
When the Earth is not tranquil, it risks exploding.
When the gods are not efficacious, they risk ceasing to exist.
When the valley is not full, it risks drying up.
When the myriad creatures possess no life, they risk extinction.
When rulers are not faithful, they risk a fall from their heights.
Therefore the humble is the basis of the precious.
The low is the basis of the high.
The rulers shall humiliate themselves.
That is why one grows the root at the base - isn't it?
That is why one prefers to be the wheel instead of the carriage,
one chooses to be a stone instead of jade.

[39c28t] Liu Qixuan
Achievement of oneness in the past includes:
The heaven that became clear,
The earth that became peaceful,
The soul that became sensitive,
And kings that became the world's leaders.
The following can be inferred:
The heaven will break
If it can by no means clear up;
The earth will be wasteland
If it can by no means be peaceful;
The soul will die out

If it can by no means be sensitive;
And kings will go rampant
If they can by no means lead the world.
Therefore,
Nobility is rooted in the ordinary people,
And the high is based on the low.
The kings take names
Like "the Isolated," "the Helpless," or "the Wicked,"
Just because they appreciate their roots and bases.
Therefore,
The most glorious does not seek after glory,
And the wisest does not seek to be the beautiful jade
But the unrefined rough rock.

[39c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Power of The Tao
Lao Tze says,
Old things which have the correctness are:
It is by correctness that the Heaven becomes bright and pure, and the Earth firm and sure;
the spirits divine;
the valleys full;
all existence lively;
and the kings just for the world's model.
All these are the results of correctness.
If the Heaven were not so pure, it would soon rend.
If the Earth were not so sure, it would break and bend.
If the spirits were not so divine, they would lose their prophesy.
If the valleys were not so full, they would parch.
If all existence were not so lively, they would be extinct.
If the kings had no morality, they would collapse from their throne.
Therefore, dignity finds root in meanness, and the lofty find their stability in lowness.
Therefore, the kings self-styled themselves by the solitary, the unworthy, and the virtueless.
Didn't these mean that dignity finds its root in its meanness?
Didn't these?
So, when we analyze a cart's construction, we can't find a part named cart.
As for me, I would neither appreciate being regarded as a jade rare and expensive, nor as a stone popular and cheap.

[39c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
From of old the things that have acquired Unity are these:
Heaven by Unity has become clear;
Earth by Unity has become steady;
The Spirit by Unity has become spiritual;
The Valley by Unity has become full;
All things by Unity have come into existence;

Princes and kings by Unity have become rulers of the world.
If heaven were not clear, it would be rent;
If earth were not steady, it would be tumbled down;
If the Spirit were not active, it would pass away;
If the Valley were not full, it would be dried up;
If all things were not existing, they would be extinct;
If princes and kings were not rulers, they would be overthrown.
The noble must be styled in the terms of the humble;
The high must take the low as their foundation.
Therefore princes and kings call themselves 'the ignorant', 'the virtueless' and 'the unworthy'.
Does this not mean that they take the humble as their root?
What men hate most are 'the ignorant', 'the virtueless' and 'the unworthy'.
And yet princes and kings choose them as their titles.
Therefore the highest fame is to have no fame.
Thus kings are increased by being diminished;
They are diminished by being increased.
It is undesirable to be as prominent as a single gem,
Or as monotonously numerous as stones.

[39c31t] Paul J. Lin
Those of ancient times obtained the One:
Heaven obtained the One for its clarity;
Earth obtained the One for its tranquility;
The Spirit obtained the One for its divinity;
The Valley obtained the One for its repletion;
All things obtained the One for their lives;
Dukes and kings obtained the One for the rectitude of the world.
What causes these is the One.
Without clarity, Heaven could not avoid disrupting.
Without tranquility, Earth could not avoid explosion.
Without divinity, The Spirit could not avoid dissolving.
Without repletion, The Valley could not avoid dissipating.
Without life, All things could not avoid perishing.
Without rectitude and dignity, Dukes and kings could not avoid falling.
Therefore, distinction has humility as its root;
The high regards the low as its foundation.
Therefore dukes and kings call themselves
Orphans, widowers, and starvers.
Does this not mean regarding humility as a base?
Doesn't it?
He who is most praise-worthy
Does not need any praise.
He prefers to be neither rare as jade,
Nor as common as rocks.

Those that of old got The One Thing:
The sky got The One Thing, and by this became clear.
The earth got The One Thing, and by this became steady.
The spirits got The One Thing, and by this obtained their powers.
The rivers got The One Thing, and by this became full.
The thousands of things got The One Thing, and by this came to life.
The princes and kings got The One Thing, and by this became the Standard for the World.
This is how things came about.
The sky, without what makes it clear, is likely to crack.
The earth, without what makes it steady, is likely to quake.
The spirits, without what gives them powers, are likely to vanish.
The rivers, without what makes them full, are likely to dry up.
The thousands of things, without what gives them life, are likely to perish.
The princes and kings, without what makes them eminent and noble, are likely to fall.
Yes, the eminent takes the common and ignored as a root,
the noble takes the lowly as a foundation.
And so the princes and kings call themselves: 'the orphan ...', 'the poor ...', 'the destitute ...'
Is this not using the common and ignored as a root?
Is it not so?
Yes, enumerate the carriage parts - still not a carriage.
He doesn't wish to glitter and glitter like jade;
he falls like a stone, falling into oblivion.

[39c33t] Cheng Lin
Since antiquity the following may be said to have attained Truth:
Heaven, which by Truth is clear.
Earth, which by Truth is secure.
The gods, which by Truth are divine.
The valleys, which by Truth are full.
All animate creation, which by Truth are alive.
The rulers, which by Truth are capable of rectifying the Empire.
Conversely, the following inferences may be stated:
Without that which renders it clear, heaven stands the danger of disruption.
Without that which renders it secure, earth stands the danger of depression.
Without that which renders them divine, the gods stand the danger of impotence.
Without that which renders them full, the valleys stand the danger of desiccation.
Without that which renders them life, all animate creation stand the danger of annihilation.
Without that which renders them capable of rectification, the rulers stand the danger of being overthrown.
Humility forms the basis of honour, just as the low ground forms the foundation of a high elevation.
Wherefore, the sovereigns are content to call themselves "The Virtueless" and "The Unworthy."
Does not this show that they regard humility as a matter of utmost importance?
Hence, the most praiseworthy are indifferent about praise.
It matters not to them whether they are admired as are beautiful jades, or despised as are rugged stones.

Heaven attained oneness and became clear;
Earth attained oneness and became calm;
Spirits attained oneness and became divine;
Valleys attained oneness and became full;
All things attained oneness and came to life;
Dukes and kings attained oneness and became models for the world.
All was achieved by oneness.
Heaven, without [oneness], becoming clear, might crack;
Earth, without [oneness], becoming calm, might explode;
Spirits, without [oneness], becoming divine, might be exhausted;
Valleys, without [oneness], becoming full, might dry up;
All things, without [oneness], receiving life, might perish;
Dukes and kings, without [oneness], becoming honorable, might fall.
Therefore, the superior takes the inferior as its root.
The high recognizes the low as its foundation.
Therefore, dukes and kings call themselves
"the lonely one", "the little one", and "the worthless one".
Is this not to recognize the lowly as the root?
Is not this?
Therefore, those who wish for great reputation have no reputation.
We do not want to be bright as jade or hard as stone.

In antiquity, the person who follows Dao said:
If the sky is harmonised with Dao, it will be clear.
When the Earth harmonises with Dao, it will be settled.
Similarly, the spirits will retain their magic power;
The valley will be filled with water.
When the ruler follows the way of Dao, his reign will be peaceful.
All these are achieved by following the way of Dao.
If the sky is not clear, it will split.
If the Earth is not settled, it will erupt.
When the spirits lose their power, they will become extinct.
The valley without water will dry up.
All forms of life without nourishment will perish.
A ruler who fails to maintain peace will be toppled.
Dignitaries rely on the support from commoners.
A tall building depends entirely on its base to stay erect.
Hence, the rulers customarily use self-deprecating words when referring to themselves.
Is this not an acknowledgement that everything originates from a humble beginning?
Everyone dislikes words like orphaned, widowed, and unworthy.
Yet, the rulers customarily use these terms to describe themselves.
The irony is that if you crave for fame, you will end up losing it.
The person who follows Dao has no desire to be valued like a beautiful jade.
Nor would he like to be rejected as an ugly stone.

[39c36t] Hua-Ching Ni

Since ancient times there have been those who have attained the subtle essence of the universe and thus become what they are.
Heaven attained the subtle essence of the universe and became clear.
Earth attained the subtle essence of the universe and became stable.
Divine spirits attained the subtle essence of the universe and became powerful.
The Valley of the Universe attained the subtle essence of the universe and became productive.
The myriad things attained the subtle essence of the universe and became prosperous.
The sages attained the subtle essence of the universe and became wise.
All became what they are by attaining the subtle essence of the universe and hence their true nature.
Extinction happens to one who violates his true nature.
Without being pure, Heaven would cease to be.
Without being stable, Earth would burst into bits.
Without maintaining their potency, spirits would disperse.
Without being productive, the vast Valley of the Universe would become exhausted.
Without being reproductive, the myriad things would perish.
Without fortifying themselves with integral virtue, sages would stumble and fall.
Greatness is rooted in plainness,
just as the low forms the foundation of the high.
Realizing this, the ancient sovereigns were content to style themselves as desolate, unworthy, and needy.
Therefore, one who does not separate his being from the nature of the universe follows the Integral Way.
He has no wish to sound like jingling jade pendants in order to court a good name, nor like the rumbling of a stone rolling from a cliff in order to create a bad name.
Each one should work on one's own subtle spiritual integration with the subtle essence of the universe.

[39c37t] Chang Chung-yuan

In the remote past there were those who attained the One.
Attaining the One, heaven became pure.
Attaining the One, earth became peaceful.
Attaining the One, God became spiritual.
Attaining the One, the ocean became full.
Attaining the One, ten thousand things came into life.
Attaining the One, rulers became the models of the world.
All of them became so through the One.
Without becoming pure, heaven would have broken.
Without becoming peaceful, the earth would have quaked.
Without becoming spiritual, God would have crumbled.
Without becoming full, the ocean would have drained.
Without coming into life, ten thousand things would have perished.
Without becoming the models of the world, rulers would have stumbled.
Therefore, the worthless serves as the foundation of the worthy.
The inferior serves as the basis of the superior.
Thus, rulers call themselves isolated men, without merit, and worthless.
Is this not enough to prove that the worthless serve as the foundation of the worthy?
Hence, the perfect fame is no fame.
Rulers do not want to be esteemed as tingling jade; they would rather be plain, solid rock.

Foundation of the Law
Fa Pen
Since antiquity, these have possessed the One -
Heaven in possession of the One has become clear;
Earth in possession of the One has become steady;
Spirits in possession of the One have become divine;
Valleys in possession of the One have become full;
Creatures in possession of the One have become alive;
Kings and nobles in possession of the One have become exemplary.
All the above became what they are in the same way.
Heaven without the One to make it clear
Is apt to crack;
Earth without the One to make it steady
Is apt to quake;
Spirits without the One to make them divine
Are apt to cease operation;
Valleys without the One to make them full
Are apt to become dry;
Creatures without the One to make them alive
Are apt to become extinct;
Kings and nobles without the One to make them exemplary
Are apt to lose their prestige and eminence.
Forsooth, the honorable is rooted in the humble,
And the high is founded on the low.
So kings and nobles call themselves orphaned, lonely, and unworthy.
Does not this indicate that the honorable is rooted in the humble?
Indeed, if a chariot is taken apart,
There will no longer be any chariot.
Desire not to be like polished jade,
But rather to be like rough rocks.

[39c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The things of old that have attained the One:
Heaven, having attained the One, is clear;
Earth, having attained the One, is steady;
Spirits, having attained the One, possess their numinous power;
Valleys, having attained the One, are full;
The ten thousand things, having attained the One, come to life;
Kings and princes, having attained the One, become the model for all under Heaven.
It is by virtue of the One that they become what they are.
Were Heaven not clear by virtue of that,
I fear it would soon shatter;
Were Earth not steady by virtue of that,
I fear it would soon collapse;

Were spirits not to possess their numinous power by virtue of that,
I fear they would soon cease to be;
Were valleys not full by virtue of that,
I fear they would soon dry up;
Were the ten thousand things not to come to life by virtue of that,
I fear they would soon perish;
Were kings and princes not noble and high by virtue of that,
I fear they would soon fall.
Therefore, for the noble the humble is the root;
For the high the low is the foundation.
For this reason, kings and princes
Refer to themselves as "the orphaned one," "the widowed one," and "the ill-provided one."
Isn't this because the humble is the root?
Is it not?
Therefore, if you tally your honors you will count none.
Don't try to jingle like jade-bells,
Rather, sound like rolling rocks.

[39c40t] Tao Huang
Those from the past have attained Oneness.
By attaining Oneness, heaven is clear.
By attaining Oneness, earth is at peace.
By attaining Oneness, the spirit is quickened.
By attaining Oneness, the valley is filled.
By attaining Oneness, the king puts order in the whole world.
All these result from Oneness.
Without its clarity, heaven is liable to explode.
Without its peace, earth is liable to erupt.
Without its quickening, the spirit is liable to die out.
Without its fullness, valleys are liable to dry out.
Without proper esteem, the king is liable to fall.
Esteem is rooted in the humble.
The high is founded upon the low.
This is why the lords and rulers call themselves widows and orphans without support.
Is this is not the root of being humble?
Much praise amounts to no praise.
Without preference, Being is as resonant as Jade and as gravelly as stone.

[39c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Since the beginning of Heaven and Earth, there were things attaining balance:
through attaining balance, Heavens equilibrated;
through attaining balance, the Earth became secure;
through attaining balance, minds became calm;
through attaining balance, valleys became capacious;
through attaining balance, All Things became productive;
through attaining balance, rulers achieved justice throughout the world.

Were the heavens are not equilibrated, they might collapse;
were the Earth not secure, it might quake to bits;
were minds not calm, they might be disrupted;
were valleys not capacious, they might dry up;
were All Things non-productive, they might become extinct;
were rulers not obtaining justice throughout the world, they might fall.
Hence, the rulers established the rule based on the ruled;
and the highness was built upon the foundation of the lowness.
When rulers called themselves "orphans", "widows" and "indigents" reminds that they established the rule according to the needs of the ruled.
Did they not?
Thus frequent flattery becomes no flattery.
Therefore, a perfect gentleman has no excessive desires:
He is smooth like smooth jade!
He is solid like solid rock!

[39c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Of old those that obtained the One:
Heaven obtained the One and became clear.
Earth obtained the One and became tranquil.
The spiritual beings obtained the One and became divine.
The valley obtained the One and became full.
The myriad things obtained the One and lived and grew.
Kings and barons obtained the One and became rulers of the empire.
What made them so is the One.
If heaven had not thus become clear,
It would soon crack.
If the earth had not thus become tranquil,
It would soon be shaken.
If the spiritual beings had not thus become divine,
They would soon wither away.
If the valley had not thus become full,
It would soon become exhausted.
If the myriad things had not thus lived and grown,
They would soon become extinct.
If kings and barons had not thus become honorable and high in position,
They would soon fall.
Therefore humble station is the basis of honor.
The low is the foundation of the high.
For this reason kings and barons call themselves children without parents, lonely people without spouses, and men without food to eat.
Is this not regarding humble station as the basis of honor?
Is it not?
Therefore enumerate all the parts of a chariot as you may, and you still have no chariot.
Rather than jingle like the jade,
Rumble like the rocks.

[39c91t] И. И. Семененко

Есть издавна обретшие единое.
Благодаря ему Небо и делается чистым,
Земля хранит устойчивость,
души обретают чудотворность,
долины наполняются,
вещей родится десять тысяч,
владетели и царь становятся для Поднебесной образцом.
Достигнуть этого им помогает именно единое.
Когда у Неба нет того, что доставляет чистоту, оно, пожалуй, разломается;
Земля, не обладая тем, что придает устойчивость, пожалуй, станет шаткой;
души, не имея того, что сохраняет чудодейственность, пожалуй, перестанут проявляться;
долины при отсутствии того, что позволяет им наполниться, пожалуй, пересохнут;
десяти тысячам вещей по неимению того, чем можно жить, не избежать, пожалуй, истребления;
владетели и царь, не обладая тем, что обеспечивает знатностью и высшим положением, пожалуй, этого лишатся.
Знатность коренится в худородстве, высокому основой служит низкое.
Именно поэтому владетели и царь называют себя: "сирый", "вдовый" и "убогий".
Не значит ли это, что в худородстве заключается их корень? Разве не так?
Отсюда и выходит, что все части, из которых состоит повозка, повозкой еще не являются.
Не стремись быть редким словно яшма или многим как простые камни.

[39c92t] А. А. Маслов

Вот то, что с древности пребывало в Едином:
Небо пребывало в Едином и потому достигало чистоты.
Земля пребывала в Едином и потому достигала покоя.
Духи пребывали в Едином и потому были одухотворённо-подвижны.
Долина пребывала в Едином и потому достигала расцвета.
Мириады вещей пребывали в Едином и потому обретали рождение.
Правитель и князья пребывали в Едином и потому были честны с Поднебесной.
Лишь благодаря Единому они достигали этого.
Если Небо не чисто, оно разверзается.
Если Земля не спокойна, она опускается.
Если духи не одухотворённо-подвижны, они истощаются.
Если долина не расцветает, она иссыхает.
Если мириады вещей не обретают рождения, они обречены на уничтожение.
Если знать и правители не честны, они будут свергнуты.
Поэтому в основе ценного лежит дешёвое.
Благородный муж рассматривает подданных в качестве своего корня.
Высшие рассматривают низших в качестве своей основы.
Поэтому правитель и князья называют себя "сирыми", "покинутыми", "неудачниками".
Так разве это не значит: "Рассматривать подданных в качестве своего корня"?
Разве это не так?
Поэтому они и достигают величайшего признания вне признания, не желая быть прекраснейшими, словно яшма, и твердейшими, будто камень.

[39c93t] Е. А. Торчинов

Вот те, кто некогда причастны стали Одному:
Небо стало причастно Одному - и очистилось,
Земля стала причастна Одному - и упокоилась,
Божественное стало причастно Одному - и одухотворилось,
Долины стали причастны Одному - и наполнились,
Все сущее стало причастно Одному - и стало порождать,
Цари и князья стали причастны Одному - и Поднебесная выправилась.
А вот что было бы в противном случае:
Не стало бы Небо чистым и распалось бы на куски,
Не упокоилась бы Земля и раскололась бы на части,
Не одухотворилось бы божественное и истощилось бы немедленно,
Не наполнились бы долины и пересохли бы тотчас,
Не стало порождать бы сущее и тотчас бы погибло,
Не ценили бы цари и князья высокое и были бы низложены внезапно.
Поэтому цените униженное, считая его корнем, поскольку для всего высокого низкое будет всегда основанием.
Вот поэтому-то цари и князья и называют себя "сирыми", "одинокими" и "недостойными".
Разве это не означает "считать униженное корнем"?
Не так ли?
Поэтому стремящийся быть владельцем многих колесниц остается без колесницы.
И я не стремлюсь быть блестящим и сияющим, как яшма, а хочу быть столь же простым и незаметным, как простой булыжник.

[39c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов

Вот те, кто в древности обрели единство:
Небо обрело единство чистотой,
Земля обрела единство незыблемостью,
дух обрел единство духовностью (лин),
лоно [Поднебесной] обрело единство полнотой,
мириады вещей обрели единство рождением,
хоу и ваны обрели единство, став воплощением честности для Поднебесной.
Они достигли этого.
Небо, не став чистым, боюсь, может лопнуть.
Земля, не став незыблемой, боюсь, может рассыпаться.
Дух, не став одухотворенным, боюсь, может истощиться.
Мириады вещей, не рождаясь, боюсь, могут исчезнуть.
Хоу и ваны, не став ценимыми и высокопочитаемыми, боюсь, могут оступиться.
Основой дорогого (благородного) является дешевое (худородное).
Основой высокого является низкое.
Поэтому хоу и ваны называют себя сирыми, одинокими, несчастными.
Это не оттого ли, что дешевое (худородное) является основой?
А разве нет?!
Однако если за несколькими колесницами погонишься, ни одну не догонишь.
Не желай сверкать словно драгоценная яшма, будь блеклым, как простой камень.

[39c95t] Ян Хин-шун

Вот те, которые с древних времен находятся в единстве.
Благодаря единству небо стало чистым, земля - незыблемой, дух - чутким, долина - цветущей и начали рождаться все существа.
Благодаря единству знать и государи становятся образцом в мире.
Вот что создает единство.
Если небо не чисто, оно разрушается;
если земля зыбка, она раскалывается;
если дух не чуток, он исчезает;
если долины не цветут, они превращаются в пустыню;
если вещи не рождаются, они исчезают;
если знать и государи не являются примером благородства, они будут свергнуты.
Незнатные являются основой для знатных, а низкое - основанием для высокого.
Поэтому знать и государи сами называют себя "одинокими", "сирыми", "несчастливыми".
Это происходит оттого, что они не рассматривают незнатных как свою основу.
Это ложный путь.
Если разобрать колесницу, от нее ничего не останется.
Нельзя считать себя "драгоценным", как яшма, а нужно быть простым, как камень.

[39c96t] Д. П. Конисси

В древности всякое существо достигало единства.
Небо, достигши единства, стало чистым.
Земля, достигши единства, стала спокойной.
Дух, достигши единства, стал разумным.
Долина, достигши единства, стала полной.
Всякая вещь, достигши единства, стала существовать.
Цари и князья, достигши единства, стали образцами для мира.
Все это было достигнуто, благодаря единству.
Достижение единства во всем этом одно и то же.
Если бы небо было не чисто, то казалось бы, что оно боится взрыва.
Если бы земля потеряла спокойствие, то она была бы в опасности разрушения.
Если бы дух лишился разумности, то он потерял бы (свойство) быть духом.
Если бы пустота долины наполнилась чем-нибудь, то она перестала бы быть долиной.
Всякая вещь, если бы перестала расти, уничтожилась бы.
Если бы цари и князья потеряли верность и преданность (своих подданных), то были бы свергнуты.
Отсюда благородные люди смотрят на неблагородных, как на свое начало; высшие смотрят на низших, как на свое основание.
Цари и князья заботятся о бедных сиротах и вдовах.
Этим же они могли бы свидетельствовать о своем происхождении.
Ужели это неправда?
Если разобрать телегу по частям, то не останется телеги.
Я не желаю быть гордым, как драгоценный камень.
Также я не желаю быть презираемым, как дикий камень.

Из тех, кто в древности обрел единое:
Небо, обретя единое, стало чистым;
Земля, обретя единое, стала покойной;
Духи, обретя единое, стали божественными;
Долины, обретя единое, стали полны;
Вся тьма вещей, обретя единое, живет;
Князья и цари, обретя единое, правят Поднебесной.
Так все происходит благодаря единому.
Небо, не будучи чистым, не расколется ли?
Земля, не будучи покойной, не растрясется ли?
Духи, не будучи божественными, не обессилят ли?
Долины, не будучи наполненными, не оскудеют ли?
Вся тьма вещей, не имея в себе жизни, не исчезнет ли?
Князья и цари, не имея почета и славы, не падут ли?
Посему корень почета - униженность.
Основа славы - безвестность.
Оттого князья и цари зовут себя сиротами, одинокими, беспомощными.
Не значит ли это, что для них униженность - корень?
Разве нет?
Имея множество колесниц, считай, что у тебя нет колесниц.
Не желай ни блестеть, словно прекрасная яшма,
Ни быть твердым, словно простой булыжник.

[39c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Изначально так обретают единство:
Небо обретает единство способностью чистоты.
Земля обретает единство способностью покоя.
Дух обретает единство способностью божественной тайны.
Долина обретает единство способностью наполнения.
Мириады сущностей обретают единство способностью жить.
Удельные князья и правители обретают единство способностью осуществлять исправление Поднебесной.
Это и приводит их к единству.
Если у Неба отсутствует способность чистоты, может и расколоться.
Если у Земли отсутствует способность покоя, может прийти в движение.
Если у духа отсутствует способность божественной тайны, может и иссякнуть.
Если у долины отсутствует способность наполнения, может и истощиться.
Если у мириад сущностей отсутствует способность жить, могут и исчезнуть.
Если у удельных князей и правителей отсутствует способность к исправлению посредством почитания высокого, могут и рухнуть.
Причинность:
Основой для благородного является подлое.
Опорой для высокого является низкое.
Это дает:
Удельные князья и правители называют себя сирыми, вдовыми, неприкаянными.
Разве это не потому, что подлое является основой?

And being {originates} in nonbeing.

[40c02t] John C. H. Wu
THE movement of the Tao consists in Returning.
The use of the Tao consists in softness.
All things under heaven are born of the corporeal:
The corporeal is born of the Incorporeal.

[40c03t] D. C. Lau
Turning back is how the way moves;
Weakness is the means the way employs.
The myriad creatures in the world are born from Something, and Something from Nothing.

[40c04t] R. L. Wing
Polarity is the movement of the Tao.
Receptivity is the way it is used.
The world and All Things were produced from its existence.
Its existence was produced from nonexistence.

[40c05t] Ren Jiyu
Reversion is the movement of Tao,
Weakness is the function of Tao.
All things under Heaven come into being from (visible) concrete beings,
And all beings come into being from invisible nonexistence (Tao).

[40c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Returning is the motion of the Tao.
Yielding is the way of the Tao.
The ten thousand things are born of being.
Being is born of not being.

Cycling is how the DAO moves;
The weak is where the DAO functions.
Everything comes from existence;
Existence comes from nothingness.

[40c09t] Walter Gorn Old, RESIGNING WORK
The path of Tao is backward.
The characteristic of Tao is gentleness.
Everything in the universe comes from existence, and existence from non-existence.

[40c10t] James Legge
The movement of the Tao
By contraries proceeds;
And weakness marks the course
Of Tao's mighty deeds.
All things under heaven sprang from It as existing (and named);
that existence sprang from It as non-existent (and not named).

[40c11t] David Hinton
Return is the movement of Way, and yielding the method of Way.
All beneath heaven, the ten thousand things: it's all born of being, and being is born of nonbeing.

[40c12t] Chichung Huang
Opposition characterizes the Tao's movement;
Weakness characterizes the Tao's function.
All things under heaven are generated from being;
Being is generated from nonbeing.

Reversal is the movement of the Way;
Weakness is the usage of the Way.
All creatures under heaven are born from being;
Being is born from nonbeing.

[40c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Returning is the direction of the Tao.
Yielding is the way of the Tao.
The ten thousand things are born of Being and Being is born of Nonbeing.

[40c22t] David H. Li
Periodicity is Direction in motion;
Frailty is Direction in application.
Myriad matters in the world are born out of Ull.
Ull is born out of Null.

[40c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Cyclic returning to the source is the rhythmic movement of the Tao.
Gentle spontaneity is the nature of its function.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-One

650/2593

[41c01t] Robert G. Henricks
When the highest type of {men hear} the Way, with diligence they're able to practice it;
When average men hear the Way, some things they retain and others they lose;
When the lowest type of men hear the Way, they laugh out loud at it.
If they didn't laugh at it, {it couldn't} be regarded as the Way.
Therefore, there is a set saying about this that goes:
The bright Way appears to be dark;
The Way that goes forward appears to retreat;
The smooth Way appears to be uneven;
The highest virtue [is empty] like a valley;
The purest white appears to be soiled;
Vast virtue appears to be insufficient;
Firm virtue appears {thin and weak};
The simplest {reality appears to change}.
The Great Square has no corners;
The Great Vessel takes long to complete;
The Great Tone makes little sound;
The Great Image has no shape.
The Way is Great but has no name.
Only the Way is good at beginning things and also good at bringing things to completion.

[41c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHEN a wise scholar hears the Tao,
He practices it diligently.
When a mediocre scholar hears the Tao,
He wavers between belief and unbelief.
When a worthless scholar hears the Tao,
He laughs boisterously at it.
But if such a one does not laugh at it,
The Tao would not be the Tao!
The wise men of old have truly said:
The bright Way looks dim.
The progressive Way looks retrograde.
The smooth Way looks rugged.
High Virtue looks like an abyss.
Great whiteness looks spotted.
Abundant Virtue looks deficient.
Established Virtue looks shabby.
Solid Virtue looks as though melted.
Great squareness has no corners.
Great talents ripen late.
Great sound is silent.

Great Form is shapeless.
The Tao is hidden and nameless;
Yet it alone knows how to render help and to fulfill.

[41c03t] D. C. Lau
When the best student hears about the way
He practises it assiduously;
When the average student hears about the way
It seems to him one moment there and gone the next;
When the worst student hears about the way
He laughs out loud.
If he did not laugh
It would be unworthy of being the way.
Hence the {Chien yen} has it:
The way that is bright seems dull;
The way that leads forward seems to lead backward;
The way that is even seems rough.
The highest virtue is like the valley;
The sheerest whiteness seems sullied;
Ample virtue seems defective;
Vigorous virtue seems indolent;
Plain virtue seems soiled;
The great square has no corners.
The great vessel takes long to complete;
The great note is rarefied in sound;
The great image has no shape.
The way conceals itself in being nameless.
It is the way alone that excels in bestowing and in accomplishing.

[41c04t] R. L. Wing
When superior leaders hear of the Tao,
They diligently try to practice it.
When average leaders hear of the Tao,
They appear both aware and unaware of it.
When inferior leaders hear of the Tao,
They roar with laughter.
Without sufficient laughter, it could not be the Tao;
Hence the long-established sayings:
The Tao illuminated appears to be obscure;
The Tao advancing appears to be retreating;
The Tao leveled appears to be uneven.
Superior Power appears to be low;
Great clarity appears to be spotted;
Extensive Power appears to be insufficient;
Established Power appears to be stolen;
Substantial Power appears to be spurious.

The greatest space has no corners;
The greatest talents are slowly mastered;
The greatest music has the rarest sound;
The Great Image has no form.
The Tao is hidden and nameless,
Yet it is the Tao that skillfully supports and completes.

[41c05t] Ren Jiyu
When the highest shi hear Tao, they diligently practise it.
When the average shi hear Tao, they half believe it.
When the lowest shi hear Tao, (thinking it empty) they laugh greatly at it.
If they didn't laugh, it would be contrary to Tao.
Therefore there are some old sayings:
"The Tao that is bright seems to be dark;
The Tao that goes forward seems to retreat;
The Tao that is level seems to be uneven;
The lofty De (Virtue) looks like a humble valley;
The greatest glory looks like disgrace;
The greatest De looks insufficient;
The vigorous De looks inert;
The simple purity looks changeable;
The great square has no corners;
The valuable vessel is always completed lastly;
The greatest sound sounds faint;
The greatest form looks formless."
Tao is hidden and nameless,
It is only Tao that initiates all beings and brings them to completion.

[41c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The wise student hears of the Tao and practices it diligently.
The average student hears of the Tao and gives it thought now and again.
The foolish student hears of the Tao and laughs aloud.
If there were no laughter, the Tao would not be what it is.
Hence it is said:
The bright path seems dim;
Going forward seems like retreat;
The easy way seems hard;
The highest Virtue seems empty;
Great purity seems sullied;
A wealth of Virtue seems inadequate;
The strength of Virtue seems frail;
Real Virtue seems unreal;
The perfect square has no corners;
Great talents ripen late;
The highest notes are hard to hear;
The greatest form has no shape.

The Tao is hidden and without name.
The Tao alone nourishes and brings everything to fulfillment.

[41c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Superior men, hearing about the Dao,
Will work diligently under its guidance.
Mediocre men, hearing about the Dao,
Remembers and then forgets about it.
Inferior men, hearing about the Dao,
Laughs and jeers at it.
If people do not laugh or jeer at it,
It is unlikely to be the Dao.
Thus it is said:
Those whose mind shines with the Dao
Appear to be dull and stupid.
Those who make progress along the Dao
Appear to be falling behind.
Those who go astray
Appear to be following the Dao.
The truly virtuous are humble like a valley,
The truly stainless souls appear sullied.
A man with many virtues appears to be inadequate.
Those who are establishing their virtues
look like thieves.
The truthful look like good quality turned bad,
An infinite space will have no corners.
A man who is a great instrument never aspires or strives to be such.
A big voice sounds like it is soft.
A big symbol has no shape.
The Dao is hidden and nameless.
Yet nothing is better than the Dao
In lending support and helping people accomplish.

[41c08t] Xiaolin Yang
When people who have high DE learn about the DAO, they practice it diligently;
When people who have medium DE learn about the DAO, they sometimes treat it seriously, sometimes do not;
When people who have low DE learn about the DAO, they give it a big laugh.
If they do not laugh, the DAO is not the DAO.
Therefore, the great men once said,
"People who understand the DAO look dull;
The more you learn about the DAO, the more you feel like you are retreating;
The DAO looks like a smooth road, but when you walk on it, it is rough."
The people who have high DE always look as low as the valleys and riverbeds.
The people who have broad DE always look incomplete.

The people who have strong DE always look lazy.
The people who have real DE always look empty.
The whitest looks tainted,
The squarest looks like it has no right angle,
The greatest piece takes the longest time,
The biggest sound has no sound,
The biggest shape has no shape.
The DAO likes to hide and be anonymous.
Because the DAO always gives, it accomplishes everything.

[41c09t] Walter Gorn Old, LIKE AND UNLIKE
When a wise man hears the Tao, he follows it.
When one of average mind hears it, he holds to it a while and presently loses it.
When a foolish man hears it, he only laughs at it.
If it were not held in derision by such men, it could not rightly be called Tao.
Therefore, as the verse-makers would say:-
Who shines with Tao is lost in shade;
His path in Tao is retrograde,
And all his actions are obscure.
The highest virtue has no name,
The greatest pureness seems but shame;
True wisdom seems the least secure.
Inherent goodness seems most strange;
What most endures is changeless Change;
And squareness doth no angles make.
The largest vessel none can gird;
The loudest voice was never heard;
The greatest thing no form doth take.
For Tao is hidden, and it has no name; but it is good at beginning and finishing.

[41c10t] James Legge
Scholars of the highest class, when they hear about the Tao, earnestly carry it into practice.
Scholars of the middle class, when they have heard about it, seem now to keep it and now to lose it.
Scholars of the lowest class, when they have heard about it, laugh greatly at it.
If it were not (thus) laughed at, it would not be fit to be the Tao.
Therefore the sentence-makers have thus expressed themselves: -
'The Tao, when brightest seen, seems light to lack;
Who progress in it makes, seems drawing back;
Its even way is like a rugged track.
Its highest virtue from the vale doth rise;
Its greatest beauty seems to offend the eyes;
And he has most whose lot the least supplies.
Its firmest virtue seems but poor and low;
Its solid truth seems change to undergo;
Its largest square doth yet no corner show;
A vessel great, it is the slowest made;

Loud is its sound, but never word it said;
A semblance great, the shadow of a shade.'
The Tao is hidden, and has no name;
but it is the Tao which is skilful at imparting (to all things what they need) and making them complete.

When the lofty hear of Way they devote themselves.
When the common hear of Way they wonder if it's real or not.
And when the lowly hear of Way
they laugh out loud.
Without that laughter, it wouldn't be Way.
Hence the abiding proverbs:
Luminous Way seems dark.
Advancing Way seems retreating.
Formless Way seems manifold.
High Integrity seems low-lying.
Great whiteness seems tarnished.
Abounding Integrity seems lacking.
Abiding Integrity seems missing.
True essence seems protean.
The great square has no corners,
and the great implement completes nothing.
The great voice sounds faint,
and the great image has no shape.
Way remains hidden and nameless,
but it alone nourishes and brings to completion.

He does his utmost to practice it;
When the middling scholar hears the Tao,
It seems existent, seems non-existent;
When the inferior scholar hears the Tao,
He bursts out laughing.
If he did not burst out laughing,
It would not deserve to be the Tao.
Hence, "Established Sayings" has it:
"The clear Tao seems obscure;
The advancing Tao seems receding;
The even Tao seems rugged;
Supreme virtue is like a valley;
Great white seems black;
Abundant virtue seems deficient;
Robust virtue seems flabby;

Honest truth seems capricious;
The great square has no corners;
The great vessel is imperfect;
The great voice has no sound;
The celestial image has no form."
The Tao is invisible and nameless;
The Tao alone
Begins well and ends well.

When a superior person (shan shih) hears Tao,
He diligently practices it.
When a middling person (chung shih) hears Tao,
He hears it, he doesn't hear it.
When the inferior person (hsia shih) hears Tao, he roars.
If Tao were not laughed at,
It would not be Tao.
Therefore, established sayings (chien yen) have it this way:
"The illuminating (ming) Tao appears (jo) dark,
The advancing Tao appears retreating,
The level Tao appears knotty (lei).
High (shan) te appears like a valley,
Great whiteness (po) appears spotted (ju),
Expansive te appears insufficient,
Well-established te appears weak,
The genuine in substance appears hollow.
Great (ta) square has no corners,
Great vessel (ch'i) is late in completion,
Great voice (yin) has hardly (hsi) any sound,
Great image is formless,
Tao is hidden and without name."
Yet it is Tao alone,
That is good in lending help and fulfilling all.

[41c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
When a superior scholar-doer learned about Tao, he would diligently study and practice it;
When a mediocre scholar-doer learned about Tao, he was only partially convinced, for this reason he would be indifferent to either retaining it or letting it go;
When an inferior scholar-doer learned about Tao, he would burst into loud laughter;
It sounds as if [he] did not laugh at it, it cannot be pertaining to Tao.
Accordingly, It says in Chian Yan:
"When [a person] engages in the course of elucidating Tao, he may be disappointed by the intensified realization of his ignorance;
When [a person] embarks on the course of advancing [knowledge] of Tao, he may be thwarted by mounting hardships of proceeding [for higher and more comprehensive knowledge];
When [a person] struggles to smooth the path of Tao, he may be disgruntled by [seemingly] infinite bumps and hills (obstacles);

When [a person] strives to elevate his [level of accomplishment of] Te, he may be frustrated by the hardship,
Because it is as unfulfilling as filling up a [vast] valley with water;
When [a person] attempts to explain the universality and immensity of Tao, he may feel antagonized by his swelling humiliation [through recognizing how little he knows about the powerful and complicated Tao]."
"In order to broaden one's [accrual of] Te, one should never be satisfied [of whatever accomplishments one has achieved];
In order to establish one's [standing on] Te, one should have the patience [like a brick layer], i.e. fetching [bricks piece by piece];
In order to substantiate one's [retention of] Te, one should reinvigorate [one's achievements constantly]."
"An immensely huge land has no [visible] corners;
A person of great talent has belated success;
A piece of great work of music has minimum dissonance;
A grand phenomenon has no shape [perceptible to untrained eyes];
Tao is covert that it can hardly be described with perfection."
Tao is the one and the only one which lends itself [to everyone and everything] and sustains every one to its fulfillment.

When a man of high learning hears the Way, he diligently practices it.
When a man of ordinary learning hears the Way, he seems to remember it and not to remember it.
When a man of little learning hears the Way, he laughs loud.
If this man did not laugh, the Way would not be enough to be the Way.
Hence, the men of old have truly said:
"The Way that is bright seems dull.
The Way that advances seems to move backward.
The Way that is smooth seems rugged.
High Virtue seems like an abyss.
Great whiteness seems spotted.
Abundant Virtue seems deficient.
Rigorous Virtue seems shabby.

Although they are making progress, they appear to be receding.
The perfect Tao appears to be blemished.
High Te is like the valleys.
Bright white appears to be tarnished.
Broad kindness appears to be insufficient.
Diligent people could look lazy.
Authentic qualities could look faked.
A great square appears to have no corner.
Great success does not achieve early.
Great music does not sound loud.
Great image does not have form.
Tao is invisible and nameless.
It is only Tao that can lend help and make endeavors successful.

When the man of highest capacities hears Tao
He does his best to put it into practice.
When the man of middling capacity hears Tao
He is in two minds about it.
When the man of low capacity hears Tao
He laughs loudly at it.
If he did not laugh, it would not be worth the name of Tao.
Therefore the proverb has it:
'The way out into the light often looks dark,
The way that goes ahead often looks as if it went back.'
The way that is least hilly often looks as if it went up and down,
The 'power' that is really loftiest looks like an abyss,
What is sheerest white looks blurred.
The 'power' that is most sufficing looks inadequate,
The 'power' that stands firmest looks flimsy,
What is in its natural, pure state looks faded,
The largest square has no corners,
The greatest vessel takes the longest to finish,
Great music has the faintest notes,
The Great Form is without shape.
For Tao is hidden and nameless.
Yet Tao alone supports all things and brings them to fulfilment.

QUALITIES OF THE TAOIST

They try hard to live in accordance with it,
When the mediocre type hear the Tao,
They seem to be aware and yet unaware of it.
When the lowest type hear the Tao,
They break into loud laughter -
If it were not laughed at, it would not be Tao.
Therefore there is the established saying:
"Who understands Tao seems dull of comprehension;
Who is advanced in Tao seems to slip backwards;
Who moves on the even Tao (Path) seems to go up and down."
Superior character appears like a hollow (valley);
Sheer white appears like tarnished;
Great character appears like insufficient;
Solid character appears like infirm;
Pure worth appears like contaminated;
Great space has no corners;
Great talent takes long to mature;
Great music is faintly heard;
Great form has no contour;
And Tao is hidden without a name.
It is this Tao that is adept at lending (its power) and bringing fulfilment.

For this reason,
There is a series of epigrams that says:
"The bright Way seems dim.
The forward Way seems backward.
The level Way seems bumpy.
Superior integrity seems like a valley.
The greatest whiteness seems grimy.
Ample integrity seems insufficient.
Robust integrity seems apathetic.
Plain truth seems sullied.

The Way is concealed and has no name."
Indeed,
The Way alone is good at beginning and good at completing.

When the average student hears about it

And the one who is going towards the Tao
Seems, in fact, to be going backwards -
And those who think that the Way is easy
Will find it extremely hard.
The greatest virtue is to be empty like a valley.

That is why it is said:
One who knows the Tao clearly seems ignorant.
One who improves himself according to the Tao seems backward.
One who moves with the Tao is equal to the Tao.
The highest virtue feels empty, like the valley.
The purest whiteness feels tainted.
The brightest virtue never seems adequate.
He who is virtuous feels like a thief.

First-class people stand up and go with it.
Second-class people go around in circles about it.
Third-class people laugh loudly at it,
And if they don't laugh, it won't be the true Way.
Therefore we may say:
He/She who is wise on the Way seems foolish;
He/She who progresses towards the Way seems to retreat;
He/She who walks the Way evenly
Seems to climb a mountain;
Those who receive most from the Way seem totally deprived;
The pure white person seems a soiled disgrace;
The richest person seems the poorest;
The strongest person seems the weakest;
The truest person seems the most false;
The biggest square has no corner;

And the largest image cannot be seen;
For what the Way gives and achieves best is nameless.

The Qualities of Tao-practicians
Lao Tze says,
The students of the highest class, when they hear about the Tao, try hard to put it into practice.
The students of middle class, when they hear about the Tao, seem to be aware and yet unaware of it.
The students of the lowest class, when they hear about it, laugh greatly at it.
If it were not thus laughed at, it would not be the Tao.
Therefore, I try to give a few words about the Tao-practicians:
Those who are advancing in the Tao seem drawing back.
The Tao's way is even but seems like a rugged track.
The superior Teh is inclusive to anything as a valley.
The purest character seems humiliating.
The abundant Teh seems destitute.
And the Teh is established secretly as a thief proceeding to do his work.
Its solid truth seems to undergo change.
Its largest square does no corner show.
The great masterpieces are slow in completion.
The hugest note is seldom sounded.
The greatest image has no certain form.
The Tao is hidden, and has no name, but it is adept at lending its power and bringing fulfillment.

[41c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao

When the superior scholar is told of Tao,
He works hard to practise it.
When the middling scholar is told of Tao,
It seems that sometimes he keeps it and sometimes he loses it.
When the inferior scholar is told of Tao,
He laughs aloud at it.
If it were not laughed at, it would not be sufficient to be Tao.
Therefore the proverb says:
'Tao in enlightenment seems obscure;
Tao in progress seems regressive;
Tao in its straightness seems rugged;
The highest virtue seems like a valley;
The purest white seems discoloured;
The most magnificent virtue seems insufficient;
The solidest virtue seems frail;
The simplest nature seems changeable;
The greatest square has no angles;
The largest vessel is never complete;
The loudest sound can scarcely be heard;
The biggest form cannot be visualized.
Tao, while hidden, is nameless.'
Yet it is Tao alone that is good at imparting and completing.

The superior man, on hearing Tao,
Practices it diligently.
The average man, on hearing Tao,
Regards it both as existing and not existing.
The inferior man, on hearing Tao,
Laughs aloud at it.
Without his laughter, it would not be Tao.
Therefore the established word says:
The luminous Tao seems obscure.
The advancing Tao seems retreating.
The even Tao seems rough.
The highest virtue seems empty.
Great whiteness seems blackened.
Broad virtue seems insufficient.
Established virtue seems secret.
Pure substance seems fluid.
The great square has no corners.
The great vessel is late in completing.
The great voice sounds faint.
The great image has no shape.
Tao is concealed and has no name.
Yet only Tao is good in giving and completing.

[41c32t] Michael LaFargue
"When the best shih hears Tao,
he puts out great effort to practice it.
When the average shih hears Tao,
he will keep it sometimes, and sometimes forget about it.
When the poorest shih hears Tao,
he just has a big laugh."
If he does not laugh, it must not quite be Tao.
Yes, the 'Well-Founded Sayings' has it:
The bright Tao seems dark;
the Tao going forward seems to be going backward;
the smooth Tao seems rough.
The loftiest Te seems like a valley;
great purity seems sullied;
abundant Te seems insufficient.
Well-founded Te seems flimsy;
what is pure and natural seems faded;
the best square has no corners.
A great bronze takes long to finish;
great music has a delicate sound;
the Great Image has no shape.
Tao is something concealed, nameless.
It is just Tao,

good at sustaining a person and completing him.

When the highest type of men hear of Truth, they forthwith sedulously practise it.
When the average type of men hear of Truth, they are unimpressed.
When the lowest type of men hear of Truth, they greatly deride it.
Indeed, if these men do not deride it, it is surely not Truth.
Wherefore it is said in the Book of Jiann-Yan:
"The one who understands Truth appears as though he did not understand it.
The one who advances toward Truth appears as though he were retreating from it.
The one who finds the way of Truth easy appears as though he found it difficult."
The most virtuous appear as though they were devoid of virtue.
The virtuous who can impart virtue to others appear as though they were incapable.
The virtuous who are strong appear as though they were weak.
The virtuous who are solid appear as though they were unreal.
The most pure appears as though it were impure.
The perfect square is cornerless.
The greatest achievement is slow of completion.
The highest note is inaudible.
The great Simulacrum is formless.
The great Truth is nameless.
It is only Truth that excels both in giving and achieving.

[41c34t] Yi Wu
When the highest scholars hear of the Way, they practice it diligently.
When average scholars hear of the Way, they doubt its existence.
When the lowest scholars hear of the Way, they laugh loudly at it.
Without their laughing, it would not be the Way.
Therefore, the established words say:
The bright way looks dim,
The advancing way looks as if retreating,
The level way looks rough,
Supreme virtue looks like a valley,
Great whiteness looks soiled,
Abundant virtue looks deficient,
Established virtue looks like cowardice,
True essence looks changeable,
The greatest square has no corners,
The greatest vessel is completed late,
The greatest music is seldom heard,
The greatest image has no shape,
The Way is hidden in namelessness.
Yet, only the Way is good in lending itself, and is complete.

When a consummate scholar learns about Dao,

He studies it diligently and puts it into practice.
When a mediocre scholar hears about Dao,
He becomes totally perplexed.
When a lowly scholar hears about Dao,
He instantaneously bursts into laughter.
If it is not sneered at,
It cannot have been the real Dao.
Therefore, there was an ancient saying:
A person who knows about Dao appears to be dull.
A person who is advanced in Dao appears to be backward.
A person who travels smoothly along the path of Dao appears to be on a bumpy ride.
A person with excellent virtue appears to be quite shallow.
A person with immaculate virtue appears tarnished.
A person with great virtue appears to be inadequate.
A person with substantial virtue seems to be flimsy.
A person with genuine virtue appears to be shifty.
The greatest space has no corners.
A prodigal talent takes time to actualise.
The greatest sound is nature's sound of silence.
Dao has no form.
Dao is subtle, obscure, and indescribable.
Only Dao will give generously and help others to accomplish.

[41c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
When people of the highest awareness hear the subtle Way of the universe, they cultivate themselves diligently in order to live in accord with it.
When mediocre people hear the subtle Way of the universe,
they are unimpressed.
When people who are low hear the subtle Way of the universe,
they break into loud laughter.
If it were not laughed at,
it would not be the subtle Way of the universe.
Thus there is a traditional saying that he who understands the subtle Way of the universe seems dull of comprehension.
He who approaches the subtle Way of the universe seems to move away from it.
He who moves on the smooth path of the universe seems to go up and down as if traveling a rough road.
The deeply virtuous are like an empty, receptive valley.
The innocent appear to be sullied.
The abundant appear to be deficient.
The perfect appear to be defective.
The honest appear to be corrupt.
Hence, great space has no corners.
Great talent ripens late.
Great eloquence is silent.
Great form is shapeless.
The subtle essence of the universe is hidden and indefinable, yet its benefit is always subtly bestowed.

[41c37t] Chang Chung-yuan

When a man of superior talent listens to Tao, he earnestly applies it.
When an ordinary man listens to Tao, he seems to believe it and yet not to believe it.
When the worst man listens to Tao, he greatly ridicules it.
If he did not ridicule it, it would not be Tao.
Therefore, in Ch'ien-yen we have:
Understand Tao as if you do not understand it;
Enter into Tao as if you are coming out of it;
Move smoothly with Tao as if you are having difficulties.
The highest attainment is as if it is no attainment.
All-embracing attainment is as if it is lacking attainment.
Rigorous attainment is as if it is indolent loafing.
Real essence is as if it is empty.
The great white is as if it is black.
The great square is without corners.
Great capacity is successful in its later days.
Great music is without sound.
The great image is without form.
Tao is concealed and without name.
Nevertheless, Tao furnishes all things and fulfills them.

[41c38t] Henry Wei

Similarity and Difference
T'ung I
The first-rate scholar, on hearing Tao,
Is diligent in practicing it;
The second-rate scholar, on hearing Tao,
Wavers between faith and forgetfulness;
The third-rate scholar, on hearing Tao,
Bursts into loud laughter.
If not laughed at, it would not be Tao!
Hence the following proverbs -
He who understands Tao seems confounded by it.
He who advances toward Tao seems retreating from it.
He who follows plain Tao seems treading on rugged ground.
Superior virtue appears to be hollow.
Perfect purity appears to be tainted.
Vast virtue appears to be inadequate.
Solid virtue appears to be infirm.
Genuine substance appears to be spurious.
Vast space is devoid of corners.
Great talent is late in maturing.
A high note can hardly be heard.
The Great Form has no sign.
Tao is hidden and has no name;

Yet only Tao excels in contributing to achievement.

[41c39t] Ha Poong Kim

When the highest type of man hears Tao,
He practices it diligently.
When the middle type hears Tao,
He half believes and half disbelieves it.
When the lowest type hears Tao,
He laughs out loud.
If he didn't,
It couldn't possibly be considered Tao.
Therefore the Chien yen has it:
"The bright Tao looks dark;
The forward-moving Tao seems retreating;
The level Tao seems bumpy;
The highest Te is like a valley;
Perfect white looks soiled;
The broad Te seems insufficient;
The firm Te seems precarious;
The pure Te seems discolored;
The great square has no corners;
The great vessel takes long to complete;
The great sound is inaudible;
The great form is shapeless."
Tao is hidden and nameless.
Truly, Tao alone supports [all things] and brings them to completion.

[41c40t] Tao Huang

When eminent persons hear of Tao,
They practice it faithfully;
When average persons hear of Tao,
It seems that they practice it, and it seems they do not;
When inferior persons hear of Tao,
They ridicule it.
Without such ridicule, it would not be Tao.
Thus, the aphorism that suggests the way is:
Knowing the Tao seems costly.
Entering Tao seems like retreating.
Becoming equal with Tao gives birth to paradoxes.
Eminent action is like a valley.
Complete understanding resembles being disgraced.
Vast action seems yielding.
Action that builds up seems remiss.
Pure integrity seems perverse.
The great square has no angles.
The great talent matures late.

The Tao is praised but is unnameable.
Only Tao is good at beginning and good at completion.

The superior scholar hears of Dao, he may devote himself to it and follow it;
the average scholar hears of Dao, he sometimes understands it and sometimes he ignores it;
and the inferior scholar hears of Dao, he greatly ridicules it.
If it is not superior, it would not be Dao.
Thus, there are sayings in the Book of Establishment:
Enlightened Dao looks as if obscured;
advanced Dao looks as if retreating and the smooth way of Dao looks as if rugged;
high virtue looks as if common;
the superior distinction may seem indistinct;
abundant virtue looks as if insufficient;
vigorous virtue looks as if easy-going and pure virtue looks as if stupidity.
The superior square may seem to be cornerless.
The superior personality may be established late.
The superior sound may have no way to be heard.
The superior model may seem to be insignificant.
The function of Dao has no name.
It is Dao - the impartial law of nature that knows best how to help and accomplish.

[41c42t] Wing-tsit Chan

Therefore there is the established saying:
The Tao which is bright appears to be dark.
The Tao which goes forward appears to fall backward.
The Tao which is level appears uneven.
Great virtue appears like a valley (hollow).
Great purity appears like disgrace.
Far-reaching virtue appears as if insufficient.
Solid virtue appears as if unsteady.
True substance appears to be changeable.

Yet it is Tao alone that skillfully provides for all and brings them to perfection.

[41c91t] И. И. Семененко
Высший из мужей, слыша о Дао, усердно претворяет его в жизнь;
средний из мужей, слыша о Дао, пребывает в замешательстве;
низший из мужей, слыша о Дао, над ним насмехается.
Над чем не смеялись бы, то не было бы Дао.
Поэтому есть веские суждения.
Дао уясняют, словно помрачаются;
по нему идут вперед, как пятятся назад;
оно ровно, будто все в ухабах;
верх добродетели напоминает впадину долины;
пречистое походит на запятнанное;
бескрайность добродетели уподобляется изъяну;
добродетель делают незыблемой как бы невзначай;
безыскусная правдивость кажется чем-то превратным.
У великого квадрата нет углов, великое изделие не скоро создается,
великая мелодия является беззвучной,
великий образ не имеет формы.
Дао скрытно, у него нет имени, но лишь оно умеет дать взаймы и довести до самого конца.

[41c92t] А. А. Маслов
Когда муж высоких способностей слышит о Дао, он усердно следует ему.
Когда муж средних способностей слышит о Дао, он порой сохраняет его, порой утрачивает.
Когда муж низких способностей слышит о Дао, он громко смеётся над ним.
Если бы над ним не смеялись, было бы недостаточно, чтобы оно считалось истинным Дао.
Поэтому "Извечные суждения" гласят:
"Пресветлое Дао кажется тёмным.
Дао, ведущее вперёд, кажется влекущим назад.
Обыденное Дао кажется исключительным.
Высшая Благость подобна долине.
Великая белизна кажется покрытой пятнами.
Всеохватная Благость кажется недостаточной.
Подлинная Благость кажется сокрытой.
Извечная истина кажется пустой.
Великий квадрат не имеет углов.
Великий сосуд долог в изготовлении.
Великий Звук не часто услышишь.
Великий Образ не имеет формы".
Дао потаённо и безымянно.
И лишь потому, что это - Дао, оно может быть совершенным и в воздаянии, и в воплощении.

[41c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Когда муж высшего ума о Дао слышит, то стремится с усердием осуществлять его.
Когда муж среднего ума о Дао слышит, то сомневается - то ли оно есть, то ли его и нет вовсе.

Когда муж низшего ума о Дао слышит, то над ним смеется громко!
И если бы тот хохот не раздался, оно бы недостойно было Дао, Путем Великим, называться!
Поэтому попробую связать слова, чтобы сказать об этом:
Прозрение Дао - словно омрачение, приближение к нему - словно отступление от него,
ровная поверхность Пути - как кочки и ухабы;
высшее Благо-Дэ - словно ложбина, белизна великая - как очернение,
обширность Силы Благостной - как недостаток, утвержденная Благая Сила - словно ослабленная,
незапятнанное существо истины - как загрязненное.
Великий квадрат не имеет углов,
великий сосуд изготовляется последним,
голос великого звука столь утончен,
великий образ не имеет телесной формы и само Дао сокрыто в безымянности своей.
О, только Дао-Путь хорош бывает и вначале, и при завершении!

[41c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Муж высокой учености, услышав о Дао, усердно следует ему.
Муж средней учености, услышав о Дао, то сохраняет, то теряет его.
Муж низкой учености, услышав о Дао, громко насмехается над ним.
Не осмеяв, и не будет считать за Дао, ибо среди незыблемых суждений есть таковые:
Светлое Дао подобно темному.
Наступающее Дао подобно отступающему.
Совершенное Дао подобно ущербному.
Верхнее Дэ подобно [нижнему] руслу.
Громкая слава подобна позору.
Обширное Дэ подобно недостаточному.
Закрытое Дэ подобно похищенному.
Чистая правда подобна мутной смеси.
Великий квадрат не имеет углов.
Великие замыслы рождаются в сумерки.
Великий звук не громогласен.
Великий образ не имеет формы.
Дао сокрыто и безымянно.
Только Дао одаривает добротой и завершается [природой].

[41c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Человек высшей учености, узнав о дао, стремится к его осуществлению.
Человек средней учености, узнав о дао, то соблюдает его, то его нарушает.
Человек низшей учености, узнав о дао, подвергает его насмешке.
Если оно не подвергалось бы насмешке, не являлось бы дао.
Поэтому существует поговорка:
кто узнает дао, похож на темного;
кто проникает в дао, похож на отступающего;
кто на высоте дао, похож на заблуждающегося;

человек высшей добродетели похож на простого;
великий просвещенный похож на презираемого;
безграничная добродетельность похожа на ее недостаток;
распространение добродетельности похоже на ее расхищение;
истинная правда похожа на ее отсутствие.
Великий квадрат не имеет углов;
большой сосуд долго изготовляется;
сильный звук нельзя услышать;
великий образ не имеет формы.
Дао скрыто [от нас] и не имеет имени.
Но только оно способно помочь [всем существам] и привести их к совершенству.

[41c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Когда ученый услышит о Тао, то будет стараться осуществить услышанное (в жизни).
Когда человек средней руки услышит о Тао, то не будет соблюдать его до конца жизни.
Когда малоученый услышит о Тао, то он будет глумиться над ним.
Если бы над ним не глумились, то оно и не заслужило бы имени Тао.
Поэтому сказано следующее:
Тот, кто разумеет очевидное Тао, кажется облеченным мраком;
тот, кто идет вперед, держась Тао, кажется идущим назад;
тот, кто на высоте Тао, кажется обыкновенным смертным.
Человек высшей добродетели похож на долину.
Человек высшей чистоты похож на презираемого.
Человек высшей нравственности похож на неспособного.
Совершающий добродетель похож на вора.
Испытывающий правду похож на похищающего вещи.
У большого четырехугольника не видно углов.
Большой сосуд не скоро делается.
Самый громкий голос не слышен.
Большое изображение не имеет никакой формы.
Тао скрыто от нас, поэтому оно не имеет имени.
Оно снабжает все существа (силой) и ведет их к усовершенствованию.

[41c97t] В. В. Малявин
Высшие люди, узнав о Пути, являют усердие и претворяют его.
Обычные люди, узнав о Пути, отчасти следуют ему, отчасти нет.
Низшие люди, узнав о Пути, громко смеются над ним.
Если б они не смеялись, это не был бы Путь.
А потому издавна говорят так:
Пресветлый Путь кажется мраком.
Путь, ведущий вперед, кажется отступлением.
Ровный Путь самый труднопроходимый.
Высшее Совершенство подобно долине.
Великая чистота кажется позором.
Беспредельное совершенство кажется ущербностью.
Незыблемое совершенство кажется потворством.

Настоящая искренность кажется притворством.
Великий квадрат не имеет углов.
Великий сосуд делается всего дольше.
Великая музыка слышна всего меньше.
Великий образ не имеет формы.
Но только Великий Путь сокрыт и безымянен,
Он все дает и все завершает.

[41c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Высший воин, внимая Пути, усердно движется по нему.
Средний воин, внимая Пути, то хранит, то утрачивает.
Низший воин, внимая Пути, громко смеется над ним.
Если не будет смеяться, не сможет осуществлять Путь.
Причинность:
Об этом говорится в устойчивых выражениях.
Просветление Пути отражается в тьме.
Продвижение по Пути отражается в отступлении.
Равномерность Пути отражается в изъянах.
Ориентацию вверх Потенции отражает долина.
Великая белизна отражается в сраме.
Обширная Потенция отражается в недостаточности.
Напряженность Потенции отражается в халатности.
Простейшая истина отражается в текучести.
В большом квадрате - отсутствие углов.
Для большого инструмента - позднее завершение.
В большом звуке - разреженность голоса.
Большой образ - отсутствие формы.
Путь сокрыт в отсутствии имени.
Ведь только на Пути, совершенствуясь в зачине, еще и завершают.

[42c01t] Robert G. Henricks

The Way gave birth to the One.
The One gave birth to the Two.
The Two gave birth to the Three.
And the Three gave birth to {the ten thousand things}.
{The ten thousand things carry Yin on their backs and wrap their arms around Yang}.
Through the blending of ch'i they arrive at a state of harmony.
The things that are hated by the whole world
Are to be orphaned, widowed, and have no grain.
Yet kings and dukes take these as their names.
Thus with all things - some {are increased} by taking away;
While some are diminished by {adding on}.
Therefore, {what} other men teach,
[I] will also consider and then teach to others.
Thus, "The strong and violent do not come to a natural end."
I will take this as the father of my studies.

[42c02t] John C. H. Wu

TAO gave birth to One,
One gave birth to Two,
Two gave birth to Three,
Three gave birth to all the myriad things.
All the myriad things carry the Yin on their backs and hold the Yang in their embrace,
Deriving their vital harmony from the proper blending of the two vital Breaths.
What is more loathed by men than to be "helpless," "little," and "worthless"?
And yet these are the very names the princes and barons call themselves.
Truly, one may gain by losing;
And one may lose by gaining.
What another has taught let me repeat:
"A man of violence will come to a violent end."
Whoever said this can be my teacher and my father.

[42c03t] D. C. Lau

The way begets one;
One begets two;
Two begets three;
Three begets the myriad creatures.
The myriad creatures carry on their backs the yin and embrace in their arms the yang and are the blending of the generative forces of the two.
There are no words which men detest more than 'solitary', 'desolate', and 'hapless', yet lords and princes use these to refer to themselves.
Thus a thing is sometimes added to by being diminished and diminished by being added to.

Underdog_way.pdf, revision 8, sanmayce@hotmail.com, a corpus of 50(42 english, 8 russian) proofed(many originals' bugs crushed) translations of 老子道德經 or Lao Zi Dao De Jing

What others teach I also teach.
'The violent will not come to a natural end.'
I shall take this as my precept.

[42c04t] R. L. Wing
The Tao produced the One.
The One produced the Two.
The Two produced the Three.
The Three produced All Things.
All Things carry Yin and hold to Yang;
Their blended Influence brings Harmony.
People hate to be alone, lonely, and unfavored;
And yet leaders take these names.
Thus in Natural Law
Some lose and in this way profit.
Some profit and in this way lose.
What others have taught, I also teach:
Those who are violent do not die naturally.
I will make this my chief teaching.

[42c05t] Ren Jiyu
Tao gives birth to the unified thing (One),
The One splits itself into two opposite aspects (Two),
The Two gives birth to another (Three),
The newborn Third produces a myriad of things.
The myriad of things contain the Yin and Yang within themselves as opposite forces,
Both of them (Yin and Yang) are unified with harmony in the invisible breath.
People disdain the "orphaned," "solitary" or "unworthy,"
And yet they are the very names by which kings and dukes call themselves.
Therefore all things may increase when purposely diminished,
And they may diminish when increased.
What people teach each other, I also teach:
"The violent and strong does not die his natural death,"
I will make that fact the beginning of my teaching.

[42c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The Tao begot one.
One begot two.
Two begot three.
And three begot the ten thousand things.
The ten thousand things carry yin and embrace yang.
They achieve harmony by combining these forces.
Men hate to be "orphaned," "widowed," or "worthless,"
But this is how kings and lords describe themselves.
For one gains by losing
And loses by gaining.

What others teach, I also teach; that is:
"A violent man will die a violent death!"
This will be the essence of my teaching.

[42c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Dao gives birth to the One.
The One gives birth to the Two(yin and yang).
The Two give birth to the Three(heaven, earth, and man).
The Three give birth to all things as we know them.
All living things bear the female nature
And espouse the male nature.
In interacting with each other these two natures result in a new harmony.
It is well known that people generally hate to be lonely, widowed, or under-provided.
Yet kings and people who wield power
call themselves lonely, widowed, or under-provided.
Things may benefit people through imposing losses on them,
And may hurt them through bestowing apparent benefits.
I teach the same kind of people that others teach.
But by a single maxim that I teach, that "Those who use sheer force to make their ways
Will not die a good death"
I should become the teacher of all teachers.

[42c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The DAO produces ONE;
ONE produces the YIN and YANG (TWO),
the YIN and YANG produce harmonic spirit (THREE),
harmonic spirit produces everything.
Everything is based on the YIN-YANG and is filled with harmonic spirit.
The things people dislike the most are the singles, the widowers, and the unkind.
However, the kings call themselves these bad names.
So, things sometimes get hurt but benefit, sometimes benefit but get hurt.
What others taught me I will now teach you: The bullies will die unnaturally.
I treat this as the base of my teaching.

[42c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE CHANGES OF TAO
Tao emaned the One; the one emaned the Two; and the two emaned the Three.
From the Three all things have proceeded.
All things are backed by the Unmanifest and faced by the Manifest.
That which unites them is the immaterial breath.
Orphanage, isolation, and a chariot without wheels are shunned by the people; but kings and great men appropriate these names to themselves.
For things are increased by being deprived; and being added to they are diminished.
That which people teach by their actions I make use of to instruct them.

Those who are violent and headstrong, for example, do not die a natural death.
They teach a good lesson, and so I make use of them.

[42c10t] James Legge
The Tao produced One;
One produced Two;
Two produced Three;
Three produced All things.
All things leave behind them the Obscurity (out of which they have come), and go forward to embrace the Brightness (into which they have emerged), while they are harmonised by the Breath of Vacancy.
What men dislike is to be orphans, to have little virtue, to be as carriages without naves; and yet these are the designations which kings and princes use for themselves.
So it is that some things are increased by being diminished, and others are diminished by being increased.
What other men (thus) teach, I also teach.
The violent and strong do not die their natural death.
I will make this the basis of my teaching.

[42c11t] David Hinton
Way gave birth to one,
and one gave birth to two.
Two gave birth to three,
and three gave birth to the ten thousand things.
Then the ten thousand things shouldered yin and embraced yang, blending ch'i to establish harmony.
People all hate scraping by orphaned, destitute, ill-fated, but true dukes and emperors call themselves just that.
Some things gain by loss, and some lose by gain.
I only teach
what the people teach:
Tyranny and force never come to a natural end.
I've taken the people as my schoolmaster.

[42c12t] Chichung Huang
The Tao generated one;
One generated two;
Two generated three;
Three generated the ten thousand things.
The ten thousand things,
Carrying yin and embracing yang,
Used the empty vapor to achieve harmony.
What people loathe most are
Inadequacy, deficiency and unworthiness,
Yet, kings and dukes use them
To refer to themselves.
People sometimes gain through losing;
Sometimes lose through gaining.

Therefore, what kings teach,
I also choose to teach kings:
"A brute does not die a natural death."
I shall use it as the father of learning.

[42c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Tao gives birth to one,
One gives birth to two,
Two gives birth to three,
Three gives birth to ten thousand beings.
Ten thousand beings carry yin on their backs and embrace yang in their front,
Blending these two vital breaths (ch'i) to attain harmony (ho).
What people hate most,
Are to be orphaned, widowed and unworthy.
Yet kings and dukes call themselves by these.
Thus things are either decreased so as to be increased,
Or increased (i) so as to be decreased (sun).
What others teach,
I also teach:
"The strong and violent (ch'iang liang) do not die a natural death."
This I shall hold as the father (fu) of my teaching.

[42c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
In the beginning, Tao is Oneness [per se];
Out of Oneness [after the inner split] twofold [contrasts, such as odd and even or steeliness and flexibility] were originated;
From these twofold threefold (odd, even and odd-even) were brought into existence;
Thence myriad things and creatures evolved ad infinitum through [combination] of threefold (odd, even and odd-even).
All things and creatures hold inwardly propensities (Yin), while they carry outwardly manifestations (Yang);
These two forces are amalgamated and harmonized [within a person to form his personal] bearings (vitality).
Therefore, the weakening of [either steeliness or flexibility elements] from a thing (project) may benefit it;
The strengthening [of either steeliness and flexibility elements] from a thing (project) may damage it. [It all depends on circumstances].
My teaching is the unified theory based on my knowledge of [various] learnings of our forefathers taught to me [by scholars in court];
[My motto is] "One who imposes his way by force to sit on top of others will die of unnatural causes (by violence)."
I shall always adopt this as the guideline of my teaching.

[42c15t] Tien Cong Tran

They are harmony with each other because of these two null ethers.
What is more loathed by men than to be "solitary," "little," and "worthless"?
Yet these are the very names the kings and lords call themselves.
Therefore, one may gain by losing; and one may lose by gaining.
What ancients taught I repeat: "A man of violence will die an unnatural death."
Whoever said this is my teacher.

[42c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Tao produce unity.
Unity splits into two.
Two gives birth to three.
Three produces everything.
Everything carries Yin and embraces Yang.
Yin and Yang work together makes harmony.
Loneliness, friendlessness, and worthlessness are generally disliked.
Yet, kings and lords use these terms to describe themselves.
Things can benefit from damages.
Things can also be damaged from benefits.
Therefore, I can teach what the other taught me:
Those who act against the law of the Nature will never get what they want.
This is a basic principle for me to teach.

[42c17t] Arthur Waley
Tao gave birth to the One; the One gave birth successively to two things, three things, up to ten thousand.
These ten thousand creatures cannot turn their backs to the shade without having the sun on their bellies, and it is on this blending of the breaths that their harmony depends.
To be orphaned, needy, ill-provided is what men most hate; yet princes and dukes style themselves so.
Truly, 'things are often increased by seeking to diminish them and diminished by seeking to increase them.'
The maxims that others use in their teaching I too will use in mine.
Show me a man of violence that came to a good end, and I will take him for my teacher.

[42c18t] Richard John Lynn
The Dao begets the One;
the One begets two;
two beget three;
and three beget the myriad things.
The myriad things, bearing yin and embracing yang, form a unified harmony through the fusing of these vital forces.
What people most hate are "the orphan," "the widower," and "the unworthy," yet lords and princes use these terms to refer to themselves.
Thus it is that some are augmented by being diminished, and others are diminished by being augmented.
What others teach, I also teach.
The dangerously bold do not get to die a natural death, so I am going to use them as the fathers of my teaching.

THE VIOLENT MAN
Out of Tao, One is born;
Out of One, Two;
Out of Two, Three;
Out of Three, the created universe.
The created universe carries the yin at its back and the yang in front;
Through the union of the pervading principles it reaches harmony.
To be "orphaned," "lonely" and "unworthy" is what men hate most.
Yet the princes and dukes call themselves by such names.
For sometimes things are benefited by being taken away from,
And suffer by being added to.
Others have taught this maxim,
Which I shall teach also:
"The violent man shall die a violent death."
This I shall regard as my spiritual teacher.

[42c20t] Victor H. Mair
The Way gave birth to unity,
Unity gave birth to duality,
Duality gave birth to trinity,
Trinity gave birth to the myriad creatures.
The myriad creatures bear yin on their backs and embrace yang in their bosoms.
They neutralize these vapors and thereby achieve harmony.
That which all under heaven hate most
Is to be orphaned, destitute, and hapless.
Yet kings and dukes call themselves thus.
Things may be diminished by being increased, increased by being diminished.
Therefore,
That which people teach,
After deliberation, I also teach people.
Therefore,
"The tyrant does not die a natural death."
I take this as my mentor.

[42c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The Tao gives birth to the One.
The One gives birth to two.
Two gives birth to three.
And three gives birth to the ten thousand things.
The ten thousand things have their backs in the shadow while they embrace the light.
Harmony is achieved by blending the breaths of these two forces.
People dislike the words "alone," "helpless," "worthless," yet this is how Princes describe themselves.
So it is that sometimes a thing is increased by being diminished and diminished by being increased.
What others teach I also teach:
"A violent person will not die a natural death."

I shall make this the basis of my teaching.

[42c22t] David H. Li
From Direction, One is born.
From One, Two is born.
From Two, Three is born.
From Three, myriad matters are born.
Myriad matters turn their backs on yin and embrace yang.
The complement of their energy produces harmony.
What people dislike are loneliness, isolation, and ungraciousness, yet this is how Dukes and Princes self-address.
Thus, a matter expands through contraction;
contracts through expansion.
This is what others have taught me;
let me teach others the same: "A violent person does not die in place."
This is the theme of my teaching.

[42c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The Tao, the wholeness, gives rise to oneness.
Oneness gives rise to complementary unity.
Complementary unity gives rise to complementary trinity.
Complementary trinity gives rise to everything in existence.
Everything consists of the complementarity of yang in the center and yin surrounding it.
From the balanced interchange between the two arises equilibrium in disequilibrium.
Ordinary people hate nothing more than to be powerless, unworthy, or destitute.
Yet this is what people in high position call themselves.
This means, in accordance with the principle of complementarity,
That to lose is to gain and to gain is to lose.
Let me repeat what others have taught:
The strong and violent, being out of balance, do not die natural deaths.
This is the very foundation of my teaching.

[42c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Your reputation or your person, which is closer to you?
Your person or your property, which is dearer to you?
Profit or loss, which is worse for you?
Over-eagerness leads to over-spending.
Too much property leads to too much loss.
Therefore, the person who is content with his lot will not know disgrace,
And the person who knows where to stop will never disappear,
He will exist forever.

The Three give birth to every living thing.
All things are held in yin, and carry yang:
And they are held together in the ch'i of teeming energy.

[42c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The Tao begets the One;
The One consists of Two in opposition (the Yin and Yang);
The Two begets the Three;
The Three begets all things of the world.
All things connote the Yin and Yang.
The Yin and Yang keep acting upon each other
And thus things keep changing and unifying themselves.
Words like "the solitary", "the few" and "the unkind"
Are usually detested by people,
Yet lords and kings use them to call themselves.
That is why
A thing is sometimes added to when being reduced,
Or is reduced when being added to.
So I teach what I am taught:
"The violent will not come to a good end."
This I will take as the first lesson when I teach.

[42c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The Tao bears the 'One'.
The 'One' bears the 'Two'.
The 'Two' bears the 'Three'.
The 'Three' bears the myriad creatures.
The myriad creatures carry yin and embrace yang, which both melt into 'chi' - the energy of life - to achieve harmony.
People detest above all orphanhood and widowhood, yet the rulers use these titles to describe themselves.
That is why in losing much is gained, and in gaining much is lost.
What others teach, I teach also:
He who is a ferocious adversary does nothing else but cause his own death.
With these words I will maintain my teaching.

[42c28t] Liu Qixuan
The Way produces one.
One produces two.
Two produces three.
Three produces everything.
Everything has polar elements in it
That interact to achieve harmony.
People all hate being isolated, helpless and wicked,
But kings use these words as their titles.
Therefore, things can gain from losses
And can lose because of gainings.

Violent Man's Fate
Lao Tze says,
From Tao arises one;
from one arises two;
from two arises three, and from three arise all things.
All things leave behind them the obscurity (Ying), and go forward to embrace the brightness (Yang) and inherit the blending property of the two harmonized polarities.
What men dislike is to be called solitary, unworthy, virtueless;
and yet those kings and princes regard them matching to their status.
So those things are benefitted by being harmed, others are harmed by being benefitted.
While other men have taught their precept, I have my own,
- the violent man shall die a violent death.
I will make this the basis of my teaching.

[42c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Tao begets One; one begets two; two begets three; three begets all things.
All things are backed by the Shade (yin) and faced by the Light (yang), and harmonized by the immaterial Breath (ch'i).
What others teach, I also teach:
'The daring and violent do not die a natural death.'
This (maxim) I shall regard as my instructor.

[42c31t] Paul J. Lin
Tao begets One.
One begets Two.
Two begets Three.
Three begets all things.
All things carry the female and embrace the male.
And by breathing together, they live in harmony.
What the people hate is being orphaned, widowed, and starved.
But kings and dukes call themselves these names.
Therefore everything can be augmented when diminished, and diminished when augmented.
What the people teach, I teach too.
The violent and fierce cannot die a natural death.
I will become the father of teaching.

Three produced the thousands of things.
The thousands of things:
Turn their backs on the quiet and dark,
and embrace the aggressive and bright.
An Empty ch'i brings Harmony.
What people look down upon:
to be orphaned, poor, destitute.
But the kings and princes make these names into titles.
Yes, things:
Sometimes you reduce them, and they are enlarged;
sometimes you enlarge them, and they are reduced.
What another has taught, I also teach:
"A violent man will not reach his natural end."
I will make of this the father of my teaching.

[42c33t] Cheng Lin
Truth gave birth to one;
one gave birth to two;
two gave birth to three;
three gave birth to the multitude of things which attain the state of harmony when the opposite elements of Ying and Yang are mingled in a well-balanced manner.
Men dislike to be called "The Virtueless" or "The Unworthy."
But these are the names with which the sovereigns style themselves.
Hence, a thing may seem diminished when it is actually augmented, and it may seem augmented when it is actually diminished.
What other men teach, I also teach:
"The violent and overbearing men will die an unnatural death."
This will form the main theme of my teaching.

Dao engenders one. (Tai-chi)
One engenders two. (Yin and Yang)
Two engenders three. (combinations of Yin and Yang)
Three engenders everything.
Everything carries Yin and embraces Yang.
The mixing of Yin and Yang becomes an entity.
People dislike words like orphaned, widowed and unworthy.
Nevertheless, the lords use these terms as their titles.
An affair may finally turn out well despite a very bad start.
Conversely, it could turn out badly with a good start.
That is what I have learnt: nothing is certain in life.
I will use this to teach others.
However, I will still use
"Those who resort to violence will die by violence" as my principal teaching.

[42c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The universal subtle essence gave birth to One.
One gave birth to Two.
Two gave birth to Three.
Three gave birth to the Myriad Things.
All lives have their backs to the yin and embrace the yang.
There is nothing more loathed by people than to be orphaned, desolate, and hapless.
Yet the wise ancient kings, princes, and barons used such titles to refer to themselves.
A thing is sometimes benefitted by being humbled, and diminished by being expanded.
What the ancients have taught, I also shall teach:
"A man of force and violence will come to a violent end."
Whoever said this can be my teacher and father.

[42c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
From the Tao, one is created;
From one, two;
From two, three;
From three, ten thousand things.
All of them achieve harmony through the unification of affirmation and negation
Which is embraced by everything.
No one likes to be isolated (ku), without merit (kua), or worthless (pu ku),
Yet rulers refer to themselves with these names.
Thus, some things add to their value by reducing their value.
Some things reduce their value by adding to their value.

This is a basic motto.

Tao Hua
Tao gave birth to One;
One gave birth to Two;
Two gave birth to Three;
Three gave birth to the ten thousand things.
The ten thousand things carry Yin and embrace Yang.
The two primordial breaths blend and produce harmony.
To be orphaned or lonely or unworthy
Is what all people detest;
Yet kings and nobles apply those terms to themselves.
Indeed, things sometimes benefit by an intended injury,
And sometimes receive injury from an intended benefit.
What others teach, I shall also teach:
"The strong and violent will die an unnatural death."
This will serve as my chief lesson.

[42c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Tao gives birth to One;
One gives birth to Two;
Two give birth to Three,
Three give birth to the ten thousand things.
The ten thousand things carry the yin on their backs and hold the yang in their arms;
And attain harmony through the blending of the two energies.
What people detest most
Is to be orphaned, widowed and ill-provided.
But that is how kings and princes call themselves.
Therefore, of things, some gain by losing,
Some lose by gaining.
What others teach
I also teach.
"The violent one will not attain his death."
I will take this to be my teacher.

[42c40t] Tao Huang
Tao gives rise to one.
One gives rise to two.
Two gives rise to three.
Three gives rise to all things.
All things carry yin and embrace yang,
Drawing Chi together into harmony.
What the world hates is the widow and orphan without support.
But lords and rulers name themselves these.
Do not seek gain from losing, nor loss from gaining.
What people teach, after discussion becomes doctrine.
Those who excel in strength do not prevail over death.
I would use this as the father of teaching.

Dao gave birth to One - Existence: Heaven;
One gave birth to Two - Coexistence: Heaven and Earth;
Two gave birth to Three: Heaven, Earth and Life;
and Three gave birth to All Things.
All Things are sustained by Yin - the inactive cosmic gas, and are embraced by Yang - the active cosmic gas.
To produce these gases into orderly use is to harmonize them.
What the people hate are: "orphanhood", "widowhood" and "indigence".
Yet these terms are used as designations by rulers.
Materialistically, one may gain by losing,
Similarly, one may lose by gaining.
What people preach I also preach.
Then I shall be the master of preaching.
A violent person cannot die a natural death.

[42c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Tao produced the One.
The One produced the two.
The two produced the three.
And the three produced the ten thousand things.
The ten thousand things carry the yin and embrace the yang, and through the blending of the material force they achieve harmony.
People hate to be children without parents, lonely people without spouses, or men without food to eat,
And yet kings and lords call themselves by these names.
Therefore it is often the case that things gain by losing and lose by gaining.
What others have taught, I teach also:
"Violent and fierce people do not die a natural death."
I shall make this the father of my teaching.

Дао порождает единицу, единица родит двойку,
два рождает тройку,
три дает жизнь десяти тысячам вещей.
Все вещи, прислоняясь спиной к Тени (Инь), обнимают Свет (Ян), и дыхание (ци) пустоты приводит их к гармонии.
Что людям ненавистно - это оказаться "сирым", "вдовым" и "убогим", но так зовут себя цари с князьями.
Выходит, что ущербность может доставлять прибыток, прибыток - приносить ущерб.
Такое наставление я получаю от людей.
И я их тоже наставляю: за произвол, насилие ждет преждевременная смерть.
Это будет моим самым главным наставлением.

Одно порождает два.
Два порождает три.
Три порождает мириады существ.
Мириады существ несут в себе инь и объемлют ян, а пустотное ци приводит их в гармонию.
Нет слов, которых бы человек страшился больше, чем "сирый", "покинутый", "неудачник".
А ведь знать и правители именно так называют себя.
Поэтому вещи то принижаются, возвышаясь, то возвышаются, принижаясь.
Тому, чему учат другие, учу и я: "Сильные и жестокие не умирают своей смертью", считаю это своим первейшим наставлением.

[42c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Дао рождает Одно.
Одно Двоих рождает.
Двое рождают Трех.
Трое рождают все сущее.
Все сущее носит на себе инь - силу темную и обнимает ян - силу светлую, так достигая гармонии энергий жизни и сил равновесия.
Теми именами, что люди так не любят: "сирыми", "одинокими", "недостойными", - цари и правящие князья сами себя зовут.
Поэтому таков существования принцип: вещь, умаляясь, возрастает, а возрастая - умаляется.
Тому же я учу, чему все люди учат: "Насильник и тиран своей не умирает смертью".
Вот мудрость эту я и сделаю своим учителем.

Два рождает три.
Три рождает десять тысяч вещей.
Вещи несут за плечами инь и на руках держат ян.
Пустота-энергия образует [условие их] гармонии (согласия).
То, что люди ненавидят, это быть сирыми, одинокими, несчастными.
А ваны и гуны называют себя так.
Это потому, что из вещей одни, ослабляя себя, усиливают себя, другие, усиливая себя, ослабляют себя.
Чему надо научить людей, тому именно я и учу.
Тот же, кто препятствует [этому], не умирает своей смертью.
Я вскоре стану Отцом Учения.

[42c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Дао рождает одно, одно рождает два, два рождают три, а три рождают все существа.
Все существа носят в себе инь и ян, наполнены ци и образуют гармонию.
Люди не любят [имена] "одинокий", "сирый", "несчастливый".
Между тем гуны и ваны этими [именами] называют себя.
Поэтому вещи возвышаются, когда их принижают, и принижаются, когда их возвышают.
Чему учат люди, тому обучаю и я:
сильные и жестокие не умирают своей смертью.

Этим я руководствуюсь в своем обучении.

[42c96t] Д. П. Конисси

Тао произвело одно, одно - два, два - три, а три - все вещи.
Всякая вещь носит на себе инь и заключает в себе ян.
Находящийся в исступленном состоянии легко умиротворяется.
Люди ненавидят тех, которые оставляют сирот и бедняков без помощи.
Поэтому умные цари и князья помогают сиротам и беднякам; они же сделаются предметом похвалы (народа).
Потеря есть начало размножения, множество - начало потери.
Чему другие учили и учат по справедливости, тому и я учу людей.
Очень сильный не умирает естественною смертью.
Я сделаюсь отцом учения.

[42c97t] В. В. Малявин

Путь рождает Одно,
Одно рождает Два,
Два рождает Три,
А Три рождает всю тьму вещей.
Все вещи несут в себе Инь и обнимают Ян,
Пустотное дыхание приводит их к согласию.
То, чего люди не любят, -
Это быть "сиротой", "одиноким", "беспомощным",
Но так называют себя цари и князья.
Посему тот, кто теряет, порою приобретает,
А кто приобретает - тот теряет.
Чему люди учили, я тоже учу:
"Злой и сильный умрет не своей смертью".
Пусть это будет мне отцом моих поучений.

[42c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский

Путь рождает один.
Один рождает два.
Два рождает три.
Три рождает мириады сущностей.
Для мириад сущностей то, что давит на спину - Инь, а что обнимают спереди - Ян.
Через срединность дыхания-ци осуществляют гармонию.
Люди в первую очередь не любят быть сирыми, вдовыми, не-прикаянными, а правители и удельные князья так и называют себя.
Причинность:
Для сущности и убыль может обернуться прибылью.
А может и прибыль обернуться убылью.
Чему люди учат, тому учу и я.
Коль сильный хребет, то умрешь, так и не обретя.
Сущность моя - это и делает родителем своего учения.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Three

[43c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The softest, most pliable thing in the world runs roughshod over the firmest thing in the world.
That which has no substance gets into that which has no spaces or cracks.
I therefore know {that there is} benefit in taking no action.
The {wordless} teaching, the benefit of taking no action -
Few in the world can realize these!

[43c02t] John C. H. Wu
THE softest of all things
Overrides the hardest of all things.
Only Nothing can enter into no-space.
Hence I know the advantages of Non-Ado.
Few things under heaven are as instructive as the lessons of Silence,
Or as beneficial as the fruits of Non-Ado.

[43c03t] D. C. Lau
The most submissive thing in the world can ride roughshod over the hardest in the world -
That which is without substance entering that which has no crevices.
That is why I know the benefit of resorting to no action.
The teaching that uses no words, the benefit of resorting to no action, these are beyond the understanding of all but a very few in the world.

[43c04t] R. L. Wing
The most yielding parts of the world
Overtake the most rigid parts of the world.
The insubstantial can penetrate continually.
Therefore I know that without action there is advantage.
This philosophy without words,
This advantage without action -
It is rare, in the world, to attain them.

[43c05t] Ren Jiyu
The softest thing under Heaven is able to run in and out of the hardest.
The invisible force is able to penetrate that in which there is no crevice.
Thereby I come to know the advantage of doing nothing.
The instructiveness of not speaking and the benefits of nonaction are incomparable under Heaven.

[43c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The softest thing in the universe
Overcomes the hardest thing in the universe.
That without substance can enter where there is no room.
Hence I know the value of non-action.

Teaching without words and work without doing
Are understood by very few.

[43c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The most gentle and the most flexible of the world
Certainly outperforms the strongest and the hardest.
What appears intangible and without substance
Can penetrate the narrowest gaps.
From this we can appreciate the benefits of not contriving.
The wordless teaching, and the benefits of not contriving,
Certainly find no match under heaven.

[43c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The DAO is the softest thing in the world,
But it can ride freely into the hardest places,
And there is nowhere it cannot go.
I thus know the benefits of WUWEI.
The DAO educates without lecturing, benefits with WUWEI;
There is nothing in the world that can compare with the DAO.

[43c09t] Walter Gorn Old, UNLIMITED USEFULNESS
The gentlest thing in the world will override the strongest.
The Non-Existent pervades everything, though there be no inlet.
By this I comprehend how effectual is non-action.
To teach without words and to be useful without action, few among men are capable of this.

[43c10t] James Legge
The softest thing in the world dashes against and overcomes the hardest; that which has no (substantial) existence enters where there is no crevice.
I know hereby what advantage belongs to doing nothing (with a purpose).
There are few in the world who attain to the teaching without words, and the advantage arising from non-action.

[43c11t] David Hinton
The weakest in all beneath heaven gallops through the strongest, and vacant absence slips inside solid presence.
I know by this the value of nothing's own doing.
The teaching without words, the value of nothing's own doing: few indeed master such things.

[43c12t] Chichung Huang
The softest under heaven
Gallops over the hardest under heaven;
The formless penetrates into the spaceless.
I thereby know the benefit of nonaction.
The edification of speechlessness
The benefit of nonaction -

Nothing under heaven can match it.

[43c13t] Ellen M. Chen
The softest (chih jou) in the world,
Gallops (ch'ih ch'eng) in the hardest (chih chien) in the world.
That which is not penetrates that which has no crevice (wu yu ju wu chien).
I thereby know the benefit of no-action (wu-wei).
The teaching without words,
The benefit of no-action,
Hardly anything in the world can compare with them.

[43c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
[Water] is the softest and most adaptive thing in the world, but it can flow around, over, and even through the hardest thing, i.e. rocks;
Furthermore, it can run around, over, and even through rocks like racing horses;
Its force came from nothing [we can describe];
[All we know is that in due course] It can pierce through solid seamless rocks;
I therefore learn about the advantage of carrying out the principle of non-interference (abiding by natural forces).
[The above paragraph illustrates that:]
The [effectiveness of] educating people [through deeds] rather than through speeches,
And the advantage of helping [people] through non-interference [i.e. making use of natural propensities],
[All of the above are the best policies executed by Sages]
Hardly any other practice in this world can match [the extent of their conformity with Tao].

[43c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The softest in the world surpasses the hardest in the world.
Only Nothing can enter into no-space.
Hence, I know the advantages of non-doing.
The teaching of no-word, the beneficial of non-doing, - a very few in the world know.

[43c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
The most flexible wins out over the stiffest.
The shapeless can be omnipresent.
I know it is beneficial not use brute force.
The best in the world teach without preaching, and act without using force.

[43c17t] Arthur Waley
What is of all things most yielding
Can overwhelm that which is of all things most hard.
Being substanceless it can enter even where there is no space;
That is how I know the value of action that is actionless.
But that there can be teaching without words,
Value in action that is actionless,
Few indeed can understand.

[43c18t] Richard John Lynn
The softest things under Heaven gallop through the hardest things.
That which has no physical existence can squeeze through where there is no space, so from this I know how advantageous it is to act without conscious purpose.
The teaching that is not expressed in words, the advantage that is had by acting without conscious purpose, rare is it that anyone under Heaven ever reaches them.

[43c19t] Lin Yutang
THE SOFTEST SUBSTANCE
The softest substance of the world
Goes through the hardest.
That-which-is-without-form penetrates that-which-has-no-crevice;
Through this I know the benefit of taking no action.
The teaching without words
And the benefit of taking no action
Are without compare in the universe.

[43c20t] Victor H. Mair
The softest thing under heaven gallops triumphantly over
The hardest thing under heaven.
Nonbeing penetrates nonspace.
Hence,
I know the advantages of nonaction.
The doctrine without words,
The advantage of nonaction - few under heaven can realize these!

[43c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The most yielding of all things overcomes the hardest of all things.
That which has no substance enters where there is no crevice.
Hence, I know the value of action without striving.
Few things under heaven bring more benefit than the lessons learned from silence and the actions taken without striving.

[43c22t] David H. Li
The world's tenderest is the master of the world's steeliest.
Null permeates Ull.
I thus know the benefits of laissez-faire.
Instructions without words and benefits of laissez-faire - few things in the world can top them.

[43c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The softest under heaven always prevails over the hardest.
For, having no fixed form,
It can penetrate even where there is no visible opening.

This is the power of balanced action through nonaction.
This is the benefit of balanced action through nonaction.
Nonaction teaches without words, and benefits without actions.
No power in the world can even come close to it.

[43c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
When the learned scholar hears the Tao
He makes every effort to master it.
When the mediocre scholar hears the Tao
It will seem as if he grasps and loses it, alternately.
When the weak scholar hears the Tao
He laughs wildly,
If he had not laughed at it, it would not be worthy to be Tao.
Therefore it is written:
"The enlightened Tao seems dark,
The advanced Tao seems backward,
The direct Tao seems obscure,
The most exalted quality looks like a valley,
The most pristine white looks colorless,
The most superior virtue looks insufficient,
The most solid quality is like a fragile stalk,
The simplest nature looks changeable,
The largest square has no angles,
The largest vessel is never whole,
The loudest sound is hardly heard,
The largest image cannot be imagined.
Tao, since it is hidden, is nameless."
But only the Tao can improve and mend.
To separate is to be constructive; to be constructive is to be destructive.
All things, whether they are constructive or destructive, lead to the One again.

[43c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
The very softest thing of all can ride like a galloping horse through the hardest of things.
Like water, like water penetrating rock.
And so the invisible enters in.
That is why I know it is wise to act by doing nothing.
And how few, how very few understand this!
People teach in the world what I know to be true:
if you live violently that is how you will die.

[43c26t] Gu Zhengkun

The benefit of inaction,
Are what few people in the world can perform and obtain.

[43c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The softest under Heaven can ride roughshod over the hardest.
That without substance can enter even into the smallest space.
That is why I know the benefit of doing nothing.
Teaching without words, benefiting without doing:
there are unfortunately very few people under Heaven who can reach these goals.

[43c28t] Liu Qixuan
The feeblest is the strongest
That can run everywhere in the world,
It can go through being and non-being alike
Without any effort.
I therefore come to know the good
Of doing nothing willfully.
The efficiency of wordless teaching and doing nothing
Is rarely matched.

[43c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Softest Thing
Lao Tze says,
The softest thing in the world dashes against and overwhelms the hardest;
that which is without form can go through where there is no crevice.
Through this I know that acting without the intent to control fate can be advantageous.
The advantage of teaching without speech and acting without the intent to control fate is incomparable in the world.

[43c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
The non-existent can enter into the impenetrable.
By this I know that non-action is useful.
Teaching without words, utility without action -
Few in the world have come to this.

[43c31t] Paul J. Lin
The world's softest thing gallops to and fro through the world's hardest thing.
Things without substance can penetrate things without crevices.
Thus I know the benefit of inaction.
But teaching without words and benefitting without action are understood by few in the entire world.

This makes me realize the advantage of Not Doing.
Teaching done by not talking,
the advantage gained by Not Doing - few things in the world can match this.

[43c33t] Cheng Lin
The softest thing in the world can overcome the hardest.
Such a thing seems to issue forth from nowhere, and yet it penetrates everywhere.
From this I have learned the advantage of inaction.
Few men in this world have learned the precept of silence, and the advantage of inaction.

[43c34t] Yi Wu
That which is softest in the world overrides that which is hardest in the world.
Only that which has no existence can enter that which has no crevice.
Therefore, I know the benefit of non-action.
Teaching without words
And benefit without action;
Few in the world attain it.

[43c35t] Han Hiong Tan
The world's softest can ride roughshod over the world's hardest.
The pervasive force which has no form (thickness)
Can penetrate through the substance that has no breach (crevice).
Hence, I understand the advantage of non-action.
The principles of teaching without words (speechless tuition) and the benefits of non-action (laissez faire) are peerless under the sun.

[43c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The softest of all things can overcome the hardest of all things.
Only the insubstantial can penetrate the spaceless.
Thus, we know the benefit of non-interference and the teaching of the subtle Way of the universe that does not rely on words.
Few people under Heaven can attain it.

[43c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
The meekest in the world
Penetrates the strongest in the world.
As nothingness enters into that-which-has-no-opening.
Hence, I am aware of the value of non-action
And of the value of teaching with no words,
As for the value of non-action,
Nothing in the world can match it.

The softest things in the world
Can match and overcome the hardest.
Non-being penetrates even the crackless.
Thus the value of non-interference is clear to me.
The teaching without words,
And the virtue of non-interference,
Can hardly be matched in the world.

[43c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The softest under Heaven
Rides roughshod over the hardest under Heaven.
The beingless [wu yu] penetrates the spaceless [wu chien].
From this I know the advantage of no-action [wu-wei].
The wordless teaching,
The advantage of no-action -
Nothing under Heaven exemplifies them better.

[43c40t] Tao Huang
What is softest in the world penetrates what is hardest in the world.
Nonbeing enters where there is no room.
From this I know the riches of nonaction.
Wordless teaching and the riches of nonaction is matched by very little in the world.

[43c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The world's softest can over-run the world's hardest.
It comes from the unknown (non-existence) and it enters no space.
From this we know how advantageous is non-interference!
Thus, education by non-preaching and the policy of non-interference have merits with which nothing under heaven can compare.

[43c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The softest things in the world overcome the hardest things in the world.
Non-being penetrates that in which there is no space.
Through this I know the advantage of taking no action.
Few in the world can understand the teaching without words and the advantage of taking no action.

[43c91t] И. И. Семененко
Мягчайшее под Небесами проскакивает сквозь твердейшее.
Неналичие проходит в то, что не имеет промежутка.
Именно поэтому я знаю о полезности бездействия.
В Поднебесной редко кому удается овладеть учением, невыразимым в слове, и полезностью бездействия.

[43c92t] А. А. Маслов
Самое мягкое в Поднебесной может одолеть самое твёрдое в Поднебесной.
То, что не имеет сущности, проникает туда, где нет даже щели.

Потому-то я и постиг пользу недеяния.
Но учение вне слов и пользу недеяния крайне редко встретишь в Поднебесной.

[43c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
В Поднебесной предельно мягкое управляет предельно твердым.
А не имеющее наличия входит в плотное, не имеющее промежутков.
Вот и я обладаю знанием того, что польза проистекает из недеяния.
Бессловесное учение, польза недеяния - о, как мало в Поднебесной людей, которые могут этого достичь!

[43c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
То, что в Поднебесной стало мягким, гонит то, что в Поднебесной стало твердым.
Небытие и бытие входят в неразрывное пространственно-временное единство.
Вот откуда я знаю, что недеяние имеет пользу.
Обучать без слов, приносить пользу недеянием - редко кто в Поднебесной достиг этого.

[43c95t] Ян Хин-шун
В Поднебесной самые слабые побеждают самых сильных.
Небытие проникает везде и всюду.
Вот почему я знаю пользу от недеяния.
В Поднебесной нет ничего, что можно было бы сравнивать с учением, не прибегающим к словам, и пользой от недеяния.

[43c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Мир смирен: все люди едят и бегают над его твердынею.
Небытие поглощается беспромежуточным.
Поэтому я знаю, что бездеятельность имеет высокое достоинство.
Бессловесное учение и бездеятельность полезнее всего существующего между небом и землей.

[43c97t] В. В. Малявин
Самое мягкое в мире покроет самое твердое.
Невещественное войдет в то, что не имеет пустот.
Так узнаем, что от недеяния есть выгода.
Учение без слов, выгоду недеяния
В мире способны понять немногие.

[43c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Предельно мягкое в Поднебесной опережает в гонке предельно твердое в Поднебесной.
Отсутствие наличия приникает в пространство отсутствия.
Сущность моя посредством этого знает наличие прибыли-пользы в осуществлении отсутствия.
Учение, не выраженное в словах, прибыль-польза от не-осуществления, - в Поднебесной редко достигают этого.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Four

700/2593

[44c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Fame or your health - which is more dear?
Your health or possessions - which is worth more?
Gain or loss - in which is there harm?
{If your desires} are great, {you're bound to be extravagant};
{If you store much away, you're bound} to lose {a great deal}.
Therefore, if you know contentment, you'll not be disgraced.
If you know when to stop, you'll suffer no harm.
And in this way you can last a very long time.

[44c02t] John C. H. Wu
As for your name and your body, which is the dearer?
As for your body and your wealth, which is the more to be prized?
As for gain and loss, which is the more painful?
Thus, an excessive love for anything will cost you dear in the end.
The storing up of too much goods will entail a heavy loss.
To know when you have enough is to be immune from disgrace.
To know when to stop is to be preserved from perils.
Only thus can you endure long.

[44c03t] D. C. Lau
Your name or your person,
Which is dearer?
Your person or your goods,
Which is worth more?
Gain or loss,
Which is a greater bane?
That is why excessive meanness
Is sure to lead to great expense;
Too much store
Is sure to end in immense loss.
Know contentment
And you will suffer no disgrace;
Know when to stop
And you will meet with no danger.
You can then endure.

[44c04t] R. L. Wing
Which is dearer,
Name or life?
Which means more,
Life or wealth?

Which is worse,
Gain or loss?
The stronger the attachments,
The greater the cost.
The more that is hoarded,
The deeper the loss.
Know what is enough;
Be without disgrace.
Know when to stop;
Be without danger.
In this way one lasts for a very long time.

[44c05t] Ren Jiyu
Which is more dear to me, credit or life?
Which is more valuable, life or wealth?
Which is more harmful, gain or loss?
Therefore the excessive stint must cause enormous expenses,
The rich hoard must suffer a serious loss.
Whoever is contented will meet no disgrace,
Whoever knows when and where to stop will meet no danger,
And he is able to endure long without worry.

[44c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Fame or self: Which matters more?
Self or wealth: Which is more precious?
Gain or loss: Which is more painful?
He who is attached to things will suffer much.
He who saves will suffer heavy loss.
A contented man is never disappointed.
He who knows when to stop does not find himself in trouble.
He will stay forever safe.

[44c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Which is the dearer,
Fame or the body?
Which means more,
The body or wealth?
Which can be called an ill,
To gain or to lose?
Greater cost comes with greater craving.
Greater loss comes with greater accumulation.
He who knows what he needs will attract no dishonor.
He who knows when to stop
will come to no grief.
Such people can have a lasting life.

[44c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Fame or health, which is dearer to you?
Health or wealth, which is more important to you?
Gain or loss, which hurts you more?
The more you love something, the more you have to pay.
The more wealth you accumulate, the more likely you will lose it.
If you know when to be satisfied, you will not be insulted,
If you know when to stop, you will not be hurt,
This is how you last long.

[44c09t] Walter Gorn Old, STANDING STILL
Which is the nearer to you, your name or your person?
Which is the more precious, your person or your wealth?
Which is the greater evil, to gain or to lose?
Great devotion requires great sacrifice.
Great wealth implies great loss.
He who is content can never be ruined.
He who stands still will never meet danger.
These are the people who endure.

[44c10t] James Legge
Or fame or life,
Which do you hold more dear?
Or life or wealth,
To which would you adhere?
Keep life and lose those other things;
Keep them and lose your life: - which brings Sorrow and pain more near?
Thus we may see,
Who cleaves to fame
Rejects what is more great;
Who loves large stores
Gives up the richer state.
Who is content
Needs fear no shame.
Who knows to stop
Incurs no blame.
From danger free
Long live shall he.

[44c11t] David Hinton
Name or self: which is precious?
Self or wealth: which is treasure?
Gain or loss: which is affliction?
Indulge love and the cost is dear.

Keep treasures and the loss is lavish.
Knowing contentment you avoid tarnish, and knowing when to stop you avoid danger.
Try it and your life will last and last.

[44c12t] Chichung Huang
Fame and life - which is dearer?
Life and wealth - which is weightier?
Gain and loss - which is drearier?
Excessive love entails enormous costs;
Abundant stores entail heavy losses.
Therefore, knowing content
Will exempt you from humiliation;
Knowing where to stop
Will exempt you from peril.
You may long endure.

[44c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Your name and your body (shen), which is dearer?
Your body and material goods, which is more abundant?
Gain and loss, which is illness?
Therefore in excessive love one necessarily goes to great expenses,
In hoarding much one necessarily loses heavily.
Knowing contentment (chih tsu) one does not suffer disgrace,
Knowing when to stop one does not become exhausted (tai).
This way one may last long.

[44c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Which is the dearest [to a person], fame or body?
Which is more important, body or goods?
Which is more sickening, gain or loss?
Therefore, the more a person would indulge in the love [of fame and body], the more will he be excessively wasteful;
The more a person would aggregates goods, the more will he be worried about losing them.
A person will live a long and perpetuated life if and only if:
He would free himself from the inferiority [complex of not having enough goods] by conscientiously drawing a line when his obtainment [of goods and wealth] provides him modestly comfortable life;
And he would also break off from the insecurity [complex] by ceasing and desisting [from accumulation of goods and wealth].

[44c15t] Tien Cong Tran
As for your name and your self, which is the dearer?
As for your self and your wealth, which is the more to be prized?
As for gain or loss, which is more painful?
Thus, extreme love leads to great cost.
Much storage leads to heavy loss.
To know when to have enough is to be immune from disgrace.

To know when to stop is to be preserved from danger.
Only thus can you last long.

[44c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Which is dearer, fame or health?
Which is more important, wealth or health?
Which is more damaging, obtaining the former or losing the latter?
Excessively loving results in great expense.
Excessive stocking leads to huge losses.
Therefore those who are not greedy can avoid disgrace.
Those who know where to stop can avoid failure.
They can have long-lasting success.

[44c17t] Arthur Waley
Fame or one's own self, which matters to one most?
One's own self or things bought, which should count most?
In the getting or the losing, which is worse?
Hence he who grudges expense pays dearest in the end;
He who has hoarded most will suffer the heaviest loss.
Be content with what you have and are, and no one can despoil you;
Who stops in time nothing can harm.
He is forever safe and secure.

[44c18t] Richard John Lynn
Reputation or one's person, which is dear?
One's person or what he possesses, which is more?
Gain or loss, which is harm?
Thus it is that extreme meanness is sure to result in great expense, and much hoarding is sure to result in heavy loss.
One who knows contentment will not suffer damage to his reputation, and one who knows how to stop will not place himself in danger.
As such, he will last long.

[44c19t] Lin Yutang
BE CONTENT
Fame or one's own self, which does one love more?
One's own self or material goods, which has more worth?
Loss (of self) or possession (of goods), which is the greater evil?
Therefore:
He who loves most spends most,
He who hoards much loses much.
The contented man meets no disgrace;
Who knows when to stop runs into no danger -
He can long endure.

Name or person, which is nearer?
Person or property, which is dearer?
Gain or loss, which is drearier?
Many loves entail great costs,
Many riches entail heavy losses.
Know contentment and you shall not be disgraced,
Know satisfaction and you shall not be imperiled;
then you will long endure.

[44c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Your integrity or your body:
Which is more important?
Your body or your possessions:
Which is worth more?
Gain or loss:
Which is more harmful?
Thus it is that the miser will pay much.
The hoarder will suffer great loss.
Be content with what you have
and you will not be disgraced.
Know when to stop
and you will be preserved from danger.
Only in this way will you long endure.

[44c22t] David H. Li
Fame and health - which is dearer?
Health and wealth - which is more valuable?
Gain and loss - which is more damaging?
Excessive love demands large outlay.
Overabundant wealth results in heavy loss.
Thus,
knowing contentment brings about no disgrace;
knowing moderation brings about no danger.
One lasts long.

[44c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Which is more precious, fame or health?
Which is more important, health or wealth?
Which is more painful, gaining or losing?
The more excessive is your attachment,
The greater is your suffering.
The more excessive is your possession,
The heavier is your loss.
To know what is enough is to be free from disgrace.
To know when to stop is to be free from danger.
Those who practice this will long endure.

[44c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Tao begets one,
One begets two,
Two begets three,
Three begets all things.
All things, back to the shade, front to the light,
The harmony between them is the breath of life.
What others teach, I also teach:
"The cruel and violent do not die a natural death."
I will use that sentence as my guide.

[44c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
What really matters most,
Your image or your soul?
What do you care about,
Your money, or your life?
What's actually the best,
Making it - or losing?
If you pour all your energy into one thing,
You're sure to harm the rest of your being
And if you invest it all in profit -
You'll end up losing the whole lot.
If you're not always wanting, you can be at peace.
And if you're not always trying to be someone
You can be who you really are and go the whole way.

[44c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Which is dearer, your name or your body?
Which is more important, your body or your goods?
Which is more harmful, gain or loss?
Excessive stinginess will result in great expense;
Too much amassment leads to great loss;
Knowing contentment avoids disgrace;
Knowing when to stop avoids danger.
Thus one can be long in safety.

[44c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Fame or your self: which is dearer?
Your self or your possessions: which is more precious?
To have or to lose: which is more detrimental?
That is why the most beloved will cost a great deal.
The more one stores, the more one will lose.
He who is content will not meet disgrace.
He who knows when to stop will not face danger.
Only then is there longevity.

[44c28t] Liu Qixuan
Which is more precious, the body or the name?
Which is more important, the body or the goods?
Which is more harmful, gains or losses?
One who cares for reputation pays more.
One who possesses much fears death most.
Therefore,
One who is easily satisfied is not a disgrace.
One who knows where to stop is not stopped in life.

[44c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Gain And Loss
Lao Tze says,
Which means more to you, fame or self?
Which brings more to you, self or property?
Which ails you more, gain or loss?
The cost of the thing which you love is dear.
The treasure unscrupulously laid up shall result in heavy loss.
However, the contented man will not suffer disgrace.
A man who knows his limitations will not incur danger.
Namely, he can survive forever.

[44c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Fame or your person, which is nearer to you?
Your person or wealth, which is dearer to you?
Gain or loss, which brings more evil to you?
Over-love of anything will lead to wasteful spending;
Amassed riches will be followed by heavy plundering.
Therefore, he who knows contentment can never be humiliated;
He who knows where to stop can never be perishable;
He will long endure.

[44c31t] Paul J. Lin
Of fame and life, which is more dear?
Of life and wealth, which is more worthy?
Of gain and loss, which is more distressing?
Therefore, loving in excess incurs great cost.
Overhoarding brings heavy loss.
To know what is enough means to avoid disgrace.
To know where to stop is to avoid danger.
Thus one can last long and endure.

[44c32t] Michael LaFargue

Gaining or losing, which brings the pain?
Indeed:
Very fond, much expended;
much hoarding, heavy loss.
Be content and there will be no disgrace.
Know to stop and there will be no danger.
And you can last very long.

[44c33t] Cheng Lin
Fame and life, - which is the more precious?
Life and property, - which is the more important?
Gain and loss, - which is the more to be preferred?
Inordinate love will surely result in abandonment.
Over-hoarding will surely end in heavy loss.
He who knows contentment will not suffer disgrace.
He who knows when to stop will not incur danger.

[44c34t] Yi Wu
Of fame and body, which is dearer?
Of body and property, which is worth more?
Of gain and loss, which is more troublesome?
Therefore, excessive love surely is great waste.
Much storing up surely is a heavy loss.
To know when you have enough
is to avoid disgrace.
To know when to stop
is to be free from danger.
Only thus can one long endure.

[44c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Personal glory or your life,
Which do you treasure more?
Your life or worldly possessions,
Which is more precious to you?
Gaining one but losing the other, which is more deleterious?
Therefore, wanting something badly can cost you dearly.
The more goods you hoard, the more you can possibly lose.
By being contented, you will never suffer any humiliation.
Knowing when to stop, you will never put your life in jeopardy.
Hence, you will have a long and wonderful life.

[44c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
As for your fame and your life, which matters more?
As for your life and your wealth, which is more precious?
As for gain or loss, which is more damaging?
He who is most endeared to something must pay dearest for it.

He who has hoarded much will suffer great loss.
He who knows when enough is enough saves himself from humiliation.
He who knows when to stop protects himself from peril.
To know this is to be long enduring.

[44c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Man's name or man's self - which is closer to him?
Man's self or his property - which is more valuable to him?
Success or failure - which is more harmful to him?
Things that are cherished more, cost more.
The more that is kept, the more that is missed.
The man who is easily contented is free from shame.
The man who knows the right time to stop is free from danger.
Thus, he will last long.

Self-Imposed Abstinences
Li Chieh
Which is more dear:
Fame or health?
Which is more valuable:
Health or wealth?
Which is more baneful:
Gain or loss?
Excessive love is bound to cause great expense.
Immense hoarding is bound to end in heavy loss.
He who knows contentment is free from disgrace;
He who knows when to quit will be free from peril.
He can endure a long time.

[44c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Your name or your body, which is dearer?
Your body or your possessions, which is more valuable?
Gaining or losing, which worries you more?
Therefore, when your craving is excessive, your spending is extravagant.
When you store much, you are bound to lose much.
Know how to be content, and you will not be disgraced.
Know when to stop, and you will be free from danger.
Thus you will be long-lasting.

[44c40t] Tao Huang
Which is more cherished, the name or the body?
Which is worth more, the body or possessions?
Which is more beneficial, to gain or to lose?
Extreme fondness is necessarily very costly.
The more you cling to, the more you lose.

So knowing what is sufficient averts disgrace.
Knowing when to stop averts danger.
This can lead to a longer life.

[44c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Between your fame and yourself, which is closer to you?
Between yourself and your wealth, which is more dear to you?
Between gain and loss, which is more of a burden to you?
Thus, excessive lust will cost one a great deal in the end.
Excessive wealth will make one suffer a heavy loss.
One who knows satisfaction will not be disgraced.
One who knows when to stop will not reach a perilous end.
Then he can rule everywhere and forever.

[44c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Which does one love more, fame or one's own life?
Which is more valuable, one's own life or wealth?
Which is worse, gain or loss?
Therefore he who has lavish desires will spend extravagantly.
He who hoards most will lose heavily.
He who is contented suffers no disgrace.
He who knows when to stop is free from danger.
Therefore he can long endure.

[44c91t] И. И. Семененко
Милее славу заиметь или живым остаться?
Ценней живым остаться иль разбогатеть?
Больней приобрести или утратить?
Это объясняет, как дорого приходится расплачиваться за свою привязанность, и сколь велик убыток, приносимый накопительством.
Кто знает то, что для него является достаточным, не подвергается бесчестью;
кто ведает, когда остановиться, пребывает в безопасности и может долго жить.

[44c92t] А. А. Маслов
Что дороже - славное имя или жизнь?
Что ценнее - жизнь или богатство?
Что мучительнее - достигать или утрачивать?
Вот почему великие пристрастия неизбежно ведут к большим потерям, а неуёмное накопление оборачивается огромной утратой.
Знай меру - и не придётся испытать стыд.
Умей остановиться - и не столкнёшься с опасностями.
И сумеешь прожить долго.

Обретение или утрата - что уязвляет нас больнее?
Чем сильнее любовь, тем мучительнее утрата.
И чем больше храним, тем тяжелее потеря.
Знающий меру не узнает позора; знающий, когда надо остановиться, не попадет в беду.
Такой человек сможет стать долговечным!

[44c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Имя или тело, что роднее?
Тело или богатство, что дороже?
Обретение или утрата, что больнее?
Вот почему кто чрезмерно скуп, непременно понесет большие убытки;
кто безмерно накапливает, непременно потерпит немалую утрату.
Знающий меру не опозорится.
Знающий предел не подвергнется опасности.
Такие смогут быть долговечными.

[44c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Что ближе - слава или жизнь?
Что дороже - жизнь или богатства?
Что тяжелее пережить - приобретение или потерю?
Кто многое сберегает, тот понесет большие потери.
Кто много накапливает, тот потерпит большие убытки.
Кто знает меру, у того не будет неудачи.
Кто знает предел, тот не будет подвергаться опасности.
Он может стать долговечным.

[44c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Что ближе к себе: свое имя или собственное тело?
Что больше: свое тело или богатство?
Что тяжелее испытать: приобретение или потерю?
Кто увлекается, тот потерпит большой убыток.
Кто имеет много, тот может потерять больше, нежели имеющий мало.
Кто знает, чем человек должен быть довольным, тот никогда не потерпит позора.
Кто, зная границы своей деятельности, не приблизится к опасностям, тот будет жить долго.

[44c97t] В. В. Малявин
Что каждому ближе: слава или жизнь?
Что дороже: жизнь или богатство?
Что хуже: иметь или потерять?
Вот почему кто многое любит, тот много потратит,
А у того, кто много скопил, будут велики и потери.
Если знаешь, как быть довольным, не изведаешь позора.
Если знаешь, где остановиться, избегнешь опасности
И сможешь жить долго.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Five

713/2593

[45c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Great completion seems incomplete;
Yet its usefulness is never exhausted.
Great fullness seems to be empty;
Yet its usefulness is never used up.
Great straightness seems to be bent.
Great skill seems to be clumsy.
Great surplus seems to stammer.
Activity overcomes cold;
Tranquility overcomes heat.
If you're quiet and tranquil you can become the ruler of the world.

[45c02t] John C. H. Wu
THE greatest perfection seems imperfect,
And yet its use is inexhaustible.
The greatest fullness seems empty,
And yet its use is endless.
The greatest straightness looks like crookedness.
The greatest skill appears clumsy.
The greatest eloquence sounds like stammering.
Restlessness overcomes cold,
But calm overcomes heat.
The peaceful and serene
Is the Norm of the World.

[45c03t] D. C. Lau
Great perfection seems chipped,
Yet use will not wear it out;
Great fullness seems empty,
Yet use will not drain it;
Great straightness seems bent;
Great skill seems awkward;
Great eloquence seems tongue-tied.
Restlessness overcomes cold;
Stillness overcomes heat.
Limpid and still,
One can be a leader in the empire.

[45c04t] R. L. Wing
If the greatest achievement is incomplete,
Then its usefulness is unimpaired.
If the greatest fullness is empty,

Then its usefulness is inexhaustible.
The greatest directness is flexible.
The greatest skillfulness is awkward.
The greatest eloquence is hesitant.
Agitation triumphs over the cold.
Stillness triumphs over the heated.
Clarity and stillness bring order to the world.

[45c05t] Ren Jiyu
What is most perfect seems to be incomplete,
But its utility cannot be impaired.
What is most full seems to be empty,
But its utility cannot be exhausted.
The most straight seems to be crooked,
The greatest skill seems to be clumsy,
The greatest eloquence seems to stammer.
Rapid walking overcomes cold,
Being quiet overcomes heat.
By remaining quiet and tranquil, one will be the chief under Heaven.

[45c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Great accomplishment seems imperfect,
Yet it does not outlive its usefulness.
Great fullness seems empty,
Yet it cannot be exhausted.
Great straightness seems twisted.
Great intelligence seems stupid.
Great eloquence seems awkward.
Movement overcomes cold.
Stillness overcomes heat.
Stillness and tranquillity set things in order in the universe.

[45c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The greatest accomplishment appears incomplete,
Yet it can meet the needs of the most demanding occasions.
The greatest fulfillment appears to be weak and restrained.
Yet its use is limitless.
What is most straight appears to be bent.
What is most dexterous appears to be clumsy.
The most skilled of debaters use words sparingly.
Motion overcomes cold.
Stillness overcomes hot.
Clearing up the muddiness of the mind
By allowing it to settle down to its natural stillness,
Will restore all things to their proper places.

[45c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The greatest accomplishment seems incomplete, but when you use it, it never has trouble.
The completely filled object seems empty, but when you use it, it never runs out.
The straightest looks crooked;
The cleverest looks clumsy;
The best debater sounds awkward.
Tranquility overcomes commotion, coolness overcomes hotness.
Coolness and tranquility are the real essence of the world.

[45c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INDEFINITE VIRTUE
He who sees that his highest attainments are always incomplete may go on working indefinitely.
He who sees his greatest possessions to be inadequate may go on acquiring for ever.
His highest rectitude is but crookedness.
His greatest wisdom is but foolishness.
His sweetest eloquence is but stammering.
Action overcomes cold; inaction overcomes heat.
With virtue and quietness one may conquer the world.

[45c10t] James Legge
Who thinks his great achievements poor
Shall find his vigour long endure.
Of greatest fulness, deemed a void,
Exhaustion ne'er shall stem the tide.
Do thou what's straight still crooked deem;
Thy greatest art still stupid seem,
And eloquence a stammering scream.
Constant action overcomes cold;
being still overcomes heat.
Purity and stillness give the correct law to all under heaven.

[45c11t] David Hinton
Great perfection seems flawed, but its usefulness never falters.
Great fullness seems empty, but its usefulness never runs dry.
Great rectitude seems bent low,
great skill seems clumsy,
great eloquence seems quiet.
Bustling around may overcome cold, but tranquility overcomes heat.
Master lucid tranquility and you'll govern all beneath heaven.

[45c12t] Chichung Huang
Great perfection seems imperfect -
Its function is unfailing;
Great fullness seems empty -
Its function is inexhaustible.
Great straightness seems bent;
Great eloquence seems tongue-tied;

Great adroitness seems clumsy;
Great affluence seems deficient.
Restlessness overcomes cold;
Stillness overcomes heat.
Emptiness and stillness
May serve as the norm of the empire.

[45c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Great perfection appears lacking (ch'üeh),
Its use is unending.
Great fullness appears empty,
Its use is inexhaustible.
Great straightness appears bent,
Great ingenuity (ch'iao) appears crude,
Great eloquence (pien) appears inarticulate.
When agitation (tsao) wins (sheng), the cold arrives,
When tranquillity (ching) wins (sheng), the hot arrives.
Clear and tranquil the world is in the right mode (cheng).

[45c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A splendidly constructed device may appear defective, yet [what counts is that] its applications are endless;
It will take forever to fill up a vast valley, yet [what matters is] its containment is inexhaustible, so that we can fetch water from it whenever we have the need;
Straightness [on a grand scale] may appear warped [to the either physically tiny or disadvantageously positioned observer];
A man of sublime dexterity may appear to be deceitfully clumsy;
A skilled debater may sound like suffering from speech impediment [to an indiscreet observer].
A restless radiant fire in the stove [produces heat that] can warm up the cold air [surrounding it];
[On the other side, a person who can retain his] Serenity can overpower the heat (the restlessness generated by the surrounding environment);
[By the same token] if a ruler would uphold Simplicity and Serenity [unruffled], he will be able to set the right standard for the world.

[45c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The greatest perfection seems imperfect; yet its use is inexhaustible.
The greatest fullness seems empty; yet its use is endless.
The greatest straightness seems bent.
The greatest skill appears clumsy.
The greatest eloquence seems stammering.
Active overcomes cold.
Calmness overcomes heat.
Tranquillity is the norm of the world.

[45c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Great achievement appears imperfect, Its application is limitless.
Complete fullness appears empty, It cannot be used up.

Perfect straightness appears bent.
Adept skills appear awkward.
Great eloquence appears dull.
The calm wins out over the impatient.
The cold wins out over the heat.
Serenity makes the world orderly.

[45c17t] Arthur Waley
What is most perfect seems to have something missing;
Yet its use is unimpaired.
What is most full seems empty;
Yet its use will never fail.
What is most straight seems crooked;
The greatest skill seems like clumsiness,
The greatest eloquence like stuttering.
Movement overcomes cold;
But staying still overcomes heat.
So he by his limpid calm
Puts right everything under heaven.

[45c18t] Richard John Lynn
Great completion seems incomplete, but its functioning is never exhausted.
Great fullness seems empty, but its functioning is limitless.
Great straightness seems crooked.
Great skill seems clumsy.
Great eloquence seems inarticulate.
Although the heat of activity conquers cold, quietude conquers heat, so pure quietude is the right way to govern all under Heaven.

[45c19t] Lin Yutang
CALM QUIETUDE
The highest perfection is like imperfection,
And its use is never impaired.
The greatest abundance seems meager,
And its use will never fail.
What is most straight appears devious,
The greatest skill appears like clumsiness;
The greatest eloquence seems like stuttering.
Movement overcomes cold,
(But) keeping still overcomes heat.
Who is calm and quiet becomes the guide for the universe.

[45c20t] Victor H. Mair
Great perfection appears defective, but its usefulness is not impaired.

Great straightness seems crooked,
Great cleverness seems clumsy,
Great triumph seems awkward.
Bustling about vanquishes cold,
Standing still vanquishes heat.
Pure and still, one can put things right everywhere under heaven.

[45c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Great accomplishment seems incomplete, yet its use is not impaired.
Great fullness seems empty,
yet it will never be drained.
Great straightness looks crooked.
Great skill appears clumsy.
Great eloquence sounds like stammering.
Movement overcomes cold, stillness overcomes heat.
The calm and quiet set right everything under heaven.

[45c22t] David H. Li
Great Perfection appears flawed; its use is endless.
Great Fullness appears less; its use is limitless.
Great Straightness appears warped,
Great Dexteriousness appears handicapped,
Great Eloquence appears reticent.
Serenity wins over rashness; coolness wins over heatedness.
Serenity governs the world.

[45c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Great perfection appears imperfect,
Yet there is no end to its process of perfecting.
Great fullness appears empty,
Yet there is no limit to its process of fulfilling.
Great uprightness appears bent,
Great mastery seems clumsy,
Great eloquence sounds awkward,
Yet they keep growing without limitations.
Movement overcomes stagnation.
Stillness overcomes discordance.
Movement and stillness in balance
Set the world in evolutionary order.

[45c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The greatest perfection looks flawed,
And even so, it never perishes.

And even so, it will never run out.
The straightest road looks crooked.
The greatest vigor looks like laziness,
The greatest eloquence looks like stammering.
Action overcomes cold,
Tranquillity overcomes heat.
Only through purity and tranquillity of spirit
Can order be imposed on the world.

[45c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
A great thing done is never perfect -
But that doesn't mean it fails: it does what it is.
Real richness means to act as if you had nothing,
Because then you will never be drained of it.
The greatest straightness seems bent,
The greatest ability seems awkward,
And the greatest speech, like a stammering.
Act calmly, not coldly.
Peace is greater than anger.
Tranquillity and harmony are the true order of things.

[45c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The complete perfection seems flawed,
But its use can never be exhausted;
The fullest seems empty,
But its use can never come to an end;
The straightest seems bent;
The most skillful seems clumsy;
The most eloquent seems tongue-tied.
Movement overcomes cold;
Quiet overcomes heat.
So inaction and quiet help one
Become a leader of the world.

[45c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Great achievement seems imperfect, yet its usefulness is not diminished.
Great fullness seems empty, yet it is inexhaustible.
Great frankness seems to succumb.
Great discussion seems silent.
Activity overcomes coldness.
Stillness overcomes heat.
Purity and stillness are the ideal for the world.

Purity And Stillness
Lao Tze says,
The greatest accomplishment seems to have blemishes, but when applied, it is long enduring.
The greatest fullness seems to be vacant, but when applied, it is inexhaustible.
The greatest straightness seems crooked.
The greatest craftiness seems stupid.
The greatest eloquence seems dumb.
Restlessness overcomes the cold;
being still overcomes the heat.
Purity and stillness give correct law to all in the world.

[45c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
The greatest perfection seems imperfect;
Yet its use will last without decay.
The greatest fullness seems empty;
Yet its use cannot be exhausted.
The greatest straightness seems crooked;
The greatest dexterity seems awkward;
The greatest eloquence seems stammering.
Activity overcomes cold;
Quietness overcomes heat.
Only through purity and quietude can the world be ruled.

The most perfect appears as though he were imperfect, and his beneficence is inexhaustible.
The most complete appears as though he were incomplete, and his usefulness is limitless.
The most upright appears as though he were crooked.
The most skillful appears as though he were stupid.
The most eloquent appears as though he were inarticulate.
Calm can overcome unrest; heat can overcome cold.
With purity and quiescence of mind, one may rule supreme in this world.

[45c34t] Yi Wu
The greatest achievement seems imperfect, yet its usefulness is never exhausted.
The greatest fullness seems empty, yet its usefulness is endless.
The greatest straightness seems bent.
The greatest skill seems clumsy.
The greatest eloquence seems like stammering.
Restlessness wins over cold.
Tranquility wins over heat.
Pure tranquility is the norm of the world.

[45c35t] Han Hiong Tan
The greatest accomplishment appears imperfect, but its utility is limitless.
Immense fullness appears inadequate, yet its use is inexhaustible.
Though as straight as an arrow, it appears crooked.
Polished agility appears awkwardly clumsy.
Great eloquence appears haltingly hesitant.
Tranquillity prevails upon rashness.
Coldness overcomes heat.
The sage maintains quietude and practises non-action.
He sets an example for everyone to follow.

[45c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The great perfection seems imperfect, yet its usefulness is unfailing.
The great fullness appears to be void, yet its usefulness is boundless.
The great accomplishment seems unfinished.
The ultimate straightness appears crooked.
Profound skillfulness appears clumsy.
Fluent eloquence seems mute.
Movement overcomes cold.

Stillness overcomes heat.
Maintain clarity and purity, and be a model of deep virtue for all people.

[45c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
When accomplishment reaches its utmost,
It is as if nothing is accomplished.
Its application is never exhausted.
When fullness reaches its utmost,
It is as if it is still vacant.
Its application leads to limitlessness.
Thus the perfectly straight is as if it were bent.
The most skilled is as if it were stupid.
The greatest ability of debate is as if it were speechless.
Hence, quiescence surpasses movement,
Coldness surpasses heat,
Tranquillity sets the example for the world.

Great perfection seems imperfect;
Its utility will never deteriorate.
Great fullness seems hollow;
Its utility will be inexhaustible.
The most straight appears to be bent;
The most skillful appears to be awkward;
The most eloquent appears to be stammering.
Hastiness subdues cold;
Quiescence subdues heat.
Purity and quiescence are the norms of the universe.

[45c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Great accomplishment looks incomplete;
Use will not wear it out.
Great fullness looks empty;
Use will not exhaust it.
Great straightness looks crooked;
Great skill looks clumsy;
Great eloquence sounds stuttering;
"Being in motion overcomes cold;
Being still overcomes heat."
Be clear and still, and you will be the lord of all under Heaven.

Grand fullness seems empty, yet its use never comes to an end.
Grand straightforwardness seems bent.
Grand skill seems clumsy.
Grand surplus seems deficient.
Activity overcomes cold.
Stillness overcomes heat.
Peace and tranquility can be the measure of the world.

[45c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The superior perfection may seem imperfect.
Because of its vast capacity, its function is never exhausted.
Because of its vast capacity, its function is never limited.
The superior fulness may seem empty.
The superior straightness may look like crookedness.
The superior skill may appear clumsy.
The superior eloquence may sound like stammering.
Inaction overcomes restlessness.
Inaction overcomes impulsiveness.
Quiescence overcomes irritation.
He kept purity and tranquility to be the model of the world.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Six

726/2593

[46c01t] Robert G. Henricks
When the world has the Way, ambling horses are retired to fertilize [fields].
When the world lacks the Way, war horses are reared in the suburbs.
Of crimes - none is greater than having things that one desires;
Of disasters - none is greater than not knowing when one has enough.
Of defects - none brings more sorrow than the desire to attain.
{Therefore, the contentment one has when he knows that he has enough,} is abiding contentment indeed.

[46c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHEN the world is in possession of the Tao,
The galloping horses are led to fertilize the fields with their droppings.
When the world has become Taoless,
War horses breed themselves on the suburbs.
There is no calamity like not knowing what is enough.
There is no evil like covetousness.
Only he who knows what is enough will always have enough.

[46c03t] D. C. Lau
When the way prevails in the empire, fleet-footed horses are relegated to ploughing the fields;
When the way does not prevail in the empire, war-horses breed on the border.
There is no crime greater than having too many desires;
There is no disaster greater than not being content;
There is no misfortune greater than being covetous.
Hence in being content, one will always have enough.

[46c04t] R. L. Wing
When the world possesses the Tao,
Even fast horses are used for their dung.
When the world is without the Tao,
War-horses are raised in the suburbs.
There is no greater misfortune
Than not knowing what is enough.
There is no greater fault
Than desiring to acquire.
Therefore know that enough is enough.
There will always be enough.

[46c05t] Ren Jiyu
When state politics are on the right track, war horses are used in farming.
When state politics are off track, even mares with foal have to be used in battle.
There is no calamity greater than discontentment.
There is no guilt greater than covetousness.

Therefore the contentment with knowing contentment is always contented.

[46c06t] Gia-fu Feng
When the Tao is present in the universe,
The horses haul manure.
When the Tao is absent from the universe,
War horses are bred outside the city.
There is no greater sin than desire,
No greater curse than discontent,
No greater misfortune than wanting something for oneself.
Therefore he who knows that enough is enough will always have enough.

[46c07t] Lok Sang Ho
When things under heaven follow the Dao,
Horses will roam freely, and their droppings will be found anywhere.
When things under heaven have departed from the Dao,
The horses will be reared in special stables away from the city.
No wrong is greater than having objects to crave for.
No disaster is greater than not knowing one's true needs.
No greater ill is invited than by craving to possess.
Thus, the satisfaction from knowing one's true needs and asking for no more is eternal.

[46c08t] Xiaolin Yang
When the DAO rules, even the great war horses are used to plow the field,
When the DAO is overruled, even the pregnant horses are used in battle.
The biggest disaster is not knowing when to be satisfied,
The biggest mistake is to always want more.
Therefore, knowing when to be satisfied is the ever-lasting satisfaction.

[46c09t] Walter Gorn Old, CURBING DESIRE
When Tao is in the world, horses are used in the pasture land.
When Tao has left the world, chargers are reared in the wilderness.
There is no greater sin than indulging desire.
There is no greater pain than discontent.
There is nothing more disastrous than the greed of gain.
Hence the satisfaction of contentment is an everlasting competence.

[46c10t] James Legge
When the Tao prevails in the world, they send back their swift horses to (draw) the dung-carts.
When the Tao is disregarded in the world, the war-horses breed in the border lands.
There is no guilt greater than to sanction ambition;
no calamity greater than to be discontented with one's lot;
no fault greater than the wish to be getting.
Therefore the sufficiency of contentment is an enduring and unchanging sufficiency.

When all beneath heaven abides in Way, fast horses are kept to work the fields.
When all beneath heaven forgets Way, war horses are bred among the fertility altars.
What calamity is greater than no contentment, and what flaw greater than the passion for gain?
The contentment of fathoming contentment - there lies the contentment that endures.

[46c12t] Chichung Huang
When the empire possessed the Tao,
Galloping horses were turned back to manure the fields;
When the empire has lost the Tao,
War-horses are bred on the frontier.
No crime is greater than indulging in greed;
No misfortune is greater than not knowing content;
No catastrophe is more grievous than thirsting for gain.
Therefore, the content of knowing content
Makes one constantly content.

[46c13t] Ellen M. Chen
When the world practices Tao,
Fast horses are used for their dung.
When the world does not practice Tao,
War horses give birth at the borders.
Among offenses (tsui), none is greater than having what is desirable.
Among calamities (huo), none is greater than not knowing contentment.
Among blames (chiu), none is greater than the desire for gain.
Therefore the contentment that comes from knowing contentment
Is a long lasting contentment.

[46c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
When the world was on the right course, the best way people could make use of their good running horses was to walk them, so that they could collect their manure [as fertilizer or fuels];
When the world was not on the right course, [even pregnant] horses were used for combat that they were compelled to give births amidst ruins in battlefields.
There is no greater sin than the sin caused by over-indulging oneself;
There is no more serious misfortune [one may have than being suffered from] greed;
There is no more condemnable fault one has committed than being obsessed with obtainment.
Accordingly, one who knows what is reasonably enough shall always hold adequate [Te to be in harmony with Tao].

[46c15t] Tien Cong Tran
When the world is reigned by the Way, the galloping horses are led to fertilize the fields with their droppings.
When the world is wayless, war horses breed themselves on the suburbs.
There is no greater calamity than not knowing "enough".
There is no greater evil than will to gain.
Therefore "enough" of knowing "enough" is constant "enough".

When Tao is dominant, the fast horse is used for farming.
When Tao is lost, the female horse is used for war and gives birth in the field.
The worst misfortune is insatiability.
The worst mistake is rapacity.
Therefore, content from knowing enough makes people always satisfied.

[46c17t] Arthur Waley
When there is Tao in the empire
The galloping steeds are turned back to fertilize the ground by their droppings.
When there is not Tao in the empire
War horses will be reared even on the sacred mounds below the city walls.
No lure is greater than to possess what others want,
No disaster greater than not to be content with what one has,
No presage of evil greater than that men should be wanting to get more.
Truly: 'He who has once known the contentment that comes simply through being content, will never again be otherwise than contented'.

[46c18t] Richard John Lynn
When the Dao prevails among all under Heaven, one relegates coursers to producing manure.
When the Dao does not prevail among all under Heaven, war horses are born in the fields outside towns.
Nothing causes greater disaster than not being content, and nothing brings about greater blame than craving something.
When contentment fills one perfectly, this is indeed constant contentment!

RACING HORSES
When the world lives in accord with Tao,
Racing horses are turned back to haul refuse carts.
When the world lives not in accord with Tao,
Cavalry abounds in the countryside.
There is no greater curse than the lack of contentment.
No greater sin than the desire for possession.
Therefore he who is contented with contentment shall be always content.

[46c20t] Victor H. Mair
When the Way prevails under heaven,
swift horses are relegated to fertilizing fields.
When the Way does not prevail under heaven,
war-horses breed in the suburbs.
No guilt is greater than giving in to desire,
No disaster is greater than discontent,
No crime is more grievous than the desire for gain.
Therefore,
Contentment that derives from knowing when to be content is eternal contentment.

When the Tao prevails in the world
swift horses are used to fertilize the fields.
When the Tao is unheeded war horses are bred on the border lands.
There is no greater offense than harboring desires.
There is no greater disaster than discontent.
There is no greater misfortune than wanting more.
Hence, if you are content
You will always have enough.

[46c22t] David H. Li
When the world is governed by Direction, horses haul manure.
When the world is not governed by Direction, mares foal near [war] location.
No calamity is greater than not being content;
No fault is greater than the desire to gain at any cost.
Thus, one who is content in being content is always content.

[46c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
When the world follows the Tao,
Horses are used to fertilize the farm fields.
When the world does not follow the Tao,
Even mares are expended to breed in the battlefields.
When the individual follows the Tao,
Energy is used in his harmonious inner development.
When the individual does not follow the Tao,
Energy is expended in his continuous inner conflict.
There is no greater vice than giving in to greed,
No greater calamity than not knowing contentment,
No greater imputation than succumbing to covetousness.
Therefore, know and be content with what is enough,
Then you will always have enough.

When Tao rules the world
Racehorses are harnessed to the garbage cart in the fields.
When Tao does not rule the world

There is no greater sin than going after what man desires,
There is no greater sorrow than not knowing a measure of contentment,
There is no greater obstacle than falling into the pit of greed.
Therefore, it is sufficient for you to know a measure of contentment in order to know contentment in proportion, so as to satisfy your measure.

You see, if people want more and more it can only lead to disaster.
Greed is the seed of apocalypse - it is the rocket-fuel of selfishness: me, me, me!
If people could only be glad with all they have, if they only knew it, they'd be happy.

When the Tao prevails in the world,
The battle steeds are returned to farmers for tilling the fields;
When the Tao does not prevail in the world,

Thus the contentment of feeling content
Is an eternal contentment.

That is why he who feels content is always content.

Когда Дао в Поднебесной есть, то скакунов отводят унавоживать поля;
когда Дао в Поднебесной нет, то боевых коней растят в походах.

нет тяжелее бедствия, чем страсть к приобретению.
Когда же ведают о том, что то, чего достаточно, является достаточным, находятся в незыблемом достатке.

Когда Поднебесная следует Дао, боевых лошадей отправляют унавоживать поля.
Когда Поднебесная не следует Дао, боевых лошадей приводят к городским стенам.

Нет большего зла, чем быть в плену у желаний.
Поэтому, познавший меру в мере, неизменно хранит её.

Нет больше вины, чем страстям поддаться.
Нет больше беды, чем меры не знать.
Нет больше преступления, чем желание обладать.
Поэтому знающий меру сам является мерой; он всегда всему мера.

Когда Дао находится в Поднебесной, пасущиеся кони унавоживают землю.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Seven

[47c01t] Robert G. Henricks
No need to leave your door to know the whole world;
No need to peer through your windows to know the Way of Heaven.
The farther you go, the {less} you know.
{Therefore the Sage knows without going},
Names {without seeing},
And completes without doing a thing.

[47c02t] John C. H. Wu
WITHOUT going out of your door,
You can know the ways of the world.
Without peeping through your window,
You can see the Way of Heaven.
The farther you go,
The less you know.
Thus, the Sage knows without travelling,
Sees without looking,
And achieves without Ado.

[47c03t] D. C. Lau
Without stirring abroad
One can know the whole world;
Without looking out of the window
One can see the way of heaven.
The further one goes
The less one knows.
Therefore the sage knows without having to stir,
Identifies without having to see,
Accomplishes without having to act.

[47c04t] R. L. Wing
Without going out of doors,
Know the world.
Without looking through the window,
See the Tao in Nature.
One may travel very far,
And know very little.
Therefore, Evolved Individuals
Know without going about, Recognize without looking, Achieve without acting.

[47c05t] Ren Jiyu
Without going out of the door, one can know things under Heaven.

Without looking through the window, one can see the Way (Tao) of Heaven.
The farther one goes, the less one knows.
Therefore the sage knows without going through,
Understands without seeing,
And accomplishes without doing anything.

[47c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Without going outside, you may know the whole world.
Without looking through the window, you may see the ways of heaven.
The farther you go, the less you know.
Thus the sage knows without traveling;
He sees without looking;
He works without doing.

[47c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Without stepping out of the door,
One can know the universal truth that pervades the universe.
Without peeping through the window,
One can see the Dao of Nature.
He who goes to a distant land in search of the Truth
Will only distant himself from the Truth.
The Sage knows it all without traveling afar.
He is illuminated without seeing with his physical eyes.
He accomplishes without ever contriving to accomplish.

[47c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Without traveling, you can know what happens in the world.
Without looking out the window, you can know what happens in the universe.
The more you travel, the less you know.
Therefore, the great men knew everything without traveling,
Recognized everything without seeing it personally,
Accomplished everything by WUWEI.

[47c09t] Walter Gorn Old, LOOKING ABROAD
A man may know the world without leaving his own home.
Through his windows he can see the supreme Tao.
The further afield he goes the less likely is he to find it.
Therefore the wise man knows without travelling, names things without seeing them, and accomplishes everything without action.

[47c10t] James Legge
Without going outside his door, one understands (all that takes place) under the sky;
without looking out from his window, one sees the Tao of Heaven.

Therefore the sages got their knowledge without travelling;
gave their (right) names to things without seeing them;

and accomplished their ends without any purpose of doing so.

[47c11t] David Hinton
You can know all beneath heaven though you never step out the door, and you can see the Way of heaven though you never look out the window.
The further you explore, the less you know.
So it is that a sage knows by going nowhere, names by seeing nothing, perfects by doing nothing.

[47c12t] Chichung Huang
Without leaving the door,
You may know everything under heaven;
Without peeping through the window,
You may know heaven's Tao.
The farther you venture abroad,
The less you know.
Hence, the sage man
Knew without traveling,
Understood without seeing,
Accomplished without acting.

[47c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Without stepping (ts'u) out the door,
Know (chih) the world.
Without looking out the window,
See (chien) the Tao of Heaven.
The farther one comes out,
The less one knows.
Therefore the sage knows (chih) without travelling,
Names (ming) things without seeing (chien) them,
Accomplishes (cheng) without work (wei).

[47c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
We do not necessarily have to leave our house to learn about the world;
It is possible to understand heavenly Tao without looking through windows;
For the farther one travels, the less one knows;
Therefore,
A Sage would know the situation without necessarily being there himself - he can size up the circumstance without being needfully there;
[Most important of all] he can accomplish deeds without tampering with [Nature].

[47c15t] Tien Cong Tran
Without going out of your door, you are aware of the world.
Without looking out of your window, you see the Way of Heaven.
The farther one goes, the less one knows.
Thus, the sage knows without going out, sees without looking, and achieves without doing.

[47c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Without leaving home, one can know the world.
Without watching through window, one can know astronomy.
The farther one travels, the less one understands.
Therefore, the sage knows without traveling, understands without seeing, and succeeds without forcing.

[47c17t] Arthur Waley
Without leaving his door
He knows everything under heaven.
Without looking out of his window
He knows all the ways of heaven.
For the further one travels
The less one knows.
Therefore the Sage arrives without going,
Sees all without looking,
Does nothing, yet achieves everything.

[47c18t] Richard John Lynn
Know all under Heaven without even leaving your gate;
see the Dao of Heaven without even peering out your window.
The farther one goes out, the less he will know.
Thus it is that the sage knows without making a move and names without seeing.
He brings about the completion of things without taking action.

Lao Tze says,
Without stepping outside the door, a man can know what has taken place in the world.
Without looking out the window, a man can discern the Tao of Heaven.
The farther a man goes out, the less he knows.
Therefore, the sages got their knowledge not through visiting there;
gave their names to things not because they had seen them;
and accomplished their ends not because they ever had intent to control fate.

Without going out of the door
One can know the whole world;
Without peeping out of the window
One can see the Tao of heaven.
The further one travels
The less one knows.
Therefore the Sage knows everything without travelling;
He names everything without seeing it;
He accomplishes everything without doing it.

[47c31t] Paul J. Lin
Without going out-of-doors,
One can know the whole world.
Without looking out of windows,
One can see the Tao of heaven.
The farther one goes, the less one knows.
Therefore, the Sage does not go and yet knows,
Doesn't see and yet names,
Doesn't act and yet completes.

Understanding the world without going out the door.
Understanding Heaven's Way
without looking out the window.
Traveling very widely, understanding very little.
And so the Wise Person:
Knows without any going,
names without any looking,
accomplishes without any doing.

[47c33t] Cheng Lin
Without leaving the house, one may know everything about the world.
Without looking through the window, one may see the way of Heaven.
The further one travels, the less he knows.
Thus, the Sage possesses wisdom without seeking;
becomes famous without display;

Without going out of doors, one can know the world.
Without looking out of windows, one can see the Way of Heaven.
The more one goes, the less one knows.
Therefore, the sage

[47c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Without stepping out of the house,
You can know what is going on in the world.
Without peering out the window,
You can understand the way of Dao.
The farther you travel, the less you really know.
Therefore, the sage knows without having to travel.
Without seeing for himself, he can understand the law of nature.
Without meddling, he accomplishes easily.

[47c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Without going out of your door, you can know the ways of the world.
Without looking through your window, you can see the Way of Heaven.
The farther you go, the less you know.
Thus, one of deep virtue knows without going,
sees without looking,
and accomplishes without doing.

[47c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Without going out of the gate,
One is aware of the world.
Without peering outside,
One sees the way of heaven.
The farther away one is,
The less one is aware.
Therefore, the wise is aware of all things
Without moving a step.
He identifies all things
Without looking at them.
He completes all things
Without action.

Without going out of doors,
One can know the world;
Without looking through the window,
One can realize the Way of Heaven.
The farther one goes,
The less one knows.
Therefore, the Sage knows without going out,
Discriminates without seeing,
And accomplishes without action.

[47c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Without leaving the door,
You may know all under Heaven.
Without looking out the window,
You may know the way of Heaven.
The further you go,
The less you know.
Therefore the sage
Knows without going,
Sees without looking,
Fulfills without doing.

[47c40t] Tao Huang
In order to know the world, do not step outside the door.
In order to know the Tao of heaven, do not peer through the window.
The further out you go, the less you know.
So the sage knows without moving, identifies without seeing, accomplishes without acting.

[47c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Without leaving the door one may know the course of the world.
Without looking through the window one may see the law of nature.
The maximum extreme possesses a minimum of knowledge.
Hence a sage ruler knew without traveling;
designated without seeing;
and accomplished without interfering.

[47c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
One may know the world without going out of doors.
One may see the Way of Heaven without looking through the windows.
The further one goes, the less one knows.
Therefore the sage knows without going about,
Understands without seeing,
And accomplishes without any action.

Не выходя со двора, можно познать весь мир.
Не выглядывая в окно, можно узреть Путь Неба.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Eight

[48c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Those who work at their studies increase day after day;
Those who have heard the Tao decrease day after day.
The decrease and decrease, till they get to the point where they {do} nothing.
{They do nothing and yet there's nothing left undone}.
{When someone wants to} take control of the world, he must always be unconcerned with affairs.
For in a case where he's concerned with affairs,
{He'll be un}worthy, {as well}, of taking control of the {world}.

[48c02t] John C. H. Wu
LEARNING consists in daily accumulating;
The practice of Tao consists in daily diminishing.
Keep on diminishing and diminishing,
Until you reach the state of No-Ado.
No-Ado, and yet nothing is left undone.
To win the world, one must renounce all.
If one still has private ends to serve,
One will never be able to win the world.

[48c03t] D. C. Lau
In the pursuit of learning one knows more every day;
In the pursuit of the way one does less every day.
One does less and less until one does nothing at all, and when one does nothing at all there is nothing that is undone.
It is always through not meddling that the empire is won.
Should you meddle, then you are not equal to the task of winning the empire.

[48c04t] R. L. Wing
To pursue the academic, add to it daily.
To pursue the Tao, subtract from it daily.
Subtract and subtract again,
To arrive at nonaction.
Through nonaction nothing is left undone.
The world is always held without effort.
The moment there is effort, The world is beyond holding.

[48c05t] Ren Jiyu
The pursuit of learning is to increase (knowledge) day after day.
The pursuit of Tao is to decrease (knowledge) day after day.
Decreasing and decreasing again, till one has reached nonaction (wu-wei).
Nonaction and yet there is nothing that is not done by it.
To govern all under Heaven one usually should not take any arbitrary action.

If one tends to do anything arbitrarily,
One is not qualified to govern all under Heaven.

[48c06t] Gia-fu Feng
In the pursuit of learning, every day something is acquired.
In the pursuit of Tao, every day something is dropped.
Less and less is done
Until non-action is achieved.
When nothing is done, nothing is left undone.
The world is ruled by letting things take their course.
It cannot be ruled by interfering.

[48c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The more we learn,
The more things are plowed into our minds;
The more we follow the Dao,
The more things are taken out of our minds.
As we take more and more things out of our mind,
We finally arrive at the state of losing the sense of contriving and action.
At that point we be in the state of non-action.
At that point all actions will be done in the state of non-action.
To win the hearts of all under heaven,
We must always leave people alone.
If we do not leave them alone,
We will not win their adherence.

[48c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The more you study a subject, the more you know;
the more you study the DAO, the less you know;
Less and less, until at the end you achieve WUWEI.
By WUWEI, you can accomplish everything.
If you want to govern a country, always try to let nothing happen;
If you make things happen, you are not suitable for governing the country.

[48c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE DISTRESS OF KNOWLEDGE
Bodily and mental distress is increased every day in the effort to get knowledge.
But this distress is daily diminished by the getting of Tao.
Do you continually curtail your effort till there be nothing of it left?
By non-action there is nothing which cannot be effected.
A man might, without the least distress, undertake the government of the world.
But those who distress themselves about governing the world are not fit for it.

[48c10t] James Legge
He who devotes himself to learning (seeks) from day to day to increase (his knowledge);
he who devotes himself to the Tao (seeks) from day to day to diminish (his doing).
He diminishes it and again diminishes it, till he arrives at doing nothing (on purpose).

Having arrived at this point of non-action, there is nothing which he does not do.
He who gets as his own all under heaven does so by giving himself no trouble (with that end).
If one take trouble (with that end), he is not equal to getting as his own all under heaven.

[48c11t] David Hinton
To work at learning brings more each day.
To work at Way brings less each day,
less and still less
until you're doing nothing yourself.
And when you're doing nothing yourself, there's nothing you don't do.
To grasp all beneath heaven, leave it alone.
Leave it alone, that's all,
and nothing in all beneath heaven will elude you.

[48c12t] Chichung Huang
He who pursues learning daily increases;
He who hears the Tao daily decreases.
He decreases and decreases
Until he acts not
And has no intention to act.
He who wishes to win all under heaven
Never creates disturbances.
If he creates disturbances,
He is no longer fit to win all under heaven.

[48c13t] Ellen M. Chen
To pursue (wei) learning one increases daily.
To pursue (wei) Tao one decreases daily.
To decrease and again to decrease,
Until one arrives at not doing (wu-wei).
Not doing (wu-wei) and yet nothing is not done.
Always take the empire when there are no businesses.
If there are businesses,
It is not worthwhile to take the empire.

[48c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
In order to enhance his scholarship, a person must strive for improvement all the time;
To enrich his cultivation of Te, a person must chip off [his selfishness] day after day;
[A Sage] reduces his [selfishness] bit by bit, until he is finally capable of practicing the principle of non-interference; winning over the whole world.

[48c15t] Tien Cong Tran
By learning, one advances day by day.
By practicing the Way, one reduces day by day.
Reducing and reducing, until you reach the state of non-doing.
Non-doing, and yet not not doing.
To win over the world, one must "have no work".
If one still has work, one will never be able to win over the world.

[48c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Studying can be of benefit from day to day.
Following Tao one uses less force day after day.
Less and less, one uses no force.
Yet, he succeeds in everything.
To govern the world, one interferes nothing.
If he interferes, he is unqualified to govern the world.

[48c17t] Arthur Waley
Learning consists in adding to one's stock day by day;
The practice of Tao consists in
'Subtracting day by day,
Subtracting and yet again subtracting
Till one has reached inactivity.
But by this very inactivity
Everything can be activated.'
Those who of old won the adherence of all who live under heaven
All did so by not interfering.
Had they interfered,
They would never have won this adherence.

[48c18t] Richard John Lynn
The pursuit of learning means having more each day,
But the pursuit of the Dao means having less each day.
Having less upon having less, eventually one reaches the point where one engages in no conscious action,
yet nothing remains undone.
One who takes all under Heaven as his charge always tends to matters without deliberate action.
But when it comes to one who does take conscious action,
Such a one is not worthy to take all under Heaven as his charge.

By doing nothing everything is done.
He who conquers the world often does so by doing nothing.
When one is compelled to do something,
The world is already beyond his conquering.

[48c20t] Victor H. Mair
The pursuit of learning results in daily increase,
Hearing the Way leads to daily decrease.
Decrease and again decrease, until you reach nonaction.
Through nonaction, no action is left undone.
Should one desire to gain all under heaven,
One should remain ever free of involvements.
For,
Just as surely as one becomes involved,
One is unfit for gaining all under heaven.

[48c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
In the pursuit of learning,
every day something is added.
In the pursuit of the Tao,
every day something is dropped.
Less and less is done
until you come to action with striving.
When you follow this practice,
nothing remains undone.
All under heaven is won by letting things take their course.
Nothing can be gained by interfering.

[48c22t] David H. Li
Aiming at study, one's avarice gains day by day;
Aiming at Direction, one's avarice loses day by day.
Losing [avarice] upon losing [avarice], one ends with laissez-faire.
Laissez-faire permeates everything.
To govern the world, one always practices laissez-faire.
Without laissez-faire, one is unfit to govern the world.

[48c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The practice of ordinary learning increases complexity daily.
The practice of the Tao increases simplicity daily.
Simplicity leads to more simplicity,
Until it reaches the state of pristine nonaction.
Then nothing is done, yet nothing remains undone.
Thus, one who wins the world does so
By not meddling with it, through nonaction, with simplicity.
One who loses the world does so
By meddling with it, through action, with complexity.

The person who pursues his studies
Will be wiser with every passing day,
The person who seeks the Tao
Will decrease with every passing day.
Less and less, he will continue to decrease,
Until he reaches the state of non-action,
And by non-action it is possible to do everything.
Li Chia-mou said:
"He who pursues learning acquires knowledge; he who seeks the Tao casts off his ignorance.
The more the person knows, the more he has to get rid of.
Therefore, adding means nothing more than decreasing."

[48c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
Usually, people read because they want to know - but the more you study the Tao, the less you want knowledge.
And as you want less and less, you come closer to not-doing.
Wu-wei - this is the way to get things done.
The best way to run the world is to let it take its course
- and to get yourself out of the way of it!

[48c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who seeks learning must increase his knowledge every day;
He who seeks the Tao must reduce his knowledge every day;
He reduces and reduces until he reaches the state of inaction.
When reaching the state of inaction, one can succeeds in everything.
To govern the world well, one must take inaction as the principle.
If one governs with too much action, one is not a worthy governor.

[48c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen

In the course of Tao, one decreases every day.

Lao Tze says,
He who devotes himself to learning from day to day increases his knowledge.
He who devotes himself to the Tao from day to day diminishes his intention.
He diminishes it and again diminishes it, till he arrives at doing without intention.
Having arrived at this point of doing without intention, there is nothing left undone.
He who manages the world's affairs does so by giving himself no trouble.
If he troubles himself, he is not qualified to manage the world's affairs.

He who pursues Tao will decrease every day.
He will decrease and continue to decrease,
Till he comes to non-action;
By non-action everything can be done.

The pursuit of learning increases daily.
The pursuit of Tao decreases daily,
Decreasing more and more
Until it reaches the point of inaction.
Inaction: then nothing cannot be done by it,
Therefore the capture of the world should always be done by inactivity.
As for activity, it is insufficient to capture the world.

To learn, one increases day by day;
To cultivate Tao, one reduces day by day.
Reduce and reduce and keep on reducing,
Till the state of non-action is reached.
With non-action there is nothing that cannot be done.
Therefore, he who wins the world
Always resorts to non-action.
Once he resorts to action,
He will not be qualified to win the world.

When you pursue learning, you gain day by day.
When you pursue Tao, you lose day by day.
You lose more and more,
Until you reach thereby the point of no-action.
You do nothing yet leave nothing undone.
You take all under Heaven
Always through no activity.
Should you rely on activity,
You will find it insufficient to take all under Heaven.

To learn daily will increase desires.
To follow Dao will daily reduce desires.
Reduce and reduce desires until there is no coveting.
Dao contrives nothing yet it provides everything.
Therefore to lead the world is to be persistently with no intervention.
If there is any intervention, it will be impossible to lead the world.

[48c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The pursuit of learning is to increase day after day.
The pursuit of Tao is to decrease day after day.
It is to decrease and further decrease until one reaches the point of taking no action.
No action is undertaken, and yet nothing is left undone.
An empire is often brought to order by having no activity.
If one (likes to) undertake activity, he is not qualified to govern the empire.

Когда учатся, имеют каждый день прибыток, а занимаясь Дао, ежедневно терпят умаление.
Умаление следует за умалением, и так доходят до бездействия.
Но в состоянии бездействия непременно действуют.
Поднебесную берут незыблемо посредством недеяния.
А кто при помощи деяний собирается взять Поднебесную, тому для этого их никогда не хватит.

[48c92t] А. А. Маслов
Следуя учению, день ото дня обретают.
Следуя Дао, день ото дня теряют.
Теряя и вновь теряя, достигают недеяния.
В недеянии нет того, что не вершилось бы само собой.
Не свершая дел, неизменно овладевают Поднебесной.
Лишь предашься делам - как станешь недостоин овладеть Поднебесной.

[48c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Кто следует учености, тот день за днем возрастает.
Кто следует Дао-Пути, тот день за днем умаляется: так достигает он недеяния.
Он пребывает в недеянии, но нет ничего им не сделанного.
Такой человек, дел никаких не делая, легко берет Поднебесную: ведь совершения дел недостаточно, чтобы взять Поднебесную.

[48c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Кто посвящает себя учебе, с каждым днем прибавляет.
Кто посвящает себя Дао, с каждым днем уменьшает.
Уменьшает и уменьшает до тех пор, пока не достигнет недеяния: недеяния и не недеяния.
Чтобы овладеть Поднебесной, постоянно осуществляй неслужение (бездействие).
А кто прибегнет к службе (делам), тому не достанет того, чтобы овладеть Поднебесной.

[48c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Кто учится, с каждым днем увеличивает [свои знания].
Кто служит дао, изо дня в день уменьшает [свои желания].
В непрерывном уменьшении [человек] доходит до недеяния.
Нет ничего такого, что бы не делало недеяние.
Поэтому овладение Поднебесной всегда осуществляется посредством недеяния.
Кто действует, не в состоянии овладеть Поднебесной.

[48c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Учение прибавляется со дня на день, но Тао теряется со дня на день.
Эта потеря увеличится и дойдет до желания неделания.
Когда человек дойдет до неделания, то нет того, чего бы не было сделано.
Если в мире все в порядке, то следует завладеть им, но если нет, то не следует.

[48c97t] В. В. Малявин
Посвящать себя учению - значит каждый день приобретать.
Посвящать себя Пути - значит каждый день терять.

Потеряй и еще потеряй - так дойдешь до недеяния.
Ничего не будешь делать - и все будет делаться.
Завладеет миром тот, кто никогда не занимается делами,
А тот, кто занимается делами, никогда не завладеет миром.

[48c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский

Осуществляя учение, ежедневно прибавляют.
Осуществляя Путь, ежедневно убавляют.
Убавляя еще и от убавления, достигают отсутствия осуществления.
В отсутствии осуществления отсутствует не-осуществленное.
Овладевая нисхождением Небес, будь постоянно в отсутствии ситуаций.
Когда же возникает состояние наличия ситуаций, этого недостаточно для овладения нисхождением Небес.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Forty-Nine

758/2593

[49c01t] Robert G. Henricks
{The Sage} constantly has no [set] mind;
He takes the mind of the common people as his mind.
Those who are good he regards as good;
Those who are not good he also regards as good.
[In this way] {he attains} goodness.
Those who are trustworthy he trusts;
And those who are not trustworthy he also trusts.
[In this way] he gets their trust.
As for the Sage's presence in the world - he is one with it.
And with the world he merges his mind.
The common people all fix their eyes and ears on him.
And the Sage treats them all as his children.

[49c02t] John C. H. Wu
THE Sage has no interests of his own,
But takes the interests of the people as his own.
He is kind to the kind;
He is also kind to the unkind:
For Virtue is kind.
He is faithful to the faithful;
He is also faithful to the unfaithful:
For Virtue is faithful.
In the midst of the world, the Sage is shy and self-effacing.
For the sake of the world he keeps his heart in its nebulous state.
All the people strain their ears and eyes:
The Sage only smiles like an amused infant.

[49c03t] D. C. Lau
The sage has no mind of his own.
He takes as his own the mind of the people.
Those who are good I treat as good.
Those who are not good I also treat as good.
In so doing I gain in goodness.
Those who are of good faith I have faith in.
Those who are lacking in good faith I also have faith in.
In so doing I gain in good faith.
The sage in his attempt to distract the mind of the empire seeks urgently to muddle it.
The people all have something to occupy their eyes and ears, and the sage treats them all like children.

[49c04t] R. L. Wing
Evolved Individuals have no fixed mind;

They make the mind of the People their mind.
To those who are good, I am good;
To those who are not good, I am also good.
Goodness is Power.
Of those who trust, I am trusting;
Of those who do not trust, I am also trusting.
Trust is Power.
The Evolved Individuals in the world
Attract the world and merge with its mind.
The People all focus their eyes and ears;
Evolved Individuals all act as infants.

[49c05t] Ren Jiyu
The sage has no fixed personal will,
He regards the people's will as his own.
I take the people's will, if it is good, as good.
I take the people's will, if it is not good, as good too.
Thus goodness is attained.
I believe the people's will, if it is believable.
I also believe the people's will, even if it is unbelievable.
Thus faith is attained.
The sage dwells under Heaven, harmoniously keeping all the people under Heaven in confusion, (While all the people concentrate upon their own eyes and ears).
Thus the sage treats them all as ignorant infants without desires.

[49c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The sage has no mind of his own.
He is aware of the needs of others.
I am good to people who are good.
I am also good to people who are not good.
Because Virtue is goodness.
I have faith in people who are faithful.
I also have faith in people who are not faithful.
Because Virtue is faithfulness.
The sage is shy and humble - to the world he seems confusing.
Men look to him and listen.
He behaves like a little child.

[49c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Sage does not have a fixed mind different from that of others.
He takes the mind of any of his people as his own mind.
If people are good, I shall be good to them.
If people are not good, I shall also be good to them.
This way I am really good.
If people are truthful, I shall be truthful to them.
If people are not truthful, I shall also be truthful to them.

This way I am really truthful.
The Sage keeps an undiscriminating mind
for the sake of all under heaven.
While people use their eyes and ears to discriminate,
The Sage's mind is always unsuspecting and innocent like an infant's.

[49c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The great men did not have a fixed will;
they made the people's will their own.
When people are kind, I treat them kindly;
when people are unkind, I still treat them kindly;
this is called the kindness of DE.
When people are credible, I have faith in them;
when people are not credible, I still have faith in them;
this is called the faith of DE.
The great men were very cautious when governing their country;
They made the people simple and plain.
The people focused on their every movement, and the great men treated them like their children.

[49c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF CONCESSION
The wise man has no fixed opinions to call his own.
He accommodates himself to the minds of others.
I would return good for good; I would also return good for evil.
Virtue is good.
I would meet trust with trust; I would likewise meet suspicion with confidence.
Virtue is trustful.
The wise man lives in the world with modest restraint, and his heart goes out in sympathy to all men.
The people give him their confidence, and he regards them all as his children.

[49c10t] James Legge
The sage has no invariable mind of his own;
he makes the mind of the people his mind.
To those who are good (to me), I am good;
and to those who are not good (to me), I am also good;
- and thus (all) get to be good.
To those who are sincere (with me), I am sincere;
and to those who are not sincere (with me), I am also sincere;
- and thus (all) get to be sincere.
The sage has in the world an appearance of indecision, and keeps his mind in a state of indifference to all.
The people all keep their eyes and ears directed to him, and he deals with them all as his children.

[49c11t] David Hinton
A sage's mind is never his own:
he makes the hundred-fold people's mind his mind.
I treat the noble with nobility and the ignoble too:

such is the nobility of Integrity.
I treat the sincere with sincerity
and the insincere too:
such is the sincerity of Integrity.
A sage dwells within all beneath heaven
at ease, mind mingled through it all.
The hundred-fold people devote their eyes and ears,
but a sage inhabits it all like a child.

[49c12t] Chichung Huang
The sage man never had a predisposed heart,
Taking the hundred family's heart
To be the concern of his heart.
Good people - he was good to them;
Evil people - he was also good to them.
Goodness was attained.
Honest people - he was honest to them;
Dishonest people - he was also honest to them.
Honesty was attained.
When the sage man presided over the empire,
Unbiased, he muddled their hearts
For all under heaven.
The hundred family names
All lent him their ears and eyes;
The sage man turned them all into infants.

[49c13t] Ellen M. Chen
The sage has no set mind (ch'ang hsin),
He takes the mind of the people as his mind.
The good (shan) I am good to them,
The not good I am also good to them.
This is the goodness of nature (te).
The trustworthy (hsin) I trust them,
The not trustworthy I also trust them.
This is the trust of nature (te).
The sage in the world,
Mixes (hun) the minds (hsin) of all.
The people lift up their eyes and ears,
The sage treats them all like children.

[49c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A Sage's heart (will) is not fixed on any permanent intentions,
His heart is attuned to the desires [for survival] of his people.
[A Sage maintains the following guiding principles:]
"I am good to good people, as well as to people who are not good;
Because virtuous behavior will induce more Te among people!

I keep my promise to trustworthy people, as well as to untrustworthy people;
Because virtuous behavior will incite people to be truthful!"
When a Sage takes action in the world, he harmonizes people's hearts (desires) with great caution and sensitivity;
People, in return, will collect and inform him all their observations and opinions;
A Sage will then [weigh all options and] treat all people equally as if they were all his own children.

[49c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The sage has no heart of his own, but takes the heart of the people as his own.
He is good to the good; he is also good to the not-good: for Virtue is good.
He is faithful to the faithful; he is also faithful to the unfaithful: for Virtue is faithful.
In the midst of the world, the sage recoils.
For the sake of the world he keeps his heart nebulous.
All the people strain their ears and eyes: he treats them as innocent children.

[49c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Sages have no mind-set.
They take common people's concerns as theirs.
Good people, I treat them well.
Bad people, I also treat them well.
This is the virtue of kindness.
Good people, I trust them properly.
Bad people, I also trust them properly.
This is virtue of trust.
Sages in the world have no bias.
They mix their mind with that of common people.
This is why people follow them.
Sages treat people as if they were their own children.

[49c17t] Arthur Waley
The Sage has no heart of his own;
He uses the heart of the people as his heart.
Of the good man I approve,
But of the bad I also approve,
And thus he gets goodness.
The truthful man I believe, but the liar I also believe,
And thus he gets truthfulness.
The Sage, in his dealings with the world, seems like one dazed with fright;
For the world's sake he dulls his wits.
The Hundred Families all the time strain their eyes and ears,
The Sage all the time sees and hears no more than an infant sees and hears.

[49c18t] Richard John Lynn
The sage has no constant heart/mind [changxin] but takes the heart/mind of the common folk as his heart/mind.
The good I regard as good;

those who are not good I also regard as good.
This is to transform goodness into virtue.
The trustworthy I trust;
those who are not trustworthy I also trust.
This is to transform trust into virtue.
The sage resides among all under Heaven with perfect equanimity and impartiality and for the sake of all under Heaven merges his heart/mind with theirs.
[The common folk all fix their ears and eyes on him,]
And the sage treats them all as his children.

[49c19t] Lin Yutang
THE PEOPLE'S HEARTS
The Sage has no decided opinions and feelings,
But regards the people's opinions and feelings as his own.
The good ones I declare good;
The bad ones I also declare good.
That is the goodness of Virtue.
The honest ones I believe;
The liars I also believe.
That is the faith of Virtue.
The Sage dwells in the world peacefully, harmoniously.
The people of the world are brought into a community of heart,
And the Sage regards them all as his own children.

[49c20t] Victor H. Mair
The sage never has a mind of his own;
He considers the minds of the common people to be his mind.
Treat well those who are good,
Also treat well those who are not good;
thus is goodness attained.
Be sincere to those who are sincere,
Also be sincere to those who are insincere;
thus is sincerity attained.
The sage is self-effacing in his dealings with all under heaven, and bemuddles his mind for the sake of all under heaven.
The common people all rivet their eyes and ears upon him,
And the sage makes them all chuckle like children.

[49c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The True Person does not have an individual heart but uses the heart of the people.
I am kind to those who are kind.
I am also kind to those who are not kind.
Thus,
there is an increase in kindness.
I keep faith with those who are in good faith.
I also keep faith with those who lack good faith.

Thus,
there is an increase of good faith.
The True Person is detached and humble and to the world appears confusing.
The people all strain their eyes and ears, yet the True Person remains childlike.

[49c22t] David H. Li
The sage has no preconceived notion at any time;
the people's notion is the sage's notion.
I treat a person, who is good, well;
I treat a person, who is not good, also well.
This is for goodness's sake.
I trust a person who is worthy of trust;
I also trust a person who is not worthy of trust.
This is for trustworthiness's sake.
The sage, in governing the world, holds back personal notions in favor of the people's.
The sage treats the people, focusing on themselves, as infants.

[49c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The sage does not have a set mind.
His mind is unconditioned, and
He regards the minds of all people as his own.
He is good to those who are good.
He is good to those who are not good.
For his virtue is goodness itself.
He is in integrity with those of integrity.
He is in integrity with those without integrity.
For his virtue is integrity itself.
The sage, to serve this world,
In compassion merges his mind with all minds.
People rivet their eyes and ears upon differences amongst them.
The sage, with childlike innocence, sees one humanity in all.

[49c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The sage has no self that he can call "mine,"
He turns the self of the people into his own.
I act with goodness toward the good,
I act with goodness toward the bad, too,
And so the good is contagious.
I relate with trust to the person who is worthy of trust,
I relate with trust to the person who is not worthy of trust, too,
And so trust is contagious.
The sage lives in the world in his victory and rules the world with his simplicity.
But when all the people look at him and listen to him,
The sage takes care of them, like a mother takes care of her children.

'The sage is never opinionated,
He listens to the mind of the people.'
I am kind to people when they are kind to me.
I am kind to them even if they hate me.
Virtue - te - is its own reward.
I trust those who trust me,
I also trust those who have no faith in me:
What I give, I receive.
A sage is self-effacing and mindful of offence.
He sets himself as his own example.
How shall I treat you, my son?
Like a child.

[49c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The sage often has no will,
He takes the people's will as his own.
What is good I treat with goodness;
What is not good I also treat with goodness.
Thus I obtain goodness.
Those who are of faith, I put faith in;
Those who are of no faith, I also put faith in.
Thus I obtain faith.
When the sage governs the world,
He simplifies his as well as the people's minds.
The people are all preoccupied with their eyes and ears,
The sage helps them return to the childhood state.

[49c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The sage has no mind of his own.
He takes the minds of the people as his own.
Whatever others like, he likes too.
Whatever others dislike, he likes too.
This is what is meant by virtuous goodness.
Whatever others trust, he trusts too.
Whatever others mistrust, he trusts too.
This is what is meant by virtuous trust.
The sage leads his life with vigilance.
He merges his mind with all others' under Heaven.
People are used to hearing and seeing the behaviour of the sage and so they are influenced, and become pure again, as a newborn child.

[49c28t] Liu Qixuan
The best ruler has no personal ideas
And what the people think is what he/she thinks.
He/She is good to people that are good.
He/She is also good to people that are not good.

It is the goodness typical of the Way server.
He/She trusts people that are trustworthy.
He/She also trusts people that are not trustworthy.
It is the trust typical of the Way server.
The best ruler gives each breath of his/her life to the world.
He/She holds to just a simple mind,
But is looked up to and listened to.
He/She takes the whole world to be his/her children.

[49c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
People's Minds
Lao Tze says,
The sage doesn't have an invariable mind, he takes people's minds as his own mind.
Those who are good to him;
he treats well;
and those who are not good to him;
he treats well too;
thus all become good to each other.
To those who are sincere;
he is sincere;
and to those who are not sincere;
he is also sincere;
thus all become sincere.
The sage in the world pays scrupulous attention to everything.
However, he treats his living with indifference.
The people all offer their eyes and ears to help him, and he deals with them all as his children.

[49c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
The Sage has no self (to call his own);
He makes the self of the people his self.
To the good I act with goodness;
To the bad I also act with goodness:
Thus goodness is attained.
To the faithful I act with faith;
To the faithless I also act with faith:
Thus faith is attained.
The Sage lives in the world in concord, and rules over the world in simplicity.
Yet what all the people turn their ears and eyes to,
The Sage looks after as a mother does her children.

[49c31t] Paul J. Lin
The Sage has no constant heart [mind].
He takes the people's heart as his heart.
Good men, I treat well.
Bad men, I also treat well.
Therein I attain goodness.

Honest men, I trust.
Dishonest men, I also trust.
Therein I attain trust.
The Sage in his position in the world,
Yieldingly harmonizes the people's heart with simplicity.
The people all strain their ears and eyes.
And the Sage regards them all as infants.

[49c32t] Michael LaFargue
The Wise Person is always a man without a mind - he takes the mind of the hundred clans as his mind.
Those who are good, I am good to them;
those who are not good, I am also good to them -
Te is good.
Those who are honest, I am honest with them;
those who are not honest, I am also honest with them -
Te is honest.
The Wise Person,
lives in the world all drawn in,
for the world's sake he keeps his mind muddled.
The hundred clans,
all strain their eyes and ears toward him.
The Wise Person treats them all as his children.

[49c33t] Cheng Lin
The Sage has no fixed prejudices, but always regards the hearts of all mankind as his own.
Those who are good, he treats well;
those who are not good, he also treats well.
Thus he finds only good men.
Those who are sincere, he believes;
those who are not sincere, he also believes.
Thus he finds only sincere men.
The Sage wishes that all men in this world will soon return to simplicity.
While people in general strain their ears and eyes, the Sage wishes to have them all sealed.

[49c34t] Yi Wu
The sage's mind is not unchangeable;
He regards the people's mind as his mind.
He is good to those who are good;
He also is good to those who are not good.
This is the virtue of goodness.
He trusts those who are trustworthy;
He also trusts those who are not trustworthy.
This is the virtue of trustfulness.
The sage, in the world,
Harmoniously merges his mind with the world's.

The sage has no preconceived ideas.
He simply takes the lead from his subjects.
He treats the good people with kindness.
He also treats the bad people with kindness.
He thus cultivates the virtue of kindness.
He treats those who are trustworthy with sincerity.
He also treats those who are not trustworthy with sincerity.
Thus, he is cultivating the virtue of sincerity.
The sage always handles his affairs in an amicable way.
He steers his subjects towards a simple and unpretentious life.
Everyone pays attention to him and asks for guidance.
He nurtures them tenderly as if caring for babies.

[49c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One with wholeness of virtue has an unconditioned mind.
He regards the mind of all being as his own mind.
He is kind to the kind.
He is also kind to the unkind,
for the subtle nature of the universe is kind.
He is faithful to the faithful.
He is also faithful to the unfaithful,
for the integral virtue of the universe is undeceiving.
In the midst of the world,
he dissolves all minds into harmonious Oneness.
All people strain their eyes and ears for excitement.
One of deep virtue brings all people back to their childlike-heartedness.

[49c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
The wise man is free from his own mind,
But identifies the people's minds as mind.
He considers good as good,
But he also considers not-good as good.
Thus, his attainment of non-differentiation is successful.
He considers truth as truth,
But he also considers not-truth as truth.
Thus, his attainment of non-differentiation is perfected.
In the world, the wise conscientiously non-differentiates
The minds of the people.
Because people rely on their senses of hearing and seeing,
The wise treats them as innocent children.

Trust in Virtue
Ren Teh
The Sage has no fixed state of mind;
His reflects the state of mind of the people.
To the good, I show goodness;
To the not good, I also show goodness;
Hence goodness is realized.
To the sincere, I show sincerity;
To the insincere, I also show sincerity;
Hence sincerity is realized.
While in the world, the Sage is very anxious
To harmonize his mind for the harmony of the world.
To him all the people turn their eyes and ears;
He treats them all alike as children.

[49c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The sage has no fixed mind;
He takes the people's mind as his own.
I accept as good those who are good;
I also accept as good those who are not good.
Such is Te's goodness.
I trust those who trust;
I also trust those who do not trust.
Such is Te's trust.
The sage, in ruling all under Heaven,
Makes his mind one with it.
All his subjects set their ears and eyes on him.
He regards them all as his children.

[49c40t] Tao Huang
The sage is always without his own mind.
He uses people's minds as his mind.
He is kind to those who are kind.
He is also kind to those who are not kind.
It is the kindness of Action itself.
He is trustworthy to those who are trustworthy.
He is also trustworthy to those who are not trustworthy.
It is the trust of Action itself.
In the world, the sage inhales.
For the world, the sage keeps the mind simple.
All people are fixated on the ears and eyes,
While the sage always smiles like a child.

[49c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The sage ruler had no prejudice of his own.
He made his mind to be based on the mind of the people.

If it was perfect, he liked it;
if it was not perfect, he also liked it:
then perfection was attained.
If it was true, he understood it;
if it was not true, he also understood it:
then truth was attained.
Indifferently, indifferently sage rulers were in the world.
Effortlessly, effortlessly they ruled the world.
The people turned their eyes and ears toward them.
Sage rulers treated all people like their own children.

[49c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The sage has no fixed (personal) ideas.
He regards the people's ideas as his own.
I treat those who are good with goodness,
And I also treat those who are not good with goodness.
Thus goodness is attained.
I am honest to those who are honest,
And I am also honest to those who are not honest.
Thus honesty is attained.
The sage, in the government of his empire, has no subjective viewpoint.
His mind forms a harmonious whole with that of his people.
They all lend their eyes and ears, and he treats them all as infants.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty

[50c01t] Robert G. Henricks

{We come out into} life and go back into death.
{The companions} of life {are thirteen};
The companions of {death} are thirteen;
And yet people, because they regard life as LIFE, in all of their actions move toward the thirteen that belong to the realm of death.
Now, why is this so?
It's because they regard life as LIFE.
You've no doubt heard of those who are good at holding on to life:
When walking through hills, they don't avoid rhinos and tigers;
When they go into battle, they don't put on armor or shields;
The rhino has no place to probe with its horn;
The tiger finds no place to put its claws.
And weapons find no place to hold {their blades}.
{Now}, why is this so?
Because there is no place for death in them.

[50c02t] John C. H. Wu

WHEN one is out of Life, one is in Death.
The companions of life are thirteen;
the companions of Death are thirteen;
and, when a living person moves into the Realm of Death, his companions are also thirteen.
How is this?
Because he draws upon the resources of Life too heavily.
It is said that he who knows well how to live meets no tigers or wild buffaloes on his road, and comes out from the battle-ground untouched by the weapons of war.
For, in him, a buffalo would find no butt for his horns, a tiger nothing to lay his claws upon, and a weapon of war no place to admit its point.
How is this?
Because there is no room for Death in him.

[50c03t] D. C. Lau

When going one way means life and going the other means death, three in ten will be comrades in life, three in ten will be comrades in death, and there are those who value life and as a result move into the realm of death, and these also number three in ten.
Why is this so? Because they set too much store by life.
I have heard it said that one who excels in safeguarding his own life does not meet with rhinoceros or tiger when travelling on land nor is he touched by weapons when charging into an army.
There is nowhere for the rhinoceros to pitch its horn;
There is nowhere for the tiger to place its claws;
There is nowhere for the weapon to lodge its blade.
Why is this so? Because for him there is no realm of death.

[50c04t] R. L. Wing
As life goes out, death comes in.
Life has thirteen paths;
Death has thirteen paths.
Human life arrives at the realm of death
Also in thirteen moves.
Why is this so?
Because life is lived lavishly.
Now, as it is well known,
Those skilled in attracting life Can travel across the land
And not meet a rhinoceros or tiger.
When the military comes in,
Their defense cannot be attacked.
The rhinoceros is without a place to thrust its horn.
The tiger is without a place to affix its claw.
The military is without a place to admit its blade.
Why is this so?
Because they are without the realm of death.

[50c05t] Ren Jiyu
When one is born, he will eventually naturally meet his death.
Three out of every ten people will enjoy long life,
While three out of every ten people will meet premature death.
Chances that one strives to live and will die are also three out of ten.
And for what reason?
Because that one intensively craves life (and contrarily he fails to attain his objective).
I heard that one who is good at preserving his life is not afraid of meeting tigers or rhinoceroses when traveling on the land, and he will not be injured or killed in fighting battles.
(To those who are good at preserving their lives)
The rhinoceros cannot butt its horns against him,
The tiger cannot fasten its claws in him,
And weapons cannot thrust their blades into him.
For what reason are all these?
Because he is out of the range of death.

[50c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Between birth and death,
Three in ten are followers of life,
Three in ten are followers of death,
And men just passing from birth to death also number three in ten.
Why is this so?
Because they live their lives on the gross level.
He who knows how to live can walk abroad
Without fear of rhinoceros or tiger.
He will not be wounded in battle.

For in him rhinoceroses can find no place to thrust their horn,
Tigers no place to use their claws,
And weapons no place to pierce.
Why is this so?
Because he has no place for death to enter.

[50c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Anyone who is born dies.
If 13 people are born
All 13 people will eventually die.
From birth to life,
From life to death,
The great earth will afford the places to live and to die for exactly 13.
Why is this so?
It is because the mind cherishes the belief that living is a privilege and not a natural right.
I have heard that those who are good at conserving and preserving life
Seldom meet tigers and horned animals when they move around.
If they should join the military forces,
They would not have the need to combat.
Horned animals will have no way to cast their horns on their bodies,
Nor will tigers find a place to lay their claws.
Even soldiers' swords will not hurt them.
Why is this so?
Because such people will never die.

[50c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Of people's lives from beginning to end,
One-third live long,
One-third die young,
And one-third live in the beginning, but cause their deaths half way by themselves.
Why do people die in the middle of their lives?
Because they live too well and do not cherish their lives.
It is said that those who know how to live long never come across a rhinoceros or a tiger;
When they are in battle, they never get hurt.
The rhinoceros has no place to impale them with its horn,
The tiger has no place to attack them with its claws,
And the weapon has no place to hurt them with its blade.
Why is this? Because they never get themselves into these deadly places.

[50c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VALUE OF LIFE
Men go forth from Life and enter into Death.
The Gates of Life are thirteen in number; and the same are the Gates of Death.
By as many ways does Life pass quickly into Death. And wherefore?
Because men strive only after the Sensuous Life.
It has been said that one who knows how to safeguard Life can go through the country without protection against the rhinoceros and tiger.

He may enter into battle without fear of the sword.
The rhinoceros finds no place wherein to drive his horn.
The tiger finds no place wherein to fix his claws.
The sword finds no place wherein to thrust itself.
Why is this?
It is because he has overcome Death.

[50c10t] James Legge
Men come forth and live;
they enter (again) and die.
Of every ten three are ministers of life (to themselves);
and three are ministers of death.
There are also three in every ten whose aim is to live, but whose movements tend to the land (or place) of death.
And for what reason?
Because of their excessive endeavours to perpetuate life.
But I have heard that he who is skilful in managing the life entrusted to him for a time travels on the land without having to shun rhinoceros or tiger, and enters a host without having to avoid buff coat or sharp weapon.
The rhinoceros finds no place in him into which to thrust its horn, nor the tiger a place in which to fix its claws, nor the weapon a place to admit its point.
And for what reason?
Because there is in him no place of death.

[50c11t] David Hinton
People born into life enter death.
Constant companion in life
and in death,
this body is the kill-site animating their lives.
And isn't that because
they think life is the fullness of life?
I've heard those who encompass the whole of life could walk on and on without meeting rhinoceros or tiger, could charge into armies without feeling shield or sword.
A rhinoceros would find nowhere to gore them,
a tiger nowhere to claw them,
a sword nowhere to slice them.
And isn't that because
for them there's no kill-site?

All move to the realm of death
Also constitute three tenths.
Why so?
Because they seek extravagant living.
I hear that those who excel in preserving life,
Walking in mountains,
Shun neither rhinoceros nor tiger;
Entering a battle,
Incur wounds from neither weapon nor armor.
The rhinoceros has nowhere to thrust its horn;
The tiger has nowhere to press its claws;
Weapons have nowhere to lodge their blades.
Why so?
Because they do not belong to the realm of death.

[50c13t] Ellen M. Chen
From coming out to life to going back to death:
Those companions (t'u) of life,
They are one-third (shih-yu-san);
Those companions of death,
They are one-third;
Those living but moving toward the place of death,
They are also one-third.
Why?
Because of the intense (hou) life-producing activity.
I have heard that one who knows how to nourish life,
On land meets no tigers or wild buffaloes,
In battle needs to wear no armors or weapons,
A wild buffalo has nowhere to butt its horns,
A tiger has nowhere to sink its claws,
A weapon has nowhere to enter its blade.
Why?
Because such a one has no place of death.

[50c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Birth is the movement of coming out [of the obscurity to join the world];
Death is the movement of going in [to the obscurity from this world];
For every ten people [of the existing population], three more new-borns will join them;
For every ten people [of the existing population], three will die [naturally];
Among the living, due to rash movements (wars and bad governments), three out of ten will also die unnaturally;
Why is the living condition of most people so [lamentable]?
It is all because people, in order to survive, must suffer enormously merely to make ends meet!
I have heard that those, who know how to conserve life, would evade [confrontation with] fierce rhinos and tigers when walking in the wild;
They would also avoid wearing armor and carrying weapons when they were in the army;

In this manner:
Fierce rhinos have no chance to use their horns,
Ferocious tigers have no occasion to brandish their claws,
And enemies have no opportunity to utilize their blades (weapons).
Why?
All of the above are examples of enhancing people's chances of survival through evading deadly situations.

[50c15t] Tien Cong Tran
"Out" is life; "In" is death.
Three in ten are followers of life.
Three in ten are followers of death.
Three in ten live as man but act in the realm of death.
How is this?
Because they all crave life.
It is said that he who knows well how to live meets no tigers or rhinoceroses on his road, and comes into the battlefield untouched by the weapons.
For, in him, a rhinoceros would find no place for his horns, a tiger no place to lay his claws upon, and a weapon no place to lodge its point.
How is this?
Because there is no room for death in him.

[50c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
In the life and death cycle,
Three in ten enjoy natural longevity,
Three in ten die normally.
There are some, three in ten, who die unnaturally.
Why it is so?
Because they indulge themselves excessively.
It is well known that those who are good at protect themselves steer clear of rhinos and tigers when walking, And hardly hurt by armed enemy.
This is because rhinos cannot find them to gore,
Tigers cannot find them to claw,
Enemies cannot get a chance to use weapons upon them.
What is the reason?
They never put themselves into a fatal situation.

[50c17t] Arthur Waley
He who aims at life achieves death.
If the 'companions of life' are thirteen, so likewise are the 'companions of death' thirteen.
How is it that the 'death-spots' in man's life and activity are also thirteen?
It is because men feed life too grossly.
It is said that he who has a true hold on life, when he walks on land does not meet tigers or wild buffaloes; in battle he is not touched by weapons of war.
Indeed, a buffalo that attacked him would find nothing for its horns to butt, a tiger would find nothing for its claws to tear, a weapon would find no place for its point to enter in.
And why?

Because such men have no 'death-spot' in them.

[50c18t] Richard John Lynn
We emerge into life, enter into death.
Three out of ten are adherents of life;
three out of ten are adherents of death;
and there are three out of ten whose way of life also leads them to death.
Why is this so?
It is due to placing too much emphasis on life.
For I have heard that one good at preserving life, when traveling by land, does not encounter the wild buffalo and, when entering the army, suffers no wound from weapons.
The wild water buffalo has no way to strike at him with horn, the tiger has no way to strike at him with claw, and weapons of war have no way to use point or edge against him.
Why is this so?
It is due to the fact that he stays free of the land of death.

[50c19t] Lin Yutang
THE PRESERVING OF LIFE
Out of life, death enters.
The companions (organs) of life are thirteen;
The companions (organs) of death are (also) thirteen.
What send man to death in this life are also (these) thirteen.
How is it so?
Because of the intense activity of multiplying life.
It has been said that he who is a good preserver of his life
Meets no tigers or wild buffaloes on land,
Is not vulnerable to weapons in the field of battle.
The horns of the wild buffalo are powerless against him;
The paws of the tiger are useless against him;
The weapons of the soldier cannot avail against him.
How is it so?
Because he is beyond death.

[50c20t] Victor H. Mair

Three out of ten are partners of life,
Three out of ten are partners of death,
And the people whose every movement leads them to the land of death because they cling to life
Are also three out of ten.
Now,
What is the reason for this?
It is because they cling to life.
Indeed,

When going off one way means living and going off the other way means dying, three in ten are companions of Life,
three in ten are companions of Death,
and three in ten value Life but drift toward Death.
Why is all this so?
Because, these people are too greedy about living.

Three in ten move [prematurely] into death's realm.
Why so?
Because they care for their lives too well.
Those who care for themselves, it is said, are unlikely to encounter rhinoceroses or tigers on land, or face weaponry and soldiers in war.
Rhinoceroses have no occasion to use their horns;
tigers have no occasion to use their claws;
soldiers have no occasion to use their bayonets.
Why so?
Because they care for themselves to not move into death's realm.

[50c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Life is appearance; death is disappearance.
Three out of ten live a long life.
Three out of ten live a short life.
Three out of ten bring upon themselves an untimely death,

Because they cling too much to outer pleasures of life.
He who maintains a balanced life in accordance with the Tao,
Does not meet tigers or rhinoceroses in the wilderness,
Does not suffer attacks from the enemy in the battlefield.
Upon him the tiger has no place to fasten its claws,
The rhinoceros has no place to jab its horn,
The weapon has no place to pierce its blade.
Why is this so?
Because in him there is no room for death to enter.

[50c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
It is easy to hold something that is motionless,
It is easy to create a mold for something that is not lacking,
It is easy to break something that is breakable,
It is easy to scatter a thing that is small.
Take care of a thing before it happens,
Arrange a thing before it gets out of hand.
The simple man generally fails in his affairs on the verge of success.
Take care of the end as you do of the beginning,
And you will not fail.

[50c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
In the normal way of things every three in ten live long, while every three in ten die young - and for those just passing through their lives (that is, every three in ten) the chances are the same.
Why is this?
Well, it all depends on how identified they are with the mundane world of matter.
People who know how to live will never do things that threaten their lives, any more than a traveller who knows will run into a tiger or a wild buffalo.
Living well is like wearing a kind of armour that nothing can penetrate.
Living badly is like being attacked!
A practised sage is invulnerable to attacks that punch like a buffalo's horn, that claw like a leaping tiger - or that stab like a knife in the back.
And why is this?
Because he is impeccable.

[50c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Men live when given to birth
And die when being buried.
One third of them are long-lived;
One third of them are short-lived;
One third of them die from their own choices though they could have lived longer;
Why in such cases?
Because they are too eager to live longer.

It is heard that he who is good at preserving his life
Does not meet with the rhinoceros or tiger when traveling on land,
Nor is he wounded in war,
For the rhinoceros has no use for its horns
And the tiger has no use for its claws;
The weapons have no use for their blades.
Why in such cases?
Because there is no realm of death for him to enter.

[50c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Emotions and longings are life.
Passions and desires are death.
There are thirteen kinds of life:
seven are emotions and they refer to the gates of the mind;
six are longings and they refer to the gates of the body.
There are also thirteen kinds of death:
seven are passions and they refer to the gates of the mind;
six are desires and they refer to the gates of the body.
These thirteen kinds of life and death rule also human beings, because one treasures life.
He who is good at conserving his life will not meet the rhinoceros and the tiger on his journey.
He can enter a battle without being hurt.
The rhinoceros cannot attack him with its horn,
the tiger cannot scratch him with its claws,
troops cannot use their swords against him.
That is only because he has no place for death to enter.

[50c28t] Liu Qixuan
Life and death co-exist in the same process.
The chance for life is thirty percent.
The chance for death is thirty percent.
The chance for death in the life's area is also thirty percent.
Why?
Because some live too actively for their lives.
It has been said that people good at living
Do not meet with tigers on land,
Or receive hits in battle.
Tigers can have no chance to apply their paws.
Weapons can have no chance to exert their edges.
Why?
Because people good at living have no chance of death.

Those men who depend on the three and ten to live;
die by the three and ten also.
Those who were living will be sent to the place of death by the three and ten.
And for what reason?
Because they made excessive stores to perpetuate their life.
For I have heard it is said that one who excels in safeguarding his own life does not shun the rhinoceros or tiger when travelling on land, nor does he avoid buff coat and sharp weapon at entering a host.
The rhinoceros finds no place to fix its claw on him, nor the weapon a place to admit its point on him.
And for what reason?
Because there is no place of death on him.

[50c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Men go out of life and enter into death.
The parts (proportions) of life are three in ten; the parts of death are also three in ten.
Men that from birth move towards the region of death are also three in ten.
Why is it so?
Because of their redundant effort in seeking to live.
But only those who do nothing for the purpose of living are better than those who prize their lives.
For I have heard that he who knows well how to conserve life, when travelling on land, does not meet the rhinoceros or the tiger; when going to a battle he is not attacked by arms and weapons.
The rhinoceros can find nowhere to drive his horn; the tiger can find nowhere to put his claws; the weapons can find nowhere to thrust their blades.
Why is it so?
Because he is beyond the region of death.

[50c31t] Paul J. Lin
Coming out means life; going in means death.
Three-tenths of men are disciples of life.
Three-tenths of men are disciples of death.
Three-tenths of men actually have life, but strive for death through activity.
Why is this so?
Because they over-nourish themselves.
So I have heard that he who is capable of sustaining life
Can travel on land without ever encountering a rhinoceros or tiger;
Can enter a battle without ever being touched by arms and weapons.
The rhinoceros cannot charge him with its horns.
The tiger cannot attack him with its claws.
Weapons have no place to lodge their blades.
Why is this so?
Because he has no grounds for death.

Why?
Because they live life so lavishly.
So we hear:
One who Excels at fostering life,
"travels on land without meeting rhinoceros or tiger, enters combat without armor or weapon."
The rhinoceros finds no place to jab its horn,
the tiger finds no place to lay its claws,
a weapon finds no place where its point can enter.
Why?
Because he has no death spot.

[50c33t] Cheng Lin
Man begins with life, and ends with death.
During the span of man's existence,
three-tenths of it are passed in the processes of growth;
three-tenths are passed in the processes of decay.
That which is meant for the development of life but which is passed in the processes of decay also constitutes three-tenths.
Why is this so?
Because man over-taxes the life force.
It has been said that he who knows how to preserve life avoids the rhinoceros and tigers when travelling by land;
dodges arms and weapons when engaged in battle with a hostile army.
He sees to it that the rhinoceros have no opportunity to use their horns;
that tigers have no opportunity to use their claws;
that enemies have no opportunity to use their weapons.
Why is this so?
Because man avoids the risks of death.

[50c34t] Yi Wu
From birth to death,
One-third are fellows of life,
One-third are fellows of death,
And one-third are fellows of life who move to grounds for death.
Why is this?
Because they are overly attached to their lives.
It is said that those who are good at sustaining life
Travel on land without meeting wild buffalos or tigers,
Enter battle without protection of armor or weapons.
In them, a wild buffalo finds no place to gore with its horns,
A tiger finds no place to seize with its claws,
A weapon finds no place to pierce with its blade.
Why is this?
Because they have no grounds for death.

[50c35t] Han Hiong Tan

From the time you were born, you are dying.
About one-third of people are luxuriating in longevity,
Another third are enjoying a normal life span but travelling along the path towards a natural death.
The other third are heading on the path towards a premature death.
The cause of premature death is due to overindulgence in life.
I have heard that people, who master the art of living,
Can avoid meeting a rhinoceros or tiger in the jungle.
They can avoid getting hurt by any sharp weapons in a battle.
The rhinoceros cannot employ its horn against them.
The tiger cannot attack them with its paws.
Sharp weapons cannot inflict injury on them.
Why is this so?
They simply manage to stay away from the circle of death.

[50c36t] Hua-Ching Ni

That one's physical life will begin with birth and end in death seems a surety.
Also, in an individual life, the special opportunities of life and death are very much equal.
When there is an opportunity for death,
there is an opportunity for life also.
When there is an unusual opportunity for life,
it pulls one's life closer to death.
Aside from such opportunities,
there is the personal effort to maintain normalcy.
This is much more reliable than the special opportunities which place one's life on the verge of life and death.
People of awareness value normalcy and forsake seeking special opportunities which hold the promise of increasing the strength of living.
Such things are eventually only ways to speed up one's life.
One who can enjoy his natural life is content with the life of simple normalcy.
As I was told, one who knows how to tend his life with simple normalcy, does not meet wild animals on the road or know the touch of weapons during war.
The mighty horns of the rhinoceros,
the powerful claws of the tiger,
the sharp blades of weapons,
find nowhere to pierce him.
Why is this so?
Because his mind holds no uncanny thoughts he gives death no opportunity.

Importance of Life
Kuei Sheng
As life emerges, death enters.
The agents of life are thirteen;
The agents of death are likewise thirteen;
The thirteen also may make men move in a death spot.
Why so?
Because life is lived in too intense a manner.
I have heard that -
He, who is adept in guarding his life,
Will not come across rhinoceros and tigers,
When travelling on land;
And when in the armed forces,
Will not get wounded by deadly weapons.
In him the rhinoceros can find no place to butt,
Nor can the tiger find any place to claw,
Nor can the weapons find any place to injure.
Why so?
Because there is no death spot in him.

It is because of their hoarding of life.
I hear that those who nurture life well,
When traveling on land, do not meet wild buffaloes or tigers,
Nor do they, when going into battle, put on armor or shields.
The wild buffalo would find no place to thrust its horns;
The tiger would find no place to place its claws;

We live, we die.
The companions of life are three and ten.
The companions of death are three and ten.
That people live their active life necessarily leading to the ground of death is three and ten.
Why so?
It is the nature of life itself.
As a matter of fact, I hear of those who are good at preserving their lives:
Walking through, not avoiding rhinos and tigers.
Entering battle without wearing armaments.
The rhino has no place to dig its horns.
The tiger has no place to drag its claws.
The soldier has no place to thrust his blade.
Why is this so?
Because they have no place to die.

[50c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Throughout human life, from birth to death:
There are one third who die naturally;
There are one third who die from disease;
And the other one third who die by speeding to death.
For what reasons have they done so?
Because they live by overdrawing upon their lives heavily.
As I used to hear that:
"One who takes good care of his life will not meet a rhinoceros or a tiger when he is traveling on land.
He does not need to wear armour or carry weapons when he is leading an army."
The rhinoceros finds no place to insert its horn.
The tiger finds no place to put its claws.
Weapons of war find no place to thrust their blades.
For what reasons?
Because one never lets himself be in a vulnerable situation.

Выходят, чтобы жить;
входя обратно, умирают.
Из каждых десяти лишь три вступают в жизнь и три, уж находясь в конце ее, вышагивают к смерти.
И те, чья человеческая жизнь является лишь местом смерти, по которому им двигаться, тоже составляют три из десяти.
Чем это объясняется?
Тем, что они всего превыше ценят жизнь.
Говорят, есть человек, умеющий заботиться о жизни.
Когда идет по суше, на него не нападает носорог и тигр, вступая в войско, он не запасается оружием и латами.
Носорогу некуда его ударить рогом, тигру негде в него впиться когтями, мечу некуда в него вонзиться острием.
Чем это объясняется?
Тем, что в нем нет места для смерти.

[50c92t] А. А. Маслов
Появляясь - живём, уходя - умираем.
Трое из десяти последуют жизни.
Трое из десяти последуют смерти.
Тех, кто стремится к жизни и потому часто сталкивается со смертью, - также трое из десяти.
Почему это так?
Потому что они излишне стремятся к жизни.
Я слышал, что искушённый в сбережении своей жизни, в своих странствиях не столкнётся с носорогами и тиграми.
В сражении его не задеть ударом оружия.
Носорогам некуда воткнуть свой рог.
Тиграм некуда вонзить свои когти.
Воину некуда направить своё оружие.
Почему это так?
Потому что в нём нет места смерти.

Учеников жизни - трое из десятка.
Учеников смерти - трое из десятка.
Тех людей, что рождены для жизни, но стремятся в царство смерти, - трое из десятка.
И по какой причине это?
По той причине, что жадны до жизни люди.
Я слышал, что умеющий жизнь свою беречь, идя по суше, не столкнется с тигром или носорогом, а вступая в войско, может он не опасаться оружия и лат.

Приходят жизнью, уходят смертью.
Придут жизнью тринадцать, уйдут смертью тринадцать, из живущих людей движущихся к месту смерти тоже тринадцать.
Почему это так?

Как-то слыхал, что тот, кто искусно (посредством добра-шань) управляет жизнью, идя по суше, не избегает носорогов и тигров, вступая в бой, неуязвим для латников.
Носорогу некуда вонзить свой рог, тигру некуда запустить свои когти, латнику некуда ударить своим мечом.
Почему это так?
Потому что у него нет места смерти [ни на нем, ни на земле].

[50c95t] Ян Хин-шун
[Существа] рождаются и умирают.
Из десяти человек три [идут] к жизни, три - к смерти.
Из каждых десяти еще имеются три человека, которые умирают от своих деяний.
Почему это так?
Это происходит оттого, что у них слишком сильно стремление к жизни.
Я слышал, что, кто умеет овладевать жизнью, идя по земле, не боится носорога и тигра, вступая в битву, не боится вооруженных солдат.
Носорогу некуда вонзить в него свой рог, тигру негде наложить на него свои когти, а солдатам некуда поразить его мечом.
В чем причина?
Это происходит оттого, что для него не существует смерти.

[50c96t] Д. П. Конисси
(Все существа), уходя из жизни, входят в смерть.
Жизнь имеет 13 ступеней своего развития; смерть также имеет 13 ступеней.
Ступеней человеческой жизни, которая постоянно стремится к смерти, опять 13.
Это почему?
Потому что стремление к жизни слишком сильно.
Я слышал, что ведущий воздержную жизнь не боится ни носорога, ни тигра, ни быть на поле сражения без воинского наряда, ибо на нем нет места, куда носорог мог бы ударить рогом, тигр мог бы вонзить свои острые когти и воин мог бы нанести удар мечом.
Это почему?
Потому что для ведущего жизнь воздержную не существует смерти.

Товарищей по жизни - три из десяти,
Товарищей по смерти - три из десяти.
Жизнь свою в смерть обращающих - тоже три из десяти.
А почему?
Все из-за жажды быть живым в этой жизни.
Известно: тот, кто постиг премудрость сбереженья жизни,
В пути не встретит тигра или носорога,
Вступив в сраженье, избежит разящего клинка.
В нем носорогу некуда воткнуть свой рог,
Тигру некуда вонзить свои когти,
Воину некуда направить свой меч.
Почему так?
Потому что смерти негде поселиться в нем.

[50c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Выход - рождение.
Вход - смерть.
Попутчиков рождения - на десять есть три.
Попутчиков смерти - на десять есть три.
Людей, рождающих движение, ведущее в Землю смерти, тоже - на десять есть три.
И какова же причинность?
Это мощность порождения порождающего.
Так, внимающий совершенствованию накопления порождающего, он, двигаясь по суше, не встретит носорога и тигра.
Войдя в войско, он не столкнется с вооруженным воином.
Для носорога отсутствует место, куда приложить свой рог.
Для тигра отсутствует место, куда применить свои когти.
Для воина отсутствует место, куда вонзить свой клинок.
И какова же причинность:
Из-за отсутствия в нем Земли смерти.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-One

[51c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The Way gives birth to them and Virtue nourishes them;
Substance gives them form and their unique capacities complete them.
Therefore the ten thousand things venerate the Way and honor Virtue.
As for their veneration of the Way and their honoring of Virtue -
No one rewards them for it; it's constantly so on its own.
The Way gives birth to them, nourishes them, matures them, completes them, rests them, rears them, supports them, and protects {them}.
{It gives birth to them but} doesn't try to own them;
It acts on their behalf but doesn't make them dependent;
It matures them but doesn't rule them.
This we call Profound Virtue.

[51c02t] John C. H. Wu
TAO gives them life,
Virtue nurses them,
Matter shapes them,
Environment perfects them.
Therefore all things without exception worship Tao and do homage to Virtue.
They have not been commanded to worship Tao and do homage to Virtue,
But they always do so spontaneously.
It is Tao that gives them life:
It is Virtue that nurses them, grows them, fosters them, shelters them, comforts them, nourishes them, and covers them under her wings.
To give life but to claim nothing,
To do your work but to set no store by it,
To be a leader, not a butcher,
This is called hidden Virtue.

[51c03t] D. C. Lau
The way gives them life;
Virtue rears them;
Things give them shape;
Circumstances bring them to maturity.
Therefore the myriad creatures all revere the way and honour virtue.
Yet the way is revered and virtue honoured not because this is decreed by any authority but because it is natural for them to be treated so.
Thus the way gives them life and rears them;
Brings them up and nurses them;
Brings them to fruition and maturity;
Feeds and shelters them.
It gives them life yet claims no possession;

It benefits them yet exacts no gratitude;
It is the steward yet exercises no authority.
Such is called the mysterious virtue.

[51c04t] R. L. Wing
The Tao produces;
Its Power supports; Its Natural Law forms; Its influence completes.
Thus All Things without exception
Respect the Tao and value its Power.
To respect the Tao and value its Power -
No one demands this, and it comes naturally.
Therefore the Tao produces and its Power supports;
It advances, cultivates, comforts, matures, nourishes, and protects.
Produce but do not possess.
Act without expectation.
Advance without dominating.
These are called the Subtle Powers.

[51c05t] Ren Jiyu
Tao begets all beings,
And De fosters them.
The physical gives them forms,
And the vessels mark them accomplished.
Therefore all beings without exception venerate Tao and value De.
The veneration of Tao and valuing of De, is not out of obedience to any orders, but is always like this.
Therefore Tao begets all beings,
And De fosters them, grows and raises them, makes them fruitful and mature, breeds them and protects them.
To give birth to them without taking possession of them,
To put them in motion without vaunting this as its merits,
And to be their sovereign without controlling them,
- These are called the profound De.

[51c06t] Gia-fu Feng
All things arise from Tao.
They are nourished by Virtue.
They are formed from matter.
They are shaped by environment.
Thus the ten thousand things all respect Tao and honor Virtue.
Respect of Tao and honor of Virtue are not demanded,
But they are in the nature of things.
Therefore all things arise from Tao.
By Virtue they are nourished,
Developed, cared for,
Sheltered, comforted,
Grown, and protected.

Creating without claiming,

They get their shapes from substance.
They become what they are from the working of various forces.
For these reasons all living things pay homage to the Dao,
And respect the Virtue.
The stately status of the Dao and that of the Virtue
Are such that they are at the command of no one,
And are always in their natural states.
The Dao gives birth;
The Virtue rears them;
Raises and nourishes them;
Brings them up and lets them down;
Claims no ownership even though it brings them to life.
The Dao accomplishes but is never arrogant;
It lets them grow but never dictates their fates.
This is known as the Mystical Virtue.

[51c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The DAO gives birth to everything, the DE looks after everything,
The elements give a shape to everything, and nature makes everything grow and mature.
Therefore, everything respects the DAO and values the DE.
The dignity of the DAO and the nobleness of the DE are not forced upon anything, but allow everything to be natural.
So, the DAO gives birth to everything, the DE looks after everything;
They grow and cultivate everything, making them complete and mature;
They bring everything up and protect them.
Giving birth to everything but not owning them,
Taking care of everything but not claiming the credit,
Leading everything but not controlling them;
This is called real DE.

[51c09t] Walter Gorn Old, CHERISHING VIRTUE
Tao brings forth, and Teh nourishes.
All things take up their several forms, and natural forces bring them to perfection.
Therefore all things conspire to exalt Tao and to cherish virtue.
But this regard of Tao and Teh is not in deference to any mandate.
It is unconstrained, and therefore it endures for ever.
For Tao produces all things, and Teh nourishes, increases, feeds, matures, protects, and watches over them.
To produce without possessing; to work without expecting; to enlarge without usurping; this is the sublime virtue!

[51c10t] James Legge
All things are produced by the Tao, and nourished by its outflowing operation.
They receive their forms according to the nature of each, and are completed according to the circumstances of their condition.
Therefore all things without exception honour the Tao, and exalt its outflowing operation.
This honouring of the Tao and exalting of its operation is not the result of any ordination, but always a spontaneous tribute.
Thus it is that the Tao produces (all things), nourishes them, brings them to their full growth, nurses them, completes them, matures them, maintains them, and overspreads them.
It produces them and makes no claim to the possession of them;
it carries them through their processes and does not vaunt its ability in doing so;
it brings them to maturity and exercises no control over them;
- this is called its mysterious operation.

[51c11t] David Hinton
Way gives birth to them and Integrity nurtures them.
Matter shapes them and conditions complete them.
That's why the ten thousand things always honor Way and treasure Integrity.
Honoring Way and treasuring Integrity isn't obedience to command,
it's occurrence perennially appearing of itself.
Way gives birth to them and Integrity nurtures them:
it fosters and sustains them, harbors and succors them, nourishes and shelters them.
Giving birth without possessing,
animating without subjecting,
fostering without dominating:
this is called dark-enigma Integrity.

[51c12t] Chichung Huang
The Tao generates them,
Virtue nurtures them,
Matter forms them,
And instruments complete them.
Hence, the ten thousand things
Honor the Tao and treasure virtue.
That the Tao is honored
And virtue is treasured is not because
Anyone has conferred titles upon them;
It is constantly the way things are.
The Tao generates them,
Nurtures them,
Grows them,
Raises them,
Shapes them,

Tao gives birth,
Te rears (hsü),
Things (wu) shape,
Circumstances (shih) complete.
Therefore the ten thousand things,
None do not respect Tao and treasure te.
Tao is respected,
Te is treasured,
Not by decree (ming),
But by spontaneity (tzu-jan).
Therefore Tao gives birth,
Te keeps, grows, nurtures, matures, ripens, covers and buries.
To give birth without possession,
To act (wei) without holding on to,
To grow (chang) without lording over,
This is called the dark te.

[51c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Tao originates [each and every thing];
Te cultivates [each and every thing];
The material world gives the form [to each and every thing];
The situation completes the formation [of each and every thing].
For this reason, each and every thing must resort to venerating Tao and treasuring Te;
The omnipotence of Tao and the invaluableness of Te [are so compelling];
Even though people are not required to recognize the omnipotence of Tao and the invaluableness of Te, they shall always [propelled to] follow their rules, because this is the way of Nature.
Accordingly, Tao originates [each and everything];
Te cultivates, grows, nourishes, fulfills, ripens, nurtures and shelters [each and everything].
[I have therefore said before, if a person carries out any of the following practices:]
Helping [others] to live [better lives] without being possessive;
Stimulating [others] (to maximize their potentials) without claiming the contribution;
Leading [others with the best guidance] without being manipulative;
This person has performed [successfully in accord with] the profound Te!

but left to do so naturally.
Hence, the Way gives birth; Virtue nurses, grows, fosters, shelters, comforts, nourishes, and guards.
It gives birth but does not claim as its own; it does but does not claim its doing; it grows but does not claim to be master.
This is called hidden Virtue.

Everything is born from Tao, and nurtured by Te; shaped by substance, and completed by environment.
Thus, everything follows Tao and is guided by Te.
Tao is honored.
Te is valued.
This is not the result of promotion, but occurs naturally.
This is why everything is born by Tao and nurtured by Te.
Te raises, educates, mentors, coaches, nourishes, and protects everything.
Giving lives without possessing them,
Guiding without forcing,
Developing without controlling,
This is called Profound Te.

[51c17t] Arthur Waley
Tao gave them birth;
The 'power' of Tao reared them,
Shaped them according to their kinds,
Perfected them, giving to each its strength.
Therefore of the ten thousand things there is not one that does not worship Tao and do homage to its 'power'.
No mandate ever went forth that accorded to Tao the right to be worshipped, nor to its 'power' the right to receive homage.
It was always and of itself so.
Therefore as Tao bore them and the 'power' of Tao reared them, made them grow, fostered them, harboured them, brewed for them, so you must
'Rear them, but not lay claim to them,
Control them, but never lean upon them,
Be chief among them, but not manage them.
This is called the mysterious power.'

This is why the myriad things without exception must honor the Dao and esteem virtue.
This honoring of the Dao and this esteeming of virtue, none are ordered to do so, yet it always happens spontaneously.
The Dao gives them life, and virtue nurtures them, that is, grows them, rears them, ensures them their proper shapes, matures them, and protects them.

THE MYSTIC VIRTUE
Tao gives them birth,
Teh (character) fosters them.
The material world gives them form.
The circumstances of the moment complete them.
Therefore all things of the universe worship Tao and exalt Teh.
Tao is worshipped and Teh is exalted
Without anyone's order but is so of its own accord.
Therefore Tao gives them birth,
Teh fosters them,
Makes them grow, develops them,
Gives them a harbor, a place to dwell in peace,
Feeds them and shelters them.
It gives them birth and does not own them,
Acts (helps) and does not appropriate them,
Is superior, and does not control them.
This is the Mystic Virtue.

The Way
gives birth to them,
nurtures them,
rears them,
follows them,

[51c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The Tao created all things,
The way of the Tao nourished them,
All things emerge in different forms,
Each of them is perfect in the nature of the Tao within it.
Therefore, there is not one among the myriad of things
That does not honor the Tao and cherish its way.
Honoring the Tao and cherishing its way are not dictated by law,
But rather come from within.
Therefore the Tao creates them, makes them grow, nourishes them,
Guards them, lifts them, and protects them.
When all things are created, the Tao does not reject them.
It creates them without owning them.
It operates without depending on them, and raises them without controlling them.
When its work is completed, it does not lay any claim to them.
Since it does not lay claim to them, it does not lose them.

Everything streams from the Tao,
Everything is nurtured by Te,

The virtue rears them,

Meanwhile maintains and defends them.
Giving them life without claiming to be their owner;
Availing them without claiming to be their benefactor;

The virtue nourishes.
The things form.
The environment shapes them to completion.
That is why the myriad creatures all respect the Tao, and value virtue.
When the Tao is respected, virtue is valued.
No one can command them but the Tao.
That is why the Tao creates myriad creatures.
Virtue nourishes them, cultivates them, educates them, completes them, ripens them, supports them, carries them.
The Tao creates them without possessing them, benefits them without profiting from them, guides them without commanding them.
That is what profound virtue means.

[51c28t] Liu Qixuan
Things are produced by the Way,
Cultivated by their accumulation through time,
Realized in their forms by substances,
And guided in their development
By the potential in specific circumstances.
Therefore, everything respects the Way
And values what has been accumulated in the culture.
In the respected Way and valued accumulation,
Things grow and develop
By following their natural courses.
That's why we say that things are produced by the Way,
And, through diachronic accumulation, reared,
Cultivated, developed, matured, and protected naturally.
That process is the basic moral model for providers:
Produce without possessing anything,
Achieve without showing off anything,
And lead without making personal decisions.

Therefore Tao produces them, makes them grow, nourishes them, shelters them, brings them up and protects them.
When all things come into being Tao does not reject them.
It produces them without holding possession of them.
It acts without depending upon them, and raises without lording it over them.

The nature of a thing determines its individuality and perfection.
Therefore, as regards all things, Truth and Nature are the most important.
The importance of Truth and Nature is a matter of course, and requires no comment.
Truth gives birth to life.
Nature determines the individuality, growth, development, completion, maturity, protection, and security of a thing.
The mysterious Nature is that which lives without the desire for ownership, gives without the wish for return, rules without claiming lordship.

Dao produces everything.
De nourishes everything.
Dao and De work in tandem and things begin to take shape.
Things begin to evolve according to the circumstances.
Hence, all beings respect and venerate Dao and De.
Dao and De are so venerated because they do not exert control.
Everything is allowed to develop naturally.
Therefore, Dao procreates everything; De nurtures.
De facilitates growth, development, fruition and ripening.
It also nourishes and protects.
Dao procreates but does not possess.

And though virtue ought to be honored,
it, too, does not demand it.
Thus, it is the subtle essence that gives life to all things, and with its virtue nurses them, grows them,

Дао рождает, добродетель взращивает, вещь оформляется, обстоятельства приводят к завершению.
Поэтому-то среди десяти тысяч вещей нет ни одной, которая не почитала бы Дао и не ценила добродетель.
Чтить Дао, ценить добродетель - это не чей-либо приказ, а незыблемая самость.
Дао рождает, добродетель взращивает.
Она растит, лелеет, совершенствует, делает зрелым, содержит, укрывает.
Чему давать жизнь, не иметь,
на свои действия не опираться,
быть старшим, но не властвовать
- это называют сокровенной добродетелью.

[51c92t] А. А. Маслов
Дао порождает, Благость вскармливает.
В вещах оформляется, в обстоятельствах воплощается.
Поэтому мириады существ не только почитают Дао, но и ценят Благость.
Почитают Дао и ценят Благость не за то, что они предопределяют судьбу, а потому, что извечно следуют естественности.
Вот поэтому Дао порождает, Благость вскармливает.
Взращивает и воспитывает, классифицирует и укрепляет, пестует и оберегает, порождает, но не обладает этим, свершает и не требует воздаяния, взращивает [мириады вещей] и не властвует над ними.
Оттого и зовётся это сокровенной Благостью.

[51c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Дао-Путь все порождает.
Благая Сила-Дэ все вскармливает.
Вещественность все оформляет.
Сила все доводит до свершения.
Таким образом, среди всего сущего нет ни одного существа, что не почитало бы Дао-Пути и не ценило бы Благой Силы-Дэ.
Дао-Путь почитаем, а Благая Сила-Дэ ценима потому, что никому они не отдают велений, но постоянно пребывают в самоестественности свободной.
Поэтому Дао-Путь все порождает, Благая Сила-Дэ все вскармливает.
Они все взращивают и все пестуют, все завершают и все до зрелости доводят;
они все выхаживают и все собою покрывают;
рождают, но не обладают;
вершат, но преднамеренно не замышляют своих свершений;
взращивают все, но не господствуют над ним.
Вот что такое Сокровенная Благая Сила-Дэ!

[51c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Дао рождает их, Дэ пестует их, вещество оформляет их, условия завершают их.
Поэтому среди мириад вещей нет таких, которые не почитали бы Дао и не ценили Дэ.
Дао почитаемо, Дэ ценимо, нет над ними судьбы, они в постоянной естественности.
Дао рождает вещи, Дэ пестует их, растит их, воспитывает их, классифицирует их, упорядочивает их, вскармливает и оберегает их.

Порождающее и не обладающее [ими], возделывающее и ни на что не опирающееся, главенствующее и не карающее -
это и есть изначально-сокровенное Дэ.

[51c95t] Ян Хин-шун

Дао рождает [вещи], дэ вскармливает [их].
Вещи оформляются, формы завершаются.
Поэтому нет вещи, которая не почитала бы дао и не ценила бы дэ.
Дао почитаемо, дэ ценимо, потому что они не отдают приказаний, а следуют естественности.
Дао рождает [вещи], дэ вскармливает [их], взращивает их, воспитывает их, совершенствует их, делает их зрелыми, ухаживает за ними, поддерживает их.
Создавать и не присваивать, творить и не хвалиться, являясь старшим, не повелевать - вот что называется глубочайшим дэ.

[51c96t] Д. П. Конисси

Тао производит существа, добродетель кормит их;
они дают им вещественную форму, а могущество их совершенствует вещи.
Поэтому все существа почитают Тао и добродетель.
Никто не сообщал Тао его достоинства, а добродетели - ее ценности, но они сами собой вечно обладают ими.
Поэтому Тао производит вещи, питает их, дает им расти, совершенствует, делает зрелыми, кормит и защищает.
Оно производит их и не делает их своими;
делает их тем, что они есть, и не хвалится ими;
оно царствует над ними и оставляет их свободными.
Вот что называют глубокой добродетелью.

[51c97t] В. В. Малявин

Путь рождает их, Совершенство взращивает,
Вещество придает им формы, сила обстоятельств их завершает:
Вот почему все вещи почитают Путь и ценят Совершенство.
Путь почитают и Совершенство ценят не по приказу:
Так всегда происходит само собой;
Посему Путь рождает их, Совершенство взращивает,
Они вынашивают их и вскармливают их,
Дают им вырасти, дают им созреть,
Пестуют их, оберегают их.
Все рождает и ничем не обладает.
Всему поспешествует, а не ищет в том опоры,
Всех старше, а ничем не повелевает:
Вот что зовется сокровенным совершенством.

Сущности-вещи оформляют это.
Энергия-сила завершает это.
Это дает:
Из мириад сущностей нет не почитающих Путь и не возвышающих Потенцию.
Почитание Пути и возвышение Потенции делается не по чьему-то наставлению, а является самопроизвольной естественностью постоянства.
Причинность:
Путь порождает это, Потенция накапливает это, взращивает это, питает это, распределяет это, регулирует это, вскармливает это, покрывает это.
Порождая, не вступай в отношения обладания.
Осуществляя, не отождествляйся.
Возрастая, не главенствуй.
Это определяется:
Мистическая потенция.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Two

809/2593

[52c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The world had a beginning,
Which can be considered the mother of the world.
Having attained the mother, in order to understand her children,
If you return and hold on to the mother, till the end of your life you'll suffer no harm.
Block up the holes;
Close the doors;
And till the end of your life you'll not labor.
Open the holes;
Meddle in affairs;
And till the end of your life you'll not be saved.
To perceive the small is called "discernment."
To hold on to the pliant is called "strength."
If you use the rays to return to the bright light,
You'll not abandon your life to peril.
This is called Following the Constant.

[52c02t] John C. H. Wu
ALL-under-Heaven have a common Beginning.
This Beginning is the Mother of the world.
Having known the Mother,
We may proceed to know her children.
Having known the children,
We should go back and hold on to the Mother.
In so doing, you will incur no risk
Even though your body be annihilated.
Block all the passages!
Shut all the doors!
And to the end of your days you will not be worn out.
Open the passages!
Multiply your activities!
And to the end of your days you will remain helpless.
To see the small is to have insight.
To hold on to weakness is to be strong.
Use the lights, but return to your insight.
Do not bring calamities upon yourself.
This is the way of cultivating the Changeless.

[52c03t] D. C. Lau
The world had a beginning
And this beginning could be the mother of the world.
When you know the mother

Go on to know the child.
After you have known the child
Go back to holding fast to the mother,
And to the end of your days you will not meet with danger.
Block the openings,
Shut the doors,
And all your life you will not run dry.
Unblock the openings,
Add to your troubles,
And to the end of your days you will be beyond salvation.
To see the small is called discernment;
To hold fast to the submissive is called strength.
Use the light
But give up the discernment.
Bring not misfortune upon yourself.
This is known as following the constant.

[52c04t] R. L. Wing
The beginning of the world
May be regarded as the Mother of the world.
To apprehend the Mother,
Know the offspring.
To know the offspring
Is to remain close to the Mother,
And free from harm throughout life.
Block the passages, Close the doors;
In the end, life is idle.
Open the passages,
Increase undertakings;
In the end, life is hopeless.
To perceive the small is called insight.
To remain yielding is called strength.
If, in using one's brightness,
One returns to insight,
Life will be free of misfortune.
This is called learning the Absolute.

[52c05t] Ren Jiyu
All the things in the world have their origin in something, which is their foundation (mother).
Having grasped the Mother as the foundation of all things, one can know her children as all things.
Having grasped the children as the thing, one must hold to the Mother as the foundation of all things.
Thus one will never encounter danger all his life.
Blocking the vent (of knowledge) and closing the door (of knowledge) can keep one from sickness all his life.
Opening the vent (of knowledge) and completing the enterprise (of knowledge) will make one helpless all his life.
So, perceiving the minute is "sagaciousness,"

Remaining soft and weak is "powerfulness."
Using one's contained light and reverting to one's sagaciousness of knowing the minute,
And thus keeping oneself from disaster, is to become accustomed to the eternal Way.

[52c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The beginning of the universe
Is the mother of all things.
Knowing the mother, one also knows the sons.
Knowing the sons, yet remaining in touch with the mother,
Brings freedom from the fear of death.
Keep your mouth shut,
Guard the senses,
And life is ever full.
Open your mouth,
Always be busy,
And life is beyond hope.
Seeing the small is insight;
Yielding to force is strength.
Using the outer light, return to insight,
And in this way be saved from harm.
This is learning constancy.

[52c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Everything under heaven has a beginning.
That beginning we take as our mother.
Now that we know our mother,
We can begin to know our role as sons(and daughters).
Since we know our role as sons(and daughters),
We must guard and stay with our mother,
This way, even if our bodies perish,
We will never die.
Let the passages be blocked.
Let the doors be closed.
(So long as we stay with our mother,)
Till the end of life no worry need bother us.
(If we do the contrary,)
Then even though the roads are opened up,
And help is available,
Till the end of our lives we will still be doomed.
To be able to see the small things is to be illuminated;
To adhere to the principle of flexibility and suppleness is to be strong.
Let people use their own light to illuminate and restore their understanding.
Let them leave nothing to regret about when their bodies perish.
This is called the gradual realization of the Eternal.

Since the beginning of the world, the DAO has been the mother of everything.
If you know the mother, the DAO, you know the child, the world.
Knowing the world, but also keeping the DAO, will prevent disasters throughout your life.
If you shut off your senses and desires, you will not have any trouble throughout your life;
If you open your senses and you do things for your own purposes, you cannot be saved throughout your life.
By focusing on the minor and subtle, your vision is clear;
By staying on the side of weak, you are strong.
Using the "light" of the world, but also keeping the "light source" of the DAO,
Will bring no harm to you and make you natural and long-lasting.

[52c09t] Walter Gorn Old, GOING BACK TO THE CAUSE
That from which the universe sprang may be looked upon as its Mother.
By knowing the Mother you have access to the child.
And if, knowing the child, you prefer the Mother, though your body perish, yet you will come to no harm.
Keep your mouth shut, and close up the doors of sight and sound, and as long as you live you will have no vexation.
But open your mouth, or become inquisitive, and you will be in trouble all your life long.
To perceive things in the germ is intelligence.
To remain gentle is to be invincible.
Follow the light that guides you homeward, and do not get lost in the darkness.
This I call using the eternal.

[52c10t] James Legge
(The Tao) which originated all under the sky is to be considered as the mother of them all.
When the mother is found, we know what her children should be.
When one knows that he is his mother's child, and proceeds to guard (the qualities of) the mother that belong to him, to the end of his life he will be free from all peril.
Let him keep his mouth closed, and shut up the portals (of his nostrils), and all his life he will be exempt from laborious exertion.
Let him keep his mouth open, and (spend his breath) in the promotion of his affairs, and all his life there will be no safety for him.
The perception of what is small is (the secret of) clear-sightedness;
the guarding of what is soft and tender is (the secret of) strength.
Who uses well his light,
Reverting to its (source so) bright,
Will from his body ward all blight,
And hides the unchanging from men's sight.

[52c11t] David Hinton
There's a source all beneath heaven shares: call it the mother of all beneath heaven.
Once you fathom the mother you understand the child, and once you understand the child you abide in the mother, self gone, free of danger.
If you block the senses and close the mind, you never struggle.
If you open the senses and expand your endeavors, nothing can save you.
Seeing the small is called enlightenment, and abiding in the gentle strength.

This world must have begun in certain way;
We may thenceforth consider it the origin (mother) of our world;
Once we manage to ascertain the origin, we could [apply it] to study its offsprings;
After we learn more about the offsprings, we may reciprocally eke out our knowledge about the mother (the origin);
This is my never-ending life-long quest.
If paths and openings of one's connections [to the outside world] are blocked, he will never be aroused to do anything in life;
If paths and openings of one's connections [to the outside world] are unlocked and he is properly motivated, he will never cease [from the quest described above].
One who perceives subtleties is brilliant;
One who maintains humility is strong.
One who would use [the light of Tao] to illuminate his [potential] brilliance will thus leave behind nothing that could cause misfortune to later generations.
A person, who achieves all of the above described fulfillment, is what I called the person with embodiment of the perpetual [Te].

[52c15t] Tien Cong Tran

[52c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
The world has an origin.
The origin is the mother.
Knowing the mother, we know the son.
Knowing the son, we deduce the mother.
This way, we can be successful.

Those who exercise flexibility are strong.
Use the light,
Things are illuminated.

[52c17t] Arthur Waley
That which was the beginning of all things under heaven
We may speak of as the 'mother' of all things.
He who apprehends the mother
Thereby knows the sons.
And he who has known the sons
Will hold all the tighter to the mother,
And to the end of his days suffer no harm:
'Block the passages, shut the doors,
And till the end your strength shall not fail.
Open up the passages, increase your doings,
And till your last day no help shall come to you.'
As good sight means seeing what is very small
So strength means holding on to what is weak.
He who having used the outer-light can return to the inner-light
Is thereby preserved from all harm.
This is called resorting to the always-so.

[52c18t] Richard John Lynn
All under Heaven has a generatrix, which we regard as the mother of all under Heaven.

Once one knows the child, if he again holds on to the mother, as long as he lives, no danger shall befall him.
Block up your apertures; close your door,
And to the end of your life you will never be exhausted.
But if you open your apertures and deal consciously with things, to the end of your life you will never have relief.
To see the small is called "perspicacious."
To hold on to softness is called "strength."

One is without danger in life.
Stuffing channels to block portals [to avarice], one is without concern in life.
Opening channels to facilitate contact [with avarice], one is without hope in life.

The universe has an origin, the Matrix of Creation,
Functioning as the Mother of the world.
If you know the Mother, you will know her children.
If you know her children while abiding with the Mother,
Though your body may be dissolved,
Your life-energy will remain inexhaustible.
Close the cracks, close the doors of the senses,
Then, till the end of your life you will not be drained of energy.
Open the cracks and react to external stimulations,
Then, till the end of your life you will not be saved from suffering.
To perceive the subtle is enlightenment.
To abide in gentleness is strength.
Use your inner light to return to enlightenment
And you will not inherit any harm.
This is called "learning the eternal lesson."

[52c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
People leave life and enter death.
Life's portion is three out of ten.
Death's portion is also three out of ten.
People who move from the day of birth into the realm of death,
Their portion is also three out of ten.
Why is that?
Because of their futile efforts to seek eternal life.
However, only those who do nothing to prolong their life,
Are better off than those who do everything in order to live longer.
I have heard that the person who knows how to preserve his life
When traveling the earth,
Will not encounter a rhinoceros or a tiger,
And when he goes into battle,
He will not be wounded by a weapon or an arrow.
The rhinoceros will not target him with its horn,
The tiger will not tear him apart with its claws,
Weapons will not find their mark on his body
Where they can pierce him with their blades and arrowheads.
Why is that?

Every living thing
Comes from the Mother of Us All:
If we can understand the Mother
Then we can understand her children;
And if we know ourselves as children
We can see the source is Her.
And, well, if your body dies - there's nothing to be frightened about.
If you keep your mouth shut
And stay inside -
Then you'll live a long time.
If you blurt out
What you think to everyone,
Then you won't last long.
Value littleness.
This is wisdom.
To bend like a reed in the wind
- that is real strength.
Use your mind, but stay close to the light
And it will lengthen its glow right through your life.

[52c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The universe has a beginning (Tao);
The beginning functions as the mother of all things.
If you know the mother,
You can get to know her children (all things);
If, while knowing the children,
You keep the mother,
You will be a sage all your life.
Block the openings (of knowledge),
Shut the door (of desires),
And you will be free from illness all your life.
Unlock the openings,
Add to your cares,
And you will be incurable all your life.
To be able to perceive the minute is called discernment;
To be able to play the role of the weak is called the strong.

When you know the children
you will return to embrace the mother.
Then you will live lifelong without danger.
Close the mouth, and the spirit will not escape.
Seal the ears, and the mind will not escape.
You will live lifelong without struggle.
Open the mouth, and take action for every matter, and you will live lifelong beyond hope.
To see the small is called clarity.
To know how to yield is called strength.
Use virtue outside the mind but return to virtue in the mind,
and you will live lifelong without danger.
This is what is called practising constancy.

[52c28t] Liu Qixuan
The earliest beginning we can trace
Can be taken as the mother.
When we have come to know the mother,
We can then trace the son.
When we have found the son,
We should go back to stay with the mother.
Staying with the mother,
We are on the safest spot for our life.
Shut the eyes and cover the ears,
And one can stay away from worry all one's life.
Opening the door and rushing about all the time
Will not help save one from cares and trouble.
One who understands subtle details is wise.
One who keeps weakness is strong.
By adopting that subtle insight in the world,
One can avoid any danger.
That is called the inheritance of what is eternal.

Learning The Absolute
Lao Tze says,
Since the beginning of the universe, there was the Tao which may be regarded as the mother of all existence.
When a man knows about the mother, he has to know about the son.
When he knows about the son, he proceeds to guard the mother that belongs to him, to the end of his life he will be free from all peril.
Let him keep his mouth closed, and shut up his eyes, and all his life he will be exempt from toil.
Let him keep his mouth open, and his eyes be used to examine the affairs, and all his life there will not be safety for him.

The perception of smallness is clear-sighted;
the guard of the soft and tender grows strong.
He who uses his light reverting to become bright, will ward all blight from his eyesight.
This is the so-called learning of the absolute.

[52c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
The beginning of the Universe, when manifested, may be regarded as its Mother.
When a man has found the Mother, he will know the children accordingly;
Though he has known the children, he still keeps to the Mother:
Thus, however his body may decay, he will never perish.
If he shuts his mouth and closes his doors,
He can never be exhausted.
If he opens his mouth and increases his affairs,
He can never be saved.
To see the minuteness of things is called clarity of sight;
To keep to what is weak is called power.
Use your light, but dim your brightness;
Thus you will cause no harm to yourself.
This is called following the eternal (Tao).

There was something which preceded the birth of the universe.
When the primary cause is grasped, the effects may be understood.
One's whole life can be secure if knowing the effects, one still holds fast to the primary cause.
Stop up all the orifices of lust, shut out all forms of distraction, - then one's whole life will be free from harm.
Open all the orifices of lust, attend to the gratification of desires, - then one's whole life will be beyond salvation.
The clear-sighted is he who can discern even the minute things.
The strong is he who can abide by meekness.
Following the light, reverting to the source of illumination, doing no harm to oneself, - these are the ways of attaining what is normal.

The world has its beginning.
It is the mother of the world (Dao).
Once you have understood the mother,
You should then begin to learn more about the son (evolution).
While learning more about the son,
You must always stick to the principles of Dao (mother).
Thus, you will never be in any danger in your whole life.
If you block out your senses, you will be calm and insouciant.
If you allow your cognitive processes to intervene with your daily affairs, you will be irremediably mired by harassment.
You have insightful wisdom if you are able to discern the minutiae in every affair.
Adhering to the principle of yielding, you are resolutely strong.
Igniting the spark of intuitive mindfulness, you thus rekindle your insightful wisdom.
Consequently, you will never court any disaster.
This is simply following the way of Dao.

[52c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
All of creation has a common beginning.
This common beginning is the Mysterious Mother of all.
If we know the Mother, we may know her offspring.
Know the offspring, yet stay with the Mother, and the essence of your life will never be exhausted, even though your body be dissolved.
Block the openings, shut the doors,
and to the end of your days, you will not be worn out.
Unblock the openings, multiply your activities,
and to the end of your days, you will be beyond remedy.
Thus it is said:
To perceive the subtle is to have true vision.
To be soft is to be truly strong.
Use the outer light, but return to the inner.
In this way, you will restore your integral virtue,
and be preserved from all harm.

У Поднебесной есть начало, и оно становится ей матерью.
Дитя, только окажется пред матерью, и мать сразу же его узнает, а узнает, и дитя вновь будет ее слушаться и до скончания жизни не изведает опасности.
Закрыв отверстия и заперев врата, до самого конца избавишься от тягот, а если распахнешь их и возьмешься за дела, не испытаешь никогда спасения.
Видеть малое значит быть в просвете,
в сбереженной мягкости заключено могущество.

Закрой отверстия, запри двери - и в твоём теле более не родятся болезни.
Открой отверстия, предайся делам - и твоё тело уже не спасти.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Three

[53c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Were I to have the least bit of knowledge, in walking on a Great Road, it's only going astray that I would fear.
The Great Way is very level;
But people greatly delight in tortuous paths.
The courts are swept very clean;
While the fields are full of weeds;
And the granaries are all empty.
Their clothing - richly embroidered and colored;
While at their waists they carry sharp swords.
They gorge themselves on food, and of possessions and goods {they have plenty}.
{This is called} thievery!
{And thievery} certainly isn't {the Way}!

[53c02t] John C. H. Wu
IF only I had the tiniest grain of wisdom,
I should walk in the Great Way,
And my only fear would be to stray from it.
The Great Way is very smooth and straight;
And yet the people prefer devious paths.
The court is very clean and well garnished,
But the fields are very weedy and wild,
And the granaries are very empty!
They wear gorgeous clothes,
They carry sharp swords,
They surfeit themselves with food and drink,
They possess more riches than they can use!
They are the heralds of brigandage!
As for Tao, what do they know about it?

[53c03t] D. C. Lau
Were I possessed of the least knowledge, I would, when walking on the great way, fear only paths that lead astray.
The great way is easy, yet people prefer by-paths.
The court is corrupt,
The fields are overgrown with weeds,
The granaries are empty;
Yet there are those dressed in fineries,
With swords at their sides,
Filled with food and drink,
And possessed of too much wealth.
This is known as taking the lead in robbery.
Far indeed is this from the way.

[53c04t] R. L. Wing
Using only a little knowledge, I would travel the Great Way And fear only of letting go.
The Great Way is very even; Yet people love the byways.
When an organization is divided, Fields are overgrown, Stores are empty,
Clothes are extravagant, Sharp swords are worn, Food and drink are excessive,
Wealth and treasure are hoarded.
This is called stealing and exaggeration And certainly not the Way!

[53c05t] Ren Jiyu
If I have a certain knowledge,
I will go along the highway (Great Tao),
And I will be afraid of nothing but the oblique way.
The highway is very even,
But the people are fond of the shortcut.
(Those who make)
the palace very clear and neat,
the field uncultivated and weedy,
the granary empty and vacant,
wearing glorious and coloured clothes,
carrying precious and sharp swords,
satiated with exquisite food and drink,
possessing an abundance of wealth and property,
can be called chieftains of robbers.
That is contrary to rationality (Tao).

[53c06t] Gia-fu Feng
If I have even just a little sense,
I will walk on the main road and my only fear will be of straying from it.
Keeping to the main road is easy,
But people love to be sidetracked.
When the court is arrayed in splendor,
The fields are full of weeds,
And the granaries are bare.
Some wear gorgeous clothes,
Carry sharp swords,
And indulge themselves with food and drink;
They have more possessions than they can use.
They are robber barons.
This is certainly not the way of Tao.

[53c07t] Lok Sang Ho

Is the fear of departing from it.

The Dao is level and straight.
Yet people prefer to go on their devious paths.
When the court is busy with granting honors to its dignitaries,
And not caring for the fields that are overgrown by weeds,
While the granaries are empty;
When the officers of the nation dress themselves up beautifully,
And carry sharp swords with an air of superiority and power;
While excessive dining and drinking go hand in hand with excessive consumption and waste,
You know this is arrogance at the Dao.
This is certainly not the Dao.

[53c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If one day I am to have desires,
As I am walking along a big road, I am only afraid of straying into the small alleys.
The big road is so smooth, but people prefer to take the small alleys.
The government is a mess, the fields are barren, and the barns are empty,
But they wear bright and colorful clothing, carrying sharp swords, overeat and overdrink;
They steal countless treasures, so they are the heads of thieves.
This is completely against the DAO!

[53c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INCREASING EVIDENCE
Ah that I were wise enough to follow the great Tao!
Administration is a great undertaking.
The great Tao is extremely simple, but the people prefer the complex ways.
While the palace is extremely well appointed, the fields may be full of tares, and the granaries may be empty.
To dress grandly, to carry sharp swords, to eat and drink excessively, and to amass great wealth, this I call stylish theft.
That it is not Tao is certain.

[53c10t] James Legge
If I were suddenly to become known, and (put into a position to) conduct (a government) according to the Great Tao, what I should be most afraid of would be a boastful display.
The great Tao (or way) is very level and easy; but people love the by-ways.
Their court(-yards and buildings) shall be well kept, but their fields shall be ill-cultivated, and their granaries very empty.
They shall wear elegant and ornamented robes, carry a sharp sword at their girdle, pamper themselves in eating and drinking, and have a superabundance of property and wealth;
- such (princes) may be called robbers and boasters.
This is contrary to the Tao surely!

[53c11t] David Hinton
Understanding sparse and sparser still I travel the great Way, nothing to fear unless I stray.
The great Way is open and smooth, but people adore twisty paths:
Government in ruins, fields overgrown and graineries bare,
they indulge in elegant robes and sharp swords,

all those trappings of luxury.
It's vainglorious thievery -

Were I but firmly enlightened,
Walking along the great Tao,
My only fear would be going astray.

Wearing a sharp sword,
And sated with food,
He has enough wealth and to spare.
Such a man is called the chieftain of bandits;
Being the chieftain of bandits goes against the Tao.

I shall fear this:
The great path (Tao) is very flat and easy,

This is called robbery and crime.
This is not to follow Tao.

[53c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Even if I realize that I am unmistakably proceeding on the [right path of] the great Tao;
I still would be vigilant since I may go astray [inadvertently].
The path of the great Tao is fundamentally very flat, still people prefer to take by-paths;
[For instance:]
In the Court, officers are frequently replaced,
In outskirts, fields are inadequately planted,
National granaries are running empty,
[Civil servants implore the fashion of] wearing beautifully embroidered clothes,

[Military officers pride themselves on] carrying sharp swords,
[People indulge on] gourmandizing endlessly;
[General public rush to] accumulate personal wealth and goods excessively.
All of the above signifies nothing but shameless vanities of the superficial people, Behaviors of the above exemplified pattern signalize the repudiation of Tao (the right way for the survival of humanity)!

[53c15t] Tien Cong Tran
If only I had a slight wisdom, I should walk in the great Way, and my only fear would be to stray from it.
The great Way is very smooth and straight; and yet the people prefer circuitous paths.
Nowadays people like circuitous paths, even though these paths bring many evil crimes.
The court is extremely elegant; but the fields are extremely weedy and wild, and the granaries are extremely empty.
They wear gorgeous clothes, they carry sharp swords, they surfeit themselves with food and drink, they possess more riches than they can use.
This is boastful robbery.
And it is indeed against the Way.

[53c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
I firmly believe that I must follow Tao.
What I fear is to wander astray.
Tao is like a boulevard.
Yet, some people prefer small trails.
The yards are excessively clean, the fields full of weeds, and the warehouses nearly empty.
Dressing extravagantly, carrying sharp swords, wasting food, excessively collecting money or properties are the worst sins.
These do not conform to Tao.

[53c17t] Arthur Waley
He who has the least scrap of sense, once he has got started on the great highway has nothing to fear so long as he avoids turnings.
For great highways are safe and easy.
But men love by-paths.
So long as the Court is in order
They are content to let their fields run to weed
And their granaries stand empty.
They wear patterns and embroideries,
Carry sharp swords, glut themselves with drink and food, have more possessions than they can use.
These are the riotous ways of brigandage; they are not the Highway.

[53c18t] Richard John Lynn
If, with firm resolve, I had the knowledge to travel on the great Dao [Way], I need only fear that I might try to meddle with it.
The great Dao [Way] might be very smooth, yet the common folk prefer byways.
The court is kept in good order,
But the fields are overgrown with weeds, the granaries empty.

Garbed in patterned and colorful clothes, wearing sharp swords, satiated with food and drink, and overflowing with wealth and goods: all this is stolen extravagance and has nothing to do with the Dao!

[53c19t] Lin Yutang

BRIGANDAGE

If I were possessed of Austere Knowledge,
Walking on the Main Path (Tao),
I would avoid the by-paths.
The Main Path is easy to walk on,
Yet people love the small by-paths.
The (official) courts are spic and span,
(While) the fields go untilled,
And the (people's) granaries are very low.
(Yet) clad in embroidered gowns,
And carrying fine swords,
Surfeited with good food and drinks,
(They are) splitting with wealth and possessions.
This is to lead the world toward brigandage.
Is it not the corruption of Tao?

[53c20t] Victor H. Mair

If I were possessed of the slightest knowledge, traveling on the great Way,
My only fear would be to go astray.
The great Way is quite level,
but the people are much enamored of mountain trails.
The court is thoroughly deserted,
The fields are choked with weeds,
The granaries are altogether empty.
Still there are some who wear clothes with fancy designs and brilliant colors, sharp swords hanging at their sides,
are sated with food,
overflowing with possessions and wealth.
This is called "the brazenness of a bandit."
The brazenness of a bandit is surely not the Way!

[53c21t] Tolbert McCarroll

If I have even a little sense,
I will walk upon the great path of Tao and only fear straying from it.
This Great Way is straight and smooth yet people often prefer the side roads.
The courtyard is well kept but the fields are full of weeds, and the granaries stand empty.
Still, there are those of us who wear elegant clothes, carry sharp swords, pamper ourselves with food and drink and have more possessions than we can use.

These are the actions of robbers.
This is certainly far from the Tao.

[53c22t] David H. Li
This little I know:
In moving toward the Grand Direction, the only fear is moving astray.
The Grand Direction is straight forward; still, people go astray.
The court is not filled; the field is not tilled.
Storehouses are empty, but gorgeous gowns are aplenty.
Bearing sharp swords, tired of exquisite boards,
With wealth to the burst, they are bandits at their worst.
This is not Direction.

[53c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
With clear, appreciative discernment,
I choose to walk the great way of the Tao,
And fear naught save going astray.
The great way is very smooth and straight,
Yet people prefer uneven and winding by-paths, and thus go astray.
Therefore, in the world that has gone astray,
While the courts are clean and decorated,
The fields are untilled and the granaries are empty.
If the ruler wears fancy clothes,
Carries around sharp swords,
Indulges in extravagant food and drink,
And possesses more riches than he needs,
He is indeed a brazen bandit.
This is contrary to the great way of the Tao.

[53c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The beginning of the universe, when materialized, is considered to be a mother.
When a man finds the mother, he will know the children, accordingly.
Even though he knows the children, he still clings to the mother:
Therefore, although his body wanes, he never perishes.
The person who shuts his mouth and closes his doors
Will never perish.
If he opens his mouth and increases his affairs,
He will never be saved.
The person who sees the tiniest thing possesses clear vision,
The person who adheres to the weak possesses strength.
Use your light, but dim your brightness,
In this way you will not do yourself any harm.
This is called following the eternal Tao.

then my only fear is of losing the thread ...
The Great Way is easy
but people are forever being taken down sidetracks.
They look after the palaces,
But ignore the fields!
The granaries are empty
- but they wear wonderful clothes!
They go about with arms and gorge themselves on fine food and drink.
How rich they are -
and they have stolen it all from the poor.
They are the robber barons of now -
This is not the real Tao!

While the court is corrupt,
The fields lie waste;
The granaries are empty;
There are persons who are still dressed gaudily,
Wearing ornamented swords,
Satiated with fine food and drink,
In possession of extravagant goods.
They can be called the chieftains of robbers.
What a phenomenon against the Tao!

[53c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Should I know just a fraction of Tao,
I would walk on the great way, fearing to impose upon the people.
The main road is smooth to walk but the people prefer the smaller footpath.
That is why the court is corrupt,
the fields lie in waste, the granaries are empty.
Yet the rulers wear clothes adorned with finery,
carry sharp swords decorated with patterns,
possess storehouses overflowing with goods and wealth.
This is to rule by stealing.
This is not the Tao.

But rulers like to stray from this safe road.
Their courts are luxuriously constructed;
And, while the fields are neglected,
The barns are empty.
They fuss about clothes and ornaments,
Carry sharp swords wherever they go,
Gobble down best food to excess,
And care only for goods and money.
They are robbers rather than rulers.
Being robbers, they are doing things against the Way.

Make me have sudden enlightenment,
I can implement great Tao in government.
Still I am afraid I might go astray.
Great Tao is a smooth and easy highway,
My noblemen like to walk on its trails.
Your courtyards are new and pretty,
Your people's farms are still unfilled.
There is nothing in their barns.
You wear your embroidered gowns,
Walk with sharp-bladed swords.
You satiate with good food and drink,
Collect abundant wealth beyond your deserving.
I shall call you Taoku, the bandit's chief,
For you have never practiced the way of the Tao.

And the granaries empty.

the granaries very empty.

a superabundance of expensive goods.
This is robbers boasting,
certainly not the Way.

This is not the Way!

[53c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Even if I confidently know that I am on the right path, I will still tread gingerly for fear of deviating from it.
The correct path of Dao is smooth and easily accessible.
However, people still choose to travel on the small paths.
While the magnificent imperial palace is immaculate and pristine,
The paddy fields are neglected and the granaries empty.
Yet, the ruler still dresses elegantly, wears fine swords and feasts in style.
He continues to amass great personal wealth.
This is the behaviour of a chief of robbers.
He is not following the way of Dao.

[53c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
If I had even the tiniest grain of insight,
I should live in accordance with the subtle Way of the universe;
my only fear would be to stray from it.
The Integral Way of the universe is very smooth and straight, yet people's minds prefer devious bypaths.
The courts are polished and decorated,
while the fields are untilled,
and the granaries are empty.
People wear fine clothes to adorn their external appearance.
They carry sharp swords at their sides and worship might rather than righteousness.
They know only to make merry by indulging in food and drink.
They crave to possess more riches than they could ever use.
This is the committing of robbery and is not the Universal Integral Way of natural life.

[53c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
If I had even a slight awareness,
And practiced the great Way,
What I would fear would be deviating from it.
The great Way is a very level road,
But men like to take circuitous paths.
Thus, the palaces are extremely elegant,
But the people's farms are extremely desolate,
And there is no grain reserved in the storehouses.
The rulers wear expensive garments,
Carry fine swords,
Satiate themselves with food and drink,
And possess inordinate riches and precious things.
This is the greatest robbery,
And is indeed against the great Way.

The fields have become very barren,
And the granaries have become very empty;
Yet officials are dressed in gorgeous garments,

The superior way of Dao is plain and yet man prefers devious paths.
When government officers are very neglected;
farm lands are very weedy;

yet, brilliant clothes are displayed;

Знай я совсем немного, вступил бы на Великий Путь и лишь боялся бы с него сойти.
Великий Путь отменно ровен, но людям нравятся тропинки.
Когда дворец блещет убранством, поля заполоняют сорняки и житницы стоят совсем пустые.
И надевать при этом яркие наряды, носить отборные клинки,
чревоугодничать,
купаться в роскоши
- это зовется воровской кичливостью.
В ней все противоречит Дао.

Когда я обрету мельчайшее знание, я буду следовать Великому Пути, не боясь заблудиться.
Великое Дао просто, но люди предпочитают узкие тропинки.
Когда двор роскошествует, а поля поросли сорняками и амбары пусты;
когда знать, опоясавшись драгоценными мечами, излишествует в напитках и еде, в избытке владея всяким добром, - это зовётся грабительством и бахвальством.
О, сколь отлично это от Дао!

Если бы я знанием обладал, то шел бы по Великому Пути.
Единственное, чего я боюсь, это сбиться с пути.
Великий Путь сокрыт и неуловим, но народ ему предпочитает тропы.
Если при дворе роскошествуют, то поля покрываются сорняками и пустеют амбары.
Знать одевается в одежды из узорчатых тканей,
носит у пояса острые мечи,
вкушает только изысканные яства и увеличивает имущество свое сверх всякой меры.
Это называется разбоем и бахвальством.
О, это не истинный Путь!

Аудиенции совсем прекращены, поля сплошь заросли, амбары до дна опустели.
[А правители] одеваются в красочные шелка, препоясываются острыми мечами, пресыщаются питьем и едой, богатства копят с излишком.
Все это - грабеж и разврат, не-Дао.

[Знать] одевается в роскошные ткани, носит острые мечи, не удовлетворяется [обычной] пищей и накапливает излишние богатства.
Все это называется разбоем и бахвальством.
Оно является нарушением дао.

Я беззаботен, но имею ум, поэтому живу в великом Тао.

люди будут надевать на себя разноцветные одежды, носить острые мечи и питаться изысканными блюдами.
Все это совокупно называется разбойничьею гордостью.
Ужели это есть Тао?!

Палаты царские так чисто прибраны,
Поля же заросли бурьяном, житницы пусты.
Носят шелка, расшитые узорами, на поясе мечи,
Вкусно едят и пьют, в домах избыток всякого добра.

Хранилища совершенно пусты.
Одежда в цветных узорах.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Four

843/2593

[54c01t] Robert G. Henricks
What is firmly set up {can't be} pulled down;
{What is firmly embraced cannot slip free}.
And your sons and grandsons, as a result, will sacrifice without end.
When you cultivate it in your person, your virtue will then be genuine;
When you cultivate it in your family, your virtue will then overflow;
When you cultivate it in your village, your virtue will then be long lasting;
When you cultivate it in your state, your virtue will then be abundant;
And when you cultivate it throughout the world, your virtue will then be widespread.
Use the individual to examine the individual;
Use the family to examine the family;
Use the village to examine the village;
Use the state to examine the state;
And use the world to examine the world;
How do I know that the world is so?
By {this}.

[54c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHAT is well planted cannot be uprooted.
What is well embraced cannot slip away.
Your descendants will carry on the ancestral sacrifice for generations without end.
Cultivate Virtue in your own person,
And it becomes a genuine part of you.
Cultivate it in the family,
And it will abide.
Cultivate it in the community,
And it will live and grow.
Cultivate it in the state,
And it will flourish abundantly.
Cultivate it in the world,
And it will become universal.
Hence, a person must be judged as person;
A family as family;
A community as community;
A state as state;
The world as world.
How do I know about the world?
By what is within me.

[54c03t] D. C. Lau
What is firmly rooted cannot be pulled out;

Through this the offering of sacrifice by descendants will never come to an end.
Cultivate it in your person
And its virtue will be genuine;
Cultivate it in the family
And its virtue will be more than sufficient;
Cultivate it in the hamlet
And its virtue will endure;
Cultivate it in the state
And its virtue will abound;
Cultivate it in the empire
And its virtue will be pervasive.
Hence look at the person through the person;
Look at the family through the family;
Look at the hamlet through the hamlet;
Look at the state through the state;
Look at the empire through the empire.
How do I know that the empire is like that?
By means of this.

[54c04t] R. L. Wing
What is skillfully established will not be uprooted;
What is skillfully grasped will not slip away.
Thus it is honored for generations.
Cultivate the inner self; Its Power becomes real.
Cultivate the home; Its Power becomes abundant.
Cultivate the community; Its Power becomes greater.
Cultivate the organization; Its Power becomes prolific.
Cultivate the world; Its Power becomes universal.
Therefore through the inner self,
The inner self is conceived.
Through the home,
The home is conceived.
Through the community,
The community is conceived.
Through the organization,
The organization is conceived.
Through the world,
The world is conceived.
How do I know the world?
Through this.

His "De" can be abundant by carrying it out in the family;
His "De" can lead by carrying it out in the neighbourhood;
His "De" can be powerful by carrying it out in the state;
His "De" can be universal by carrying it out in the kingdom;

Sons shall bring in lengthening line,
Sacrifices to his shrine.
Tao when nursed within one's self,
His vigour will make true;
And where the family it rules
What riches will accrue!
The neighbourhood where it prevails
In thriving will abound;
And when 'tis seen throughout the state,
Good fortune will be found.
Employ it the kingdom o'er,
And men thrive all around.
In this way the effect will be seen in the person, by the observation of different cases;
in the family;
in the neighbourhood;
in the state;
and in the kingdom.
How do I know that this effect is sure to hold thus all under the sky?

If a person cultivates the above mentioned practice for his own personal satisfaction, his Te is genuine;
If a person advances it within his family, their [jointly aggregated] Te will be more than enough to benefit other families;

If this practice thrives in a country, the [collective] Te of its people will further flourish [that their Te will spill over to other countries];
When it is upheld in the world, their [jointly summative] Te will spread universally [in Universe].
Accordingly:
[The cultivation of Te] by an individual sets a good example to his family;
[The promotion of Te] within a family exemplifies Te to other families;
[The advancement of Te] in a village manifests [the goodness of Te] to other villages;
[The broadening of Te] in a country demonstrates [the benefit of Te] to other countries;
[The expansion of Te] in a world would manifest [the greatness of Te] to other worlds.

By its virtue alone can one generation after another carry on the ancestral sacrifice.
Apply it to yourself and by its power you will be freed from dross.
Apply it to your household and your household shall thereby have abundance.
Apply it to the village, and the village will be made secure.

What is built on rock cannot be pulled down;
What is held lightly can never be lost.
Meditate on virtue within yourself, and you will find the benefit of virtue.
Use it as the ground for the family, and the place will blossom for years to come.

Use it to guide the nation,
and that nation will create abundance.
Be guided by it for the Whole,
and it will flood its way over the world.
So, look at someone else as you would yourself

See your community in other communities,
Think of all countries as part of your being
And treasure the world as the round centre of everything.
How can I see the world like this?

A well-founded establishment cannot be uprooted,
And a well-preserved tradition can not be dissolved:

Long being when one extends the Way over the community,
Rich being when one extends the Way over a nation,
Universal being when one extends the Way over the world.
Therefore, one knows others by looking at one's self,
Other communities by looking at one's own community,

If he applies it to the world his virtue will be universal.
Therefore by one's person one may observe persons;
By one's family one may observe families;
By one's village one may observe villages;
By one's country one may observe countries;
By one's world one may observe worlds.
How do I know that the world may be so (governed by Tao)?

With this to cultivate the family, its virtue will be plentiful;
With this to cultivate the community, its virtue will last long;
With this to cultivate the nation, its virtue will be abundant;
With this to cultivate the world, its virtue will be good.
Therefore,
Examine a person with a person,
Examine a family with a family,

Diligently cultivating virtue in a community, the virtue will be expansive.
Diligently cultivating virtue throughout the country, the virtue will be prolific.
Diligently cultivating virtue throughout the world, the virtue will be ubiquitous.
Therefore, looking from the individual perspective, you can see the benefit.
From the respective viewpoints of family, community, country or the world, the benefits are also obvious.
How do you know cultivating virtue will benefit the world?
It is through this inference.

[54c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
What is well planted cannot be pulled up.
What is closely embraced cannot slip away.
The wise establish virtue firmly within themselves, and are honored for generations ever after.
Apply natural, integral virtue to your own character,
and it will be genuine.
Apply natural, integral virtue to the family,
and it will abound.
Apply natural, integral virtue to the state,
and it will flourish abundantly.
Apply natural, integral virtue to the world,
and it will be pervasive.
Understand other people's lives by means of your own life.
Understand other people's families by means of your own family.
Understand other societies by means of your own society.
Understand other countries by means of your own country.
How can you know what is right for the world?
By knowing what is right for your own life.

[54c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Nothing can be taken away if it is well-founded.
Nothing can be lost if it is well-grasped.
For generations to come, the worship will not be discontinued.
To cultivate (Tao) in one's self makes attainment real.
To cultivate (Tao) in one's family makes attainment a surplus.
To cultivate (Tao) in one's community makes attainment long-lasting.
To cultivate (Tao) in one's nation makes attainment abundant.
To cultivate (Tao) in one's world makes attainment all-embracing.
Thus, through the self, one contemplates the self.
Through the family, one contemplates the family.

Those adept in establishing themselves
Cannot be plucked up;
Those adept in the act of embracing
Cannot be made to relax their hold.
They are worshipped for generations in a row.
Cultivate Tao in one's person,
And its virtue will be genuine;
Cultivate Tao in one's family,
And its virtue will be overflowing;
Cultivate Tao in one's village,
And its virtue will be long enduring;
Cultivate Tao in one's state,
And its virtue will be abundant;
Cultivate Tao in one's empire,
And its virtue will be pervasive.
Therefore,
By one's person, one sizes up other persons;
By one's family, one sizes up other families;
By one's village, one sizes up other villages;
By one's state, one sizes up other states;
By one's empire, one sizes up other empires.
How do I know this is so with the empire?
By this.

Cultivate it in the village,

Cultivate it in the state,
And its Te will be plentiful.
Cultivate it in all under Heaven,

What is well-built is not pulled down.
What is well-fastened is not separated.
Sons and grandsons worship unceasingly.
Cultivate the self, and the Action is pure.
Cultivate the family, the Action is plentiful.
Cultivate the community, the Action endures.
Cultivate the nation, the Action is fruitful.
Cultivate the world, the Action is all-pervading.
Treat the self by the standard of self.
Treat the family by the standard of family.
Treat the community by the standard of community.
Treat the nation by the standard of nation.
Treat the world by the standard of world.

What is perfectly planted will not be uprooted.
What is perfectly held will not slip away.
Through generations the family's memorial service will not be discontinued.
Thus,
by cultivating Dao in a person, virtues become manifest;
by cultivating Dao in a family, virtues become abundant;
by cultivating Dao in the community, virtues become enduring;
by cultivating Dao in a country, virtues become flourishing;
and by cultivating Dao in the world, virtues become universal.
Thus,
by taking care of one's self, one takes care of others;
by taking care of one's family, one takes care of others' families;
by taking care of one's own community, one takes care of others' communities;
by taking care of one's own country, one takes care of others' countries;
and by taking care of the world, one takes care of the universe.
How do we know in what way the world should be ruled?
Through this.

He who is well established (in Tao) cannot be pulled away.
He who has a firm grasp (of Tao) cannot be separated from it.
Thus from generation to generation his ancestral sacrifice will never be suspended.
When one cultivates virtue in his person, it becomes genuine virtue.
When one cultivates virtue in his family, it becomes overflowing virtue.
When one cultivates virtue in his community, it becomes lasting virtue.
When one cultivates virtue in his country, it becomes abundant virtue.
When one cultivates virtue in the world, it becomes universal.
Therefore the person should be viewed as a person.
The family should be viewed as a family.
The community should be viewed as a community.
The country should be viewed as a country.
And the world should be viewed as the world.
How do I know this to be the case in the world?
Through this.

Умеющего крепко встать не шелохнуть,
умеющего охватить не оторвать.
Сыновья и внуки будут непрестанно поминать их жертвами.
У того, кто это совершенствует в себе, добродетель делается подлинной;
у того, кто это совершенствует в семье, добродетель достигает изобилия;
у того, кто это совершенствует в селении, добродетель возрастает;
у того, кто это совершенствует в уделе, добродетель процветает;
у того, кто это совершенствует и в Поднебесной, добродетель делается всеобъемлющей.
Поэтому-то зрят себя собою, семью семьей, селение селением, удел уделом, Поднебесную всей Поднебесной.
Откуда мне известно истинное состояние Поднебесной?
Отсюда.

То, что глубоко посадил, нельзя выдернуть.
То, что крепко обхватил, трудно отнять.
Поэтому нельзя положить конец ритуальным подношениям сыновей и внуков своим предкам.
Пестуй это в своём теле - и Благость [в тебе] обретёт истинность.
Пестуй это в семье - и Благость будет в достатке.
Пестуй это в своём государстве - и Благости будет в избытке.
Пестуй это в Поднебесной - и Благость станет повсеместной.
Поэтому смотри на других людей через самого себя.
Смотри на другие семьи через свою семью.
Смотри на другие деревни через свою деревню.
Смотри на другие государства через своё государство.
Смотри на Поднебесную через Поднебесную.
Откуда мне знать, что Поднебесная такова?
Из неё же самой.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Five

864/2593

[55c01t] Robert G. Henricks
One who embraces the fulness of Virtue,
Can be compared to a newborn babe.
Wasps and scorpions, snakes and vipers do not sting him;
Birds of prey and fierce beasts do not seize him;
His bones and muscles are weak and pliant, yet his grasp is firm;
He does not yet know the meeting of male and female, yet his organ is aroused -
This is because his essence is at its height.
He can scream all day, yet he won't become hoarse -
This is because his harmony is at its height.
To {know} harmony is called "the constant";
To know the constant is called "being wise";
To add on to life is called a "bad omen";
For the mind to control the breath - that's called "forcing things."
When things {reach their prime} they get old;
This is called "not the Way."
What is not the Way will come to an early end.

[55c02t] John C. H. Wu
ONE who is steeped in Virtue is akin to the new-born babe.
Wasps and poisonous serpents do not sting it,
Nor fierce beasts seize it,
Nor birds of prey maul it.
Its bones are tender, its sinews soft,
But its grip is firm.
It has not known the union of the male and the female,
Growing in its wholeness, and keeping its vitality in its perfect integrity.
It howls and screams all day long without getting hoarse,
Because it embodies perfect harmony.
To know harmony is to know the Changeless.
To know the Changeless is to have insight.
To hasten the growth of life is ominous.
To control the breath by the will is to overstrain it.
To be overgrown is to decay.
All this is against Tao,
And whatever is against Tao soon ceases to be.

[55c03t] D. C. Lau
One who possesses virtue in abundance is comparable to a new born babe:
Poisonous insects will not sting it;
Ferocious animals will not pounce on it;
Predatory birds will not swoop down on it.

Its bones are weak and its sinews supple yet its hold is firm.
It does not know of the union of male and female yet its male member will stir:
This is because its virility is at its height.
It howls all day yet does not become hoarse:
This is because its harmony is at its height.
To know harmony is called the constant;
To know the constant is called discernment.
To try to add to one's vitality is called ill-omened;
For the mind to egg on the breath is called violent.
A creature in its prime doing harm to the old
Is known as going against the way.
That which goes against the way will come to an early end.

[55c04t] R. L. Wing
To possess Power that runs deep Is to be like a newborn child.
Poisonous insects do not sting it,
Fierce beasts do not seize it,
Birds of prey do not strike it.
Its bones are yielding, Its muscles are relaxed, Its grip is strong.
It does not yet know the union of male and female, Yet its virility is active.
Its Life Force is at its greatest.
It can scream all day,
Yet it does not become hoarse.
Its Harmony is at its greatest.
To know Harmony is called the Absolute.
To know the Absolute is called insight.
To enhance life is called propitious.
To be conscious of Influence is called strength.
Things overgrown must decline.
This is not the Tao.
What is not the Tao will soon end.

[55c05t] Ren Jiyu
The profundity of De contained should be compared to an ignorant infant without desires,
Whom poisonous insects will not sting,
Whom fierce brutes will not seize,
Whom birds of prey will not attack;
Whose bones are weak and whose sinews are soft, but whose grasp is firm;
Who does not yet know about intercourse of male and female but whose virile member may be excited, because it is full of physical essence;
Who cries all day long without its throat becoming hoarse, because it is peaceful and without desires.
To know the peace is called the eternal,
To know the eternal is called wisdom.
The desire for life enjoyment is a disaster,
And to subject physical essence to desire is to boast of powerfulness.
Things begin to become old when they have grown strong, which may be said to be contrary to Tao.

Contrariness to Tao brings death with it very soon.

[55c06t] Gia-fu Feng
He who is filled with Virtue is like a newborn child.
Wasps and serpents will not sting him;
Wild beasts will not pounce upon him;
He will not be attacked by birds of prey.
His bones are soft, his muscles weak,
But his grip is firm.
He has not experienced the union of man and woman, but is whole.
His manhood is strong.
He screams all day without becoming hoarse.
This is perfect harmony.
Knowing harmony is constancy.
Knowing constancy is enlightenment.
It is not wise to rush about.
Controlling the breath causes strain.
If too much energy is used, exhaustion follows.
This is not the way of Tao.
Whatever is contrary to Tao will not last long.

[55c07t] Lok Sang Ho
To be receptive to the benefit of the Virtue,
Like an infant is receptive to the mother,
One would be spared of the stings and bites from bees, scorpions, and snakes;
One would be spared of being harmed by fierce beasts;
And of being clawed by the predatory birds.
To be so receptive,
Then even if one has weak bones and soft sinews
One can grip things firmly.
People do not realize that the union of the male and female with moderation Represents energy at its height; and that Being together all day sounding natural calls and not losing voice through screaming
Represents harmony at its best.
To know the harmony of the universe is be congruent with the Eternal;
To know the Eternal is to be illuminated.
To preserve and to promote life is to bring good fortune;
To let the mind take command of the life-breath is to be strong.
Any living thing that indulges in excesses soon gets old.
Indulging in excesses is against the Dao.
Going against the Dao, one soon dies.

[55c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The people who have the thickest DE are like a naked newborn boy.
The snake does not sting him, the wild animal does not bite him, and the fierce bird does not claw him.

His bones are soft and his muscles are weak, but his grip is very strong.
He has no idea of making love, but his manhood is always rigid,
Because his body is in the purest state.
He cries all day, but does not go hoarse,
Because his body is in the most harmonic state.
Understanding this harmonic state makes you natural,
Understanding the natural way makes your mind clear.
Trying hard to make your life last longer only brings you bad luck,
Trying to be strong-willed against nature only makes you lifeless.
When things become strong, they start to break down,
Which is not in accordance with the DAO.
Not being in accordance with the DAO leads to an early death.

[55c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE WONDERFUL HARMONY
The man who is saturated with Virtue is like a little child.
Scorpions will not sting him, wild beasts will not seize him, nor will birds of prey pluck at him.
His young bones are not hard, neither are his sinews strong, yet his grasp is firm and sure.
He is full of virility, though unconscious of his sex.
Though he should cry out all day, yet he is never hoarse.
Herein is shown his harmony with Nature.
The knowledge of this harmony is the eternal Tao.
The knowledge of the eternal Tao is illumination.
Habits of excess grow upon a man, and the mind, giving way to the passions, they increase day by day.
And when the passions have reached their climax, they also fail.
This is against the nature of Tao.
What is contrary to Tao soon comes to an end.

[55c10t] James Legge
He who has in himself abundantly the attributes (of the Tao) is like an infant.
Poisonous insects will not sting him;
fierce beasts will not seize him;
birds of prey will not strike him.
(The infant's) bones are weak and its sinews soft, but yet its grasp is firm.
It knows not yet the union of male and female, and yet its virile member may be excited;
- showing the perfection of its physical essence.
All day long it will cry without its throat becoming hoarse;
- showing the harmony (in its constitution).
To him by whom this harmony is known,
(The secret of) the unchanging (Tao) is shown,
And in the knowledge wisdom finds its throne.
All life-increasing arts to evil turn;
Where the mind makes the vital breath to burn,
(False) is the strength, (and o'er it we should mourn.)
When things have become strong, they (then) become old, which may be said to be contrary to the Tao.
Whatever is contrary to the Tao soon ends.

[55c11t] David Hinton
Embody Integrity's abundance and you're like a vibrant child hornets and vipers can't bite, savage beasts can't maul and fierce birds can't claw,
bones supple and muscles tender, but still gripping firmly.
Knowing nothing of male and female mingling
and yet aroused:
this is the utmost essence.
Wailing all day without getting hoarse:
this is the utmost harmony.
To understand harmony is called constancy,
and to understand constancy is called enlightenment.
To enhance your life is called tempting fate,
and to control ch'i with the mind is called violence.
Things grown strong soon grow old.
This is called losing the Way: Lose the Way and you die young.

[55c12t] Chichung Huang
He who embodies abundant virtue
May be likened to a ruddy infant:
Wasps, venomous insects, scorpions, and snakes
Do not sting him;
Birds of prey and ferocious beasts
Do not seize him.
Bones weak, muscles soft,
Its grip is firm.
Knowing nothing about the copulation
Between female and male,
Its little penis erects,
Which manifests sublime virility;
It howls all day without becoming hoarse,
Which manifests sublime harmony.
Knowing harmony means constancy;
Knowing constancy means clear-sightedness.
Extravagant living means calamity;
The heart dominating the breath means collapse.
Something ages while still in its prime
Is contrary to the Tao.
What is contrary to the Tao perishes early.

[55c13t] Ellen M. Chen
One who contains te in fullness,

Fierce beasts do not attack it,
Birds of prey do not pounce upon it.

Its bones weak, its sinews tender,
But its grip is firm;
Knowing not the union of the female and male animals,
Yet its organ stirs.
Such is the perfection of its life-force (ching).
Crying all day, yet it does not get hoarse.
Such is the Perfection of its harmony (ho).
To know harmony is to know the everlasting (ch'ang);
To know the everlasting is to be illumined (ming).
To help life along is to bring ill portend;
To use mind (hsin) to direct the life breath (ch'i) is called the strong (ch'iang).
When things are full-grown they become old,
It is called not following the Way (Tao).
Not following the Way one dies early.

[55c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
The marvel of the rich embodiment of Te [in a person] is comparable to the [marvel] of young infants who are not yet exposed to the worldly desires;
[Because a young infant poses no menace to others:]
Poisonous insects are less likely to sting him;
Fierce beasts are less likely to prey on him;
Birds of prey are less likely to pounce on him.
Though his bones are soft and his muscles are weak, yet the grasp of his little fist is firm;
Though he does not know about sex, yet he can maneuver his infant reproduction organ;
It is because he concentrated intensely on applying his vitality.
He can cry out all day long without failing to catch his breath;
It is because he is doing extremely well in harmonizing his [inner self with the external world].
[A person who] knows how to harmonize [inner self with the external world] also understands what will perpetuate;
[A person who] understands what will perpetuate is brilliant;
Knowing how to enhance lives of others is a blessing;
Knowing how to control one's own vitality (bearing) with will makes one a strong person.
Fast paces hasten the exhaustion of the vitality of living things, this is called going against Tao;
Anything which goes against Tao will come to a pre-matured end!

One who is enriched with Virtue is like the new-born babe.
Wasps and poisonous serpents do not sting him.
Nor fierce beasts seize him, nor birds of prey maul him.
His bones are tender, his sinews soft, but his grip is firm.
He has not known the union of the male and the female, but he grows in his wholeness, and his spirit is at its highest point.
He screams all day long without getting hoarse, because he embodies supreme harmony.
To know harmony is to be constant.
To know the constant is to have insight.
To hasten life is harmful.

To use the belly to direct the ether is to suppress it.
Things become big, thus they will be old soon.
That is against the Way.
To be against the Way is to die soon.

[55c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
People with profound Te are like babies.
Poisonous insects cannot bite them.
Ferocious beasts cannot grab them.
Birds of prey cannot pounce on them.
With tough bones and flexible muscles they can hold firmly.
Without knowing male and female union, sexual organs can function, because the hormone comes into play.
They can cry a whole day without getting hoarse, because harmony comes into play.
Knowing harmony is called normalcy.
Knowing normalcy is called wisdom.
Fortifying oneself is ominous.
Things become old while still in their golden time.
This does not conform to Tao.
Departing from Tao leads to a premature end.

[55c17t] Arthur Waley
The impunity of things fraught with the 'power'
May be likened to that of an infant.
Poisonous insects do not sting it,
Nor fierce beasts seize it,
Nor clawing birds maul it.
Its bones are soft, its sinews weak; but its grip is strong.
Not yet to have known the union of male and female, but to be completely formed,
Means that the vital force is at its height;
To be able to scream all day without getting hoarse
Means that harmony is at its perfection.
To understand such harmony is to understand the always-so.
To understand the always-so is to be illumined.
But to fill life to the brim is to invite omens.
If the heart makes calls upon the life-breath, rigidity follows.
Whatever has a time of vigour also has a time of decay.
Such things are against Tao,
And whatever is against Tao is soon destroyed.

[55c18t] Richard John Lynn
One who has profoundly internalized virtue is comparable to the infant.
Wasps, scorpions, adders, and vipers do not sting or bite him.
Fierce animals do not attack him.
Birds of prey do not seize him.
His bones are soft and sinews pliant, but his grip is firm.
That he is ignorant of the union of male and female yet completely erect

Is because his semen is at the full.
That he can cry all day long yet never grow hoarse
Is because his bodily balance is perfect.
To know how to maintain balance is called "constancy."
To understand constancy is called "perspicacity."
To extend life beyond its natural span is called "inauspicious."
For the heart/mind to control the vital force is called "forcing strength."
Once a thing reaches its prime, it grows old.
We say it goes against the Dao, and what is against the Dao comes to an early end.

THE CHARACTER OF THE CHILD
Who is rich in character
Is like a child.
No poisonous insects sting him,
No wild beasts attack him,
And no birds of prey pounce upon him.
His bones are soft, his sinews tender, yet his grip is strong.
Not knowing the union of male and female, yet his organs are complete,
Which means his vigor is unspoiled.
Crying the whole day, yet his voice never runs hoarse,
Which means his (natural) harmony is perfect.
To know harmony is to be in accord with the eternal,
(And) to know eternity is called discerning.
(But) to improve upon life is called an ill-omen;
To let go the emotions through impulse is called assertiveness.
(For) things age after reaching their prime;
That (assertiveness) would be against Tao.
And he who is against Tao perishes young.

[55c20t] Victor H. Mair
He who embodies the fullness of integrity is like a ruddy infant.
Wasps, spiders, scorpions, and snakes will not sting or bite him;
Rapacious birds and fierce beasts will not seize him.
His bones are weak and his sinews soft, yet his grip is tight.
He knows not the joining of male and female, yet his penis is aroused.
His essence has reached a peak.
He screams the whole day without becoming hoarse;
His harmony has reached perfection.
Harmony implies constancy;
Constancy requires insight.
Striving to increase one's life is ominous;
To control the vital breath with one's mind entails force.
Something that grows old while still in its prime is said to be not in accord with the Way;
Not being in accord with the Way leads to an early demise.

[55c21t] Tolbert McCarroll

A person who is filled with Virtue is like a newborn child.
Poisonous insects will not sting,
wild animals will not pounce,
birds of prey will not swoop down.
Although bones are soft and sinews weak,
a child's grip is firm.
The union of man and woman is not known,
yet there is completeness,
because a child's vital force is at its height.
Crying all day will not produce hoarseness,
because there is perfect harmony.
To know harmony is to know the Always-so.
To know the Always-so is to be awakened.
Trying to fill life to the brim invites a curse.
For the mind to make demands upon the breath of life brings strain.
Whatever has been forced to a peak of vigor approaches its decay.
This is not the way of Tao.
And that which goes against the Tao will quickly pass away.

[55c22t] David H. Li

One possessing virtue may be compared to an infant.
Poisonous insects will not bite, ferocious animals will not pounce,
Fetching birds will not prey.
Though weak in bones and soft in muscles, his hold is firm;
Though ignorant of union, his instrument is turgid.
This is supreme energy.
Crying all day without turning hoarse, this is supreme harmony.
Knowing harmony is normalcy;
knowing normalcy is discernment.
Enriching oneself is ominous;
overexerting oneself is ruinous.
Matter withers after saturation;
This is not in line with Direction.
Not in line with Direction, early demise is the expectation.

He can howl all day without becoming hoarse,
Because he is the embodiment of perfect balance.
To know balance is to know the eternal.
To know the eternal is to be illumined.
To overprotect life is to invite sure disaster.
To overuse the mind is to invite lopsided strength.
To overdevelop a thing is to invite early decay.
All are out of balance, and thus contrary to the Tao.
Being contrary to the Tao, things soon cease to be.

What is sown by the best sower will never be uprooted,
What is fastened by the best fastener will never be loosened.
And so his children and grandchildren can continue the ancestral ritual for many generations.
If he nurtures the Tao by himself, his virtue is genuine,
If he nurtures the Tao in his family, his virtue is abundant,
If he nurtures the Tao in his village, his virtue is inestimable,
If he nurtures the Tao in his country, his virtue fills the country,
If he nurtures the Tao in the world, his virtue fills the universe.
Therefore, when you observe the individual, know individuals,
When you observe the family, know families,
When you observe the village, know villages,
When you observe the country, know countries,
When you observe the world, know the universe.
How do I know that it is possible to rule the world with the Tao?
From this observation.

A baby is weak and supple, but his hand can grasp your finger.
He has no desire as yet, and yet he can be erect - he can cry day and night without even getting hoarse such is the depth of his harmony.

Yet its hold is tight.
It does not know sexual intercourse between the male and female,
Yet its little penis often erects itself;
This is because it is at the height of virility.
It cries all day long,
Yet its throat does not become hoarse;
This is because it is at the height of harmonious vim and vigor.
To know harmony is to know the law of unity;
To know the law of unity is to know discernment;
To indulge in sensual pleasures is to look for disasters;
To let virility driven by desires is to give free rein to strength.
A creature in its prime is at the turning-point of being old,
For it is against the Tao.
What is against the Tao comes to an early end.

The truest being can be illustrated by the infant.
Infants are not attacked by poisonous insects
Or by the birds and beasts of prey.
Though they are weak and fragile,
They have a firm grasp.
Though they don't know about sexual intercourse,
The male penises can naturally erect
(Which is the best embodiment of energy).
Though they can cry the whole day,
Their voices never crack
(Which is the best function of harmony).
Keeping harmony is keeping eternity.
The keeper of eternity can attain true wisdom.

Exertion of will beyond harmony is strength.

What is weakening is against the Way.
What is against the Way will die early.

The Character of The Child
Lao Tze says,
He who has in himself abundant Teh, the attribute of the Tao, is like a baby.
Poisonous insects will not sting him;
fierce beasts will not seize him;
and birds of prey will not pounce upon him.
A baby is weak with tender bones and feeble sinews, but his grasp is firm and tight.
He doesn't know men and women's affairs, yet his virile member may be excited, showing the perfection of his vigor.
He cries all day long without his throat becoming hoarse, thus showing the perfection of his harmonious constitution.
When one knows harmony, he knows the absolute.
When he knows the absolute, he deserves to be called the enlightened.
But he who knows the life-increasing arts transforms himself by having an evil heart.
He who lets his emotions go through impulse is called strong.
When things become strong in maturity, they become old,
which may be said to be contrary to the Tao.
Whatever is contrary to the Tao ends soon.

It means he is in the best vitality.
He may cry all day long without growing hoarse;

Not knowing the union of male and female,
The organ is fully formed;
This is the zenith of essence.
Howling and screaming all day without getting hoarse;
This is the zenith of harmony.
To know harmony means to be constant;
To know constancy means enlightenment;
To benefit one's own life is ill-fated.
To let one's heart direct vigor is to become stark.
Things in their prime will become old;
This is not Tao.
Being not Tao means to die early.

[55c32t] Michael LaFargue
One who has an abundance of Te,

but its grip is firm.
It has not known the union of man and woman,
but its organs get aroused:
Vital energy at its height.
It will scream all day without getting hoarse:
Harmony at its height.
To experience Harmony is called being Steady, to experience Steadiness is called Clarity.
'Increasing life': ominous;
'the mind controlling the ch'i': forcing.
Things are vigorous, then grow old:
A case of 'not-Tao'.
Not-Tao, soon gone.

[55c33t] Cheng Lin
When the inherent qualities are completely preserved, one is like a new-born babe.
Poisonous insects will not bite him, ferocious beasts will not crouch in wait for him, predatory birds will not attack him.

Though he is ignorant about the reproductive organs, yet he possesses them all.
This is because he is full of the elemental force.
He may cry all day, yet he never loses his voice.

When the elemental force is in perfect harmony, there is normalcy.
When one knows normalcy, there is enlightenment.
When one tampers with life, there is calamity.

This is because its vitality is perfectly whole.
It can howl and scream all day long without becoming hoarse.
This is because it embodies perfect harmony.
To know harmony is to know natural virtue.
To recognize the natural virtue of the universe is to have insight.
To overprotect one's life is to invite danger.
To follow the fantasy of the mind is to drain away one's life energy.

Знание гармонии зовут незыблемым, знание незыблемого называется просветом.
Становиться взрослым, отходя от состояния младенца, значит предрекать себе несчастье.
Когда сердце властвует дыханием, это говорит о силе возмужалости.
Но ей на смену спешит старость.
Это значит действовать вопреки Дао.
А тому, кто действует вопреки Дао, конец приходит рано.

Он не знает о союзе мужского и женского, но пенис его уже воспрял, ибо семя его достигло совершенства.
Он кричит весь день, но голос его не хрипнет, ибо гармония его достигла совершенства.
Познание гармонии зовётся достижением постоянства.
Познание постоянства зовётся просветлением.
Избыток жизни зовётся [недобрым] знамением.
Регулирование [круговорота] ци сердцем зовётся укреплением.
Вещи, исполняясь силы, стареют, и это считается противоречащим Дао.
То, что противоречит Дао, рано приходит к своему концу.

Того, кто крепко держится за Силу-Дэ благую, сравню я с новорожденным младенцем.
Пчелы, пауки и змеи ядовитые его не жалят.

Его кости мягки, его мышцы слабы, но хватает он крепко.
Ничего не знает он о союзе самца и самки, но уд его вздымается, ибо его семя-энергия предельно совершенно.
Гармония - источник постоянства, а постоянство - корень просветления.
Стремление к пестованию жизни зовется благовещим.
Контроль сознания над жизненной энергией дарит силу.
Коль существо сильно и вдруг стареет - оно отвергло истинный Путь-Дао, значит.
Тот, кто с Пути сворачивает, гибнет рано.

[55c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Таящий в себе полноту Дэ подобен новорожденному:
ядовитые насекомые и змеи не ужалят, свирепые звери не схватят, хищные птицы не унесут.
Кости [у него] нежные, мышцы мягкие, но цепляется [он] накрепко.
Не знает союза самца и самки, но все творит - это совершенство семени-энергии (цзин).
Весь день голосит, но не хрипнет - это совершенство созвучия (гармонии).
Знание созвучия называю постоянством.
Знание постоянства называю просветленностью.

Богатую жизнь называю счастьем.
Управление сердцем (разумом) энергией (ци) называю могуществом.
Если вещь в расцвете сил, а стара, называю это не-Дао.
Не-Дао рано умирает.

[55c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Кто содержит в себе совершенное дэ, тот похож на новорожденного.
Ядовитые насекомые и змеи его не ужалят, свирепые звери его не схватят, хищные птицы его не заклюют.
Кости у него мягкие, мышцы слабые, но он держит [дао] крепко.
Не зная союза двух полов, он обладает животворящей способностью.
Он очень чуток.
Он кричит весь день, и его голос не изменяется.
Он совершенно гармоничен.
Знание гармонии называется постоянством.
Знание постоянства называется мудростью.
Обогащение жизни называется счастьем.
Стремление управлять чувствами называется упорством.
Существо, полное сил, стареет - это называется нарушением дао.
Кто дао не соблюдает, тот погибает раньше времени.

[55c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Достигший нравственного совершенства похож на младенца.
Вредоносные насекомые не укусят его; дикие звери не сделают ему вреда;
хищные птицы не вопьются в него своими когтями.
Хотя у него кости мягки и мышцы слабы, но он будет держать предмет очень крепко.
Хотя он не знает, как совокупляется самец с самкою и как образуется зачаток во чреве, но ему известно до подробности все, что совершается в мире.
Хотя он кричит целый день, но голос его никогда не ослабеет, ибо в нем (голосе) существует полнейшая гармония.
Знание гармонии называется постоянством.
Знание постоянства называется очевидностью.
Творить приятное только для плоти называется нечистотою.
Душа, могущая господствовать над своим настроением, есть сильная (душа).
Вообще, цветущее отцветает, ибо в нем нет Тао.
Где нет Тао, там скоро наступит конец.

[55c97t] В. В. Малявин
Тот, кто хранит в себе глубину совершенства,
Подобен новорожденному младенцу:
Ни скорпионы, ни осы, ни змеи его не ужалят,
Хищные птицы и дикие звери его не схватят.
Его кости и сухожилия мягки, а хватка крепка,
О соитии не знает, а мужская сила в нем есть -
Ибо семя в нем пребывает сполна.
Целый день кричит, а не хрипнет -

Ибо согласие в нем не имеет изъяна.
Знать согласие означает "быть постоянным",
Пребывать в постоянстве означает "быть просветленным",
Прибавлять что-то к жизни - это предвестье несчастья,
Когда ум повелевает жизненной силой - это насилие.
Кто накопит силу, тот одряхлеет:
Это означает "противиться Пути".
А кто противится Пути, тот быстро погибнет.

[55c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Если вмещаешь полноту Потенции, то приближаешься к состоянию новорожденного.
Ядовитые твари не ужалят.
Лютые звери не утащат.
Хищные птицы не вцепятся.
Кости мягкие, сухожилия слабые, а хватает крепко.
Еще не осознает единения самки и самца, а в действиях целостен.
Это предельное выражение семени.
До конца дня кричит, а горло не садится.
Это предельное выражение гармонии.
Осознание гармонии выражается в постоянстве.
Осознание постоянства выражается в ясности.
Прибыль в жизни выражается благими знамениями.
Управление дыхания-ци сердцем выражается в силе.
Сущность, став крепкой, начинает стареть.
Это определяется:
Не Путь.
Если не Путь, устраняйся пораньше.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Six

884/2593

[56c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Those who know don't talk about it; those who talk don't know it.
He blocks up his holes,
Closes his doors,
Softens the glare,
Settles the dust,
Files down the sharp edges,
And unties the tangles.
This is called Profound Union.
Therefore, there is no way to get intimate with him,
But there is also no way to shun him.
There is no way to benefit him,
But there is also no way to harm him.
There is no way to ennoble him,
But there is also no way to debase him.
For this very reason he's the noblest thing in the world.

[56c02t] John C. H. Wu
HE who knows does not speak.
He who speaks does not know.
Block all the passages!
Shut all the doors!
Blunt all edges!
Untie all tangles!
Harmonize all lights!
Unite the world into one whole!
This is called the Mystical Whole,
Which you cannot court after nor shun,
Benefit nor harm, honour nor humble.
Therefore, it is the Highest of the world.

[56c03t] D. C. Lau
One who knows does not speak;
One who speaks does not know.
Block the openings;
Shut the doors.
Blunt the sharpness;
Untangle the knots;
Soften the glare;
Let your wheels move only along old ruts.
This is known as mysterious sameness.
Hence you cannot get close to it, nor can you keep it at arm's length;

You cannot bestow benefit on it, nor can you do it harm;
You cannot ennoble it, nor can you debase it.
Therefore it is valued by the empire.

[56c04t] R. L. Wing
Those who know do not speak.
Those who speak do not know.
Block the passages.
Close the door.
Blunt the sharpness.
Untie the tangles.
Harmonize the brightness.
Identify with the ways of the world.
This is called Profound Identification.
It cannot be gained through attachment.
It cannot be gained through detachment.
It cannot be gained through advantage.
It cannot be gained through disadvantage.
It cannot be gained through esteem.
It cannot be gained through humility.
Hence it is the treasure of the world.

[56c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who knows does not speak,
And he who speaks does not know.
Blocking the vent (of knowledge),
closing the door (of knowledge),
covering the cutting-edge,
going beyond entanglement,
containing the light,
and mixing with the dust,
- These can be called "the mysterious agreement."
So, (the person with "the mysterious agreement")
Cannot be treated intimately,
Cannot be estranged,
Cannot be given profits,
Cannot be injured,
Cannot be raised to nobility,
And cannot be made humble,
And can therefore be esteemed by all the people under Heaven.

Temper your sharpness.
Simplify your problems.
Mask your brightness.
Be at one with the dust of the earth.
This is primal union.
He who has achieved this state
Is unconcerned with friends and enemies,
With good and harm, with honor and disgrace.
This therefore is the highest state of man.

[56c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Those who know do not speak much.
Those who speak much do not know.
Block the passage of exchange with the outside world.
Close the doors;
Blunt the protruding points;
Absolve the disputes;
Tone down the dazzling light;
Receive outside stimuli with an equanimous mind.
This is called the mystical union.
With a non-possessive mind we get together;
With a non-possessive mind we separate.
With a non-possessive mind we experience what seems advantageous to us;
With a non-possessive mind we experience what seems disadvantageous;
With a non-possessive mind we experience high positions;
With a non-possessive mind we experience low positions.
This way we achieve the most valuable under heaven.

[56c08t] Xiaolin Yang
People who have knowledge do not talk about it;
people who like to talk about it do not have knowledge.
Shut off your senses, block your desires,
Dull your sharpness, untie your knots with the outside world,
Dim your brightness, and make yourself as low as dust;
This will lead you to the world of the DAO.
Therefore, no one can own the DAO,
No one can cast it away,
No one can benefit it,
No one can hurt it,
No one can make it noble,
No one can make it low;
This is why the DAO is the noblest.

[56c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE MYSTERIOUS VIRTUE
He who knows the Tao does not discuss it, and those who babble about it do not know it.

and to be on a level with the dust of the earth, this is the mysterious virtue.
Whoever observes this will regard alike both frankness and reserve, kindness and injury, honour and degradation.
For this reason he will be held in great esteem of all men.

[56c10t] James Legge
He who knows (the Tao) does not (care to) speak (about it);
he who is (ever ready to) speak about it does not know it.
He (who knows it) will keep his mouth shut and close the portals (of his nostrils).
He will blunt his sharp points and unravel the complications of things;
he will attemper his brightness, and bring himself into agreement with the obscurity (of others).
This is called 'the Mysterious Agreement.'
(Such an one) cannot be treated familiarly or distantly;
he is beyond all consideration of profit or injury;
of nobility or meanness:
- he is the noblest man under heaven.

[56c11t] David Hinton
Those who know don't talk, and those who talk don't know.
Block the senses and close the mind,
blunt edges, loosen tangles, soften glare, mingle dust:
this is called dark-enigma union.
It can't be embraced and can't be ignored,
can't be enhanced and can't be harmed,
can't be treasured and can't be despised,
for it's the treasure of all beneath heaven.

[56c12t] Chichung Huang
He who knows does not speak;
He who speaks does not know.
Stop your hole,
Close your door,
Soften your brightness,
Mingle with the dust,
File your sharpness,
And unravel your entanglements.
This is called deep and remote concord.
Therefore, neither can anyone become intimate with you,
Nor can anyone become alienated from you;
Neither can anyone benefit you,
Nor can anyone harm you;
Neither can anyone exalt you,
Nor can anyone debase you.
Therefore, you are exalted by all under heaven.

One who knows does not speak,
One who speaks does not know.
Stop the apertures,
Close the door;
Blunt the sharp,
Untie the entangled;
Harmonize the bright,
Make identical the dust.
This is called the mystical identity (hsüan t'ung).
Therefore with this person you cannot get intimate (ch'in),
Cannot get distant,
Cannot benefit,
Cannot harm,
Cannot exalt,
Cannot humiliate.
Therefore such person is the exalted of the world.

[56c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A person who knows [comprehensively] would not be garrulous;
A person who is garrulous is not wise [he may likely base his bloated talks on his incomprehensive knowledge].
[People's garrulity, as described above, can be equalized in the following fashion:]
By blocking their passages and openings [i.e. connections to the outside world];
By blunting [their excessive] sharpness [i.e. their arrogance];
By untying entanglements [i.e. disputes they have produced];
By tempering the disturbing ray [i.e. harms they have caused];
By pushing [sophistry to] where it belongs, i.e. the dust.
All of this is meant to accentuate [our knowledge after Tao] in a profound manner.
Therefore:
One shall not wanting to achieve Tao for the purpose of practicing favoritism;
One shall not use Tao for the purpose of distancing himself from people he dislikes;
One shall not exploit Tao for the purpose of profiting himself;
One shall not employ Tao for the purpose of harming others;
One shall not gain Tao for the purpose of promoting himself;
One shall not apply Tao for the purpose of debasing others.
This is why Tao originates the most valuable [canon for] the world.

[56c15t] Tien Cong Tran
He who knows does not speak.
He who speaks does not know.
Blocking all the passages; shutting all the doors, blunting all edges, untying all tangles, harmonizing all lights, uniting the worldly dusts.
This is called the mysterious One.
Hence, you cannot have it by nearness, by distance, by benefit, by harm, by praise, by dislike.
Therefore, it is the most prized of the world.

Knowledgeable people rarely show off.
Boastful people are not truly knowledgeable.
Block up leakages;
Close doors;
Smooth out sharp edges;
Resolve conflicts;
Harmonize glares;
And blend into the base.
These are profound concords.
Do not become intimate when receiving the desired.
Do not become alienating when receiving the undesired.
Do not become greedy when obtaining profit.
Do not retaliate when receiving hostility.
Do not prize when obtaining the precious.
Do not debase when receiving humility.
Doing so can gain respect from others.

[56c17t] Arthur Waley
Those who know do not speak;
Those who speak do not know.
Block the passages,
Shut the doors,
Let all sharpness be blunted,
All tangles untied,
All glare tempered,
All dust smoothed.
This is called the mysterious levelling.
He who has achieved it cannot either be drawn into friendship or repelled,
Cannot be benefited, cannot be harmed,
Cannot either be raised or humbled,
And for that very reason is highest of all creatures under heaven.

[56c18t] Richard John Lynn
He who knows does not speak.
He who speaks does not know.
Block up your apertures;
Close your door;
Blunt your sharpness;
Cut away the tangled;
Merge with the brilliant;
Become one with the very dust.
We call this "one with mystery."
Thus one can neither get close to such a one nor get distant from him.
One can neither benefit nor harm him.
One can neither ennoble him nor debase him.

BEYOND HONOR AND DISGRACE
He who knows does not speak;
He who speaks does not know.
Fill up its apertures,
Close its doors,
Dull its edges,
Untie its tangles,
Soften its light,
Submerge its turmoil -
This is the Mystic Unity.
Then love and hatred cannot touch him.
Profit and loss cannot reach him.
Honor and disgrace cannot affect him.
Therefore is he always the honored one of the world.

[56c20t] Victor H. Mair
One who knows does not speak;
One who speaks does not know.
He
Stopples the openings of his heart,
Closes his doors,
Diffuses the light,
Mingles with the dust,
Files away his sharp points,
Unravels his tangles.
This is called "mysterious identity."
Therefore,
Neither can one attain intimacy with him,
Nor can one remain distant from him;
Neither can one profit from him,
Nor can one be harmed by him;
Neither can one achieve honor through him,
Nor can one be debased by him.
Therefore,
He is esteemed by all under heaven.

One who knows is reticent; one who glibs is ignorant.
Stuff channels, block portals;
blunt sharpness, resolve conflicts;
harmonize brightness, mingle with dust.
This is the Profoundest Assimilation.
Thus, after gaining possession,
one does not patronize, nor slight, nor take advantage of, nor damage, nor treasure, nor debase.
Thus, one is treasured by the world.

[56c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Those who know do not talk.
Those who talk do not know.
Close the openings of your senses,
Blunt the sharpness of your intellect,
Untie the tangles of your attachment,
Soften the brightness of your knowledge.
Be one with the dust of the world.
This is to be one with the Tao.
He who is one with the Tao cannot be courted, cannot be distanced, cannot be bought, cannot be harmed, cannot be honored, cannot be humiliated.
For this reason, he becomes the true treasure of the world.

[56c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The person who is blessed with great virtue can be compared to a child.
He will not be bitten by an insect or a snake,
He will not be devoured by wild animals,
Birds of prey will not swoop down on him.
His bones are fragile, his tendons soft, but his grip is strong.
He is not familiar with the union of man and woman, but he possesses reproductive powers.
This means that he is at the peak of his vitality.
He can weep all day and not become hoarse.
This means that he is in perfect harmony.
Being familiar with this harmony brings him closer to eternity,
Being familiar with eternity enables man to attain enlightenment.
Increasing life invites trouble,
Let your heart become addicted to the breath of the spirit, and you will be filled with potency.

[56c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
If you know what it is, don't talk it away:
If you do, then you don't understand.
Hush, keep it in, and your doorway shut -
Steer clear of sharpness and untangle the knots.
Feel your lightness and let it merge with others,
This, we say, is our basic oneness.
The sage who does this doesn't have to worry about people called 'friends' or 'enemies', with profit or loss, honour or disgrace -
He is a Master of Life, instead.

[56c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who is wise will not speak;
He who speaks is not wise.
When one blocks the openings (of knowledge),
Shuts the door (of desires),
Dulls sharpness,
Stays away from entanglements,
Glows with veiled radiance,
Mingles with dust,
That is called subtle identification.
Hence you are in no way
To be friends with him,
To estrange him,
To benefit him,
To harm him,
To honor him,
To debase him.
That is why he is held in esteem in the world.

[56c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
One who knows does not speak.
One who speaks does not know.
He closes his mouth, seals his ears.
He subdues his sharpness, releases his worries.
He blends himself with the light, he becomes one with the dust.
This is what is called mysterious identity.
Therefore he regards things out of his reach as dear.
He regards things out of his reach as distant,
he perceives unreachable things with harm,
he perceives unreachable things with value,
he perceives unreachable things with humbleness.
That is why he values everything under Heaven.

One who says knows nothing.
Cover the ears, close the eyes;
Blunt the sharpness, dissolve the currents;
Soften the light, blend the substances.
And the result is called the profound sameness.
One who holds that sameness cannot be Approached too close,
Or estranged too far,
Or favored too much,
Or harmed too badly,
Or valued too high,
Or degraded too low.
And is therefore the most appreciated in the world.

[56c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Noblest One
Lao Tze says,
He who knows the Tao does not care to speak about it;
he who is ever ready to speak about it does not know it.
Therefore the Tao practician would rather close his eyes and shut up his mouth, in order to frustrate his ambition and untie the confused knot in his heart.
Further, he proceeds to temper his brightness, and brings himself into agreement with obscurity.
Then he deserves to be called the one in accordance with Heaven.
Such a one cannot be treated familiarly nor distantly, rendered with profit or injury, made noble or mean.
Hence he is regarded as the noblest one in the world.

[56c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Blunt all that is sharp;
Cut all that is divisible;
Blur all that is brilliant;
Mix with all that is humble as dust;
This is called absolute equality.
Therefore it cannot be made intimate;
Nor can it be alienated.
It cannot be benefited;
Nor can it be harmed.
It cannot be exalted;
Nor can it be debased.
Therefore it is the most valuable thing in the world.

Those who understand are not talkers,
talkers don't understand.
Close your eyes,
shut your doors.
Dampen the passion,
untie the tangles,
make the flashing things harmonious,
make the dust merge together.
This is called the mysterious Merging.
Yes:

Yes:

Shutting the doors,
Blunting the sharpness,
Untying the tangles,
Tempering the brightness,
Uniting with the dust, --
This is called the mystical union.
Therefore,
There is no way to get close to it;
There is no way to leave it;
There is no way to benefit it;
There is no way to harm it;
There is no way to value it;
There is no way to despise it;
Therefore, it is revered in the world.

[56c35t] Han Hiong Tan
He who really knows does not speak.
He who speaks does not know.
You must block the portals to your sensory organs.
You must also blunt the sharp edge and reduce the complexity.
You must attenuate the glares and mix with commoners.
This is to attain "the divine oneness".
Henceforth, you are not concerned about intimacy or estrangement.
You have no concerns about advantage and disadvantage.
You have no concerns about nobility and lowliness.
Everyone treasures you.

[56c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
One who knows does not speak.
One who speaks does not know.
The one who knows is the one whose doors are shut, whose openings are blocked, whose sharpness is blunted, and whose glare is softened.
He is one with the subtle truth of the universe.
Thus you cannot get close to such a person by your love to do so,
nor can you keep away from him by your desire to do so.
You cannot bestow benefit on him,
nor can you do him harm,
because he holds the subtle essence of the universe.

[56c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
One who is aware does not talk.
One who talks is not aware.
Ceasing verbal expressions,
Stopping the entry of sensations,
Dulling its sharpness,
Releasing its entanglements,

Tempering its brightness,
And unifying with the earth:
This is called the identity of Tao.
Hence, no nearness can reach him nor distance affect him.
No gain can touch him nor loss disturb him.
No esteem can move him nor shame distress him.
Thus, he is the most valuable man in the world.

Mystic Virtue
Hsuan Teh
Those who know do not speak;
Those who speak do not know.
Stop up the aperture of the vessel,
Shut the doors of the senses,
Blunt the sharp,
Unravel the tangled,
Harmonize with the light,
Merge with the dust, -
This is called Mystic Assimilation.
Men with this attainment, therefore, are Above endearment or estrangement,
Above enrichment or impoverishment,
And above exaltation or degradation.
Therefore they are highly honored by the world.

[56c39t] Ha Poong Kim
He who knows does not speak;
He who speaks does not know.
Block the holes,
Shut the gates.
[He] blunts the sharpness,
Unravels the tangles,
Softens the brilliance,
Identifies with the dust.
This is called mysterious identity.
Therefore you can neither befriend him,
Nor alienate him,
Nor benefit him,
Nor harm him,
Nor exalt him,
Nor humble him.
That is why he is the noblest of all under Heaven.

Those who say, do not know.
Close the mouth.
Shut the door.
Merge into light.
As ordinary as dust.
Blunt the sharpness.
Unravel the entanglements.
This is called mysterious sameness.
You are not intimate by acquiring it;
You are not distant in not acquiring it.
You do not profit by acquiring it;
You do not lose it by not acquiring it.
You are not ennobled by acquiring it;
You are not disgraced by not acquiring it.
This enables the nobility of the world.

[56c41t] Tang Zi-chang
One who knows may not preach.
One who preaches may not know.
Close the entrances to attractions and control the excess of desires.
It blunts all sharpness.
It settles all disputes.
It harmonizes all lights.
It unites all lands.
They are the "Profound Similarities" of Dao.
Thus,
It cannot be involved, nor can it be ignored.
It cannot be utilized, nor can it be harmed.
It cannot be honored, nor can it be disgraced.
Thus, it is cherished by all things under the heaven.

[56c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
He who knows does not speak.
He who speaks does not know.
Close the mouth.
Shut the doors.
Blunt the sharpness.
Untie the tangles.
Soften the light.
Become one with the dusty world.
This is called profound identification.
Therefore:
It is impossible either to be intimate and close to him or to be distant and indifferent to him.
It is impossible either to benefit him or to harm him.
It is impossible either to honor him or to disgrace him.
For this reason he is honored by the world.

Кто знает, тот не говорит;
кто говорит, не знает.
Закрыть свои отверстия и запереть свои ворота,
умерить свою остроту,
смирить свою запутанность,
ослабить силу своего сияния и сделать единой свою пыль
- это значит находиться в сокровенном тождестве.
Кто в нем, того нельзя приблизить, нельзя и отдалить, нельзя сделать ему что-либо полезное, нельзя и навредить, нельзя его возвысить и нельзя принизить.
Поэтому он в Поднебесной и становится превыше всех.

Знающий не говорит.
Говорящий не знает.
Закрой отверстия, запри двери, притупи лезвие, распутай узлы, пригаси свет, уподобься пылинке.
Это зовётся сокровенным единением.
Поэтому ты не можешь, достигнув его, сродниться с ним.
И не можешь, достигнув его, пренебречь им.
Не можешь, достигнув его, извлечь пользу.
И не можешь, достигнув его, причинить вред.
Не можешь, достигнув его, облагородить его.

Поэтому с человеком, обретшим его, нельзя сблизиться, чтобы с ним сродниться, и с ним нельзя сблизиться, чтобы его отбросить.
С ним нельзя сблизиться, чтобы извлечь из этого пользу, и с ним нельзя сблизиться, чтобы другим причинить с его помощью вред.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Seven

[57c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Use the upright and correct to order the state;
Use surprise tactics when you use troops;
Use unconcern with affairs to take control of the world.
How do I know that this is so?
Well, the more taboos and prohibitions there are in the world, the poorer the people will be;
The more sharp weapons the people possess, the more muddled the states will be;
The more knowledge {and skill} people have, the more novel things {will appear};
The more {legal} matters are made prominent, {the more} robbers and thieves {there will be}.
Therefore, the words of the {Sage} say:
I do nothing, and the people of themselves are transformed;
I love tranquility, and the people of themselves are upright;
I'm unconcerned with affairs, and the people of themselves become rich;
I desire not to desire, and the people of themselves are [genuine and simple, like] uncarved wood.

[57c02t] John C. H. Wu
You govern a kingdom by normal rules;
You fight a war by exceptional moves;
But you win the world by letting alone.
How do I know that this is so?
By what is within me!
The more taboos and inhibitions there are in the world,
The poorer the people become.
The sharper the weapons the people possess,
The greater confusion reigns in the realm.
The more clever and crafty the men,
The oftener strange things happen.
The more articulate the laws and ordinances,
The more robbers and thieves arise.
Therefore, the Sage says:
I do not make any fuss, and the people transform themselves.
I love quietude, and the people settle down in their regular grooves.
I do not engage myself in anything, and the people grow rich.
I have no desires, and the people return to Simplicity.

[57c03t] D. C. Lau
Govern the state by being straightforward;
Wage war by being crafty;
But win the empire by not being meddlesome.
How do I know that it is like that?
By means of this.
The more taboos there are in the empire

The poorer the people;
The more sharpened tools the people have
The more benighted the state;
The more skills the people have
The further novelties multiply;
The better known the laws and edicts
The more thieves and robbers there are.
Hence the sage says,
I take no action and the people are transformed of themselves;
I prefer stillness and the people are rectified of themselves;
I am not meddlesome and the people prosper of themselves;
I am free from desire and the people of themselves become simple like the uncarved block.

[57c04t] R. L. Wing
Lead the organization with correctness.
Direct the military with surprise tactics.
Take hold of the world with effortlessness.
How do I know it is so?
Through this:
Too many prohibitions in the world,
And people become insufficient.
Too many sharp weapons among people,
And the nation grows confused.
Too much cunning strategy among people,
And strange things start to happen.
Too obvious a growth in laws and regulations,
And too many criminals emerge.
Thus Evolved Individuals say:
Look to nonaction,
And people will be naturally influenced.
Look to refined tranquillity,
And people will be naturally correct.
Look to effortlessness,
And people will be naturally affluent.
Look to nondesire,
And people will be naturally simple.

[57c05t] Ren Jiyu
A state should be governed in a normal way,
A war should be prosecuted in an unusual way,
And the kingdom should be controlled by doing nothing.
How do I know that it is so?
On the grounds:
In the kingdom the more prohibitive enactments there are, the poorer the people become;
The more weapons the people have, the greater disorder the state and clan fall into;
The more crafts and technics men possess, the more strange contrivances appear;

The more display of statutes there is, the more robbers and thieves there are.
So the sage said:
"I do nothing, then the people submit spontaneously,
I am fond of keeping still, then the people are righteous spontaneously,
I take no trouble, and the people naturally enrich themselves,
I have no desires, then the people naturally remain in primitive simplicity."

[57c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Rule a nation with justice.
Wage war with surprise moves.
Become master of the universe without striving.
How do I know that this is so?
Because of this!
The more laws and restrictions there are,
The poorer people become.
The sharper men's weapons,
The more trouble in the land.
The more ingenious and clever men are,
The more strange things happen.
The more rules and regulations,
The more thieves and robbers.
Therefore the sage says:
I take no action and people are reformed.
I enjoy peace and people become honest.
I do nothing and people become rich.
I have no desires and people return to the good and simple life.

[57c07t] Lok Sang Ho
We rule a nation with the straight mind.
We deploy the military forces with surprises.
We win the hearts of all under heaven with non-intervention.
How do I know that this should be so, with this:
The more prohibitions that are imposed by the emperor,
The poorer the people become.
The more clever products that people own,
The less clever the nation becomes.
The more people use their tricks and knacks,
The more odd products there are, and
The more rules and laws there are,
It is likely that there are the more thieves and bandits.
The Sage says: "I do not contrive, and people automatically become cultured and well-mannered.
I keep still, and people automatically become straight;
I do not intervene, and people automatically become rich;
I do not crave, and people automatically lead a simple life."

When governing a country you must be fair and just;
When fighting a battle, you must use tricks;
When taking over the world, you must practice WUWEI.
How do I know everything in this world? This is how.
The more restrictions the government sets, the more people become poor;
The more people have dangerous weapons, the more the country falls into chaos;
The more people become clever, the more bizarre things happen;
The more severe the law becomes, the more thieves there are.
So the great men said: "If I practice WUWEI, the people will govern themselves;
If I am always peaceful, the people will be upright by themselves;
If I do not initiate things for my own purposes, the people will become rich by themselves;
If I do not have desires, the people will become simple and plain by themselves."

[57c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE GENUINE GOVERNMENT
The righteous man may rule the nation.
The strategic man may rule the army.
But the man who refrains from active measures should be the king.
How do I know how things should be?
I know by this:-
When the actions of the people are controlled by prohibited laws, the country becomes more and more impoverished.
When the people are allowed the free use of arms, the Government is in danger.
The more crafty and dexterous the people become, the more do artificial things come into use.
And when these cunning arts are publicly esteemed, then do rogues prosper.
Therefore the wise man says:-
I will design nothing; and the people will shape themselves.
I will keep quiet; and the people will find their rest.
I will not assert myself; and the people will come forth.
I will discountenance ambition; and the people will revert to their natural simplicity.

[57c10t] James Legge
A state may be ruled by (measures of) correction;
weapons of war may be used with crafty dexterity;
(but) the kingdom is made one's own (only) by freedom from action and purpose.
How do I know that it is so?
By these facts:
- In the kingdom the multiplication of prohibitive enactments increases the poverty of the people;
the more implements to add to their profit that the people have, the greater disorder is there in the state and clan;
the more acts of crafty dexterity that men possess, the more do strange contrivances appear;
the more display there is of legislation, the more thieves and robbers there are.
Therefore a sage has said,
'I will do nothing (of purpose), and the people will be transformed of themselves;
I will be fond of keeping still, and the people will of themselves become correct.
I will take no trouble about it, and the people will of themselves become rich;
I will manifest no ambition, and the people will of themselves attain to the primitive simplicity.'

[57c11t] David Hinton
You may govern the nation through principle and lead armies to victory through craft, but you win all beneath heaven through indifference.
How can I know this to be so?
Through this.
The more prohibitions rule all beneath heaven the deeper poverty grows among the people.
The more shrewd leaders there are the faster dark confusion fills the nation.
The more cleverness people learn the faster strange things happen.
The faster laws and decrees are issued the more bandits and thieves appear.
Therefore a sage says:
I do nothing
and the people transform themselves.
I cherish tranquility
and the people rectify themselves.
I cultivate indifference
and the people enrich themselves.
I desire nothing
and the people return of themselves to uncarved simplicity.

[57c12t] Chichung Huang
Use the norm to govern the state;
Use the abnormal to conduct warfare;
Use nondisturbance to win all under heaven.
How do I know it should be so?
For the more prohibitions and taboos in the empire,
The poorer the people;
The more sharp weapons the sovereign has,
The more chaotic state and fief;
The craftier the sovereign,
The more perverse things will arise;
The more ostentatious royal processions,
The more robbers and thieves there will be.
Hence, the sage man's saying goes:
"If I implement nonaction,
The people will live and grow spontaneously;
If I love stillness,
The people will turn aright spontaneously;
If I create no disturbances,
The people will become rich spontaneously;
If I desire to be desireless,
The people will turn into unhewn logs spontaneously."

Conduct warfare as (i) the abnormal (ch'i);
Take the empire when (i) there is no business.
How do I know such should be the case?
By the following:
In an empire with many prohibitions,
People are often poor;
When people have many sharp weapons,
The state is in great darkness (tzu hun);
When persons abound in ingenuity (ch'iao),
Abnormal (ch'i) objects multiply (tzu ch'i);
When laws are abundantly promulgated (tzu chang),
There are many thieves and brigands.
Therefore the sage says:
I do not act (wei),
Hence the people transform by themselves (tzu-hua);
I love tranquillity (ching),
Hence the people are normal by themselves (tzu-cheng);
I have no business,
Hence the people grow rich by themselves;
I have no desire,
Hence the people are like the uncarved wood by themselves (tzu-p'u).

[57c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A country is [most properly] governed by a ruler who believes in the principle of righteousness;
A military operation is [most efficiently] executed with the strategy which generates surprises;
The world has been [most often] won by leaders who were not motivated by the desire to conquer others.
How do I know that the above statements are accountable?
[I shall explain next.]
In this world, the more restrictions and prohibition [a government imposes], the poorer its people are;
The more people possessing lethal weapons, the more chaotic the country is;
The more cunning and artful people are, the more outrageous occurrences flourish;
The more laws and their [hairsplitting] multiplication [a state has], the more beneficial will it be for robbers and thieves to thrive.
Therefore a Sage once said:
"If I practice the principle of non-interference, people shall yield voluntarily to the influence of the natural force;
If I demonstrate that I love Serenity [,i.e. I'll restrain myself from using my power,] people will choose right courses spontaneously;
If I do not use my power to control people, people will prosper naturally;
If I diminish my selfish desires, people will be motivated to be simple and truthful accordingly."

[57c15t] Tien Cong Tran
You govern a state by straightness.
You engage in war by rare operations.
It is by non-doing that you win the world.
How do I know that this is so?

By the fact it is so.
The more restrictions and inhibitions there are in the world, the poorer the people become.
The sharper the weapons the people possess, the more disordered the nation is.
The more skills the people have, the more strange things happen.
The more articulate the laws and rules, the more thieves and robbers there are.
Therefore, the sage says:

I do not engage myself in anything, and the people grow rich by themselves.
I have no desires, and the people return to simplicity.

[57c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Govern the kingdom by the normal way.
Fight the battle by the unexpected way.
And one can win the world without using force.
How do I know this is so?
By the following:
When there are too many restrictions and regulations, people become poor.
When there are too many weapons, the kingdom is in disarray.
When there are too many tricks, bizarre things happen.
When there are too many decrees, the crime rate increases.
This is why the sage says:
"I do not force my way, and people live peacefully.
I keep quiet, and people live normally.
I do not interfere, and people become rich.
I do not covet anything, and people would be honest."

[57c17t] Arthur Waley
'Kingdoms can only be governed if rules are kept;
Battles can only be won if rules are broken.'
But the adherence of all under heaven can only be won by letting-alone.
How do I know that it is so?
By this.
The more prohibitions there are, the more ritual avoidances,
The poorer the people will be.
The more 'sharp weapons' there are,
The more benighted will the whole land grow.
The more cunning craftsmen there are,
The more pernicious contrivances will be invented.
The more laws are promulgated,
The more thieves and bandits there will be.
Therefore a sage has said:
So long as I 'do nothing' the people will of themselves be transformed.
So long as I love quietude, the people will of themselves go straight.
So long as I act only by inactivity the people will of themselves become prosperous.
So long as I have no wants the people will of themselves return to the 'state of the Uncarved Block'.

[57c18t] Richard John Lynn
If one governs the state with governance, he will use the military with perversity.
It is by tending to matters without conscious purpose that one takes all under Heaven as his charge.
How do I know that this is so?
It is by this:
The more all under Heaven are beset with taboos and prohibitions, the poorer the common folk grow.
The more the common folk are beset with sharp instruments, the more muddled the state becomes.
The more people have skill and cleverness, the more often perverse [ji] things will happen.
The more laws and ordinances are displayed, the more thieves and robbers there will be.
Thus the sage says:
I engage in no conscious effort, and the common folk undergo moral transformation spontaneously.
I love quietude, and the common folk govern themselves.
I tend to matters without conscious purpose, and the common folk enrich themselves.
I am utterly free of desire, and the common folk achieve pristine simplicity by themselves.

[57c19t] Lin Yutang
THE ART OF GOVERNMENT
Rule a kingdom by the Normal.
Fight a battle by (abnormal) tactics of surprise.
Win the world by doing nothing.
How do I know it is so?
Through this:
The more prohibitions there are,
The poorer the people become.
The more sharp weapons there are,
The greater the chaos in the state.
The more skills of technique,
The more cunning things are produced.
The greater the number of statutes,
The greater the number of thieves and brigands.
Therefore the Sage says:
I do nothing and the people are reformed of themselves.
I love quietude and the people are righteous of themselves.
I deal in no business and the people grow rich by themselves.
I have no desires and the people are simple and honest by themselves.

[57c20t] Victor H. Mair
Rule the state with uprightness,
Deploy your troops with craft,
Gain all under heaven with noninterference.
How do I know this is actually so?
Now,
The more taboos under heaven, the poorer the people;
The more clever devices people have, the more confused the state and ruling house;
The more knowledge people have, the more strange things spring up;

The more legal affairs are given prominence, the more numerous bandits and thieves.
For this reason,
The sage has a saying:
"I take no action, yet the people transform themselves;
I am fond of stillness, yet the people correct themselves;
I do not interfere in affairs, yet the people enrich themselves;
I desire not to desire, yet the people of themselves become simple as unhewn logs."

[57c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Govern the country by being straightforward.
Wage war by being crafty.
Win all under heaven by not meddling.
How do I know that this is so?
By what is within me.
The more restrictions there are,
the poorer are the people.
The more pointed the people's weapons,
the more disorder there is in the country.
The more ingenious and clever the people,
the more strange the contrivances that appear.
The more laws and edicts that are posted,
the more thieves and robbers that arise.
Hence an Old One has said:
I act without striving and the people transform themselves.
I love stillness and the people straighten themselves.
I do not meddle and the people prosper by themselves.
I am free from desires and the people themselves return to the simplicity of the Uncarved Block.

[57c22t] David H. Li
Govern a state with orthodoxy;
fight a war with heterodoxy;
take the world with laissez-faire.
How do I know this is so?
Because:
The world is full of prohibitions, yet the populace is poor;
People are stacked with weapons, yet the states are in turmoil;
People are loaded with cleverness, yet strange schemes sprout;
Rules are stringent and well known, yet robbers and thieves abound.
Thus, the sage says:
Let me practice laissez-faire, and the populace self-develop;
Let me seek serenity, and the populace self-manage;
Let me be without fanfare, and the populace self-prosper;
Let me discard avarice, and the populace self-simplify.

Command troops with unpredictable moves.
Lead the world with empowering noninterference.
How do I know this to be so?
From witnessing the following:
The more restrictions there are in the world, the poorer people become.
The more weapons people possess, the darker nations become.
The more cunning and cleverness there is, the more there are anomalous things.
The more rules and regulations there are, the more there are thieves and robbers.
Therefore the sage says:
I take no action, and people are naturally transformed.
I delight in stillness, and people naturally do what is right.
I do not interfere, and people on their own prosper.
I have no greed, and people on their own return to simplicity.

[57c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Make all the weapons blunt,
Cut everything that is tangled,
Make everything that is shiny dull,
Mix with anything that is as humble as dust,
And this is called absolute equality.
Therefore
One cannot get close to it
Nor can one get away from it.
It is impossible to derive benefit from it,
Nor to be harmed by it.
It does not publicize a person's honor,
Nor does it publicize a person's shame.
Therefore it is the most exalted thing in the world.

[57c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
To rule a nation, use justice
To win a battle - cunning,
But remember: wu-wei is the only true way.
How do I know this?
I will explain:
The more rules you have, the more unhappy people are;
And the more weapons there are, the worse things happen.
The more we want luxuries, the more we abandon simplicity;
And the more laws you pass, the more we will break them.
So the sage says:
I do nothing, and the people come together;
By leaving them alone I let them be on the path;
By not using my power, they become rich in themselves;
And if I want nothing, they will return to the essence of their being.

Rule the state with peace and inaction;
Wage a war with crafty tricks;
Governing the world by not troubling the people.
How do I know it is the right way?
The reason is as follows:
The more prohibitions there are in the world,
The poorer the people;
The more weapons the people own,
The more chaotic the state;
The more skills the people have,
The more strange things occur;
The more laws and orders are issued,
The more thieves and robbers there are.
Thus the sage says,
If I prefer inaction,
The people will naturally crave for peace;
If I act little,
The people will be naturally rectified;
If I am not meddlesome,
The people will naturally become rich;
If I get rid of desires,
The people will naturally become simple.

[57c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Govern the nation with correctness.
Resort to arms with surprise manoeuvres.
Obtain the land under Heaven without tiring out the people.
How do I know this?
Because:

The more power the people hold,
the more confused the country will become.
The more skills and intelligence the people possess, the more valuable goods will be created and the more strict the laws will become,
yet the more thieves and robbers will breed.
That is why the sage says:
'I do nothing, and the people are nurtured by themselves.'
'I do not tire people and drain the treasury, and the people become rich by themselves.'
'I prefer quietness, and the people behave correctly by themselves.'
'I have no desire, and the people return to the simple life by themselves.'

The world should be won without any action.
Why should I think that?
Here are the reasons:
The more prohibitions there are,
The poorer people are;
The more weapons there are,
The more confused the social order is;
The more skills and tricks there are,
The more confusing machines are invented;
The more laws there are,
The more thieves there can appear.
That is why the wise would say:

I stay quiet, and the world will be naturally restrained;
I do nothing, and the world will be naturally provided;
I desire nothing, and the world will be naturally simplified."

The Art of Government
Lao Tze says,
A state may be ruled by measures of justice;
the military force may be handled with tactics of surprise;
but the world is kept in peace by freedom from action and purpose.
How do I know that is so?
Through these:
In the world the multiplication of prohibitive enactments increases the poverty of the people.
The more assertions are put into influencing the people's thinking, the greater chaos there is in the state.
The more acts of crafty dexterity men possess, the more cunning things are produced.
The larger the number of statues displayed, the more thieves and robbers there are.
That is why a sage has said,
'I will do by acting without intent to control fate, and the people will be transformed of themselves.
I will be fond of keeping still, and the people will be righteous of themselves.
I will take no trouble about it, and the people will become rich of themselves.
I have no desire, and the people will strive for the pristine simplicity of themselves.'

[57c33t] Cheng Lin
When one rules the State with uprightness, and uses stratagem in war, he cannot hope to win over a whole Empire.
How do I know that this is true?
Because of the following:
When there are many prohibitory statutes in the Empire, the people become the more impoverished.
When the people possess numerous weapons of war, the State becomes more chaotic.
When men possess much skill and cunning, there is an increase of fanciful goods.
When there is a profusion of laws and regulations, banditry becomes rife.
Therefore, one of the Sages said:
"I abide by inaction, and the people reform themselves.
I esteem quietude, and the people rectify themselves.
I make no effort, and the people enrich themselves.
I have no desires, and the people of their own accord practise simplicity."

[57c35t] Han Hiong Tan
You should govern a country by moral rectitude.
You should fight a war by employing stratagems.
You should follow the principle of non-intervention to rule a country.
How do I know all these are going to work?
Let us look at the followings:
The more rules and regulations you establish, the more destitute the people become.
The more intense the machination amongst the ruling classes, the more discordant the country will become.
The more cunning the people, the more outlandish things they do.
The more laws you proclaim, the more thieves you produce.
Therefore, the sage says:
"I follow non-action, and thus my people will live harmoniously.
I remain calm, and thus my people become righteous.
I do not meddle, and thus my people become more prosperous.
I have no desire, and thus my people will be simple and contented."

[57c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
When serving the public, use upright means.
When commanding troops in war, employ the principle of surprise.
To win the world, do nothing to interfere with it.
Why?
Because the more prohibitions and inhibitions that are imposed on people,
the more difficult their lives become.
The more destructive weapons a nation or its people possess,
the poorer the people of that country become,
and the greater is the chaos that occurs in the world.
The more clever and crafty people become,
the more often strange things happen.
The more laws and ordinances there are,
the more criminals and dissidents will arise.
Therefore, the ancient sages of natural virtue said:
"I do nothing, and people's contention dissolves by itself.
I enjoy serenity, and people rectify themselves.
I make no effort, and people enrich themselves.
I have no desire, and people return to simplicity."

The more arms men possess,
The more disordered the country will be.

The more scheming and deceitful men are,
The more strange things will occur.
The more rules and precepts are enforced,
The more bandits and crooks will be produced.
Hence, we have the words of the wise:
Through my non-action,
Men are spontaneously transformed.
Through my quiescence,
Men spontaneously become tranquil.
Through my non-interfering,
Men spontaneously increase their wealth.
Through my non-willing,
Men spontaneously return to original simplicity.

The more know-how people have, the more bizarre things will appear.
The more rules and demands that flourish, the more thefts there will be.
Therefore the sage says:
When I am inactive, people transform themselves.
When I abide in stillness, people organize themselves lawfully.
When I am disengaged, people enrich themselves.
When I choose nondesire, people remain simple.

By positive policy rule the kingdom, by negative strategy conduct the war and by unselfish design lead the world.
How do we know that is so?
By this:
Where there were more taboos and inhibitions in the country, the general public was getting poorer and poorer.
Where there were more new tools and techniques in the hands of certain people, there were more confusions and injustices in the government.
The more laws and decrees were issued, the more robbers and crooks were propagated.
Thus a Sage ruler said:
"If I do not interfere, the people will cultivate themselves naturally.
If I love to be inactive, the people will govern themselves automatically.
If I do not look for display, the people will enrich themselves automatically.
If I have no excessive desires, the people will return themselves to the Pure Matter naturally.
If I have no emotional needs, the people will tranquilize themselves automatically."

Порядок в княжестве наводят прямо, в военном деле прибегают к хитрости, Откуда это мне известно?

Отсюда.
В Поднебесной множатся запреты, и народ все более беднеет;
в народе много острого оружия, и в стране усиливается разлад;
у людей искусность увеличивается, и каверзы становятся в почете;
законы и приказы возрастают, и воров с разбойниками появляется все больше.
Поэтому Премудрый человек и говорит:

Поэтому мудрец говорит:
"Я пребываю в недеянии, а народ сам преображается.

Прямотою упорядочивается государство, хитростью война ведется, и бездействием берется Поднебесная.
Откуда знаю я, что это так и есть?
Отсюда знаю это:
Когда в Поднебесной много запретов и ограничений, народ нищает и беднеет;
когда у людей много смертоносного оружия, государство и семья погружаются в брань и смуты;
когда среди людей много искусников-умельцев, влечение к дорогим диковинам растет;
когда закон издается за законом, разбойники и воры множатся на воле.
Поэтому совершенный мудрец так говорит:
Я буду пребывать в недеянии,
и народ начнет самоизменяться.
Я буду любить покой,
и народ исправится сам собой.
Я буду в бездействии,
и народ тогда разбогатеет.
Я буду в бесстрастии,
и народ сам вернется к исконной простоте.

[57c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Царство управляется прямотой.
Война ведется хитростью.
Поднебесная берется бездействием.
Откуда я знаю, что это так?
Исходя из следующего:
когда в Поднебесной растет число запретов и табу,
народ все более беднеет;
когда у народа растет число острого оружия,
в царстве и царствующем доме все больше смут;
когда растет число людей умелых и искусных,
все больше возникает невиданных вещей;
когда множатся статьи законов и приказов,
все больше появляется воров и разбойников.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек говорит:
"Я не деяю, и народ сам развивается.

Страна управляется справедливостью, война ведется хитростью.
Поднебесную получают во владение посредством недеяния.
Откуда я знаю все это?
Вот откуда:
когда в стране много запретительных законов, народ становится бедным.
Когда у народа много острого оружия, в стране увеличиваются смуты.
Когда много искусных мастеров, умножаются редкие предметы.
Когда растут законы и приказы, увеличивается число воров и разбойников.
Поэтому совершенномудрый говорит:
"Если я не действую, народ будет находиться в самоизменении;

Без справедливости нельзя управлять страной.
Для того чтобы вести войну успешно, необходима ловкость.
Когда в стране нет (еще) беспорядка, (тогда) следует им овладеть.
Как я могу постигнуть, почему в мире такой порядок, а не иной?
Когда в стране много такого, что должно быть уничтожено, народ обеднеет.
Когда в стране много удобных машин, то народ перестает работать.
Когда в народе много искусных мастеров, то увеличится число чудовищных вещей.
Когда в государстве много законов и постановлений, то число преступников увеличится.
Отсюда учит и святой:
"Когда я ничего не делаю (т.е. не предпринимаю ничего нового), то народ делается лучше;
когда я спокоен, то народ делается справедливым;
когда я не предпринимаю ничего нового, то народ обогащается;
когда во мне не будет никакой страсти, то народ сделается простодушным".

[57c97t] В. В. Малявин
Государством управляй прямо,
На войне применяй хитрость
И посредством бездействия завладевай Поднебесной.
Отчего мне известно, что это так?
Вот отчего:
Чем больше в мире запретов, тем люди беднее.
Чем больше народ знает о выгоде, тем больше в царстве смуты.
Чем больше в народе мастерства и сноровки, тем больше безделиц.
Чем больше в стране законов и приказов, тем больше разбойников.
Посему премудрые люди говорили:
Я не действую, а люди сами становятся лучше,
Я привержен покою, а люди сами себя выправляют,
Я не вмешиваюсь в дела, а люди сами богатеют,
Я не имею желаний, а люди сами блюдут простоту.

Посредством нормального упорядочивают государство.
Посредством аномального применяют оружие.
Посредством отсутствия дел-ситуаций овладевают Поднебесной.
Каким образом сущность моя знает, что это так?
А так оно и есть.
В Поднебесной растет количество запретов и табу, а народ становится беднее.
У народа увеличивается количество полезной утвари, а в государстве и семье все больше беспорядка.
Чем больше у людей мастерства и хитрых приемов, тем больше возникает аномальных явлений.
Чем больше издают указов и распоряжений, тем больше появляется воров и разбойников.
Причинность:
Человек мудрости говорит:
Я - в отсутствии осуществления, и народ сам изменяется.
Я - в стремлении к покою, и народ сам себя исправляет.
Я - в отсутствии дел-ситуаций, и народ сам богатеет.
Я - в отсутствии стремлений, и народ сам приходит к изначальной целостности.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Eight

922/2593

[58c01t] Robert G. Henricks
When the government is muddled and confused,
The people are genuine and sincere.
When the government is discriminate and clear,
The state is crafty and cunning.
Disaster is that on which good fortune depends.
Good fortune is that in which disaster's concealed.
Who knows where it will end?
{For} there is no [fixed] "correct."
The "correct" {turns into the "deviant"};
And "good" turns into {"evil."}
{People's} state of confusion
Has certainly existed for a long time.
Therefore be square but don't cut;
Be sharp but don't stab;
Be straightforward but not unrestrained;
Be bright but don't dazzle.

[58c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHERE the ruler is mum, mum,
The people are simple and happy.
Where the ruler is sharp, sharp,
The people are wily and discontented.
Bad fortune is what good fortune leans on,
Good fortune is what bad fortune hides in.
Who knows the ultimate end of this process?
Is there no norm of right?
Yet what is normal soon becomes abnormal,
And what is auspicious soon turns ominous.
Long indeed have the people been in a quandary.
Therefore, the Sage squares without cutting, carves without disfiguring, straightens without straining, enlightens without dazzling.

[58c03t] D. C. Lau
When the government is muddled
The people are simple;
When the government is alert
The people are cunning.
It is on disaster that good fortune perches;
It is beneath good fortune that disaster crouches.
Who knows the limit? Does not the straightforward exist?
The straightforward changes again into the crafty, and the good changes again into the monstrous.

Indeed, it is long since the people were perplexed.
Therefore the sage is square-edged but does not scrape,
Has corners but does not jab,
Extends himself but not at the expense of others,
Shines but does not dazzle.

[58c04t] R. L. Wing
If the administration is subdued, The people are sincere.
If the administration is exacting, The people are deficient.
Misfortune! Good fortune supports it.
Good Fortune! Misfortune hides within.
Who knows where it ends?
Is there no order?
Order can revert to the unusual;
Good can revert to the abnormal;
And people indeed are bewildered For a long, long time.
Thus Evolved Individuals are Square without dividing;
Honest without offending;
Straightforward without straining;
Bright without dazzling.

[58c05t] Ren Jiyu
When the government is generous, the people will be honest and loyal;
When the government is severe, the people will complain.
O Misery! Happiness lies by its side;
O Happiness! Misery lurks beneath it.
Who knows the destination?
There is no master indeed.
The normal can at anytime become the abnormal,
The good can at anytime become the evil.
The delusion of the people (on this point) has persisted for a long time.
Therefore, the sage is right as a square, but not stiff, has edges, but cuts nobody.
He is straightforward, but not aggressive, bright, but not dazzling.

[58c06t] Gia-fu Feng
When the country is ruled with a light hand
The people are simple.
When the country is ruled with severity,
The people are cunning.
Happiness is rooted in misery.
Misery lurks beneath happiness.
Who knows what the future holds?
There is no honesty.
Honesty becomes dishonest.
Goodness becomes witchcraft.
Man's bewitchment lasts for a long time.

Therefore the sage is sharp but not cutting,
Pointed but not piercing,
Straightforward but not unrestrained,
Brilliant but not blinding.

[58c07t] Lok Sang Ho
When the government appears dull and boring,
The people enjoy a good and rich life.
When the government appears clever and innovative,
The people suffer a shortage.
What appears to be misfortune may pave the way for fortune.
What appears to be fortune may pave the way for misfortune.
Who knows the absolute?
The right that we know is often not right.
What is right may prove to be wrong.
What is good may prove to be bad.
Mankind has been lost in the maze since the old days.
The Sage has an open mind and is unpretentious.
He is incorruptible and will not succumb to bribery.
He is straight but is not arrogant.
He shines but not dazzles.

[58c08t] Xiaolin Yang
When the government is low-key, the people are sturdy and simple;
When the government is harsh, the people are selfish and heartless.
Fortune is followed by disaster,
Disaster is followed by fortune.
Who knows the ultimate outcome of this cycle? No one knows.
The straight can become crooked; the kind can become wicked.
People have not figured out this puzzle for a long time.
So the great men were square but not rigid, self-abstaining but did not hurt people, upright but not blunt, glowing but not blinding.

[58c09t] Walter Gorn Old, LETTING OTHERS REFORM THEMSELVES
A free and generous government gives the people a chance to develop.
When the government is rigid and exacting the people are cramped and miserable.
Misery is but the shadow of happiness.
Happiness is but the cloak of misery.
When will there be an end to them?
If we dispense with rectitude, distortion will assert itself; and what was good in its way will give place to what is evil.
Verily the people have been under a cloud for a long time.
Therefore the wise man is full of rectitude, but he does not chip and carve at others.
He is just, but does not admonish others.
He is upright, but he does not straighten others.
He is enlightened, but he does not offend with his brightness.

[58c10t] James Legge
The government that seems the most unwise,
Oft goodness to the people best supplies;
That which is meddling, touching everything,
Will work but ill, and disappointment bring.
Misery! - happiness is to be found by its side!
Happiness! - misery lurks beneath it!
Who knows what either will come to in the end?
Shall we then dispense with correction?
The (method of) correction shall by a turn become distortion, and the good in it shall by a turn become evil.
The delusion of the people (on this point) has indeed subsisted for a long time.
Therefore the sage is (like) a square which cuts no one (with its angles);
(like) a corner which injures no one (with its sharpness).
He is straightforward, but allows himself no license;
he is bright, but does not dazzle.

[58c11t] David Hinton
When government is pensive and withdrawn people are pure and simple.
When government is confident and effective people are cunning and secretive.
Prosperity springs from calamity and calamity lurks in prosperity.
Who knows where it will all end without leaders of principle?
And principle always reverts to sinister trickery,
virtue to depraved sorcery.
People have been confused for such a long long time.
That's why a sage is sharp but never cuts,
austere but never grates,
forthright but never provokes,
bright but never dazzles.

[58c12t] Chichung Huang
If your government is muddled,
Your people will be simple;
If your government is exacting,
Your people will be daring.
Against misfortune leans good fortune;
In good fortune lurks misfortune.
Who knows its extremity?
There is no norm.
Normal reverts to abnormal;
Good reverts to evil.
The perplexity of rulers
Has been long indeed!
Hence, be square without cutting,
Angular without pricking;

Straight without binding;
Bright without dazzling.

[58c13t] Ellen M. Chen
When the government (cheng) is dull,
Its people are wholesome;
When the government is efficient (ch'a),
Its people are deficient (ch'üeh).
Calamities (huo) are what blessings depend on,
In blessings are latent calamities (huo).
Who knows where is the turning point (chi)?
Because there is no longer the normal (cheng),
The normal reverts and appears as the strange (ch'i),
The good reverts and appears as the uncanny.
Rulers (jen) have lost their way,
For a long stretch of days.
Therefore the sage is square but not cutting (ko),
Sharp but not injurious,
Straight but not overreaching,
Bright (kuang) but not dazzling.

[58c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
If a ruler [is diligent but] keeps a low profile, his people shall remain simple and truthful;
If a ruler is [harsh and] censorious, his people shall be deceptive and dishonest.
Misfortune may be a blessing in disguise;
[On the other hand] under the surface of good luck may lie the seeds of misfortune.
[Accordingly, the question is] how can we be certain that ultimately an occurrence is [leading to good or to bad] consequence?
If there is no standard for righteousness:
What is [righteously] right-minded may be turned upside down to be called weird;
What is [righteously] good may be distorted to be referred to as sorcerous.
People definitely have had been bewitched [and perplexed by such trickery] for a long time already!
Accordingly:
A Sage keeps his integrity fair and square, still he does not truncate (impinge on) rights of others;
He is scrupulous and thrifty, yet he hurts nobody;
He is straightforward, but immune from being unrestrained [so he does not harm innocent people];
He is open but free from being showy.

[58c15t] Tien Cong Tran
Where the government is dull, the people are simple.
Where the government is sharp, the people are deceitful.
Bad fortune is what good fortune leans on.
Good fortune is what bad fortune hides in.
Who knows the ultimate end of bad fortune and good fortune?
Is there the right?
The right changes into the strange.

The good changes into the monstrous.
Long indeed have the people been ignorant.
Therefore, the sage squares without cutting, sharpens without disfiguring, straightens without straining, enlightens without dazzling.

[58c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
If the policy is liberal, people are honest.
If the policy is stringent, people play tricks.
Misfortune is where fortune can build upon.
Fortune is where misfortune can loom.
Who knows where is the extreme?
There is no such a thing as normal.
Normalcy can become an anomaly.
Good can become evil.
This has puzzled people for a long time.
This is why the sage is righteous yet not annoying.
He is just, yet not harsh.
He is outspoken, yet not offensive.
He is shiny, yet not glaring.

[58c17t] Arthur Waley
When the ruler looks depressed the people will be happy and satisfied;
When the ruler looks lively and self-assured the people will be carping and discontented.
'It is upon bad fortune that good fortune leans, upon good fortune that bad fortune rests.'
But though few know it, there is a bourn where there is neither right nor wrong;
In a realm where every straight is doubled by a crooked, and every good by an ill, surely mankind has gone long enough astray?
Therefore the Sage:
Squares without cutting,
Shapes the corners without lopping,
Straightens without stretching,
Gives forth light without shining.

[58c18t] Richard John Lynn
When the government is completely muddled, the common folk become pure and simple.
When the government conducts meticulous scrutiny, the common folk become devious and inscrutable.
It is on disaster that good fortune depends;
it is in good fortune that disaster lurks.
Who understands what the very best is?
It is to have no government at all!
Correctness turns into perversion.
Goodness turns into deviancy.
The people's confusion has certainly lasted a long time.
This is why the sage is square but does not cut,
He is pointed but does not stab.
He is straight but does not align.

He is bright but does not shine.

[58c19t] Lin Yutang
LAZY GOVERNMENT
When the government is lazy and dull,
Its people are unspoiled;
When the government is efficient and smart,
Its people are discontented.
Disaster is the avenue of fortune,
(And) fortune is the concealment for disaster.
Who would be able to know its ultimate results?
(As it is), there would never be the normal,
But the normal would (immediately) revert to the deceitful,
And the good revert to the sinister.
Thus long has mankind gone astray!
Therefore the Sage is square (has firm principles), but not cutting (sharp-cornered),
Has integrity, but does not hurt (others),
Is straight, but not high-handed,
Bright, but not dazzling.

[58c20t] Victor H. Mair
When government is anarchic, the people are honest;
When government is meddlesome, the state is lacking.
Disaster is that whereon good fortune depends,
Good fortune is that wherein disaster lurks.
Who knows their limits?
When there is no uprightness, correct reverts to crafty, good reverts to gruesome.
The delusion of mankind,
How long have been its days!
For this reason, be
Square but not cutting,
Angular but not prickly,
Straight but not arrogant,
Bright but not dazzling.

[58c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
When the government is unseen
the people are simple and happy.
When the government is lively
the people are cunning and discontented.
On misery perches happiness.
Beneath happiness crouches misery.
Who knows when this will cease?
The straight changes into the crooked.
The good becomes the ominous.
Surely the people have been confused for a long time.

Therefore,
the True Person squares without cutting, carves without hacking, straightens without dislocating, gives forth light without blinding.

[58c22t] David H. Li
When policies are broad, the populace live simply;
When policies are rigid, the populace complain roundly.
Facing disaster, is fortune not in the wing?
Experiencing fortune, is disaster not ready to spring?
Who knows the limit?
There is no norm.
Orthodoxy turns into heterodoxy, good turns into evil.
People have been bewildered long.
Thus,
the sage is square without infringing upon others,
fair without harming others,
straight without imposing upon others,
bright without overshadowing others.

[58c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
When the government is inwardly contained and disciplined,
The people become wholesome and good.
When the government is outwardly demanding and exacting,
The people become tense and cunning.
Fortune rests on misfortune.
Misfortune hides in fortune.
There is no end to their perpetual cyclic interchange.
Likewise, there is nothing that is permanently fitting.
What is fitting eventually becomes unfitting.
What is proper eventually becomes improper.
Not knowing the complementarity inherent in cyclic interchange,
People's delusion of permanence tends to last for a long time.
Thus, knowing the dynamic balance existing in complementarity,
The sage chooses what is right without being divisive,
Points out what is true without being critical,
Straightens out distortions without overextending them,
Enlightens others without dazzling them.

[58c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Although the wise man rules the country with integrity,
And wages war cunningly,
He who wishes to rule the empire
Must not interfere with anything.
His wish is unattainable in any other way.
How do I know this?
Thus:

The more limitations and prohibitions there are,
The more poor people there will be.
The more weapons people possess,
The more riots there will be throughout the country.
The more artists and artisans there are among the people,
The greater the desire to create things that belong to the imagination.
The more rules and regulations there are,
The more robbers and thieves there will be.
Therefore the sage says:
When I choose non-action of my own accord,
The people reach the path of their own accord.
When I love peace and quiet of my own accord,
The people behave with integrity of their own accord.
When I desist from all occupation of my own accord,
The people become very wealthy of their own accord.
When I am free of all desire of my own accord,
The people remain simple of their own accord.

[58c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
'If you govern with a generous hand - then your people will be good people.
But if your system is too constricting
then your people will outwit you ...'
Good fortune, we say, can come from disaster:
And the reverse is true as well.
Who knows where all this will lead?
Honesty can flip into deceit in a moment,
People trying to be good can fall into the dark
And it can take them years to get out of it.
So the sage is like a razor, but he doesn't cut
He is straight as a die, but not pointedly so -
He is bright, but not blindingly so ...

[58c26t] Gu Zhengkun
When the governor is magnanimous,
The people will become simple;
When the governor is harsh,
The people will become cunning.
Disaster hides itself behind good fortune;
Good fortune leans against disaster.
Who knows the secret?
There is no definite answer.
The normal changes into the abnormal;
The good changes into the evil.
People have been long perplexed.
Thus the sage is square and upright

But does not wound the people;
He is edged but does not cut the people;
He is candid but does not behave wantonly;
He gives light but does not dazzle.

[58c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
When the government is unobtrusive, the people will be simple and honest.
When the government is dictatorial, the people will be seized with panic.
Fortune depends on misfortune.
Misfortune is hidden in fortune.
He who knows how to stay within the limits will not have misfortune.
Correctness will lead to deceit.
Good will lead to evil.
Nothing can remain always the same.
People have been confused by this since ancient times.
That is why the sage
behaves correctly without hurting others, behaves honestly without damaging others,
behaves straightforwardly without vilifying others,
behaves brightly without dazzling others.

[58c28t] Liu Qixuan
If the government seems dark and tolerant,
The people will be honest and friendly;
If the government seems bright and sophisticated,
The people will be sly and cold-hearted.
What is bad goes with what is good;
What is good lies in what is bad.
Who can tell the exact difference
When all factors are considered?
The positive changes into the negative
And the negative changes into the positive.
Changing over and over again is the action of evil souls.
Such action has long been a confusing force in the world.
The wise person therefore prefers to be a simple square
That points in no directions,
A cutting tool that has no edge,
A straight line that goes nowhere,
And a light source that causes no fire.

[58c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
An Easy Government
Lao Tze says,
When the government is dull and drowsy, its people are simple and sincere.
When the government is sharp and shrewd, its people are dishonest and deceitful.
Disaster is that by which side fortune is to be found.

Fortune is that beneath which disaster lurks.
Who would be able to know its ultimate results?
If a king of men cannot dispense with correction, correct subjects will in their turn become distorted, and a good government will in its turn become evil.
The delusion of the ruler on this point has indeed subsisted for a long time.
Therefore the sage inherits correctitude like a square symbol, but punishes no one.
He inherits honest property, but tells no tales.
He is straightforward, but allows himself no license.
He is bright, but does not dazzle.

[58c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
When the government is blunt and inactive, the people will be happy and prosperous;
When the government is discriminative, the people will be dissatisfied and restless.
It is upon misery that happiness rests;
It is under happiness that misery lies.
Who then can know the supremacy (good government)?
Only when the government does no rectifying.
Otherwise, rectitude will again become stratagem,
And good become evil.
Men have been ignorant of this, since long ago.
Therefore the Sage is square but does not cut others;
He is angled but does not chip others;
He is straight but does not stretch others;
He is bright but does not dazzle others.

[58c31t] Paul J. Lin
When the government is sluggish and dull,
The people are honest and content;
When the government is discriminating and exacting,
The people are wily and restless.
Calamity is what good fortune depends on.
Good fortune is what calamity hides in.
Who knows their utmost?
Is it not better to have no rectitude?
Rectitude returns to trickery;
And goodness returns to evil.
The people's delusion has long existed.
Therefore, the Sage is square but not cutting;
is honest but does not hurt;
is straight but does not bully;
is bright but does not shine.

the people are a bad lot.
"Bad luck: good luck depends on it;
good luck: bad luck hides in it."
Who knows where this ends?
There is no norm.
What accords with the norm turns around and becomes weird;
what is excellent turns around and becomes ominous.
"People's blindness -
it has been going on so long now."
And so the Wise Person:
Is square and honest but does not cut,
is pointed and exact but does not hurt,
is straight and direct but not tactless,
shines but does not dazzle.

[58c33t] Cheng Lin
When the government is simple, the people are honest.
When the government is complicate, the people are wily.
What one calls calamity is often a fortune under disguise.
What one calls fortune is often a cause of calamity.
Who knows what the final outcome will be?
How can there be absolute right!
The right may turn out to be wrong.
How can there be absolute goodness!
The good may turn out to be evil.
Indeed, men have been under a delusion for such a long time.
The Sage,
though he is strict in his own conduct, does not require other men to conform;
though he is honest, does not hurt other men;
though he is upright, does not condemn other men;
though he is glorious, he does not dazzle other men.

[58c34t] Yi Wu
When the government is obscure and withdrawn,
The people are simple and honest.
When the government inspects and reinspects,
The people lack [morality and virtue].
Bad fortune is what good fortune depends on;
Good fortune is what bad fortune hides in.
Who knows the ultimate end?
There is no norm.
Normality turns out to be odd;
Goodness turns out to be bad.
People's confusion has been long.
Therefore, the sage is upright but not cutting,

incorruptible but not harmful,
straight but not reckless,
bright but not dazzling.

[58c35t] Han Hiong Tan
When the government is magnanimous, the people are contented and unsophisticated.
When the government is overbearing and mean-spirited, the people are resentful and miserable.
Whenever calamity occurs, boon is also lurking around the corner.
Whenever good fortune strikes, misfortune is always stalking in its shadow.
Nobody will ever know how things will end in any given situation, as there are no fixed patterns.
Sometimes, a normal affair can turn out to become exceptionally eventful.
Sometimes, an apparently good thing can go terribly wrong.
For a very long time, these things continue to befuddle the ordinary people.
Nevertheless, the sage is always sharp but not cutting.
He is incorruptible but not contemptuous of others.
He is upright and direct but not repugnant.
He is brilliant but not dazzling.

[58c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
When the government does not interfere, the people are simple and happy.
When the government does interfere, the people are tense and cunning.
Disaster is what blessing perches on.
Blessing is where disaster abides.
Who can say what the ultimate end of all possibilities will be?
Appropriate means soon become unfitting.
Good means soon turn to evil.
Long indeed have the people been perplexed by the endless, topsy-turvy movement of life.
Therefore, one of subtle virtue dissolves and eliminates the vicious cycle of duality.
He may have sharp corners, but he does not jab.
He may extend himself, but not at the expense of others.
He may shine, but he does not dazzle.

[58c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
When the country is governed through simplicity and leniency,
The people are genuine and honest.
When the country is governed through harshness and sharp investigation,
The people are more deceitful and dishonest.
From misfortune, good fortune is derived.
In good fortune, misfortune is conceived.
Who can determine the ultimate truth?
Or is there no ultimate truth at all?
As truth often turns out to be untruth,
Goodness often turns out to be evil.
This has long confused the people.
Thus, when the wise deals with things he is firm in his principles,
Yet not sharp.

He is straightforward, yet not violent.
He is illuminated, yet not glittery.

When the government is shrouded in gloom,
The people will be simple and honest.
When the government is sharp and officious,
The people will get disgusted and discontented.
Misfortune is what fortune leans on;
Fortune is where misfortune conceals itself.
Who can know the ultimate result?
Is there no justice?
Anyway, justice will become injustice again,
And good will turn into evil once more.
Mankind has been thus deluded for a long time.
That's why the Sage acts four-square,
But does not "cut" people to his own shape;
He has a high sense of integrity,
But is not offensive to people;
He is upright and straightforward,
But does not push people around;
He is bright and brilliant,
But does not outshine people.

[58c39t] Ha Poong Kim
When the government is dull,
The people are simple.
When the government is keen,
The people are discontented.
Bad fortune is what good fortune leans on;
Good fortune is where bad fortune lurks.
Who knows the fortune's end?
There is nothing straight.
What is straight turns monstrous.
What is beautiful turns grotesque.
Man has been deluded
From time immemorial.
Therefore the sage
Is square without cutting;
Honest without scraping;
Straight without overbearing;
Bright without dazzling.

[58c40t] Tao Huang
When the government is silent, people are sincere.
When the government is intrusive, the state is decisive.
Disaster is what fortune depends upon,
Fortune is what disaster subdues.
Who knows a final outcome?
There is no right lawfulness.
Justice tends towards the extreme.
Kindness tends towards evil.
People have been familiar with this for a long time.
So,
Be rounded without cutting.
Be compatible without puncturing.
Be straightforward without trapping.
Be bright without dazzling.

[58c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Modest, and modest will be the government, then prosperous, and prosperous will be the people!
Shrewd will be the government, then discontented, and discontented will be the people!
Catastrophe rests upon fortune.
Fortune underlies catastrophe.
Who knows the ultimate answers?
What is normal soon becomes abnormal.
What is auspicious soon becomes ominous.
Do away with dogmatism!
Indeed, it is a long, long time ago since Man lost his way of Dao!
Therefore, a Sage is:
solidly square but has no sharp corners;
purely austere but not harmful;
straightly upright but not offensive;
humbly modest but not submissive;
and harmoniously bright but not dazzling.

[58c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
When the government is non-discriminative and dull,
The people are contented and generous.
When the government is searching and discriminative,
The people are disappointed and contentious.
Calamity is that upon which happiness depends;
Happiness is that in which calamity is latent.
Who knows when the limit will be reached?
Is there no correctness (used to govern the world)?
Then the correct again becomes the perverse.
And the good will again become evil.
The people have been deluded for a long time.
Therefore the sage is as pointed as a square but does not pierce.

При несведущем правительстве народ бесхитростен и добр,
при въедливом правительстве народ корежит недовольство.
В несчастье коренится счастье,
в счастье укрывается несчастье.
Кто знает их пределы?
В них нет определенности.
Прямолинейность переходит в хитрость,
добро приносит пагубу.
Люди заблуждаются уже очень давно.
Вот почему Премудрый человек, квадратным делаясь, не режет;
остер углами, но не колок,
прям, но не задирист,
ярок, но не затмевает.

[58c92t] А. А. Маслов
Когда власть пассивно-отстранённа, то и народ чистосердечно-прост.
Когда правительство жестокосердно-строго, то и народ хитёр и убог.
Несчастье - вот что является опорой счастья.
Счастье - вот где кроется несчастье.
И кто знает, где положен предел этому?
И нет в этом правильности.
Правильность оборачивается ловкостью.
Добро оборачивается коварством.
Людские заблуждения, о сколь стары и неизменны они!
Вот почему мудрец хотя и прям, но не груб;
остёр, но не колет;
прямолинеен, но не своеволен;
ярок, но не слепит.

[58c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Когда правление беспомощно и слабо, народ прост и добродушен.
Когда правление активно и всевластно, народ испытывает нужду и недостаток.
О горе, ты - опора счастья!
О счастье, в тебе таится горе!
И кто пределы ваши знает?
Нет прямоты, она хитростью обернулась, а добро превратилось в злобу.
Заблуждения людские, о как они долговечны!
Поэтому совершенномудрый угловат, но не вонзится в человека.
Он остер, но зла не содеет.
Он прям, но не заносчив.
Он словно свет, но блистать не хочет.

Кто правит, сокрывшись и молча, у того и народ добр и прост.
Кто правит, взыскуя с пристрастием, у того и народ в непомерной нужде.
О, несчастье - опора счастья!
О, счастье - ложе несчастья!
Кто знает этому предел?
Он в отсутствующей здесь прямоте.
Прямота превратилась в хитрость, добро превратилось в зло.
Людские заблуждения день ото дня все более укореняются и дольше держатся.

Когда правительство деятельно, народ становится несчастным.
О несчастье! Оно является опорой счастья.
О счастье! В нем заключено несчастье.
Кто знает их границы?
Они не имеют постоянства.
Справедливость снова превращается в хитрость, добро - в зло.
Человек уже давно находится в заблуждении.
Поэтому совершенномудрый справедлив и не отнимает ничего у другого.
Он бескорыстен и не вредит другим.
Он правдив и не делает ничего плохого.
Он светел, но не желает блестеть.

Когда не будет мелочности в управлении государством, то народ обогатится.
А когда управление государством мелочно, то народ обеднеет.

О, благо! Где беда, там и счастье.
Но я не знаю, где оканчивается беда и где начинается счастье.
Где нет правды, там люди будут относиться к правде как к чему-то странному, к добру - как к призрачному.
Издавна люди находятся в заблуждении, поэтому святой муж никогда не сделает им уступки.
Он не корыстолюбив, но ничего не раздает им.

Счастье - вот откуда приходит беда.
Кто знает, где их предел?
В них нет ничего навек "правильного".
Правильное станет неправильным,
Доброе станет худым,
И люди пребывают в заблуждении с давних пор.
Вот почему премудрый человек
Ровен, а ничего не срезает,
Остер, а ничего не ранит,
Прям, а не идет напролом,
Ярко сияет, а никого не слепит.

Его управление невежественно, а народ его бесхитростен.
Его управление проницательно, а народ его хитер и коварен.
Несчастье пусть станет опорой для счастья.
Счастье пусть таит в себе несчастье.

Нормальное обращается, становясь аномальным.
Добро обращается, становясь нечистью.
Человек потерял свое солнце в глубокой древности.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Fifty-Nine

[59c01t] Robert G. Henricks
For ordering humanity and serving Heaven, nothing's so good as being sparing.
For only if you are sparing can you, therefore, early submit [to the Way].
Early submission - this is called to repeatedly accumulate {Virtue}.
{If you repeatedly accumulate Virtue, then there is nothing you can't overcome}.
{When there is nothing you can't overcome}, no one knows {where} it will {end}.
{When no one knows where it will end}, you can possess the state.
And when you possess the mother of the state, you can last a very long time.
This is called [having] deep roots and a firm base,
It's the Way of long life and long-lasting vision.

[59c02t] John C. H. Wu
IN governing a people and in serving Heaven,
There is nothing like frugality.
To be frugal is to return before straying.
To return before straying is to have a double reserve of virtue.
To have a double reserve of virtue is to overcome everything.
To overcome everything is to reach an invisible height.
Only he who has reached an invisible height can have a kingdom.
Only he who has got the Mother of a kingdom can last long.
This is the way to be deep-rooted and firm-planted in the Tao.
The secret of long life and lasting vision.

[59c03t] D. C. Lau
In ruling the people and in serving heaven it is best for a ruler to be sparing.
It is because he is sparing
That he may be said to follow the way from the start;
Following the way from the start he may be said to accumulate an abundance of virtue;
Accumulating an abundance of virtue there is nothing he cannot overcome;
When there is nothing he cannot overcome, no one knows his limit;
When no one knows his limit
He can possess a state;
When he possesses the mother of a state
He can then endure.
This is called the way of deep roots and firm stems by which one lives to see many days.

[59c04t] R. L. Wing
In leading people and serving Nature,
There is nothing better than moderation.
Since, indeed, moderation means yielding early;
Yielding early means accumulating Power.
When Power is accumulated,

Nothing is impossible.
When nothing is impossible,
One knows no limits.
One who knows no limits
Can possess the organization.
An organization that possesses the Mother
Can endure and advance.
This means deep roots and firm foundation:
Durability and longevity through observation of the Tao.

[59c05t] Ren Jiyu

For the rule of the people and the service of Heaven, there is nothing better than the principle of "parsimony."
Only by "parsimony" can one be unhurried and get ready early.
Being unhurried and getting ready early is what I call the repeated accumulation of the "De" of "parsimony."
With the repeated accumulation of De, one can victoriously overcome any obstacles.
The power which can overcome any obstacles is immeasurable.
With immeasurable power one can govern a state.
Having the foundation of government, one can maintain sovereignty very long.
This is called the Way in which one can plant the roots deep and make the stalks firm and maintain a long life.

[59c06t] Gia-fu Feng

In caring for others and serving heaven,
There is nothing like using restraint.
Restraint begins with giving up one's own ideas.
This depends on Virtue gathered in the past.
If there is a good store of Virtue, then nothing is impossible.
If nothing is impossible, then there are no limits.
If a man knows no limits, then he is fit to be a ruler.
The mother principle of ruling holds good for a long time.
This is called having deep roots and a firm foundation,
The Tao of long life and eternal vision.

[59c07t] Lok Sang Ho

To rule over men or to serve heaven
Nothing works better than following the farmer's example.
The farmer does his preparatory work early.
To be like him, one must pay attention to the accumulation of virtue.
That way one can overcome all difficulties.
That way one's ability knows no limit.
That way one can sustain a nation.
Virtue being the mother of a nation,
With virtue the nation can last a long time.
With deep roots and secure trunks, one is on the way to a long life and a long view.

[59c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The best thing in life is to be thrifty.
Only when you are thrifty, can you be prepared ahead of time.
Preparing ahead of time allows you to accumulate more DE.
Accumulating more DE allows you to overcome everything.
Overcoming everything allows you to have unmeasurable limits.
Having unmeasurable limits allows you to control a country.
When a country has the DAO, it can last long.
This is how you deepen and secure your roots, live long and last forever.

[59c09t] Walter Gorn Old, PRESERVING THE TAO
In ruling men and in serving Heaven there is nothing like moderation.
By means of it one attains to his first estate.
When this is attained a man is possessed of an indefinite store of virtue.
With such a store of virtue he will overcome everything.
And of this mastery there will be no limit.
Thus, without hindrance, he may possess the Kingdom.
Such a man has the mother-constitution, and will endure indefinitely.
He is like the plant whose roots are deep and whose stem is firm.
Thus may a man live long and see many days.

[59c10t] James Legge
For regulating the human (in our constitution) and rendering the (proper) service to the heavenly, there is nothing like moderation.
It is only by this moderation that there is effected an early return (to man's normal state).
That early return is what I call the repeated accumulation of the attributes (of the Tao).
With that repeated accumulation of those attributes, there comes the subjugation (of every obstacle to such return).
Of this subjugation we know not what shall be the limit;
and when one knows not what the limit shall be, he may be the ruler of a state.
He who possesses the mother of the state may continue long.
His case is like that (of the plant) of which we say that its roots are deep and its flower stalks firm:
- this is the way to secure that its enduring life shall long be seen.

[59c11t] David Hinton
To govern people and serve heaven
there's nothing like thrift.
Thrift means submitting early,
and submitting early means storing up Integrity.
Store up Integrity and nothing is beyond you.
Once nothing is beyond you,
no one knows where it will all end.
Once no one knows where it will end,
you can nurture a nation.
And nurturing the nation's mother too
you can last and last.

the Way of long life and enduring insight.

[59c12t] Chichung Huang
In governing the people and serving heaven,
There is nothing like sparingness.
Sparingness alone
Can lead you to early submission.
Early submission means accumulating virtue repeatedly.
If you accumulate virtue repeatedly,
There is nothing you cannot overcome.
If there is nothing you cannot overcome,
Nobody knows its limit.
If nobody knows its limit,
You are fit to possess a state.
If you possess the mother of governing a state,
You may long endure.
This is called the way
To deepen the roots and strengthen the base,
To lengthen life and perpetuate vision.

[59c13t] Ellen M. Chen
In governing people and serving heaven,
Nothing is better than being sparing (se).
Being sparing,
Is called early adherence [to Tao].
Adhering early,
Is called being heavy with accumulated te (chung chi te).
To be heavy with accumulated te,
Then [such a person is] all overcoming.
Being all overcoming,
Then there is no knowing the limit (chi).
Not knowing the limit,
One may rule a state.
Having the mother of a state,
It may last long.
This is called being deeply rooted and firmly founded,
The way to long life and enduring vision (chiu shih).

[59c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
In order to carry out the heavenly Tao, it is most important for [a leader to be] well-prepared, i.e. he must know more than what is fundamentally required, before he takes charge of people's affairs;
In order to be so well prepared, [a leader] should start early in his life to seriously pursue [Tao and aggravated Te];
[In other words] those who starts early will have accumulated adequately [knowledge and arete before he takes charge of other people's affairs];

Consequently, [his well-rounded knowledge and arete] will facilitate him to overcome all kinds of obstacles;
It is difficult for others to determine the limits of a person who can overcome all kinds of obstacles;
[Therefore] one whose limits are difficult to be ascertained can be entrusted with the sovereign responsibility of a country;
A country which has a creative resource (mother) will last for a long time.
This is what I described as the [growth of the main root was perceived through its] deeper and deeper penetration into the ground,
So that the main root [of a tree] could support the [gradual] expansion and strengthening (hardening) of its branch roots;
If one would make improvement in this way, he shall look far ahead and his establishment will thus exist for a very long time.

[59c15t] Tien Cong Tran
In governing a people and in serving Heaven, there is nothing like frugality.
To be frugal is to return early.
To return early is to accumulate an abundance of Virtue.
Accumulating an abundance of Virtue, everything can be overcome.
Overcoming everything, the unknown height is reached.
He who has reached an unknown height can reign a state.
He who reigns a state from its root can last long.
This is the Way of the deep root and the firm foot, of the of long life and not-getting-old.

[59c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Frugality is the best for governing people or serving heaven.
With frugality, we can be prepared in advance.
Advanced preparation is to emphasize accumulating Te.
Accumulating Te, we can accomplish any endeavor.
Accomplishing any endeavor means there is not limit.
With no limit we can have a kingdom.
With frugality as the mother of the kingdom, the kingdom can last long.
This is called deep root and firm foundation.
With such root and foundation we can enjoy longevity.

[59c17t] Arthur Waley
You cannot rule men nor serve heaven unless you have laid up a store;
This 'laying up a store' means quickly absorbing,
And 'quickly absorbing' means doubling one's garnered 'power'.
Double your garnered power and it acquires a strength that nothing can overcome.
If there is nothing it cannot overcome, it knows no bounds,
And only what knows no bounds
Is huge enough to keep a whole kingdom in its grasp.
But only he who having the kingdom goes to the Mother
Can keep it long.
This is called the art of making the roots strike deep by fencing the trunk, of making life long by fixed staring.

[59c18t] Richard John Lynn
For ordering the people and serving Heaven, nothing is better than husbandry.
Only husbandry can be called the quick way to submission.
By "quick way to submission" we mean the repetitive accumulation of virtue.
If one repetitively accumulates virtue, there is nothing that he cannot conquer.
As there is nothing that he cannot conquer, no one knows the limits he can reach.
As no one knows his limits, he can, accordingly, keep his state.
If one maintains the mother of the state, he can, accordingly, long endure.
This we refer to as having deep roots firmly established, for it is the Dao of long life and enduring oversight.

[59c19t] Lin Yutang
BE SPARING
In managing human affairs, there is no better rule than to be sparing.
To be sparing is to forestall;
To forestall is to be prepared and strengthened;
To be prepared and strengthened is to be ever-victorious;
To be ever-victorious is to have infinite capacity;
He who has infinite capacity is fit to rule a country,
And the Mother (principle) of a ruling country can long endure.
This is to be firmly rooted, to have deep strength,
The road to immortality and enduring vision.

[59c20t] Victor H. Mair
To rule men and serve heaven, there is nothing like thrift.
Now,
Only through thrift can one be prepared;
Being prepared means having a heavy store of integrity;
With a heavy store of integrity, he can overcome everything.
Able to overcome everything, no one knows his limits;
If no one knows his limits, he can have the kingdom;
Having the mother of the kingdom, he can long endure.
This is called "sinking roots firm and deep, the Way of long life and lasting vision."

[59c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
For governing others and serving heaven there is nothing better than moderation.
A person who is moderate returns to the path.
Returning to the path brings an abundance of Virtue.
This good store of Virtue cannot be conquered.
Virtue that cannot be conquered knows no limit.
Only a person who has limitless Virtue is fit to lead.
Only the leader who possesses the Mother of the country will long endure.
This is called making the roots go deep by restraining the trunk.
Learn to focus your life and you will see many days.

With restraint, one is ever ready.
Ever ready, one focuses on virtue.
Focusing on virtue, one overcomes everything.
Overcoming everything, one's limit does not come into being.
With one's limit not coming into being, one gains the state.
Having the foundation to governance, one lasts long.
This is deep root and solid foundation.
This is Direction - long lasting and long living.

[59c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
In governing people and serving heaven,
There is nothing better than thrift.
Thrift means expeditiously regaining balance after expending resources.
Expeditiously regaining balance means continually accumulating virtue.
Continually accumulating virtue means increasingly becoming invincible.
Increasingly becoming invincible means knowing that everything is possible.
One who knows that everything is possible is fit to govern people.
The mother principle of governing people holds good for a long time.
This is called deepening the root and firming the foundation,
Which is the way of long life and lasting vision.

[59c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
When the government is indifferent and inactive,
The people will be happy and wealthy,
When the government discriminates and divides,
The people will be restless and dissatisfied.
Happiness is borne on the back of sorrow,
Sorrow dwells beneath happiness.
Therefore, who can know the virtues of good government?
Only when the government does not rectify anything.
Otherwise, the rectification becomes a strategy,
And good becomes evil.
People have been aware of this for a long time.
Therefore the sage is square and does not cut others,
He has a point, but he does not pierce others,
He is straight, but he does not straighten others,
He shines, but he does not dazzle others.

[59c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
When ruling the world and serving Heaven,
The sage uses simplicity in everything he does.
Simplicity comes from letting go of what you want.
If you've been true to yourself earlier in your life
Then te builds up in you like a well that never fails.
Nothing is impossible, then - and nothing can stop you.
And if you have no limits - then you can hold the State.

If the sage can find the Mother of a Nation
Then he will govern for a long, long time.
All this comes from his rootedness in the Tao,
The Tao of Ages, the Mountain Of Vision And Of Wings.

[59c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The best way to govern the state and keep in good health
Is to stint vitality.
To stint vitality means to attempt an early preparation;
The early preparation means to keep accumulating virtue;
Keep accumulating virtue and one can become all-conquering;
Be all-conquering and one's power will be beyond measure;
When one's power is beyond measure,
He can be entrusted with the duty of defending the state.
When there is the principle of governing the state,
The government can long endure.
This is called the Tao of deep roots and sturdy stems
By which one can live and see longer time.

[59c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The best way to rule the people and serve Heaven is to be frugal.
To be frugal means to return to the beginning of creation.
To know the beginning of creation means to accumulate virtue.
Accumulating virtue means to overcome everything.
To overcome everything means to reach the limit.
By reaching the limit, one can possess a kingdom.
When one has possessed the mother of the kingdom,
the kingdom will then live long.
This is called the deep-rooted foundation.
This is the way to long life.

[59c28t] Liu Qixuan
To govern the world to cultivate one's nature,
One should stick to frugality.
For being frugal,
One will not stray from the Way as others do.
Staying with the Way, one can accumulate earlier.
Since one has stayed and accumulated longer in the Way,
One can overcome more wanton desires.
When one has overcome all desires,
Others would by no means be able to know
The limits of one's abilities.
One can then be qualified to lead a nation.
With a qualified leader, a nation can be long.
The Way is therefore the longest-rooted system
That supports the longest life span.

[59c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
A Way To The Longevity
Lao Tze says,
If a king of men knows to regulate human affairs by using the way of Heaven, he should know there is nothing better than to be sparing.
It is only by being sparing that an early obedience to the Tao is effected.
That early obedience is what I call the repeated accumulation of the attributes.
With the repeated accumulation of those attributes, there comes the conquest of every obstacle in the way.
Of this conquest he knows not what shall be the limit, and when he knows not what the limit shall be, he is qualified to be the ruler of a state.
He who possesses this motherly method of governing may continue to hold his rulership.
This method may be compared to a giant tree with its roots deep and its flower stalks firm;
and it is also a way which leads to enjoy long life and eternal gazing.

[59c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
In ruling men and in serving Heaven, the Sage uses only moderation.
By moderation alone he is able to have conformed early (to Tao).
This early conformity is called intensive accumulation of virtue.
With this intensive accumulation of virtue, there is nothing that he cannot overcome.
Because there is nothing that he cannot overcome, no one will be able to know his supremacy.
Because no one knows his supremacy he can take possession of a country.
Because what he does is identified with the Mother in taking possession of a country, he can long endure.
This means that he is deep rooted and firmly based, and knows the way of longevity and immortality.

[59c31t] Paul J. Lin
In governing the people and serving heaven,
There is nothing like thriftiness.
Only through thriftiness can one submit [to Tao] early;
Having submitted early, one accumulates virtue.
Having accumulated virtue, one can overcome everything.
Having overcome everything, one can know no limits.
Knowing no limits, one is able to rule a nation.
Possessing the mother of the nation, he may last long.
This is called the deep root and firm stalks,
And the way to longevity and everlasting vision.

[59c32t] Michael LaFargue
"When it comes to governing the people and serving Heaven, there's no one like a farmer."
Just being a farmer -
this means getting dressed early.
Getting dressed early means increasing one's store of Te;
increasing one's store of Te, then nothing is impossible;
nothing impossible, then no telling the limit;
no telling the limit, then one can possess the state.
One who possesses the Mother of the state,

can last a long time.
This means having deep roots and strong foundations,
the Way of 'lasting life, good eyesight into old age'.

[59c33t] Cheng Lin
In governing men and serving Heaven, there is nothing better than temperance.
In order to practise temperance, one must first follow Truth, and this means adherence to the inherent qualities.
When one adheres to the inherent qualities, he becomes invincible.
When he is invincible, he also becomes unfathomable.
When he is unfathomable, he also becomes one with Truth.
When he is one with Truth, he becomes everlasting.
This is the way to attain immortality.

[59c34t] Yi Wu
In governing people and serving Heaven,
There is nothing better than thrift.
Only by thrift can one submit early.
To submit early is to fully accumulate virtue.
With a full accumulation of virtue,
there is nothing that cannot be overcome.
With nothing that cannot be overcome, one's limits are beyond knowing.
With limits beyond knowing,
one can rule a nation.
If one has the country's mother,
one can long endure.
This is called deep-root and firm-stalk.
This is the way of long life and lasting vision.

[59c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Nothing beats frugality in governing a country or following the way of Dao.
Frugality compels you to get ready in advance.
To get ready in advance means you start to amass virtues straightaway.
The accumulation of virtues will enable you to achieve practically anything in life.
Ability to accomplish anything means you have incredible power.
With this limitless power, you can govern a country.
Governing the country by following the way of Dao, you will endure.
A plant can bear great fruit only if it has deep roots.
Building deep roots is the way to perpetuate.

[59c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
In managing people and serving Heaven, there is nothing better than sparing unnecessary activities and expense.
To be thrifty means to return to the simple essence of life.
To return to the simple essence of life is to nourish subtle virtue.

To nourish subtle virtue is to be able to overcome any difficulty.
Being able to overcome difficulties,
one can break through all limitations.
One's limitlessness is derived from whole and boundless virtue.
The source of such virtue can support one to serve a nation.
Then one's benevolence can be enduring.
This is the way to firmly plant and deeply root oneself in the subtle path of universal integration.
This is the achievement of the Way of immortality.

[59c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
In guiding people and working according to nature,
It is best to follow renunciation.
Following renunciation means returning soon.
Returning soon means accumulating attainment.
Accumulating attainment, everything can be dealt with.
Dealing with everything leads to limitlessness.
With limitlessness, one can govern the country.
Governing the country through its origin leads to endurance.
This means that to root deeply and to plant firmly leads to longevity and eternal consciousness.
Therefore, governing a large nation is as simple as preparing a dish of food.

[59c38t] Henry Wei
Adherence to Tao
Shou Tao
In ruling men and serving Heaven,
Nothing is comparable to a prudent economy.
A prudent economy means early preparation;
Early preparation means further accumulation of virtue;
Further accumulation of virtue can subdue everything;
The ability to subdue everything knows no bounds;
Knowing no bounds (in subduing opposition)
Can lead to the possession of a kingdom;
Possession of a kingdom along with its Mother
Can endure a long time.
This is called "deep roots and strong stalks."
It is the way to eternal life and everlasting vision.

[59c39t] Ha Poong Kim
In ruling the people and serving Heaven

Truly, being sparing
Means submitting early.

If there is nothing you cannot overcome,
You will find no limit.
If you find no limit,
You will be fit to rule a state.
If you possess the mother of the state,
You will be long-lasting.
This is called deeply rooted and firmly planted.
It is the way of long life and lasting sight.

[59c40t] Tao Huang
For governing people and serving the heaven, nothing is better than frugality.
Only frugality enables the pre-empty measures.
Pre-empty measures mean a great accumulation of Action.
A great accumulation of Action leaves nothing to be conquered.
When nothing needs to be conquered,
No-boundary is known.
When no-boundary is known, it allows the country to exist.
The country, existing from its source, can endure.
This is the Tao of having a deep root, a strong stem, a long life, and an enduring vision.

[59c41t] Tang Zi-chang
To rule the people and serve the world there is nothing better than to follow the model of nature.
To follow the model of nature is to be the early appreciation of Dao.
To be the early appreciation of Dao is to give emphasis to the accumulation of Virtues.
To give emphasis to the accumulation of Virtues there is nothing that cannot be overcome.
When one has nothing that cannot be overcome, then nobody knows his limit.
When nobody knows his limit, then he may have a kingdom to rule.
When one has a kingdom to rule, he may mother (rule) the world.
He may rule everywhere and forever.
This is called the way of deepening the root;
consolidating the sprout;
prolonging the life;
and enduring the rule.

[59c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
To rule people and to serve Heaven there is nothing better than to be frugal.
Only by being frugal can one recover quickly.
To recover quickly means to accumulate virtue heavily.
By the heavy accumulation of virtue one can overcome everything.
If one can overcome everything, then he will acquire a capacity the limit of which is beyond anyone's knowledge.
When his capacity is beyond anyone's knowledge, he is fit to rule a state.
He who possesses the Mother (Tao) of the state will last long.
This means that the roots are deep and the stalks are firm,
Which is the way of long life and everlasting vision.

[59c91t] И. И. Семененко
Для управления людьми и службы Небу нет лучше бережливости.
А бережливость - это когда загодя посвящают себя Дао.
Загодя посвятить ему себя значит скопить вдвое больше добродетели.
Кто скапливает ее вдвое больше, становится непобедим.
Когда становится непобедим, его предел перестает кому-либо быть ведом.
А чей предел становится неведом, тот может иметь княжество.
Мать, обладающая княжеством, может достигнуть долговечности, и это называется глубоким корнем, прочным основанием, Дао вечной жизни и нескончаемого видения.

[59c92t] А. А. Маслов
В правлении людьми и служении Небу ничто не сравнится с воздержанностью.
Тот, кто воздержан, зовётся изначально готовым [следовать Дао].
Тот, кто готов изначально, зовётся собравшим Благость в избытке.
Для того, в ком Благость собрана в избытке, нет ничего, способного противостоять ему.
Если ему ничто не может противостоять, то нет ему предела.
Если нет ему предела, то он может владеть государством.
Обладая Матерью государства, можно стать долговечным.
Это зовётся глубокими и крепкими корнями нетленного и долговечного Дао.

[59c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Управлять людьми и служить Небу ничто так не способствует, как умеренность.
Ведь только про умеренность говорят, что она помогает рано приготовиться.
Рано приготовиться - значит обладать обильным накоплением Благой Силы.
Для обладающего обильным накоплением Благой Силы нет ничего непреодолимого.
Что касается того, для кого нет ничего непреодолимого, то никто не знает его предела.
Тот, предела которого никто не знает, может обладать царством.
Мать царства обретя, можно стать долговечным и непреходящим.
Этот принцип называют корнем глубоким и черенком крепким.
В нем путь продления жизни и вечного видения.

[59c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
В управлении людьми и служении Небу-Отечеству нет ничего лучшего, чем бережливость.
Если проявить бережливость - значит, заблаговременно позаботиться.
Заблаговременно позаботиться - значит, вдвое приумножить Дэ.
Если вдвое приумножить Дэ, то не будет непреодолимого.
Если не будет непреодолимого,
то никому не будет известен и его предел.
Если никому не будет известен его предел,
то можно овладеть царством.
Овладев Матерью-Родиной царства, можно стать долговечным [вождем].
(Вариант перевода: можно обеспечить долговечность [царству].)
Это и называется глубоким истоком, прочным корнем, вечно живущим и вечно существующим Дао.

Управляя людьми и служа небу, лучше всего соблюдать воздержание.
Воздержание должно стать главной заботой.
Оно называется совершенствованием дэ.
Совершенствование дэ - всепобеждающее.
Всепобеждающее обладает неисчерпаемой силой.
Неисчерпаемая сила дает возможность овладеть страной.
Начало, при помощи которого управляется страна, долговечно и называется глубоким и прочным, вечно существующим дао.

[59c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Для того чтобы служить небу и управлять людьми, всего лучше соблюдать воздержание.
Воздержание - это первая ступень добродетели, которая и есть начало нравственного совершенства.
Человек высокой нравственности преодолеет всякую трудность.
Глубина и могущество силы преодолевшего всякую трудность неизмеримы.
Он может быть владыкою мира.
Владыка мира и есть мать вселенной.
Мать вселенной будет жить вечно, ибо она имеет глубокий корень и крепкое основание.

[59c97t] В. В. Малявин
В управлении людьми и служении Небу
Нет ничего лучше, чем быть бережливым.
Кто умеет беречь, первым изготовится.
Первым изготовиться означает копить Совершенство.
Кто умеет копить Совершенство, тот все превзойдет.
Если он все превзойдет, никто не будет знать, где его предел.
Кто не имеет предела, может владеть царством.
А кто владеет матерью царства, будет жить долго.
Вот что такое "глубокий корень, прочная основа",
Это Путь вечной жизни и долгого взгляда.

[59c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Упорядочивание - люди.
Дела - Небо.
Нет ничего, что сравнится с бережливостью.
Будь только бережливым.
Это определяется:
Заранее воспринимать.
Заранее воспринимать.
Это определяется:
Двойное накопление Потенции.
Двойное накопление Потенции - тогда отсутствие не-преодолимого.
Отсутствие не-преодолимого - тогда никто не знает своего Предела.
Никто не знает своего предела - может быть наличие государства.
Наличие материнского принципа в государстве позволяет достичь длительности и долготы.
Это определяется: Глубокий корень, прочный ствол.
Путь длинной жизни и долгого видения.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty

954/2593

[60c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Ruling a large state is like cooking small fish.
When you use the Way to govern the world, evil spirits won't have godlike power.
Actually, it's not that evil spirits won't have godlike power,
It's that their power will not harm men.
But it's not [just] that their power won't harm men,
The Sage, also, will not harm them.
Since these two do not harm others,
Therefore their Virtues intermingle and return to them.

[60c02t] John C. H. Wu
RULING a big kingdom is like cooking a small fish.
When a man of Tao reigns over the world, demons have no spiritual powers.
Not that the demons have no spiritual powers, but the spirits themselves do no harm to men.
Not that the spirits do no harm to men, but the Sage himself does no harm to his people.
If only the ruler and his people would refrain from harming each other, all the benefits of life would accumulate in the kingdom.

[60c03t] D. C. Lau
Governing a large state is like boiling a small fish.
When the empire is ruled in accordance with the way,
The spirits lose their potencies.
Or rather, it is not that they lose their potencies,
But that, though they have their potencies, they do not harm the people.
It is not only they who, having their potencies, do not harm the people,
The sage, also, does not harm the people.
As neither does any harm, each attributes the merit to the other.

[60c04t] R. L. Wing
Leading a large organization is like cooking a small fish.
If the Tao is present in the world,
The cunning are not mysterious.
Not only are the cunning not mysterious,
Their mystery does not harm others.
Not only does their mystery not harm others,
The Evolved also do not harm others.
Since together they do no harm,
The Power returns and accumulates.

[60c05t] Ren Jiyu
Governing a great state is like frying small fish (so frequent disturbance should be avoided).
Applying Tao to the kingdom can render ghosts harmless.

It is not that the ghosts cannot function,
But that the function cannot harm men.
It is not that the function cannot harm men,
But that the sage never harms men at all.
So, men and ghosts will not harm each other,
Therefore both (men and ghosts) praise the De of the sage.

[60c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Ruling the country is like cooking a small fish.
Approach the universe with Tao,
And evil will have no power.
Not that evil is not powerful,
But its power will not be used to harm others.
Not only will it do no harm to others,
But the sage himself will also be protected.
They do not hurt each other,
And the Virtue in each one refreshes both.

[60c07t] Lok Sang Ho
To govern a great nation
Is not much different from frying a small fish.
To govern a nation according to the Dao,
Even the demons will not show their influences.
Not that they have lost all their influences,
But their influences will do people no harm.
Not only do the influences of the evil spirits do people no harm.
The Sage will also do people no harm.
Since demons at one extreme,
through the Sage at the other extreme,
All do people no harm.
We can conclude that the Virtue has perfected its job.

[60c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Governing a big country is like carefully cooking a small fish.
When the DAO rules, ghosts will not show their spirits.
Not only will the ghosts not show their spirits, but also the spirits will not hurt people.
Not only will the spirits not hurt people, but also the great men will not hurt people.
When neither the spirits nor the great men hurt people, the DE becomes natural and lasts long.

[60c09t] Walter Gorn Old, FILLING THE THRONE
The state should be governed as we cook small fish, without much business.
Bringing the Tao to the governing of the Kingdom will give rest to the shades of the dead.
Not that the Spirits will be inactive, but that they will cease to trouble the people.
But what is of more importance, the wise ruler of the people will not hurt them.
And in so far as they do not interfere with one another, their influences conspire to the general good!

[60c10t] James Legge
Governing a great state is like cooking small fish.
Let the kingdom be governed according to the Tao, and the manes of the departed will not manifest their spiritual energy.
It is not that those manes have not that spiritual energy, but it will not be employed to hurt men.
It is not that it could not hurt men, but neither does the ruling sage hurt them.
When these two do not injuriously affect each other, their good influences converge in the virtue (of the Tao).

[60c11t] David Hinton
Govern a great nation as you would cook a small fish.
Use Way to rule all beneath heaven and spirits never become ghosts.
When spirits don't become ghosts, ghosts do people no harm.
When ghosts do people no harm, sages do them no harm.
And once humans and ghosts do each other no harm, they return together to Integrity.

[60c12t] Chichung Huang
Governing a large state
Is like frying small fish.
Use the Tao to preside over the empire,
And its spirits will not be mischievous;
Not that its spirits will not be mischievous,
But that their mischief will not harm the people;
Not that their mischief will not harm the people,
But that a sage man never does any harm.
Since neither harms anyone,
Their favors will converge.

[60c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Governing a great state,
Is like cooking small fish.
If you rule the world by Tao,
The ghosts (kuei) will lose their spiritual (shen) power.
Not that the ghosts lose their spiritual power,
But their spiritual power will not harm the people.
Not that their spiritual power will not harm the people,
But neither does the sage harm the people.
Since both are harmless,
Te flows back and forth [without impediment].

[60c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Governing a big country is like cooking small fish unscathed [,as both are delicate matters that requires extraordinary caution].
If one leads the world in accordance with Tao, his ghosts (antagonists) cannot be efficacious [in such a righteous society];
Even if his ghosts are efficacious, [yet under the influence of Tao] they still cannot harm people;
A Sage would [under no circumstance] harm them either;

Because neither one would harm the other side, their Te shall be reciprocally beneficial to each other.

[60c15t] Tien Cong Tran
Governing a big state is like cooking a small fish.
When a man of the Way reigns over the world, demons no longer have spiritual powers.
Not that the demons have no spiritual powers, but the spirits themselves do no harm to men.
Not that the spirits do no harm to men, but the sage himself does no harm to his people.
If the sage and his people refrain from harming each other, Virtue will return.

[60c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Governing a big kingdom is like cooking small seafood.
With Tao as guidance, evils will never have their way.
It is actually not that the evils do not have their way, but that the evils will not hurt people.
Not only do Evils not hurt people, but also do not hurt the sage.
When both people and the sage are not hurt, Te is in dominance.

[60c17t] Arthur Waley
Ruling a large kingdom is indeed like cooking small fish.
They who by Tao ruled all that is under heaven did not let an evil spirit within them display its powers.
Nay, it was not only that the evil spirit did not display its powers; neither was the Sage's good spirit used to the hurt of other men.
Nor was it only that his good spirit was not used to harm other men, the Sage himself was thus saved from harm.
And so, each being saved from harm, their 'powers' could converge towards a common end.

[60c18t] Richard John Lynn
Ruling a large state is like cooking a small fish.
If one uses the Dao to oversee all under Heaven, the malign spirits there will lose their numinous power.
It is not that these malign spirits have no numinous power;
it is just that they will do no harm to the people.
It is not these numinous powers that do not harm the people but the sage, in fact, who does not harm the people.
It is because neither of these two cause any harm that they unite their virtues and revert to it.

[60c19t] Lin Yutang
RULING A BIG COUNTRY
Rule a big country as you would fry small fish.
Who rules the world in accord with Tao
Shall find that the spirits lose their power.
It is not that the spirits lose their power,
But that they cease to do people harm.
It is not (only) that they cease to do people harm,
The Sage (himself) also does no harm to the people.
When both do not do each other harm,
The original character is restored.

[60c20t] Victor H. Mair
Ruling a big kingdom is like cooking a small fish.
If one oversees all under heaven in accord with the Way, demons have no spirit.
It is not that the demons have no spirit, but that their spirits do not harm people.
It is not merely that their spirits do not harm people, but that the sage also does not harm them.
Now,
When neither harms the other, integrity accrues to both.

[60c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Governing a big country is like cooking a small fish.
Let all under heaven be governed in accordance with the Tao,
and demons will not manifest their power.
It is not that they lack power but rather they will not use their power to harm the people.
They are not the only ones who have power and do not use it to harm the people.
The True Person does not harm the people.
Whenever there is no harm done,
that power flows into the common Virtue.

[60c22t] David H. Li
Govern a large state is like frying a small fish.
With Direction embracing the world, ghosts become ineffective.
It is not because ghosts become ineffective;
it is because their effect becomes inoffensive.
Not only have ghosts become inoffensive;
The sage has also become inoffensive.
With the two not inflicting harm, the people are showered with virtue.

[60c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Governing a big country is like cooking a small fish.
The more you stir the pot, the less the fish stays intact.
If the world is guided by the Tao,
Even evil spirits are rendered spiritless.
Not that evil spirits are in themselves spiritless,
But their spirits do not harm people.
Not only do evil spirits not harm people,
But powerful rulers also do not harm people.
When no harm is done from either side,
Virtue accrues to both and all return to pristine oneness.

[60c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
When ruling people, like serving heaven, the sage acts only in moderation.
Only with moderation can he learn the Tao in an instant.
This study is called "the rapid accumulation of a virtue."
Through the rapid accumulation of a virtue
He can overcome everything.
Since there is nothing he cannot overcome,

No one can know of his superiority.
Since no one knows of his superiority,
He can rule the country.
Since what he does when he acquires everything is identified with the mother, his days are extended.
Thus his roots are deep and his foundations strong, and he knows the way of longevity and immortality.

Ruling a big country

You have to handle it with care.
If a sage uses the Tao
Then evil forces have no power:
He doesn't harm people either.

[60c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Ruling a large state resembles frying a small fish

When the Tao prevails in the world,
Even ghosts and spirits become harmless.
It is not that ghosts become harmless
But that their potencies can no longer harm people.
Not only ghosts become harmless,
Sages harm no people either.
Hence neither does any harm to the people
And both sages and ghosts help the people to enjoy the benefit of virtue.

[60c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Governing a large country is like cooking a small fish.
It is spoiled by too much interference.
When the ruler presents his country with Tao, Heaven will not harm him.
Not only will the curse not fall upon him, but it will not even cause harm to the people.
As the curse will not hurt the people, neither will the sage cause harm to the people.
Only because they do not hurt one another, will they blend their virtue.

[60c28t] Liu Qixuan

When evil souls can exert no bad influence from below,
Nor rulers harm people from above,
Then the Way will have extended far enough

Governing A Great State
Lao Tze says,
Governing a great state is like cooking small fish.
The king of men knows to pacify his kingdom by using the Tao;
the dead men's ghosts will not manifest their spiritual energy.
Not only will those ghosts not manifest their spiritual energy, but they will not hurt men.
Not only will they hurt men, even the sage in exercise of his government will not disturb those ghosts.
As these two do not injuriously affect each other, so in the Tao's attribute, the living and the departed both find their rest places.

[60c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Govern a great state as you would cook a small fish (do it gently).
Let Tao reign over the world, and no spirits will show their ghostly powers.
Not that the spirits have no more powers,
But their powers will not harm men.
Neither will they harm men,
Nor will the Sage harm the people.
Inasmuch as none of them harms anybody,
Therefore virtue belongs to them both.

[60c31t] Paul J. Lin
To rule a large nation is as to cook a small fish.

When both will not hurt each other,
All virtue will converge to them.

To govern a large State is as easy as frying small fishes.
When one rules an Empire according to Truth, the spirits become powerless.
Not only the spirits, but also the gods are powerless to do harm to men.
Not only the gods, but also the Sages are powerless to do harm to men.
When these do not do harm to one another, their inherent qualities will enable them to arrive at a common end.

[60c34t] Yi Wu
Govern a big country as if cooking a small fish.
Reign over the world with the Way,
Then its demons will have no spiritual power.
Not that demons are not spiritually powerful,
But their spiritual powers will not harm people.
Not that their spiritual powers cannot harm people,
But, because the sage also will not harm people,
Neither harms the other.
Therefore, they return to virtue together.

[60c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Governing a big country is akin to frying a small fish.
When the power of Dao is prevalent,
Even the demons become impotent.
Although the demons continue to possess magical power,
Their power is rendered innocuous.
Hence, the demons cannot harm people.
The sage also does not harm people.
Both do not interfere with people.
Thus by sticking to non-intervention, both let their virtues merge together.

[60c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Managing a big country is like cooking small fish.
The more you stir them, the less their shape can be maintained.
When one applies the subtle Way of the universe to the world,
all high spirits unite and harmonize their potencies.
Thus, they do not harm people.
All the world's leaders know to merge with the great Oneness, thus all people are preserved from harm.
When the subtle Way of the universe is all pervading,
there is no longer any distinction between subject and object, between spiritual and material,
between holy and unholy.
All energies merge into harmonious Oneness.

It is that its power does not damage men.
Indeed, it is not that its power does not damage men.
It is primarily that the ruler does not become harmful to men.

Virtue reverts to all parties respectively.

[60c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Governing a large state

It is not simply that their supernatural power does not harm the people.
The sage, too, does not harm the people.
Since neither of them harms the people,
Their Te, united, returns.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-One

965/2593

[61c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The large state is like the lower part of a river;
It is the female of the world;
It is the meeting point of the world.
The female constantly overcomes the male with tranquility.
Because she is tranquil, therefore she is fittingly underneath.
The large state - if it is below the small state, then it takes over the small state;
The small state - if it is below the large state, then it is taken over by the large state.
Therefore some by being low take over,
And some by being low are taken over.
Therefore the large state merely desires to unite and rear others;
While the small state merely desires to enter and serve others.
If both get what they want,
Then the large {state} should fittingly be underneath.

[61c02t] John C. H. Wu
A GREAT country is like the lowland toward which all streams flow.
It is the Reservoir of all under heaven, the Feminine of the world.
The Feminine always conquers the Masculine by her quietness, by lowering herself through her quietness.
Hence, if a great country can lower itself before a small country, it will win over the small country;
and if a small country can lower itself before a great country, it will win over the great country.
The one wins by stooping; the other, by remaining low.
What a great country wants is simply to embrace more people;
and what a small country wants is simply to come to serve its patron.
Thus, each gets what it wants.
But it behooves a great country to lower itself.

[61c03t] D. C. Lau
A large state is the lower reaches of a river -
The place where all the streams of the world unite.
In the union of the world,
The female always gets the better of the male by stillness.
Being still, she takes the lower position.
Hence the large state, by taking the lower position, annexes the small state;
The small state, by taking the lower position, affiliates itself to the large state.
Thus the one, by taking the lower position, annexes;
The other, by taking the lower position, is annexed.
All that the large state wants is to take the other under its wing;
All that the small state wants is to have its services accepted by the other.
If each of the two wants to find its proper place,
It is meet that the large should take the lower position.

[61c04t] R. L. Wing
A large organization should flow downward
To intersect with the world.
It is the female of the world.
The female always overcomes the male by stillness;
Through stillness, she makes herself low.
Thus if a large organization
Is lower than a small organization,
It can receive the small organization.
And if a small organization
Stays lower than a large organization, It can receive the large organization.
Therefore one receives by becoming low; Another receives by being low.
Yet what a large organization desires
Is to unite and support others.
And what a small organization desires
Is to join and serve others.
So for both to gain the position they desire, The larger should place itself low.

[61c05t] Ren Jiyu
A great state lies lower (like rivers and seas into which all streams run),
To it all things under Heaven tend, It considers itself as the female under Heaven.
The female always overcomes the male by stillness, because it is still and lies lower.
Therefore, a great state can, by lowering itself to small states, make the small states rely upon the big states.
Small states can, by lowering themselves to a great state, win trust from it.
Thus a great state sometimes makes small states rely upon it by lowering itself,
And sometimes, small states win the trust from a great state only by lowering themselves.
What the great state desires is to lead the small states,
And what the small states desire is to serve the great state.
Then each side gets what it desires,
But the great state should especially learn to lower itself.

[61c06t] Gia-fu Feng
A great country is like low land.
It is the meeting ground of the universe,
The mother of the universe.
The female overcomes the male with stillness,
Lying low in stillness.
Therefore if a great country gives way to a smaller country,
It will conquer the smaller country.
And if a small country submits to a great country,
It can conquer the great country.
Therefore those who would conquer must yield,
And those who conquer do so because they yield.
A great nation needs more people;
A small country needs to serve.
Each gets what it wants.

It is fitting for a great nation to yield.

[61c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Big nations should be like a stream that flows low.
In relating to other nations under heaven.
They should be like a female animal.
Female animals often lie low and still.
By doing so they win over male animals.
Big nations that take on a lower profile than small nations will win the adherence of small nations.
Small nations that take on a lower profile than big nations will win the assistance from the big nations.
Big nations keep low and get what they want.
Small nations keep low and get what they want.
Big nations(with an abundance of land) want to have a bigger population.
Small nations(with a shortage of land) want to have more jobs.
If big nations keep low, both the needs of big nations and those of the small will be fulfilled.

[61c08t] Xiaolin Yang
When governing a big country, you should be humble,
Like the lowest point where water meets, or like the females of the world.
Females always overcome males by being peaceful; being peaceful is humble.
Therefore, if a big country humbles itself to a small country, it can lead the small country;
If a small country humbles itself to a big country, it can get help from the big country.
So, humbleness leads either to leading a small country or to getting help from a big country.
A big country always wants to lead a small country,
A small country always wants to get help from a big country;
They can achieve their goals by being humble.
So the big should be humble.

[61c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF HUMILITY
The kingdom, like a river, becomes great by being lowly; it is thereby the centre to which all the world tends.
It is similar in the case of woman:
She conquers man by continual quietness.
And quietness is the same as submission.
Therefore a great state, by condescension to those beneath it, may gain the government of them.
Likewise a small state, by submission to one that is greater, may secure its alliance.
Thus the one gains adherence, and the other obtains favours.
Although the great state desires to annex and to nourish others, yet the small state desires to be allied to and serve the greater.
Thus both will be satisfied, if only the greater will condescend.

[61c10t] James Legge
What makes a great state is its being (like) a low-lying, down-flowing (stream);
- it becomes the centre to which tend (all the small states) under heaven.

(To illustrate from) the case of all females:
- the female always overcomes the male by her stillness.
Stillness may be considered (a sort of) abasement.
Thus it is that a great state, by condescending to small states, gains them for itself;
and that small states, by abasing themselves to a great state, win it over to them.
In the one case the abasement leads to gaining adherents, in the other case to procuring favour.
The great state only wishes to unite men together and nourish them;
a small state only wishes to be received by, and to serve, the other.
Each gets what it desires, but the great state must learn to abase itself.

[61c11t] David Hinton
A great nation flows down into the place where all beneath heaven converges,
the female of all beneath heaven.
In its stillness, female lies perpetually low, and there perpetually conquers male.
A great nation that puts itself below a small nation takes over the small nation, and a small nation that puts itself below a great nation gives itself over to the great nation.
Some lie low to take over, and some lie low to give over.
A great nation wanting nothing more than to unite and nurture the people and a small nation wanting nothing more than to join and serve the people: they both succeed in what they want.
Great things lie low and rest content.

[61c12t] Chichung Huang
A large state is the lower stream,
The female to all under heaven,
The converging point of all under heaven.
The female constantly uses stillness
To overcome the male.
As she is still,
It is proper that she stay low.
Therefore, if a large state
Stays low to a small state,
It wins the small state;
If a small state
Stays low to a large state,
It is won by the large state.
Therefore, one stays low to win;
One stays low to be won.
Therefore, the large state
Merely wishes to annex and feed the other;
The small state
Merely wishes to join and serve the other.
If each is to have its wish,
The large state should stay lower.

A large state is down stream (hsia liu).
Where the rivers under heaven (t'ien hsia) converge,
Is the female (p'in) under heaven.
The female always wins the male (mou) by stillness (ching),
By stillness it is low-lying (hsia).
Therefore, by being low-lying (hsia) to a small state,
A large state acquires (ch'ü) a small state.
By lowering (hsia) itself to a large state,
A small state acquires a large state.
The one acquires by being low-lying (hsia),
The other acquires by lowering (hsia).
A large state without overstepping its boundary (pu kuo),
Wishes to keep others under its wings.
A small state without overstepping its boundary (pu kuo),
Wishes to offer service to others.
Now both are granted their proper wishes,
It is fitting that a large state takes the low (hsia) place.

[61c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org

A big country was formed by being at the right position, i.e. like the waterway at the lowest position where other waterways (small countries) converged together spontaneously;
Diplomacy in this world was generally conducted similar to the manner a cow took an initiative to tempt an ox;
The fact was that the ox was led to believe deceptively that serenely passive cow was the weaker [party to be mastered].
Therefore:
If a big country deals with small countries by taking the lower position [for currents to flow in], then it would secure small countries [with ease];
If a small country negotiates with a big country, by positioning itself in the lower [passive] position, it could insinuate big country to yield to its needs;
One country may lower itself in order to take possession of another country, or one country may insinuate itself into favor through submissiveness [it all depends on the circumstance].
A big country should not press onward too far its intention to lord over people of small countries;
A small country should not let itself be overridden by its intention to yield to the big country;
Accordingly, when a big country and a small country each has achieved its intended purpose respectfully, the big country should try harder to be modest.

[61c15t] Tien Cong Tran

A great country is like the low stream.
It is where the world flows together.
It is the feminine of the world.
The feminine always conquers the masculine by her quietness; she is in a lower place by her quietness.
Hence, if a big state is below a small state, it will win over the small state.
If a small is below a big state, it will win over the big state.
The one wins by lowering itself; the other, by remaining low.
What a great state wants is simply to embrace and protect more people.

What a small country wants is simply to participate and to submit its patron.
Thus, each gets what it wants.
But it behooves a big state to lower itself.

[61c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
A great kingdom is like the mouth of rivers; it is like the female, or the hub of the world.
Females frequently win males with their serenity.
Serenity means humbleness.
Therefore when a great kingdom is humble, it wins small kingdoms.
When a small kingdom is humble, it wins great kingdoms.
This is why with humbleness one can win and will win.
A great kingdom should not excessively conquer.
A small kingdom should avoid undue vassalage.
In order for both great and small kingdoms to have their wishes, it is better for great kingdoms to be humble.

[61c17t] Arthur Waley
A large kingdom must be like the low ground towards which all streams flow down.
It must be a point towards which all things under heaven converge.
Its part must be that of the female in its dealings with all things under heaven.
The female by quiescence conquers the male; by quiescence gets underneath.
If a large kingdom can in the same way succeed in getting underneath a small kingdom then it will win the adherence of the small kingdom;
and it is because small kingdoms are by nature in this way underneath large kingdoms that they win the adherence of large kingdoms.
The one must get underneath in order to do it;
the other is underneath and therefore does it.
What large countries really need is more inhabitants;
and what small countries need is some place where their surplus inhabitants can go and get employment.
Thus each gets what it needs.
That is why I say the large kingdom must 'get underneath'.

[61c18t] Richard John Lynn
A large state is a catchment into which flow occurs.
It is where all under Heaven unite.
It is the female for all under Heaven.
The female always conquers the male because of quietude.
She is able to take the low position because of quietude.
Thus the large state, by placing itself beneath the small state,
Consequently takes over the small state.
The small state, by placing itself beneath the large state, subsequently is taken over by the large state.
Thus some, by taking a place beneath, take over, and some, by taking a place beneath, are taken over.
The large state should desire nothing more than to bring people together and nurture them, and the small state should desire nothing more than to join in and serve people.
In order that both obtain what they desire, it is fitting that the large one place itself beneath.

BIG AND SMALL COUNTRIES
A big country (should be like) the delta low-regions,
Being the concourse of the world,
(And) the Female of the world.
The Female overcomes the Male by quietude,
And achieves the lowly position by quietude.
Therefore if a big country places itself below a small country,
It absorbs the small country;
(And) if a small country places itself below a big country,
It absorbs the big country.
Therefore some place themselves low to absorb (others),
Some are (naturally) low and absorb (others).
What a big country wants is but to shelter others,
And what a small country wants is but to be able to come in and be sheltered.
Thus (considering) that both may have what they want,
A big country ought to place itself low.

[61c20t] Victor H. Mair

A large state is like a low-lying estuary,
the female of all under heaven.
In the congress of all under heaven,
the female always conquers the male through her stillness.
Because she is still, it is fitting for her to lie low.
By lying beneath a small state,
a large state can take over a small state.
By lying beneath a large state,
a small state can be taken over by a large state.
Therefore,
One may either take over or be taken over by lying low.
Therefore,
The large state wishes only to annex and nurture others;
The small state wants only to join with and serve others.
Now,
Since both get what they want,
It is fitting for the large state to lie low.

[61c21t] Tolbert McCarroll

A great country is like the low lands where all the streams unite.
In all things under heaven the female overcomes the male by her stillness, and because she is still she lies below.
Hence,
if the great country will take the low place
it will win over the little country.
If the little country will take the low place
it will win over the great country.

Thus,
the one gets below and prospers
and the other remains below and prospers.
All that the great country wants is more people.
All that the little country wants is a place for its people to go and to be employed.
If each is to get what it wants it is necessary for the great country to take the low place.

A great nation is like a down-stream - the feminine to the world, the rendezvous of the world.
The feminine frequently wins over the masculine with serenity.
Serenity is obsequiousness.
Thus,
a great nation, obsequious to a small nation, gains the small nation;
a small nation, obsequious to a great nation, gains the great nation.
Thus, one is obsequious in order to gain.
Or, one is obsequious because it needs to gain.
A great nation is not to be too keen on conquering.
A small nation is not to be too keen on acquiescing.
Since each gains what each desires, it is better for the great nation to be obsequious.

[61c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
A great country is like a low-lying estuary,
A place where the myriad streams of the world come together.
She is also like a receptive female drawing in an eager male.
The female always conquers the male through her stillness,
Because she knows how to lie low through her stillness.
Thus,
a great country can win over a small country by lying low.
A small country can also win over a great country by lying low.
Therefore, one may either win over or be won over by taking the lower position.
A great country only wants to embrace and nourish more people.
A small country only wants to be embraced and serve her benefactor.
Thus, both can achieve their ends by practicing humility.
Therefore, especially a great country must practice humility.

[61c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Govern a large country as you would cook a small fish, gently.
Let the Tao govern the world, and spirits will not roam freely.
This does not mean that spirits will not have powers,
But rather that their powers will not harm people.
They will not harm people,
Nor will the sage harm people.
When neither he nor they harm anybody,
The virtue belongs to both of them.
When the Tao governs the world, the spirits are not known as spirits and the sage is not considered a sage,

[61c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
A great country is like a low-lying estuary -
It is a place where all the lesser streams mingle and merge.
Everything comes together there ...
And a woman wins her man: how does she do it?
By using the power of her yin like an anchor,
A still deep bowl into which it all flows.
This is passiveness.
So if a great country takes a low place
It wins over the trust of a smaller state;
And if a small country shows humility
It wins the trust of a whole nation.
And it's like this:
those who want to win must yield,
And those who are yielding should stay where they are.
A great country needs to grow:
A small one needs protection.
That way, everyone gets what they want - when the greater learns to be below.

[61c26t] Gu Zhengkun
A large state should play the role of female,
Just like the lowest reaches of a river
Where all the other streams meet.
The female always conquers the male by motionlessness,
Because the motionless female always takes the lower position.
Hence the large state can annex the small one by taking the lower position (being modest);
The small state can gain the trust of the large one by taking the lower position,
The case being either the former or vice versa.
The large state wants to put the small one under its protection,
The small state wants to be shielded by the large one,
Thus both can satisfy their wishes,
But the large state should be more willing to take the lower position.

[61c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
When a large country is like water, which runs towards lower places,
all the other countries will unite with it.
In the unity of the world, the female always overcomes the male with stillness.
The stillness is akin to the lower position - that is how a large country can be respected by a small country and conquer it.
And if a small country takes the lower position and allows itself to be influenced by the large country, the small can conquer the large.
That is why by being lower to take, or lower to be taken,

a large country only tries to annex a small one and a small country only tries to protect its people.
They both find what they want.
Therefore it is fitting for a large country to be the lower one.

[61c28t] Liu Qixuan
A big country should position itself low
So as to be the world's mother ocean.
The biggest producer is for ever still and peaceful,
Dissolves all the commotions with her stillness,
And keeps her lowness with her stillness, too.
Therefore, if a big country can be humble toward a small one,
It will win over the small country.
If a small country can be humble toward a big one,
It will win over the big country.
Thus, countries either lower themselves to win over others
Or lower themselves to be tolerated by others.
A big country's purpose is to support all kinds of people.
A small country's purpose is to gain support to serve people.
To satisfy the two purposes,
The big country should be more yielding in attitude.

The Large And Small States
Lao Tze says,
Like water, a large state should keep a low profile as it goes down stream, in order that it becomes the pivot of the world.
The female is the master of the world.
The female always overcomes the male by being still.
Stillness may be considered as a sort of abasement.
Thus a large state, by abasing itself to smaller states, annexes the small states;
while small states, by abasing themselves, affiliate themselves with larger states.
In one case the abasement leads to gaining allies, in the other case it procures favors.
The large state wishes only to increase population;
small states wish only to be guarded.
Each gets what it desires, but the large state must learn to abase itself first.

[61c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
A great state is the world's low-stream (to which all the river flows down), the world's field and the world's female.
The female always conquers the male by quietude, which is employed as a means to lower oneself.
Thus a great state lowers itself towards a small state before it takes over the small state.
A small state lowers itself towards a great state before it takes over the great state.
Therefore some lower themselves to take, while others lower themselves to gather.
A great state wishes nothing more than to have and keep many people, and a small state wishes nothing more than to get more things to do.
When the two both mean to obtain their wishes, the greater one should lower itself.

A large state is like the low land;
It is the focus point of the world
And the female of the world.
The female always conquers the male by serenity.
In serenity, she puts herself low.
Therefore, the large state puts itself beneath the small state,
And thereby absorbs the small state.
The small state puts itself under the large state,
And thereby joins with the large state.
Therefore, one either puts himself beneath to absorb others,
Or puts himself under to join with others.
What the large state wants is no more than to feed the people.
What the small state wants is no more than to join and serve the people.
Both have their needs satisfied.
Thus the large ought to stay low.

The great state is a low and easy,
woman for the world,
the one the whole world unites with.
Femininity always overcomes Masculinity, by Stillness,
in Stillness it takes the low place.
Yes:
A great state,
by putting itself lower than the smaller state,
will win out over the smaller state.
A small state,
by putting itself lower than the great state,
will win out over the great state.
Yes:

if the other gets lower, then it will win.
(A great state has no further desire,
than to embrace and protect other states.

when a large State is humble, it can win over the small States;

A big state puts itself in the low place:
It is the focal point of the world
And the female of the world.
The female constantly wins over the male by her tranquility.
Tranquility is regarded as the low place;
Therefore, a big state, by lowering itself beneath a small state,
Can have the small state.
The small state, by lowering itself beneath a big state,
Can be taken to the big state's heart.
Therefore, one puts itself low to take,
and the other puts itself low to be accepted.
The big state wants only to embrace more people;
The small state wants only to join and serve the big state;
Thus, both have satisfied their needs.
The big one is right to put itself in the low place.

Her characteristics are quietude and humility.
If the larger nation is humble, it will gain the trust of the smaller nations and absorb them.
By being compliant, the smaller nations will gain protection from the larger nation.
Both need to take a lowly position to gain control or to be protected.
The large nation aims to embrace and expand.
The smaller nation wishes to gain protection and to prosper.
Although they both aim to achieve their respective objectives, the larger nation should still take the lower profile.

If a small country can lower itself to greet a great country, it will win the friendship and support of the great country.
One wins by taking the lower position,

while the other wins by remaining low.
Thus, if each is to find its proper place,

A greater nation must be humble and like a reservoir
Where all the waters join together.
It is the passivity of the universe.
Passivity always prevails over activity through quiescence.
Quiescence is humble before activity.
When a greater nation is humble before a lesser nation,
It prevails over the lesser nation.
When a lesser nation is humble before a greater nation,
It prevails over the greater nation.
Thus, by being humble one prevails over others.
Or, by being originally in a lower position,
One prevails over others.
A greater nation simply likes to bring people together
And to nurture them.
A lesser nation simply likes to participate
And work together with others.
In this way, both have what they like,

Being the hub of the world,
It should play the part of the Female.
The Female always employs quiescence
To subdue the Male, and takes a low position.
Therefore, a big country, stooping low,
Will win over a small country;
And a small country, staying low,
Will win over a big country.
Therefore, some stoop low to conquer,
And some stay low to conquer.
What a big country wants is merely
To absorb and support more people;
What a small country wants is merely
To enter a big country to offer services.
For each of the two to get what it wants,
The big country, therefore, should be lowly.

Each gets what it wants.
It is right that the large state should play the lower part.

A great nation flows downwardly, it is the mother of the world and the integration of the world.
The mother is always tranquil and overcomes the male by her tranquility, so she benefits the world.
A great nation relies on a low position to take over a small nation.
A small nation, being in a low position, is taken over by a great nation.
So being lower allows taking over or being taken over.
Being a great nation only desires to unify the people.
Being a small nation only seeks people's business.
They both get what they want, but the greater is being lower.

[61c41t] Tang Zi-chang
To conduct a policy of a large country should be like a valley staying in the lower ground.
To conduct international affairs the best policy, is to be humble and non-aggressive (inactive).
Everyplace under the sun, all females outsmart the males by inaction.
Be inactive and be humble.
Therefore, the large country which is humble before the small country will lead the small country.
The small country which is humble before the large country will please the large country.
Thus sometimes a country unites the world by being humble and sometimes a country becomes humble in order to unite the world.
What a great country wants is no more than to lead more people.
What the small country wants is no more than to serve others.
To let both of them get what they want is simply to insure that the large country be humble.

Великая держава образует нижнее течение реки.
Это скрепа Поднебесной, ее самка.
Самке неизменно в состоянии покоя удается побеждать самца.
Покой ей позволяет быть внизу.
Когда великая держава ставит себя ниже небольшого государства, то она его берет;
когда небольшое государство принижается перед великою державой, то оно ее берет.
Так берут тем, что ставят себя ниже, либо находятся внизу.
Не пожелай великая держава, когда что-либо захватывает, большего, чем взращивать людей, а небольшое государство - большего, чем вступить в то, где служат людям, то оба обрели бы исполнение своих желаний.
Великому пристало быть внизу.

[61c92t] А. А. Маслов
Великое государство подобно низовью реки, где сходятся [воды] Поднебесной, и самке Поднебесной.
Самка всегда одолевает самца своим покоем.
Пребывая в покое, она занимает нижнюю позицию.
Поэтому великое государство, занимая нижнюю позицию, завоёвывает доверие малого государства.
Малое государство, занимая нижнюю позицию, оказывает доверие великому государству.
Поэтому то, что занимает нижнюю позицию, либо завоёвывает доверие, либо оказывает его.
Всё, к чему стремится большое государство, - лишь принимать людей под своё крыло.
Всё, к чему стремится малое государство, - это вникать в людские дела.
Если оба хотят достичь желаемого, большее должно занять нижнюю позицию.

[61c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Великое государство стремится в низину подобно потоку воды.
Оно - средоточие всей Поднебесной, оно самка Поднебесной.
Самка постоянно посредством покоя самца побеждает, покой ее вниз опускает.
Поэтому великое государство опускается под малые царства и так берет эти малые царства.
Если же малое царство опустится под великое государство, то оно возьмет великое государство.
Поэтому одни опускаются вниз, чтобы взять, а другие опускаются вниз, чтобы их взяли.
Великое государство не должно желать ничего сверх возможности равно пестовать свой народ.
Малое царство не должно желать ничего сверх возможности равным образом служить своим людям.
Поэтому и то и другое получают желаемое, когда великое соглашается опуститься под малое.

Самка всегда спокойствием побеждает самца, тихо ложась внизу.
Поэтому если великое царство ляжет под малое царство,

Поэтому великое царство располагает к себе маленькое тем, что ставит себя ниже последнего, а маленькое царство завоевывает симпатию великого царства тем, что стоит ниже последнего.
Поэтому располагают к себе либо тем, что ставят себя ниже, либо тем, что сами по себе ниже.
Пусть великое царство будет желать не больше того, чтобы все одинаково были накормлены, а малое царство пусть будет желать не больше того, чтобы служить людям.

Совокупление вселенной есть начало всего мира.
Самка всегда побеждает самца потому, что она тиха и спокойно стоит ниже самца.
Когда большая страна стоит ниже маленькой, то первая завладеет последней.
Когда маленькая страна стоит ниже большой, то первая завладеет последней.
Отсюда видно, что стоящая ниже других страна будет владычествовать над всеми другими.
Что такое большая страна и маленькая?
Большая страна - вместилище многих народов, а маленькая - вместилище немногих.
Если правитель страны будет стоять ниже других, то он осуществит свой добрый замысел.
Отсюда ясно, что желающий быть великим должен быть ниже всех.

[61c97t] В. В. Малявин
Большое царство - как низина, куда стекаются воды:
Средоточие мира, Сокровенная Родительница мира.
Самка всегда одолеет самца покоем, и, покоясь, пребывает внизу.
Посему большое царство возьмет малое, если будет ниже его,
Малое царство будет взято большим, ибо находится ниже его.
Вот так, себя ставя ниже, забирают других
И, стоя ниже, дают другим взять себя.
Большое царство хочет только объединить и пестовать других,
Малое царство хочет только примкнуть к другим и им послужить.
Чтобы те и другие смогли получить то, что хотят,
Большому царству подобает быть внизу.

Большое государство - это нисходящий поток, фокус нисхождения Небес, женский принцип нисхождения Небес.
Постоянство женского в том, что покой побеждает мужское.
Покой осуществляет нисхождение.
Причинность:
Большое государство способно нисходить к маленькому государству, и тогда берет маленькое государство.
Маленькое государство способно нисходить к большому государству, и тогда берет большое государство.
Причинность:
Или, нисходя, способен взять; или нисходишь и берешь.
Большое государство стремится только присоединить и накопить людей.
Маленькое государство стремится только подключиться к делам других людей.
Вот пара, в которой каждый обретает то, к чему стремится.
Большое - это необходимость осуществлять нисхождение.

[62c01t] Robert G. Henricks

The Way is that toward which all things flow.
It is the treasure of the good man,
And that which protects the bad.
Beautiful words can be bought and sold;
Honored deeds can be presented to others as gifts;
[Even with] things that people regard as no good - will they be rejected?
Therefore, when the Son of Heaven is being enthroned or the Three Ministers installed,
Though you might salute them with disks of jade preceded by teams of four horses,
That's not so good as sitting still and offering this.
The reason why the ancients valued this - what was it?
Did they not say, "Those who seek, with this will attain, and those who commit offenses, with this will escape"?!
Therefore, it's the most valued thing in the world.

[62c02t] John C. H. Wu

THE Tao is the hidden Reservoir of all things.
A treasure to the honest, it is a safeguard to the erring.
A good word will find its own market.
A good deed may be used as a gift to another.
That a man is straying from the right path
Is no reason that he should be cast away.
Hence, at the Enthronement of an Emperor,
Or at the Installation of the Three Ministers,
Let others offer their discs of jade, following it up with teams of horses;
It is better for you to offer the Tao without moving your feet!
Why did the ancients prize the Tao?
Is it not because by virtue of it he who seeks finds,
And the guilty are forgiven?
That is why it is such a treasure to the world.

[62c03t] D. C. Lau

The way is the refuge for the myriad creatures.
It is that by which the good man protects,
And that by which the bad is protected.
Beautiful words when offered will win high rank in return;
Beautiful deeds can raise a man above others.
Even if a man is not good, why should he be abandoned?
Hence when the emperor is set up and the three ducal ministers are appointed, he who makes a present of the way without stirring from his seat is preferable to one who offers presents of jade disks followed by a team of four horses.
Why was this way valued of old?

Was it not said that by means of it one got what one wanted and escaped the consequences when one transgressed?
Therefore it is valued by the empire.

[62c04t] R. L. Wing
The Tao is a refuge for All Things,
The treasure of the good,
The protector of the not good.
Honor can be bought with fine words;
Others can be joined with fine conduct.
So if some are not good,
Why waste them?
In this way the Emperor is established;
The three officials are installed.
And although the large jade disc
Is preceded by a team of horses, This is not as good as sitting,
Advancing in the Tao.
Why did those of old treasure the Tao?
Did they not say:
Seek it and it is attained;
Possess faults and they are released?
Thus it is the treasure of the world.

[62c05t] Ren Jiyu
Tao, as the abyss where all the things are hidden, is effective and precious to good men, and also must be preserved by bad men.
Eloquent words can purchase honour from others,
And admirable deeds can put one above others,
How can it be abandoned by men, even in their evil deeds?
Therefore, when the Son of Heaven mounts the throne and the principal ministers come to their places,
It is better to offer Tao as a present (without any ceremonies),
Though there is the round jadeware, followed by the four-horse chariot.
Why is Tao so much valued from the old days on?
Can it not be said that (with it) one can get what he seeks for and be forgiven his sin?
Thus it is valued by all under Heaven.

[62c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Tao is the source of the ten thousand things.
It is the treasure of the good man, and the refuge of the bad.
Sweet words can buy honor;
Good deeds can gain respect.
If a man is bad, do not abandon him.
Therefore on the day the emperor is crowned,
Or the three officers of state installed,
Do not send a gift of jade and a team of four horses,
But remain still and offer the Tao.

Why does everyone like the Tao so much at first?
Isn't it because you find what you seek and are forgiven when you sin?
Therefore this is the greatest treasure of the universe.

[62c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Dao is the deepest learning for all living things,
It is the good man's treasure
and the bad man's refuge.
Fine words attract respect;
Fine deeds make people look gallant.
(Because of such fine consequences that are expected)
even men who are bad
may not be stingy with fine words and good deeds!
On the occasion of the enthronement of the Emperor or at the installation of three ministers of the state, therefore,
It is far better to follow the Dao (which certainly will bring good fortune) than to have a jade disc displayed, leading a chariot of four horses.
In the ancient times those people who value the Dao do not do so for the consequences, or in order to achieve atonement for their sins.
For this reason they are truly honored by all under heaven.

[62c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The DAO is the protector of everything.
Kind people treat it like a treasure;
Unkind people also seek its protection.
The DAO makes people say nice words, and thus, they are respected.
The DAO makes people do good deeds, and thus, they are greater.
Even for the unkind people, have you ever seen the DAO neglect them?
Therefore, being an emperor or a minister, receiving jade gifts, or being equipped with fast carriers are not as precious as having the DAO.
Why did the ancient people value the DAO?
Did they not say that it is for gaining things and redeeming sins?
So the DAO is the most valuable thing in the world.

[62c09t] Walter Gorn Old, PRACTICAL TAO
Tao is the secret guardian of all things.
It enriches the good man and forefends the evildoer.
Its counsel is always in season; its benevolence is always in demand.
Even those who are not good it does not forsake.
Therefore, when the Emperor takes his throne and appoints his nobles, he who comes before him bearing the insignia of a prince and escorted by a mounted retinue is not to be compared with one who humbly presents this Tao.
For why did the ancients hold it in such esteem?
Was it not because it could be had without much seeking, and because by means of it man might escape from sin?

For this it was esteemed the greatest thing in the world!

[62c10t] James Legge
Tao has of all things the most honoured place.
No treasures give good men so rich a grace;
Bad men it guards, and doth their ill efface.
(Its) admirable words can purchase honour;
(its) admirable deeds can raise their performer above others.
Even men who are not good are not abandoned by it.
Therefore when the sovereign occupies his place as the Son of Heaven, and he has appointed his three ducal ministers, though (a prince) were to send in a round symbol-of-rank large enough to fill both the hands, and that as the precursor of the team of horses (in the court-yard), such an offering would not be equal to (a lesson of) this Tao, which one might present on his knees.
Why was it that the ancients prized this Tao so much?
Was it not because it could be got by seeking for it, and the guilty could escape (from the stain of their guilt) by it?
This is the reason why all under heaven consider it the most valuable thing.

[62c11t] David Hinton
Way is the mystery of these ten thousand things.
It's a good person's treasure and an evil person's refuge.
Its beautiful words are bought and sold and its noble deeds are gifts enriching people.
It never abandons even the evil among us.
When the Son of Heaven is enthroned and the three dukes installed, parades with jade discs and stately horses can't compare to sitting still in Way's company.
Isn't it said that the ancients exalted this Way because in it whatever we seek we find,
and whatever seeks us we escape?
No wonder it's exalted throughout all beneath heaven.

[62c12t] Chichung Huang
The Tao is where
The ten thousand things flow;
The good man's treasure,
That by which the evil man is preserved.
Good words can win one honor;

Preceding a team of four horses,
It is better to prostrate oneself
And present this.
Why did the ancients treasure this Tao so?
Is it not said:
"What one seeks will thereby be obtained;
What one is guilty of will thereby be pardoned?"
Therefore it was treasured by all under heaven.

[62c13t] Ellen M. Chen
To all beings Tao is the hidden secret (ao):
To the good persons it is their treasure (pao),
To the not good it is that by which they are preserved (pao).
Beautiful speech can go to the market.
Respectable conduct can be bestowed on others.
Those who are not good,
Why discard them?
Therefore on crowning the Son of Heaven,
On appointing the Three Ducal Ministers (kung),
Although there are tributes of jade,
Preceding teams of four horses,
It is better to kneel (tso) and present this Tao.
Why did the ancients honor this Tao?
One does not say that they did it for the purpose of gain,
Rather they wish to be free from offenses (tsui).
Therefore they were the honored under heaven.

[62c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Tao provides the profound maxim for myriad things and creatures;
It provides security for all the good people;
Even people of no good [morality] must seek security through it.
Beautiful and appealing talks could buy appreciation;
Actions of celebrities could carry their weight around;
If people are not good [at discernment that they are deceived in the manner described above], would this be the reason [for me] to abandon them?
Accordingly [by reconciling the above two, I conclude as follows]:
Neither the honor of becoming an emperor, or being appointed as one of the Three Grand Dukes,
Nor [the prominence of] marching down the public street, surrounded by servants carrying jade cups and riding in carriages drawn by four horses,
Can match the fulfillment of the pursuit and advancement of this (Tao).
Why has [Tao] had being been valued ever since very ancient times?
Didn't someone say that [the apprehension of Tao] enabled us to achieve what we had prayed for?
And [practicing Tao] would purge us of our sins?
For all of the above reasons, [Tao] is extremely valuable for this world.

The Way is the shelter of all things, the treasure of the good, and the refuge of the bad.
A beautiful word may bring admiration.
A precious deed may bring a high rank.
That a man is not good is not a reason that he should be cast away.
Hence, at the enthronement of an emperor, or at the appointment of the three ministers, the offering of jade and four-horsed carriages is not as good as the kneeling presentation of the Way.
Why did the ancients prize the Way?
Is it not because they said that "by virtue of it he who seeks finds, and the guilty are forgiven"?
That is why it is such a treasure to the world.

[62c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Tao is the law of the universe.
For able people Tao is a treasure.
For less able people, Tao is a guardian.
Good words can win reverence.
Good behavior can win admiration.
For people who are inept, should they be abandoned?
Therefore for the emperor who is enthroned and the three senior administrators who are appointed, there may be priceless jades and fast carriages, none is as good as adopting Tao.
Why Tao is so treasured by generations?
Is it not because it helps us reach our goals and avoid mistakes?
Therefore it is treasured by the whole world.

[62c17t] Arthur Waley
Tao in the Universe is like the south-west corner in the house.
It is the treasure of the good man,
The support of the bad.
There is a traffic in speakers of fine words;
Persons of grave demeanour are accepted as gifts;
Even the bad let slip no opportunity to acquire them.
Therefore on the day of an Emperor's enthronement
Or at the installation of the three officers of State
Rather than send a team of four horses, preceded by a disc of jade,
Better were it, as can be done without moving from one's seat, to send this Tao.
For what did the ancients say of this Tao, how did they prize it?
Did they not say of those that have it 'Pursuing, they shall catch; pursued, they shall escape?'
They thought it, indeed, most precious of all things under heaven.

[62c18t] Richard John Lynn
The Dao is the shelter of the myriad things.
It is the treasure of the good man
And the protector of the man who is not good.

Thus the son of Heaven is established, and the three dukes are installed.

this falls short of promoting this Dao by just letting them sit quietly.

THE GOOD MAN'S TREASURE
Tao is the mysterious secret of the universe,
The good man's treasure,
And the bad man's refuge.
Beautiful sayings can be sold at the market,
Noble conduct can be presented as a gift.
Though there be bad people,
Why reject them?
Therefore on the crowning of an emperor,
On the appointment of the Three Ministers,
Rather than send tributes of jade and teams of four horses,
Send in the tribute of Tao.
Wherein did the ancients prize this Tao?
Did they not say, "to search for the guilty ones and pardon them"?
Therefore is (Tao) the treasure of the world.

[62c20t] Victor H. Mair
The Way is the cistern of the myriad creatures;
It is the treasure of the good man,
And that which is treasured by the bad man.
Beautiful words can be traded,
Noble deeds can be used as gifts for others.
Why should we reject even what is bad about men?
Therefore,
When the son of heaven is enthroned or the three ministers are installed,
Although they may have large jade disks
And be preceded by teams of four horses,
It would be better for them to sit down and make progress in this.
What was the reason for the ancients to value this so highly?
Did they not say:
"Seek and thou shalt receive;
Sin and thou shalt be forgiven"?
Therefore,
It is valued by all under heaven.

Good words are appreciated.
Good deeds are accepted as gifts.
Even the wrongdoers are not abandoned.
Hence,
on the day an Emperor is installed and appoints the three ducal ministers, remain where you are and make an offering of the Tao.
It will be preferable to a gift of jade discs followed by a team of four horses.
Why did the ancients value the Tao?
Was it not because through it you can find what you seek,
and because of it
you can escape what is hounding you?
Therefore, it is the most valuable thing under heaven.

Direction,

Why abandon people who are not good?
Thus, when a King is enthroned, three senior positions are filled.
Though there are precious jades and speedy stallions, the best present is Direction.
Why, through the ages, is Direction so valued?
Is it not because whoever seeks it gets it, and whoever is guilty, with it, receives amnesty?
That is why it is so valued by the world.

The Tao is the Innermost of all life,
The treasure of the virtuous who is centered therein,
And the refuge of the non-virtuous who has gone astray.
Beautiful words arising from the Tao will find an appreciative audience,
Noble deeds arising from the Tao will make great contributions to people,
And even if a person may have gone astray,
the Tao will not abandon him.
Therefore, on the day a new emperor is crowned or new ministers installed,
Rather than rushing to offer them discs of jade or teams of horses,
Simply be still and show them the Tao.
Why did the ancients esteem the Tao so highly?
Did they not say that with the Tao,
Those who seek find what they seek and those who go astray are forgiven?

A great country is like the drainage basin of the entire world,
Into which all the rivers flow,
It is the field of the entire world,
It is the femininity of the entire world.
Femininity always overcomes masculinity with its calmness of spirit,
Which it uses as a means to lower itself.
Thus the great country lowers itself before the small country,
Before it conquers the small country.
A small country lowers itself before a great country,
Before it conquers the great country.
Therefore some lower themselves to take,
And others lower themselves to gather.
The only wish of a great country is to hold on to and keep its endless subjects,
And the only wish of a small country is to engage in many occupations and tasks.
When they both wish to realize their aspirations,
Both of them together,
The greater of them must lower itself.

People act nicely to gain your respect - but even if a person is bad,
neither the sage nor the Tao will desert him.
They accept him.
And when the Emperor is crowned and the three ministers appointed,

Why was it that the ancients prized this Tao so much?
Was it not because it could be found by seeking, and the guilty could be pardoned by it?

People who are not good,
why are they rejected?
Yes:
When they are enthroning the Son of Heaven or installing the Three Ministers - although they are presenting in tribute jade medallions out in front of four-horse teams, this cannot compare to sitting and setting forth this Tao.
What was the reason that the ancients treasured this Tao?
Is it not said:
"By it the seeker obtains;
by it the guilty escapes."
Yes:
It is the Treasure of the World.

[62c33t] Cheng Lin
Truth is the abode of the whole of creation.
It is treasured by good men, and it should also be treasured by bad men.
Good words enable one to obtain honour, and good conduct enables one to receive respect.
When a man is bad, why should we spurn him?
Wherefore, it is better to advance toward Truth than to be an Emperor, or a Grand Minister, or a royal messenger wearing precious jades and riding in fine carriages.
Why did the ancients esteem Truth?
Was it not for the reason that by following Truth men could obtain what was desirable and avoid what was undesirable?
Because of Truth they could rule the whole Empire.

[62c34t] Yi Wu
The Way is the refuge of all beings.
It is the good man's treasure
And the safeguard of the man who is not good.
Fine words can buy,
Respectable conduct can win people over.
If a man is not good,
How could he abandon the Way?
Therefore, if one is crowned king,
Installed by three dukes,
Although with hands full of jade,
Preceded by a four-horse team,
It is not as good as sitting here, advancing the Way.
Why, since ancient times, has the Way been thus valued?
Is it not because the one can get what he seeks
And the other can get rid of his sins?
Therefore, the Way is valued by the world.

[62c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Dao is the safe haven for all beings.
The good people value it.
The bad people receive protection from it.
Words consistent with Dao will place you in a coveted position.
Deeds consistent with Dao will make you stand out from the crowd.
Even if people are bad, Dao will not reject them.
There are important events as such coronation and swearing in of ministers.
In these pompous ceremonies, officials carrying precious jade lead the procession followed by four thoroughbreds.
This largess becomes insignificant when compared to simply presenting Dao as a gift.
Why has Dao always been valued since antiquity?
It is as the saying goes:
"If you seek it, you will get it; if you make an error, you will be forgiven."
Hence, Dao is valued by all.

[62c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The subtle essence of the universe supports all things.
It is a treasure to virtuous people,
yet it is a refuge for unvirtuous people too.
Good words will find their market.
Good deeds may be presented as a gift to another.
Though a person has strayed from the right path,
the all-encompassing subtle essence of the universe will never abandon him.
Hence, at the enthronement of an emperor,
or the appointment of the three highest ministers of the empire, rather than present them with discs of jade and teams of fine horses, show them the priceless subtle Way of the universe.
Why did the ancients esteem the subtle Way of the universe?
Didn't they say that a seeker will find nothing,
but that he can be free from all transgression?
That is why it is such a treasure to the world.

[62c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Tao is concealed in the depths of all things.
The worthy value it.
The unworthy are protected by it.
Good words may be traded for honor.
Good works may impress men.
Even if a man is unworthy, Tao will never exclude him.
Although in a great nation an emperor is established,
Ministers are appointed, and
Jade and horses are all decorated,
None of these is a better offer to the nation than Tao.
Tao has been highly esteemed since the remote past.
Why?
Because not searching for it, one obtains it.
Even if one has faults, one is free from them.
Thus, the Tao is the most highly esteemed thing in the universe.

[62c38t] Henry Wei
Practicing Tao

Tao is a mystery within all things.
It is a treasure to the good men;
To the bad men it gives protection.
Fine words may be shown at the market place;
Noble deeds may serve as gifts to people.
Some people may not be good,
But why should any of them be discarded?
Therefore, when an emperor is enthroned,
Or when the three chief ministers are installed,

Though they may have fine pieces of jade
Respectfully presented before the team of horses,
There is nevertheless nothing better for them
Than to sit (in meditation) and advance in Tao.
For what reason did the ancients prize this Tao?
Did they not say:
"With Tao one finds what one seeks,
And can get pardoned for one's offenses"?
Hence Tao is highly prized by the world.

[62c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Tao
Is the sanctuary of the ten thousand things,
The good man's treasure,
The bad man's refuge.
Beautiful words can buy honor,
Beautiful deeds can benefit people.
Though a man may be bad,
How can he be abandoned?
Therefore, on occasion of crowning the Son of Heaven
Or installing the three ministers of state,
Rather than present a large disc of jade, accompanied by a team of four horses,
Better remain in your seat and offer a tribute of this Tao.
Why did the ancients honor this Tao?
Did they not say:
"You get thereby what you seek;
You escape thereby when you have sinned."
Therefore they regarded it as the most precious of all things under Heaven.

[62c40t] Tao Huang
Tao is the conductor of all things.
The treasure of the good.
The protector of the bad.
Beautiful words can advertise well.
Noble conduct brings praise to people.
As for those who conduct the bad, why reject them for it?
Therefore, after the crowning of the emperor comes the appointing of three administrations.
Being presented with jade in front of the team of four horses is not better than sitting and entering thus.
The reason why this is valued of old is,
It allows having without asking, and it allows forgiveness of wrong.
Thus, it is most valuable to the world.

[62c41t] Tang Zi-chang
Dao is the wonder of All Things.
Perfection is what people like.
Imperfection is what people dislike.

Beautiful words may be used for markets.
Beautiful deeds may be used for pride.
If a person is imperfect why should he be ignored?
Hence, the "Son of Heaven" was installed and the three dukes (Ministers) were appointed,
Even though one has abundant jade and wealth to establish war horses and chariots, it is not as good as to consolidate and advance Dao.
For what reasons did the ancients bless this Dao?
Is it not said that:
"Whatever is prayed for is obtained.
Whoever has sin is forgiven."?
Thus Dao becomes the blessing of the world.

[62c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
Tao is the storehouse of all things.
It is the good man's treasure and the bad man's refuge.
Fine words can buy honor,
And fine deeds can gain respect from others.
Even if a man is bad, when has (Tao) rejected him?
Therefore on the occasion of crowning an emperor or installing the three ministers,
Rather than present large pieces of jade preceded by teams of four horses,
It is better to kneel and offer this Tao.
Why did the ancients highly value this Tao?
Did they not say, "Those who seek shall have it and those who sin shall be freed"?
For this reason it is valued by the world.

Дао - это святыня десяти тысяч вещей, сокровище для людей добрых и то, что берегут недобрые.
Прекрасные слова могут найти непревзойденный спрос, почтенному поступку могут все последовать.
Зачем отбрасывать людскую скверну?
Ведь именно для этого поставлены Сын Неба и три его советника.
Хотя они и выезжают на четверке лошадей с большой регалией из яшмы впереди, им лучше было бы сидя продвигаться в Дао.
Почему же в древности ценили это Дао?
Не потому ли, что, благодаря ему, успешно обретали то, к чему стремились, и избегали наказания, когда были виноваты?
Поэтому нет ничего его ценнее в Поднебесной.

Дао - величайшее хранилище мириад существ.
Это то, что является сокровищем добрых людей и защитой для тех, в ком нет добра.
Прекрасные слова высоко ценятся при продаже.
Прекрасные поступки могут вызвать людское уважение.
Даже если в человеке нет добра, зачем же отвергать его?
Поэтому взошедший на трон правитель и три властвующих князя, хотя и имеют драгоценные кольца и сопровождаются четвёркой лошадей, не сравнятся с теми, кто, не сходя с места, снискал дары

Дао.
Почему древние ценили Дао?
Разве не говорилось: "Устремись, дабы достичь его, и даже если ты имел пороки - избегнешь зла".
За это оно и ценится в Поднебесной.

[62c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Дао-Путь - глубинная тайна природы всего сущего.
Он есть сокровище добрых; он есть то, что хранят недобрые.
Хорошие речи могут прославить человека в городах и весях, достойное поведение может увеличить уважение людей к нему.
Но даже недоброго человека можно ль отбросить?
Поэтому, когда Сын Неба вступает на престол и трем великим князьям-советникам даруется их сан, то впереди процессии несут диск яшмы, за коим следует четверка лошадей.
Но эта церемония все же хуже поведения человека, который лишь сидит, чтобы к Пути Великому приблизиться.
За что же древние ценили так сей Дао-Путь?
Разве не говорили они: "С ним вы будете искать - и обрящете, будете виновны - и избежите кары".
Вот почему его ценит Поднебесная.

[62c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Дао - таинственная основа мириад вещей, драгоценность добрых людей, защита от недобрых людей.
Красивыми речами, конечно, можно заворожить толпу на базарной площади.
Благопристойным поведением, конечно, можно возвыситься над другими.
Однако как же избавиться от того недоброго, что глубоко таится в людях?
Для этого утверждают на престоле Сына Неба и назначают трех гунов.
Они хотя и держат в руках символы власти и ездят в экипажах, запряженных четверками лошадей, но все же не лучше ли [им] воссесть и ехать на самом Дао!
Почему в древности ценили это Дао?
Безгласные через него получали необходимое,
а совершившие злодеяние через него искореняли вредное.
Вот почему [оно] было ценностью для Поднебесной.

[62c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Дао - глубокая [основа] всех вещей.
Оно сокровище добрых и защита недобрых людей.
Красивые слова можно произносить публично, доброе поведение можно распространять на людей.
Но зачем же покидать недобрых людей?
В таком случае для чего же выдвигают государя и назначают ему трех советников?
Государь и советники хотя и имеют драгоценные камни и могут ездить на колесницах, но лучше будет им спокойно следовать дао.
Почему в древности ценили дао?
В то время люди не стремились к приобретению богатств и преступления прощались.
Поэтому [дао] в Поднебесной ценилось дорого.

Тао есть глубина бытия.
Оно и есть сокровище добрых людей.
Оно также и есть то, что держат злые люди.
Изящные слова могут быть куплены ценою.
Добрые поступки могут быть совершаемы всеми.
Хотя люди злы, но нельзя совсем бросить их.
Выбирают царя и трех великих сановников.
Имея в руках драгоценный камень, они разъезжают в колесницах, но это бесконечно хуже, нежели проповедовать Тао, сидя на одном месте.
В чем заключается причина того, что в древности Тао глубоко уважалось?
Не в том ли заключается, что благодаря Тао прощались преступники?
Оттого, быть может, в древности Тао почиталось во всем мире.

[62c97t] В. В. Малявин
Путь - это хранилище всех вещей,
Сокровищница для добрых людей и убежище для недобрых.
Красивыми речами можно торговать,
Славными поступками можно привлечь почитателей.
Пусть человек недобр - бывало ли так, чтоб его отвергали?
Посему, когда восходит Сын Неба или жалуют
Трех Князей,
Не подносите им яшмовые жезлы и четверки коней,
А лучше, сидя покойно, вручите им этот Путь.
Древние ценили этот Путь - что же он такое?
Разве не сказано: "Кто ищет с ним, тот обрящет,
Кто провинился, тот, обладая им, уцелеет"?
Вот почему его ценили в мире.

[62c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Путь - красный угол мириад сущностей.
Сокровище для совершенствующихся людей.
Охраняющая сила для не-совершенствующихся людей.
Красивые слова подходят для базаров.
Благородные поступки нужны для репутации.
Есть в человеке несовершенное.
Как можно избавиться от этого?
Причинность:
Происходит интронизация сына Неба, инаугурация трех князей-гунов.
Хотя несут регалии двумя руками и впереди четверка лошадей, не лучше ли сидеть, чтобы продвигаться по этому Пути.
В древности то, из-за чего ценили этот Путь, разве не выражали таким образом:
Через это ищущий обрящет, а имеющий грехи будет прощен.
Причинность:
Осуществляют благородное в Поднебесной.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Three

999/2593

[63c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Act without acting;
Serve without concern for affairs;
Find flavor in what has no flavor.
Regard the small as large and the few as many,
And repay resentment with kindness.
Plan for the difficult while {it is easy};
{Act on the large} while it's minute.
The most difficult things in the world begin as things that are easy;
The largest things in the world arise from the minute.
Therefore the Sage, to the end does not strive to do the great,
And as a result, he is able {to accomplish the great};
{Those who} too lightly agree {will necessarily be trusted by few};
And those who regard many things as easy will necessarily [end up] with many difficulties.
Therefore, even the Sage regards things as difficult,
And as a result, in the end he has no difficulty.

[63c02t] John C. H. Wu
DO the Non-Ado.
Strive for the effortless.
Savour the savourless.
Exalt the low.
Multiply the few.
Requite injury with kindness.
Nip troubles in the bud.
Sow the great in the small.
Difficult things of the world
Can only be tackled when they are easy.
Big things of the world
Can only be achieved by attending to their small beginnings.
Thus, the Sage never has to grapple with big things,
Yet he alone is capable of achieving them!
He who promises lightly must be lacking in faith.
He who thinks everything easy will end by finding everything difficult.
Therefore, the Sage, who regards everything as difficult,
Meets with no difficulties in the end.

[63c03t] D. C. Lau
Do that which consists in taking no action;
Pursue that which is not meddlesome;
Savour that which has no flavour.
Make the small big and the few many;

Do good to him who has done you an injury.
Lay plans for the accomplishment of the difficult before it becomes difficult;
Make something big by starting with it when small.
Difficult things in the world must needs have their beginnings in the easy;
Big things must needs have their beginnings in the small.
Therefore it is because the sage never attempts to be great that he succeeds in becoming great.
One who makes promises rashly rarely keeps good faith;
One who is in the habit of considering things easy meets with frequent difficulties.
Therefore even the sage treats some things as difficult.
That is why in the end no difficulties can get the better of him.

[63c04t] R. L. Wing
Act without action; work without effort.
Taste without savoring.
Magnify the small; increase the few.
Repay ill-will with kindness.
Plan the difficult when it is easy;
Handle the big where it is small.
The world's hardest work begins when it is easy;
The world's largest effort begins where it is small.
Evolved Individuals, finally, take no great action,
And in that way the great is achieved.
Those who commit easily, inspire little trust.
How easy to inspire hardness!
Therefore Evolved Individuals view all as difficult.
Finally they have no difficulty!

[63c05t] Ren Jiyu
Consider nonaction as an action, having no trouble as an affair and flavourless as a flavour.
No matter how hostile others are towards me, I always repay them with "De."
Prepare for a difficult problem while it is easy,
Enter on a great task while it is small.
All the difficult things under Heaven necessarily arise from the state in which they were easy;
All the great tasks under Heaven arise from the state in which they were small.
For this reason, the sage never does great things,
And he can accomplish great things just on that account.
Light promising makes one lose one's credit,
And thinking things easy leads to difficulties.
So, the sage, though he is very wise, pays much attention to the difficulties,
Therefore he is free from difficulties in the end.

[63c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Practice non-action.
Work without doing.
Taste the tasteless.
Magnify the small, increase the few.

Reward bitterness with care.
See simplicity in the complicated.
Achieve greatness in little things.
In the universe the difficult things are done as if they are easy.
In the universe great acts are made up of small deeds.
The sage does not attempt anything very big,
And thus achieves greatness.
Easy promises make for little trust.
Taking things lightly results in great difficulty.
Because the sage always confronts difficulties,
He never experiences them.

[63c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Act in the state of non-action;
Work but do not work for gain;
Taste but do not taste for the taste.
Never mind if it is big, small, many, or few,
Just repay injury with benevolence.
To do the difficult we start with the easy.
To do the great thing we start with the small.
All the difficult tasks under heaven must begin with the easy parts.
All the great achievements under heaven must begin with the small steps.
The Sage never sets out to do great things.
That way he accomplishes great results.
Those who make easy promises will not be trusted.
Those who say everything is easy will often have difficulty accomplishing their tasks,
The Sage, on the other hand, takes on the easy tasks as he takes on the difficult.
So in the end no difficulty will hold him up.

[63c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Treat lack of achievement as the achievement, treat lack of accomplishment as the accomplishment,
treat lack of flavor as the flavor.
Make the small big, make the less more, return hatred with DE.
Solve problems while they are simple; accomplish big things while they are small.
The most difficult tasks in the world can only be finished if you attack them while they are simple;
The most important things in the world can only be accomplished if you start them while they are small.
Therefore, the great men never started with big things, so they accomplished big things.
Promises made easily have no credibility; if you view everything as easy, you will meet many difficulties.
So, the great men tried to find as many difficulties as possible, so they never had difficulties.

[63c09t] Walter Gorn Old, FORETHOUGHT
Acting without design, occupying oneself without making a business of it, finding the great in what is small, and the many in the few, repaying injury with kindness, effecting difficult things while they are easy, and managing great things in their beginnings, is the method of Tao.

All difficult things have their origin in that which is easy, and great things in that which is small.
Therefore the wise man can accomplish great things without even attempting them.
He who lightly assents will seldom keep his word.
He who accounts all things easy will have many difficulties.
Therefore the Sage takes great account of small things, and so never has any difficulty.

[63c10t] James Legge
(It is the way of the Tao) to act without (thinking of) acting;
to conduct affairs without (feeling the) trouble of them;
to taste without discerning any flavour;
to consider what is small as great, and a few as many;
and to recompense injury with kindness.
(The master of it) anticipates things that are difficult while they are easy, and does things that would become great while they are small.
All difficult things in the world are sure to arise from a previous state in which they were easy, and all great things from one in which they were small.
Therefore the sage, while he never does what is great, is able on that account to accomplish the greatest things.
He who lightly promises is sure to keep but little faith;
he who is continually thinking things easy is sure to find them difficult.
Therefore the sage sees difficulty even in what seems easy, and so never has any difficulties.

[63c11t] David Hinton
If you're nothing doing what you do,
you act without acting and savor without savoring,
you render the small vast and the few many,
use Integrity to repay hatred,
see the complexity in simplicity,
find the vast in the minute.
The complex affairs of all beneath heaven are there in simplicity, and the vast affairs of all beneath heaven are there in the minute.
That's why a sage never bothers with vastness and so becomes utterly vast.
Easy promises breed little trust, and too much simplicity breeds too much complexity.
That's why a sage inhabits the complexity of things and so avoids all complexity.

[63c12t] Chichung Huang
Act without action;
Disturb without disturbance;
Taste the tasteless.

All difficult issues under heaven
Begin from easy ones;
All great enterprises under heaven

Begin from small ones.
Hence, the sage man never presumed vastness,
So, he could achieve vastness.
For he who makes promises lightly
Must lack in trustworthiness;
He who takes many things easy
Must encounter many difficulties.
Hence, even the sage man
Considered the task difficult,
Therefore, eventually he had no difficulty.

[63c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Do (wei) when there is nothing to do (wu-wei),
Manage affairs (shih) when there are none to manage,
Know (chih) by not knowing.
Regard the great as small, the much as little.
Repay injury (yüan) with te.
Plan the difficult while it is easy.
Accomplish (wei) the great when it is small.
Difficult affairs of the world,
Must be done while they are easy.
Great affairs of the world,
Must be done while they are small.
The sage never does anything great,
Therefore he can accomplish the great.
He who makes promises lightly seldom keeps his words.
He who takes much to be easy finds much to be difficult.
Therefore even the sage takes things to be difficult,
So that in the end they are not difficult.

[63c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A person who quests for Tao must carry out the principle of non-interference;
He must restrain himself from implementing his selfish desires [particularly at the cost of others];
He must examine facts thoroughly in spite of boredom;
He must requite all accusations and animosities with virtuous acts, no matter whether it is serious, minor, many, or few.
A difficult problem should be tackled from its easiest points;
To accomplish a great deed one should start from working on its minute details;
Difficult works in this world must be built up from easy points;
Grand tasks in this world should be started from within small scales.
Accordingly, a Sage did not [consciously] aim at accomplishing a grand task, yet he would eventually complete great deeds [with accrual of realistic achievements through working diligently step-by-step].
A person who makes promises easily would keep only a few of them;
A person who seeks easy way out will confront more difficulties later;
Therefore, a Sage would think hard and keep in mind that each task could be more intricate than it appears to be;

Eventually no hardship can hampered him.

[63c15t] Tien Cong Tran
Do non-doing.
Carry out no-work.
Taste the tasteless.
Make the small big.
Make the little much.
Render Virtue to enmity.
Plan the difficult when it is still easy.
Accomplish the great when it is still small.
Difficult things in the world can be achieved in what is easy.
Big things in the world can be achieved in what is minute.
Thus, the sage never does big things, yet by that he is capable of achieving them!
He who promises lightly must rarely fulfill it.
He who thinks a thing easy will find it difficult.
Therefore, the sage, who regards everything as difficult, meets with no difficulties in the end.

[63c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Practice no forcing; undertake natural tasks; eat plain food.
No matter big or small, more or less, reply hostility with kindness.
When handling difficulties, one should start with the easiest first.
When eating the elephant, take one bite at a time.
In the world, difficult tasks are composed of easy ones;
Big tasks are formed by small ones.
This is why the sage never attempt big, but can achieve big.
Easily promising results in less credibility.
Broadly underestimating leads to a lot of difficulties.
This is why sages treat everything as if it was difficult.
So they never have difficulties.

[63c17t] Arthur Waley
It acts without action, does without doing, finds flavour in what is flavourless,
Can make the small great and the few many,
'Requites injuries with good deeds,
Deals with the hard while it is still easy,
With the great while it is still small.'
In the governance of empire everything difficult must be dealt with while it is still easy,
Everything great must be dealt with while it is still small.
Therefore the Sage never has to deal with the great; and so achieves greatness.
But again
'Light assent inspires little confidence
And "many easies" means many a hard.'
Therefore the Sage knows too how to make the easy difficult, and by doing so avoid all difficulties!

Act by not acting;
do by not doing;
find flavor in that which has no flavor.
Deal with the small as if it were the great, and deal with the few as if it were the many, but respond to resentment in terms of virtue.
Plan for the difficult while it is still easy;
work on the great while it is still small.
Every difficult matter under Heaven surely originates in something easy, and every great matter under Heaven surely originates in something small.
Therefore it is because the sage never tries to be great that he fulfills his greatness.
Assent lightly given surely inspires little trust.
Regarding many things as easy is sure to result in many difficulties.
Therefore the sage still regards them as difficulties.
Thus he never has difficulties.

[63c19t] Lin Yutang
DIFFICULT AND EASY
Accomplish do-nothing.
Attend to no-affairs.
Taste the flavorless.
Whether it is big or small, many or few,
Requite hatred with virtue.
Deal with the difficult while yet it is easy;
Deal with the big while yet it is small.
The difficult (problems) of the world
Must be dealt with while they are yet easy;
The great (problems) of the world
Must be dealt with while they are yet small.
Therefore the Sage by never dealing with great (problems)
Accomplishes greatness.
He who lightly makes a promise
Will find it often hard to keep his faith.
He who makes light of many things
Will encounter many difficulties.
Hence even the Sage regards things as difficult,
And for that reason never meets with difficulties.

[63c20t] Victor H. Mair
Act through nonaction,
Handle affairs through noninterference,
Taste what has no taste,
Regard the small as great, the few as many,
Repay resentment with integrity.
Undertake difficult tasks by approaching what is easy in them;
Do great deeds by focusing on their minute aspects.

All difficulties under heaven arise from what is easy,
All great things under heaven arise from what is minute.
For this reason,
The sage never strives to do what is great.
Therefore,
He can achieve greatness.
One who lightly assents will seldom be believed;
One who thinks everything is easy will encounter much difficulty.
For this reason,
Even the sage considers things difficult.
Therefore,
In the end he is without difficulty.

Act without striving.
Work without interfering.
Find the flavor in what is flavorless.
Enlarge the small, increase the few.
Heal injury with goodness.
Handle the difficult while it is still easy.
Cultivate the great while it is still small.
All difficult things begin as easy things.
All great things begin as small things.
Therefore,
the True Person never attempts anything great, and accomplishes great things.
Lightly made promises inspire little faith.
Trying to make things easy results in great difficulties.
Therefore,
the True Person regards everything as difficult, and is never overcome by difficulties.

[63c22t] David H. Li
Govern with laissez-faire.
Act without fanfare.
Dine with the commonest fare.
Big begins as small; many accrue from few.
In tackling difficult tasks, first tackle those easy;
In tackling big tasks, first tackle those flimsy.
The difficult tasks of the world begin as easy;
The big tasks of the world begin as flimsy.
Thus, the sage, who never considers self big, completes many big tasks.
Thus,
promise easily made leads to promise not fulfilled;
difficulty underestimated leads to difficulty multiplied.
Thus, the sage, in treating every task as difficult, encounters no difficulties.

Act from the still fulcrum of non-action,
Engage from the still fulcrum of non-engagement,
Experience from the still fulcrum of non-experience.
Regard the insignificant as significant,
Regard the minor as major,
Requite the unkind with kindness.
Meet the difficult while it is still easy,
Solve the major while it is still minor.
Difficult problems of the world always arise from easy ones,
Major issues of the world always arise from minor ones.
Therefore, the sage never deals with major issues,
Yet his action always leads to major accomplishment.
Those who commit lightly are seldom to be trusted.
Those who assume things to be easy are always met with difficulties.
Therefore, the sage assumes everything to be difficult,
And ends up having no difficulty at all.

[63c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The Tao is the source of everything,
The treasure of the good man,
The sustainer of the bad man.
Therefore,
Even the ceremonial splendor of the coronation of the emperor and his three ministers,
And the value of the jewels and the knights' horses,
Are nothing compared to the splendor of this Tao.
Why did the ancients value the Tao?
Is it because it is possible to seek it and find it and liberate sinners with it?
For this reason, the Tao is the most valuable thing in the world.
Good words will nurture our honor,
Good deeds will give a person a good name.

The sage does nothing, and so he never fails -
He holds on to nothing, and so he never loses ...
Whereas the rest of us always seem to mess up our lives just at the moment when we seem to be succeeding!
That's why the sage wants nothing for himself.
He doesn't want precious things or possessions.
What is he?
A Student Of The Unknowable, so he doesn't make mistakes like the rest of us but always tries to help us to be true to who we are without ever standing in our way.
And so he says:
Do things wu-wei, by doing nothing;
Achieve without trying to achieve anything;
Savour the taste of what you cannot taste;
Make a small thing great, and the few into many;

Take on the largest things when they're still small,
Start the hardest things while they're still easy.
It's always the person who thinks things are easy that finds them the hardest in the end.
The way he sees it: everything's potentially tricky, so he never ends up out of his depth.

[63c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Act by means of inaction;
Deal with matters by means of not being meddlesome;
Taste by means of tastelessness.
The big stems from the small;
The many is based on the few.
To overcome the difficult should begin with the easy;
To accomplish what is big should begin with the small.
The difficult things in the world must originate in the easy;
The big things in the world must take root in the small.
That is why the sage can accomplish what is great by never attempting to be great.
Light promise-giving, light promise-breaking;
The easier one considers things, the more difficult things become.
That is why the sage never meets with difficulty
Because he always considers things difficult.

[63c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Do that which takes no action.
Deal with that which engenders no effort.

The difficult things under Heaven come from the easy things.
Great matter is made up of minor matter.

That one can achieve the most difficult in the world.
It is only by taking trivial steps

That one can achieve the highest in the world.
Therefore, the wise person who never looks important
Is able to be the most important.
Those who make hasty promises can rarely keep them.
Those who think nothing difficult will have many difficulties.
That is why the wise person worries about difficulties
And can therefore solve them successfully.

Difficult And Easy
Lao Tze says,
He who practices acting without intent to control fate will find that there is no business which is troubling him to manage.
He who can taste a tasteless thing will learn to regard what is small as great, and a few as many;
and to recompense injury with kindness.
He will deal with things that are difficult while they are easy, and handle things that would become great while they are still small.
All difficult things in the world arise from an original state of having been easy, and all great things arise from an original state of having been small.
Therefore the sage never attempts to achieve a great feat.
He who makes promises lightly rarely keeps good faith.
He who likes to think things will be easy will find them difficult.
Therefore the sage sees difficulty even in what seems easy, so they are always free of difficulties.

[63c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Act non-action; undertake no undertaking; taste the tasteless.
The Sage desires the desireless, and prizes no articles that are difficult to get.
He learns no learning, but reviews what others have passed through.
Thus he lets all things develop in their natural way, and does not venture to act.
Regard the small as great; regard the few as many.
Manage the difficult while they are easy;
Manage the great while they are small.
All difficult things in the world start from the easy;
All great things in the world start from the small.
The tree that fills a man's arms arises from a tender shoot;
The nine-storeyed tower is raised from a heap of earth;
A thousand miles' journey begins from the spot under one's feet.
Therefore the Sage never attempts great things, and thus he can achieve what is great.
He who makes easy promises will seldom keep his word;
He who regards many things as easy will find many difficulties.
Therefore the Sage regards things as difficult, and consequently never has difficulties.

Whether it is great or small, whether it is much or little,
Always repaying malice with virtue.
Planning difficulties from the easier.
Employing the great from the small.
The world's difficult things surely begin with the easy.
The world's great things surely begin with the small.
Therefore, the Sage never does anything to be great
And so accomplishes greatness.
To take one's promises lightly results in little confidence.
To take things too easily results in much difficulty.
Therefore, even the Sage takes things seriously.
And never has any difficulty.

"Reward what is injurious, with kind Te."
Plan difficult things focusing on the easy parts;
do great things focusing on the small details.
Difficult tasks in the world always begin from what is easy, great tasks in the world always begin from what is small.
And so the Wise Person:
Does not 'do great things',
and so is able to fulfill his greatness.
Yes:
Light agreement is never very trustworthy,
considering everything easy makes everything difficult.
And so the Wise Person:
Treats things as difficult,
and in the end has no difficulty.

He who often underestimates difficult tasks will surely be beset with difficulties.

The difficult affairs of the world surely start from the easy,
The great works of the world surely begin from the small.
Therefore, the sage, never doing anything for greatness,

One who promises lightly surely will not be trustworthy;
One who thinks everything easy will end in more difficulty.
Therefore, the sage, taking everything as difficult,
Will have no difficulty in the end.

[63c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Normal people act rashly, but the sage does not.
Normal people interfere freely, but the sage is different.
Normal people prefer tasty cuisine, but the sage prefers plain food.
The sage will deal with all matters, big or small, by always recompensing ill will with goodwill.
To solve a complex issue, you must first start working with the easy problems.
To accomplish a huge task, you must start and graduate from a series of simpler tasks.
To solve the most complex problem, you must tackle the simplest one first.
The greatest task in the world is often the aggregation of smaller tasks.
The sage has never endeavoured to accomplish a great task.
Yet, he accomplishes a great task.
A person who readily gives promises often fails to keep them.
A person who takes things too lightly will definitely be plagued with many problems.
The sage regards everything as potentially troublesome.
Consequently, he will never encounter any difficulty.

sets no value on the rare goods of the world,
learns what is not learned through learning,
and induces people to return to that which they have overlooked.

Все, что в Поднебесной трудно делать, начинать легко, и все великие дела берут начало в самом незначительном.
Именно поэтому Премудрый человек никогда не делает великого и потому он наделен способностью осуществить свою великость.
Кто много обещает, тому мало доверяют.
Большая легкость оборачивается великим затруднением.

Осуществляй большое, пока оно мало.
Все трудные дела в Поднебесной должны вершиться, пока они легки.
Все великие дела в Поднебесной должны вершиться, пока они малы.
Вот почему мудрецы, никогда не начиная своих свершений с великого, могли достичь Великого.
В том, кто легко даёт обещания, мало искренности.

Стремись совершать трудное благодаря тому, что в нем легкое, и верши великое благодаря тому, что в нем незаметное.
Ведь трудные дела Поднебесной свершаются только исходя из легкого; великие дела Поднебесной вершатся только благодаря незаметному.
Тот, кто может до конца не творить ничего великого, один лишь способен завершить великое.
Поэтому легкомысленному редко верят, поэтому во многом легком обязательно таится много трудного.
Поэтому совершенный мудрец считает свои дела трудными, но до самого их завершения не испытывает никаких затруднений.

Созидание великого начинается с самого малого.
Трудные дела Поднебесной непременно начинаются с легкого.
Великие дела Поднебесной непременно начинаются с малого.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек никогда не стремится к величию, поэтому может создать свое величие.
Кто легко обещает, непременно теряет доверие.
Кто умножает легкое, непременно умножает трудное.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек относится ко всему как к трудному, поэтому никогда не испытывает трудностей.

Нужно осуществлять недеяние, соблюдать спокойствие и вкушать безвкусное.
Великое состоит из малого, а многое - из немногого.
На ненависть нужно отвечать добром.
Преодоление трудного начинается с легкого,
осуществление великого начинается с малого,
ибо в мире трудное образуется из легкого, а великое - из малого.
Поэтому совершенномудрый начинает не с великого, тем самым он совершает великое.
Кто много обещает, тот не заслуживает доверия.
Где много легких дел, там много и трудных.
Поэтому совершенномудрый относится к делу как к трудному, поэтому он не испытывает трудности.

Премудрый человек никогда не стремится к величию -

В Поднебесной большие дела обязательно складываются из мелочей.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости заканчивает, не осуществляя большого.
Причинность:
Может совершить это большое.
Ведь, легко обещая, уменьшаешь веру.
Умножая легкое, обязательно умножаешь трудное.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости приближает к трудному.
Причинность:
Заканчивает в отсутствии трудного.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Four

1017/2593

[64c01t] Robert G. Henricks
What is at rest is easy to hold;
{What has not yet given a sign is} easy to plan for;
{The brittle is easily shattered};
{The minute is easily scattered};
{Act on it before it comes into being};
{Order it before it turns into chaos}.
A tree {[so big] that it takes both arms to surround} starts out as the tiniest shoot;
A nine-story terrace rises up from a basket of dirt.
A high place one hundred, one thousand feet high begins from under your feet.
Those who act on it ruin it;
Those who hold on to it lose it.
Therefore the Sage does not act,
{And as a result}, he doesn't ruin [things];
He does not hold on to [things],
And as a result, he doesn't lose [things];
In people's handling of affairs, they always ruin things when they're right at the point of completion.
Therefore we say, "If you're as careful at the end as you were at the beginning, you'll have no failures."
Therefore the Sage desires not to desire and doesn't value goods that are hard to obtain;
He learns not to learn and returns to what the masses pass by;
He could help all things to be natural, yet he dare not do it.

[64c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHAT is at rest is easy to hold.
What manifests no omens is easily forestalled.
What is fragile is easily shattered.
What is small is easily scattered.
Tackle things before they have appeared.
Cultivate peace and order before confusion and disorder have set in.
A tree as big as a man's embrace springs from a tiny sprout.
A tower nine stories high begins with a heap of earth.
A journey of a thousand leagues starts from where your feet stand.
He who fusses over anything spoils it.
He who grasps anything loses it.
The Sage fusses over nothing and therefore spoils nothing.
He grips at nothing and therefore loses nothing.
In handling affairs, people often spoil them just at the point of success.
With heedfulness in the beginning and patience at the end, nothing will be spoiled.
Therefore, the Sage desires to be desireless,
Sets no value on rare goods,
Learns to unlearn his learning,
And induces the masses to return from where they have overpassed.

He only helps all creatures to find their own nature,
But does not venture to lead them by the nose.

[64c03t] D. C. Lau
It is easy to maintain a situation while it is still secure;
It is easy to deal with a situation before symptoms develop;
It is easy to break a thing when it is yet brittle;
It is easy to dissolve a thing when it is yet minute.
Deal with a thing while it is still nothing;
Keep a thing in order before disorder sets in.
A tree that can fill the span of a man's arms
Grows from a downy tip;
A terrace nine storeys high
Rises from hodfuls of earth;
A journey of a thousand miles
Starts from beneath one's feet.
Whoever does anything to it will ruin it;
Whoever lays hold of it will lose it.
Therefore the sage, because he does nothing, never ruins anything;
And, because he does not lay hold of anything, loses nothing.
In their enterprises the people
Always ruin them when on the verge of success.
Be as careful at the end as at the beginning
And there will be no ruined enterprises.
Therefore the sage desires not to desire
And does not value goods which are hard to come by;
Learns to be without learning
And makes good the mistakes of the multitude
In order to help the myriad creatures to be natural and to refrain from daring to act.

[64c04t] R. L. Wing
What is at rest is easy to hold;
What is not yet begun is easy to plan.
What is thin is easy to melt;
What is minute is easy to disperse.
Deal with things before they emerge;
Put them in order before there is disorder.
A tree of many arm spans is produced from a tiny sprout.
A tower of nine stories is raised from a pile of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles begins with a footstep.
Those who act on things, spoil them;
Those who seize things, lose them.
Thus Evolved Individuals do nothing;
Hence they spoil nothing.
They seize nothing;
Hence they lose nothing.

People often spoil their work at the point of its completion.
With care at the end as well as the beginning, No work will be spoiled.
Thus Evolved Individuals desire to be desireless
And do not treasure goods that are hard to get.
They learn without learning,
By returning to the place where the Collective Mind passes.
In this way they assist All Things naturally Without venturing to act.

[64c05t] Ren Jiyu
The stability of things is easy to hold while they are stable;
Things are easy to deal with while they show no sign of change;
Things are easily broken while they are fragile;
Things are easily dispersed while they are minute.
Deal with things before they have happened,
And get things in order before their disorder begins.
A huge tree which fills one's arms grows from a tiny seedling;
A high terrace which has nine storeys rises from a small heap of earth;
A journey of a thousand li begins with the first step.
He who takes action messes things up;
And he who holds things fast loses them.
Therefore, the sage does not fail in anything since he does nothing;
Does not lose anything since he holds nothing.
People often fail when they are about to succeed in their business.
If they are as careful at the end as at the beginning,
They would not ruin their business.
Therefore the sage's desire is to have no desire,
And he doesn't value rare goods.
(The Sage's) learning is to learn nothing, in order to remedy the fault that people often have.
Thus he helps the natural development of all things, and does not dare to act constrainedly.

[64c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Peace is easily maintained;
Trouble is easily overcome before it starts.
The brittle is easily shattered;
The small is easily scattered.
Deal with it before it happens.
Set things in order before there is confusion.
A tree as great as a man's embrace springs up from a small shoot;
A terrace nine stories high begins with a pile of earth;
A journey of a thousand miles starts under one's feet.
He who acts defeats his own purpose;
He who grasps loses.
The sage does not act, and so is not defeated.
He does not grasp and therefore does not lose.
People usually fail when they are on the verge of success.
So give as much care to the end as to the beginning;

Then there will be no failure.
Therefore the sage seeks freedom from desire.
He does not collect precious things.
He learns not to hold on to ideas.
He brings men back to what they have lost.
He helps the ten thousand things find their own nature,
But refrains from action.

[64c07t] Lok Sang Ho
When the situation is peaceful and orderly,
Maintaining peace and order is not difficult;
When the situation has not yet developed to a mature stage, planning to change the outcome is easy;
What is brittle is easy to break;
What is minute is easy to scatter.
We set out to work before problems emerge.
We put things in order before they get out of order.
A tree that is big enough for one to embrace around it grew from a tiny seed.
A nine-story pagoda begins from a heap of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles ("li") begins with the first step.
Those who work for gain in the end will be frustrated.
Those who hold on to something in the end will lose it.
The Sage never works for gain and so will never be frustrated.
He never holds on to anything so he never loses anything.
People often fail in their tasks when they are about to accomplish them.
If only they take the same care in the end as they do in the beginning, they will avoid many failures.
The Sage desires to be free of desires, so he will not value goods that most people value;
He learns to unlearn,
so he will value things that most people do not value.
The Sage only hopes that all living things will live out their inner nature.
He will not dare to go against Nature.

[64c08t] Xiaolin Yang
When the situation is peaceful, it is easy to control;
when nothing has happened, it is easy to plan;
Brittle things are easily broken, thin things are easily dispersed.
Do things when they have not yet happened, control things when they are not yet out of control.
A full-grown tree began as a sapling;
A nine-story building began with a bucket of dirt;
A thousand-mile trip began with the first step.
If you fiddle with something for your own purposes, you will ruin it;
If you are stubborn, you will fail.
Therefore, the great men practiced WUWEI, so they did not fail anything;
They were not stubborn, so they did not make mistakes.
People often fail at the last step to success.
Be cautious at the end like you are at the beginning; then you will never fail.

Therefore, the great men treated having no desire as their desire, and did not value things that were precious.
They treated not learning as learning, and repaired the mistakes people had made.
They helped everything and made them natural, but did not dare to do things for their own purposes.

[64c09t] Walter Gorn Old, GUARDING THE SMALL
What is still is easily held.
What is expected is easily provided for.
What is brittle is easily broken.
What is small is soon dispersed.
Transact your business before it takes shape.
Regulate things before confusion begins.
The tree which fills the arms grew from a tender shoot.
The castle of nine storeys was raised on a heap of earth.
The journey of a thousand miles begins with one step.
Whoever designs only destroys.
Whoever grasps, loses.
The Sage does not thus act, therefore he does no harm.
He does not grasp, and therefore he never loses.
But the common people, in their undertakings, fail on the eve of success.
If they were as prudent at the end as they are at the beginning, there would be no such failures.
Therefore the Sage is only ambitious of what others despise, and sets no value on things difficult to obtain.
He acquires no common learning, but returns to that which the people have passed by.
Thus he aims at simple development in all things, and acts without design.

[64c10t] James Legge
That which is at rest is easily kept hold of;
before a thing has given indications of its presence, it is easy to take measures against it;
that which is brittle is easily broken;
that which is very small is easily dispersed.
Action should be taken before a thing has made its appearance;
order should be secured before disorder has begun.
The tree which fills the arms grew from the tiniest sprout;
the tower of nine storeys rose from a (small) heap of earth;
the journey of a thousand li commenced with a single step.
He who acts (with an ulterior purpose) does harm;
he who takes hold of a thing (in the same way) loses his hold.
The sage does not act (so), and therefore does no harm;
he does not lay hold (so), and therefore does not lose his hold.
(But) people in their conduct of affairs are constantly ruining them when they are on the eve of success.
If they were careful at the end, as (they should be) at the beginning, they would not so ruin them.
Therefore the sage desires what (other men) do not desire, and does not prize things difficult to get;
he learns what (other men) do not learn, and turns back to what the multitude of men have passed by.
Thus he helps the natural development of all things, and does not dare to act (with an ulterior purpose of his own).

[64c11t] David Hinton
It's easy to embrace the tranquil and easy to prevent trouble before omens appear.
It's easy for the trifling to melt away and easy for the slight to scatter away.
Work at things before they've begun and establish order before confusion sets in,
for a tree you can barely reach around grows from the tiniest rootlet, a nine-tiered tower
starts as a basket of dirt, a thousand-mile journey
begins with a single step.
Work at things and you ruin them; cling to things and you lose them.
That's why a sage does nothing and so ruins nothing, clings to nothing and so loses nothing.
When people devote themselves to something they always ruin it on the verge of success.
Finish with the same care you took in beginning and you'll avoid ruining things.
This is why a sage desires without desire, never longing for rare treasures,
learns without learning,
always returning to what people have passed by,
helps the ten thousand things occur of themselves by never presuming to work at them.

[64c12t] Chichung Huang
When stable,
It is easy to maintain;
When no symptoms have emerged,
Easy to deal with;
When tender,
Easy to break;
When tiny,
Easy to disperse.
Tackle it before it takes shape;
Bring order before it becomes chaotic.
A tree the circumference of an embrace
Grows out of a downy tip;
A nine-storied tower
Rises from a basketful of earth;
A hundred-ren ascent
Begins from under one's foot.
He who acts upon them ruins them;
He who holds on to them loses them.
Hence, the sage man acted not
So that he ruined not;
He did not hold on to them
So that he did not lose them.

When people engage in a task,
They often ruin it at its completion.
Therefore, it is said:
"Be discreet in the end as in the beginning,
And you will not ruin your task."
Hence, the sage man
Desired to be desireless,
And treasured not goods hard to come by;
He learned to be unlearned,
And was exempted from the errors
Other rulers had committed;
He was able to assist the ten thousand things
To be the way they were Without daring to act.

[64c13t] Ellen M. Chen
What is at equilibrium is easy (i) to maintain;
What has not emerged is easy (i) to plan (mou);
What is fragile is easy (i) to dissolve;
What is minute is easy (i) to disperse.
Act (wei) when there is yet nothing to do.
Govern (chih) when there is yet no disorder (luan).
A tree whose trunk is of a man's embrace,
Begins from something extremely tiny.
A tower of nine stories high,
Is built from a heap of earth.
A trip of a thousand miles,
Begins right at one's feet.
He who acts (wei) fails,
He who holds on to loses.
Therefore the sage does not act (wei) so he does not fail,
He does not hold on to, so he does not lose.
The people in launching their projects,
Often fail when these are near completion.
Had they been as careful at the end as at the beginning,
There would have been no failures.
Therefore the sage desires not to desire,
He does not treasure hard-to-get goods;
Learns not to learn,
He recovers the transgressions (kuo) of many.
In assisting the self-becoming (tzu-jan) of all beings,
He dares not act (wei).

[64c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
A stable situation is easier to handle;
Before the situation [of danger or chaos] shapes up, it is easier to work out strategies for its disintegration;

When [its effect on] the environment is weak, it is easier to break it loose;
When its influence is still small, it is easier to dispense it;
Danger should be guarded against before it develops;
Chaos should be averted before it emerges.
A tree, with a trunk big enough for a person to encircle it with both arms stretched, was evolved primarily from something as tiny as a fine tip of its branch;
A nine-story terrace is elevated from the small beginning of a basket of dirt;
A journey of one thousand miles started out from one single step.
A person who tampers with [Tao] will fail;
A person who treats [Tao] as a possession has already lost it;
A Sage would not tamper with [Tao], so he will not flounder;
A Sage would not treat [Tao] as his possession, so he will not lose it;
Many people, when engaging in pursuing Tao, often failed at the point when they were just about to gain final success;
[Nevertheless] If one is [constantly] careful from beginning to end, he will never ruin his pursuit.
For reasons stated above:
A Sage shall extinguish [selfish] desires;
He shall not value hard-to-get goods;
He shall study the [lackluster fundamental] learnings most people [of the world] are reluctant to pursue;
He shall point out to people mistakes they have made;
He shall help myriad things and creatures to embark and stay on their natural courses but shall never dare to intervene.

[64c15t] Tien Cong Tran
What is still is easy to keep.
What does not manifest yet is easy to deal with.
What is fragile is easily broken.
What is small is easily scattered.
Deal with a thing before it occurs.
Repair a thing before it is in disorder.
A tree as big as a man's embrace springs from a tiny sprout.
A nine story tower begins with a basket of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles starts from where one stands.
To do is to fail.
To grip is to lose.
Therefore the sage does not do and so does not fail, does not grip and so does not lose.
In handling affairs, people often fail just at the point of completion.
Be as careful at the end as at the beginning, then there will be no failure.
Therefore, the sage desires no-desire, does not prize rare goods, learns non-learning, helps the masses return from their ignorance.
He wants to help all creatures to live by their own nature, and does not interfere with them.

[64c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
When things are stable, it is easy to hold.
When problems have not occurred, they are easy to cope with.
When things are brittle, they break easily.

When things are tiny, they dissolve easily.
Prepare for problems before they appear.
Put things in order before they become chaotic.
Giant trees grow from tiny seeds.
High-rise buildings start from the first mound of earth.
Long journeys begin with a first step.
People often fail when the tasks are close to complete.
If they keep working as diligently as the beginning, then they would not fail.
Sages want things others do not want.
They do not treasure rare goods.
They study things others ignore.
They remind themselves of others' mistakes.
They let everything develops naturally and do not dare to force it.

[64c17t] Arthur Waley
'What stays still is easy to hold;
Before there has been an omen it is easy to lay plans.
What is tender is easily torn,
What is minute is easy to scatter.'
Deal with things in their state of not-yet-being,
Put them in order before they have got into confusion.
For 'The tree big as a man's embrace began as a tiny sprout,
The tower nine storeys high began with a heap of earth,
The journey of a thousand leagues began with what was under the feet'.
He who acts, harms; he who grabs, lets slip.
Therefore the Sage does not act, and so does not harm;
Does not grab, and so does not let slip.
Whereas the people of the world, at their tasks,
Constantly spoil things when within an ace of completing them.
'Heed the end no less than the beginning,'
And your work will not be spoiled.
Therefore the Sage wants only things that are unwanted,
Sets no store by products difficult to get,
And so teaches things untaught,
Turning all men back to the things they have left behind,
That the ten thousand creatures may be restored to their Self-so.
This he does; but dare not act.

[64c18t] Richard John Lynn
The secure is easy to maintain; the premanifest [weizhao] is easy to plan for.
The fragile is easy to melt; the tiny is easy to dissolve.
So take action while it still does not exist
And control it before it turns into disorder.
A tree that takes both arms to clasp grows from a tiny shoot;
a nine-story terrace starts from a pile of dirt;
a journey of a thousand li begins under one's feet.

One who takes deliberate action [wei] will become ruined;
one who consciously administers will become lost.
This is why the sage engages in no deliberate action and so never becomes ruined, does not consciously administer and so never becomes lost.
People pursue matters in such a way that they always suffer ruin just when they are about to succeed.
If one is as mindful of ends as he is of beginnings, his endeavors will never end in defeat.
This is why the sage desires to have no desire and does not value goods hard to get.
He learns not to learn and redeems the errors that the mass of common folk make.
Accordingly, he enhances the natural state of the myriad folk but dares not engage in deliberate action.

[64c19t] Lin Yutang
BEGINNING AND END
That which lies still is easy to hold;
That which is not yet manifest is easy to forestall;
That which is brittle (like ice) easily melts;
That which is minute easily scatters.
Deal with a thing before it is there;
Check disorder before it is rife.
A tree with a full span's girth begins from a tiny sprout;
A nine-storied terrace begins with a clod of earth.
A journey of a thousand li begins at one's feet.
He who acts, spoils;
He who grasps, lets slip.
Because the Sage does not act, he does not spoil,
Because he does not grasp, he does not let slip.
The affairs of men are often spoiled within an ace of completion,
By being careful at the end as at the beginning
Failure is averted.
Therefore the Sage desires to have no desire,
And values not objects difficult to obtain.
Learns that which is unlearned,
And restores what the multitude have lost.
That he may assist in the course of Nature
And not presume to interfere.

[64c20t] Victor H. Mair
What is secure is easily grasped,
What has no omens is easily forestalled,
What is brittle is easily split,
What is minuscule is easily dispersed.
Act before there is a problem;
Bring order before there is disorder.
A tree that fills the arms' embrace is born from a downy shoot;
A terrace nine layers high starts from a basketful of earth;
An ascent of a hundred strides begins beneath one's foot.

Who grasps loses.
For this reason,
The sage does not act.
Therefore,
He does not fail.
He does not grasp.
Therefore,
He does not lose.
In pursuing their affairs, people often fail when they are close to success.
Therefore,
If one is as cautious at the end as at the beginning, there will be no failures.
For this reason,
The sage desires to be without desire and does not prize goods that are hard to obtain;
He learns not to learn and reverts to what the masses pass by.
Thus,
he can help the myriad creatures be natural, but dares not act.

[64c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Peace is easily maintained while things are still at rest.
Trouble is easily handled before it starts.
What is brittle is easily broken.
What is minute is easily scattered.
Handle a problem before it appears.
Secure order before confusion begins.
A tree as big as a person's embrace begins as a tiny shoot.
A terrace nine stories high rises from a shovelful of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles begins under your feet.
A person who interferes does harm,
and those who grasp lose their hold.
Therefore,
the True Person acts without striving and does no harm,
avoids grabbing and never loses hold.
People often ruin their ventures when they are on the verge of success.
So, be as careful at the end as at the beginning, and your work will not be ruined.
Therefore,
the True Person
seeks freedom from desire,
does not value things that are hard to come by,
learns without scholarship,
brings people back to what they have passed by,
and assists the ten thousand things to find their own natures;
all without daring to interfere.

[64c22t] David H. Li
Governing is easy when there is peace;

Nipping is easy when buds are young;
Reconciling is easy when issues are minor.
Handle matters before they come about;
Govern people before there is chaos.
A tree two-arms'-length wide grows from a seedling;
A tower nine stories high starts with a spadeful;
A journey a thousand miles long begins with a step.
The populace often fail when they are close to completing their tasks.
Be as deliberate at the end as at the beginning; then, there can be no failure.
Thus, the sage desires what others do not desire, and places no premium on rare goods.
[The sage] studies what others do not study, and revisits people's faults.
[The sage] assists myriad matters to develop naturally but does not dare to interfere.

[64c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
That which has balance is easy to maintain.
That which has not arisen is easy to forestall.
That which is brittle is easy to shatter.
That which is minuscule is easy to scatter.
Therefore, manage problems before they arise;
Create order before disorder sets in.
A tree as large as the arms' embrace grows from a downy shoot.
A terrace nine stories high rises from a shovelful of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step.
One who acts from the delusion of grandiosity fails.
One who clings to the delusion of grandiosity loses.
The sage does not act from delusion, and therefore he does not fail,
Nor does he cling to delusion, and therefore he does not lose.
Because of the delusion of grandiosity,
On the verge of success, people often fail.
If they would take as much care at the end as at the beginning,
They would not fail in their affairs.
The sage does not desire what the masses desire;
He does not treasure what the masses treasure.
He studies what the masses do not study;
He returns to the source of knowledge ignored by the masses.
Thus, without acting in delusion,
The sage supports all beings as they naturally exist.

[64c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Do a non-deed,

But peruses what others have discarded.
Thus he enables all things
To develop in their natural way,
And he does not engage in hasty action.
See the small as big,
See the little as a lot.
Take care of the difficult when it is still easy,
Take care of the big when it is still small.
All difficult things in the world begin as easy things,
All big things in the world begin as small things.
The tree whose trunk cannot be encircled by a man's arms began as a sapling,
A nine-story tower rose from a heap of dirt,
A thousand-mile journey began with the earth under a man's foot.
Therefore the sage does not try to do big things,
And in that way can achieve greatness.
The person who makes casual promises
Will not keep them.
The person who perceives many things as easy
Will encounter many difficulties.
Therefore the sage perceives things as difficult,
And consequently never encounters difficulties.

[64c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
When everything is peaceful, don't forget the danger;
When things are safe, don't lose your edge -
A brittle thing can break easily
And a small thing fragment.
So 'act before it happens',
'order things before chaos breaks out'.
A great tree which takes a crowd to span its base
Started from being a tiny seed;
And a tower nine sections high began in the ground.
A journey of a thousand miles starts with the first step.
To act as if you know it all is catastrophic: and if you try to control it you will stare into your empty hand.

[64c26t] Gu Zhengkun
A stable situation is easy to be maintained;
A condition without the sign of apparent change is easy to be coped with;
A fragile thing is easy to break;
A minute thing is easy to dissolve.
The proper treatment should be given to what has happened;
Keep things in order before disorder sets in.
A huge tree grows from a tiny seedling;
A nine-storey terrace rises from a mound of earth;
A journey of a thousand li starts from beneath one's feet.
Those who wants to obtain it by force will ruin it;

Those who hold it by force will lose it.
Thus the sage never ruins anything,
Because of his inaction;
He never loses anything.
In doing things,
People often fail on the verge of success.
If they are as prudent at the end as at the beginning,
They will never fail.
That is why the sage
Desires what others do not desire,
Values not rare goods,
Learns to lack learning,
Makes up for people's faults.
In this way he helps all things develop naturally
And refrains from interfering in them.

[64c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
It is easy to control a situation when it is tranquil.
It is easy to deal with a matter before the omen is cast.
It is easy to break something when it is fragile.
It is easy to scatter something when it is minute.
Deal with things before they arise.
Govern a situation before it descends into disorder.
A huge tree as great as a man's arm-span grows from a tiny seed.
A nine-storey terrace rises from a pile of earth.
A thousand-mile journey starts from a single footstep.
He who acts to reach something will lead to its decline.
He who tries hard to hold on to something will lose it.
That is why the sage does nothing, and leads nothing to decline.
He does not hold on to anything, therefore he does not lose anything.
People often lead their actions to the verge of success, then fail.
Be careful to treat the end with equal care as the beginning.
Then you will not fail.
Therefore the sage desires not to desire, not to value precious goods, to learn how not to learn, to cover the mistakes of the multitude, to assist the myriad creatures according to the law of Nature.
Yet he dares not act.

[64c28t] Liu Qixuan
What is still is easy to keep.
What has not developed is easy to guide.
What is fragile is easy to break.
What is little is easy to scatter.
One starts a project before things develop otherwise.
One prevents tumults before they happen otherwise.
A huge tree starts from a small sprout.

A nine-story tower starts from the first shovel full of dirt.
A long journey starts from the spot under the feet.
One who willfully starts a cause will ruin it.
One who willfully ends a cause will lose it.
The wise person does nothing willfully
And will therefore neither ruin nor lose.
People often fail when they are about to succeed.
If one is careful from start to end, one will not fail.
The wise ruler therefore desires what none would desire,
Values what none would value, learns what none can learn,
Remembers the useful experiences and lessons of all,
And does nothing willfully so as to help cultivate the natural.

[64c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Beginning And Ending
Lao Tze says,
That which remains still is easy to hold;
that which has not yet given indication of its presence is easy to measure against;
that which is brittle is easily broken;
and that which is minute is easily dispersed.
Deal with a thing before its disorder has made its appearance, and govern an affair before its confusion has begun.
A tree which fills the arms grows from a tiny sprout;
a tower of nine floors rises from a heap of earth;
a journey of a thousand li begins at one's feet.
He who acts with an intent to control fate does harm;
he who takes hold of a thing in the same way loses his hold.
The sage works without an intent to control fate, and therefore does no harm.
He does not lay hold so, and therefore does not lose his hold.
People who conduct their affairs often ruin them on the eve of their success.
If they are careful at the end, as they were careful at the beginning;
then there would be no ruined affairs.
Therefore, the sage desires what other men do not desire, and does not value objects which are difficult to obtain.
He learns what other men do not learn, and turns back to what the multitude of men have passed by.
Thus he assists all existence to develop in a natural course, and does not dare to act with an intent to control fate.

[64c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
What is motionless is easy to hold;
What is not yet foreshadowed is easy to form plans for;
What is fragile is easy to break;
What is minute is easy to disperse.
Deal with a thing before it comes into existence;
Regulate a thing before it gets into confusion.
The common people in their business often fail on the verge of succeeding.

Take care with the end as you do with the beginning,
And you will have no failure.

[64c31t] Paul J. Lin
Things at rest are easy to hold.
Things unbegun are easy to plan.
Fragile things are easy to shatter.
Tiny things are easy to scatter.
Manage things before they exist.
Set things in order before they become chaotic.
A tree as big as one's embrace originates from a rootlet.
A nine-story terrace begins with a heap of earth.
A thousand-li journey starts from beneath one's feet.
To act means to fail;
To insist means to lose.
The Sage does not act and therefore never fails;
He does not insist and therefore never loses.
When the people undertake to do something,
They almost always fail at the point of success.
One should be cautious at the end as at the beginning,
Then there will be no failure.
Therefore the Sage desires no desires,
Values not the rare treasures,
Learns from the unlearned,
Reverses the faults of the people,
And assists all things in their natural development,
Never daring to interfere.

[64c32t] Michael LaFargue
When sitting still, they are easy to hold down;
no omens yet, it is easy to plan;
when fragile, they are easy to break;
when small, they are easy to scatter.
Work on it when it isn't yet;
put it in order when it is not yet disordered.
A tree you can barely get your arms around grows from a tiny shoot;
a nine-story tower begins as a heap of earth;
a thousand-mile journey begins under your feet.
Working ruins, grasping loses.
And so the Wise Person:
Does not work, so does not ruin;
does not grasp, so does not lose.
"When the people are engaged in some task, they are always on the point of finishing when they ruin it."
Careful at the end just as at the beginning,
then there will be no ruining of the work.

And so the Wise Person:
Desires to be desireless,
does not prize goods hard to come by,
learns to be un-Learned,
turns back to the place all others have gone on from.
So as to help along the naturalness of the thousands of things without presuming to be a Worker.

[64c33t] Cheng Lin
When chaos has not yet appeared, it is easy to maintain peace.
When portents have not yet appeared, it is easy to devise measures.
When a thing is brittle, it can be easily broken.
When a thing is minute, it can be easily dispersed.
Measures should be adopted to forestall future emergencies.
Action should be taken to safeguard against possible confusion.
A giant tree whose trunk measures several feet in diameter is grown from a tiny seed.
A tall tower nine storeys high is built upon basketfuls of earth.
A long journey of a thousand lii is covered step by step.
Those who try to gain by action are sure to fail;
those who try to hold are sure to lose.
Because the Sage abides by inaction, he does not fail.
Because he does not try to hold, he does not lose.
Men often fail in their undertakings when they are on the verge of success.
If the same care is exercised towards the end as at the beginning, they can never fail.
Wherefore, the Sage has no desires, covets not rarities, and acquires not learning in order that he may avoid the faults of the multitude.
He promotes the spontaneous development of all things, and does not venture to interfere by his own action.

[64c34t] Yi Wu

Therefore, the sage, without acting, does not fail,
Without becoming attached, does not lose.
The people, in doing, fail at the point of success.

Learns to be unlearned
And reforms the faults of people.
He aids all things in their natural development
And dares to not act on them.

[64c35t] Han Hiong Tan
It is easier to maintain the status quo when things are established and stabilised.
It is easier to correct things when the incipient signs of trouble have just occurred.
Fragile things disintegrate quickly.
Minute things disperse readily.
You should act well before the rot has set in.
You should take effective measures before chaos arises.
A tree broader than a man's embrace grows from a tiny seedling.
The tallest tower starts from a clod of earth.
The longest journey begins with the first step.
He who schemes will fail, and he who grasps tightly will lose it.
Hence, the sage does not scheme and will not fail.
He does not hold fast so he will not lose it.
Failure usually occurs at the cusp of succeeding.
If you pay careful attention from start to finish, there will be few failures.
What the sage wants is the opposite of what others want.
Hence, the sage does not covet rare objects.
The sage learns what others don't want to learn.
Thus, he avoids making mistakes that others commonly make.
The sage only facilitates.
He lets things evolve, but he does not interfere.

[64c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Tackle difficulties when they are easy.
Accomplish great things when they are small.
Handle what is going to be rough when it is still smooth.
Control what has not yet formed its force.
Deal with a dangerous situation while it is safe.
Manage what is hard while it is soft.
Eliminate what is vicious before it becomes destructive.
This is called "attending to great things at small beginnings."
A tree so big it can fill the span of a man's arms grows from a tiny sprout.
A terrace nine stories high rises from a shovelful of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step.
Thus, one of integral virtue never sets about grandiose things,
yet he is able to achieve great things.
Lightly made promises inspire little confidence.
Making light of things at the beginning,
one will meet with failure in the end.
Being prepared for hardship, one will not be overcome by it.
In handling their affairs, people often ruin them just as they are on the verge of success.

That which is motionless is easy to maintain.
That which is prior to emergence is easy to deal with.
That which is just beginning is easy to destroy.
That which is minute is easy to disperse.
Act on what is before it occurs.

Big trees grow out of small shoots.
A nine story tower begins to be built from one little lump.
A journey of a thousand miles begins from where one stays.
Those who proceed through action fail.
Those who grasp on to a thing lose it.
Therefore, the wise does not act on things and is free from failure.
He does not grasp on to things, and does not lose them.
People who are engaged with things often fail when they almost complete them.
Therefore, one should be as careful in the last stage of one's work as at the beginning.
Then one will be free from failure.
Hence, for the wise, willing is non-willing.
He never values things which are hard to attain.
He learns what is unlearned.
He avoids the mistakes that have been made by others.
He is in accordance with the nature of ten thousand things, yet he never interferes with them.

And suffers no loss.
People in handling their affairs
Often fail when within an ace of fulfilment.
Be circumspect at the end as at the beginning,
And there will be no failure.
Therefore the Sage desires what is not desired (by others),
And does not treasure hard-to-get objects.
He learns what is not learned (by others),
And restores what the multitude has skipped.
He assists the natural trend of all things,
But dares not venture to tamper with it.

[64c39t] Ha Poong Kim
What is at rest is easy to hold;
What has not yet shown its sign is easy to prepare for.
What is tender is easy to break up;
What is minute is easy to scatter.
Deal with things before they become reality;
Put things in order before disorder arises.
A tree as big as a man's embrace
Grows from the tip of a fine hair.
A terrace nine stories high
Rises from a heap of earth.
A journey of a thousand miles
Starts from where one stands.
Whoever acts on it will ruin it;
Whoever lays hold of it will lose it.
For this reason the sage
Does nothing and therefore ruins nothing;
Lays hold of nothing and therefore loses nothing.
People, in handling their affairs,
Always ruin their work on the verge of completion.
Be careful at the end as at the start,
And you will never fail.
For this reason the sage
Desires not to desire,
Does not treasure rare goods,

What is minute is easily dispersed.
Act upon it before it exists.
Regulate it before it becomes chaos.
A massive tree grows from a little sprout.
A nine-story-building rises from a clod of earth.
A thousand fathoms begin with a single step.
Those who impose action upon it will fail.
Those who cling to it lose it.
So the sage, through nonaction, does not fail.
Not clinging, he does not lose.
The common people's engagement in affairs fails prior to success.
So the saying goes,
"Give as much careful attention to the end as to the beginning, then the affairs will not fail."
It is on that account that the sage desires not to desire and does not value goods that are hard to get.
He learns not to learn and restores the common people's losses.
He is able to support the nature of all things and, not by daring, to impose action.

[64c41t] Tang Zi-chang
What is still at rest is easy to maintain.
What is still insignificant is easy to dispose of.
What is still fragile is easily shattered.
What is still not yet begun is easy to plan.
Action should be taken before the emergency occurs.
Measures should be taken before confusion is formed.
A large tree, so large arms can hardly go around, was grown from a tiny seed.
A tall tower, of nine stories height, was built first with a handful of dirt.
A long journey of a thousand miles can be finished by moving feet.
One who intervenes will be defeated.
One who grasps the world will lose it.
So the Sage ruler does not intervene, thus he does not fail.
He does not grasp, thus he never loses.
Sometimes people fail to reach the end when they are already on the verge of success.
A Sage was as cautious at the end as in the beginning, so he could avoid failure.
Thus a Sage ruler never desired what should not be desired, such as he never cherished rare goods.
He did not experience what should not be experienced, such as he never repeated the faults of others.
It gives supplementary help to the nature of All Things, and yet it dares not to assert itself.

The journey of a thousand li starts from where one stands.
He who takes action fails.

То, что еще не показало признаков, легко направить.
То, что слабо, легко разделить.
То, что мелко, легко рассеять.
Действие надо начать с того, чего еще нет.
Наведение порядка надо начать тогда, когда еще нет смуты.
Ибо большое дерево вырастает из маленького, девятиэтажная башня начинает строиться из горстки земли, путешествие в тысячу ли начинается с одного шага.
Кто действует - потерпит неудачу.
Кто чем-либо владеет - потеряет.
Вот почему совершенномудрый бездеятелен, и он не терпит неудачи.
Он ничего не имеет и поэтому ничего не теряет.
Те, кто, совершая дела, спешат достигнуть успеха, потерпят неудачу.
Кто осторожно заканчивает свое дело, подобно тому как он его начал, у того всегда будет благополучие.
Поэтому совершенномудрый не имеет страсти, не ценит труднодобываемые предметы, учится у тех, кто не имеет знаний, и идет по тому пути, по которому прошли другие.
Он следует естественности вещей и не осмеливается [самовольно] действовать.

[64c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Не трудно держать легкую вещь.
Легко предотвратить (беду) до полного обнаружения.
Слабого легко разбить, мелкого легко рассеять.
Следует устраивать защиту тогда, когда еще нет (в том) надобности (т.е. нет врагов).
Следует заботится о спокойствии страны тогда, когда еще в ней все в порядке.
Дерево, которого нельзя обнять руками (т.е. большое), выросло из маленького.
Девятиэтажная башня созидается из клочков земли.
Чтобы пройти тысячу верст, нужно начать ходьбу с одного шага.
Кто может создать, тот может и разрушить.
Имеющий может потерять.
Святой муж ничего не создает, поэтому ничего не разрушает;
он ничего не имеет, поэтому ничего не потеряет.
Кто, предпринимая дело, спешит наскоро достигнуть результата, тот ничего не сделает.
Кто осторожно оканчивает свое дело, как начал, тот не потерпит неудачи.
Поэтому святой муж всегда старается быть беспристрастным, не придавать ценности труднодобываемым вещам и не слушать бесплодного учения.
Он повторяет то, что делалось многими.
Он будет стараться, чтобы пособить естественному течению вещей, но ни в каком случае, не препятствовать ему.

Что еще не проявилось, то легко упредить.

Что хрупко, то легко разбить.
Что мелко, то легко рассеять.
Действуй там, где еще ничего нет.
Упорядочивай там, где еще не разладилось.
Дерево толщиной в обхват вырастает из крошечного ростка,
Башня в девять этажей начинается с комка земли.
Путь в тысячу ли начинается с одного шага.
Тот, кто воздействует на это, разрушит его.
Тот, кто крепко держится за это, потеряет его.
Вот почему премудрый человек не действует и ничего не разрушает,
Ни за что не держится - и ничего не теряет.
Когда успех уже близок, люди часто все портят.
Кто в конце так же осмотрителен, как в начале, не изведает неудачи.
Посему премудрый человек желает нежелания и не ценит редкие в мире товары.
Он учится не быть ученым и уводит всех от заблуждений.
Посему он во всех вещах поддерживает то, что таково само по себе - и ничего не делает.

Что спокойно, легко удержать.
Что еще не проявилось, легко проконтролировать.
Что хрупко, легко разрушить.
Что тонко, легко рассеять.
Осуществляй это, когда еще нет наличия.
Упорядочивай это, когда еще нет неурядиц.
Дерево толщиной в обхват рождается из тончайшего ростка.
Башня в девять этажей поднимается с кучки земли.
Движение в тысячу ли начинается под ступней.
Осуществляешь - испортишь это.
Удерживаешь - потеряешь это.
Это дает:
У человека мудрости - отсутствие осуществления.
Причинность:
Отсутствие порчи.
Отсутствие удержания.
Причинность:
Отсутствие потери.
Народ, делая дела, постоянно, приближаясь к завершению, портит их.
Если осторожен в конце так же, как и в начале, тогда не испортишь дело.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости стремится не стремиться.
Не придает ценности трудно достающимся товарам.
Учится не учиться.
Возвращается туда, где проходят большинство людей.
Тем самым поддерживает самопроизвольную естественность мириад сущностей и не осмеливается осуществлять.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Five

1042/2593

[65c01t] Robert G. Henricks

Those who practiced the Way in antiquity,
Did not use it to enlighten the people.
Rather, they used it to make them dumb.
Now the reason why people are difficult to rule is because of their knowledge;
As a result, to use knowledge to rule the state
Is thievery of the state;
To use ignorance to rule the state
Is kindness to the state.
One who constantly understands these two
Also [understands] the principle.
To constantly understand the principle -
This is called Profound Virtue.
Profound Virtue is deep, is far-reaching,
And together with things it returns.
Thus we arrive at the Great Accord.

[65c02t] John C. H. Wu

IN the old days, those who were well versed in the practice of the Tao did not try to enlighten the people, but rather to keep them in the state of simplicity.
For, why are the people hard to govern?
Because they are too clever!
Therefore, he who governs his state with cleverness is its malefactor;
but he who governs his state without resorting to cleverness is its benefactor.
To know these principles is to possess a rule and a measure.
To keep the rule and the measure constantly in your mind is what we call Mystical Virtue.
Deep and far-reaching is Mystical Virtue!
It leads all things to return, till they come back to Great Harmony!

[65c03t] D. C. Lau

Of old those who excelled in the pursuit of the way did not use it to enlighten the people but to hoodwink them.
The reason why the people are difficult to govern is that they are too clever.
Hence to rule a state by cleverness
Will be to the detriment of the state;
Not to rule a state by cleverness
Will be a boon to the state.
These two are models.
Always to know the models
Is known as mysterious virtue.
Mysterious virtue is profound and far-reaching,
But when things turn back it turns back with them.

Only then is complete conformity realized.

[65c04t] R. L. Wing
Those skillful in the ancient Tao Are not obvious to the people.
They appear to be simple-minded.
People are difficult to lead
Because they are too clever.
Hence, to lead the organization with cleverness
Will harm the organization.
To lead the organization without cleverness
Will benefit the organization.
Those who know these two things
Have investigated the patterns of the Absolute.
To know and investigate the patterns
Is called the Subtle Power.
The Subtle Power is profound and far-reaching.
Together with the Natural Law of polarity, It leads to the Great Harmony.

[65c05t] Ren Jiyu
From of old those who have carried out the principle of Tao do not enlighten the people with it, but make them foolish and simple with it.
What makes it difficult to govern the people is that they have too much knowledge,
Therefore to govern the state by wisdom is a disaster for the state,
And not to govern the state by wisdom is a blessing for the state.
It is a principle to know the two (by wisdom and not by wisdom).
Carrying out the principle forever is called the mysterious "De."
The mysterious "De" is very deep and far-reaching.
It is contrary to the nature of concrete things,
But leads to the greatest conformity.

[65c06t] Gia-fu Feng
In the beginning those who knew the Tao did not try to enlighten others,
But kept them in the dark.
Why is it so hard to rule?
Because people are so clever.
Rulers who try to use cleverness
Cheat the country.
Those who rule without cleverness
Are a blessing to the land.
These are the two alternatives.
Understanding these is Primal Virtue.
Primal Virtue is deep and far.
It leads all things back
Toward the great oneness.

In the ancient days the masters who succeed in following the Dao,
Rather than making people clever,
Would spare them from much acquired knowledge.
The reason why people may be difficult to rule over is that they are too clever.
The ruler who rules with his acquired knowledge is (likely) to hurt the nation.
The ruler who rules not with his acquired knowledge is (likely) to benefit the nation.
Knowing the difference between ruling with acquired knowledge and ruling with original knowledge
Is close to following the right formula.
Being always mindful of following the formula is the mystical virtue.
The mystical virtue is deep,
far from the crowds,
and opposite to what people expect.
Exactly because it is the reverse of what people expect,
it achieves great concordance.

[65c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The ancient people who knew the DAO did not make people smart, but made them simple.
People are not easy to govern when they are too smart.
So, those who govern a country based on smartness are a disaster to the country.
Those who do not govern the country based on smartness are a fortune to the country.
These two ways are the long-lasting policies for governing a country.
Keeping these two policies is called real DE.
Real DE is so deep and far-reaching; it is opposite to what we know today.
However, it will eventually lead to the ultimate harmonic and natural state.

[65c09t] Walter Gorn Old, SIMPLE VIRTUE
The ancients who practised the Tao did not make use of it to render the people brilliant, but to make them simple and natural.
The difficulty in governing the people is through overmuch policy.
He who tries to govern the kingdom by policy is only a scourge to it; while he who governs without it is a blessing.
To know these two things is the perfect knowledge of government, and to keep them continually in view is called the virtue of simplicity.
Deep and wide is this simple virtue; and though opposed to other methods it can bring about a perfect order.

[65c10t] James Legge
The ancients who showed their skill in practising the Tao did so, not to enlighten the people, but rather to make them simple and ignorant.
The difficulty in governing the people arises from their having much knowledge.
He who (tries to) govern a state by his wisdom is a scourge to it;
while he who does not (try to) do so is a blessing.
He who knows these two things finds in them also his model and rule.
Ability to know this model and rule constitutes what we call the mysterious excellence (of a governor).
Deep and far-reaching is such mysterious excellence, showing indeed its possessor as opposite to others, but leading them to a great conformity to him.

[65c11t] David Hinton
Ancient masters of Way
never enlightened people.
They kept people simple-minded.
It's impossible to govern
once you've filled people with knowing.
Use knowing to govern
and you plunder the nation, but use not-knowing to govern
and you enrich the nation.
Once you understand this, the pattern is clear,
and always understanding the pattern is called dark-enigma Integrity.
Dark-enigma Integrity is deep and distant, is the return of things back into the vast harmony.

[65c12t] Chichung Huang
Therefore, it is said:
"Those who implemented the Tao
Did not use it to make the people shrewd;
Rather, they used it to make them simple."
The reason why the people are difficult to rule
Is that they are crafty.
Therefore, using craft to govern a state
Is a pest to the state;
Using noncraft to govern a state
Is a blessing to the state.
Constantly remember: these two constitute a guideline;
Constantly remembering this guideline
Is called a deep and remote virtue.
The deep and remote virtue
Is deep indeed, remote indeed;
And, though contrary to all things,
Will eventually reach Grand Harmony.

[65c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Those in the past who were good at practicing Tao,
Did not want to enlighten (ming) the people,
But to keep them in ignorance (yü).
People are hard to rule,
Because they know (chih) too much.
Therefore, to rule a nation by knowledge,
Is to be the nation's thief.
Not to rule a nation by knowledge,
Is to be the nation's blessing.

To know these two is to know heaven's rule (chi shih).
Always knowing heaven's rule,
Is called the dark (hsüan) te.
The dark te clarifies (ch'ing) and is far away (yüan).
It reverts (fan) with things.
Then there arrives the great harmony.

[65c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org

In old days, when good practitioners of Tao led the country, they did not announce their plans to the public, because they wanted to keep a low profile [to protect innocent people from schemers];
The reason populace was difficult to govern was because insidious people were compensated for their expertise [to take advantage of the situation].
If a country is run with the policy which rewards people for their cunningness, its [fundamental principle of justice for all] would thus be robbed;
If a country is ruled with the policy discouraging cunning performances, the whole country is blessed with good fortune [of justice for all].
The above mentioned are two modes of governing;
If one is able to recognize the [advantages and disadvantages] of these two modes then [we may describe that] he is unified with the profound Te;
The profound Te extends far and deep!
When [a Sage], together with myriad things and creatures, return to [the cultivation of the profound Te], [the world] will have peace and prosperity.

[65c15t] Tien Cong Tran

In the old days, those who were well versed in the practice of the Way did not try to make the people know, but rather to keep them in the state of simplicity.
Why are the people hard to govern?
Because they are clever.
Therefore, he who governs his state with cleverness is its malefactor.
He who governs his state without resorting to cleverness is its benefactor.
To know these two principles is to possess a rule and a measure of governing.
To know the rule and the measure is mysterious Virtue.
Deep and far-reaching is mysterious Virtue!
It leads all things to return to great harmony.

[65c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang

In the past, those who are good at Tao did not encourage people to be shrewd.
They encourage people to be honest.
People are difficult to govern if they are sly.
Advocating slyness in governing is the misfortune of a kingdom.
Opposing slyness in governing is the blessing of a kingdom.
Note that the above two points are also guidelines.
Constantly noticing the guidelines is Profound Te.
Profound Te is deep, broad, and against instinct.
But it can leads to great success.

[65c17t] Arthur Waley

In the days of old those who practised Tao with success did not, by means of it, enlighten the people, but on the contrary sought to make them ignorant.
The more knowledge people have, the harder they are to rule.
Those who seek to rule by giving knowledge
Are like bandits preying on the land.
Those who rule without giving knowledge
Bring a stock of good fortune to the land.
To have understood the difference between these two things is to have a test and standard.
To be always able to apply this test and standard
Is called the mysterious 'power',
The mysterious 'power', so deep-penetrating,
So far-reaching,
That can follow things back -
All the way back to the Great Concordance.

[65c18t] Richard John Lynn

Those in antiquity who were good at practicing the Dao did not use it to make the common folk intelligent but used it to make them stupid.
The reason the common folk are hard to govern is that they have too much knowledge.
Thus to use knowledge to govern the state is to bring about the theft of the state.
Not to use knowledge to govern the state is to enrich the state.
One should understand these two, for they constitute a consistent rule.
Constant understanding of this consistent rule is called "mysterious virtue."
Mysterious virtue is indeed profound, indeed far-reaching!
Such a one helps the people revert,
For only then will perfect compliance be attained.

[65c19t] Lin Yutang

THE GRAND HARMONY
The ancients who knew how to follow the Tao
Aimed not to enlighten the people,
But to keep them ignorant.
The reason it is difficult for the people to live in peace
Is because of too much knowledge.
Those who seek to rule a country by knowledge
Are the nation's curse.
Those who seek not to rule a country by knowledge
Are the nation's blessing.
Those who know these two (principles)
Also know the ancient standard,
And to know always the ancient standard
Is called the Mystic Virtue.
When the Mystic Virtue becomes clear, far-reaching,
And things revert back (to their source),
Then and then only emerges the Grand Harmony.

The ancients who practiced the Way did not enlighten the people with it;
They used it, rather, to stupefy them.
The people are hard to rule because they have too much knowledge.
Therefore,
Ruling a state through knowledge is to rob the state;
Ruling a state through ignorance brings integrity to the state.
One who is always mindful of these two types grasps a paradigm;
Mindfulness of this paradigm is called "mysterious integrity."
Deep and distant is this mysterious integrity!
It runs counter to things until it reaches the great confluence.

[65c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The ancients who practiced the Tao
did not use it to enlighten the people,
but rather to assist them in gaining simplicity.
The reason people are difficult to govern is because they are too clever.
Hence,
a person who attempts to govern a country by cleverness will injure it.
Those who govern without cleverness will be a blessing to the land.
These are the two models.
Knowing these models is called the Mystic Virtue.
The Mystic Virtue is deep and so far-reaching that it can lead all things back toward great harmony.

[65c22t] David H. Li
Men who knew Direction in olden days did not teach the populace to be clever, but teach them to be simple.
A populace that is clever is difficult to govern.
Thus,
governing with cleverness robs a state;
governing not with cleverness benefits a state.
One who knows [the difference between] these two sets the standard.
Knowing the standard at all times is Profoundest Virtue.
Profoundest Virtue is deep; it is far.
Profoundest Virtue returns matters to naturalness, to the Grand Gentleness.

[65c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The ancients who mastered the Tao did not make the people sharp and clever.
Instead, they made the people simple and deep.
The people are hard to govern
When they are too clever and know too much.
To govern the people with cleverness is to bring about calamities.
To govern the people with simplicity is to bring about blessings.
To know these two alternatives is to have the standard of governance.
To understand the standard of governance is to have sublime virtue.

Sublime virtue is deep and far-reaching.
Though it runs counter to the common way,
It follows the great way of the Tao Eternal.

[65c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
In ancient times, the best Tao practitioners did not use it to educate the people,
But rather to restore them to simplicity.
It is difficult to govern people since they are very knowledgeable.
Therefore, ruling a country by increasing knowledge
Means destroying the country,
While ruling a country by reducing knowledge
Means blessing the country.
The person who is aware of these two ways knows the standard,
The person who keeps the standard in his mind is virtuous.
The highest virtue is profound and broad,
It goes back to the beginning of everything,
And in this way attains absolute peace.

[65c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
In ancient times, the shrewdest rulers
Didn't try to give people too much know-how.
What did they do?
They kept them living simply.
So why are people so difficult to govern now?
Because they know too much in their so-called freedom.
If a leader works deviously,
He will turn the people against him - look and see.
But if you refuse to use that kind of knowing,
Your people will be blessed and happy.
This is where two streams divide:
And if you rule this way
You will be walking the great path of Te.
Deep Te - this Virtue is everywhere drawing us all into our final destiny:
Oneness Of The Source And The Sea ...

[65c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Those ancient men of the profound Tao
Did not use the Tao to enlighten the people
But use the Tao to make them simple.

Because they are too clever.
Thus to govern a state by cleverness
Is bound to ruin the state;
Not to govern the state by cleverness
Is a blessing to the state.
These are two models of government;

Keeping the knowledge of these two models
Is known as the mysterious virtue.
The mysterious virtue is profound and far-reaching,
Running counter to concrete things.
At their extremes there is the most complete conformity to nature.

[65c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
In ancient times, those who knew well how to serve the Tao did not use it to enlighten the people but to fool them.
People are difficult to govern only because they are intelligent and resourceful.
Therefore to rule with intelligence harms the country.
To govern the country without intelligence is a blessing for the nation.
He who knows the difference, knows the principle.
To know the principle is called mysterious virtue.
Mysterious virtue is deep and far.
It might at first seem to go against the natural order but it will then lead to harmony.

[65c28t] Liu Qixuan
The ancient wise persons who were good at keeping the Way
Did not try to achieve it by teaching sophisticated knowledge,
But by ridding people of the folly such knowledge holds.
A foolishly sophisticated nation is difficult to govern.
Therefore, there are two models which a ruler may follow:
One who rules with sophistication is stealing a nation,
One who rules with no sophistication is saving a nation.
To make the wise choice always is to be subtle and profound.
The subtle and profound wisdom is rooted far back in time
And such wisdom will also function far ahead into the future.
Therefore, such wisdom can be used
To help bring about what is natural in the world.

[65c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Mysterious Excellence
Lao Tze says,
In ancient times, those who learned the Tao in exercise of the government would work not to enlighten the people, but rather to make them ignorant.
The difficulty in governing the people arises from their having much craftiness.
He who tries to govern a state by his craftiness is a scourge to the state;
and he who does not try to do so is a boon to the state.
He who knows these two different results finds in them an absolute rule.
Ability to know this absolute rule constitutes what we call the mysterious excellence.
Profound and far-reaching is this mysterious excellence;
showing indeed its possessor to be contrary to others, but leading him to be completely obedient to the Tao.

But used it to restore them to simplicity.
People are difficult to govern because they have much knowledge.
Therefore to govern the country by increasing the people's knowledge is to be the destroyer of the country;
To govern the country by decreasing their knowledge is to be the blesser of the country.
To be acquainted with these two ways is to know the standard;
To keep the standard always in mind is to have sublime virtue.
Sublime virtue is infinitely deep and wide.
It goes reverse to all things;
And so it attains perfect peace.

[65c31t] Paul J. Lin
The Ancients who were good in practicing Tao

Those Excellent at doing Tao in ancient times - it was not to enlighten the people, but to keep them stupid.
The difficulty in governing the people -
because of their knowledge.
Yes:

a crime against the state.
By "Ignorance!" govern the state - is also to understand the Ideal Pattern.

Therefore,
the ruler who relies on learning does harm to the State;
the ruler who relies not on learning does good to the State.
These two ways are the ways of government.
When one always follows the right course, he acts in accordance with the mysterious Nature.
The mysterious Nature is profound and far-reaching.
When things revert to it, there is great concord.

[65c34t] Yi Wu
In ancient times, one who was good at practicing the Way
Did not make the people clever
But kept them in ignorance.
If the people are hard to govern,
It is because they have too much knowledge.
Therefore,
one who governs the state with knowledge is a malefactor to the state;
one who does not govern the state with knowledge is a benefactor to the state.
Knowing both of these is also knowing to follow the pattern.
Constantly knowing to follow the pattern
Is called mystical virtue.
Mystical virtue reaches deep and far;
It returns with all things,
After which, supreme harmony will be attained.

[65c35t] Han Hiong Tan
The ancient ruler who followed the way of Dao,
Attempted to make people simple and unsophisticated, not clever and scheming.
People are unruly because they are too clever and devious.
Using sophisticated measures to run a country, you can only cause harm.
Using unsophisticated measures, you will bring prosperity to the country.
These two models are consistent with the immutable principles of Dao.
Understanding the immutable principles, you are a person of inconspicuous virtue.
Inconspicuous virtue is profound and enduring.
Inconspicuous virtue is the opposite of conventional wisdom.
By going with the flow, you will achieve great harmony.

[65c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
In ancient times, those who were well-versed in the practice of the subtle Way of the universe did not lead people to disintegrate their minds through intellectual development for the sake of partial achievement.
Instead, they dissolved all contradictory concepts and images in order to maintain the natural state of simplicity.
Why are people so hard to manage?
Because they have become complicated.
He who leads others with a conditioned and complicated mind is the source of calamity.
He who leads others with simplicity is the source of blessing.

To know these two principles is to possess a rule and measure, the symbol of the ancient wise one.
To keep the rule and measure constantly in your mind,
is to spontaneously manifest integral virtue.
Deep and far-reaching is the subtle truth of integrity.
It leads all things to return from worldly divergence to one great and universal life.

[65c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
In the remote past, the man who was good in Tao did not lead his people to calculative thinking,
But let them remain ignorant of it.
The difficulty in cultivating men is that they are full of intellectual discrimination.
Governing the nation through intellectual discrimination is harmful to it.
Not governing the nation through intellectual discrimination is a blessing to it.
Knowing the difference between these two sets a standard.
To be aware of this standard is profound attainment.
Profound attainment is deep and far-reaching.
It is the reversal of ordinary things, yet it leads to great harmony with Tao.

[65c38t] Henry Wei
Virtue of Innocence
Ch'un Teh
The ancients who were adept in following Tao
Used it not to develop the people's intelligence,
But to keep the people simple-minded.
People are difficult to rule,
Because they have too much knowledge.
Therefore, to use knowledge to rule a country
Inflicts a curse on the country;
Not to use knowledge to rule a country
Confers a boon on the country.
He who is aware of these two rules
Also sets a standard pattern (as the ancients did).
Awareness of the standard pattern is called Mystic Virtue.
As Mystic Virtue goes deep and reaches far,
And leads creatures to revert to their origin,
Then Great Concord will prevail.

[65c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Of old a man who practiced Tao best
Did not thereby seek to make the people bright,
But to make them ignorant.
The people are difficult to govern,
Because they are too clever.
Therefore, to govern a state through knowledge
Is the robbing of the state;
Not to govern a state through knowledge
Is a blessing to the state.

Those who know these two
Also know the standard.
Always to know the standard
Is called the mysterious Te.
Deep and far-reaching is the mysterious Te!
Turn away from things.
Only then will the great obedience be attained.

[65c40t] Tao Huang
Those who practiced Tao in olden times did not enlighten people,
Rather they made them simple.
What makes it the hardest to govern the people is what they already know.
It becomes most difficult to govern people because of their knowledge.
So, using knowledge to govern the country, knowledge itself becomes the thief of the country.
Not using knowledge to govern the country, knowledge itself is the Action of the country.
Always realize that these two are the model for ruling.
Always be aware that this model is the mystic Action.
Mystic Action is deep and far-reaching.
It is the opposite of matter.
Only thus does it approach the Great Harmony.

[65c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The perfect ruler of ancient times did not teach the people to be intelligent, but rather taught them to be simple,
Because the difficulty of ruling people is always due to their being too intelligent.
Thus to use intelligence and skills to rule a country is robbing the country;
not to use intelligence and skills to rule a country is blessing the country.
By knowing these two - Dao and virtues, both of them are the models of Nature.
By constantly following the models is called the "Profound Virtues".
The Incomprehensive is unfathomable and far-reaching.
It (Change) brings all things to return (from the extreme) until perfect harmony - "Grand Concord" is reached.

[65c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
In ancient times those who practiced Tao well
Did not seek to enlighten the people, but to make them ignorant.
People are difficult to govern because they have too much knowledge.
Therefore he who rules the state through knowledge is a robber of the state;
He who rules a state not through knowledge is a blessing to the state.
One who knows these two things also (knows) the standard.
Always to know the standard is called profound and secret virtue.
Virtue becomes deep and far-reaching,
And with it all things return to their original state.
Then complete harmony will be reached.

Кто в древности умел следовать Дао, с его помощью не просвещал народ, а делал глупым.
Когда люди много знают, ими трудно управлять.
Править на основе знаний для государства - это подлинное бедствие;
когда в правлении не полагаются на знания, приносят государству счастье.
Кто ведает об этой паре истин, тот постигает вечный образец.
А знать неколебимо вечный образец - это называют сокровенной добродетелью.
Она глубока, далека и со всеми возвращается.
Но только так ей удается достигать великой слаженности.

[65c92t] А. А. Маслов
Издревле совершенные в следовании Дао не просвещали народ, но оставляли его невежественным.
Причина того, что народом трудно управлять, заключена в избытке у него знаний.
Потому управление государством с помощью знания будет разрушительно для государства.
Отказ от управления государством с помощью знания будет благотворен для государства.
Два этих примера являются образчиками.
Неизменное понимание этих образчиков зовётся сокровенной Благостью.
О, сколь глубока, сколь отдалена сокровенная Благость!
Сколь противоположна она вещам!
Но лишь то, что идёт за ней, и есть Великое Следование.

[65c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Древние, умеющие следовать Дао-Пути, не просвещали народ, а оглупляли его.
Трудно управлять народом, когда он преисполнен многомудрия.
Тот, кто упорядочивает страну при помощи мудрости, - грабитель страны.
Тот, кто не упорядочивает страну при помощи мудрости, - счастье для страны.
Знание этих двух принципов создает образец для исполнения.
Постоянное знание сего образца называют Сокровенной Благой Силой-Дэ.
О сколь глубока Сокровенная Благая Сила!
О сколь она удалена от нас!
Но она возвращается к единству со всем сущим, и следующий ей обретает великий успех!

[65c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
В древности те, кто были совершенным воплощением Дао, не просвещали народ и стремились держать его в темноте.
Народом трудно управлять, если у него много знаний.
Вот почему, если с помощью знаний управлять царством, то царство погибнет;
если без помощи знаний управлять царством, то царство будет процветать.
Знание этих двух положений и есть уставный образец [правления].
Знание уставного образца с позиции постоянства (чан) -
это и есть изначально-сокровенное Дэ.
Изначально-сокровенное Дэ глубоко, далеко!
В сопоставлении с вещами - противоположность.
Вот только в таком [соположении] и достигается великое послушание (следование).

[65c95t] Ян Хин-шун
В древности те, кто следовал дао, не просвещали народ, а делали его невежественным.

Трудно управлять народом, когда у него много знаний.
Поэтому управление страной при помощи знаний приносит стране несчастье, а без их помощи приводит страну к счастью.
Кто знает эти две вещи, тот становится примером для других.
Знание этого примера есть знание глубочайшего дэ.
Глубочайшее дэ, оно и глубоко и далеко.
Оно противоположно всем существам, но приводит их к полному соответствию [с ним].

[65c96t] Д. П. Конисси
В древности исполнявшие Тао не старались просветить народ: они держали его в невежестве.
Причина того, что трудно управлять народом, заключается в том, что народ просвещается и в нем много умных.
Управляющий страною посредством умствования погубит ее.
Когда страна управляется без всякого умствования, то в ней будет благоденствие.
Знающий (сущность) этих двух пунктов будет образцом нравственной жизни (для народа).
Его будут называть (человеком) непостижимой добродетели.
О, глубока и непостижима нравственность!
Она противоположна по своему существу всему вещественному, но никогда не сопротивляется ничему.
Она соблюдает великое послушание.

[65c97t] В. В. Малявин
В древности те, кто умел претворять Путь,
Не желали с его помощью просветить людей,
А применяли его так, чтобы сделать людей простодушными.
Людьми трудно управлять оттого, что они много знают.
А потому тот, кто знанием управляет царством, - вор царства.
А кто незнанием управляет царством - счастье царства.
Кто знает эти две истины, тот для всех образец.
Всегда знать образец называется "сокровенным совершенством".
Сокровенное совершенство так глубоко!
Простирается так далеко!
С ним все вещи вечно возвращаются.
Вот тогда воцарится Великое Согласие.

[65c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Осуществляющие совершенствование на Пути древности отрицают применение просвещения народа, а скорее делают его невежественным.
Трудность управления народом объясняется избытком у него знаний.
Причинность:
Посредством знаний управлять государством - разграбление государства.
Не через знания управлять государством - благосостояние государства.
В осознании этой пары - суть следования идеалу.
Постоянно осознавай следование идеалу.
Это определяется:
Мистическая Потенция.
Мистическая Потенция и глубока, и далека.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Six

1058/2593

[66c01t] Robert G. Henricks

The reason why rivers and oceans are able to be the kings of the one hundred valleys is that they are good at being below them.
For this reason they are able to be the kings of the one hundred valleys.
Therefore in the Sage's desire to be above the people,
He must in his speech be below them.
And in his desire to be at the front of the people,
He must in his person be behind them.
Thus he dwells above, yet the people do not regard him as heavy;
And he dwells in front, yet the people do not see him as posing a threat.
The whole world delights in his praise and never tires of him.
Is it not because he is not contentious,
That, as a result, no one in the world can contend with him?!

[66c02t] John C. H. Wu

HOW does the sea become the king of all streams?
Because it lies lower than they!
Hence it is the king of all streams.
Therefore, the Sage reigns over the people by humbling himself in speech;
And leads the people by putting himself behind.
Thus it is that when a Sage stands above the people, they do not feel the heaviness of his weight;
And when he stands in front of the people, they do not feel hurt.
Therefore all the world is glad to push him forward without getting tired of him.
Just because he strives with nobody,
Nobody can ever strive with him.

[66c03t] D. C. Lau

The reason why the River and the Sea are able to be king of the hundred valleys is that they excel in taking the lower position.
Hence they are able to be king of the hundred valleys.
Therefore, desiring to rule over the people,
One must in one's words humble oneself before them;
And, desiring to lead the people,
One must, in one's person, follow behind them.
Therefore the sage takes his place over the people yet is no burden;
takes his place ahead of the people yet causes no obstruction.
That is why the empire supports him joyfully and never tires of doing so.
It is because he does not contend that no one in the empire is in a position to contend with him.

[66c04t] R. L. Wing

The rivers and seas lead the hundred streams
Because they are skillful at staying low.

Thus they are able to lead the hundred streams.
Therefore, to rise above people,
One must, in speaking, stay below them.
To remain in front of people,
One must put oneself behind them.
Therefore Evolved Individuals remain above,
And yet the people are not weighted down.
They remain in front,
And the people are not held back.
Therefore the world willingly elects them,
And yet it does not reject them.
Because they do not compete,
The world cannot compete with them.

[66c05t] Ren Jiyu
The rivers and seas can become the leaders of many streams just because they skillfully stay in lower valleys.
So they can be the leaders of many streams.
Therefore (he) who wants to rule over the people should show his modesty by his words.
He who wants to lead the people should place himself behind them.
In this way, the sage is above the people, but the people do not feel him as a burden;
He is in front of the people (leading them), but the people do not feel him as a hindrance.
Therefore all the people under Heaven revere him and do not tire of him.
Just because he does not compete with others,
Nobody under Heaven can compete with him.

[66c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Why is the sea king of a hundred streams?
Because it lies below them.
Therefore it is the king of a hundred streams.
If the sage would guide the people, he must serve with humility.
If he would lead them, he must follow behind.
In this way when the sage rules, the people will not feel oppressed;
When he stands before them, they will not be harmed.
The whole world will support him and will not tire of him.
Because he does not compete,
He does not meet competition.

[66c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The reason why the great rivers and the seas can claim to be the kings of the hundred valleys is that they lie low,
so the water in all valleys come to them.
The Sage who wants to be on top of his people must use humble words.
He who wants to lead his people must follow his people.
For these reasons, though the Sage is on top of his people,

his people are not burdensome.
Although he is ahead of his people,
his people will do him no harm.
He wins the heart of his people and is never abandoned by the people.
Because he never struggles with anyone for favor, none under heaven can out-struggle him.

[66c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The great rivers and oceans can hold the water of all the streams.
Because they are lower, the water flows to them.
Therefore, if you want to be the head of the people, you must first humble yourself;
If you want to lead the people, you must first put yourself behind.
This is why the great men were above the people, but the people did not feel burdened;
They were in front of the people, but the people did not feel harmed.
So, the people were happy to make the great men their leaders, and did not feel tired of them.
Only because the great men did not fight, was there no one who could compete with them.

[66c09t] Walter Gorn Old, GOING BEHIND
That by which the great rivers and seas receive the tribute of all the streams, is the fact of their being lowly; that is the cause of their superiority.
Thus the Sage, wishing to govern the people, speaks of himself as beneath them; and wishing to lead them, places himself behind them.
So, while he is yet above them, they do not feel his weight; and being before them, he yet causes no obstruction.
Therefore all men exalt him with acclamations, and none is offended.
And because he does not strive, no man is his enemy.

[66c10t] James Legge
That whereby the rivers and seas are able to receive the homage and tribute of all the valley streams, is their skill in being lower than they;
- it is thus that they are the kings of them all.
So it is that the sage (ruler), wishing to be above men, puts himself by his words below them, and, wishing to be before them, places his person behind them.
In this way though he has his place above them, men do not feel his weight, nor though he has his place before them, do they feel it an injury to them.
Therefore all in the world delight to exalt him and do not weary of him.
Because he does not strive, no one finds it possible to strive with him.

[66c11t] David Hinton
Oceans and rivers become emperors of the hundred valleys because they stay so perfectly below them.
This alone makes them emperors of the hundred valleys.
So, wanting to rule over the people a sage speaks from below them, and wanting to lead the people he follows along behind them, then he can reign above without weighing the people down and stay ahead without leading the people to ruin.

All beneath heaven rejoices in its tireless praise of such a sage.
And because he's given up contention,
nothing in all beneath heaven contends with him.

[66c12t] Chichung Huang
The reason why rivers and oceans
Can become kings of a hundred valley streams
Is that they are good at lying below them;
Hence, they can become
Kings of a hundred valley streams.
Hence, when the sage man
Wished to be above the people,
He always placed himself below them in speech;
When he wished to be in front of the people,
He always stayed behind them in person.
Therefore, when he was above,
People did not consider him a burden;
When he was in front,
People did not consider him an obstacle.
All under heaven delighted in supporting him unwearily.
Is it not because he did not contend
That none under heaven could with him contend?

[66c13t] Ellen M. Chen
Rivers and seas can be kings of the hundred valleys,
Because they are good at flowing downwards (hsia).
Therefore they can be kings of the hundred valleys.
Thus if you desire to be above the people,
Your words must reach down (hsia) to them.
If you desire to lead the people,
Your person (shen, body) must be behind them.
Thus the sage is above,
Yet the people do not feel his weight.
He stays in front,
Yet the people do not suffer any harm.
Thus all gladly praise him untiringly (pu yen).
Because he does not contend with any,
Therefore no one under heaven can contend with him.

[66c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Rivers and seas (huge lake), to which hundreds of other streams feed in, are supported by vast valleys huge enough to accommodate [voluminous water of] hundreds of downstream;
The reason this huge valley can hold hundreds of waterways and support other valleys is because it is situated in the lowest position [so that it is natural for all the other rivers carrying water from huge lakes to flow into it].

Therefore this huge valley is like the king presiding over hundreds of other smaller valleys.
Accordingly, if a Sage intends to be the master of people, he should talk in a humble manner;
If he wants to be the leader of people, he should put behind consideration of [either the benefit or the disadvantage of] his physical self;
Accordingly, even though he rides on top of people, his weight (the pressure of his administration) will not be felt by the people below him;
Being an [authentic] leader, his frontal position should pose no hindrance to people's [development].
For this reason the world is happy to be driven [by a Sage], and people will not form any abhorrence towards him;
Because a Sage would not contend [for wealth and fame against people];
So nobody in the world can [or want to] be his rival.

[66c15t] Tien Cong Tran
How do the river and the sea become the king of all streams?
Because they place themselves in low positions, they are the kings of all streams.
Therefore, to reign over the people, one must use humble words.
To wish to stand in front of the people, one must put oneself in back of them.
Therefore the sage is above the people, and they do not feel the heaviness of his weight; he stands in front of them, they do not feel hurt.
Therefore all the world is glad to adore him without getting tired of him.
Just because he contends with nobody, nobody contends with him.

[66c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
The river and the sea can be the king of hundreds of valleys, because they are adept to place themselves low.
This is why they can be the kings of hundreds of valleys.
Therefore sages speak humbly in order to win people.
They put people before themselves in order to lead people.
This is why when sages are the superior, people do not feel oppressed.
When sages are leading, people would not be hurt.
Consequently, when world is happy to support them and is never tired.
Since the sage does not contend with anybody, nobody can compete with one.

[66c17t] Arthur Waley
How did the great rivers and seas get their kingship over the hundred lesser streams?
Through the merit of being lower than they; that was how they got their kingship.
Therefore the Sage
In order to be above the people
Must speak as though he were lower than the people.
In order to guide them
He must put himself behind them.
Only thus can the Sage be on top and the people not be crushed by his weight.
Only thus can he guide, and the people not be led into harm.
Indeed in this way everything under heaven will be glad to be pushed by him and will not find his guidance irksome.
This he does by not striving; and because he does not strive, none can contend with him.

[66c18t] Richard John Lynn

The reason the river and the sea are able to be kings of all the river valleys is that they are good at keeping below them.
Thus they are able to be kings of all the river valleys.
This is why, if one wishes to be above the common folk, he must use his words to place himself below them.
If one wishes to be at the front of the common folk, he must use his person in such a way that they think of him as behind them.
Therefore the sage positions himself above, yet the common folk do not regard him as heavy;
he positions himself in front, yet the common folk do not regard him as an obstacle.
Therefore all under Heaven happily promote him without ever tiring of it.
It is because he does not contend that none among all under Heaven can contend with him.

[66c19t] Lin Yutang

THE LORDS OF THE RAVINES
How did the great rivers and seas become the Lords of the Ravines?
By being good at keeping low.
That was how they became the Lords of the Ravines.
Therefore in order to be the chief among the people,
One must speak like their inferiors.
In order to be foremost among the people,
One must walk behind them.
Thus it is that the Sage stays above,
And the people do not feel his weight;
Walks in front,
And the people do not wish him harm.
Then the people of the world are glad to uphold him forever.
Because he does not contend,
No one in the world can contend against him.

[66c20t] Victor H. Mair

The river and sea can be kings of the hundred valley streams because they are good at lying below them.
For this reason,
They can be kings of the hundred valley streams.
For this reason, too,
If the sage wants to be above the people,
in his words, he must put himself below them;
If he wishes to be before the people,
in his person, he must stand behind them.
Therefore,
He is situated in front of the people,
but they are not offended;
He is situated above the people,
but they do not consider him a burden.
All under heaven happily push him forward without wearying.
Is this not because he is without contention?
Therefore,

No one under heaven can contend with him.

[66c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
How did the sea gain kingship of a hundred streams?
Because it takes the lower position.
Hence, it is king of a hundred streams.
Therefore,
when True Persons are over the people
they put themselves below the people by their speech.
When they lead the people
they stand behind the people.
When True Persons are given places above the people
they do not crush the people with their weight.
When they take their place ahead of the people
they do not obstruct the people's progress.
That is why everything under heaven supports them gladly and does not tire of them.
Because they strive with no one,
no one can ever strive with them.

[66c22t] David H. Li
The sea is the king to hundreds of streams.
Because it is good at lying low, it can be the king to hundreds of streams.
Thus, a sage,
desirous of being the populace's superior, must be obsequious to them;
desirous of being in front of the populace, must follow them.
Thus, a sage,
sitting high, in no way burdens the populace;
standing in front, in no way harms the populace.
Thus, the world is happy to support [the sage] and is not tired of doing so.
Because [the sage] is not in competition, the people in the world cannot engage him/her in competition.

[66c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The reason the sea is king of a hundred streams is because it lies below them.
Therefore, it is called king of a hundred streams.
When the sage wants to guide the people, in speech he always lies below them.
When the sage wants to lead the people, in deed he always follows behind them.
Thus,
even though he is above them, the people do not feel oppressed.
Even though he is ahead of them, the people do not feel obstructed.
Therefore, the people willingly and joyously put him in a leadership position.
Because he is above contention, the people never contend with him.

The best warrior is not bloodthirsty,
The best conqueror does not take part in the war,

The best employer places himself beneath his workers.
That is called the virtue of self-control,
That is called the ability to be helped by others,
That is called the enlightenment that comes from uniting with heaven.

[66c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
Why is the sea the king of a hundred tributaries?
Because everything comes down to it -
So it is kingly
By this name.
So a sage that wants to rule the people must be below them.
If he wants to be their leader, he must be behind them.
If he has no desire to control then the people will not feel oppressed;
And if he stands before them for their own sake, and not his they will not harm him.
Trusted by everyone, no one will tire of him.
What is his secret?
He never competes.
So there is no one else but him.

[66c26t] Gu Zhengkun
All the streamlets flow towards the river and the sea
Because the latter takes the lower positions,
Hence the latter becomes the king of countless valleys.
Therefore, if one wants to be the ruler of the people,
One must put oneself behind the people.
Thus the sage, though being placed high over the people,
Never burdens the people;
The sage, though going ahead of the people,
Never stands in the way of the people.
That is why the people hold him in esteem
And are never tired of him.
He contends with no one,
So no one in the world is able to contend with him.

[66c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Rivers and seas can be king of the hundred valleys, only because they accept their lower position.
Therefore they can be king of the hundred valleys.
That is why the sage who wishes to rule the people must stay beneath them, who wishes to lead the people must follow behind them.
In this way the sage stays above the people,
yet does not oppress them.
He stays ahead of the people,

yet does not exhaust them.
Then the people will support him with joy and never tire of following him.
And because he does not fight, no one can fight against him.

[66c28t] Liu Qixuan
The ocean can be the king of all deep places
Because it positions itself lowest in the world.
Similarly, the one who wants to be influential
Must first be humble in his speech and actions.
The one who wants to be the leader
Must first go back behind all others.
When such a leader is above, people will feel no weight.
When such a leader is in front, people will feel no hindrance.
He/She is therefore recommended without reservation,
For one who fights for nothing advances best.

[66c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Lord of Waters
Lao Tze says,
That the reason whereby the rivers and sea can be the lord of a hundred streams is because they know to afford a low level, thus they can be the lord of hundreds of streams.
Hence the sage who intends to lead the people from above has to speak humbly to the people.
He who intends to walk ahead to guide the people has to seek his own benefit after seeking the people's.
In this way,
although he has placed himself above the people, the people do not feel his weight, and though he has his place before the people, the people will not feel it is an injury to them.
Therefore,
all in the world are glad to enthrone him to be the lord, and do not weary of him.
Because he does not strive, no one finds it possible to strive with him.

[66c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
As Tao is to the world so are streams and valleys to rivers and seas.
Rivers and seas can be kings to all valleys because the former can well lower themselves to the latter.
Thus they become kings to all valleys.
Therefore the Sage, in order to be above the people, must in words keep below them;
In order to be ahead of the people, he must in person keep behind them.
Thus when he is above, the people do not feel his burden;
When he is ahead, the people do not feel his hindrance.
Therefore all the world is pleased to hold him in high esteem and never get tired of him.
Because he does not compete; therefore no one competes with him.

[66c31t] Paul J. Lin
Rivers and seas become the kings of one hundred valleys
Because they are able in putting themselves below;
So they can become their kings.

The Sage must lower himself with words.
For the sake of staying ahead of the people,
He must put himself behind them.
Therefore, the Sage stays above and the people do not feel the burden.
He stays in front and the people do not consider him harmful.
Therefore the whole world delights in exalting him without tiring.
Because he does not compete,
The whole world cannot fight with him.

[66c32t] Michael LaFargue
The Yang-tze and the ocean:
How are they able to be Kings of the hundred streams?
Because they excel at being low - this is how they are able to be Kings of the hundred streams.
And so:
Wishing to be high above the people,
you must by your speech put yourself at the bottom.
Wishing to be out in front of the people,
you must put your self in the last place.
And so, the Wise Person:
Stands above, but the people are not weighed down;
stands out in front, but the people are not harmed;
and so the world delights in praising him, and does not tire.
Because of his not contending,
no one in the world can contend with him.

[66c33t] Cheng Lin
That the rivers and seas are the lords of all waterways is because they occupy the lowest position, which fact is the cause of their lordship.
Wherefore, he who wishes to be above the people must be content to be at the bottom.
He who wishes to be at the head of the people must be content to be in the rear.
Thus the Sage occupies a superior position, and the people do not find it burdensome.
He occupies a leading position, and the people do not find it irksome.
Therefore the whole Empire takes delight, and is never weary of paying him homage.
Because he himself does not strive for superiority, there is none in this world who can contend with his superiority.

[66c34t] Yi Wu
The reason rivers and seas are able to be the kings of all valleys
Is because they excel in taking the lowest places.
So, they become the kings of all valleys.
Therefore, one who wants to be above the people
Surely must, in words, be below them.
One who wants to stay before people
Surely must, in body, stay behind them.
Therefore, though the Sage's place is above,

The people are not burdened.
The Sage is ahead,
But the people are not obstructed.
Therefore, the world happily praises and does not tire of him.
Because he does not compete,
The world cannot compete with him.

[66c35t] Han Hiong Tan
How does the sea become the king of all waters?
It is because it is good at lying low.
Hence, it is the king of all waters.
Therefore, the sage must be modest in order to reign successfully.
In order to lead, the sage must follow the people wishes.
Consequently, when the sage reigns, people are not oppressed.
When the sage leads, the people are not suppressed.
Hence, the sage is esteemed and not hated.
As the sage does not contend,
No one can contend with him.

[66c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
How does the sea become the queen of all rivers and streams?
By lying lower than they do!
Hence, it is the queen of all rivers and streams.
One who humbles himself, therefore, can serve all people.
By putting himself last, he comes to be their leader.
Thus, when one of subtle virtue is set above people,
they do not feel that he is their burden.
And, when he stands in front of people,
they do not feel that he is an obstruction to them.
Therefore, the world follows one of subtle virtue joyfully,
and never tires of doing so.
He does not compete with anyone,
thus he is above all competition.

[66c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Rivers and seas become the leading powers over all the waters from the highlands
Because they place themselves in low positions before the other waters.
That is why rivers and seas become the leading powers over all the waters from the highlands.
Thus, when the ruler wishes to become the leader of his people,
He first humbles himself before them.
When he wishes to be in front of his people,
He first remains in back of them.
When he is in a high position, people do not feel his authority.
When he is in front of his people, they do not feel any obstruction.
Therefore, all the people want to support him, and no one dislikes him.
It is because he never contends with others that others are unable to quarrel with him.

Apres Vous
Hou Chi
That rivers and seas can be kings of all valleys
Is because they are good in staying low.
That's why they can be kings of all valleys.
Thus the Sage wishing to be above the people
Always speaks as if he were inferior to them;
And wishing to lead the people,
Always places himself behind them.
So when the Sage occupies a high position,
The people do not feel any oppression;
And when he occupies a leading position,
The people do not receive any harm.
Therefore the world is glad to support him,
And never gets tired of doing so.
Because he does not contend,
No one in the world can contend with him.

[66c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The great rivers and seas are kings of hundred valleys,
Because they are good at keeping low.
That is why they can be kings of hundred valleys.
Therefore, if you want to stand above the people,
You must keep low in speaking to them.
If you want to stand ahead of the people,
You must put yourself behind them.
For this reason the sage
Is above the people yet does not weigh heavy on them;
He is ahead of the people yet causes no harm to them.
Therefore all under Heaven are happy to uphold him and never tire of him.
Because he does not contend,
No one under Heaven can contend with him.

[66c40t] Tao Huang
The reason why rivers and seas have the capacity for kingship over all the valleys is that they excel in lowliness.
That is why they have the capacity for kingship over all valleys.
Thus, since the sage wants to elevate the people, his speech is down to earth.
Since the sage wants to advance the people, he positions himself at the back,
So that when he is at the front, people do not harm him.
When he stands above, people do not feel pressure.
The whole world supports him untiringly.
Since he does not rely on competition, the world has nothing with which to compete.

Oceans and rivers can be the destinations of a hundred waters because the former place themselves just lower than the latter, thus they can be the destinations of a hundred waters.
Hence if one wishes to be on top of others he must place himself lower than others;
If he wishes to lead others he must put his own interest behind others.
Hence, when a Sage ruler was on top of others, yet, they did not feel pressure;
when he was in front of others, still, they did not feel hurt.
And the whole world was glad to have him on top, and did not weary of him.
Because of non-struggle, therefore, there is nothing under heaven which can struggle with him.

[66c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The great rivers and seas are kings of all mountain streams
Because they skillfully stay below them.
That is why they can be their kings.
Therefore, in order to be the superior of the people,
One must, in the use of words, place himself below them.
And in order to be ahead of the people,
One must, in one's own person, follow them.
Therefore the sage places himself above the people and they do not feel his weight.
He places himself in front of them and the people do not harm him.
Therefore the world rejoices in praising him without getting tired of it.
It is precisely because he does not compete that the world cannot compete with him.

Моря и реки потому способны царствовать над горными потоками, что умеют быть внизу.
Только поэтому они способны царствовать над горными потоками.
И при желании подняться над народом следует словесно перед ним принизиться, при желании быть впереди народа следует поставить себя сзади его.
Именно поэтому, когда Премудрый человек встает над всеми, народу он не делается в тягость;
когда он пребывает впереди, народу не наносится вреда.
Все в Поднебесной с радостью его выдвигают и им не пресыщаются.

Вот почему они могут быть властителями сотен долин.
Поэтому тот, кто желает возвыситься над людьми, в речах своих должен ставить себя ниже их.
Тот, кто желает идти впереди людей, должен встать позади них.
Вот почему мудрец стоит над людьми, но не бывает им в тягость;

Поэтому совершенномудрый, желая над народом вознестись, словами должен унижать себя;
желая стать впереди народа, ставить самого себя позади всех.
Поэтому, когда совершенномудрый возвышается над народом, народ не чувствует обузы;
находится впереди народа, народ не страдает.
Таким образом, вся Поднебесная, ликуя, несет его вперед, не чувствуя никакого гнета.
Поскольку он ни с кем не борется, и с ним никто в Поднебесной не борется.

Реки и моря потому могут быть царями ста долин,
что они с легкостью ставят себя ниже их.
Вот почему [они] могут быть царями ста долин.
Поэтому, желая встать над народом, непременно говори, что ты ниже его.
Желая встать впереди народа, непременно ставь себя позади него.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек, утверждаясь наверху,
народу не в тягость, находясь впереди, народу не вредит.
Оттого-то Поднебесная с радостью выдвигает [его],

Когда он желает быть впереди людей, он должен ставить себя позади других.
Поэтому хотя он и стоит над народом, но народу он не в тягость;
хотя он находится впереди, народ ему не вредит.
Поэтому люди с радостью его выдвигают и от него не отворачиваются.
Он не борется, благодаря чему он в мире непобедим.

[66c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Причина того, что реки и моря суть цари многочисленных долин (по которым текут речки), заключается в том, что первые находятся ниже последних.
Вот почему реки и моря суть цари многочисленных долин.
Когда святой желает поднять народ, то понижает его.
Когда он желает поставить его вперед, то ставит его назад.
Отсюда - когда народ займет высокое место, то не будет гордиться;
когда пойдет вперед, то никому не сделает вреда.
Когда осуществится все, что сказано мною, то на всей земле будет мир.
Когда будет мир на всей земле, то не будет ссоры.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Seven

1073/2593

[67c01t] Robert G. Henricks

The {whole} world says, I'm Great;
Great, yet unlike [everyone else].
But it's precisely because I'm unlike [everyone else], that I'm therefore able to be Great.
Were I like [everyone else], for a long time now I'd have seemed insignificant and small.
I constantly have three treasures;
Hold on to them and treasure them.
The first is compassion;
The second is frugality;
And the third is not presuming to be at the forefront in the world.
Now, it's because I'm compassionate that I therefore can be courageous;
And it's because I'm frugal that I therefore can be magnanimous;
And it's because I don't presume to be at the forefront in the world that I therefore can be the head of those with complete talent.
Now, if you abandon this compassion and yet try to be courageous,
And if you abandon this frugality and yet try to be magnanimous,
And if you abandon this staying behind and yet go to the fore,
Then you will die.
If with compassion you attack, then you'll win;
If you defend, then you'll stand firm.
When Heaven's about to establish him,
It's as though he surrounds him with the protective wall of compassion.

[67c02t] John C. H. Wu

ALL the world says that my Tao is great, but seems queer, like nothing on earth.
But it is just because my Tao is great that it is like nothing on earth!
If it were like anything on earth, how small it would have been from the very beginning!
I have Three Treasures, which I hold fast and watch over closely.
The first is Mercy.
The second is Frugality.
The third is Not Daring to Be First in the World.
Because I am merciful, therefore I can be brave.
Because I am frugal, therefore I can be generous.
Because I dare not be first, therefore I can be the chief of all vessels.
If a man wants to be brave without first being merciful, generous without first being frugal, a leader without first wishing to follow, he is only courting death!
Mercy alone can help you to win a war.
Mercy alone can help you to defend your state.
For Heaven will come to the rescue of the merciful, and protect him with its Mercy.

[67c03t] D. C. Lau

It is because it is vast that it resembles nothing.
If it resembled anything, it would, long before now, have become small.
I have three treasures
Which I hold and cherish.
The first is known as compassion,
The second is known as frugality,
The third is known as not daring to take the lead in the empire;
Being compassionate one could afford to be courageous,
Being frugal one could afford to extend one's territory,
Not daring to take the lead in the empire one could afford to be lord over the vessels.
Now, to forsake compassion for courage, to forsake frugality for expansion, to forsake the rear for the lead, is sure to end in death.
Through compassion, one will triumph in attack and be impregnable in defence.
What heaven succours it protects with the gift of compassion.

[67c04t] R. L. Wing
All the world thinks that my Tao is great;
And yet it seems inconceivable.
Only its greatness makes it seem inconceivable.
If it could be conceived of,
It would have become insignificant long ago.
I have Three Treasures that support and protect:
The first is compassion.
The second is moderation.
The third is daring not to be first in the world.
With compassion one becomes courageous;
With moderation one becomes expansive.
In daring not to be first in the world,
One becomes the instrument of leadership.
Now if one is courageous without compassion, Or expansive without moderation,
Or first without holding back, One is doomed!
Compassion always triumphs when attacked;
It brings security when maintained.
Nature aids its leaders
By arming them with compassion.

[67c05t] Ren Jiyu
All the people under Heaven say that my Tao is great,
But it is not like anything concrete.
Just because it is great,
It is not like anything concrete.
If it is like something concrete,
It would have been very small for long.
I have three precious things which I hold up and preserve:
The first is "tolerance";
The second is "economy";

1074/2593 Underdog_way.pdf, revision 8, sanmayce@hotmail.com, a corpus of 50(42 english, 8 russian) proofed(many originals' bugs crushed) translations of 老子道德經 or Lao Zi Dao De Jing

Underdog_way.pdf, revision 8, sanmayce@hotmail.com, a corpus of 50(42 english, 8 russian) proofed(many originals' bugs crushed) translations of 老子道德經 or Lao Zi Dao De Jing

The third is "to dare not go ahead of all the people under Heaven."
With tolerance, one can be brave;
With economy, one can be generous;
With not daring to go ahead of all the people under Heaven, one can be a leader.
Now,
seeking bravery without tolerance,
seeking generosity without economy,
and seeking precedence without retreat will only end with death.
With tolerance, one can be victorious in war or strengthen himself in defense.
When Heaven is to save a person, it will protect him through tolerance.

[67c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Everyone under heaven says that my Tao is great and beyond compare.
Because it is great, it seems different.
If it were not different, it would have vanished long ago.
I have three treasures which I hold and keep.
The first is mercy; the second is economy;
The third is daring not to be ahead of others.
From mercy comes courage; from economy comes generosity;
From humility comes leadership.
Nowadays men shun mercy, but try to be brave;
They abandon economy, but try to be generous;
They do not believe in humility, but always try to be first.
This is certain death.
Mercy brings victory in battle and strength in defense.
It is the means by which heaven saves and guards.

[67c07t] Lok Sang Ho
All under heaven say that my Dao though great seems to be useless.
Exactly because it is great it seems to be useless.
If it seemed to be useful, in all likelihood it would be small, not great.
I have three treasures that I keep and adhere to always.
The first is compassion.
The second is thrift.
The third is humility.
Because I am compassionate, I have courage.
Because I am thrifty, I am generous.
Because I am humble, my potential can be fully developed.
These days people have forgotten about compassion,
instead they are daring;
They have forgotten about thrift,
instead they are spendthrift;
They have forgotten about humility,
and they always want to be number one.
They are doomed.

He who fights a war with compassion will win the war.
He who defends with compassion will hold out against his enemy.
Heaven will help him and defend him with compassion.

[67c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Everyone says my DAO is so great that it does not look like anything.
I say because it is so great, it does not look like anything.
If it were like anything, it would have disappeared long ago.
I have three treasures to keep and protect:
The first is kindness, the second is thrift, and the third is not fighting to be first.
Only if you are kind, can you be brave;
Only if you are thrifty, can you be generous;
Only if you do not fight to be first, can you be a leader.
However, the people today are not kind but brave,
Are not thrifty but generous,
Are not humble but want to be leaders.
These people are destined for failure.
With kindness, when you fight, you will win; when you defend, you will be strong.
If the heavens wants to save someone, it will always give him kindness as his defense.

[67c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THREE PRECIOUS THINGS
All the world avows that while my Taoism is great, it is yet incompetent!
It is its greatness which makes it appear incompetent.
If it were like others, it would long ago have been recognised as incompetent.
But I hold fast to three precious things, which also I cherish.
The first is gentleness.
The second is economy.
The third is humility.
With such gentleness I can be daring.
With such economy I can be generous.
With such humility I can be great in service, as a vessel of honour.
But in these days men forsake gentleness and become only obtrusive.
They abandon economy and become only excessive.
They relinquish humility and strive for precedence, and thus for death.
Gentleness is ever victorious in attack and secure in defence.
Therefore when Heaven would preserve a man it enfolds him with gentleness.

[67c10t] James Legge
All the world says that, while my Tao is great, it yet appears to be inferior (to other systems of teaching).
Now it is just its greatness that makes it seem to be inferior.
If it were like any other (system), for long would its smallness have been known!
But I have three precious things which I prize and hold fast.
The first is gentleness;
the second is economy;
and the third is shrinking from taking precedence of others.
With that gentleness I can be bold;

with that economy I can be liberal;
shrinking from taking precedence of others, I can become a vessel of the highest honour.
Now-a-days they give up gentleness and are all for being bold; economy, and are all for being liberal;
the hindmost place, and seek only to be foremost;
- (of all which the end is) death.
Gentleness is sure to be victorious even in battle, and firmly to maintain its ground.
Heaven will save its possessor, by his (very) gentleness protecting him.

People throughout all beneath heaven say my Tao is so vast it's like nothing at all.
But it's only vast because it's like nothing at all:
if it were like anything else
it would have long since become trifling.
There are three treasures
I hold and nurture:
The first is called compassion,
the second economy,
and the third never daring to lead all beneath heaven.
Courage comes of compassion, generosity comes of economy, and commanding leadership comes of never daring to lead all beneath heaven.
But these days it's all courage without compassion, generosity without economy, and leading without following.
There's nothing but death in that.
To overcome, attack with compassion.
To stand firm, defend with compassion.
Whatever heaven sustains it shelters with compassion.

All under heaven say I am vast;
Vast, but resemble nothing.
It is precisely because I resemble nothing
That I can be vast.
If I had resembled anything,
Long ago I would have become tiny indeed.
I constantly have three treasures
Which I uphold and value:
First, compassion;
Second, frugality;
Third, not daring to precede all under heaven.
Being compassionate,
I can be courageous;
Being frugal,
I can be all-embracing;
Not daring to precede all under heaven,

I can serve as
Head of the great vessels.
Now, if I had abandoned compassion and chosen courage,
Abandoned frugality and chosen all-embracingness;
Abandoned the back and chosen the front,
It would have been the death of me.
For compassion, used in battle,
Will bring you victory;
Used in defence,
Will make you impregnable.
When heaven is about to establish someone,
It seems to wall him up with compassion.

All under heaven say that my Tao is great,
That it seems useless (pu hsiao).
Because it is great,
Therefore it seems useless.
If it were useful,
It would have long been small.
I have three treasures (pao),
To hold and to keep:
The first is motherly love (tz'u),
The second is frugality (chien),
The third is daring not be at the world's front.
With motherly love one can be courageous,
With frugality one can be wide reaching,
Daring not be at the world's front,
One can grow to a full vessel (ch'i).
Now to discard motherly love, yet to be courageous,
To discard frugality, yet to be wide reaching,
To discard staying behind, yet to be at the front,
One dies!
One with motherly love is victorious in battle,
Invulnerable in defense.
When Heaven wills to save a people,
It guards them with motherly love.

[nothing more than] trivial talks too!
I have three pieces of treasure which I maintain steadily;
The first one is compassion;
The second one is frugality;
The third one is "I would never dare to consider myself the first priority of the world." (I will always be selfless and humble).
Through being compassionate, a person will be brave;
Through being frugal, a person can [retain enough] to expand;
Through being selfless and humble, a person will complete [the proper development] to be an [authentic] leader of people;
Nowadays, leaders abandon compassion yet demand bravery from people;
They neglect the practice of frugality, yet seek expansion;
They discard humility, yet strive to lead the world.
All these performances are heading for end (death of their nation)!
Soldiers, who march to the battlefield with compassion in their hearts, will win the fight;
People, who stay behind to defend with compassion in their hearts, will resist [the aggression] firmly;
If Heaven will save a country, it will bestow its people with compassion in their hearts to protect it.

[67c15t] Tien Cong Tran
All the world says that my Way is great, but seems queer, like nothing on earth.
But it is just because my Way is great that it is like nothing on earth.
If it were like anything on earth, it would have been small from the very beginning.
I have three treasures, which I hold fast and watch over closely.
The first is compassion; the second is frugality; the third is not daring to be first in the world.
Being compassionate, I can be brave; being frugal, I can be generous; daring not be first, I can be the chief.
If a man forsakes compassion for courage, forsakes frugality for expansiveness, forsakes the rear position for front position, he is only courting death!
Compassionate to engage in war, one wins; in defense, one is secure.
When Heaven wants to help a man, it takes compassion to protect him.

People in the world say to me that Tao is great but it resembles nothing.
It is because of the greatness that nothing is like it.

I have three great treasures - Hold and maintain them.
The first is kindness.
The second is frugality.
The third is the reluctance to be prestigious in the world.
Being kind, one can have courage.
Being frugal, one can grow wide.
Reluctance to be prestigious, one can become the leader.
If one is courageous without kindness, expanding without frugality, and prestigious without modesty, he is doomed to fail.
With kindness, one would win in war, and be secure in defense.
When heaven come to rescue, it guards by using kindness.

Every one under heaven says that our Way is greatly like folly.
But it is just because it is great, that it seems like folly.
As for things that do not seem like folly - well, there can be no question about their smallness!
Here are my three treasures.
Guard and keep them!
The first is pity; the second, frugality; the third: refusal to be 'foremost of all things under heaven'.
For only he that pities is truly able to be brave;
Only he that is frugal is truly able to be profuse;
Only he that refuses to be foremost of all things
Is truly able to become chief of all Ministers.
At present your bravery is not based on pity, nor your profusion on frugality, nor your vanguard on your rear; and this is death.
But pity cannot fight without conquering or guard without saving.
Heaven arms with pity those whom it would not see destroyed.

[67c18t] Richard John Lynn

All under Heaven say that my Dao is great but seems to have no likeness [buxiao].
The reason why it seems to have no likeness is that greatness is its only attribute.
If it had a likeness, all this time it would have been insignificant!
I have three treasures, which I hold tight and protect.
The first is called "kindness," the second "frugality," and the third is "no presumption that I am first among all under Heaven."
It is thanks to kindness that one can be brave.
It is thanks to frugality that one can be generous.
It is by not presuming to be first among all under Heaven that one can make one's ready device last long.
Now, if one abandons kindness and takes bravery, abandons frugality and takes generosity, and abandons the back and takes first place, such a one will die!
Thanks to kindness, when one takes the field, he is victorious, and, when he takes a defensive position, he holds firm, for it is Heaven that will save him by protecting him with guards of kindness.

THE THREE TREASURES
All the world says:
My teaching (Tao) greatly resembles folly.
Because it is great; therefore it resembles folly.
If it did not resemble folly,
It would have long ago become petty indeed!
I have Three Treasures;
Guard them and keep them safe:
The first is Love.
The second is, never too much.
The third is, never be the first in the world.
Through Love, one has no fear;
Through not doing too much, one has amplitude (of reserve power);

Through not presuming to be the first in the world, one can develop one's talent and let it mature.
If one forsakes love and fearlessness, forsakes restraint and reserve power, forsakes following behind and rushes in front,
He is doomed!
For love is victorious in attack,
And invulnerable in defense.
Heaven arms with love
Those it would not see destroyed.

All under heaven say that I am great, great but unconventional.
Now,
Precisely because I am unconventional,
I can be great;
If I were conventional,
I would long since have become a trifle.
I have always possessed three treasures that I guard and cherish.
The first is compassion,
The second is frugality,
The third is not daring to be ahead of all under heaven.
Now,
Because I am compassionate, I can be brave;
Because I am frugal, I can be magnanimous;
Because I dare not be ahead of all under heaven, I can be a leader in the completion of affairs.
If, today, I were to
Be courageous while forsaking compassion,
Be magnanimous while forsaking frugality,
Get ahead while forsaking the hindmost,
that would be death!
For compassion
In war brings victory,
In defense brings invulnerability.
Whomsoever heaven would establish,
It surrounds with a bulwark of compassion.

I have three treasures that I cherish and hold fast.
The first is gentleness,
the second is simplicity,
the third is daring not to be first among all things under heaven.
Because of gentleness I am able to be courageous.
Because of simplicity I am able to be generous.

Because of daring not to be first I am able to lead.
If people
forsake gentleness and attempt to be courageous, forsake simplicity and attempt to be generous,

this is certain death.
Gentleness conquers in battle and protects in defense.
What heaven guards, it arms with the gift of gentleness.

People in the world say that my Direction is grand as if without a referent.
It is because it is grand that Direction is without a referent.
Were it capable of being referenced, it would not be grand.
I have three treasures - embrace and safeguard them.
One, affection.
Two, restraint.
Three, daring not to be at the front of [the people] of the world.
With affection, one becomes courageous;
With restraint, one becomes tolerant;
Daring not to be at the front of the world, one is at the head.
One courts death if one
forsakes affection for courage,
forsakes restraint for tolerance,
forsakes humility for prominence.
With affection,
in war, one wins;
in defense, strengthens.
When cosmos comes to the rescue, it shields with affection.

There are three treasures that I hold and cherish:
The first is tenderheartedness.
The second is thrift.
The third is daring not to be first in the world.
From tenderheartedness comes courage.
From thrift comes generosity.
From humility comes leadership.
If you try to be courageous without being tenderhearted,
If you try to be generous without being thrifty,
If you try to be a leader without learning humility,
You are courting your own self-destruction.
Venture with tenderheartedness and you will win the battle.

What the Tao is to the world,
So the streams and valleys are to the rivers and seas.
Rivers and seas can be like kings to all the streams and valleys
Since the former can lower themselves before the latter.
Thus they are the kings of all the streams and valleys.
Therefore the sage, in order to be above the people,
Must lower himself before them in words,
And in order to head the people,
He must place himself behind them in body.
Thus, when he is above the people, the people do not suffer at his hand,
When he is at the head of the people, the people are not held back by him.
Therefore the whole world wants to carry him on its shoulders
And never tires of him.
He competes with nobody,
And therefore nobody competes with him.

I have three priceless treasures:
The first is Compassion
The second, thrift
And the third is that I never want to be ahead of you.
If I have compassion, you will die for me.
I know that.
If I waste nothing, I can give myself to you all -
And if I don't seem perfect, then you'll trust me to lead you.
These days people scorn compassion.
They try to be tough.
They spend all they have, and yet want to be generous.
They despise humility, and want to be the best.
I tell you that way is Death's.
If you have loved your people, you will know it they will fight tooth and nail for you in attack or defence.
This is the protection of Heaven, and your harvest.

Which I hold and treasure:
The first is mercy;
The second is thrift;
The third is unwillingness to take the lead in the world.
Being merciful, one can be brave;
Being thrifty, one can be generous;
Being unwilling to take the lead in the world, one can become the leader of the world.
Now seeking bravery by giving up mercy,
Seeking generosity by giving up thrift,
Seeking advance by giving up retreat,
One is bound to end in death.
Being merciful, one will triumph in the offensive
And be impregnable in defense.
If heaven wants to save one,
It must save him with mercy.

The whole world says that the Tao is great, and that it seems without form.
It is great - that is why it has no form.
It has existed for a long time, and can also seem small.
I have three treasures that I keep and protect:
the first is goodheartedness,
the second is frugality,
the third is not daring to take the lead.
Only goodheartedness can bring courage.
Only frugality can bring generosity.
Not daring to take the lead can bring leadership.
Now to give up goodheartedness for courage, frugality for generosity, the rear for the lead, will surely lead to the end.
Goodheartedness in battle will lead to victory,
and defence will strengthen the territory.
Heaven will save the one who follows this and guard him with goodheartedness.

And nothing could be like it.
Because it is the biggest,

Lagging behind, one can grow to the fullest.

The absurdity of today is this:
Foolhardiness is preferred more than motherly love;
Wastefulness preferred more than frugality;
Front positions preferred more than growing to the fullest.
The result can be nothing other than death!
Cherishing motherly love,
An army is invincible,
And unconquerable,
Because it is protected by Heaven with love.

The Three Treasures
Lao Tze says,
All the people in the world would say that my Tao is too great and that there is nothing similar to compare it with.
Now it is just because of its greatness that nothing similar can be compared with it.
If anything can be found similar to it, for long its smallness has been known.
At the same time, there are three precious things which I prize and hold fast.
The first is charity;
the second is economy;
and the third is shrinking from being the first of the world.
With that charity I can be bold.
With that economy I can be liberal.
Shrinking from being the first of the world, I can become a vessel of the highest value.
Present day kings give up charity, and are all for being bold;
give up economy, and are all for being liberal;
give up following behind, and rush in front;
of which the end is death.
For the result of using charity in battle is sure to be victory,

Heaven will save its possessor, his charitable attribute will protect him.

The world thinks that Truth which I describe is so great that it seems unreal.
It seems unreal because it is indeed so great.
If it were considered real, then it must be small.

The first is compassion.
The second is frugality.
The third is humility.
Because of compassion, there is courage.
Because of frugality, there is liberality.
Because of humility, there is supremacy.
Perdition will be the lot of those who choose courage, and abandon compassion;
who choose liberality, and abandon frugality;
who choose supremacy, and abandon humility.
When there is compassion, one can be victorious in an offensive war, and hold his position in a defensive war.

It protects him with compassion.

[67c35t] Han Hiong Tan

Everyone says that Dao is so huge that it does not resemble anything we know.
As it is so phenomenally huge, it becomes incomparable.
If it does remotely resemble something on earth, then with the passage of time, its uniqueness will evaporate and gradually become inconsequential.
I steadfastly hold on to my three treasures.
These are compassion, frugality and humility.
With compassion, I can arouse real courage from my subordinates.
With frugality, I would enjoy popular support.
With humility, I become the natural leader.
Let us examine the following scenarios.
Demanding bravery from the subjects without showing compassion towards them,
Expecting popular support without dispensing benefits,
And wanting to become the leader without exhibiting humility.
These are negative attributes that will lead to self-destruction.
By applying compassion in war, you will be triumphant in attack and invincible in defence.
When Providence wants to save a nation,
It does so by bestowing great compassion to its leader.

[67c36t] Hua-Ching Ni

The world may say that the subtle Way of the universe which I describe is great, but that it has little bearing on worldly life.
Truly, it is just that it is not definable, like the small ways of the world, thus it is indeed great.
There are three treasures which I embrace and follow closely:
the first is to be kind;
the second is to be simple;
the third is to not put one's own importance first in the world.
Because kindness and compassion can produce courage, simplicity can thus be broadened to contain the world.
By not putting your own importance first in worldly affairs,
you will not impede the natural growth of all things.
If a person endeavors to be brave without first being kind,
great purposed, without first simplifying his life,
an authority, without first denying himself,
he cannot evolve freely from strife, and is only courting destruction.
Kindness can help to win a war.
Kindness can help to defend a fortification.
Kindness will invite the corresponding energy of kindness from Heaven through all the divine beings who support and protect.

The world says that I am beyond determination
And cannot be identified with anything.
It is because I am beyond determination that I cannot be identified with anything.

If I could be identified with anything,
I would no longer be beyond determination.
There are three essentials that I value and maintain:
One is compassion (tz'u),
Another is renunciation (ch'ien),
The third is never longing to be first in the world.
One who is compassionate is able to be valiant.
One who renounces is able to broaden one's self.
One who never longs to be first in the world
Is able to achieve the full growth of his capacity.
In the present day, people wish to be valiant,
But they are not compassionate.
They wish to broaden their selves,
But they do not renounce.
They wish to achieve the full growth of their capacities,
But they long to be first in the world.
This indeed leads to death.
Through compassion, engaging in war, one wins.
In self-defense, one is very well protected.
This type of person is saved by heaven.
Because he is compassionate, he is taken care of well.

Three Treasures
San Pao
All the world says I am great
But rather odd and different from the ordinary.
Be it noted that greatness itself is the very reason
Why it appears rather odd and different from the ordinary.
If it had resembled the ordinary,
It would have become pettiness long ago.
I have three treasures.
Keep them and treasure them.
The first is compassion;
The second is frugality;
The third is:
Dare not be first in the world.
Because compassionate, a person can be courageous;
Because frugal, he can expand his scope;
Because he dare not be first in the world, he can develop his gifts of leadership.
Nowadays people are courageous without compassion,
Expand their scope without frugality,
And assume leadership without being humble.
They are doomed!
Compassion is invincible in offense,
And in defense invulnerable.

When Heaven wants to deliver a person from harm,
It grants him compassion as a protective charm.

[67c39t] Ha Poong Kim
All under Heaven says that
My Tao is great yet doesn't look like it [Tao].
Truly, because it is great,
It doesn't look like it.
If it did,
It would have turned out a petty one long ago.
I have three treasures.
I hold and cherish them.
The first is called mercifulness;
The second, frugality;
The third, refusal to be ahead of all under Heaven.
Being merciful, you can therefore be brave;
Being frugal, you can therefore be liberal;
Refusing to be ahead of all under Heaven,
You can therefore become the leader of the vessels.
Now, to be brave, forsaking mercifulness,
To be liberal, forsaking frugality,
To be ahead, forsaking being behind
Is death.
With mercifulness -
If you fight, you will be triumphant,
If you defend, you will be invincible.
Whatever Heaven is about to save
Heaven will protect it with mercifulness.

[67c40t] Tao Huang
Everyone in the world says I am great, great without parallel.
Being without parallel is what enables greatness.
If there is a long-standing parallel, it becomes small.
I always have three treasures:
First is compassion.
Second is frugality.
Third is to not dare act in front of the world.
So compassion enables courage.
Frugality enables abundance.
Not daring to act in front of the world enables the mechanism to endure.
Today there is courage without compassion.
There is abundance without frugality.
There is appearance alone without substance.
This means no-life.
Through compassion: fight and win, defend and be secure.
When the heaven establishes itself, it always relies upon compassion.

[67c41t] Tang Zi-chang

All in the world may think that Dao is unlike to be so superior, that nothing in the world can compare to it.
If it were comparable to anything, it would be inferior.
If it is not superior, it would not be Dao.
I have three treasured strategies to which I hold fast and embrace them all:
the first is Mercy;
the second is Economy of Force;
and the third is Dare Not to Take Initiative Before the World.
Because of Mercy, one can be courageous.
Because of Economy of Force, one can have superior force.
Because of Dare Not To Take Initiative Before the World, one can be the master of instruments.
Alas!
Nowadays, rulers want to be brave without being merciful;
want to have superior force without knowing economy of force;
and want to take initiative without being able to be resistant.
They will surely die in the war.
Mercy helps one to win when on the offensive;
to consolidate when on the defensive.
If one guides oneself by mercy Heavens will protect him.

[67c42t] Wing-tsit Chan

All the world says that my Tao is great and does not seem to resemble (the ordinary).
It is precisely because it is great that it does not resemble (the ordinary).
If it did resemble, it would have been small for a long time.
I have three treasures.
Guard and keep them:
The first is deep love,
The second is frugality,
And the third is not to dare to be ahead of the world.
Because of deep love, one is courageous.
Because of frugality, one is generous.
Because of not daring to be ahead of the world, one becomes the leader of the world.
Now, to be courageous by forsaking deep love,
To be generous by forsaking frugality,
And to be ahead of the world by forsaking following behind -
This is fatal.
For deep love helps one to win in the case of attack,
And to be firm in the case of defense.
When Heaven is to save a person,
Heaven will protect him through deep love.

У меня есть три сокровища, я их держусь и берегу.
Одно зовется материнскою любовью,
второе - бережливостью,
а третье - тем, когда не смеют находиться впереди других.
Люблю по-матерински и поэтому способен преисполниться бесстрашия, обладаю бережливостью и потому способен обрести широкость,
не смею находиться впереди других и потому способен стать распорядителем готовых чаш.
Кто отрекается любить по-матерински и предпочитает быть бесстрашным, отбрасывает бережливость и предпочитает широту, отказывается быть сзади и предпочитает находиться впереди,
того ждет гибель.
Когда сражаются, преисполняясь материнскою любовью, побеждают,
а оборона с ее помощью становится незыблемой.
Спасение грядет от Неба, дающего защиту с материнскою любовью.

[67c92t] А. А. Маслов
Все в мире говорят, что моё Дао велико и ни на что не похоже.
Лишь потому, что оно велико, оно и ни на что не похоже.
Если бы оно походило на что-нибудь, то давно бы стало едва приметным.
Я обладаю тремя сокровищами, [кои] храню и [коими] дорожу.
Первое - великодушие.
Второе - бережливость.
Третье - не смею быть первым в Поднебесной.
Благодаря великодушию могу быть храбрым.
Благодаря бережливости могу быть щедрым.
Благодаря тому, что не смею быть первым в Поднебесной, могу стать господином сосудов.
Сегодня те, кто жертвует великодушием ради храбрости, бережливостью ради щедрости, местом позади ради того, чтобы быть впереди, обречены на смерть.
Великодушием побеждаешь в наступлении и становишься неприступным в обороне.
Даже Небо спасает тех, кто бережёт себя великодушием.

[67c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
В Поднебесной все говорят, что я велик.
Но я вовсе не похож на великого.
Ведь поскольку я велик, я вовсе не похож на великого.
Если бы я долго был бы похож на великого, то давно бы уже стал ничтожным.
Ведь у меня есть три драгоценности, которые я храню и ценю:
Первая - это сострадание,
Вторая - это бережливость,
Третья - я не смею поставить себя впереди Поднебесной и поэтому могу стать во главе всех на свете.
Поскольку есть сострадание, есть и храбрость.
Поскольку есть бережливость, есть и великодушие.
Поскольку я ставлю себя позади, то оказываюсь впереди.
И так до самой смерти.
Ведь сострадательный побеждает в сражениях, а в обороне становится неуязвимым.
Небо всегда спасает того, кого сострадание хранит само.

В Поднебесной все называют мое Дао Великим, в подобии [ничему] не подобным.
А поскольку велико, поэтому в подобии [ничему] и не подобно.
Если уподобить [его] вечности, то и она будет крошечной.
Я имею три драгоценности, держусь их и дорожу ими.
Первая называется "милосердие",
вторая - "простота",
третья - "не смею встать впереди Поднебесной".
Милосерден, поэтому могу быть мужественным.
Прост, поэтому могу быть широким.
Не смею встать впереди Поднебесной, поэтому могу быть духовным вождем.
Ныне тому,
кто отбрасывает милосердие, а мужествен,
кто отбрасывает простоту, а широк, кто отбрасывает то, чтобы встать сзади, а становится впереди, - смерть!
Если, питая милосердие, начнешь войну - победишь.
Если организуешь оборону - будет крепка.
Небо поможет такому, милосердие защитит его.

[67c95t] Ян Хин-шун

Все говорят о том, что мое дао велико и не уменьшается.
Если бы оно уменьшилось, то после долгого времени оно стало бы маленьким.
Не уменьшается потому, что оно является великим.
Я имею три сокровища, которыми дорожу:
первое - это человеколюбие,
второе - бережливость,
а третье состоит в том, что я не смею быть впереди других.
Я человеколюбив, поэтому могу стать храбрым.
Я бережлив, поэтому могу быть щедрым.
Я не смею быть впереди других, поэтому могу стать умным вождем.
Кто храбр без человеколюбия, щедр без бережливости, находясь впереди, отталкивает тех, кто находится позади, - тот погибает.
Кто ведет войну человеколюбиво, побеждает,
и возведенная им оборона неприступна.
Небо его спасает, человеколюбие его охраняет.

[67c96t] Д. П. Конисси

На всей земле люди говорят, что мое Тао велико.
Правда, оно похоже на безумство, но несомненно велико.
Я имею три преимущества, которые я сохраняю как сокровище.
Первое из трех сокровищ есть человеколюбие.
Второе - бережливость.
Третье - смирение или то, благодаря чему я не желаю быть руководителем для всей земли.
Человеколюбивые храбры.

Бережливые щедры.
Смиренные или не желающие быть руководителями для всей земли будут полезны на долгое время.
Кто храбр, не зная человеколюбия, кто щедр, не зная бережливости, кто идет вперед, не зная смирения, тот погибнет.
Кто ведет войну ради человеколюбия, тот победит врагов.
Если он защитит народ, то оборона будет сильна.
Это потому, что его спасет Небо, которое дорожит подобным человеком.

[67c97t] В. В. Малявин
Все в мире говорят, что мой Путь велик, да как будто ни на что не годен.
Да, велик - и оттого как будто ни на что не годен!
Будь он для всего пригоден, давно бы уже измельчал.
Есть у меня три сокровища, я бережно их храню:
Первое - это любовь,
Второе - бережливость,
Третье - нежелание быть первым в мире.
Благодаря любви я могу быть отважен.
Благодаря бережливости, я могу быть щедр.
Благодаря нежеланию быть первым, я могу главенствовать в мире.
А быть отважным, отбросив любовь,
Быть щедрым, забыв бережливость,
Быть впереди, не умея быть позади, -
Это верная гибель.
Ибо любовь приносит победу тому, кто нападает,
И оберегает того, кто защищается.
Когда Небо желает кого-то спасти,
Оно окружает его любовью, словно прочной стеной.

[67c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
В Поднебесной всегда называют мой Путь великим.
А он, похоже, ни с чем не сравним.
Ведь только потому и велик.
Причинность:
В схожести ни с чем не сравним.
Если уподоблять, то с течением времени он становится крошечным.
У меня в наличии три драгоценности.
Удерживаю и сберегаю их.
Первая выражается в милосердии.
Вторая выражается в умеренности.
Третья выражается в том, что не осмеливаюсь осуществлять впереди Поднебесной.
Милосердие -
Причинность:
Способность к мужеству.
Умеренность -
Причинность:
Способность к широте.

оставив задних быть впереди - это смерть.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Eight

1096/2593

[68c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Therefore, one who is good at being a warrior doesn't make a show of his might;
One who is good in battle doesn't get angry;
One who is good at defeating the enemy doesn't engage him.
And one who is good at using men places himself below them.
This is called the virtue of not competing;
This is called [correctly] using men;
This is called matching Heaven.
It's the high point of the past.

[68c02t] John C. H. Wu
A GOOD soldier is never aggressive;
A good fighter is never angry.
The best way of conquering an enemy
Is to win him over by not antagonizing him.
The best way of employing a man
Is to serve under him.
This is called the virtue of non-striving!
This is called using the abilities of men!
This is called being wedded to Heaven as of old!

[68c03t] D. C. Lau
One who excels as a warrior does not appear formidable;
One who excels in fighting is never roused in anger;
One who excels in defeating his enemy does not join issue;
One who excels in employing others humbles himself before them.
This is known as the virtue of non-contention;
This is known as making use of the efforts of others;
This is known as matching the sublimity of heaven.

[68c04t] R. L. Wing
A skillful leader does not use force.
A skillful fighter does not feel anger.
A skillful master does not engage the opponent.
A skillful employer remains low.
This is called the power in not contending.
This is called the strength to employ others.
This is called the highest emulation of Nature.

[68c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who is good at being a shi (officer) does not boast of his martialism;
He who is good at fighting does not resort to his rage;

He who is skillful in winning against the enemy does not wrestle with them;
He who is skillful in managing his men has a modest attitude towards them.
This is called the De of not contending with others;
This is called the power of making use of others' force;
This is called being in accord with the Way of Heaven,
Thus it has been a principle very long since.

[68c06t] Gia-fu Feng
A good soldier is not violent.
A good fighter is not angry.
A good winner is not vengeful.
A good employer is humble.
This is known as the Virtue of not striving.
This is known as ability to deal with people.
This since ancient times has been known as the ultimate unity with heaven.

[68c07t] Lok Sang Ho
He who can offer wise counsel will not display his wisdom.
He who is a fine fighter will not lose temper.
He who is good in contests will not struggle with his contestants.
He who knows how to use people stays low and underneath them.
This is the virtue of non-struggle.
This is making use of others' full abilities.
This can be said to match heaven
And is really the best art handed down from the ancient days.

[68c08t] Xiaolin Yang
A good general does not look intimidating,
A good fighter does not look fierce,
A good conqueror does not squabble,
A good leader is always humble.
This is the DE of not fighting with people;
This is the strength of using the power of others;
This is the state of being the most harmonic with nature.

[68c09t] Walter Gorn Old, IMITATING HEAVEN
The good commander is not imperious.
The good fighter is not wrathful.
The greatest conqueror does not wage war.
The best master governs by condescension.
This is the virtue of not contending.
This is the virtue of persuasion.
This is the imitation of Heaven, and this was the highest aim of the ancients.

Assumes no martial port;
He who fights with most good will
To rage makes no resort.
He who vanquishes yet still
Keeps from his foes apart;
He whose hests men most fulfil
Yet humbly plies his art.
Thus we say, 'He ne'er contends,
And therein is his might.'
Thus we say, 'Men's wills he bends,
That they with him unite.'
Thus we say, 'Like Heaven's his ends,
No sage of old more bright.'

[68c11t] David Hinton
A noble official is never warlike, and a noble warrior is never angered.
A noble conqueror never faces an enemy,
and a noble leader stays below the people he wields.
This is called the Integrity of peacefulness, the power of wielding the people, the fullest extent of our ancient accord with heaven.

[68c12t] Chichung Huang
Therefore, a good commander is not militant;
A good strategist is not irritable;
A good vanquisher of enemies is not confrontational;
A good employer of men stays low to them.
This is called the virtue of noncontention;
This is called the ability of employing men;
This is called a match for heaven,
A paragon among the ancients.

[68c13t] Ellen M. Chen
A good captain does not exhibit his martial prowess.
A good warrior does not get himself angry.
A good conqueror of enemies does not instigate a combat.
A good employer of people puts himself below them.
This is called the power (te) of non-contention.
This is called using the strength of others.
This is called perfection (chi) in matching the heaven of old.

[68c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
An ingenious soldier does not accept a challenge [frivolously];
A dexterous fighter cannot be aroused to anger [easily];
A shrewd victory-bound party defeats his enemy by avoiding direct confrontations;

This is what is called the virtue (achievement) of not contending;
This is what is called the power of utilizing people's labor [through delegating responsibilities];
This is what is called matching the paragon of Heaven.

[68c15t] Tien Cong Tran
A good warrior is not forceful.
A good fighter is not belligerent.
The best conqueror does not confront the enemy.
The best employer is under employees.
This is called non-striving Virtue.
This is called using the forces of others.
This is called being identified with the sublimity of old Heaven.

[68c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Those who are good at management rarely use force.
Those who are good at battles rarely lose their tempers.
Those who are good at winning over their rivals never let rivals take control.
Those who are good at employing people are modest.
This is the noncompetitive virtue.
This is the use of people's abilities.
This is called the best conformation to nature and history.

[68c17t] Arthur Waley
The best charioteers do not rush ahead;
The best fighters do not make displays of wrath;
The greatest conqueror wins without joining issue;
The best user of men acts as though he were their inferior.
This is called the power that comes of not contending,
Is called the capacity to use men,
The secret of being mated to heaven, to what was of old.

[68c18t] Richard John Lynn
One good at being a warrior is not warlike.
One good at warfare avoids anger.
One good at conquering the enemy does not join with him.
One good at using men places himself below them.
We refer to these as the virtue in not fighting and the power in using men.
Such a one is called a companion worthy of Heaven, the ultimate attainment achieved for all time.

[68c19t] Lin Yutang
THE VIRTUE OF NOT-CONTENDING

This is called "integrity without competition,"
This is called "using others,"
This is called "parity with heaven," - the pinnacle of the ancients.

[68c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
A skilled warrior does not rush ahead of others.
A skilled fighter does not make a show of anger.
A skilled victor does not seek revenge.
A skilled employer does not act superior.
This is known as the virtue of not competing.
This is known as making use of the abilities of others.
This is known as being united with heaven as it was in ancient times.

[68c22t] David H. Li
One good at commandership does not easily use force, one good at war is not easily provoked,
one good at winning does not easily engage in combat,
one good at deployment is obsequious.
This is the virtue of non-engagement; this is the ability at deployment.
This is fully consistent with the cosmos.

[68c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
A good warrior is never pugnacious.
A good fighter is never angry.
A good winner is never combative.
A good commander is always humble.
This is called the virtue of non-contention.
This is called using the strength of others.
This is called perfect emulation of heavenly virtue.

[68c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The whole world tells me:
"Great as the Tao is, it has no form."
Since it is great,
It has no form.
If it resembled any form,
It would have waned a long time ago.
I have three treasures that I keep and safeguard:

The first is called love,
The second is called moderation,
The third is called not jumping to the head of the entire world.
With love, a person can be courageous,
With moderation, a person can be generous,
And by not jumping to the head of the world, a person can be the master of all the ministers.
Without love, a person can only have courage,
Without moderation, a person can only have generosity,
And instead of staying behind, a person can go to the front.
This leads nowhere but to death.
The person who fights with love will win the battle,
The person who defends himself with love will be safe.
Heaven will save him and protect him with love.

[68c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
A canny soldier never provokes anyone,
And is never made to lose his temper.
A good fighter never confronts his enemy head-on,
And those who know how to handle people do it humbly.
This comes from the virtue of not-striving,
and from knowing how to link with other people's energy.
Since time gone in the mists this has been the way to 'pair up' with Heaven.

[68c26t] Gu Zhengkun
He who is good at being a commander
Does not display his bravery;
He who is good at fighting
Does not burst into anger;
He who is good at defeating his enemy
Does not brace himself to engage in a tough battle;
He who is good at employing men
Humbles himself before them;
This is called the virtue of non-contention;
This is called making use of others' strength;
This is called conformability to the Tao of heaven.

[68c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The perfect warrior does not flaunt his bravery.
The perfect fighter does not get angry.
The perfect winner does not reveal his tactics.
The perfect employer is humble before his employees.
This is called the virtue of non-fighting.
This is called the ability to manage others.
This is called uniting with the law of Heaven.
Since ancient times, it has been the highest goal.

A true gentleman admires no martial arts.
An invincible warrior never resorts to anger.
A true winner never appears in any encounter.
A wise employer never looks superior.
Holders of the true Way struggle for nothing of their own,
And depend on resources of strength other than their own.
The best ability of all time matches that of the heaven.

The Way to Triumph
Lao Tze says,
He who is skillful as a good warrior assumes no martial posture.
He who is skillful as a good gladiator will not rise in anger.
He who is skillful in vanquishing his foes will keep apart from them.
He who is skillful in employing will keep a low profile.
All these are the attributes of non-contention,
the methods of using man's abilities,
the way of matching with Heaven's secret,
and the highest art of antiquity.

[68c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
The best soldier is not soldierly;
The best fighter is not ferocious;
The best conqueror does not take part in war;
The best employer of men keeps himself below them.
This is called the virtue of not contending;
This is called the ability of using men;
This is called the supremacy of consorting with heaven.

[68c31t] Paul J. Lin
One who makes a good general is not warlike;
One who makes a good fighter is not angry;
One who makes a great conqueror of his enemies does not strive;
One who knows how to manage the people well places himself under them.
This is called the virtue of not competing.
This is called the power of using people.
This is called the match of Heaven, the ultimate of the Ancients.

[68c32t] Michael LaFargue
The best soldier is not warlike,
the best fighter shows no anger,
the one best at defeating the enemy does not engage him,
the one best at managing people puts himself below them.
This is the Te of not contending;
this is the power to manage people.

This is being the Counterpart of Heaven,
equalling the very best of the ancients.

[68c33t] Cheng Lin
The best warriors are not warlike.
The best strategists are not impulsive.
The best winners are not quarrelsome.
The best rulers are not arrogant.
All these indicate the virtue of non-contention,
the ability to employ men,
compliance with Heaven's sublime way.

[68c34t] Yi Wu
One who excels as a knight is not warlike.
One who excels as a warrior is not angry.
One who excels at winning over enemies does not strive with them.
One who excels at managing people puts himself beneath them.
This is called the virtue of not being competitive.
This is called using the power of people.
This is called "matching Heaven", the ultimate state of the ancients.

[68c35t] Han Hiong Tan
The accomplished general does not appear intimidating.
The consummate warrior does not exhibit any anger.
The victorious commander does not contend.
A good manager often appears meek and humble.
All the above examples display the virtue of non-contention.
With this virtue you can capitalise on others' expertise.
This is in accord with the way of Dao - the celestial way.

[68c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
A good warrior is never violent.
A good fighter is never offensive.
A great victor defeats his opponent, but not by challenging him.
A great commander is humble.
This is called the power of non-contention.
This is also called making use of the effort of others.
To follow this is to follow the pattern of the subtle law of the universe.

[68c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
A good soldier is free from violence.
A good fighter is free from rage.
A good winner is free from competition.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Sixty-Nine

1107/2593

[69c01t] Robert G. Henricks
Those who use weapons have a saying which goes:
"I don't presume to act like the host, and instead play the part of the guest;
I don't advance an inch, but rather retreat a foot."
This is called moving forward without moving forward -
Rolling up one's sleeves without baring one's arms -
Grasping firmly without holding a weapon -
And enticing to fight when there's no opponent.
Of disasters, none is greater than [thinking] you have no rival.
To think you have no rival is to come close to losing my treasures.
Therefore, when weapons are raised and [the opponents] are fairly well matched,
Then it's the one who feels grief that will win.

[69c02t] John C. H. Wu
THE strategists have a saying:
I dare not be a host, but rather a guest;
I dare not advance an inch, but rather retreat a foot.
This is called marching without moving,
Rolling up one's sleeves without baring one's arms,
Capturing the enemy without confronting him,
Holding a weapon that is invisible.
There is no greater calamity than to under-estimate the strength of your enemy.
For to under-estimate the strength of your enemy is to lose your treasure.
Therefore, when opposing troops meet in battle, victory belongs to the grieving side.

[69c03t] D. C. Lau
The strategists have a saying,
I dare not play the host but play the guest,
I dare not advance an inch but retreat a foot instead.
This is known as marching forward when there is no road,
Rolling up one's sleeves when there is no arm,
Dragging one's adversary by force when there is no adversary,
And taking up arms when there are no arms.
There is no disaster greater than taking on an enemy too easily.
So doing nearly cost me my treasure.
Thus of two sides raising arms against each other,
It is the one that is sorrow-stricken that wins.

[69c04t] R. L. Wing
The strategists have a saying:
"I dare not act as a host, Yet I act as a guest. I dare not advance an inch, Yet I retreat a foot."
This is called

Traveling without moving, Rising up without arms, Projecting without resistance, Capturing without strategies.
No misfortune is greater than underestimating resistance;
Underestimating resistance will destroy my Treasures.
Thus when mutually opposing strategies escalate,
The one who feels sorrow will triumph.

[69c05t] Ren Jiyu
A master of the art of war is very correct in saying:
"I dare not take the offensive, but prefer to take the defensive;
I dare not advance an inch, but prefer to retreat a foot."
This is called:
Disposing no lines of troops,
Raising no arms,
Confronting no enemy,
And grasping no weapons.
There is no disaster greater than underestimating the enemy,
Underestimating the enemy nearly makes me lose my "three precious things."
Therefore the side in grief conquers in case of the balance of the forces of two sides.

[69c06t] Gia-fu Feng
There is a saying among soldiers:
I dare not make the first move but would rather play the guest;
I dare not advance an inch but would rather withdraw a foot.
This is called marching without appearing to move,
Rolling up your sleeves without showing your arm,
Capturing the enemy without attacking,
Being armed without weapons.
There is no greater catastrophe than underestimating the enemy.
By underestimating the enemy, I almost lose what I value.
Therefore when the battle is joined,
The underdog will win.

[69c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Military strategists have this dictum:
"When I am not ready to take the role of the host (defend),
I will take the role of the guest (attack);
When I am not ready to advance an inch,
I will retreat a foot."
This is known as moving but not having a pattern of moving;
Pushing away, but not showing the arms to push with;
Dispelling, but not having visible enemies to dispel;
Taking command, but having no armies to take command over.
The greatest ill lies in slighting one's opponents;
Slighting my opponent, I could easily lose my treasure.
When two armies of equal strength meet in combat,

It is the army that considers itself weak that will win.

[69c08t] Xiaolin Yang
There is a saying in the military:
"I dare not attack but would rather retreat;
I dare not move forward an inch but would rather move back a foot."
This is called advancing without appearing to advance,
Making a resolution without rolling up your sleeves,
Carrying a weapon without revealing the weapon,
Preparing to fight without showing the preparation.
The biggest disaster is to underestimate the enemy;
Underestimating the enemy will cause you to lose all your armies.
When two fighting armies have similar strength, the side that is sorrowful and cautious will win.

[69c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE USE OF SUPREME VIRTUE
A great warrior has said, "I dare not be the host, I would rather be the guest; I dare not advance an inch, I would rather retire a foot."
Now this I call filing in without marshalling the ranks; baring the arms without preparing to fight; grasping the sword without unsheathing it; and advancing upon the enemy without coming into conflict.
There is nothing so unfortunate as entering lightly into battle.
For by so doing we are in danger of losing that which is most precious.
Thus it happens that when opposing forces meet in battle, he who feels the pity of it assuredly conquers.

[69c10t] James Legge
A master of the art of war has said,
'I do not dare to be the host (to commence the war);
I prefer to be the guest (to act on the defensive).
I do not dare to advance an inch;
I prefer to retire a foot.'
This is called marshalling the ranks where there are no ranks;
baring the arms (to fight) where there are no arms to bare;
grasping the weapon where there is no weapon to grasp;
advancing against the enemy where there is no enemy.
There is no calamity greater than lightly engaging in war.
To do that is near losing (the gentleness) which is so precious.
Thus it is that when opposing weapons are (actually) crossed, he who deplores (the situation) conquers.

[69c11t] David Hinton
There was once a saying among those who wielded armies:
I'd much rather be a guest than a host,
much rather retreat a foot than advance an inch.
This is called marching without marching,
rolling up sleeves without baring arms,
raising swords without brandishing weapons,
entering battle without facing an enemy.
There's no greater calamity than dishonoring an enemy.

Dishonor an enemy and you'll lose those treasures of mine.
When armies face one another in battle,
it's always the tender-hearted one that prevails.

[69c12t] Chichung Huang
A strategist once said:
"I dare not play the host,
Rather, I'd play the guest;
I dare not advance one inch,
Rather, I'd retreat one foot.
Which means:
Marching without ranks,
Baring no arms,
Holding no weapons,
I will still emerge invincible.
No calamity is greater than being invincible;
Being invincible almost cost me my treasures."
Therefore, when two confronting armies are equally matched,
The compassionate party wins.

[69c13t] Ellen M. Chen
In engaging in warfare it is said:
I dare not be the host but be the guest,
I dare not advance an inch but retreat a foot.
This is called to march without advancing,
To roll up one's sleeves without baring one's arms,
To throw a rope without an enemy,
To carry without a weapon.
Of all calamities (huo),
None is greater than underestimating one's enemy.
In underestimating my enemy,
I risk losing my treasure (pao).
Therefore when opposing armies are engaged in battle,
The sorrowful party will win.

[69c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
In ancient time a military strategist had once said:
"I do not dare to take the [subjective] position of a host in the battlefield, on the contrary, I adopt the [objective] position of a visitor;
I do not dare to advance one inch [counter-productively] at the cost of retreating one foot."
This game-plan was described [in military strategy] as:
"To march [in such secrecy] that the traces [of the procession of the army] are invisible;
To throw [so swiftly that observers] can not detect thrower's arms [in action];
To file soldiers [so unconventionally that it misleads] people to draw the conclusion that the army is not ready for combat yet;
To disguise [soldiers' weapons so skillfully that] there is no clue."

The mistake which is most disastrous [in military operation] is underestimating one's enemy;
Underestimating one's enemy will lose almost all my [three] treasures;
Therefore, when two combatant forces encounter each other, the one with mourning soldiers will prevail.

[69c15t] Tien Cong Tran

The strategists have a saying: I dare not be a host, but rather a guest; I dare not advance an inch, but rather retreat a foot.
This is called going without marching, rolling up one's sleeves without baring one's arms, capturing the enemy without confronting him, holding a weapon that is invisible.
There is no greater calamity than to underestimate the enemy.
To underestimate the enemy is to lose your treasure.
Therefore, when opposing troops meet in battle, victory belongs to the grieving side.

[69c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang

It is a military saying that when engaging in war, we do not aggress but defend; we do not advance an inch but retreat a foot.
This is marching without formation.
Do not roll up sleeves.
Confront no enemy.
Commit to no weapons.
The most serious mistake is to underestimate the enemy.
Underestimating the enemy almost caused me to lose my treasures.
Thus, when two comparable armies fight, the lamenting one wins.

[69c17t] Arthur Waley

The strategists have the sayings:
'When you doubt your ability to meet the enemy's attack, take the offensive yourself', and
'If you doubt your ability to advance an inch, then retreat a foot'.
This latter is what we call to march without moving,
To roll the sleeve, but present no bare arm,
The hand that seems to hold, yet has no weapon in it,
A host that can confront, yet presents no battle-front.
Now the greatest of all calamities is to attack and find no enemy.
I can have no enemy only at the price of losing my treasure.
Therefore when armies are raised and issues joined it is he who does not delight in war that wins.

[69c18t] Richard John Lynn

Military specialists have a saying:
"I dare not play the host but instead play the guest.
I dare not advance an inch but instead retreat a foot."
In other words,
campaign in such a way that there is no campaign;
push up your sleeve so that no arm is exposed;
wield weapons in such a way that no weapons are involved;
and lead in such a way that you face no opponent.
There is no greater disaster than having no viable opponent.

If one has no viable opponent, he will soon lose my [the Laozi's] treasures.
Thus, when they raise armies that are equally matched, he who feels pity will be the victor.

[69c19t] Lin Yutang
CAMOUFLAGE
There is the maxim of military strategists;
I dare not be the first to invade, but rather be the invaded.
Dare not press forward an inch, but rather retreat a foot.
That is,
To march without formations,
To roll not up the sleeves,
To charge not in frontal attacks,
To arm without weapons.
There is no greater catastrophe than to underestimate the enemy.
To underestimate the enemy might entail the loss of my treasures.
Therefore when two equally matched armies meet,
It is the man of sorrow who wins.

[69c20t] Victor H. Mair
The strategists have a saying:
"I dare not be host, but would rather be guest;
I advance not an inch, but instead retreat a foot."
This is called
Marching without ranks,
Bearing nonexistent arms,
Flourishing nonexistent weapons,
Driving back nonexistent enemies.
There is no greater misfortune than not having a worthy foe;
Once I believe there are no worthy foes, I have well-nigh forfeited my treasures.
Therefore,
When opposing forces are evenly matched,
The one who is saddened will be victorious.

[69c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
The master soldiers have a saying:
I dare not be the host but prefer to be the guest.
I dare not advance an inch but prefer to retreat a foot.
This is called
marching without moving,
rolling up a sleeve without baring an arm,
capturing a foe without a battlefront,
arming yourself without weapons.
There is no disaster greater than attacking and finding no enemy.
Doing so will cost you your treasure.
Thus it is that when opposing forces meet, victory will go to those who take no delight in the situation.

[69c22t] David H. Li
A saying among warriors:
I dare not play host, I prefer playing guest;
I dare not advance an inch, I prefer retreating a foot.
This is formless formation,
this is defenseless advancement,
this is oppositionless encounter,
this is weaponless display.
No disaster is greater than underestimating the enemy.
Underestimating the enemy verges on losing my treasures.
Thus, when two equal-size armies are in combat, the one that is grieved wins.

[69c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
The strategist par excellence says:
Dare not to be the aggressor but rather to be the defender.
Dare not to advance an inch but rather to retreat a foot.
This is called
Letting the opponent march toward nowhere to which to march,
Letting the opponent capture nothing to be captured,
Letting the opponent attack none to be attacked,
Letting the opponent arm with weapons for nothing for which to arm.
There is no greater calamity than underestimating your opponent.
To underestimate your opponent is surely to lose your treasures.
Therefore, when opposing forces are engaged in conflict,
The one who yields with caution will triumph in the end.

[69c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
A tactician in ancient times said:
"I do not dare to act as a host,
I prefer to act as a guest,
I do not dare to advance an inch,
I prefer to retreat a foot."
This implies that he does not muster his armies, as if he has no armies,
He does not roll up his sleeves, as if his arms are not ready,
He does not go out to battle, as if he has no weapons,
He does not fight, as if he has no enemies.
The greatest calamity is to underestimate the strength of the enemy,
For underestimating the strength of the enemy leads to the loss of our treasure of love.
Therefore, when armies clash on the battlefield,
The one that possesses the treasure will triumph.

[69c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
There is a saying, you know, which soldiers have:
'I never use my force before my enemy uses his.
I'd sooner go back a foot than advance an inch.'

This is called going forward without moving,
Rolling up your sleeve without showing your arm -
And by not, you defeat him without apparently doing anything.
This is like being armed, but no one sees what you have.
Never think your enemy is feeble.
That's disastrous.
If I do that, I'm bound to lose all I have!
So, you see, when the battle begins
It is the one who seems weakest that will win.

[69c26t] Gu Zhengkun
A strategist says:
I dare not launch an attack but strengthen defense capabilities;
I dare not advance an inch but retreat a foot instead.
This means to deploy battle array by showing no battle array;
To wield one's arm to attack by showing no arm to lift;
To face the enemy by showing no enemy to attack;
To hold weapons by showing no weapons to hold.
No disaster is greater than underestimating the enemy.
Underestimating the enemy nearly cost me my treasure (i. e. three treasured weapons, see 67).
That is why the sorrow-laden side wins
When two armies are at war.

[69c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
There is a saying among military strategists:
'I dare not act as the host, but the guest.
I dare advance an inch, but retreat a foot.'
This is called conducting in non-conducting.
Pulling back without using force.
Facing the fight without engaging the enemy.
Holding no weapons.
The greatest danger is to undervalue the enemy.
To undervalue the enemy will cause loss of the three treasures.
That is why when two forces fight against each other, the one that is full of sorrow will win.

[69c28t] Liu Qixuan
The ancient wise generals all held:
"Start no war.
Fight only when forced to.
A foot back instead of an inch forward."
Such military creeds all boil down to this:
Advance invisible ranks;
Raise invisible arms;
Poise invisible armies;
Fight as if one is not fighting with enemies.
The biggest military disaster is this:

To attack an enemy thoughtlessly
With threats, menaces and challenges.
For such an attack means the loss of all advantages.
When two armies battle, one against the other,
The army that fights out of love and sadness wins.

[69c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
The Art of War
Lao Tze says,
A master of strategy once said,
'I do not dare to be the first to arouse a war.
I prefer to be passive to rise against an invasion.
I do not dare to march an inch.
I prefer to withdraw a foot.'
This is called proceeding to make an action without walking, to resist without lifting arms;
to dart without facing enemies, and to seize them without combating.
There is no calamity greater than to lightly engage in war.
To do that nearly results in the loss of the three precious things I mentioned before.
That is why when opposing armies meet, the sorrowful side conquers.

[69c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
An ancient tactician has said:
'I dare not act as a host but would rather act as a guest;
I dare not advance an inch but would rather retreat a foot.'
This implies that he does not marshal the ranks as if there were no ranks;
He does not roll up his sleeves as if he had no arms;
He does not seize as if he had no weapons;
He does not fight as if there were no enemies.
No calamity is greater than under-estimating the enemy;
To under-estimate the enemy is to be on the point of losing our treasure (love).
Therefore when opposing armies meet in the field the ruthful will win.

[69c31t] Paul J. Lin
The commander of war has said:
"I dare not be a host, but be a guest.
I dare not advance one inch, but withdraw a foot."
This means:
To set up a march as if without one.
To stretch the arm as if without one.
To confront the enemy as if without one.
To grasp war weapons as if without them.
No calamity is greater than taking the enemy lightly.
Taking the enemy lightly almost makes me lose my treasures.
Therefore, in raising arms against each other,
The one with pity will win.

[69c32t] Michael LaFargue
Military men have a saying:
"I do not presume to act as master, I act as guest;
I do not presume to advance an inch, I retreat a foot."
This is like "going forward without going forward, rolling up the sleeves but baring no arm,
attacking without showing hostility,
drawing with no sword."
Nothing brings greater disaster than the motto:
"The enemy is nothing."
Thinking, "the enemy is nothing": close to losing my Treasure.
Yes, when they cross weapons and attack each other,
the one in mourning will win.

[69c33t] Cheng Lin
One of the ancient strategists said:
"I do not venture to fight an offensive war;
I prefer to be on the defensive.
I dare not advance an inch;
I prefer to retreat a foot."
This indicates the futility of possessing armaments,
the reluctance to send armed expeditions,
the inexistence of casus belli,
the absence of foes.
Nothing can be more calamitous than an underestimation of the enemy's strength.
To underestimate the enemy's strength may cost a man his life.
In the event of war, those who regard it as a lamentable necessity will win.

[69c34t] Yi Wu
Military strategists have a saying,
"I dare not be a host; rather, a guest.
I dare not advance an inch; rather, retreat a foot."
This can be called marching without formation,
striving without arms,
overthrowing without enmity,
capturing without weapons.
There is no greater calamity than to underestimate an enemy.
To underestimate an enemy is to lose one's treasures.
Therefore, when opposing armies try to overcome each other,
One who sorrows will win.

[69c35t] Han Hiong Tan
There is a saying among the militarists:
"I would rather defend than initiate an attack.
I would be most reluctant to advance an inch but quite ready to retreat a foot."

The ultimate ideal is as follows:
Not having any battalions to form a configuration,
Not having to initiate an attack,
Not needing to take up arms,
And not having to fight a war.
There is no disaster worse than to underestimate your enemy,
For this could endanger your life.
Hence, if two evenly-matched armies fight against each other,
The aggrieved side that feels poignantly oppressed will win.

[69c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
The strategist who has achieved excellence says: dare not to be the host, but rather be the guest.
Dare not to be the restless aggressor, but rather be the calm defender.
Dare not advance an inch, but rather retreat a foot.
March forward where there is no obstacle.
Stretch out your arm only where there is no confrontation.
Charge an opponent where there is no resistance.
Hold a weapon that is invisible.
There is no greater mistake than to underestimate the power of an opponent.
To underestimate the power of an opponent may cost a man his life.
Therefore, when opposing troops meet in battle,
it is the side with the greatest caution that wins.

[69c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
On military operations we have:
"I do not boldly attack others first,
But take action only after being attacked."
"I do not boldly move forward even an inch,
But withdraw a foot."
This is called the operation of non-operation,
Bearing the arms of non-arms,
Charging the enemy of non-enemy,
Carrying the weapons of non-weapons.
There is no more serious misfortune
Than to engage in war lightly.
To engage in war lightly is to violate my essential teachings of compassion, renunciation, and never longing to be first in the world.
Therefore, when two armies join in battle,
The one that is compassionate wins.

[69c38t] Henry Wei

Military strategists have said -
I dare not be the host,
But prefer to be the guest.

I dare not advance one inch,
But prefer to retreat a foot.
This is called -
Marching as if without motion;
Brandishing arms as if having none;
Attacking as if without enmity;
Seizing as if without weapons.
No disaster is greater than belittling the enemy.
Belittling the enemy almost ruins my treasures.
Therefore, when two armies encounter each other,
The side that laments war will win.

[69c39t] Ha Poong Kim
The strategists'saying:
"I dare not play the host but play the guest,
I dare not advance an inch but retreat a foot."
This is called marching no-marching,
Stretching no-arms,
Arming with no-weapons,
Charging at no-enemy.
No disaster is greater than making light of the enemy.
When I make light of the enemy, I may lose my treasure.
Therefore, when two sides confront each other with arms,
The one who grieves wins.

[69c40t] Tao Huang
There is a saying on using military force:
I dare not be the host, but rather a guest.
I dare not advance an inch, but rather retreat a foot.
This is called performing without performing, rolling up one's sleeves without showing the arms.
By not holding on to an enemy, there is no enemy.
There is no disaster greater than having no enemy.
Having no enemy almost destroys my treasure.
When opposing armies clash, those who cry win!

[69c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The Conduct of War has this to say:
"I dare not take the initiative but rather to be resistant.
I dare not advance an inch but rather I withdraw a foot."
So that, engage the enemy without advancing.
Drive out the enemy without arms.
Subdue the enemy without battle.
Take the enemy with invincibility.
No fault is greater than to underestimate the enemy:
To underestimate the enemy is to destroy all my treasured principles.
When an army of resistance engages, the mournful one - the army of resistance, wins.

The strategists say:
"I dare not take the offensive but I take the defensive;
I dare not advance an inch but I retreat a foot."
This means:
To march without formation,
To stretch one's arm without showing it,
To confront enemies without seeming to meet them,
To hold weapons without seeming to have them.
There is no greater disaster than to make light of the enemy.
Making light of the enemy will destroy my treasures.
Therefore when armies are mobilized and issues joined,
The man who is sorry over the fact will win.

[69c91t] И. И. Семененко
Стратеги говорят:
"Я смею быть лишь гостем, не хозяином, скорее отступлю назад, чем двинусь на вершок вперед".
Это называют маршированием без маршировки,
боевитостью без боевитости,
завоеванием при неналичии противника,
стратегией без войн.
Нет большего несчастья, чем пренебрежение противником.
Пренебрежение противником близко к утрате моего сокровища.
Поэтому когда идут войною друг на друга, то побеждает тот, кто сострадает погибающим на поле боя.

[69c92t] А. А. Маслов
У стратегов есть поговорка:
"Я не посмею быть хозяином, буду лишь гостем.
Я не дерзну шагнуть и на цунь вперёд, но отступлю на чи назад".
Это зовётся продвижением вне движения, закатыванием рукавов, не имея рук, противостоянием врагу, не имея противника, победой без оружия.
Нет большего несчастья, чем легко одержать верх над слабым противником.
Слабый противник будет стоить мне всех моих сокровищ.
Когда две враждующие стороны вступают в поединок, побеждает преисполненный милосердия.

[69c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Полководцы говорят:
"Я не смею стать хозяином, а буду действовать как гость.
Я не смею продвинуться вперед и на дюйм, а буду отступать на фут".
Вот что называют маршем без шеренг, нанесением удара без использования кулака, противостоянием при отсутствии противника, владением оружием без оружия.
Среди бед большей нет, чем недооценить противника.
Недооценить противника - значит похоронить свои драгоценности.
Поэтому, когда в битве войска скрещивают свои клинки, побеждает скорбящий.

[69c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
У полководцев есть такое клятвенное изречение:
"Я не посмею стать хозяином, а буду гостем;
я не посмею двинуться на цунь вперед, а отступлю на чи назад".
Это означает:
двигаться без движения,
отбиваться без рукопашной,
метать в отсутствующего врага,
сдерживать без солдат.
Нет большей беды, чем опрометчивый противник.
Опрометчивый противник сводит на нет мою драгоценность [милосердия].
Вот почему именно в обороне войска добиваются превосходства друг над другом.
Выигрывает милосердный.

[69c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Военное искусство гласит: я не смею первым начинать, я должен ожидать.
Я не смею наступать хотя бы на вершок вперед, а отступаю на аршин назад.
Это называется действием посредством недеяния, ударом без усилия.
В этом случае не будет врага и я могу обходиться без солдат.
Нет беды тяжелее, чем недооценивать противника.
Недооценка противника повредит моему сокровенному средству [дао].
В результате сражений те, кто скорбит, одерживают победу.

[69c96t] Д. П. Конисси
В "военном искусстве" говорится, что на войне я никогда не бываю активным, а - пассивным.
Не сделав ни шага вперед, идти назад аршин - значит уступить врагам оспариваемое без сопротивления.
Когда нет врагов, то не бывает войны.
Нет беды тяжелее, чем презирать врагов.
Презирать врагов - все равно что бросить богатства без надобности.
Плачущий об увеличении своего войска всегда будет победителем.

[69c97t] В. В. Малявин
У знатоков военного дела есть такое суждение:
"Я не смею быть хозяином, а лучше буду гостем.
Я не смею продвинуться на вершок, а лучше отступлю на шаг".
Это называется: "выступать, не выступая",
"Закатывать рукав, не обнажая руки".
"Побеждать, не враждуя",
"Держать в покорности, не применяя войск".
Нет большего несчастья, чем презирать противника.
Кто презирает противника, разбрасывает мои сокровища.
Посему, когда войска сходятся для жестокой битвы,
Кто скорбит, тот победит.

У использующих оружие есть изречения:
"Сущность моя не осмеливается осуществлять функцию хозяина, а осуществляет функцию гостя;
Не осмеливается продвинуться на сантиметр, а отступает на метр.
Это определяется:
Движутся в отсутствии движения.
Закатывают рукава в отсутствии рук.
Бросаются на отсутствие противника.
Удерживают отсутствие оружия.
Нет большей беды, чем недооценивать противника.
Недооценивая противника, близок к потере драгоценностей сущности своей".
Причинность:
Когда скрещивают оружие при равных силах, побеждает сожалеющий.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy

1122/2593

[70c01t] Robert G. Henricks
My words are easy to understand,
And easy to put into practice.
Yet no one in the world can understand them,
And no one can put them into practice.
Now my words have an ancestor, and my deeds have a lord,
And it's simply because [people] have no understanding [of them], that they therefore don't understand me.
But when those who understand me are few, then I'm of great value.
Therefore the Sage wears coarse woolen cloth, but inside it he holds on to jade.

[70c02t] John C. H. Wu
MY words are very easy to understand, and very easy to practise:
But the world cannot understand them, nor practise them.
My words have an Ancestor.
My deeds have a Lord.
The people have no knowledge of this.
Therefore, they have no knowledge of me.
The fewer persons know me,
The nobler are they that follow me.
Therefore, the Sage wears coarse clothes,
While keeping the jade in his bosom.

[70c03t] D. C. Lau
My words are very easy to understand and very easy to put into practice,
Yet no one in the world can understand them or put them into practice.
Words have an ancestor and affairs have a sovereign.
It is because people are ignorant that they fail to understand me.
Those who understand me are few;
Those who harm(imitate) me are honoured.
Therefore the sage, while clad in homespun, conceals on his person a priceless piece of jade.

[70c04t] R. L. Wing
My words are very easy to know,
Very easy to follow.
Yet the world is unable to know them,
Unable to follow them.
My words have a source,
My efforts have mastery.
Indeed, since none know this, They do not know me.
The rare ones who know me Must treasure me.
Therefore, Evolved Individuals Wear a coarse cloth covering With precious jade at the center.

[70c05t] Ren Jiyu
My words are very easy to understand, and very easy to practise.
But no one under Heaven is able to understand them or to practise them.
Speeches should have their main principle,
And deeds should have their master.
Because of their ignorance, the people are not able to understand me.
Those who are able to understand me are very few,
And those who are able to follow me are very hard to meet.
Therefore the sage (who is not understood) looks like he is wearing coarse garb, but he has a precious jade in his heart.

[70c06t] Gia-fu Feng
My words are easy to understand and easy to perform,
Yet no man under heaven knows them or practices them.
My words have ancient beginnings.
My actions are disciplined.
Because men do not understand, they have no knowledge of me.
Those that know me are few;
Those that abuse me are honored.
Therefore the sage wears rough clothing and holds the jewel in his heart.

[70c07t] Lok Sang Ho
What I say is easy to understand and easy to practice
Yet few people under heaven understand and practice it.
What I preach has a respectable ancestry,
What I do serves a lord well.
Yet few people are aware of this,
And therefore few understand me.
The fewer people know about me.
The rarer and the better positioned are those who know and practice my teaching.
The Sage is like someone hiding a precious jade piece underneath his clothes.

[70c08t] Xiaolin Yang
My teaching is very easy to understand and very easy to practice.
However, in this world, no one understands it and no one practices it.
Your speech must be based on facts, your actions must follow principles.
Only because people do not understand the DAO, do they not understand me.
Few people know my teaching; even fewer people follow my cause.
Therefore, the great men wore coarse clothing, but hid treasures inside.

[70c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE DIFFICULT RECOGNITION
Easy are my words to know, and also to practise.
Yet none is able to understand nor yet to practise them.
For there is a remote origin for my words, and a supreme law for my actions.
Not knowing these, men cannot know me.
Those who know me are few, and by them I am esteemed.

For the wise man is outwardly poor, but he carries his jewel in his bosom.

[70c10t] James Legge
My words are very easy to know, and very easy to practise;
but there is no one in the world who is able to know and able to practise them.
There is an originating and all-comprehending (principle) in my words, and an authoritative law for the things (which I enforce).
It is because they do not know these, that men do not know me.
They who know me are few, and I am on that account (the more) to be prized.
It is thus that the sage wears (a poor garb of) hair cloth, while he carries his (signet of) jade in his bosom.

[70c11t] David Hinton
My words are so simple to understand and so easily put into practice that no one in all beneath heaven understands them and no one puts them into practice.
Words have their ancestral origins and actions their sovereign:
it's only because people don't understand this that they don't understand me.
And the less people understand me the more precious I become.
So it is that a sage wears sackcloth, keeping pure jade harbored deep.

[70c12t] Chichung Huang
My words are exceedingly easy to understand,
Exceedingly easy to practice.
Yet none under heaven can understand them,
None can practice them.
Words have their progenitor;
Affairs have their sovereign.
It is because of ignorance
That they do not me understand.
Those who understand being rare,
I become all the more valuable.
Hence, the sage man wore a coarse tunic,
But carried in his bosom a piece of jade.

[70c13t] Ellen M. Chen
My words (yen) are very easy to understand (i-chih),
Very easy to put into practice (i-hsing).
But no one under heaven can understand (chih) them,
No one can put them into practice.
Words (yen) have their ruler (chün);
Events (shih) have their progenitor (tsung).
Because people do not understand (chih) this,
Therefore they do not understand me.
Those who understand me are rare,
Those who follow (tsê) my teaching are (preciously) few (kuei).

Therefore the sage wears hair-cloth,
While carrying jade in his breast.

[70c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
My theory is [basically] very easy to understand and to put to practice;
[Unfortunately majority people of] the world would not [make an effort to] learn about it, [let alone to] carry it out.
All my discussions have strong footings;
My theory is based on [venerable] practices.
People [in vogue] are ignorant, so they do not know me;
There are only a handful of people who [would make an effort to] understand me;
Those who understand me will discover that my theory is valuable;
The description, that ancient Sages were like men who carried priceless jades under coarse ragged cloaks, was not made from casual observation.

[70c15t] Tien Cong Tran
My words are very easy to understand, and very easy to practice.
But the world cannot understand them, nor practice them.
My words have a root.
My deeds have a lord.
Because people are not aware of this, they do not understand me.
Those who understand me are few, those who follow me are honored.
Therefore, the sage wears coarse clothes, while keeping the jade in his bosom.

[70c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
My words are easy to understand and easy to practice.
However, people in the world rarely understand and practice them.
The words have their origins.
The events have their causes.
People can hardly understand this.
Therefore they rarely understand me.
Few people understand me.
Those who do follow me are prized.
This is why sages dress in crude clothes but carry jades.

[70c17t] Arthur Waley
My words are very easy to understand and very easy to put into practice.
Yet no one under heaven understands them; no one puts them into practice.
But my words have an ancestry, my deeds have a lord; and it is precisely because men do not understand this that they are unable to understand me.
Few then understand me; but it is upon this very fact that my value depends.
It is indeed in this sense that 'the Sage wears hair-cloth on top, but carries jade underneath his dress'.

[70c18t] Richard John Lynn
My words are very easy to understand, very easy to practice, yet none among all under Heaven can understand them, and none can practice them.

My words have a progenitor, and my undertakings have a sovereign.
It is just because there is no understanding of this that they do not understand me.
As long as those who understand me are rare, someone like me is precious.
Thus it is that the sage wears coarse woolen cloth but harbors jade in his bosom.

[70c19t] Lin Yutang
THEY KNOW ME NOT
My teachings are very easy to understand and very easy to practice,
But no one can understand them and no one can practice them.
In my words there is a principle.
In the affairs of men there is a system.
Because they know not these,
They also know me not.
Since there are few that know me,
Therefore I am distinguished.
Therefore the Sage wears a coarse cloth on top
And carries jade within his bosom.

[70c20t] Victor H. Mair
My words are very easy to understand, very easy to practice.
But no one is able to understand them,
And no one is able to practice them.
Words have authority.
Affairs have an ancestry.
It is simply because of their ignorance, that they do not understand me;
Those who understand me are few, thus I am ennobled.
For this reason,
The sage wears coarse clothing over his shoulders, but carries jade within his bosom.

[70c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
My words are easy to understand and easy to put into practice.
Yet no one under heaven understands them or puts them into practice.
My words have an ancestor.
My actions are governed.
Because people do not understand this they do not understand me.
Those who understand me are few.
Those who follow me should be respected.
Therefore,
the True Person wears homespun clothes and carries jade in the heart.

[70c22t] David H. Li
My words are easy to understand and easy to put into practice.
But no one in the world understands [my words], and no one puts them into practice.
Words must be principled; actions must be justified.
Because these are not understood, I am not understood.
With few who understand me, fewer will put [my words] into practice.

Thus, a sage dresses simply but bears a jade.

[70c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
My words are very easy to understand and very easy to practice,
Yet the people of the world can neither understand nor practice them.
My words point to a source and my deeds a master,
Yet the people of the world know neither the source nor the master.
Thus, they know not who and what I am.
But for the few who know, I am precious.
Therefore, the sage may wear coarse clothes,
But will always hold a luminous treasure within.

[70c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Words have an ancestor, deeds have a master.
It is easy to understand my words and practice them.
But all the people in the world do not know them,
And do not practice them.
Since they have knowledge, they do not know me.
When those that know me are few, I am beyond all praise.
Therefore the sage wears coarse woolen clothes but carries jade jewels in his bosom,
He knows himself, but does not present himself,
He loves himself, but does not act arrogantly.
Therefore he rejects the latter and adopts the former.

[70c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
My words are really very easy to understand
And be with, and walk in ... but no one can!
My words have roots, my actions have precedents
But people don't see this, and so they don't see me.
So few of you know or understand me
And so the Tao becomes ever more important ...
The sage goes round like a supertramp,
Hiding the jade, the jewel he carries in his inmost heart.

[70c26t] Gu Zhengkun
My words are very easy to understand,
And very easy to put into practice,
Yet there should have been no one in the world
Who can understand them
Or can put them into practice.
Words must be purpose-oriented,
Deeds must be reasonably grounded.
People cannot understand me
Because they fail to understand what is said above.
Those who understand me are few;
Those who can follow my advice are even less.

That is why the sage
Is always dressed in coarse cloth
But conceals about him a beautiful piece of jade (the Tao).

[70c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
My words are very easy to understand, very easy to practise.
Yet no one in the world can understand them and put them into practice.
The words have a root.
The affairs have a sovereign.
Because people are ignorant, they do not understand me.
Those who understand me are few.
That is why I become valued.
This is why the sage does not flaunt himself but holds the treasure in his heart.

[70c28t] Liu Qixuan
As it can happen,
What I say is easy to understand and to do,
But none can understand it and do it,
In spite of the fact that what I say has a source
And what I do has a reason.
Since people don't understand what I say and what I do,
They don't know me.
Since people don't know me,
I am special.
That explains why the wise person wears rough clothes
And cherishes a heart of jade.

[70c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
They Know Me Not
Lao Tze says,
My words are very easy to know and very easy to practice;
but there is no one in the world who is able to know and able to practice them.
In my words there is a traditional precept and a ruling art.
It is because that they do not know these, that men do not know me.
That is why there are few that know me, and there are even fewer that model after me.
There is a sage who wears coarse clothes and hides jade in his bosom, which anyone shall see.

[70c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Words have an ancestor; deeds have a governor.
My words are very easy to know, and very easy to practise,
Yet all men in the world do not know them, nor do they practise them.
It is because they have knowledge that they do not know me.
When those who know me are few, eventually I am beyond all praise.
Therefore the Sage wears clothes of coarse cloth but carries jewels in his bosom;
He knows himself but does not display himself;
He loves himself but does not hold himself in high esteem.

Thus he rejects the latter and takes the former.

[70c31t] Paul J. Lin
My words are very easily understood, and very easily put into practice.
Yet no one in the world is able to understand and to practice them.
My words have their root; my deeds have their lord.
Just because the people do not know, they do not know me.
Those who know me are few.
Those who emulate me are rare.
Therefore, the Sage wears coarse clothes on the outside,
And bears precious jade near his breast.

[70c32t] Michael LaFargue
My words are very easy to understand,
very easy to practice.
No one in the world can understand,
no one can practice them.
The words have an ancestor,
the practice has a master.
They just do not understand and so they do not understand me.
(So few understand me - a rare treasure indeed.)
And so the Wise Person:
Dressed in shabby clothes, jade under his shirt.

[70c33t] Cheng Lin
My teaching is very easy to understand and very easy to practise.
Yet the world does not understand or practise it!
My teaching has its basis, and my conduct has its reason.
Because the world is ignorant of them, I am misunderstood.
There are few who understand me, and those who abuse me are placed in positions of honour.
Therefore the Sage must dress in coarse robes while hiding precious jewels within his breast!

[70c34t] Yi Wu
My words are very easy to understand and very easy to practice,
But the world cannot understand them
and cannot practice them.
My words have their primal meaning;
My deeds have their principle.
Only I am without knowledge;
Therefore, I am not known.
If those who know me are few,
Then, what I have is of value.
Therefore, the sage is covered by coarse clothes, but embraces jade.

[70c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Though my words are easily comprehended and easily followed,
People do not understand and do not want to follow.
My words are based on the principles of Dao.
I also follow the same principles in all my dealings.
Because people do not understand my teachings, they fail to understand me as well.
Few people understand me.
Fewer people follow my teachings.
The sage always dresses shabbily but still embraces the treasure in his bosom.

[70c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
My words are very easy to understand and easy to practice, yet the world can neither understand nor practice them.
My words have only one source: the subtle truth of the universe.
My deeds have only one master: the natural virtue of the universe.
The people of the world have no knowledge of this.
Thus, they have no knowledge of me.
The fewer the persons that know me,
the nobler are they that follow me.
Therefore, the one of whole virtue wears coarse clothes superficially, but holds a precious treasure within.

[70c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
It is not difficult to grasp my words or to follow them.
Yet no one in the world can grasp them or follow them.
Because words must derive from the source of words,
Action requires an actor who acts.
Since you are not aware of this, you cannot know me.
The less people know me, the more valuable I am.
Thus, the wise is covered with tattered clothes which conceal precious jade.

[70c38t] Henry Wei
Difficult to Understand
Chih Nan
My teaching is very easy to understand,
And very easy to carry out.
Yet the world is incapable of understanding it,
And incapable of carrying it out.
My teaching has an ancient source,
My practices have a ruling principle.
As people are ignorant of this,
So they fail to understand me.
When those who understand me are few,
Then I am distinguished indeed.
That's why the Sage wears a coarse cotton robe,
To conceal the jade ornament worn on his bosom.

My words are very easy to understand,
Very easy to put into practice.
Yet no one under Heaven can understand them
Or put them into practice.
Words have their source,
Deeds have their lord.
Truly, because people don't know this,
They don't understand me.
Those who know me are few;
Those who follow me are rare.
For this reason the sage
Wears coarse cloth but carries jade inside.

[70c40t] Tao Huang
My words are easy to understand and easy to apply.
Yet no one in the world can understand them and no one could apply them.
Words have their origin, and events have their leader.
Only because of prevailing ignorance am I not understood.
The fewer who understand me, the more precious I am.
So the sage wears shabby cloth, but holds a treasure within.

[70c41t] Tang Zi-chang
My teaching is very easy to be understood and very easy to be followed,
Yet very few people in the world can understand and follow it.
My teaching is to trace the origin of all things and my service is to serve the fundamentals of Nature.
If one does not understand Nature, surely, he cannot understand me.
If I am known only by a few, I feel envious of it.
Therefore, the Sage ruler even wore coarse clothes but embraced his jadelike personality.

[70c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
My doctrines are very easy to understand and very easy to practice,
But none in the world can understand or practice them.
My doctrines have a source (Nature),
My deeds have a master (Tao).
It is because people do not understand this that they do not understand me.
Few people know me, and therefore I am highly valued.
Therefore the sage wears a coarse cloth on top and carries jade within his bosom.

[70c91t] И. И. Семененко
Мои слова понять так просто, так просто выполнить.
Но их понять никто не может, никто не может выполнить.
У слов имеется исток, а у поступков то, что ими управляет.

Коль редкостен, кто меня знает, то я ценен.

Именно поэтому Премудрый человек таит под рубищем нефрит.

[70c92t] А. А. Маслов
Мои слова легко понять и столь же легко им следовать.
И всё же никто в мире не способен их понять и тем более следовать им.
Слова имеют предка, дела имеют господина.
Из-за того, что люди сиры, им и не удаётся понять меня.
Как же мало тех, кто понимает меня!
Как же редки те, кто следует мне.
Поэтому мудрецы носили холщовые одежды, но в душе берегли драгоценную яшму.

[70c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Мои слова так легко понять, им так легко следовать,
Но в Поднебесной их никто не может понять, им никто не может следовать.
В словах есть главное, в делах есть первенствующее.
Ведь незнание людей заключается в том, что они не знают меня.
Поскольку знающих меня так мало, то я являюсь их сокровищем.
Поэтому на совершенномудром одежда из простой грубой ткани, но на груди у него скрыта драгоценная яшма.

[70c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Мои слова очень легко понять, очень легко [им] следовать.
Но в Поднебесной нет таких, кто мог бы понять, кто мог бы последовать.
В словах есть предок, в делах есть царь.
Поскольку [этого] не знают, постольку и меня не понимают.
Понимающие меня - редки, подражающие мне - ценны.
Вот почему у совершенномудрого человека сверху рубище, внутри яшма.

[70c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Мои слова легко понять и легко осуществить.
Но люди не могут понять и не могут осуществлять.
В словах имеется начало, в делах имеется главное.
Поскольку люди их не знают, то они не знают и меня.
Когда меня мало знают, тогда я дорог.
Поэтому совершенномудрый подобен тому, кто одевается в грубые ткани, а при себе держит яшму.

[70c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Я говорю, что очень легко приобрести знание и творить благие дела.
Между тем на всей земле никто не знает этого и не делает благих дел.
В словах должен быть принцип, в делах - господин.
Нет знания.
Вот почему я не знаю ничего.
Знающих меня мало, поэтому я почтителен.
Отсюда святой муж надевает на себя худую одежду, но в себе имеет драгоценный камень.

Мои слова очень легко понять
И очень легко исполнить.
Но никто в мире не может их понять,
Не может их исполнить.
Мои слова имеют предка.
Мои дела имеют государя.
И оттого, что люди этого не понимают,
Они не понимают и меня.
И если тех, кто понимает меня, мало,
Значит, во мне есть что ценить.
Вот почему "премудрый ходит в рубище, но хранит яшму у груди".

[70c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Речь сущности моей - очень легка для осознания,
очень легка для действия-движения.
В Поднебесной никто не способен осознавать, никто не способен действовать-двигаться.
В речи - наличие предков.
В делах - наличие владыки.
Вот только отсутствует осознание.
Это дает:
Не "я" осознает.
Осознание "я" - это разреженность.
Подражание "я" - это придавание ценности.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости покрыт грубой шерстяной материей, а за пазухой яшма-нефрит.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy-One

1134/2593

[71c01t] Robert G. Henricks
To know you don't know is best.
Not to know you [don't] know is a flaw.
Therefore, the Sage's not being flawed
Stems from his recognizing a flaw as a flaw.
Therefore, he is flawless.

[71c02t] John C. H. Wu
To realize that our knowledge is ignorance,
This is a noble insight.
To regard our ignorance as knowledge,
This is mental sickness.
Only when we are sick of our sickness
Shall we cease to be sick.
The Sage is not sick, being sick of sickness;
This is the secret of health.

[71c03t] D. C. Lau
To know yet to think that one does not know is best;
Not to know yet to think that one knows will lead to difficulty.
It is by being alive to difficulty that one can avoid it.
The sage meets with no difficulty.
It is because he is alive to it that he meets with no difficulty.

[71c04t] R. L. Wing
To know that you do not know is best.
To not know of knowing is a disease.
Indeed, to be sick of the disease, Is the way to be free of the disease.
Evolved Individuals are free of the disease.
Because they are sick of the disease
This is the way to be free of disease.

[71c05t] Ren Jiyu
It is the best for one to know that he does not know;
It is an illness to pretend to know when he actually does not know.
Recognizing the illness as an illness prevents one from illness.
The sage is free from the illness,
Because he recognizes the illness as an illness.
He can prevent the illness thereby.

[71c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Knowing ignorance is strength.

Ignoring knowledge is sickness.
If one is sick of sickness, then one is not sick.
The sage is not sick because he is sick of sickness.
Therefore he is not sick.

[71c07t] Lok Sang Ho
One who knows what most people do not know is superior;
One who forgets what one by nature knows is sick.
The Sage is free from this sickness.
Because he avoids the sickness, he is not sick.

[71c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If you have knowledge, but you feel like you do not have knowledge, this is super.
If you do not have knowledge, but you feel like you have knowledge, this is sick.
The great men were not sick because they knew what the sickness is.
Only when you know what the sickness is, will you not be sick.

[71c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE DISEASE OF KNOWING
To know one's ignorance is the best part of knowledge.
To be ignorant of such knowledge is a disease.
If one only regards it as a disease, he will soon be cured of it.
The wise man is exempt from this disease.
He knows it for what it is, and so is free from it.

[71c10t] James Legge
To know and yet (think) we do not know is the highest (attainment);
not to know (and yet think) we do know is a disease.
It is simply by being pained at (the thought of) having this disease that we are preserved from it.
The sage has not the disease.
He knows the pain that would be inseparable from it, and therefore he does not have it.

[71c11t] David Hinton
Knowing not-knowing is lofty.
Not knowing not-knowing is affliction.
A sage stays free of affliction.
Just recognize it as affliction and you're free of it.

[71c12t] Chichung Huang
Knowing as if not knowing
Is peerless;
Not knowing as if knowing
Is a sickness.
Hence, the sage man was not sick:
Being sick of the sickness,
Hence, he was not sick.

[71c13t] Ellen M. Chen
From knowing to not knowing (chih, pu chih),
This is superior.
From not knowing to knowing (pu chih, chih),
This is sickness.
It is by being sick of sickness,
That one is not sick.
The sage is not sick.
Because he is sick of sickness,
Therefore he is not sick.

[71c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
Recognizing that one is always in a position of not knowing [enough] is in character of a superior person;
Not knowing what [true] knowledge is a kind of sickness;
Only those who worry about being sick (ignorant) will be able to avoid the sickness [of ignorance].

[71c15t] Tien Cong Tran
If we know that we do not know, this is a high insight.
If we do not know that we know, this is sickness.
When we are sick of our sickness, we will cease to be sick.
The sage is not sick.
He is sick of his sickness; thus he is not sick.

[71c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
Knowing what is not known is good.
Not knowing but pretending to know is bad.
Sages rarely ail, because they hate ills.
Thus, hating ills, one can be free of ills.

[71c17t] Arthur Waley
'To know when one does not know is best.
To think one knows when one does not know is a dire disease.
Only he who recognizes this disease as a disease
Can cure himself of the disease.'
The Sage's way of curing disease
Also consists in making people recognize their diseases as diseases and thus ceasing to be diseased.

[71c18t] Richard John Lynn
To regard not knowing as knowing is the highest;
not to regard knowing as knowing is harmful.
It is only by regarding harm as harm that one suffers no harm.
That the sage suffers no harm is because he regards harm as harm, and this is why he suffers no harm.

[71c19t] Lin Yutang

Who (pretends to) know what he does not know is sick-minded.
And who recognizes sick-mindedness as sick-mindedness is not sick-minded.
The Sage is not sick-minded.
Because he recognizes sick-mindedness as sick-mindedness,
Therefore he is not sick-minded.

[71c20t] Victor H. Mair
To realize that you do not understand is a virtue;
Not to realize that you do not understand is a defect.
The reason why
The sage has no defects,
Is because he treats defects as defects.
Thus,
He has no defects.

[71c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
It is well to know that you do not know.
To think you know when you do not is sickness.
When you are sick of sickness you will no longer be sick.
True Persons are not sick because they are sick of sickness;
this is the way to health.

[71c22t] David H. Li
Knowing that one does not know is best;
Not knowing but pretending to know is a fault.
A sage has no faults, because he/she is aware of his/her faults and works on these faults.
Because a sage is aware of faults and works on them, he/she has no faults.

[71c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Having knowledge, yet being aware of the unknown, is superior intelligence.
Not having knowledge, yet pretending to know, is intellectual stagnation.
To be aware of stagnation is to be free of it.
The sage is free of any stagnation,
because he is keenly aware of all stagnation.
Therefore, he is forever free of stagnation.

[71c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
Not knowing what one knows is the best,
To think that one knows when one does not know is sick.
Only when one becomes sick of this sickness,
Is it possible to get free of the sickness.
The sage is never sick,
Since he is sick of this sickness,
He is not sick.

Those who know seem not to know
And those who don't pretend they do -
This is what it means to be flawed.
If you're sick at this, then you'll win through.
The sage is.
He is sick of all faults -
He is sick of being sick.
He is well.

[71c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Knowing one's ignorance of certain knowledge is the best attitude;
Not knowing certain knowledge yet pretending to know is a bad attitude.
The sage is of no shortcoming,
Because he considers shortcoming as shortcoming.
He considers shortcoming as shortcoming,
Thus he has no shortcoming.

[71c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
Knowing ignorance is best.
Thinking one knows is foolish.
Only by being a fool can one avoid becoming a fool.
The sage does not think he knows, therefore he is not a fool.

[71c28t] Liu Qixuan
The best knower knows how to know.
The worst knower knows that he/she knows.
The wise person knows how poor knowers stray
And can therefore keep himself/herself on the right path.

[71c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Exemption From Sick-Mindedness
Lao Tze says,
To know and yet think you don't know is the highest attainment;
not to know and yet think you know is sick-minded.
It is simply in being pained at the thought of having sick-mindedness that one is free from being sick-minded.
The sage is not sick-minded because he knows the pain that would be inseparable from sick-mindedness and therefore he is totally exempted from this sick-mindedness.

[71c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Not knowing that one knows is best;
Thinking that one knows when one does not know is sickness.
Only when one becomes sick of this sickness can one be free from sickness.
The Sage is never sick; because he is sick of this sickness, therefore he is not sick.

He who knows that he does not know is the best.
He who does not know but pretends to know is sick.
He who realizes the sickness is sickness
Doesn't have any sickness.
The Sage is without sickness
Because he realizes the sickness is sickness.
Therefore, he doesn't have any sickness.

[71c32t] Michael LaFargue
"Aware but not aware of it: a high thing."
Not aware but aware of it: sick of this.
Simply sick of the sickness - and so no longer sick.
The Wise Person's lack of this sickness:
He became sick of being sick, and so he's no longer sick.

[71c33t] Cheng Lin
Those who know, and yet do not think they know, belong to the highest type of men.
Those who do not know, and yet think they know, are really at fault.
When one knows that he is at fault, he can be free of faults.
The Sage is free of faults because he knows when he is at fault.

[71c34t] Yi Wu
One who knows, but does not know, is best.
One who does not know, but knows, is sick.
Only one who recognizes this sickness as sickness
Will not have the sickness.
The sage does not have this sickness
Because he recognizes this sickness as sickness.
Therefore, he has no sickness.

[71c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Knowing but thinking you do not really know, you are a man of great virtue.
Not knowing but thinking that you know, you have a severe affliction.
Because you are aware of this fault, you can then try to avoid committing this mistake.
The sage has no flaws because he is cognizant of this malady.
Hence, he has no shortcomings.

[71c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
He who regards his intellectual knowledge as ignorance has deep insight.
He who overrates his intellectual achievement as definite truth is deeply sick.
Only when one is sick of this sickness can one cease to be sick.
One who returns his mind to the simplicity of the subtle truth is not sick.
He knows to break through conceptual knowledge in order to directly reach the subtle truth of the universe.
This is the foundation of his health!

Knowing that which cannot be known is perfect.
Not being aware of this knowing is a defect.
To be aware of defects as defects is to be free from defects.
The wise is free from defects.
He is aware of defects as defects.
Therefore, he is free from defects.

[71c38t] Henry Wei
Knowing the Disease
Chih Ping
He who knows what he does not know is superior.
He who does not know what he knows is diseased.
Only when a disease is recognized as a disease
Can the disease cease to be disease.
The Sage is free from disease;
He recognizes a disease as a disease,
Therefore he is free from disease.

[71c39t] Ha Poong Kim
To know yet not to know is best;
Not to know yet to know is a disease.
Truly, when you recognize a disease as a disease,
You are free of disease.
The sage is free of disease.
Because he recognizes a disease as a disease,
He is free of disease.

[71c40t] Tao Huang
Knowing that you don't know (everything) is superior.
Not knowing that you don't know (everything) is a sickness.
So the sage's being without sickness is that he knows sickness as sickness;
Thus, he is without sickness.

[71c41t] Tang Zi-chang
One who knows the unknown is a high type of man.
One who does not know the known is at fault.
Thus a Sage was not at fault because he was aware of faults.

[71c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
To know that you do not know is the best.
To pretend to know when you do not know is a disease.

Знать о том, чего не знаешь, всего выше;
а не знать, что знаешь, значит быть больным.
Перестают болеть, лишь когда болеют о своей болезни.
Премудрый человек не болен.
Он болеет о своей болезни и потому не болен.

[71c92t] А. А. Маслов
Знать и при этом думать, что не знаешь, - это высшее достижение.
Не знать и при этом думать, что знаешь, - это ведёт к трудностям.
Мудрец не имеет трудностей лишь потому, что устранил [главную] трудность.
Лишь потому, что он осознает трудности, он устраняет их.
Вот потому он и не имеет трудностей.

[71c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Тот, кто знает, что он не знает, - превосходен.
Тот, кто не знает, что он знает, - недужен.
Но ведь тот, кто недужит свой недуг, - тот вовсе не недужен.
Совершенный мудрец не недужен, он недужит недуг свой и поэтому не недужен.

[71c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Знание незнания - высшее, незнание знания - изъян.
Однако отношение к изъяну как изъяну не является изъяном.
Совершенномудрый человек без изъяна,
так как он относится к изъяну как изъяну.
Вот почему он без изъяна.

[71c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Кто, имея знания, делает вид, что не знает, тот выше всех.
Кто, не имея знаний, делает вид, что знает, тот болен.
Кто, будучи больным, считает себя больным, тот не является больным.
Совершенномудрый не болен.
Будучи больным, он считает себя больным, поэтому он не болен.

[71c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Кто, зная много, держит себя как незнающий ничего, тот - нравственный муж.
Кто, не зная ничего, держит себя, как знающий много, тот болен.
Кто болеет телесною болезнью, тот еще не (есть) действительно больной.
Святой муж никогда не болеет, ибо он не знает болезни, хотя болеет (телом).

[71c97t] В. В. Малявин
Знать, а казаться незнающим, - вот совершенство.
Не знать, а думать, что знаешь - это болезнь.
Только тот, кто знает свою болезнь, способен не быть больным.
Премудрый человек не подвержен болезням.
Он знает, что такое болезнь, и потому не болеет.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy-Two

1143/2593

[72c01t] Robert G. Henricks
When the people don't respect those in power, then what they greatly fear is about to arrive.
Don't narrow the size of the places in which they live;
Don't oppress them in their means of livelihood.
It's simply because you do not oppress them, that they therefore will not be fed up.
Therefore the Sage knows himself but doesn't show himself;
He cherishes himself but doesn't value himself.
For this reason, he rejects that and takes this.

[72c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHEN the people no longer fear your power,
It is a sign that a greater power is coming.
Interfere not lightly with their dwelling,
Nor lay heavy burdens upon their livelihood.
Only when you cease to weary them,
They will cease to be wearied of you.
Therefore, the Sage knows himself,
But makes no show of himself;
Loves himself,
But does not exalt himself.
He prefers what is within to what is without.

[72c03t] D. C. Lau
When the people lack a proper sense of awe, then some awful visitation will descend upon them.
Do not constrict their living space;
Do not press down on their means of livelihood.
It is because you do not press down on them that they will not weary of the burden.
Hence the sage knows himself but does not display himself,
Loves himself but does not exalt himself.
Therefore he discards the one and takes the other.

[72c04t] R. L. Wing
If the people do not fear authority,
Then authority will expand.
Do not disrespect their position;
Do not reject their lives.
Since, indeed, they are not rejected,
They do not reject.
Therefore Evolved Individuals know themselves
But do not display themselves.
They love themselves
But do not treasure themselves.

Hence they discard one and receive the other.

[72c05t] Ren Jiyu
When the people do not fear the force (of the ruler),
Something forceful and terrible would happen.
Don't force the people out of their houses,
Don't block their way of livelihood.
Only by not oppressing the people, can one make the people feel no oppression.
Therefore the sage seeks for self-knowledge, not for self-parade, for self-love, not for self-importance.
So, self-parade and self-importance should be abandoned and self-knowledge and self-love should be kept.

[72c06t] Gia-fu Feng
When men lack a sense of awe, there will be disaster.
Do not intrude in their homes.
Do not harass them at work.
If you do not interfere, they will not weary of you.
Therefore the sage knows himself but makes no show,
Has self-respect but is not arrogant.
He lets go of that and chooses this.

[72c07t] Lok Sang Ho
Truly reverence-inspiring is he who displays nothing to intimidate his people.
Do not despise people for their humble residences;
Do not shun them for their modest births.
Because you do not despise and shun them,
They also will not despise and shun you.
The Sage knows himself and frees himself from prejudice.
He treasures and takes care of his own life but will not exalt himself.
He gives something up and gains something else.

[72c08t] Xiaolin Yang
When the people are not afraid of the ruler, the ruler is in the most danger.
Do not bother the people, do not suppress the people.
Only when you do not suppress the people, will they not be annoyed with you.
So, the great men understood everything but did not let themselves be known.
They valued their lives but did not let themselves be worshipped.
Therefore, keep the former and discard the latter.

[72c09t] Walter Gorn Old, LOVING ONESELF
When men do not have a right fear of present dangers, they run into extremes of peril.
Let them beware of enlarging the house, being weary of present conditions.
If they do not despise it, no such weariness will arise.
This is why the Sage, while possessed of self-knowledge, does not parade himself.
He loves, but does not value himself highly.
Thus he puts away pride, and is content.

[72c10t] James Legge
When the people do not fear what they ought to fear, that which is their great dread will come on them.
Let them not thoughtlessly indulge themselves in their ordinary life;
let them not act as if weary of what that life depends on.
It is by avoiding such indulgence that such weariness does not arise.
Therefore the sage knows (these things) of himself, but does not parade (his knowledge);
loves, but does not (appear to set a) value on, himself.
And thus he puts the latter alternative away and makes choice of the former.

[72c11t] David Hinton
When the people stop fearing the fearsome something truly fearsome will descend upon them.
Don't hem them in
and choke their lives with oppression.
That's all.
Just let them be,
and they'll never tire of you.
A sage sees through himself without revealing himself,
loves himself without exalting himself,
always ignores that and chooses this.

[72c12t] Chichung Huang
If the people do not fear terror,
Greater terror shall arrive.
Do not squeeze their habitation;
Do not obstruct their livelihood.
Only when you stop oppressing them
Will they stop loathing you.
Hence, the sage man
Knew himself without parading himself,
Loved himself without exalting himself.
Therefore, he abandoned that and chose this.

[72c13t] Ellen M. Chen
When the people fear no power,
Then great power has indeed arrived.
Do not disturb them in their dwellings,
Do not weary them in their living.
It is because you do not weary (pu yen) them,
That they are not wearied of you.
Therefore the sage knows himself (tzu chih),
But does not see himself (tzu chien).
He loves himself (tzu ai),
But does not exalt himself (tzu kuei).
Therefore he leaves that and takes this.

If people are not intimidated by the existing authority, then a more overbearing authority will be imposed on them.
[A leader] should not oppress people and leave them no room for personal freedom;
[He also should not be the cause for] people to feel that life is cheap and unbearable;
[In other words] people would not feel their lives are cheap and unbearable if they are not oppressed and restricted.
Therefore,
A Sage knows himself [so well that he is not] self-opinionated;
He loves himself [so appropriately that he is not] self-conceited;
He renounces that (being self-opinionated and self-conceited) and chooses this (truthfully pursuing self-knowledge and self-improvement).

[72c15t] Tien Cong Tran
When the people no longer fear power, it is a sign that a great power is coming.
Do not constrict their dwelling, nor lay heavy burdens upon their life.
Only when you do not weary them, they will not be wearied of you.
Therefore, the sage knows himself, but makes no show of himself; loves himself, but does not exalt himself.
He prefers what is within to what is without.

[72c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
When people defy authority, great threat will come.
Do not disturb people's homes; do not interfere with people's lives.
Only this way, we can avoid getting weary.
Sages know themselves but are not presumptuous.
They have self-esteem but are not self-conceit.
That is, take the former and abandon the latter.

[72c17t] Arthur Waley
Never mind if the people are not intimidated by your authority.
A Mightier Authority will deal with them in the end.
Do not narrow their dwellings or harass their lives; and for the very reason that you do not harass them, they will cease to turn from you.
Therefore the Sage knows himself but does not show himself.
Knows his own value, but does not put himself on high.
Truly, 'he rejects that but takes this'.

[72c18t] Richard John Lynn
If the common folk do not fear force, then such great force will arrive that there will be no restricting them to the boundaries within which they should dwell, no satisfying them within the limits in which they should live.
It is just because one is insatiable
That there is no satisfying him.
Therefore what the sage himself knows he does not himself reveal.
He cherishes himself but does not value himself.
Thus he rejects the one and keeps the other.

[72c19t] Lin Yutang
ON PUNISHMENT (1)
When people have no fear of force,
Then (as is the common practice) great force descends upon them.
Despise not their dwellings,
Dislike not their progeny.
Because you do not dislike them,
You will not be disliked yourself.
Therefore the Sage knows himself, but does not show himself,
Loves himself, but does not exalt himself.
Therefore he rejects the one (force) and accepts the other (gentility).

[72c20t] Victor H. Mair
When the people do not fear the majestic,
Great majesty will soon visit them.
Do not limit their dwellings,
Do not suppress their livelihood.
Simply because you do not suppress them, they will not grow weary of you.
For this reason,
The sage is self-aware, but does not flaunt himself;
He is self-devoted, but does not glorify himself.
Therefore,
He rejects the one and adopts the other.

[72c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
When the people lack a sense of awe disaster will descend upon them.
Do not constrict their living space.
Do not harass them in their work.
If you do not oppress them, they will not weary of you.
Therefore,
True Persons know themselves but make no show of themselves.
They know their value but do not exalt themselves.
They prefer this within to that without.

[72c22t] David H. Li
When the populace is unafraid of threats, major threats loom.
Do not harass their neighborhood;
Do not interfere with their livelihood.
Thus, without interference, people will not interfere.
Thus, the sage knows self without self-touting, respects self without self-aggrandizement.
Thus,
forsake self-touting and self-aggrandizement;
embrace self-knowledge and self-respect.

[72c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura

It will inexorably and adversely affect them.
If they accept it with knowledge and reverence,
It will accommodate them with balance and harmony.
Therefore, the sage, in harmony with the Law of Nature,
Knows himself but does not flaunt his knowledge,
Loves himself but does not exalt his status,
Accepts where he is without complaint,
Enjoys what he does without dislike.
Thus, he rejects imbalance and disharmony,
And chooses balance and harmony.

[72c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
If the people do not fear the ruling authority,
A much greater fear will befall them.
Be sure that you do not make them live in crowded quarters
Or make their lives unbearable.
Only when their living quarters are not crowded
Will their dissatisfaction disappear.

[72c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
When the people lack a sense of awe,
There is bound to be disorder or disaster.
Never oppress them in their own homes, or interfere with their means of livelihood.
If you don't oppose them,
They won't try to depose you.
So, the sage who really knows himself never shows himself off to his people - loves himself, without false pride - discards the mask, and wears his true face.

[72c26t] Gu Zhengkun
When the people are not afraid of the threatening might of the authority,
The great tumult will soon ensue.
Do not harass their living places;
Do not deprive them of their means of livelihood.
If you do not oppress the people,
The people will not be tired of you (the ruler).
Hence the sage knows himself but does not praise himself;
loves himself but does not honor himself.
That is why he discards the latter and takes the former.

[72c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
When people lack a sense of awe, then disaster will descend upon them.
Do not narrow the living space of the mind.
Do not reject the inherent character.
Because one does not reject, one will not be rejected.
That is why the sage knows himself but does not flaunt himself.

He loves himself but does not value himself.
Therefore he discards one and takes the other.

[72c28t] Liu Qixuan
When people revolt,
Governmental prestige ends.
The ruler should always bear this in mind:
Never narrow the roads of life;
Never cause people to be dissatisfied with their existence.
For, satisfied with life,
None would revolt against the government.
The moral for the ruler is:
Know one's own shortcomings
Instead of being occupied with one's own views.
Appreciate others' appreciation
Instead of imposing one's self upon others.
That is how the wise person makes choices.

[72c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
On Gentility
Lao Tze says,
The time when people do not fear punishment is the time when a great dread will descend upon them.
Let them not thoughtlessly indulge themselves in their ordinary life.
Let them not act as if they are weary of what life depends on.
It is by avoiding such indulgence that such weariness does not arise.
Therefore the sage knows himself, but does not parade his knowledge;
loves himself, but does not value himself.
Therefore he rejects the punishment and accepts the gentility.

[72c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
If the people have no fear of their ruling authority, still greater fear will come.
Be sure not to give them too narrow a dwelling;
Nor make their living scanty.
Only when their dwelling place is no longer narrow will their dissatisfaction come to an end.

[72c31t] Paul J. Lin
If the people do not dread power,
There will be the appearance of great power.
Do not restrict their living quarters.
Do not disturb their livelihood.
Just because one does not annoy them,
He will not be annoyed by them.
Therefore, the Sage knows himself but does not display himself.
He loves himself but does not distinguish himself.
Therefore, he rejects that to prefer this.

[72c32t] Michael LaFargue
When the people are not in awe of your majesty, then great majesty has been achieved.
Do not restrict where they can live,
do not tire them out by taxing what they live on.
Simply do not tire them,
and they will not tire of you.
And so, the Wise Person:
Knows himself,
does not make a show of himself.
Loves himself,
does not exalt himself.
Yes, he leaves 'that' aside, and attends to 'this'.

[72c33t] Cheng Lin
When the people are not afraid of punishment, the exercise of authority will be hampered.
Do not oppress the people; do not make them weary of life.
When the ruler does not oppress the people, they will not be weary of life.
The Sage knows his own worth, but makes no self-display.
He has self-respect, but does not feel self-important.

[72c34t] Yi Wu
When the people no longer fear authority,
Then the great authority will come.
Do not neglect their livelihood;
Do not scorn their spiritual lives.
If you do not scorn them,
They will not reject you.
Therefore, the sage
Knows himself, but is not opinionated;
Loves himself, but is not conceited.
So, he renounces that and chooses this.

[72c35t] Han Hiong Tan
When people do not respect the authority,
Legislation bearing stiff penalties will soon follow.
Nevertheless, the ruler should not make people's lives a living hell.
If the ruler is not oppressive, they will not loathe him.
Although the sage is conscious of his ability, he does not show off his talent.
While maintaining his self-righteousness, he does not flaunt his eminence.
He thus rejects parading his eminence, but he embraces his self-esteem.

[72c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
When people lack a sense of pure spiritual piety toward natural life, then awful things happen in their life.
Therefore, respect where you dwell.

Love your life and livelihood.
Because you do not disparage your life and livelihood, you will never become tired of life.
Thus, one of natural whole virtue respects his own life, but is not egotistical.
He loves his life, but does not exalt himself.
He holds a sense of spiritual serenity for all things, and disparages nothing.
Hence, he does what is right and gives up what is not right.

[72c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
When people are free from fear,
They experience "basic dread."
Because they are not limited by the places in which they stay,
They are at peace with their lives.
Because they are at peace with their lives,
Their lives are peaceful.
Therefore, the wise is aware of himself,
But does not display himself.
He cultivates himself,
But is not proud of himself.
He leaves behind small fear,
But experiences basic dread.

[72c38t] Henry Wei
Self-Respect
Ai Chi
When people no longer fear authority,
Great Authority will come to them.
Do not pen them up in narrow surroundings;
Do not make them weary of life.
Only when they are not wearied,
Will they cease to be weary.
That's why the Sage has self-knowledge,
But does not display himself;
He maintains his self-respect,
But does not feel high and mighty.
Forsooth, he rejects this and adopts that.

[72c39t] Ha Poong Kim
When the people do not fear the authority [of the sovereign],
The supreme authority arrives.
They are neither contented in their abodes,
Nor satisfied with their lives.
Only because they are not satisfied,
They cannot be suppressed.
Therefore the sage
Knows himself but does not show himself,
Cherishes himself but does not exalt himself.

Therefore he discards that and takes this.

[72c40t] Tao Huang
People are fearless before the power.
If fear arises, it will be a great fear.
Not constraining the living environment,
They do not get bored by life.
Because we do not get bored, there is no boredom.
Therefore the sage is self-aware but not introspective.
He has self-respect but does not price himself.
He rejects one and takes the other.

[72c41t] Tang Zi-chang
People are not afraid of punishment, yet capital punishment is enforced.
Do not force people into moving.
Do not weary people of living.
Hence, only non-interference prevents people from becoming weary.
Therefore, Sage rulers were aware of self but not self-displaying;
self-respecting but not self-exalting.
He eliminated the former and supplied the later.

[72c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
When the people do not fear what is dreadful,
Then what is greatly dreadful will descend on them.
Do not reduce the living space of their dwellings.
Do not oppress their lives.
It is because you do not oppress them that they are not oppressed.
Therefore the sage knows himself but does not show himself.
He loves himself but does not exalt himself.
Therefore he rejects the one but accepts the other.

[72c91t] И. И. Семененко
Когда народу не страшны угрозы, грозит великая беда.
Не гнушайтесь его местом обитания, не пресыщайтесь тем, что он растит.
Не пресытетесь, и вам не будет тошно.
Именно поэтому Премудрый человек в своем самопознании себя не видит и при любви к себе не придает себе значения.
Он отвергает то и берет это.

[72c92t] А. А. Маслов
Если народ не трепещет перед властью, то власть достигает величайшего могущества.
Не сгоняйте народ с его мест, не презирайте устоев его жизни.
Тот, кто не презирает этого, не презрен будет.
Вот почему мудрецы, познав себя, не проявляли себя;
любили себя, не превознося себя.
И потому, отказываясь от одного, они достигали другого.

[72c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Когда народ не боится грозной воинственной силы - грозная воинственная сила скоро настигнет его.
Пусть власти не утесняют народ в его жилищах, пусть власти не давят на жизнь народа.
Ведь если не давить, то и не нужны будут строгости и кары.
Поэтому совершенный мудрец знает сам себя, но не стремится из себя делать зрелище для людей.
Он ценит сам себя, но не понуждает других дорожить собой.
Отбрасывая то, берет он это.

[72c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Когда народ не боится власти, тогда и приходит великая власть.
Не оскверняй его жилища, не вреди тому, чем он живет.
Если не будешь вредить, не будет и вреда.
Вот почему совершенномудрый человек,
себя познав, себя не выставляет эрудитом;
собою дорожа, себя не ценит высоко.
И потому отбрасывает одно, избирает другое.

[72c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Когда народ не боится могущественных, тогда приходит могущество.
Не тесните его жилища, не презирайте его жизни.
Кто не презирает [народа], тот не будет презрен [народом].
Поэтому совершенномудрый, зная себя, себя не выставляет.
Он любит себя и себя не возвышает.
Он отказывается от самолюбия и предпочитает невозвышение.

[72c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Когда народ перестает бояться сильного, то сильный нападет на него.
Каково бы ни было жилище, оно для святого не тесно.
Каково бы ни было место рождения, для святого все равно.
Никакой предмет не стесняет его, поэтому и он не стесняет никого.
Хотя святой хорошо знает свое достоинство, но никогда не обнаружить этого.
Хотя ему не чуждо самолюбие, но он никогда не гордится.
Вот почему все должны удалиться от первого и приблизиться к последнему.

[72c97t] В. В. Малявин
Когда в народе не страшатся грозной власти,
Придет великая гроза.
Не стесняй людей в их жилищах,
Не причиняй вред жизни других.
Лишь когда людям не вредят,
Они сами не вредят другим.
А посему премудрый человек знает себя, но не показывает себя,
Любит себя, но не ценит себя.
Итак, он отбрасывает то и берет себе это.

Если народ не боится власти, тогда придет еще большая власть.
Будьте в отсутствии привыкания к тому, что приносит покой.
Будьте в отсутствии пресыщения тем, что вас порождает.
Ведь только не пресыщение -
Это дает:
Не пресыщение.
Это дает:
Человек мудрости осознает себя, не показывая себя.
Любит себя, не предавая ценности себе.
Причинность:
Отбрасывает то, берет это.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy-Three

1155/2593

[73c01t] Robert G. Henricks
If you're brave in being daring, you'll be killed;
If you're brave in not being daring, you'll live.
{With these} two things, in one case there's profit, in the other there's harm.
The things Heaven hates - who knows why?
The Way of Heaven is not to fight yet to be good at winning -
Not to speak yet skillfully respond -
No one summons it, yet it comes on its own -
To be at ease yet carefully plan.
Heaven's net is large and vast;
Its mesh may be coarse yet nothing slips through.

[73c02t] John C. H. Wu
HE who is brave in daring will be killed;
He who is brave in not daring will survive.
Of these two kinds of bravery, one is beneficial, while the other proves harmful.
Some things are detested by Heaven,
But who knows the reason?
Even the Sage is baffled by such a question.
It is Heaven's Way to conquer without striving,
To get responses without speaking,
To induce the people to come without summoning,
To act according to plans without haste.
Vast is Heaven's net;
Sparse-meshed it is, and yet
Nothing can slip through it.

[73c03t] D. C. Lau
He who is fearless in being bold will meet with his death;
He who is fearless in being timid will stay alive.
Of the two, one leads to good, the other to harm.
Heaven hates what it hates,
Who knows the reason why?
Therefore even the sage treats some things as difficult.
The way of heaven
Excels in overcoming though it does not contend,
In responding though it does not speak,
In attracting though it does not summon,
In laying plans though it appears slack.
The net of heaven is cast wide.
Though the mesh is not fine, yet nothing ever slips through.

[73c04t] R. L. Wing
Those bold in daring will die;
Those bold in not daring will survive.
Of these two, either may benefit or harm.
Nature decides which is evil, But who can know why?
Even Evolved Individuals regard this as difficult.
The Tao in Nature
Does not contend,
Yet skillfully triumphs.
Does not speak,
Yet skillfully responds.
Does not summon,
And yet attracts.
Does not hasten,
Yet skillfully designs.
Nature's network is vast, so vast.
Its mesh is coarse, yet nothing slips through.

[73c05t] Ren Jiyu
He who is brave in daring everything will be killed,
And he who is brave in daring nothing will live on.
Of the results of the two kinds of braveness, one is advantageous, the other is harmful.
When Heaven has some detestation, Who can know its cause?
So even the sage feels it difficult to explain.
It is the Tao (Way) of Heaven:
Not to struggle and yet be good at winning,
Not to speak and yet be good at replying,
Without being called it comes of itself,
Though slow, it plans skillfully.
The net of Heaven is vast,
It has large meshes, but it lets nothing escape.

[73c06t] Gia-fu Feng
A brave and passionate man will kill or be killed.
A brave and calm man will always preserve life.
Of these two which is good and which is harmful?
Some things are not favored by heaven. Who knows why?
Even the sage is unsure of this.
The Tao of heaven does not strive, and yet it overcomes.
It does not speak, and yet is answered.
It does not ask, yet is supplied with all its needs.
It seems at ease, and yet it follows a plan.
Heaven's net casts wide.
Though its meshes are coarse, nothing slips through.

He who is brave enough to challenge the Dao perishes.
He who is brave enough to revere the Dao lives.
These two personalities, with their respective harms and benefits, will invite favor or disfavor from heaven.
Does any one know the reason behind it?
The way of heaven, the Dao, is apt to win benefits though it never struggles for any benefit.
He who follows the Dao, though he never asks for any favor, receives the favor.
Results come of their own accord where results are due.
Without deliberating, heaven appears to have its plans.
Although its net appears to consist of course meshes,
No one can sneak through and escape the law.

[73c08t] Xiaolin Yang
If you have the courage to be strong, you will fail;
If you have the courage to be weak, you will succeed.
These two courages have completely opposite results.
Who knows why the heavens does not like the strong?
Even the great men found this question difficult to answer.
The law of the heavens never fights but always wins,
Never speaks but always gets a response,
Never calls but always gets an answer,
Moves slowly but has everything arranged perfectly.
The law of the heavens is like a huge net; the net holes are large, but nothing can escape.

[73c09t] Walter Gorn Old, FREEDOM OF ACTION
He whose courage is expressed in daring will soon meet death.
He whose courage is shown in self-restraint will be preserved.
There are, then, two kinds of courage; the one is injurious and the other of advantage.
But who is to say why one of them should incur the judgment of Heaven?
That is why the Sage finds it difficult to act.
The celestial Tao does not strive, and yet overcomes everything.
It does not speak, yet it is skilful in replying.
It does not call, yet things come to it readily.
It is quiet in its methods, yet its plans are thoroughly effective.
The net of Heaven has large meshes, and yet nothing escapes it!

[73c10t] James Legge
He whose boldness appears in his daring (to do wrong, in defiance of the laws) is put to death;
he whose boldness appears in his not daring (to do so) lives on.
Of these two cases the one appears to be advantageous, and the other to be injurious.
But
When Heaven's anger smites a man,
Who the cause shall truly scan?
On this account the sage feels a difficulty (as to what to do in the former case).

It is the way of Heaven not to strive, and yet it skilfully overcomes;
not to speak, and yet it is skilful in (obtaining) a reply;
does not call, and yet men come to it of themselves.
Its demonstrations are quiet, and yet its plans are skilful and effective.
The meshes of the net of Heaven are large;
far apart, but letting nothing escape.

[73c11t] David Hinton
To infuse daring with courage means death.
To infuse caution with courage means life.
The one enriches you, and the other ruins you.
No one knows why heaven
despises what it despises,
that's why a sage inhabits the complexity of things.
The Way of heaven never contends and so overcomes perfectly, never speaks
and so answers perfectly, never summons
and so arrives of itself, stays calm
and so plans perfectly.
The net of heaven is vast, woven so vast and wide open nothing slips through.

[73c12t] Chichung Huang
Brave in daring, one gets killed;
Brave in not daring, one lives.
Of these two -
One is beneficial, one harmful.
That which heaven loathes -
Who knows its reason?
Heaven's Tao,
Without battling, excels in triumphing;
Without speaking, excels in responding;
Without being summoned, comes spontaneously;
Though loose, excels in planning.
Heaven's net is vast:
Though wide-meshed, misses nothing.

[73c13t] Ellen M. Chen
One who is courageous out of daring (kan) is killed.
One who is courageous out of not daring lives.
Of these two, this is beneficial while that is harmful.
What heaven hates, who knows the reason?
Therefore even the sage takes it to be difficult.
The way of heaven:

Without contending (cheng), it is yet good at winning,
Without speaking, it is yet good in responding,
Without being beckoned, it yet comes of its own accord,
Unhurried, it is yet good at planning (mou).
The net of heaven is vast,
Widely spaced, yet missing nothing.

[73c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org

To be brave, to the extent of being reckless, a person will end up involving in the business of killing [people] or being killed;
To be brave, in the manner of opposing killing [people even if challenged], a person will end up staying alive;
Each of these two modes of being brave has its advantages and disadvantages.
There are matters which basically disagree with the heavenly (highest) good, but how can we ostensively see through their appearance [if we fail to examine them thoroughly and lay out a careful conjecture of their manifestation]?
[Not to mention the fact that even] Sages have difficulties to [pin-point the ultimate justification] after much fumbling.
The heavenly (the highest) Tao permeates in the following way:
It prevails with certainty, though it is not competitive [with anything or anyone];
It responds with precision, though it is speechless;
It befalls spontaneously, though nobody calls for it;
Its plan has been laid out meticulously, though it is open and truthful;
[The heavenly Tao] is like a gigantic net whose snare covers and all and every thing exhaustively that nothing can slip through its [seemingly] loose mesh.

[73c15t] Tien Cong Tran

He who is brave in daring will be killed.
He who is brave in not daring will survive.
Of these two kinds of bravery, one is beneficial, while the other is harmful.
Some things are hated by Heaven, but who knows the reason?
Even the sage does not know it.
It is Heaven's Way not to contend but win, not to speak but respond, not to be summoned but come, to be relaxed but lay good plans.
Heaven's net is vast, sparse-meshed, and yet nothing can slip through it.

[73c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang

When courage is combined with boldness, one dies.
When courage is combined with prudence, one survives.
Of the two, which is beneficial and which is harmful?
It is hard to know what Heaven dislikes.
This is why even sages feel the difficulty.
The Tao of the nature is that:
The best winnings come without rivaling.
The best responses are not wordy.
The best friends come without formal invitation.
The best plans are made when relaxed.

Heaven's net is wide.
Although it has meshes, nothing escapes from it.

[73c17t] Arthur Waley
He whose braveness lies in daring, slays.
He whose braveness lies in not daring, gives life.
Of these two, either may be profitable or unprofitable.
But 'Heaven hates what it hates;
None can know the reason why'.
Wherefore the Sage, too, disallows it.
For it is the way of Heaven not to strive but none the less to conquer,
Not to speak, but none the less to get an answer,
Not to beckon; yet things come to it of themselves.
Heaven is like one who says little, yet none the less has laid his plans.
Heaven's net is wide;
Coarse are the meshes, yet nothing slips through.

[73c18t] Richard John Lynn
If one's bravery is expressed in daring, he will be killed.
If one's bravery is expressed in not daring, he will live.
But both these two sometimes result in benefit, sometimes in harm.
When Heaven is cruel, who understands why?
Therefore even the sage finds this fraught with danger.
The Dao of Heaven is such that one excels at winning without contending.
He excels at making people respond without speaking.
He spontaneously attracts without summoning.
He excels at planning while utterly at ease.
The net of Heaven spreads far and wide.
Though its mesh is coarse, it never loses anything.

[73c19t] Lin Yutang
ON PUNISHMENT (2)
Who is brave in daring (you) kill,
Who is brave in not daring (you) let live.
In these two,
There is some advantage and some disadvantage.
(Even if) Heaven dislikes certain people,
Who would know (who are to be killed and) why?
Therefore even the Sage regards it as a difficult question.
Heaven's Way (Tao) is good at conquest without strife,
Rewarding (vice and virtue) without words,
Making its appearance without call,
Achieving results without obvious design.
The heaven's net is broad and wide.
With big meshes, yet letting nothing slip through.

[73c20t] Victor H. Mair
He who is brave in daring will be killed,
He who is brave in not daring will survive.
One of these two courses is beneficial,
The other is harmful.
Who knows the reason for heaven's dislikes?
The Way of heaven
does not war yet is good at conquering, does not speak yet is good at answering,
is not summoned yet comes of itself,
is relaxed yet good at making plans.
Heaven's net is vast;
Though its meshes are wide, nothing escapes.

[73c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
A person whose courage lies in daring will meet death.
A person whose courage lies in not daring will encounter life.
Of the two courses, either may be beneficial or harmful.
Heaven dislikes what it dislikes.
Who knows the reason why?
Even the True Person has difficulty with such a question.
The Tao of Heaven
does not strive and yet it overcomes, does not speak and yet it gets responses,
does not beckon and yet it attracts,
is at ease and yet it follows a plan.
The net of heaven is cast wide.
Though the mesh is coarse,
nothing ever slips through.

[73c22t] David H. Li
Courageous in accepting dare results in demise;
courageous in declining dare results in survival.
Between these two, there are advantages and disadvantages.
The cosmos has dislikes, but no one knows the reason.
It is hard even for the sage to explain.
The Direction of the cosmos,
though does not compete, is good at winning;
though wordless, is good at responding;
needs no invitation and comes on own volition;
and is at ease and is good at planning.
The cosmos's net is immense; it is loose but it does not miss.

Of these two, one is beneficial and the other harmful.
Heaven does not favor harmful courage,
Yet, there are few who really know the reason.
Thus, the sage does not make light of this truth.
He who abides by the way of Heaven
Triumphs without fighting,
Responds without chattering,
Reaches out without being asked,
Plans ahead without being impetuous.
Though its meshes may appear wide,
Through the vast net of heavenly law,
Nothing can ever slip.

[73c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The person who shows courage in daring will perish.
The person who shows courage in a lack of daring will live.
To know these two things means to differentiate between the one, which is beneficial, and the other, which is harmful.
Who knows that heaven loathes one of them?
The superior Tao does not fight, yet it wins for certain.
It does not speak, yet it responds to everything.
It does not call, yet everyone comes to hear it.
It is not a tactician, yet it makes plans.
Heaven's net is all-embracing, and its holes are wide,
And even so, nothing escapes its sweep.

[73c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
A person who's brash and fearless will die,
A person who is cautious will survive -
These two are right, and they are wrong
Heaven looks down on both and who knows the truth?
So even the sage admits some things are beyond him.
The Tao of Heaven doesn't struggle, but it wins through
It doesn't ask yet it always hears the answer;
It doesn't demand yet things come, because they want to;
It has no desires and yet everything works out as if planned.
And though the Net Of Heaven is wide,
Not even the tiniest whisper escapes it.

[73c26t] Gu Zhengkun
Bravery in being bold leads to death;
Bravery in being timid leads to life.
These two kinds of bravery,
One leads to good the other to harm,
Who knows why
Heaven hates what it hates?

Even the sage feels it difficult to understand.
This is the Tao of heaven:
To excel in triumphing by means of non-contention;
To be good at answering by means of taciturnity;
To attract people by using no summons;
To be quick in planning by acting slowly.
The net of heaven is spread wide and far,
Though the mesh is largely knit,
Nothing can slip through the net.

[73c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
He who is brave and unscrupulous will meet his death.
He who is brave and cautious will stay alive.
Of these both, one leads to good, one leads to harm.
Everyone hates the bad - the reason why is clear.
That is why the sage is always cautious.
The Tao of Heaven does not fight but wins,
does not speak but is answered,
is not summoned but appears,
does not plan but consults.
The net of Heaven is widely cast;
the mesh is loose, yet nothing slips through.

[73c28t] Liu Qixuan
One who is brave enough to dare gets death.
One who is brave enough not to dare gets life.
The big difference between the two
Is the result of heaven's intervention.
And that is where the ruler should hesitate.
Heaven's way wins without fighting,
Responds without being asked,
Comes to the rescue without being summoned,
And has wonderful schemes within a simple expanse.
Heaven's net of law is the most sparsely woven,
But it is the biggest and lets off no criminals.

[73c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
On True Boldness
Lao Tze says,
He who is fearless in his daring to do wrong goes against the Tao, and meets with death.
He who is fearless in his not daring to do so, remains alive.
Of these two cases one is apparently advantageous, and the other harmful.
But when Heaven's hate imposes on a man, who would know why?
On this account even the sage feels it is difficult to understand.
The way of Heaven does not contend yet skillfully excels in overcoming;
it does not speak yet skillfully responds to asking;

it does not summon yet attracts men to it.
It is unselfish and magnanimous, yet its plans are skillful and effective.
The net of Heaven spreads wide with its meshes far apart;
yet it lets nothing slip through.

[73c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
He who shows courage in daring will perish;
He who shows courage in not-daring will live.
To know these two is to distinguish the one, benefit, from the other, harm.
Who can tell that one of them should be loathed by heaven?
The Tao of heaven does not contend; yet it surely wins the victory.
It does not speak; yet it surely responds.
It does not call; yet all things come of their own accord.
It remains taciturn; yet it surely makes plans.
The net of heaven is vast, and its meshes are wide;
Yet from it nothing escapes.

[73c31t] Paul J. Lin
To be brave in daring is to be killed.
To be brave in not daring is to live.
Both of them are either beneficial or harmful.
Who knows the real reason for heaven's hatred?
Even the Sage would find it difficult.
The Tao of heaven does not compete, but is good in winning;
does not speak, but is good in responding;
does not summon, but things come by themselves;
behaves calmly, but is good in planning.
The net of heaven is so vast.
Although it is wide open, it loses nothing.

[73c32t] Michael LaFargue
"One who shows bravery by being daring will get killed;
one who shows bravery by not being daring will survive."
But in both these cases:
"Sometimes it helps, sometimes it harms."
"What Heaven picks to hate - who knows the reason?"
And so the Wise Person:
Treats things as difficult.
Heaven's Way:
Not contending, but excels at overcoming;
not speaking, but excels in getting answers;
not summoning, but people come of themselves;
lax, but excels at organization.
Heaven's net is very wide - loosely woven,
but it lets nothing slip by.

[73c33t] Cheng Lin
When one is daring to the point of recklessness, he will meet with violent death.
When one's daring is tempered by caution, he will find his life secure.
Of these two types, one is beneficial and the other harmful.
Who knows the cause of Heaven's preference?
The way of Heaven is victorious, and there is no strife convincing, and there is no speech;
responsive, and there is no compulsion;
sure of success, and there is no haste.
The rule of Heaven is extensive and comprehensive, slow but sure.

[73c34t] Yi Wu
One who shows bravery in daring will be killed.
One who shows bravery in not daring will live.
Of them both, one is beneficial and the other is harmful.
About Heaven's dislike,
Who knows the reason?
Therefore, even a sage finds it difficult.
The way of Heaven
does not compete, but is good at winning;
does not speak, but is good at responding;
does not summon, but all things come of themselves;
is broad, but is good at planning.
Heaven's net is vast;
It is loose, but never misses.

[73c35t] Han Hiong Tan
Brave and reckless will be killed.
Brave but prudent will survive.
Two different types of bravery have dissimilar outcomes:
one is beneficial but the other is disastrous.
Why Providence dislikes one but not the other is a puzzle.
Even the sage is unable to fathom the reason.
The way of Dao is to accomplish without contention;
To evoke response without utterance;
All things come to pay homage without being told.
Dao does not resort to scheming but its plan is perfect.
The dragnet cast by Providence has wide meshes,
Yet, no wrongdoers ever slip through.

[73c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
He who is brave in daring will meet an unnatural death.
He who is brave in gentleness will be preserved.
Of these two kinds of bravery, one is beneficial, while the other proves harmful.
The subtle truth of the universe does not support those who are brave in daring, yet there are still many people who do not understand such apparent truth.

So, even the one who integrates his being with the subtle essence of the universe, dares not make light of the subtle law of life.
The subtle Way of the universe gave birth to a world of peace and order.
It responds to the order and harmony of all beings and things without needing to talk to them.
Without your summoning it, it comes to you.
Without scheming, its plan is perfect.
Vast is the subtle energy network of the universe.
Sparsely meshed it is, yet nothing can slip through it!

[73c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Courageous but foolhardy, one perishes.
Courageous but not foolhardy, one's life is saved.
Between these two, one gains, the other loses.
Who knows what nature loathes?
Even the sage can hardly make a wise choice.
According to the way of heaven,
Without contending, one inevitably wins.
Without asking, one spontaneously receives a response.
Without invitation, success comes by itself.
Unintentionally, the heavenly way is well-devised.
The net of nature is all-embracing.
Although the spaces are large, nothing escapes it.

[73c38t] Henry Wei
Natural Action

Courage in daring leads to slaughter;
Courage in daring not leads to life.
Either may have its advantage or disadvantage.
When Heaven detests anything,
Who can know the reason why?
Thus even the Sage feels some difficulty here.
Heaven's way does not contend, yet excels in winning;
It does not speak, yet excels in making response;
It receives no summons, yet would come of itself;
It is patient and easy-going, yet excels in planning.
The net of Heaven spreads far and wide;
Though its meshes are large,
Yet it allows nothing to slip through.

[73c39t] Ha Poong Kim
Being brave in daring leads to death,
Being brave in not daring leads to life.
Of these two,
One is advantageous and the other injurious.
What Heaven detests -

Who knows its reason?
Therefore even the sage finds it hard to tell.
The way of Heaven -
It never contends yet is good at winning,
It never speaks yet is good at responding.
It comes of itself without being invited,
It seems remiss yet good at planning.
Heaven's net is vast.
Though its meshes are coarse, nothing escapes it.

[73c40t] Tao Huang
Courage combined with daring promotes killing.
Courage not combined with daring promotes life.
These two can be either beneficial or harmful.
Who knows the reason for what heaven hates?
The Tao of heaven is
Good at winning without fighting,
Good at responding without speaking,
Appearing without being asked,
Good at strategizing while fighting.
The net of heaven is broad and loose,
Yet nothing slips through.

[73c41t] Tang Zi-chang
The courage of one daring to be aggressive will eventually kill his life.
The courage of one not daring to be aggressive will eventually ensure his life.
Between these two kinds of courage we know which one is good and which one is harmful.
Who knows the reason why?
Because it is hated by nature.
The law of Nature does not strive, yet achieves a perfect victory.
It does not use words, yet it is perfectly convincing.
It receives no call, yet it automatically responds.
It is plain and unnoticed, yet it is skillfully planned.
It covers every place all the time like a heavenly net, it seems to be wide meshed, yet it does not let anything slip away.

[73c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
He who is brave in daring will be killed.
He who is brave in not daring will live.
Of these two, one is advantageous and one is harmful.
Who knows why Heaven dislikes what it dislikes?
Even the sage considers it a difficult question.
The Way of Heaven does not compete, and yet it skillfully achieves victory.
It does not speak, and yet it skillfully responds to things.
It comes to you without your invitation.
It is not anxious about things and yet it plans well.

Heaven's net is indeed vast.
Though its meshes are wide, it misses nothing.

[73c91t] И. И. Семененко
Когда смелы в том, чтобы сметь, предают смерти;
когда смелы в том, чтобы не сметь, то воскрешают.
В обоих случаях приносится иной раз польза, а иной раз вред.
Кто знает, почему бывает Небу что-то ненавистно?
Именно поэтому Премудрый человек как бы во всем испытывает затруднение.
Дао Небес умеет без борьбы одерживать победу, умеет молчаливо откликаться,
является само без зова, умеет неумышленно замыслить.
Широко раскинута сеть Неба, и хоть она редка, но из нее не выскользнуть.

[73c92t] А. А. Маслов
Кто безрассуден в своём бесстрашии - погибает.
Кто не безрассуден в своём бесстрашии - остаётся жить.
Из этих двух начал одно ведёт к пользе, другое - к беде.
Кто знает, почему Небо презирает одно из них?
Даже мудрецы считали некоторые дела крайне трудными.
Путь Неба не соперничает, но побеждает;
не говорит, но даёт ответ;
не будучи призванным, приходит сам;
медлителен, но в намерениях всеобъемлющ.
Широка Небесная сеть, редки её ячейки, но не пропускают ничего.

[73c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Когда храбрец безрассуден - он гибнет.
Когда храбрец осмотрителен - он продолжает жить.
В этих двух качествах скрываются и польза и вред.
По какой причине Небо ненавидит нечто - кто знает?
Поэтому совершенный мудрец считает этот вопрос трудным.
Небо не борется ни с кем, но умело всех побеждает.
Оно не говорит, но должным образом всем отвечает.
Его не успели позвать, а оно уже и само пришло.
Оно безмятежно-покойно, но искусно в создании планов.
Небесная сеть распростерта повсюду.
Ячейки ее широки, но ничего не упустят.

[73c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Храбрый и безрассудно-дерзкий останется без головы.
Храбрый, но не безрассудно-дерзкий останется в живых.
Из этих двух одно означает пользу, другое вред.
Небу нечто ненавистно, а разве кто знает причину этого?
Поэтому и совершенномудрый человек тоже затрудняется в ответе на это.

Дао Неба не борется, но легко побеждает;
не говорит, но дружески откликается;
не призывается, но само приходит;
чисто-спокойно, но искусно в замыслах.
Сеть Неба широка и редка, но ничего не упускает.

[73c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Кто храбр и воинствен - погибает, кто храбр и не воинствен - будет жить.
Эти две вещи означают: одна - пользу, а другая - вред.
Кто знает причины того, что небо ненавидит [воинственных]?
Объяснить это трудно и совершенномудрому.
Небесное дао не борется, но умеет побеждать.
Оно не говорит, но умеет отвечать.
Оно само приходит.
Оно спокойно и умеет управлять [вещами].
Сеть природы редка, но ничего не пропускает.

[73c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Кто силен и дерзок, тот убьет людей.
Кто силен, но не дерзок, тот оживит людей.
Эти оба либо полезны, либо вредны.
Никто не знает, почему небо любит один предмет, а другой нет.
Решить этот вопрос даже святой муж не может.
Небесное Тао никогда не ссорится, поэтому оно побеждает всех.
Хотя оно мало говорит, но обсуждает лучше, нежели многоречивые.
Никто не вызывает (Тао), но оно присутствует везде.
Нам кажется, что оно ничего не делает, но на самом деле оно действует лучше всех.
Небесная сеть не плотна и как будто пропускает все предметы через себя; но из нее ничего не выйдет наружу.

[73c97t] В. В. Малявин
Тот, кто смел в удали, погибнет.
Тот, кто смел в скромности, будет жить.
Из этих двух одно полезно, другое вредно.
Небо чего-то не любит - кто знает тому причину?
Даже премудрый здесь затруднится с ответом.
Путь Неба: не борется, зато искусно побеждает,
Не говорит, зато искусно откликается,
Не призывает, а все приходит само,
Не вдается в частности, а все искусно рассчитывает.
Небесная Сеть широка и редка,
Но из нее ничто не ускользает.

[73c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Храбрость в смелости ведет к гибели.
Храбрость в не-смелости ведет к жизни.

В этой паре может быть польза, может быть вред.
Если Небо не любит кого-то, кто знает причину этого?
Это дает:
Человек мудрости приближает процесс к трудности.
В Пути Небес - нет соперничества - а совершенствование в победах; нет речи - а совершенствование отклика; нет призывания - а само приходит; такая беспечность - а совершенствование замыслов.
Сеть Неба необъятно редка, а нет упущений.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy-Four

1171/2593

[74c01t] Robert G. Henricks
If the people were constant [in their behavior] and yet did not fear death,
How could you use execution to intimidate them?
If you brought it about that the people were constant [in their behavior] and moreover feared death, and [we] took those who behaved in abnormal ways and killed them - who would dare act in this way?!
If the people are constant and moreover necessarily fear death, then we constantly have the one in charge of executions.
Now killing people in place of the one in charge of executions, this [is like] cutting wood in place of the head carpenter.
And of those who cut wood in place of the head carpenter, very few do not hurt their hands!

[74c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHEN the people are no longer afraid of death,
Why scare them with the spectre of death?
If you could make the people always afraid of death,
And they still persisted in breaking the law,
Then you might with reason arrest and execute them,
And who would dare to break the law?
Is not the Great Executor always there to kill?
To do the killing for the Great Executor
Is to chop wood for a master carpenter,
And you would be lucky indeed if you did not hurt your own hand!

[74c03t] D. C. Lau
When the people are not afraid of death, wherefore frighten them with death?
Were the people always afraid of death, and were I able to arrest and put to death those who innovate, then who would dare?
There is a regular executioner whose charge it is to kill.
To kill on behalf of the executioner is what is described as chopping wood on behalf of the master carpenter.
In chopping wood on behalf of the master carpenter, there are few who escape hurting their own hands instead.

[74c04t] R. L. Wing
When people do not fear death,
How can they be threatened with death?
Suppose people fear death and still do not conform.
Who would dare seize them and put them to death?
There is always the Master Executioner who kills.
To substitute for the Master Executioner in killing
Is like substituting for the Master Carpenter who carves.
Whoever substitutes for the Master Carpenter in carving,
Rarely escapes injury to his hands.

[74c05t] Ren Jiyu
Since the people do not fear death,
What is it for to frighten them with death?
If the people fear death and I can catch and kill those who make trouble,
Who dares to make trouble?
There is always someone who is in charge of inflicting death.
Inflicting death in place of those who are in charge of it can be described as hewing wood in place of a skillful carpenter.
Of those who hew wood in place of skillful carpenters, few have not cut their own hands.

[74c06t] Gia-fu Feng
If men are not afraid to die,
It is of no avail to threaten them with death.
If men live in constant fear of dying,
And if breaking the law means that a man will be killed,
Who will dare to break the law?
There is always an official executioner.
If you try to take his place,
It is like trying to be a master carpenter and cutting wood.
If you try to cut wood like a master carpenter, you will only hurt your hand.

[74c07t] Lok Sang Ho
People may not be afraid of death.
Why should we intimidate them with the threat of death?
If people are generally afraid of death,
And we are able to seize the exceptions and to kill them,
Why would anyone still disregard the death penalty?
The Lord of Killing does kill from time to time.
Yet anyone who kills in his place is like someone who takes the place of the master carpenter and uses his sharp tools.
It is unlikely that he can avoid hurting his own hands.

[74c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The people are not afraid of death; what is the purpose of using death to frighten them?
However, if the people are afraid of death, and very few people violate the law, catch and execute these criminals, and who will dare to do it again?
Killing people is the job of the heavens.
If you take over the job of the heavens, it is like carving wood for the carpenter.
If you carve wood for the carpenter, it is rare that you will not hurt your own hand.

[74c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE FAULT OF COERCION
When the people do not fear death, of what use is it to overawe them with it as a penalty?
And if they were always held in fear of death, and I could lay my hand upon all evil doers and slay them, would I dare to do it?
There is always the Great Executioner!

For one to usurp that office is like a novice cutting out the work of a great architect.
Such an one rarely fails to cut his own hands!

[74c10t] James Legge
The people do not fear death;
to what purpose is it to (try to) frighten them with death?
If the people were always in awe of death, and I could always seize those who do wrong, and put them to death, who would dare to do wrong?
There is always One who presides over the infliction of death.
He who would inflict death in the room of him who so presides over it may be described as hewing wood instead of a great carpenter.
Seldom is it that he who undertakes the hewing, instead of the great carpenter, does not cut his own hands!

[74c11t] David Hinton
In their misery, the people no longer fear death, so how can you threaten them even with death?
Let the people fear death always,
then if we seize those who follow sinister ways
and put them to death,
no one will dare live such lives.
The Executioner's killing is perennial, it's true.
But to undertake the killing yourself - that's like trying to carve lumber for a master carpenter.
Try to carve lumber for a master carpenter and you'll soon have blood on your hands.

[74c12t] Chichung Huang
If the majority of people do not fear death,
Why use killing to intimidate them?
If the majority of people do fear death,
Those who act perversely -
I can arrest and kill them.
Who would dare then?
The Executioner is always the one in charge of killing;
To kill in place of the Executioner
Is to chop wood in place of a master carpenter.
To chop wood in place of a master carpenter,
One can hardly avoid injuring one's own hand.

[74c13t] Ellen M. Chen
The people do not fear death,
Why threaten them with death?
Suppose the people always fear death,
One who does strange things (ch'i),
I shall seize and kill,
Then who dares [to do strange things]?
Killing is carried out by the executioner.

To replace the executioner and kill,
Is like chopping wood in place of the master carpenter.
To chop wood in place of the master carpenter,
Rarely one does not hurt one's own hand.

[74c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
If people [are driven to such extreme that they] are no longer afraid of death, then what is the point of frightening them with the threat of death?
[Someone may get the idea] "If I frequently scare people with the [terror of] death, and I would also make sure to arrest and execute disobedient ones to enforce it.
Subsequently, who would dare [to go against me]?" [This is rash and improper!]
Killings should be carried out by the naturally right administrator;
Whoever, other than the appropriate administrator commits killing [is under no circumstance justifiable, for he] has thus trespassed his appropriate role;
It is just as improper as an apprentice carver tampers with his master's work;
Hardly any apprentice carver, who tampers with his master's work, can avoid hurting his own hands.

[74c15t] Tien Cong Tran
When the people are not afraid of death, why scare them with the specter of death?
If you could make the people always afraid of death, and when someone persisted in breaking the law, then we might arrest and execute him, and who would dare to break the law?
Is not the great executor always there to kill?
If we want to do the killing for the great executor, this is like to chop wood for a master carpenter.
To chop wood for a master carpenter: we would be lucky indeed if we did not hurt our own hand.

[74c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
If people are not afraid to die, how death can be used to threaten them?
If we make people afraid of death, and execute a few extreme offenders, who would dare to offend again?
It is normal to have executioners who kill.
Substituting an executioner in killing is like substituting a master lumberjack in chopping trees.
Chopping trees by non-professionals rarely results in no hand injuries.

[74c17t] Arthur Waley
The people are not frightened of death.
What then is the use of trying to intimidate them with the death-penalty?
And even supposing people were generally frightened of death and did not regard it as an everyday thing, which of us would dare to seize them and slay them?
There is the Lord of Slaughter always ready for this task, and to do it in his stead is like thrusting oneself into the master-carpenter's place and doing his chipping for him.
Now 'he who tries to do the master-carpenter's chipping for him is lucky if he does not cut his hand'.

[74c18t] Richard John Lynn
If the common folk did not fear death, trying to use death to intimidate them would have no effect.
If one caused the common folk always to fear death, there would still be those who behaved perversely, but these I could seize and put to death, so who would dare be perverse?
There is the constant executioner who puts people to death.

If one puts people to death instead of this executioner, this means that he is doing the hewing instead of the great carpenter.
It rarely happens that one who tries to do the hewing instead of the great carpenter does not injure his own hand.

[74c19t] Lin Yutang
ON PUNISHMENT (3)
The people are not afraid of death;
Why threaten them with death?
Supposing that the people are afraid of death,
And we can seize and kill the unruly,
Who would dare to do so?
Often it happens that the executioner is killed.
And to take the place of the executioner
Is like handling the hatchet for the master carpenter.
He who handles the hatchet for the master carpenter
Seldom escapes injury to his hands.

[74c20t] Victor H. Mair
If the people never fear death, what is the purpose of threatening to kill them?
If the people ever fear death,
and I were to capture and kill those who are devious,
who would dare to be so?
If the people must be ever fearful of death,
then there will always be an executioner.
Now,
To kill in place of the executioner
Is like
Hewing wood in place of the master carpenter;
Few indeed will escape cutting their own hands!

[74c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
When the people do not fear death,
of what use is it to threaten them with death?
If the people were always afraid of death and if those who did wrong would always be arrested and put to death, who would do wrong?
There is always a Lord of Execution whose duty it is to kill.
If you try to fill that function
it is like trying to hew wood in place of a master carpenter.
You will probably injure your own hands.

[74c22t] David H. Li
When the populace are unafraid of death, what good is threatening them with death?
When the populace are afraid to die, hold devious ones and put them to death.

After that, who dares?
The official executioner is always there to do executions.
Doing executions by anyone else is like felling trees by other than an arborist.
A non-arborist, in felling trees, is unlikely not to hurt his hands.

[74c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
If the people do not fear death,
For reasons of extreme poverty or suffering,
What is the point of threatening them with death?
If the people fear death,
And if the outlaws are captured and killed,
Who will dare to break the law?
Yet, the act of killing should always be
The exclusive province of the Great Executioner.
Therefore, to kill in place of the Great Executioner is Like hewing wood in place of the master carpenter;
Few, if ever, will escape cutting their own hands.

[74c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
When people do not fear death,
What is the use of frightening them with the death penalty?
When people are constantly afraid of death,
And we can arrest and execute criminals,
Who would dare to commit crimes?
Only the executioner kills.
To kill instead of the executioner is like a woodcutter taking a master-carpenter's place.
When someone carves instead of the master-carpenter,
He can usually expect to injure his hand.

[74c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
If the people are not afraid,
It is useless to try and scare them with death.
And if people are afraid of death
And you make a point of hanging every criminal,
Then who would dare to do anything?
Any killing must be done by an official executioner.
If someone else were to do it,
It would be like trying to copy a master carpenter -
And if you try to cut like him you will only bloody your own hands!

[74c26t] Gu Zhengkun
When the people are not afraid of death,
What is the point of threatening them with death?
Should the people really fear death,
Who dare go against laws
If we put to death those who do evils?

It is the duty of a regular executioner to kill,
If one wants to kill on behalf of the executioner,
It is like chopping wood on behalf of the master carpenter.
There are few who can escape cutting their own hands
When they chop wood on behalf of the master carpenter.

[74c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
If people are not afraid of death, why threaten them with death to prevent them from committing a crime?
When people are afraid of death,
there are still those who are not afraid of it,
who will dare to commit a crime, and so why arrest and execute them?
There is an official executioner who is in charge of execution.
To kill on behalf of the executioner is like carving wood on behalf of the carpenter.
Those who cut wood on behalf of the carpenter can seldom escape from hurting their own hand.

[74c28t] Liu Qixuan
Since people are not afraid of death,
Why should they be threatened with it?
If they were afraid of death,
Who would dare to be executioner
When the evil ones are captured and executed?
The best killer kills all the time.
One who kills in the most accurate and exacting way
Can seldom avoid injuring one's own hands.

[74c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
On Punishment
Lao Tze says,
The people do not fear death;
what purpose is in trying to frighten them with death?
Supposing the people are afraid of death;
I could always seize those who do wrong, and put them to death.
Who would dare to do wrong?
There is a regular one who presides over the execution of death.
He who would execute death on behalf of the executioner is what is described as chopping wood on behalf of the great carpenter.
Seldom is it that he who undertakes the chopping on behalf of the great carpenter does not hurt his own hands.

[74c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
When the people are not afraid of death, what use is it to frighten them with the punishment of death?
If the people were constantly afraid of death and we could arrest and kill those who commit treacheries, who then would dare to commit such?
Only the Supreme Executioner kills.
To kill in place of the Supreme Executioner is to hack instead of a greater carpenter.

Now if one hacks in place of a great carpenter one can scarcely avoid cutting one's own hand.

[74c31t] Paul J. Lin
If the people do not fear death,
Why threaten them with death?
If we let the people always fear death,
And we capture and kill those who use trickery,
Who would dare [to use trickery]?
Those responsible for executions perform executions.
But those who perform executions for them
Are doing no more than carving wood for the greater carpenter.
And those who carve wood for the great carpenter
Can rarely fail to injure their own hands.

[74c32t] Michael LaFargue
"The people are always lacking in the fear of death."
Then why frighten them with death?
Supposing the people always had the fear of death,
and we could catch law breakers and kill them -
who would dare?
There is always The Executioner - he does the killing.
Doing the killing in The Executioner's place,
this is like "doing the cutting in the master carpenter's place."
One who cuts in the master carpenter's place - seldom it is he does not cut his hand.

[74c33t] Cheng Lin
When the people are not afraid of death, why try to frighten them by capital punishment?
If the people are really afraid of death and when the wrongdoers are promptly executed, who will dare to do wrong?
There should be a certain authority to decide on the death of men.
If the decision of death is given to other men than the qualified party, it is comparable to asking a novice to do the work of a master-craftsman.
In so doing, the novice seldom escapes injuring his hands.

[74c34t] Yi Wu
If the people no longer fear death,
How can one threaten them with death?
If one causes them constantly to fear death and captures and kills those who are tricky,
Who would dare to be tricky?
The one who constantly is the executioner can kill.
One who kills by taking the place of the great executioner is like one who takes the place of the great carpenter in cutting wood.
Of those who have taken the place of the great carpenter,
Few have not hurt their own hands!

[74c35t] Han Hiong Tan
If people are not afraid to die, why bother threatening them with death?
If people are afraid of dying, then death penalties should be summarily dished out to criminals.
Consequently, there will be no more offenders.
Normally, Nature usually does the job of the executioner.
If the government tries to do what Nature normally does,
It is akin to the apprentice trying to do the job of the master carpenter.
The apprentice usually ends up cutting his own hand.

[74c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
If people are not afraid to die, what is the use of threatening them with the punishment of death?
On the other hand,
if people value their lives, and if outlaws are seized and killed or are killed by what they are doing, who would dare risk a life of peace for the sake of an insecure future?
Yet it is always true that one who takes charge of killing is killed in turn.
To become the executioner of artificial righteousness is like the inexperienced lad who would brandish a sharp axe of a master carpenter.
He can seldom escape cutting himself.

[74c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
Men are no longer afraid to die.
Why should we frighten them with dying?
If men were still as afraid of death as they used to be,
We could catch a criminal and put him to death.
Who would have the courage to commit a crime?
(In nature), there is always one who is responsible for ending the life of man.
If we take over the responsibility of killing,
It is just like taking over the great lumberjack's work of cutting wood.
If we take over the great lumberjack's work of cutting,
We can hardly help but hurt our hands.

What avails it to scare them with death?
Assuming that they often do fear death,
And that any pervert can be seized and killed,
Who dares to do the killing?
It is the job of the Director of Death to kill.
To take over the job of the Director of Death
Is like wielding the hammer for the master-builder.
He who wields the hammer for the master-builder
Seldom escapes wounding himself in the hand.

When the people do not fear death,
How can you frighten them with death?
Suppose the people do always fear death,
And we can seize and kill
Those who are lawless.
But who would dare to do so?
There is always the one who administers killings, and he does the killing.
If you do the killing, taking his place,
This is called hewing wood taking the place of the master-carpenter.
If you hew wood taking the place of the master-carpenter,
You will seldom escape injuring your own hand.

[74c40t] Tao Huang
Whenever people are unafraid of death, how can killing be used as a threat?
Whenever people are afraid of death and are acting contrary, I will catch and kill them, who else can act so?
When people are absolutely afraid of death but perform killing, they are the best qualified to be executioners.
This is like doing carving for a master craftsman.
Doing the carving for a master craftsman, how could one's hand not get cut?

[74c41t] Tang Zi-chang
When people are no longer afraid of death, how can they be disciplined by death?
And if someone likes to be abnormal he may be arrested and punished, then who else would dare to be abnormal?
Since the one to kill is killed, a great professional killer is like a great professional chopper whose hands are subject to be hurt.

[74c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
The people are not afraid of death.
Why, then, threaten them with death?
Suppose the people are always afraid of death and we can seize those who are vicious and kill them,

To undertake executions for the master executioner is like hewing wood for the master carpenter.
Whoever undertakes to hew wood for the master carpenter rarely escapes injuring his own hands.

Когда народ не ощущает страха смерти, то как же можно смертью устрашать народ?
И кто посмел бы это делать, если бы народ незыблемо боялся смерти, а тех, кто строят козни, мне удалось бы взять и предать смерти?
В незыблемости пребывает ведающий убиением, который подвергает смерти.
Убивать вместо него - это все равно как попытаться что-либо вытесывать, вообразив себя великим плотником.

Если бы народ постоянно боялся смерти, а я хватал провинившихся и предавал их казни, кто посмел бы творить беззаконие?
Всегда существует Палач, который казнит.
Казнить от имени Палача - подобно тому, как рубить дерево от имени Великого мастера.
Редко найдётся тот, кто, рубя от имени Великого мастера, не поранил бы себе руки.

[74c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Если люди не боятся даже смерти, то чем же запугаешь их до смерти?
Если найдется такой, кто будет все время запугивать людей до смерти и этим тешиться, а я его поймаю и убью, кто еще посмеет так поступить?
Ведь в государстве есть всегда палач.
А подменять собою палача не то же самое ли, что вместо лесоруба идти рубить деревья?
Ведь тот, кто вместо лесоруба пойдет деревья рубить, тот всегда рискует собственную руку отрубить!

[74c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Если люди не боятся смерти, то зачем же пугать их смертью?
Если было бы так, что люди постоянно боялись бы смерти и творили зло,

Но если заменить собой того, кто отвечает за казнь и казнит,

Тот, кто заменит великого мастера рубить, редко когда не поранит себе руку.

А если кто его заменит - это значит заменит великого мастера.
Кто, заменяя великого мастера, рубит [топором], повредит свою руку.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy-Five

1183/2593

[75c01t] Robert G. Henricks
The reason why people starve,
Is because they take so much in tax-grain.
Therefore they starve.
The reason why the common people cannot be ruled,
Is because their superiors have their reasons for acting.
Therefore they cannot be ruled.
The reason why people take death lightly,
Is because they so avidly seek after life.
Therefore they take death lightly.
Only those who do not act for the purpose of living -
Only these are superior to those who value life.

[75c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHY are the people starving?
Because those above them are taxing them too heavily.
That is why they are starving.
Why are the people hard to manage?
Because those above them are fussy and have private ends to serve.
That is why they are hard to manage.
Why do the people make light of death?
Because those above them make too much of life.
That is why they make light of death.
The people have simply nothing to live upon!
They know better than to value such a life!

[75c03t] D. C. Lau
The people are hungry:
It is because those in authority eat up too much in taxes
That the people are hungry.
The people are difficult to govern:
It is because those in authority are too fond of action
That the people are difficult to govern.
The people treat death lightly:
It is because the people set too much store by life
That they treat death lightly.
It is just because one has no use for life that one is wiser than the man who values life.

[75c04t] R. L. Wing
People are hungry.
Because those above consume too much in taxes, People are hungry.
People are difficult to lead.

Because those above interfere with them, People are difficult to lead.
People make light of death.
Because those above deeply seek survival, People make light of death.
Indeed, it is those who do not interfere with life
Who are capable of respecting life.

[75c05t] Ren Jiyu
The people suffer from famine because too many of the taxes are swallowed by their rulers.
Thus they suffer from famine.
The people are difficult to rule because their rulers are fond of taking action.
Thus they are difficult to rule.
The people take risks with their lives because the rulers take good care of their own lives.
Thus the people are forced to risk their lives.
Those who do not value their lives are wiser than those who overvalue their lives.

[75c06t] Gia-fu Feng
Why are the people starving?
Because the rulers eat up the money in taxes.
Therefore the people are starving.
Why are the people rebellious?
Because the rulers interfere too much.
Therefore they are rebellious.
Why do the people think so little of death?
Because the rulers demand too much of life.
Therefore the people take death lightly.
Having little to live on, one knows better than to value life too much.

[75c07t] Lok Sang Ho
People are hungry.
That is because the government imposes too many taxes.
People are difficult to rule over.
That is because the government contrives and wants to do too much.
People do not think much of death.
That is because the government makes life a privilege
instead of treating it as a natural right.
Those who make living an unconditional right are good in that they pay due respect to life.

[75c08t] Xiaolin Yang
The people are hungry because the ruler taxes them too heavily, so they are hungry.
The people are difficult to control because the ruler is doing too many useless things, so they are difficult to control.
The people are not afraid of death because the ruler enjoys himself too much, so they are not afraid of death.
The ruler who does not care for his life is superior to the ruler who enjoys his life.

[75c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE EVIL OF AVARICE

Underdog_way.pdf, revision 8, sanmayce@hotmail.com, a corpus of 50(42 english, 8 russian) proofed(many originals' bugs crushed) translations of 老子道德經 or Lao Zi Dao De Jing

The people suffer from famine on account of the heavy taxation put upon them.
This is the cause of their need.
The people are difficult to govern because of the overbearing of their superiors.
This is the cause of their trouble.
The people make light of dying because of the great hardships of trying to live.
This is the reason of their indifference to death.
Therefore to keep living in obscurity is better than making overmuch of it.

[75c10t] James Legge
The people suffer from famine because of the multitude of taxes consumed by their superiors.
It is through this that they suffer famine.
The people are difficult to govern because of the (excessive) agency of their superiors (in governing them).
It is through this that they are difficult to govern.
The people make light of dying because of the greatness of their labours in seeking for the means of living.
It is this which makes them think light of dying.
Thus it is that to leave the subject of living altogether out of view is better than to set a high value on it.

[75c11t] David Hinton
The people are starving,
and it's only because you leaders feast on taxes
that they're starving.
The people are impossible to rule,
and it's only because you leaders are masters of extenuation that they're impossible to rule.
The people take death lightly,
and it's only because you leaders crave life's lavish pleasures that they take death lightly, they who act without concern for life: it's a wisdom far beyond treasuring life.

[75c12t] Chichung Huang
The people are starving,
Because he takes too much grain tax,
Hence, they are starving.
The hundred family names are unruly,
Because their sovereign has the intention to act,
Hence, they are unruly.
The people take death lightly,
Because he seeks after extravagant living,
Hence, they take death lightly.
Only one who does not apply himself to living
Is worthier than those who exalt living.

People are hard to rule.
Because their rulers rule by action (wei),
Therefore they are hard to rule.
People take death lightly.
Because they are in thick pursuit of life,
Therefore they take death lightly.
One who has nothing to pursue in life,
Is wiser than one who values life.

[75c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
The reason people suffer from hunger is because their superiors (government) taxed them heavily, so after the taxation not much was left to support their bare necessity;
The reason people were difficult to govern was because their superiors were meddling with their affairs [thus their sense of propriety was impeded];
The reason people risked their lives for trivial causes was because their superiors (government officials) demand to lived affluently [at the cost of other people's survival], people thus were forced to risk their lives [even for meager livelihood];
Accordingly, those [Solipsists] who did not get involve with other people's affairs were better human beings than those who wanted to live very well personally [at the cost of the survivals of other people];
Even though the latter value the growth of the population (lives) for his community.

[75c15t] Tien Cong Tran
The people are starving.
It is because those above them are taxing them too heavily.
That is why they are starving.
The people are hard to govern.
It is because those above them have a lot of interference.
That is why they are hard to govern.
The people make light of death.
It is because those above them live an extravagant life.
That is why they make light of death.
Only he who works not for life knows to value life.

[75c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
People starve because they pay heavy taxes.
People are hard to govern because the rulers force their wishes on people.
People are not afraid to rebel, because the rulers live extravagantly.
Therefore those who avoid extravagant life-style are wiser than those who live extravagantly.

[75c17t] Arthur Waley
The people starve because those above them eat too much tax-grain.
That is the only reason why they starve.
The people are difficult to keep in order because those above them interfere.
That is the only reason why they are so difficult to keep in order.
The people attach no importance to death, because those above them are too grossly absorbed in the pursuit of life.

That is why they attach no importance to death.
And indeed, in that their hearts are so little set on life they are superior to those who set store by life.

[75c18t] Richard John Lynn
The reason the common folk starve is that the ruler eats too much grain tax.
This is why they starve.
The reason the common folk are hard to govern is that the ruler takes deliberate actions [you-wei].
This is why they are hard to govern.
The reason the common folk take death lightly is that they place too much emphasis on life.
This is why they take death lightly.
It is only by acting without regard for life that one becomes more of a worthy than one who values life.

[75c19t] Lin Yutang
ON PUNISHMENT (4)
When people are hungry,
It is because their rulers eat too much tax-grain.
Therefore the unruliness of hungry people
Is due to the interference of their rulers.
That is why they are unruly.
The people are not afraid of death,
Because they are anxious to make a living.
That is why they are not afraid of death.
It is those who interfere not with their living
That are wise in exalting life.

[75c20t] Victor H. Mair
Human hunger is the result of overtaxation.
For this reason,
There is hunger.
The common people are not governable because of their superiors' actions.
For this reason,
They are not governable.
The people make light of death because of too much emphasis on the quest for life.
For this reason,
They make light of death.
Now,
Only she who acts not for the sake of life
Is wiser than those who value life highly.

[75c21t] Tolbert McCarroll
Why are the people starving?

Why do the people treat death lightly?
Because their leaders are so grossly absorbed in the pursuit of living;
that is why the people treat death lightly.
Indeed, it is wiser to ignore life altogether than to place too high a value on it.

Starvation in the populace is caused by excessive taxes.
Excessive taxes result in starvation.
Difficulty in governing the populace is caused by a governor's interferences.
Interferences result in difficulties in governance.
Indifference to death in the populace is caused by a governor's overindulgence.
A governor's overindulgence results in the populace's indifference to death.
One who does not overindulgence is wiser than one who overvalues one's life.

[75c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura

That is why.
Those who do not overvalue their life are wiser than those who do.

[75c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The people are starving,
Because their clerks impose heavy taxes on them.
That is why they are starving.
It is difficult to govern the people,
Because their clerks interfere in their affairs.
That is why they are difficult to govern.
The people do not respect death,
Because their clerks direct them to seek life.
That is why they do not respect death.

[75c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
Why are the people hungry?
Because you crush them with your taxes;
That is why they have nothing.
Why are the people angry?
Because you endlessly impose your laws;
That is why they can't take any more.
And why aren't they scared of death?
Because you are voracious and you want everything.

So what have they got left to lose?
Those who only have a little really know how to value life.

[75c26t] Gu Zhengkun
The hunger on the part of the people
Is the result of exorbitant taxes on the part of the ruler;
Thus the people are hungry.
The unruliness on the part of the people
Is the result of meddlesome actions on the part of the ruler;
Thus the people are unruly.
Making light of life on the part of the people
Is the result of setting too much store by life on the part of the ruler;
Thus the people make light of life.
Those who make light of their own life
Are wiser than those who overvalue their life.

[75c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
The people are hungry.
It is because those who govern them consume too much in taxes.
That is why the people are hungry.
The people are hard to govern.
It is because those who govern them interfere too much.
That is why the people are hard to govern.
The people scorn death.
It is because they seek dearly for life.
That is why people treat death with disdain.
Only he who does not seek dearly for his life can value life worthily.

[75c28t] Liu Qixuan
People are hungry because "the Above" tax too much.
People are disobedient because "the Above" do too much.
People would rather die because "the Above" live too high.
Therefore, one who does nothing to benefit one's own life
Is good at keeping and supporting lives.

[75c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
On Valuing Life
Lao Tze says,
The people suffer from hunger because their superior agencies have imposed a heavy tax, thus they are hungry.
The people are difficult to govern because their superior agencies are too fond of meddling, thus they are difficult to govern.
The people make lightly of dying because of the excessive costs in seeking the means of living, thus they think lightly of dying.
Therefore the benevolent should be those who do not interfere with people's living;
instead of those who value people's living.

The people starve.
Because their officials take heavy taxes from them, therefore they starve.
The people are hard to rule.
Because their officials meddle with affairs, therefore they are hard to rule.
The people pay no heed to death.
Because they endeavour to seek life; therefore they pay no heed to death.

The people are starving
Because the man on top devours too much tax money.
So they are starving.
The people are hard to govern
Because the man on top is too active in governing.
So they are hard to govern.
The people think little of death
Because the man on top strives for a rich life.
So they think little of death.
Therefore it is better to do nothing for one's life
Than to value it.

[75c32t] Michael LaFargue
'The people are starving'.
It is because those high up eat too much tax grain,

'The people are hard to govern'.
It is because there is Working among those high up,

'The people take death lightly'.
It is because they pursue a lavish life,
this is why they take death lightly.
Simply:
Those who do not Work at 'living' - these are better men than those who 'love life'.

[75c33t] Cheng Lin
The people suffer hunger because the rulers levy so many taxes.

[75c35t] Han Hiong Tan
People are starving because they are forced to pay onerous taxes.
That is why they are starving.
People are unruly because they are burdened by excessive rules.
This is why they become unruly.
Whilst living lavishly, the ruler extorts heavy taxes from the people, forcing them to risk their lives simply to eke out a living.
That is why the people are not afraid to die.
Hence, frugal rulers are infinitely better than those harsh ones who extort heavy taxes to live luxuriously.

[75c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
Why are people starving and leading a difficult life?
Is it not because their rulers consume too much tax grain?
Is that why they are starving and leading a difficult life?
Why are people hard to manage?
Is it not because those above them create distress with their oppressive interference?
Is that why they are hard to manage?
Why do people make light of death?
Is it not because those above them demand too much for themselves and value only their own personal power and glory?
Is that why they take death so lightly?
One who is a guardian of people and does nothing for his own life knows how to value all lives well.

[76c01t] Robert G. Henricks
When people are born, they're supple and soft;
When they die, they end up stretched out firm and rigid;
When the ten thousand things and grasses and trees are alive, they're supple and pliant;
When they're dead, they're withered and dried out.
Therefore we say that the firm and rigid are companions of death,
While the supple, the soft, the weak, and the delicate are companions of life.
If a soldier is rigid, he won't win;
If a tree is rigid, it will come to its end.
Rigidity and power occupy the inferior position;
Suppleness, softness, weakness, and delicateness occupy the superior position.

[76c02t] John C. H. Wu
WHEN a man is living, he is soft and supple.
When he is dead, he becomes hard and rigid.
When a plant is living, it is soft and tender.
When it is dead, it becomes withered and dry.
Hence, the hard and rigid belongs to the company of the dead:
The soft and supple belongs to the company of the living.
Therefore, a mighty army tends to fall by its own weight,
Just as dry wood is ready for the axe.
The mighty and great will be laid low;
The humble and weak will be exalted.

[76c03t] D. C. Lau
A man is supple and weak when living, but hard and stiff when dead.
Grass and trees are pliant and fragile when living, but dried and shrivelled when dead.
Thus the hard and the strong are the comrades of death;
The supple and the weak are the comrades of life.
Therefore a weapon that is strong will not vanquish;
A tree that is strong will suffer the axe.
The strong and big takes the lower position,
The supple and weak takes the higher position.

[76c04t] R. L. Wing
A man living is yielding and receptive.
Dying, he is rigid and inflexible.
All Things, the grass and trees:
Living, they are yielding and fragile;
Dying, they are dry and withered.
Thus those who are firm and inflexible
Are in harmony with dying.

Those who are yielding and receptive
Are in harmony with living.
Therefore an inflexible strategy will not triumph;
An inflexible tree will be attacked.
The position of the highly inflexible will descend;
The position of the yielding and receptive will ascend.

[76c05t] Ren Jiyu
Man has a soft and weak body when he is alive,
Whereas his body becomes rigid after his death.
All things, grasses and trees have tender twigs and branches when they are alive,
Whereas they become dry and withered when they are dead.
Therefore the hard and strong belong to death,
Whereas the soft and weak belong to life.
Thus the armed forces will be shattered when they become strong,
And trees will be broken when they grow strong.
The hard and strong are in the inferior position,
And the soft and weak are in the superior position.

[76c06t] Gia-fu Feng
A man is born gentle and weak.
At his death he is hard and stiff.
Green plants are tender and filled with sap.
At their death they are withered and dry.
Therefore the stiff and unbending is the disciple of death.
The gentle and yielding is the disciple of life.
Thus an army without flexibility never wins a battle.
A tree that is unbending is easily broken.
The hard and strong will fall.
The soft and weak will overcome.

[76c07t] Lok Sang Ho
People at birth are weak and supple.
People at death are strong and hard.
All living things including the trees and other plants are supple and weak.
When they die, however, they all turn dry and hard.
Being hard and strong is the way of the dead.
Being soft and weak is the way of the alive.
Armed forces that show their strength will not win.
Trees that hold strong against the wind are likely to be blown down.
To be strong is a disadvantage.
To be weak is an advantage.

[76c08t] Xiaolin Yang

When every living thing is alive, it is soft; when dead, it is hard.

So, the strong and hard have no vitality; the soft and weak have vitality.
Therefore, when an army is too strong and rigid, it will be extinguished;
when a tree is too stiff, it will break.
The strong and hard are inferior; the weak and soft are superior.

[76c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE DANGER OF STRENGTH
Man at his birth is supple and tender, but in death he is rigid and strong.
It is the same with everything.
Trees and plants in their early growth are pliant and soft, but at the end they are withered and tough.
Thus rigidity and strength are concomitants of death, but softness and gentleness are companions of life.
Therefore the warrior who relies on his strength cannot conquer death, while the powerful tree becomes a mere timber support.
For the place of the strong and the firm is below, while that of the gentle and yielding is above.

[76c10t] James Legge
Man at his birth is supple and weak;
at his death, firm and strong.
(So it is with) all things.
Trees and plants, in their early growth, are soft and brittle;
at their death, dry and withered.
Thus it is that firmness and strength are the concomitants of death;
softness and weakness, the concomitants of life.
Hence he who (relies on) the strength of his forces does not conquer;
and a tree which is strong will fill the out-stretched arms, (and thereby invites the feller.)
Therefore the place of what is firm and strong is below, and that of what is soft and weak is above.

[76c11t] David Hinton
People are soft and weak in life, hard and strong in death.
The ten thousand plants and trees are soft and frail in life,
withered and brittle in death.
Things hard and strong follow death's ways and things soft and weak follow life's:
so it is that strong armies never overcome and strong trees always suffer the axe.
Things great and strong dwell below.
Things soft and weak dwell above.

[76c12t] Chichung Huang
When born, man is soft and weak;
When dead, he is stiff, tough, hard and strong.
When born, the ten thousand things,
Grasses and trees are soft and tender;
When dead, they are withered and dry.
Therefore, it is said:
"The hard and strong belong to the category of death;
The soft and weak belong to the category of life."
Hence, if an army is strong, it perishes;

If a tree is strong, it breaks.
Therefore, the strong and big rank low;
The soft and weak rank high.

[76c13t] Ellen M. Chen
At birth a person is soft (jou) and yielding (jo),
At death hard (chien) and unyielding (ch'iang).
All beings, grass and trees, when alive, are soft and bending,
When dead they are dry and brittle.
Therefore the hard and unyielding are companions of death,
The soft and yielding are companions of life.
Hence an unyielding army (ping) is destroyed (mieh).
An unyielding tree breaks (che).
The unyielding and great takes its place below,
The soft and yielding takes its place above.

[76c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org
When people are alive [their bodies] are soft (pliable) and flexible (supple), but when they are dead [their bodies] are stiff (rigid) and inflexible;
When plants are alive they are soft and flexible, but when they are dead they are withered and rigid;
Therefore: When [creatures are] soft and flexible, they are on the course of continuing to live;
When [creatures are turning] stiff and inflexible, they are on the course of dying.
The fact is:
When an army is strong [it worries its potential rivals], it is thus exposed to the risk of being annihilated;
When a tree is at the peak of its growth, its expansive spread [i.e. abundant branches and leaves] would catch strong wind quickly;
Consequently, it is in the higher danger of being blown down.
Accordingly, the strong (stiff) and inflexible ones [e.g. roots] would grow downward;
Whereas the soft (weak) and flexible ones [e.g. leaves] would grow and develop upward.

[76c15t] Tien Cong Tran
When a man is living, he is soft and supple.
When he is dead, he becomes hard and rigid.
When a plant is living, it is soft and tender.
When it is dead, it becomes withered and dry.
Hence, the hard and rigid belongs to the company of the dead; the soft and supple belongs to the company of the living.
Therefore, a mighty army will not win, just as hard tree is ready for the axe.
The mighty and great are below; the soft and weak are above.

[76c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang
When alive, people are pliable and soft; at death, people become rigid and hard.
When alive, grasses and trees are flexible and tender; at death, they become withered and rotten.
Therefore, rigidity leads to death, flexibility results in survival.
It is because of this, the inflexible army would be defeated, like stiff trees would be broken by wind.
The big and rigid would be overtaken by the nimble and flexible.

When he is born, man is soft and weak; in death he becomes stiff and hard.
The ten thousand creatures and all plants and trees while they are alive are supple and soft, but when they are dead they become brittle and dry.
Truly, what is stiff and hard is a 'companion of death'; what is soft and weak is a 'companion of life'.
Therefore 'the weapon that is too hard will be broken, the tree that has the hardest wood will be cut down'.
Truly, the hard and mighty are cast down; the soft and weak set on high.

[76c18t] Richard John Lynn
While alive, humans are soft and pliable, but, when dead, they are hard and stiff.
While alive, plants, trees, and all the other myriad things are also soft and fragile, but, when dead, they are dried up and withered.
Thus it is that the hard and stiff are adherents of death, and the soft and pliable are adherents of life.
This is why, if military power is stiff, it will not be victorious.
If a tree is stiff, it will be attacked.
The stiff [strong] and great occupy a position below.
The soft and pliant occupy a position above.

[76c19t] Lin Yutang
HARD AND SOFT
When man is born, he is tender and weak;
At death, he is hard and stiff.
When the things and plants are alive, they are soft and supple;
When they are dead, they are brittle and dry.
Therefore hardness and stiffness are the companions of death,
And softness and gentleness are the companions of life.
Therefore when an army is headstrong, it will lose in battle.
When a tree is hard, it will be cut down.
The big and strong belong underneath.
The gentle and weak belong at the top.

[76c20t] Victor H. Mair
Human beings are soft and supple when alive, stiff and straight when dead.
The myriad creatures, the grasses and trees are soft and fragile when alive, dry and withered when dead.
Therefore, it is said:
The rigid person is a disciple of death;
The soft, supple, and delicate are lovers of life.
An army that is inflexible will not conquer;
A tree that is inflexible will snap.
The unyielding and mighty shall be brought low;

Grass and trees are pliant and tender when living,
but they are dry and brittle when dead.
Therefore,
the stiff and hard are attendants of death,
the supple and soft are attendants of life.
Thus,
the hard weapon will be broken.
The mighty tree will invite the axe.
Therefore,
the hard and mighty belong below;
the yielding and gentle belong above.

[76c22t] David H. Li
At birth, one is soft and tender;
at death, hard and stiff.
At the beginning, flora are tender and crisp;
at the end, brittle and dry.
Thus, hardness and stiffness symbolize death; softness and tenderness, life.
Thus, an army, hard and stiff, is annihilated; a tree, hard and stiff, is cut.
Hard and stiff are inferior; soft and tender, superior.

[76c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura
Human beings are soft and supple at birth,
But stiff and hard at death.
All things in Nature are soft and pliant when alive,
But dry and withered when dead.
Thus, the stiff and hard is the companion of death,
And the soft and supple is the companion of life.
Therefore, an army that is unyielding will soon perish,
And a tree that is unbending will soon break.
The hard and unyielding is an inferior quality;
The soft and yielding is a superior quality.

[76c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan
The living person is soft and pliant, and is hard and rigid in death.
All creatures and plants,
Are soft and vulnerable in life,
And dry and brittle in death.
Therefore it is said:
The hard and the rigid are part of death,
The soft and gentle are part of life.
This is the reason why soldiers who are too rigid
Do not triumph.
When the tree is too rigid, it will break.
The stance of the strong and the great is stooped,
The stance of the weak and the small is erect.

[76c25t] Man-Ho Kwok
When a body is alive, it is soft and supple
- it is cold and rigid when it dies.
When plants are alive, they are tender and trailing
- and burnt and brittle when they're dead.
What's iron hard is what is dead, then
And what is fluid and sensuous and rippling is alive ...
And that is why a huge army
With all its strength and complacency will be defeated:
Like a great tree axed down.
Everything hard and strong will come down,
And everything soft shall rise, shall overcome.

[76c26t] Gu Zhengkun
While alive, a man's body is supple;
When dead, it becomes hard.
While alive, grass and trees are supple;
When dead, they become dry and stiff.
Thus the hard and strong is of the dying sort;
The supple and weak is of the living sort.
That is why the army, having grown strong, will be wiped out,
And the tree, when grown up, will be cut down.
Thus the strong and big is inferior
To the weak and supple.

[76c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen
A man is soft and weak when living.
But hard and rigid when dead.
The myriad creatures and grass and plants, when living, are soft and fragile.
When dead, they are dried and withered.
That is why the hard and the rigid are the disciples of death, the soft and the weak the disciples of the living.
Therefore an army which is inflexible cannot win.
A plant which is hard will break.
The strong and hard will fall.
The soft and weak will overcome.

[76c28t] Liu Qixuan
Life is soft and weak, death is hard and strong.
Plants are soft or fragile while living
And wither and harden while dying.
Therefore death grows in strength and hardness,
And life grows in softness and weakness.
A strong army perishes and a strong tree breaks.
What is hard and strong should not be valued,
And "the Above" should keep soft and weak.

[76c29t] Shi Fu Hwang
Strong and Weak
Lao Tze says,
A man at his living is tender and weak and at his death adamant and strong.
Living creatures and plants at their living are soft and supple and at their death dry and withered.
Thus those who are adamant and strong are the concomitant of death;
and soft and weak, the concomitant of life.
Hence he who relies on the strength of his forces can not win,
and a tree which grows to be strong will invite the feller.
Hence the rule:
The big and the strong stay underneath and the soft and the weak exist above.

[76c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao
Man when living is soft and tender; when dead he is hard and tough.
All animals and plants when living are tender and fragile; when dead they become withered and dry.
Therefore it is said: the hard and tough are parts of death; the soft and tender are parts of life.
This is the reason why the soldiers when they are too tough cannot carry the day; the tree when it is too tough will break.
The position of the strong and great is low, and the position of the weak and tender is high.

[76c31t] Paul J. Lin
In life, man is supple and tender.
In death, he becomes rigid and stark.
Myriad things such as grass and trees are supple and frail in life,
And shrivelled and dry in death.
Therefore, the rigid and stark are disciples of death,
While the supple and weak are disciples of life.
Therefore the army that uses strength cannot win.
The tree that stands firm will break.
The strong and large are subordinate;
The soft and weak are superior.

[76c32t] Michael LaFargue
People begin life Soft and Weak, when they are dead they are hard and firm.
Among the thousands of things:
Grass and trees begin life Soft and tender,
when they are dead they are withered and brittle.
Yes, strength and hardness accompany death;
Softness and Weakness accompany life.
And so:
With a battle axe too hardened, you cannot win;
when a tree becomes hard, then comes the axe.
The strong and the great stand lowest,
the Soft and Weak stand highest.

[76c33t] Cheng Lin
When a man is alive, his body is supple and pliant.
When he is dead, it is hard and stiff.
When a plant is alive, it is supple and pliant.
When it is dead, it is dry and brittle.
Therefore,
to be hard and stiff is the way of death;
to be supple and pliant is the way of life.
A stiff weapon may break, just as a stiff tree may crack.
That which is hard and stiff occupies a disadvantageous position.
That which is supple and pliant occupies an advantageous position.

[76c34t] Yi Wu
One who is living is soft and weak.
One who is dead is hard and rigid.
All living things, like grass and trees, are soft and frail.
With death, they become withered and dry.
Therefore, hardness and rigidity are associated with death.
Softness and weakness are associated with life.
Therefore, powerful weapons will not win;
Massive trees will be cut down;
The strong and great will be laid low;
The soft and weak will be exalted.

[76c35t] Han Hiong Tan
When a person is alive and kicking, his body is soft and pliable.
When he is dead, his body is rigid and stiff.
Living plants are soft and supple.
Dead plants become dried and stiff.
Therefore, hard and stiff epitomises the dead.
Soft and supple typifies the living.
Hence, when an army flaunts its might, it will be defeated.
As the tree grows big and tall, it will be felled.
The strong and powerful should occupy the lower position.
While the meek and weak should be sitting atop.

[76c36t] Hua-Ching Ni
When a person is alive, he is soft and supple.
When a person dies, he becomes hard and rigid.
When a plant is alive, it is pliant and tender.
When a plant is dead, it becomes dry and brittle.
Hence, the hard and rigid are companions of the dead.
The soft and supple are companions of the living.
Therefore, a mighty army is ready to be vanquished.
A tree that is dry is ready for the ax.

The mighty and the great will be laid low.
The soft and the gentle will outlive them all!

[76c37t] Chang Chung-yuan
When a man is alive,
His body is soft and frail.
After his death,
It is hard and solid.
When grass and trees are growing,
They are delicate and fragile.
After their deaths,
They are wizened and decayed.
Therefore, what is hard is close to death.
What is soft is close to life.
Thus, when troops are inflexible, they lose the war.
When a wood board is dried hard, it cracks.
What is strongest and most solid remains low.
What is softest and meekest remains high.

[76c38t] Henry Wei
Abstain from Hardness
Chieh Ch'iang
Man is soft and weak at birth;
At death he is hard and rigid.
The ten thousand things, herbs and trees,
Are soft and delicate when growing up;
In dying, they wither and look haggard.
Thus hardness and rigidity are companions of death;
Softness and weakness are companions of life.
Therefore armies, having become rigid, will not win;
Trees, having become rigid, will break asunder.
The big and rigid will be laid low;
The soft and weak will be lifted up.

[76c39t] Ha Poong Kim
People are soft and weak when born,
But bard and strong when dead.
Plants are soft and supple when born,
But dry and shriveled when dead.
Therefore the hard and strong are companions of death,
The soft and weak are companions of life.
Therefore a strong weapon loses,
A strong tree breaks.
The strong and big belong below,
The soft and weak belong above.

[76c40t] Tao Huang
When people are born, they are soft and gentle.
When they die, they are stiff and callous.
When myriad things, grasses and trees, are born, they are soft and tender.
When they die, they are withered.
So stiffness and callousness are the company of death.
Softness and suppleness are the company of life.
The powerful army will not win.
A stiff tree will break.
So stiffness and power stay below.
Softness and suppleness stay above.

[76c41t] Tang Zi-chang
A living person is gentle and tender, while a dying person is rigid and hard.
A living plant is gentle and tender, while a dying plant is dry and withered.
Thus, one who is rigid and hard is on the way to die.
One who is gentle and tender is on the way to live.
Thus, a strong army will soon be annihilated.
A hard stick of wood will soon be broken.
A piece of hard leather will soon be split.
Teeth are stronger than lips, yet the teeth decay first.
Therefore, hardness and strength are inferior, gentleness and tenderness are superior.

[76c42t] Wing-tsit Chan
When man is born, he is tender and weak.
At death, he is stiff and hard.
All things, the grass as well as trees, are tender and supple while alive.
When dead, they are withered and dried.
Therefore the stiff and the hard are companions of death.
The tender and the weak are companions of life.
Therefore if the army is strong, it will not win.
If a tree is stiff, it will break.
The strong and the great are inferior, while the tender and the weak are superior.

[76c91t] И. И. Семененко
Человек, когда родится, слаб и нежен;
умирая же он делается тверд и крепок.
Вся тьма существ, деревья, травы при своем рождении нежны и слабы, когда же гибнут - засыхают.
Твердое и сильное выступают спутниками смерти, нежное и слабое - спутниками жизни.
Поэтому, когда могуче войско, оно победы не одерживает, когда крепким вырастает дерево, его срубают на оружие.
Великое и сильное низки, а слабое и нежное высоки.

[76c92t] А. А. Маслов
При рождении человек податлив и слаб.
Умирая - твёрд и крепок.

Трава и деревья гибки и податливы при жизни, а умирая, становятся сухи и ломки.
Поэтому твёрдое и сильное идут стезёй смерти, а податливое и слабое идут стезёй жизни.
Оттого сильное войско обречено на погибель, а крепкое дерево будет срублено.
Потому крепкое и сильное стоят ниже, а податливое и слабое - выше.

[76c93t] Е. А. Торчинов
Когда человек рождается, он мягок и слаб.
Когда человек умирает, он тверд и силен.
Так и среди всех существ: пока растения живут, они мягки и слабы.
Когда они гибнут, они сухи и тверды.
Поэтому удел твердого и сильного - смерть,
А мягкого и слабого - жизнь.
Поэтому мощное оружие не может победить,
Поэтому крепкое дерево должно упасть.
Люди, склонные к насилию, не умирают своей смертью.
Поэтому сильное и великое будет унижено, а мягкое и слабое будет возвышено.

[76c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов
Человек при рождении мягок и слаб, при наступлении смерти он крепок и силен.
Среди вещей трава и деревья при рождении мягкие и хрупкие,
при наступлении смерти пожухлые и сухие.
Поэтому крепкость и сила - спутники смерти,
мягкость и слабость - спутники жизни.
Вот почему, если войско сильное, оно не победит,
если дерево могучее, его срубят.
Сильное и большое уходит вниз,
мягкое и слабое пробивается наверх.

[76c95t] Ян Хин-шун
Человек при своем рождении нежен и слаб, а при наступлении смерти тверд и крепок.
Все существа и растения при своем рождении нежные и слабые, а при гибели сухие и гнилые.
Твердое и крепкое - это то, что погибает, а нежное и слабое - это то, что начинает жить.
Поэтому могущественное войско не побеждает и крепкое дерево гибнет.
Сильное и могущественное не имеют того преимущества, какое имеют нежное и слабое.

[76c96t] Д. П. Конисси
Новорожденный младенец нежен и слаб.
Труп мертвеца крепок и не гибок.
Только что распустившееся растение нежно и слабо.
Засохшее растение твердо и не гибко.
Отсюда ясно, что нежное и слабое живет.
Сильное войско не победоносно.
Нельзя поломать связку прутьев.
Сильное находится внизу, а слабое - наверху.

Человек, рождаясь, мягок и нежен.
Умирая, он тверд и напряжен.
Когда все вещи, трава и деревья, живут, они мягки и гибки.
А умирают они сухими и жесткими.
Посему жесткость и напряженность - спутники смерти,
Мягкость и нежность - спутники жизни.
Вот почему, коли войско сильно, оно не победит.
А если дерево крепко, оно сломается.
Крепкое и большое будет внизу.
Мягкое и слабое будет вверху.

[76c98t] Б. Б. Виногродский
Человек в жизни - мягкость и слабость.
В его смерти - твердость и сила.
Из мириад сущностей травы и деревья в жизни - это мягкость и хрупкость.
В их смерти - сухость, крепость.
Причинность:
Твердость и сила - это попутчики смерти.
Мягкость и слабость - это попутчики жизни.
Это дает:
Сила оружия ведет к уничтожению.
Сила дерева ведет к перелому.
В сильном и большом находится ориентация вниз.
В мягком и слабом находится ориентация вверх.

PSEUDO-CHAPTER Seventy-Seven

1208/2593

[77c01t] Robert G. Henricks

The Way of Heaven is like the flexing of a bow.
The high it presses down; the low it raises up.
From those with a surplus it takes away; to those without enough it adds on.
Therefore the Way of Heaven -
Is to reduce the excessive and increase the insufficient;
The Way of Man -
Is to reduce the insufficient and offer more to the excessive.
Now, who is able to have a surplus and use it to offer to Heaven?
Clearly, it's only the one who possesses the Way.
Therefore the Sage -
Takes actions but does not possess them;
Accomplishes his tasks but does not dwell on them.
Like this, is his desire not to make a display of his worthiness.

[77c02t] John C. H. Wu

PERHAPS the Way of Heaven may be likened to the stretching of a composite bow!
The upper part is depressed, while the lower is raised.
If the bow-string is too long, it is cut short:
if too short, it is added to.
The Way of Heaven diminishes the more-than-enough to supply the less-than-enough.
The way of man is different:
it takes from the less-than-enough to swell the more-than-enough.
Who except a man of the Tao can put his superabundant riches to the service of the world?
Therefore, the Sage does his work without setting any store by it, accomplishes his task without dwelling upon it.
He does not want his merits to be seen.

[77c03t] D. C. Lau

Is not the way of heaven like the stretching of a bow?
The high it presses down,
The low it lifts up;
The excessive it takes from,
The deficient it gives to.
It is the way of heaven to take from what has in excess in order to make good what is deficient.
The way of man is otherwise. It takes from those who are in want in order to offer this to those who already have more than enough.
Who is there that can take what he himself has in excess and offer this to the empire?
Only he who has the way.
Therefore the sage benefits them yet exacts no gratitude,
Accomplishes his task yet lays claim to no merit.
Is this not because he does not wish to be considered a better man than others?

[77c04t] R. L. Wing
The Tao in Nature
Is like a bow that is stretched.
The top is pulled down,
The bottom is raised up.
What is excessive is reduced,
What is insufficient is supplemented.
The Tao in Nature
Reduces the excessive
And supplements the insufficient.
The Tao in Man is not so;
He reduces the insufficient,
Because he serves the excessive.
Who then can use excess to serve the world?
Those who possess the Tao.
Therefore Evolved Individuals Act without expectation,
Succeed without taking credit,
And have no desire to display their excellence.

[77c05t] Ren Jiyu
Does not the Way (Tao) of Heaven resemble drawing a bow (and aiming an arrow at the target)?
When it is high, it will be brought down;
When it is low, it will be raised up;
When it is overfull, it will be diminished;
And when it is not full, it will be supplemented.
It is the Way of Heaven to diminish the excessive, so as to supplement the deficient.
This is not so with the Way of man - It takes away from those who have not enough so as to supply those who have superabundance.
Who can supply all the people under Heaven by diminishing the excessive?
Only the man who has "Tao."
Therefore the sage promotes all things, but does not think the effort as his own,
Achieves merit, but does not claim credit for himself,
And does not wish to parade his wisdom and ability.

[77c06t] Gia-fu Feng
The Tao of heaven is like the bending of a bow.
The high is lowered, and the low is raised.
If the string is too long, it is shortened;
If there is not enough, it is made longer.
The Tao of heaven is to take from those who have too much and give to those who do not have enough.
Man's way is different.
He takes from those who do not have enough to give to those who already have too much.
What man has more than enough and gives it to the world?
Only the man of Tao.
Therefore the sage works without recognition.

He achieves what has to be done without dwelling on it.
He does not try to show his knowledge.

[77c07t] Lok Sang Ho
The Dao of Heaven is like pulling a bow.
The top end comes down and the bottom end goes up.
It takes away from those with surplus to spare
and gives to those who are short.
The way of Heaven takes away from those with surplus to spare and gives to those who are short.
The way of men is just the opposite.
It takes away from those who are short and offers to those who have more than enough.
The Sage does his work but is not arrogant.
He accomplishes but will not dwell on his accomplishments.
He does not want to show off his accomplishments.

[77c08t] Xiaolin Yang
Isn't the law of heavens like using a bow and arrow?
When it is aimed too high, it is lowered; when it is aimed too low, it is raised;
When it is aimed too far, it is loosened; when it is aimed too close, it is tightened.
The law of the heavens is to reduce the wealthy and give to the needy.
But the law of present-day people is just the opposite: they take from the needy to give to the wealthy.
Who can contribute the surplus to the needy?
Only the people who follow the DAO.
So the great men do not do things for themselves and do not claim credit when things are accomplished.
They just do not want to show their goodness.

[77c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE TAO OF HEAVEN
Like the bending of an archer's bow is the Tao of Heaven!
It brings down that which is high, and raises up that which is depressed.
It takes away where there is excess, and gives where there is deficiency.
The Tao of Heaven makes all things equal.
This Tao is not of man.
Man takes from the needy to add to his own excess.
Who is he that, having a superabundance, can bring it to the service of the world?
Only he who has the Tao.
This is why the wise man acts without expectation of reward, and completes his task without claiming merit.
For thus he hides his wealth.

[77c10t] James Legge
May not the Way (or Tao) of Heaven be compared to the (method of) bending a bow?
The (part of the bow) which was high is brought low, and what was low is raised up.
(So Heaven) diminishes where there is superabundance, and supplements where there is deficiency.
It is the Way of Heaven to diminish superabundance, and to supplement deficiency.
It is not so with the way of man.
